New Edition,

WITH INTRODUCTORY ESSAY AND NOTES.

LONDON AND GLASGOW:

P R E F A C E.

THE present collection of SHAKSPEARE'S PLAYS differs in arrangement from any that has hitherto been published. The Tragedies, Comedies, and Historical Plays, are divided; and in each division, the consecutive order of the pieces has reference to the country in which the action is laid, or to the epoch at which it is supposed to have taken place. Such as are founded on Grecian or Roman occurrences, are distinctly separated from those which commemorate the events of British history; and in each class a proper chronological priority is as much as possible maintained.

The text has been critically and laboriously collated with the standard editions, and an uniform and judicious method of punctuation, so necessary to the intelligibility of the old English writers, has been adopted throughout.

Large or numerous notes being inconsistent with the design of the work, such only are subjoined as were necessary for explaining obsolete words, unusual passages, old customs, and obscure allusions.

A literary and historical Notice is prefixed to each Play, containing a succinct criticism upon its merits or defects, tracing the origin of its plot, investigating the fidelity of its characters, and assigning as nearly as possible the date of its production.

In the preparation of these, and of the biographical portraiture of Shakspeare, the remarks of Rowe, Pope, Theobald, Warburton, Hanmer, Johnson, Steevens, Malone, Reed, Percy, Warton, Hazlitt, and others, have been carefully examined, and contrasted with each other.

The Editor feels that little praise can accompany this undertaking if novelty of matter be the only criterion of merit; but he thought it more becoming to condense and re-mould the accumulated comments of so many distinguished writers, than to revive speculations which have become too stale to be interesting, or to search for new proofs of what has long been an article of belief.

ESSAY ON THE LIFE AND WRITINGS
SHAKSPEARE.

WILLIAM SHAKSPEARE was born at Stratford-upon-Avon, in Warwickshire, April 23, 1564. His ancestors are mentioned as "gentlemen of good figure and fashion." His father was a considerable dealer in wool, and had been the high-bailiff or mayor of the body corporate of Stratford. He held also the office of justice of the peace, and at one time, it is said, possessed lands and tenements to the amount of £500; but he must have been greatly reduced in the latter part of his life, as he was excused the trifling weekly tax of fourpence, levied on all aldermen, and subsequently resigned the office to another individual. His wife was the daughter and heiress of Robert Arden, of Wellingcote, in Warwickshire, "a gentleman of worship." This lady brought him ten children; of whom William, our poet, was the eldest. At a proper age he was sent to the free-school in Stratford, to which he was indebted for whatever learning he may have possessed; though his father had apparently no design to make him "a scholar," as he took him, at an early period, into his own business. Mr. Malone, on the contrary, conjectures, that he was placed in the office of some country attorney, after leaving school, or with the seneschal of some manor court, where he picked up those technical law phrases that so frequently occur in his plays, and could not have been in common use unless among professional men. However this may be, he resolved to write "man" earlier than usual, and before he was eighteen, married Anne Hathaway, eight years older than himself, the daughter of John Hathaway, who is said to have been a substantial yeoman in the neighbourhood of Stratford. Before the expiration of his minority he became the father of three children, a son and two daughters, his wife producing him twins. Nothing is known of his domestic economy or professional occupation at this time; though Mr. Capell supposes that this early marriage prevented his being sent to some university. Shortly after the birth of his youngest child, he left Stratford for the metropolis: his motive for doing so, as well as his connexion and prospects in London, are involved in considerable obscurity. It is said that he became acquainted with a gang of deer-stealers, and being detected with them in robbing the park of Sir Thomas Lucy, of Charlecote, was prosecuted with so much rigour as to be obliged to take shelter in London: having first revenged himself upon the knight by writing a satirical ballad. This was affixed to Sir Thomas's park-gates, and being liberally circulated in the neighbourhood, excited considerable attention, though it does no honour to our poet's genius, and was manifestly unjust. Some writers have asserted, that Shakspeare escaped with impunity after his first offence; but that, repeating it audaciously, he was prosecuted by Sir Thomas, whom he grossly lampooned—that to escape a prison, he fled to London, where, as might be expected from a man of wit and humour in similar circumstances, he threw himself among the players, and made his first appearance on the stage in a very subordinate character. This account (according to a modern publication) is not entitled to full credence; for though he may have associated with some idle youths, either for the sake of catching deer, or for some less difficult and hazardous enterprise, yet the story seems improbable, and comes in such a questionable shape, that it ought to be strongly corroborated before it be believed. Without depending on this circumstance, or supposing that "he held horses at the door of a theatre for his livelihood," a rational motive for his visiting London may be found in the circumstance, that he had a relative and townsman already established there; Thomas Green, "a celebrated comedian." The statement of John Aubrey, a student in the university of Oxford only twenty-six years after our poet's death, strongly substantiates this view of the case, though it differs in some particulars from the commonly accepted opinions respecting his parentage and occupation. "His father (says Aubrey) was a butcher, and I have been told heretofore, by some of the neighbours, that when he was a boy he exercised his father's trade, but when he killed a calf, he would doe it in a high style, and make a speeche. This William, (meaning Shakspeare,) being naturally inclined to poetry and acting, came to London, I guesse about eighteen, and was an actor at one of the play-houses, and did act exceedingly well. He began early to make essays at dramatick poetry, which at that time was very lowe, and his playes, tooke well." This is good to a certain extent; but the truth probably is, that some freak, or it might be, felony, determined Shakspeare promptly to embrace that profession to which his habits and inclinations had for a long time previously inclined him. The playful enthusiasm of his disposition, when directed not to the useful purposes of life, but to "poetry and acting," was calculated to encourage habits of idleness or improvidence, with a taste for those wild and irregular associations, which commence by despising order, and generally terminate in a defiance of law. When he made Falstaff a deer-stealer, and played the battery of his wit so keenly upon Justice Shallow, the recollection of his own adventure was probably uppermost in his mind; and if there were any doubt on the subject, the circumstance of his having given to Shallow the identical quarterings of Sir Thomas Lucy, (his Warwickshire prosecutor,) would effectually set it at rest. The balance of evidence, therefore, preponderating greatly against "this amiable man and supereminent author," his admirers may be content to have him charged with an act of pouching, since it was the apparent cause of his producing those immortal dramas, which have rendered him the delight of successive ages. It is not agreed in what situation he was first employed at the theatre, and Mr. Rowe has not been able to discover any character in which he appeared to more advantage than that of the ghost in Hamlet. The instructions given to the player, and other passages of his works, evince an intimate acquaintance with the science of acting, and shew that he studied nature in it, as much as in writing; but all this might be mere theory. The situation of an actor neither deserved nor engaged his attention, and was far from adequate to the prodigious powers of his mind; he turned it to a higher and nobler use; and having, by practice and observation, acquainted himself with the mechanical part of a theatre, his native genius inspired all the other essentially superior qualities of a play-wright. The date at which his first play appeared is unknown, and the greatest uncertainty prevails with respect to the chronological order in which the whole series was written, exhibited, or published. As no certain authority could be adduced upon this point, recourse has been had to internal evidence; and by searching for those marks of progressive excellence, which are supposed to result from exercise and improvement, the dates of each play have been pretty positively fixed.

Though Shakspeare continued to write till the year 1614, he had probably declined appearing as an actor long before that period; as no mention of his name can be found among the list of players subsequent to the production of Ben Jonson's Sejanus in 1603. He now succeeded in obtaining a license from king James to exhibit comedies, tragedies, histories, &c. at the Globe Theatre or elsewhere, and was enabled to acquire, during his dramatic career, property to a considerable amount. Gildon (in his "Letters and Essays," 1694) estimated the amount at £300 per annum, a sum at least equal to £1000 in our days; but Mr. Malone thinks it could not exceed £200, which yet was a considerable fortune in those times. It is supposed that he might have derived £200 per annum from the theatre, while he continued on the stage. Besides his thirty-five plays, Shakspeare wrote some poetical pieces, which were published separately, viz. Venus and Adonis, The Rape of Lucrece, The Passionate Pilgrim, A Lover's Complaint, and a volume of Sonnets. The Earl of Southampton, with whom he was a great favourite, is said to have presented him with a sum of £1000, to enable him to complete a purchase—an act of munificent patronage, which has never been exceeded. He enjoyed in a great degree the personal favour of Queen Elizabeth; and King James the First "was pleased with his own hand to write an amicable letter to Mr. Shakspeare," in return (as Dr. Farmer supposes) for the compliment paid to him in Macbeth; where allusion is made to the kingdoms of England and Scotland being united under one monarch, and James's having begun to touch for the king's evil. Having acquired such a fortune as suited his views and wishes, he quitted the stage and all other business, and passed the remainder of his life in an honourable ease, at his native town of Stratford. Of the exact time when this took place, nothing certain is known; but Mr. Theobald supposes he did not resign the theatre before 1610, since, in his Tempest, he mentions the Bermuda islands, which were unknown to the English till 1609, when Sir John Sumners discovered them on his voyage to North America. He lived in a very handsome house of his own purchasing, to which, having repaired and modelled it to his own mind, he gave the name of New Place; and he had the good fortune to save it from the flames in the dreadful fire which shortly afterwards laid waste the town. During Shakspeare's abode in this house, his wit and good-humour engaged him the acquaintance and entitled him to the friendship of all the surrounding gentry. He was (says Aubrey) a handsome, well-shaped man, verie good companie, and of a verie ready, pleasant, and smooth wit. It is not difficult, indeed, to suppose that Shakspeare was a man of humour and a social companion, and that he excelled in that species of minor wit not ill adapted to conversation, of which it is to be wished he had been more sparing in his writings. In the beginning of the year 1616 he made his will, wherein he testified his respect to his quondam theatrical partners, appointing his youngest daughter, jointly with her husband, his executors, and bequeathing them the bulk of his estate, which came into their possession not long afterwards. It is inferred from this document, that our poet's lady did not enjoy much of his affection, as his "second-best bed, with the furniture," constituted the only bequest to her. It is not known what particular malady terminated, at no very advanced age, the life and labours of this incomparable genius; but he died on the 23d of April, 1616, being the anniversary of his birth-day, when he exactly completed his fifty-second year. He was interred among his ancestors, on the north side of the chancel, in the great church of Stratford, and a handsome monument, bearing the following Latin distich, was erected to his memory:

Judicio Pylum, genio Sooratem, arte Maronem,
Terra tegit, populus mœret, Olympus habet.

On the grave-stone in the pavement are the following singular lines:—

Good friend, for Jesus' sake, forbear
To dig the dust enclosed here:
Blest be the man that spares these stones,
And curst be he that moves my bones.

In the year 1741, another very noble and beautiful monument was raised to his memory, at the public expense, in Westminster Abbey, under the direction of the Earl of Burlington, Dr. Mead, Mr. Pope, and Mr. Martyn. It stands near the south door of the Abbey, in what is called Poets' Corner, and was the work of Scheemaker, after a design of Kent's. The performers of each of the London theatres gave a benefit to defray the expenses, and the Dean and Chapter took nothing for the ground.

Mrs. Shakspeare survived her husband eight years, dying in 1623, at the age of sixty-seven. Of Shakspeare's family, the son died in 1596; the eldest daughter, Susanna, married Dr. John Hall, a physician of Stratford, who is said to have obtained much reputation and practice. She brought her husband an only child, Elizabeth, who was married, first to Thomas Nashe, Esq. and afterwards to Sir John Barnard, of Abingdon, in Northamptonshire, but had no issue by either of them. The second daughter, Judith, married Thomas Quiney, a gentleman of good family, by whom she had three children; but as none of them reached their twentieth year, they left no posterity. Hence our poet's last descendant was Lady Barnard, who was buried at Abingdon, Feb. 17, 1669-70. Dr. Hall, her father, died Nov. 25, 1635, and her mother, July 11, 1649, and were both interred in Stratford church. Our poet's house and lands continued in the possession of his descendants to the time of the Restoration, when they were re-purchased by the Clepton family, the original proprietors. Sir Hugh Clopton, who was knighted by King George the First, died in 1751, and his executor sold the estate to a clergyman of large fortune, who resided in it but a few years, and in consequence of a disagreement with his neighbours respecting a parochial assessment, peevishly pulled down the house, sold the materials, and left the town. To defeat the curiosity of the numerous strangers who were led to visit this classic ground, he had some time before cut down the mulberry-tree, which Shakspeare is known to have planted, and had piled it as a stack of firewood, to the great vexation, loss, and disappointment, of the inhabitants of Stratford. But an honest silversmith bought the whole stack, and converted it into a number of toys and implements, which were eagerly purchased by the curious. The purpose to which one of these trifles was applied gave rise to an occurrence, harmless, and perhaps laudable in itself, though by many considered as verging on the mock-heroic. The corporation of Stratford having presented Garrick with the freedom of the town in a box made from the wood of the tree, this incident suggested to him the idea of a festival in commemoration of Shakspeare, upon the very spot where he was born; and the plan was carried into execution in the autumn of 1769. Temporary buildings were raised—entertainments suited to every taste were provided—and company of all ranks, from the most distant parts of the kingdom, assembled to celebrate the memory of the poet. The jubilee lasted three days; but the weather was exceedingly unfavourable, and the pleasure enjoyed was by no means equal to that which the enthusiastic admirers of Shakspeare had anticipated, though Garrick exerted all his talents to gratify both the eye and the understanding. He composed several songs for music, with an ode of considerable length to the honour of his hero; and having expended a large sum of money upon various parts of the entertainment, took a method of reimbursing himself, which gives a laughable finale to this overflow of enthusiasm:—the jubilee was converted into a dramatic representation, during the following winter, in London, and became so popular, that it was repeated night after night to the most crowded audiences.

The nature and extent of Shakspeare's biblical learning will form a necessary introduction to the review of his dramatic writings; especially as there is no question connected with his history, upon which more ingenious speculation has been hazarded. There has always prevailed a tradition that Shakspeare wanted learning, and Ben Jonson, who wrote at a time when the character and acquisitions of our poet were known to multitudes, affirms that he had small Latin, and less Greek. Dr. Farmer, in a curious essay upon this subject, has proved that his imaginary imitations from numerous old writers were derived from English books, to which he had easy access. It is surprising how much angry argument has been employed by such as are opposed to this opinion. Mr. Upton calls it the pride and pertness of dunces, whilst he very amusingly points out the skill with which Shakspeare has given "the trochaic-dimeter-brachy-catalectic, commonly called the ithyphallic measure," to the witches in Macbeth; and says that now and then a halting verse affords "a most beautiful instance of the pes proceleusmaticus!" Dr. Grey declares that Shakspeare's knowledge of Greek and Latin cannot reasonably be doubted; and another writer doubts whether Truepenny might not be derived from Τρῦπανον; quoting, at the same time, with much parade, an old scholiast on Aristophanes. Indeed, plagiarisms have been discovered in every natural description and every moral sentiment; a business which may be effected with very little time or sagacity, as Addison has shewn in his dissertation on Chevy Chase, and Wagstaff in his comment on Tom Thumb. To cite even a portion of the passages which Dr. Farmer has proved to be suggested by old chronicles, translations, or books of poetry, instead of being taken directly from writers in the dead languages, would be impossible; but one result of his inquiries may be adduced as a specimen of the whole. "Dr. Grey and Mr. Whalley assure us, that for the play of Hamlet, Shakspeare must have read Saxo Grammaticus in Latin, no translation having been made into any modern language. But the truth is, that he did not take it from Saxo at all; a novel, called the Historie of Hamblet, was his original; a fragment of which in black letter is now in my possession." Upon the same principle, Shakspeare's allusion to the darts of Cupid in A Midsummer Night's Dream, where he says that some are tipped with gold and others with lead, does not prove his acquaintance with Ovid, any more than his allusions to Dido establish his knowledge of Virgil. Gower, Chaucer, and Lydgate, had already sung the fate of the love-sick queen, and Marlowe had even introduced her on the stage; whilst Surrey, Sidney, and Spenser, had defined in their amatory sonnets every characteristic distinction in Cupid's arrows. The Comedy of Errors is taken from the only play of Plautus which was then in English; and unless those which were not translated were inaccessible to him, there is no single reason why, if he copied one, he should not have copied more. He probably had learnt sufficient Latin to make him acquainted with construction, though he never advanced to an easy perusal of the Roman authors. Concerning his skill in modern languages, as no imitations of French or Italian authors have been discovered, though Italian poetry was then in high esteem, it would seem that he read English only, and chose for his fables merely such tales as he found translated. Some Italian words and phrases appear, it is true, in his works, but they are not of his own importation. With these opinions, the reader will form his own decision upon the acquired learning of our poet; and with Drayton, the countryman and acquaintance of Shakspeare, will probably attribute his excellence to "the naturall braine only."

As a first impression, it naturally excites surprise, that the dramatic writings of Shakspeare, productions so agreeable to the age that witnessed their birth, and distinguished by such unequivocal marks of popular approbation, were not more diffusely circulated from time to time through the medium of the press; or at all events secured, by the author himself, from the direct ravages of piracy or ignorance, the common accompaniments of successful genius. It is certain that Shakspeare did not himself print any one of his plays; nor was a collection of them published until 1623, seven years after his death, by Heninge and Condale, his former fellow-managers. From that period to 1664, an interval of forty-one years, only two editions were disposed of; the numerical amount of which did not probably exceed one thousand copies! Different commentators have assigned different reasons for this apparent retrocession of the national taste; but Mr. Chalmers has offered the most simple, and consequently the most satisfactory, solution of the circumstance, in a series of statements which it may be useful to lay before the reader, though necessarily in a condensed form. Shakspeare was the promoter of an amusement just emerging from barbarism, and one, moreover, which has ever had such a strong tendency to deviate from moral propriety, that the force of law has been in all ages necessary to preserve it within the bounds of common decency. The church, in particular, has at all times been unfriendly to the stage; and at this particular period, it required all the policy and circumspection of the court, to establish the reformed faith firmly in the affections of the people. To this important end the controversial efforts of the Puritans were greatly conducive, and nothing was more obnoxious to their tenets, than the toleration of dramatic amusements. Thus Elizabeth, and her successor, James, though privately disposed to patronize and foster the stage, as a pleasing addition to their courtly recreations, were yet under the necessity of loading it with some onerous restrictions, whilst the bishops themselves publicly committed to the flames all the poetry and novels which fell within their notice. Severe injunctions were issued against the printing of plays; nor were any allowed to be published, till revised and approved by persons in authority. In the temper and feeling of the times, this may be considered a virtual prohibition; and the publication of Shakspeare's works was therefore justly accounted a very doubtful speculation. For several years after his death, the public taste, ever dependent upon novelty, was strongly directed to the plays of Fletcher, and during the remainder of the seventeenth century, the noble productions of our poet gave place to a species of dramatic composition, equally conspicuous for its wit and its obscenity, and which the more chastened judgment of modern audiences has driven with abhorrence from the stage. The works of his rival and contemporary Jonson, appear indeed to have passed through several editions, and to have been read with uncommon avidity, while those of our poet were doomed to comparative neglect; but this is chiefly attributable to the passion for classical literature and collegiate learning, which were then regarded the chief criteria of merit. Only fifty years after his death, Dryden affirms that he was become "a little obsolete; and Tate, in his dedication to the altered play of King Lear, speaks of the original as an obscure piece, recommended to his notice by a friend. In the beginning of the last century, Lord Shaftesbury complained of "his rude unpolished style, and his antiquated phrase and wit;" and it is certain, that for nearly a hundred years after his death,—partly owing to the rebellion, when the stage was totally abolished—partly from the licentious taste encouraged in the time of Charles II., which we have already alluded to—and partly from the incorrect state of his works, he was almost entirely neglected. When, moreover, in addition to these facts, it is recollected that his works were published in a very unwieldy size—that the opportunities of attracting notice by advertisements were then very few—that the women had not applied to literature, nor was every house furnished with a closet of books—the limited sale of his works will cease to be a matter of surprise, and may fairly be attributed to the character and predominant occupations of the times which immediately followed his decease. Further examination will equally explain another apparent singularity, and also refute the supposition that Shakspeare was himself insensible of the value of his works, or careless of any reward beyond present popularity and present profit. He wrote them for a particular theatre, sold them to the managers when only an actor, reserved them in manuscript when himself a manager, and on disposing of his property in the theatre, they were still preserved in manuscript, to prevent their being acted by the rival houses. Copies of some of them appear to have been surreptitiously obtained, and published in a very incorrect state; but the managers were wise enough to overlook this fraud, rather than publish a correct edition, and so destroy the exclusive property they enjoyed. It is clear, therefore, on the one hand, that any publication of his plays by himself, would have interfered at first with his own interest, and afterwards with that of his fellow-managers, to whom he had made over his share in them; and on the other, that though the fame which he enjoyed was probably the highest which dramatic genius could bestow, yet that dramatic genius was novel and unappreciated, or perhaps, not heard of beyond the limits of the metropolis. It is, indeed, very doubtful whether he would have gained much by publication, whilst the refinements of criticism were so little understood, and the sympathies of taste so inadequately felt.

In 1709 an edition was undertaken by Mr. Nicholas Rowe, which had nothing to recommend it but some biographical particulars of Shakspeare, communicated by Betterton, the celebrated comedian, who had been at the trouble of a journey into Warwickshire purposely to obtain them. Nearly all the faults of the first edition were perpetuated in this; and according to Dr. Warburton, Mr. Rowe, though a wit, was so utterly unacquainted with the whole business of criticism, that he did not examine or consult the early copies of the work which he ventured to re-publish. But it is now very generally allowed, that he made a number of emendations which succeeding editors have received without acknowledgment. In 1725 Mr. Pope published his edition in 6 vols. 4to, and gave the first example of critical and emendatory notes. He collected the old copies, and restored many lines to their integrity; his preface is equally celebrated for elegance of composition, and justness of remark; but, by a very compendious criticism, he rejected whatever he disliked, thinking more of amputation than of cure, and proving himself a better poet than dramatic critic. Every anomaly of language, and every expression at variance with the accepted phraseology of that day, was considered an error or corruption, and the text was altered, or amended, as it was called, at pleasure. By these fanciful deviations, the poet was so completely modernized, that had he "revisited the glimpses of the moon," he would scarcely have understood his own works. In 1733 Mr. Theobald ventured upon a similar task, giving to his work the imposing title of Shakspeare Restored. Dr. Johnson describes him as a man of narrow comprehension and small acquirements—restoring a stray comma, and then panegyricizing himself for the achievement—as mean, petulant, and ostentatious, and indebted for a little reputation to the circumstance of his having Pope for an opponent. Sir Thomas Hanmer was the next who undertook to illustrate Shakspeare: his work was published in 1743, in 6 vols. 4to. He is generally termed the “Oxford editor;” and, though eminently qualified by nature for such pursuits, is said to have adopted all the innovations of Pope, in addition to the capricious suggestions of his own taste. In 1747, Dr. Warburton, Bishop of Gloucester, published his edition in 8 vols. 8vo., and by an unbounded license in substituting his own chimerical conceits for the plain text of his author, subjected himself to the imputation of wishing rather to display his own learning, than to illustrate the obscurities of the poet. It has been said, indeed, of this celebrated critic, that he erected his throne on a heap of stones, that he might have them at hand to throw at the heads of all who passed by; but though his interpretations are sometimes perverse, and his conjectures improbable—though he occasionally discovers absurdities where the sense is plain, or dwells upon profundity of meaning which the author never contemplated, yet his emendations are frequently happy, and his commentaries learned and ingenious. In 1765, that distinguished moralist, scholar, and critic, Dr. Samuel Johnson, published these plays with additional criticisms, accompanying them with a preface, which is considered a perfect specimen of his own extraordinary genius, and in which, also, the respective merits of all the above-named editors are characterized with great candour, and with singular fertility of expression. It is said, that he has commented on the writings of Shakspeare with a severity far removed from accuracy and justice, and that he did not fully understand the varied merits of his author. But Mr. Malone, in the very intelligent and amusing preface to his edition of our poet, published in 1790, vindicates the Doctor’s happy and just refutation of Mr. Theobald and Warburton’s false glosses, and asserts that his vigorous and comprehensive understanding threw more light on the involved and difficult passages of many plays, than the united labour of all his predecessors had been able to do. In the edition of 1803, published by Mr. Steevens, (in 21 vols. 8vo. commonly called Johnson and Steevens’s Shakspeare, and justly esteemed the best,) all Mr. Malone’s original notes and improvements are incorporated. From 1716 to 1790, a period of seventy-four years, thirty thousand copies of Shakspeare were circulated in England; and since that time, the number has at least been doubled. Some of them issued under the auspices of able and accomplished scholars, particularly the edition of 1803, 10 vols. 8vo. by Alexander Chalmers, F.S.A.; which is distinguished by a sketch of the life of Shakspeare, founded upon the statements of Rowe, with the additional and corrective remarks of Malone and Steevens. The generality, however, are mere variants, with various degrees of typographical embellishments, and in almost every size and shape; but the magnificent copy published some time since by the Messrs. Boydell, in 4to. folio, enriched with the most sumptuous engravings, is justly considered as one of the finest specimens of art ever produced in this, or in any other country.

Nothing is more difficult, in estimating the real merits of a popular writer, than to “season the admiration” by judicious rules. These can only be learnt from the opinions of such as have made it their particular business to investigate the pretensions of authors, and to define the boundaries of taste by the best examples which learning and experience supply. Some useful information, applicable to this purpose, may be gained from the following analysis, exhibiting the most formidable objections that have been urged against Shakspeare’s dramas, in conjunction with the principal merits by which they are said to be distinguished.

Voltaire, after allowing that Shakspeare, besides possessing a strong fruitful genius, was natural and sublime, decides that he had not one spark of good taste, nor a single dramatic rule, and that his great merit has been the ruin of the English stage. “There are (says he) such noble, such beautiful, such dreadful scenes in this writer’s monstrous verses, to which the name of tragedy is given, that they have always been exhibited with great success. Time, which only gives reputation to writers, at last makes their very faults venerable. Most of the whimsical gigantic images of this poet, have, through length of time, acquired a right of passing for sublime. In Othello, a most tender piece, a man strangles his wife upon the stage, and though the poor woman is strangling, she cries out aloud that she dies very unjustly. In Hamlet, the two grave-diggers are drunk, singing ballads, and making humorous reflections on the skulls which they throw up. The players have not even struck out the buffoonery of the shoemakers and cobblers, who are introduced (in Julius Cæsar) in the same scene with Brutus and Cassius.”

These, says Dr. Johnson, are the petty cavils of petty minds. Shakspeare’s plays are not, in the rigorous and critical sense, either tragedies or comedies, but compositions of a distinct kind, exhibiting the mingled good and evil, joy and sorrow, inseparable from this sublunary state. That this is a practice contrary to ancient dramatic rules, will be readily allowed; but there is always an appeal open from criticism to nature. The end of writing is to instruct; the end of poetry, to instruct by pleasing; and there is no reason why the mingled drama should not convey all the pleasure and instruction of which tragedy or comedy, in their simple form, are capable of doing. The English nation, in the time of Shakspeare, was yet struggling to emerge from barbarity. The philology of Italy had been transplanted hither in the reign of Henry VIII., and the learned languages had been successfully cultivated by Lilly, Linacre, and More; by Pole, Cheke, and Gardiner; and afterwards by Smith, Clerk, Haddon, and Ascham. Greek was taught in the public schools, and many of the Italian and Spanish poets were read with great diligence. But these advantages were confined to distinguished rank, whilst the public at large was still gross and dark. Plebeian learning was confined to giants, dragons, and enchantments; and the sober representations of common life would not have been tolerated by a nation which delighted in the wonders of fiction, in the exploits of Palmerin, and the feats of Guy of Warwick. Writing for such audiences as these, Shakspeare was compelled to look around for strange events and fabulous transactions; and that incredibility by which maturer knowledge is offended, was the chief recommendation of his writings to unskilful curiosity. Such, indeed, is the power of the marvellous, even over those who despise it, that every man finds his mind more strongly seized by the tragedies of Shakspeare than of any other writer; and he has, perhaps, excelled all but Homer, in the leading qualifications of a writer, by the power of exciting a restless and unquenchable curiosity. The necessity of observing the unities of time and place, arises from the supposed necessity of making the drama credible; but it will be found that the slavish adherence to these principles, which Voltaire and others so rigidly enforce, gives much more trouble to the poet, than pleasure to the audience. It is false that any representation is mistaken for reality; for if a spectator can once be persuaded that his old acquaintance are Alexander and Cæsar, that a room illuminated with candles is the plain of Pharsalia, he is in a state of elevation beyond the reach of truth, and there is no reason why, in such a state of ecstasy, he should count the clock, or consider minutes and hours, as any other than days and years. Whether, therefore, Shakspeare knew the unities, and rejected them by design, or deviated from them by happy ignorance, it is impossible to decide, and useless to inquire; since they are not essential to a just drama, and though sometimes conducive to pleasure, may always be sacrificed to the nobler beauties of variety and instruction.

Mr. Rowe's was the first editorial commentary on the plays of Shakspeare, and notwithstanding his alleged incapacity for criticism, the prominent beauties of our poet are judiciously and not inelegantly pointed out. Like other critics, he praises the fertility of his invention—the historical fidelity of his characters—the stateliness of his diction—the power of his muse in creating terror, or exciting mirth—and the perfection of his writings at a time of almost universal license and ignorance, where there was not one play in existence of sufficient merit to be acted at the present day.

With an ardour, an eloquence, and a discrimination, suited to his highly-gifted mind, and becoming the liberality of his poetical character, Mr. Pope enlarges on the characteristic excellences of our immortal bard. He considers him more original even than Homer; since the art of the latter proceeded through Egyptian strainers, and came to him not without some tincture of the learning of those that preceded him. In the power of the passions, he declares him to be no less admirable, than in the coolness of reflection and reasoning; and (as though he had been acquainted with the world by intuition) that his sentiments are the most pertinent and judicious, even on those great and public scenes, of which he could have had no experience. One cause of Shakspeare's peculiarities was the profession to which he belonged. Players are just judges of what is right, as tailors are of what is graceful. Living by the majority, they know no rule but that of pleasing the present humour, and complying with the wit in fashion. Our author first formed himself upon the opinions of this class of men; and consequently his faults are less to be ascribed to his wrong judgment as a poet, than to his right judgment as a player.

Mr. Theobald, in the midst of many compliments to his own acuteness, and much irreverent abuse of Pope, whose wit (he says) is as thick as Tewkesbury mustard, thus panegyricizes Shakspeare: "Whether we respect the force and greatness of his genius, the extent of his knowledge and reading, the power and address with which he throws out and applies either nature or learning, there is ample scope both for our wonder and pleasure."

Sir Thomas Hanmer commends the rich vein of sense which runs through the entire works of Shakspeare; and declares him unequalled in the two great branches of dramatic poetry, by the best writers of any age or country.

Dr. Warburton, in a paper replete with brilliant wit and energetic argument, thus speaks of the productions of Shakspeare: "Of all the literary exertions of speculative men, whether assigned for the use or entertainment of the world, there are none of so much importance as those which let us into the knowledge of our nature. Others may exercise the reason, or amuse the imagination, but these only can improve the heart, and form the mind to wisdom. Now in this science Shakspeare confessedly occupies the foremost place; whether we consider the amazing sagacity with which he investigates every hidden spring and wheel of human action; or his happy manner of communicating this knowledge, in the just and living paintings which he has given us of all our passions, appetites, and pursuits."

To the recorded testimony of these eminent writers, it is scarcely necessary that any other should be added; but the inquisitive reader will find the merits of Shakspeare still further developed in the essays of Mrs. Montague, Dr. Richardson, Dr. Grey, and Mr. Britton. Dryden, whose own accomplished genius was sullied and debased by the dramatic impurities in which he indulged, says that Shakspeare had the largest and most comprehensive soul of all modern, and perhaps ancient, poets, and that, in dramatic composition, he has left no praise for any who come after him. In a similar feeling, and with that stately sentiment which pervades all he has written, Dr. Young thus exalts the qualifications of our poet: "Whatever other learning he wanted, he was master of two books unknown to many of the profoundly read, though books which the last conflagration alone can destroy: the book of nature, and that of man." Mr. Malone calls him the great refiner and polisher of our language; and ranks his compound epithets, his bold metaphors, his energetic expressions, and harmonious numbers, amongst the chief beauties of his works. Dr. Johnson, whose opinions have already been recited in opposition to those of Voltaire, declares that a valuable system of civil and economical prudence may be collected from the plays of Shakspeare—that they are filled with practical axioms and domestic wisdom—that almost every verse (as was formerly said of the writings of Euripides) is a precept; but that, at the same time, his real power is shewn in the progress of the fable, and the tenor of the dialogue—and that he who tries to recommend him by select quotations, will succeed like the pedant in Hierocles, who, when he offered his house to sale, carried a brick in his pocket as a specimen.

Though the excellence of Shakspeare's productions has become an article of literary faith in England, and though such of his defects as are too palpable to be overlooked, have been gratuitously attributed to the age in which he lived, it is only a necessary supplement to the foregoing remarks, and essential to a right appreciation of his character, briefly to point out what those defects are. In many of his plays, the latter part is evidently neglected; when he found himself near the end of his work, and in view of his reward, he shortened the labour to snatch the profit. The plots are often so loosely formed, that a very slight consideration may improve them, and so carelessly pursued, that he seems not always fully to comprehend his own design. In his comic scenes, the jests are frequently gross, and the pleasantry licentious; nor are his ladies and gentlemen sufficiently distinguished from clowns, by any appearance of refined manners. He is not long soft and pathetic, without some idle conceit, or contemptible equivocation. What he does best, he soon ceases to do. Let but a quibble spring up before him, and he leaves his work unfinished: he follows it at all adventures, however dignified or profound, however tender or pathetic, the subject which engages his attention. Lastly, he is accused of sacrificing virtue to convenience, and of being much more careful to please than to instruct. He that thinks reasonably, must think morally; but our poet's precepts drop casually from him; he makes no just distribution of good or evil; and after carrying his persons indifferently through right and wrong, he dismisses them at the close without further care, leaving their examples to operate by chance.

With these imperfect particulars, derived from the united labours of various admirers and commentators, our brief sketch of the life of Shakspeare must necessarily conclude. On all the topics which usually constitute the personal history of an individual, his contemporaries and immediate successors have been equally silent. The meagre facts which were first imbodied in a memoir by Mr. Rowe, and have been moulded into so many forms by the caprice or taste of successive writers, remain to the present day, unaided by any accession of novelty, and unimpeached by the utmost acuteness of criticism. His early studies—the progress of his pen—his moral and social qualities—his friendships and his errors, are completely buried in oblivion, as if the homage which is paid to his splendid poetical genius, should be unmingled with any recollection of his faults and failings as a man. Nor, after an interval of two centuries, is it probable that any undiscovered clue is in existence, by which the memorial of his actions can be redeemed from its present obscurity.

CORIOLANUS.

LITERARY AND HISTORICAL NOTICE.

THIS play, supposed to have been written in 1609, comprehends a period of five or six years. The plebeian citizens of Rome, unable to pay their debts from poverty, consequent upon the long war against Tarquin and the Latins, and incensed by the supposed indifference of the senators and patricians, retired with the undisciplined troops of Valerius, to a mountain about three miles from Rome, afterwards called Mount Sacer. The city was thrown into great alarm by this defection, and Menenius, who is described as "a very discreet person, and a great orator," was sent with other commissioners, to bring about a reconciliation. Here he related to them the fable of the belly and its members, the application of which had such an effect, that they were about to follow him home, when Sicinius and Junius Brutus (two factious fellows) cunningly demanding a guarantee for the people, were in the end appointed their tribunes, with very extraordinary power. In the year following, there was a severe famine; and Coriolanus (so called for his exploits at Corioli) with other young patricians, making excursions into the enemy's country, returned, laden with corn. Provisions also arriving from Sicily, the senate determined upon selling them at a cheap rate to the poor; but Coriolanus proposed the abolition of the tribuneship, and the retention of the corn, because the people had obstinately refused to join in the expedition sent out to obtain it. The exasperated populace would instantly have thrown him from the Tarpeian rock, but were repulsed by his friends. Being arraigned at the proper tribunal, he defended himself with so much grace and energy, that the people called out for his acquittal; whereupon one of the tribunes artfully and falsely accusing him of illegally appropriating the spoils of war, he was as suddenly sentenced to banishment. In a spirit of revenge, he offered his services to the Volscians, and carried destruction to the very gates of Rome. The city was on the point of being assaulted, when his mother, accompanied by his wife and children, threw herself at his feet, and worked so much upon the feelings of nature, that he granted a peace, and withdrew his troops. On returning to Antium, by the perfidious management of Tullius, he was cut in pieces ere he had time to defend his conduct; but the Volsci disapproved the assassination, buried him honourably, adorned his tomb with trophies, and the Roman women mourned for him twelve months. The poet has adhered very closely to historical facts. Mr. Pope remarks, that Shakespeare is found "to be very knowing in the customs, rites, and manners of antiquity." In Coriolanus and Julius Cæsar, not only the spirit, but the manners of the Romans are exactly drawn; and a still nicer distinction is shown between Roman manners in the time of the former and of the latter.* Many of the principal speeches are copied from Plutarch's life of Coriolanus, as translated by Sir Thomas North. There are some glaring anachronisms in this play, such as introducing our nicknames of Hob, Dick, &c. church-yards, kneels, and particularly, theatres for the exhibition of plays, which did not exist until 250 years after the death of Coriolanus. Volunna, also, was the name of his wife, not of his mother; and the good Menenius died three or four years before his revengeful expedition against Rome.—Dr. Johnson says: "The tragedy of Coriolanus is one of the most amusing of our author's performances. The old man's merriment in Menenius; the lofty lady's dignity in Volunna, the bridal modesty in Virgilia, the patrician and military haughtiness in Coriolanus, the plebeian malignity and tribunician insolence in Brutus and Sicinius make a very pleasing and interesting variety; and the various revolutions of the hero's fortune fill the mind with anxious curiosity. There is, perhaps, too much bustle in the first act, and too little in the last."

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Rome.—A Street.

Enter a company of mutinous CITIZENS, with Staves, Clubs, and other Weapons.

1 Cit. Before we proceed any further, hear me speak.

Cit. Speak, speak. [Several speaking at once.]

1 Cit. You are all resolved rather to die, than to furnish?

Cit. Resolved, resolved!

1 Cit. First you know, Caius Marcius is chief enemy to the people.

Cit. We know't, we know't.

1 Cit. Let us kill him, and we'll have corn at our own price. Is't a verdict?

Cit. No more talking out; let it be done: away, away.

2 Cit. One word, good citizens.

1 Cit. We are accounted poor citizens; the patricians, good.* What authority surfeits on, would relieve us; if they would yield us but the superfluity, while it were wholesome, we might guess they relieved us humanely; but they think we are too dear; the leanness that afflicts us, the object of our misery, is as an inventory to particularize their abundance ; our sufferance is a gain to them.—Let us revenge this with our pikes, ere we become rakes : * for the gods know, I speak this in hunger for bread, not in thirst for revenge.

1 Cit. Would you proceed especially against Caius Marcius ?

Cit. Against him first : he's a very dog to the commonality.

2 Cit. Consider you what services he has done for his country ?

1 Cit. Very well ; and could be content to give him good report for't, but that he pays himself with being proud.

2 Cit. Nay, but speak not maliciously.

1 Cit. I say unto you, what he hath done famously, he did it to that end ; though soft-conscience'd men can be content to say it was for his country, he did it to please his mother, and to be partly proud ; which he is, even to the altitude of his virtue.

2 Cit. What he cannot help in his nature, you account a vice in him : You must in no way say he is covetous.

1 Cit. If I must not, I need not be barren of accusations ; he hath faults, with surplus, to tire in repetition. [Shouts within.] What shouts are these ? The other side o' the city is risen : Why stay we prating here ? to the Capitol !

Cit. Come, come.

1 Cit. Soft ; who comes here ?

Enter MENENIUS AGRIPPA.

2 Cit. Worthy Menenius Agrippa : one that hath always loved the people.

1 Cit. He's one honest enough ; 'Would, all the rest were so !

Men. What work's, my countrymen, in hand ? Where go you With bats and clubs ? The matter ? Speak, I pray you.

1 Cit. Our business is not unknown to the senate ; they have had inkling,† this fortnight what we intend to do, which now we'll show 'em in deeds. They say, poor suitors have strong breaths ; they shall know we have strong arms too.

Men. Why, masters, my good friends, mine honest neighbours, Will you undo yourselves ?

1 Cit. We cannot, Sir, we are undone already.

Men. I tell you, friends, most charitable care Have the patricians of you. For your wants, Your suffering in this dearth, you may as well Strike at the heaven with your staves, as lift them

Against the Roman state ; whose course will on The way it takes, cracking ten thousand curbs Of more strong link assunder, than can ever Appear in your impediment : For the dearth, The gods, not the patricians, make it ; and Your knees to them, not arms, must help.

Alack !

You are transported by calamity Thither where more attends you ; and you slander The helms o' the state, who care for you like When you curse them as enemies. [Fathers,

1 Cit. Care for us ! True, indeed ! They ne'er cared for us yet. Suffer us to famish, and their store-houses crammed with grain ; make edicts for usury, to support usurers ; repeal daily any wholesome act established against the rich ; and provide more piercing statutes daily, to chain up and restrain the poor. If the wars eat us not up, they will ; and there's all the love they bear us.

Men. Either you must Confess yourselves wondrous malicious, Or be accus'd of folly. I shall tell you A pretty tale ; it may be, you have heard it : But, since it serves my purpose, I will venture To speak't ‡ a little more.

1 Cit. Well, I'll hear it, Sir ; yet you must not think to sob off our disgrace with a tale ; but, an't please you, deliver.

Men. There was a time, when all the body's members

Rebell'd against the belly ; thus accus'd it :—

That only like a gulf it did remain 'T'be midst o' the body, idle and inactive, Still cupboarding the viand, never bearing Like labour with the rest ; where † the other instruments

Did see, and hear, devise, instruct, walk, feel, And, mutually participate,† did minister Unto the appetite and affection common Of the whole body. The belly answered,—

1 Cit. Well, Sir, what answer made the belly ?

Men. Sir, I shall tell you.—With a kind of smile,

Which ne'er came from the lungs, but even thus, (For, look you, I may make the belly smile As well as speak,) it tauntingly replied To the discontented members, the mutinous parts That envied his receipt ; even so most fitly ; As you malign our senators, for that They are not such as you—

1 Cit. Your belly's answer : What ! The kingly-crowned head, the vigilant eye, The counsellor heart, the arm our soldier, Our steed the leg, the tongue our trumpeter, With other muniments and petty helps In this our fabric, if that they—

Men. What then ?—'Fore me, this fellow speaks !—what then ? what then ?

1 Cit. Should by the cormorant belly be restrain'd,

Who is the sink o' the body,—

Men. Well, what then ?

1 Cit. The former agents, if they did complain, What could the belly answer ?

Men. I will tell you ;

If you'll bestow a small (of what you have little,) Patience, a while, you'll hear the belly's answer.

1 Cit. You are long about it.

Men. Note me this, good friend ; Your most grave belly was deliberate, Not rash like his accusers, and thus answer'd. Tride is it, my incorporate friends, quoth he, That I receive the general food at first, Which you do live upon : and fit it is ; Because I am the store-house, and the shop (Of the whole body : But if you do remember, I send it through the rivers of your blood, Even to the court, the heart,—to the seat o' the brain :

And, through the cranks ‡ and offices of man, The strongest nerves, and small inferior veins, From me receive that natural competency Wherewith they live : And though that all at once,

You, my good friends, (this says the belly, mark me.)

1 Cit. Ay, Sir ; well, well.

Men. Though all at once cannot See what I do deliver out to each ; Yet I can make my audit up, that all From me do back receive the flour of all, And leave me but the bran. What say you to't ?

1 Cit. It was an answer : How apply you this ? Men. The senators of Rome are this good belly,

And you the mutinous members : For examine Their counsels and their cares ; digest things rightly,

Touching the weal o' the common ; you shall find No public benefit which you receive, But it proceeds, or comes, from them to you, And no way from yourselves.—What do you think ?

You the great toe of this assembly ?

1 Cit. I the great toe ? Why the great toe ?

Men. For that being one o' the lowest, basest, poorest,

* Thin as vane. † A him. ‡ Spread it.

* Whereas.

† Participating.

‡ Exactly:

§ Windings.

Will then cry out of Marcius, Oh! if he had borne the business!

Sic. Besides, if things go well, Opinion, that so sticks on Marcius, shall Of his demerits * rob Cominius.

Bru. Come:

Half all Cominius' honours are to Marcius, Though Marcius earn'd them not; and all his faults

To Marcius shall be honours, though, indeed, In ought he merit not.

Sic. Let's hence, and hear

How the dispatch is made; and in what fashion, More than in singularity,† he goes Upon his present action.

Bru. Let's along.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Corioli.—The Senate-House.

Enter TULLUS AUFIDIUS, and certain SENATORS.

1 Sen. So, your opinion is, Aufidius, That they of Rome are enter'd in our counsels, And know how we proceed.

Auf. Is it not yours?

What-ever hath been thought on in this state, That could be brought to bodily act ere Rome Had circumvention‡? 'Tis not four days gone, Since I heard thence—these are the words: I think

I have the letter here; yea, here it is—[Reads. They have press'd a power, but it is not known

Whether for east or west: The dearth is great; The people mutinous: and it is rumour'd, Cominius, Marcus your old enemy, (Who is of Rome worse hated than of you,) And Titus Lartius, a most valiant Roman, These three lead on this preparation

Whither 'tis bent: most likely, 'tis for you: Consider of it.

1 Sen. Our army's in the field: We never yet made doubt but Rome was ready To answer us.

Auf. Nor did you think it folly, To keep your great pretences veil'd, till when They needs must shew themselves; which in the hatching,

It seem'd, appear'd to Rome. By the discovery, We shall be shorten'd in our aim, which, To take in § many towns, ere, almost, Rome Should know we were afoot.

2 Sen. Noble Aufidius,

Take your commission; hie you to your bands: Let us alone to guard Corioli: If they set down before us, for the remove Bring up your army; but, I think, you'll find They have not prepar'd for us.

Auf. Oh! doubt not that:

I speak from certainties. Nay, more—Some parcels of their powers are forth already, And only hitherward. I leave your honours. If we and Caius Marcius chance to meet, 'Tis sworn between us, we shall never strike Till one can do no more.

All. The gods assist you!

Auf. And keep your honours safe!

1 Sen. Farewell.

2 Sen. Farewell.

All. Farewell.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Rome.—An Apartment in MARCIUS' House

Enter VOLUMNIA and VIRGILIA: They sit down on two low stools, and sew.

Vol. I pray you, daughter, sing; or express yourself in a more comfortable sort: If my son were my husband, I should freelier rejoice in that absence wherein he won honour, than in the embracements of his bed, where he would show most love. When yet he was but tender-bodied, and the only son of my womb: when youth with comeliness pluck'd all gaze his way; * When, for a day of kings' entreaties, a mother should not sell him an hour from her beholding; †,—considering how honour would become such a person; that it was no better than picture-like to hang by the wall, if renown made it not stir,—was pleased to let him seek danger where he was like to find fame. To a cruel war I sent him; from whence he returned, his brows bound with oak.‡ I tell thee, daughter, I sprang not more in joy at first hearing he was a man-child, than now in first seeing he had proved himself a man.

Vir. But had he died in the business, madam, how then?

Vol. Then his good report should have been my son: I therein would have found issue. Hear me profess sincerely: Had I a dozen sons, each in my love alike, and none less dear than thine and my good Marcius, I had rather had eleven die nobly for their country, than one voluptuously surfeit out of action.

Enter a GENTLEWOMAN.

Gent. Madam, the lady Valeria is come to visit you.

Vir. Beseech you, give me leave to retire myself.

Vol. Indeed, you shall not.

Methinks, I hear hither your husband's drum; See him pluck Aufidius down by the hair; As children from a bear the Voices shunning him;

Methinks, I see him stamp thus, and call thus,—Come on, you cowards, you were got in fear, Though you were born in Rome: His bloody brow

With his mail'd hand then wiping, forth he goes, Like to a harvest-man, that's task'd to mow Or all, or lose his hire.

Vir. His bloody brow! O Jupiter, no blood! Vol. Away, you fool! it more becomes a man, Than gilt his trophy: The breasts of Hecuba, When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier Than Hector's forehead, when it spit forth blood At Grecian swords' contending.—Tell Valeria

We are not to bid her welcome. [Exit GENT.]

Vir. Heavens bless my lord from tell Aufidius! Vol. He'll beat Aufidius' head below his kn— And tread upon his neck.

Re-enter GENTLEWOMAN, with VALERIA and her Usher.

Val. My ladies both, good day to you.

Vol. Sweet madam,—

Vir. I am glad to see your ladyship.

Val. How do you both? you are manifest house-keepers. What are you sewing here? A fine spot, in good faith.—How does your little son?

Vir. I thank your ladyship; well, good madam.

Vol. He had rather see the swords, and hear a drum, than look upon his school-master.

Val. O' my word, the father's son: I'll swear, 'tis a very pretty boy. O' my troth, I looked upon him o' Wednesday half an hour together: he has such a confirmed countenance. I saw him run after a gilded butterfly; and when he caught it, he let it go again; and after it again; and over and over he comes, and up again; caught it again: or whether his fall enraged him, or how 'twas, he did so set his teeth, and tear it: Oh! I warrant how he mammoock'd it!

Vol. One of his father's moods.

Val. Indeed he, 'tis a noble child.

Vir. A crack, § madam.

Val. Come, lay aside your stichery; I must have you play the idle housewife with me this afternoon.

Vir. No, good madam; I will not out of duty

* Demerits and merits had anciently the same meaning. † Let us also learn what are his powers, &c. ‡ Information of it. § To subdue.

* Attracted universal attention. † The most honourable crown of all—given to him who saved the life of a citizen. ‡ Tore it. § Boy.

Val. Not out of doors!

Vol. She shall, she shall.

Vir. Indeed, no, by your patience: I will not over the threshold, till my lord return from the wars.

Val. Fle, you confine yourself most unreasonably: Come, you must go visit the good lady that lies in.

Vir. I will wish her speedy strength, and visit her with my prayers; but I cannot go thither.

Vol. Why, I pray you?

Vir. 'Tis not to save labour, nor that I want love.

Val. You would be another Penelope: yet, they say, all the yarn she spun in Ulysses' absence did but fill Ithaca full of moths. Come; I would your cambric were sensible as your finger, that you might leave pricking it for pity. Come, you shall go with us.

Vir. No, good madam, pardon me; indeed, I will not forth.

Val. In truth, la, go with me; and I'll tell you excellent news of your husband.

Vir. O good madam, there can be none yet.

Val. Verily, I do not jest with you; there came news from him last night.

Vir. Indeed, madam?

Val. In earnest, it's true; I heard a senator speak it. Thus it is:—The Volscres have an army forth; against whom Cominius the general is gone, with one part of our Roman power: your lord, and Titus Lartius, are set down before their city Corioli; they nothing doubt prevailing, and to make it brief wars. This is true, on mine honour; and so, I pray, go with us.

Vir. Give me excuse, good madam; I will obey you in every thing hereafter.

Vol. Let her alone, lady; as she is now, she will but disease our better mirth.

Val. In truth, I think she would:—Fare you well then.—Come, good sweet lady.—Pr'ythee, Virgilia, turn thy solemnness out o'door, and go along with us.

Vir. No, at a word, madam: indeed, I must not. I wish you much mirth.

Val. Well, then, farewell. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—Before Corioli.

Enter with Drums, and Colours, MARCIUS, TITUS LARTIUS, Officers and Soldiers. To them a MESSENGER.

Mar. Yonder comes news:—A wager, they have met.

Lart. My horse to yours, no.

Mar. 'Tis done.

Lart. Agreed.

Mar. Say, has our general met the enemy?

Mess. They lie in view; but have not spoke as yet.

Lart. So, the good horse is mine.

Mar. I'll buy him of you.

Lart. No, I'll not sell, nor give him: lend you him, I will,

For half a hundred years.—Summon the town.

Mar. How far off lie these armies?

Mess. within this mile and half.

Mar. Then shall we hear their drum, and they ours.

Now, Mars, I prythee make us quick in work: That we, with smoking swords, may march from hence,

To help our fielded friends!—Come, blow thy

Tullus Aufidius, is he within your walls?

1 Sen. No, nor a man that fears you less than he, That's lesser than a little. Hark, our drums

Are bringing forth our youth: We'll break our walls,

Rather than they shall pound us up: our gates, Which yet seem shut, we have but pinned with rushes;

They'll open of themselves. Hark you, far off; Other Alarums.

There is Aufidius; list, what work he makes

Amongst your cloven army,

Mar. Oh! they are at it!

Lart. Their noise be our instruction.—Ladders ho!

The Volscres enter and pass over the Stage.

Mar. They fear us not, but issue forth their city.

Now put your shields before your hearts, and With hearts more proof than shields.—Advance, brave Titus:

They do disdain us much beyond our thoughts, Which makes me sweat with wrath.—Come on, my fellows;

He that retires, I'll take him for a Volscer.

And he shall feel mine edge.

Alarum, and exeunt ROMANS and VOLSCRES, fighting. The ROMANS are beaten back to their trenches. Re-enter MARCIUS.

Mar. All the contagion of the south light on you!

You shames of Rome! you herd of—Boils and Plaster you o'er; that you may be abhor'd on:

If you'll stand fast, we'll beat them to their

As they us to our trenches followed.

Another Alarum. The Volscres and ROMANS re-enter, and the fight is renewed. The Volscres retire into Corioli, and MARCIUS follows them to the gates.

So, now the gates are open:—Now prove good seconds:

'Tis for the followers fortune widens them, Not for the fliers: make me, and do the like.

[He enters the gates, and is shut in.

1 Sol. Fool-hardiness! not I.

2 Sol. Nor I.

3 Sol. See, they

Have shut him in. [Alarum continues.

All. To the pot, I warrant him.

Enter TITUS LARTIUS.

Lart. What is become of Marcus?

All. Slain, Sir, doubtless.

1 Sol. Following the fliers at the very heels,

With them he enters: who, upon the sudden,

Clapp'd to their gates: he is himself alone,

To answer all the city.

Lart. O noble fellow!

Who, sensible, outdares his senseless sword,

And, when it bows, stands up! Thou art left,

Marcus:

A carbuncle entire, as big as thou art,

Were not so rich a jewel. Thou wast a soldier

Even to Cato's wish, not fierce and terrible

Only in strokes; but, with thy grim looks, and

The thunder-like percussion of thy sounds,

Thou mad'st thine enemies shake, as if the world

Were feverous and did tremble.

Re-enter MARCIUS bleeding, assaulted by the enemy.

1 Sol. Look, Sir.

Lart. 'Tis Marcus:

Let's fetch him off, or make remain alike.

[They fight, and all enter the city.

• When it is bent.

SCENE V.—Within the town.—A Street.Enter certain ROMANS, with spoils.

1 Rom. This I will carry to Rome.

2 Rom. And I this.

3 Rom. A murrain on't! I took this for silver.

[Alarum continues still afar off.]Enter MARCIUS, and TITUS LARTIUS, with a trumpet.

Mar. See here these movers, that do prize their hours

At a crack'd drachin! Cushions, leaden spoons, Irons of doit, doublets that hangmen would Bury with those that wore them, these base slaves, Ere yet the fight be done, pack up:—Down with them.

And hark, what noise the general makes! To him:—

There is the man of my soul's hate, Aufidius, Piercing our Romans: Then, valiant Titus, take Convenient numbers to make good the city; Whilst I, with those that have the spirit, will To help Cominius. [haste]

Lart. Worthy Sir, thou bleed'st; Thy exercise hath been too violent for A second course of fight.

Mar. Sir, praise me not: [well.]

My work hath yet not warn'd me: Fare you The blood I drop is rather physical Than dangerous to me: To Aufidius thus I will appear, and fight.

Lart. Now the fair goddess, Fortune, Fall deep in love with thee: and her great charms Misguide thy opposers' swords! Bold gentleman, Prosperity bethy page!

Mar. Thy friend no less Than those she placeth highest! So farewell.

Lart. Thou worstliest Marcius!—

[Exit MARCIUS.]

Go, sound thy trumpet in the market-place;

Call thither all the officers of the town, Where they shall know our mind. Away. *[Exitunt.]*SCENE VI.—Near the Camp of COMINIUS.Enter COMINIUS and forces, retreating.

Com. Breathe you, my friends; well fought, we are come off

Like Romans, neither foolish in our stands, Nor cowardly in retire; believe me, Sirs, We shall be charg'd again. Whiles we have struck, [heard]

By interlins, and conveying gusts, we have The charges of our friends:—The Roman gods Lead their successes as we wish our own; That both our powers, with smiling fronts encountering.

Enter a MESSENGER.

May give you thankful sacrifice!—Thy news

Mess. The citizens of Corioli have issued, And given to Lartius and to Marcius battle: I saw our party to their trenches driven, And then I came away.

Com. Though thou speak'st truth, Methinks, thou speak'st not well. How long is't since?

Mess. Above an hour, my lord.

Com. 'Tis not a mile; briefly we heard their drums:

How could'st thou in a mile be so far off, And bring thy news so late?

Mess. Spies of the Volscies Held me in chase, that I was forc'd to wheel Thine or four miles about; else had I, Sir, Half an hour since brought my report.

Enter MARCIUS.

Com. Who's yonder, That does appear as he were slain? O gods!

• Exeunt.

He has the stamp of Marcius; and I have Beforetime seen him thus.

Mar. Come I too late?

Com. The shepherd knows not thunder from a tabor,

More than I know the sound of Marcius' tongue From every meaner man's.

Mar. Come I too late?

Com. Ay, if you come not in the blood of But mantled in your own. [others,]

Mar. Oh! let me clip you

In arms as sound, as when I woo'd; in heart As merry as when our nuptial day was done, And tapers burn'd to bedward.

Com. Flower of warriors,

How is't with Titus Lartius?

Mar. As with a man busied about decrees: Condemning some to death, and some to exile; Ransoming him, or pitying, threaten'ing the other; Holding Corioli in the name of Rome, Even like a fawning greyhound in the leash, To let him slip at will.

Com. Where is that slave, Which told me they had beat you to your trenches? Where is he? Call him hither.

Mar. Let him alone,

He did inform the truth: But for our gentlemen, The common file, (a plague I—tribunes for them!) The mouse ne'er shunn'd the cat, as they did budge

From rascals worse than they.

Com. But how prevail'd you?

Mar. Will the time serve to tell? I do not think—

Where is the enemy? Are you lords o'the field? If not, why cease you till you are so?

Com. Marcius,

We have at disadvantage fought, and did Retire, to win our purpose.

Mar. How lies their battle? Know you on which side

They have plac'd their men of trust?

Com. As I guess, Marcius, Their bands in the vaward* are the Antiates,† Of their best trust: o'er them Aufidius, Their very heart of hope.

Mar. I do beseech you, By all the battles wherein we have fought, By the blood we have shed together, by the vows We have made to endure friends, that you directly

Set me against Aufidius and his Antiates: And that you not delay the present; but, Filling the air with swords advanced, and darts, We prove this very hour.

Com. Though I could wish

You were conducted to a gentle bath, And balm applied to you, yet dare I never Deny your asking: take your choice of those That best can aid your action.

Mar. Those are they That most are willing:—If any such be here, (As it were sin to doubt,) that love this painting Wherein you see me smear'd; if any fear Lesser his person than an ill report; if any think brave death outweighs bad life, And that his country's dearer than himself; Let him, alone, or so many, so minded, Wave thus [waving his hand] to express his disposition, And follow Marcius,[They all shout and wave their swords; take him up in their arms, and cast up their caps.]

O me, alone! Make you a sword of me? If these shows be not outward, which of you But is four Volscies? None of you but is Able to bear against the great Aufidius A shield as hard as his. A certain number, Though thanks to all, must I select: the rest Shall bear the business in some other fight, As I shall be obey'd. Please you to march, • Front. † Soldiers of Antiates.

And four shall quickly draw out my command,
Which men are best inclin'd.

Com. March on, my fellows:
Make good this ostentation, and you shall Divide in all with us. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.—The Gates of Corioli.

TITUS LARTIUS, having set a guard upon Corioli, going with a drum and trumpet toward COMINIUS and CAIUS MARCIUS, enters with a LIEUTENANT, a party of soldiers, and a scout.

Lart. So, let the ports * be guarded : keep your duties,
As I have set them down. If I do send, despatch
Those centuries † to our aid : the rest will serve
For a short holding : if we lose the field,
We cannot keep the town.

Lieu. Fear not our care, Sir.

Lart. Hence, and shut your gates upon us.—
Our gulder, come ; to the Roman camp conduct us. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VIII.—A field of battle between the Roman and the Volscian Camps.

Alarm. Enter MARCIUS and AUFIDIUS.

Mar. I'll fight with none but thee ; for I do hate thee
Worse than a promise-breaker.

Auf. We hate alike :
Not Afric owns a serpent, I abhor
More than thy fame and envy : Fix thy foot.

Mar. Let the first budger ‡ die the other's slave,
And the gods doom him after !

Auf. If I fly, Marcus,
Halloo me like a hare.

Mar. Within these three hours, Tullus,
Alone I fought in your Corioli walls,
And made what work I pleas'd : 'Tis not my
blood,
Wherein thou seest me mask'd for thy revenge,
Wiencup thy power to the highest.

Auf. Wert thou the Hector,
That was the whip of your blagg'd progeny, §
Thou should'st not 'scape me here.—

[They fight and certain voices come to the aid of AUFIDIUS.]

Officings, and not valiant—you have sham'd me
In your condemned seconds. ||

[Exeunt fighting, driven in by MARCIUS.]

SCENE IX.—The Roman Camp.

Alarm. A retreat is sounded. Flourish. Enter at one side, COMINIUS and Romans ; at the other side, MARCIUS, with his arm in a scarf, and other Romans.

Com. If I should tell thee o'er this thy day's work,

Thou'lt not believe thy deeds : but I'll report it,
Where senators shall mingle tears with smiles ;
Where great patricians shall attend, and shrug,
I'th end, admire ; where ladies shall be frighted,
And gladly quak'd, † hear more ; where the dull
Tribunes,

That, with the fusty plebeians, hate thine honours, [gods,

Shall say, against their hearts—*We thank thee
Our Rome hath such a soldier !*—
Yet can'st thou to a moriel of this feast,
Having fully dined before.

Enter TITUS LARTIUS, with his power,  from the pursuit.

Lart. O general,
Here is the steed, we the caparison :
Hast thou beheld—

Mar. Pray now, no more ; my mother,
Who has a charter ‡ to extol her blood,

When she does praise me, grieves me. I have done,

As you have done † that's what I can ; induc'd
As you have been, that's for my country ;
He, that has but effected his good will,
Hath overtaken mine act.

Com. You shall not be
The grave of your deserving : Rome must know
The value of her own : 'twere a concealment
Worse than a theft, no less than a traducement,
To hide your doings ; and to silence that,
Which to the spire and top of praises vouch'd
Would seem but modest : Therefore, I beseech
(In sign of what you are, not to reward [you
What you have done] before our army hear me.

Mar. I have some wounds upon me, and they smart
To hear themselves remember'd.

Com. Should they not,
Well might they fester 'gainst ingratitude,
And tent themselves with death. Of all the horses,
(Whereof we have taken good, and good store,) of all

The treasure, in this field achiev'd, and city,
We render you the tenth ; to be taken forth,
Before the common distribution, at
Your only choice.

Mar. I thank you, general ;
But cannot make my heart consent to take
A bribe to pay my sword ; I do refuse it ;
And stand upon my common part with those
That have beheld the doing.

[*A long flourish. They all cry, Marcus !
Marcus ! cast up their caps and lances :
COMINIUS and LARTIUS stand bare.*]

Mar. May these same instruments, which you prolance, [shall

Never sound more ! When drums and trumpets I'th field prove flatterers, let counts and cities be [grows

Made all of false-fac'd soothing : When steel
Soft as the parasite's silk, let him be made
An overture for the wars ! No more, I say ;
For that I have not wash'd my nose that bled,
Or foil'd some debile * wretch, (which, without note,

Here's many else have done,) you shout me forth
In acclamations hyperbolical :
As if I loved my little should be dicted
In praises sanc'd with lies †

Com. Too modest are you ;
More cruel to your good report, than grateful
To us that give you truly : by your patience,
If 'gainst yourself you be incens'd, we'll put you (Like one that means his proper ‡ harm,) in manacles, [known,

Then reason safely with you.—Therefore, be it
As to us, to all the world, that Caius Marcius Wears this war's garland : in token of the which
My noble steed, known to the camp, I give him,
With all his trim belonging ; and, from this
time,

For what he did before Corioli, call him,
With all the applause and clamour of the host,
CAIUS MARCIUS CORIOLANUS.—

Bear the addition nobly ever !

[Flourish. Trumpets sound, and Drums.
All. Caius Marcius Coriolanus !

Cor. I will go wash ;

And when my face is fair, you shall perceive Whether I blush, or no : Howbeit, I thank
you :—

I mean to stride your steed ; and, at all times,
To undercrest † your good addition,
To the fairness of my power.

Com. So, to our tent :
Where, ere we do repose us, we will write
To Rome of our success.—You, Titus Lartius, Must to Corioli back : send us to Rome
The heat, § with whom we may articulate,
For their own good, and ours.

Lart. I shall, my lord.

Cor. The gods begin to mock me. I that now Refus'd most princely gifts, am bound to beg Of my lord general.

Com. Take it: 'tis yours.—What is't?

Cor. I sometime lay, here in Corioli, At a poor man's house; he us'd me kindly: He cried to me; I saw him prisoner; But then Aufidius was within my view, And wrath o'erwhelm'd my pity: I request you To give my poor host freedom.

Com. Oh! well begg'd! Were he the butcher of my son, he should Be free, as is the wind. Deliver him, Titus.

Lart. Marcius, his name?

Cor. By Jupiter, forgot:— I am weary; yea, my memory is tir'd.— Have we no wine here?

Com. Go to we our tent: The blood upon your visage dries: 'tis time It should be look'd to: come. [Exeunt.

SCENE X.—The Camp of the Volsces.

A Flourish. Cornets. Enter TULLUS AUFIDIUS, bloody with two or three SOLDIERS.

Auf. The town is ta'en!

1 Sol. 'Twill be delivered back on good condition.

Auf. Condition!—

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Rome.—A Public Place.

Enter MENENIUS, SICINIUS, and BRUTUS.

Men. The augurer tells me we shall have news to-night.

Bru. Good, or bad?

Men. Not according to the prayer of the people, for they love not Marcius.

Sic. Nature teaches beasts to know their friends.

Men. Pray you, who does the wolf love?

Sic. The lamb.

Men. Ay, to devour him; as the hungry pelicans would the noble Marcius.

Bru. He's a lamb indeed, that baes like a bear.

Men. He's a bear indeed, that lives like a lamb. You two are old men; tell me one thing that I shall ask you.

Both Trib. Well, Sir.

Men. In what enormity is Marcius poor, that you two have not in abundance?

Bru. He's poor in no one fault, but stored with all.

Sic. Especially, in pride.

Bru. And topping all others in boasting.

Men. This is strange now: Do you two know how you are censured here in the city, I mean of us o'the right hand file? Do you?

Both Trib. Why, how are we censured?

Men. Because you talk of pride now,—Will you not be angry?

Both Trib. Well, well, Sir, well.

Men. Why 'tis no great matter; for a very little thief of occasion will rob you of a great deal of patience: give your disposition the reins, and be angry at your pleasures; at the least, if you take it as a pleasure to you, in being so. You blame Marcius for being proud?

Bru. We do it not alone, Sir.

Men. I know you can do very little alone; for your helps are many; or else your actions would grow wondrous single: your abilities are too infant-like, for doing much alone. You talk of pride: Oh! that you could turn your eyes towards the napes of your necks, and make but an interior survey of your good selves! Oh! that you could!

Bru. What then, Sir?

Men. Why, then you should discover a brace of unmeriting, proud, violent, testy magistrates, (alias, fools) as any in Rome.

Sic. Menenius, you are known well enough too.

Men. I am known to be a humorous patrician, and one that loves a cup of hot wine with not a drop of allaying Tybe * in't; said to be something imperfect, in favouring the first complaint: hasty, and tender-like, upon too trivial motion: one that converses more with the buttock of the night, than with the forehead of the morning. What I think, I utter; and spend my malice in my breath: Meeting two such weak-men as you are, (I cannot call you Lycurguses) if the drink you gave me, touch my palate adversely, I make a crooked face at it. I cannot say, your worships have delivered the matter well, when I find the ass in compound with the major part of your syllables: and though I must be content to bear with those that say you are reverend grave men, yet they lie deadly that tell you have good faces. If you see this in the map of my microcosm, follows it, that I am known well enough too? What harm can your bisson; conspectivities glean out of this character, if I be known well enough too.

Bru. Come, Sir, come, we know you well enough.

Men. You know neither me, yourselves, nor any thing. You are ambitious for poor knaves' caps and legs; † you wear out a good wholesome forenoon, in hearing a cause between an orange-wife and a fossot-seller; and then rejoin the controversy of three-pence to a second day of audience.—When you are hearing a matter between party and party, if you chance to be pinched with the cholick, you make faces like mummers; set up the bloody flag against all patience; and, roaring for a chamber-pot, dismiss the controversy bleeding, the more entangled by your hearing: all the peace you make in their cause is, calling both the parties knaves: You are a pair of strange ones.

Bru. Come, come, you are well understood to be a perfecter giber for the table, than a necessary benchman in the Capitol.

* Whereas. † Strike. protection. ‡ Waited for

1 Under my brother's. 2 Water of the Tiber.

† Scates. Obsequance.

‡ Blind views.

Men. Our very priests must become mockers, if they shall encounter such ridiculous subjects as you are. When you speak best unto the purpose, it is not worth the wagging of your beards; and your beards deserve not so honourable a grave, as to stuff a butcher's cushion, or to be entombed in an ass's pack-saddle. Yet you must be saying, Marcius is proud; who, in a cheap estimation, is worth all your predecessors, since Deucallion; though, peradventure, some of the best of them were hereditary hangmen. Good e'en to your worship; more of your conversation would infect my brain, being the herdsman of the beastly plebeians: I will be bold to take my leave of you.

[Brutus and Sicinius retire to the back of the Scene.]

Enter VOLUNNIA, VIRGILIA, and VALERIA, &c.

How now, my as fair as noble ladies, (and the moon, were she earthly, no nobler) whither do you follow your eyes so fast?

Vol. Honourable Menenius, my boy Marcius approaches; for the love of Juno, let's go.

Men. Ha! Marcius coming home?

Vol. Ay, worthy Menenius; and with most prosperous approbation.

Men. Take my cap, Jupiter, an I thank thee:—Hoo! Marcius coming home?

Two Ladies. Nay, 'tis true.

Vol. Look, here's a letter from him; the state hath another; his wife another; and I think, there's one at home for you.

Men. I will make my very house reel to-night:—A letter for me?

Vir. Yes, certain, there's a letter for you; I saw it.

Men. A letter for me? It gives me an estate of seven years' health; in which time I will make a lip at the physician: the most sovereign prescription of Galen is but empiric, and, to this preservative, of no better report than a horse-drench. Is he not wounded? he was wont to come home wounded.

Vir. Oh! no, no, no.

Vol. Oh! he is wounded, I thank the gods for't.

Men. So do I to, if it be not too much:—Brings 'a victory in his pocket?—The wounds become him.

Vol. On's brows, Menenius: he comes the third time home with the oaken garland.

Men. Has he disciplined Aufidius soundly?

Vol. Titus Lartius writes, they fought together, but Aufidius got off.

Men. And 'twas time for him too, I'll warrant him that: an he had staid by him, I would not have been so fidiused for all the chests in Corioli, and the gold that's in them. Is the senate possessed of this?

Vol. Good ladies, let's go:—Yes, yes, yes: the senate has letters from the general, wherein he gives my son the whole name of the war: he hath in this action outdone his former deeds doubly.

Vol. In troth, there's wondrous things spoke of him.

Men. Wondrous? ay, I warrant you, and not without his true purchasing.

Vir. The gods grant them true!

Vol. True? pow, wow.

Men. True? I'll be sworn they are true:—Where is he wounded?—God save your good worship! [To the Tribunes, who come forward.] Marcius is coming home: he has more cause to be proud.—Where is he wounded?

Vol. I'the shoulder, and i'the left arm: There will be large cicatrices to show the people, when he shall stand for his place. He received in the repulse of Tarquin, seven hurts i'the body.

Men. One in the neck, and two in the thigh,—there's nine that I know.

Vol. He had, before this last expedition, twenty-five wounds upon him.

Men. Now its twenty-seven: every gash was an enemy's grave: [A Shout and Flourish—Hark! the trumpets.

Vol. These are the ushers of Marcius: before him

He carries noise, and behind him he leaves Death, that dark spirit, in's nerry arm doth lie; Which being advanc'd, declines, and then men die.

A Sennet. Trumpets sound. Enter COMINIUS and TITUS LARTIUS; between them CORIOLANUS, crowned with an oaken Garland; with Captains, Soldiers, and a Herald.

Her. Know, Rome, that all alone Marcius did fight

Within Corioli' gates: where he hath won, With fame, a name to Cains Marcius; these In honour follows, Coriolanus: Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus!

[Flourish.]

All. Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus!

Cor. No more of this, it does offend my heart; Pray now, no more.

Com. Look, Sir, your mother,—

Cor. Oh!

You have I know, petition'd all the gods For my prosperity. [Kneels.]

Vol. Nay, my good soldier, up; My gentle Marcius, worthy Cains, and By deed-achieving honour newly nam'd, What is it? Coriolanus, must I call thee? But oh! thy wife.—

Cor. My gracious* silence, hail! Would'st thou have laugh'd, had I come coffin'd home,

That weep'd to see me triumph? Ah, my dear, Such eyes the widows in Corioli wear, And mothers that lack sons.

Men. Now the gods crown thee!

Cor. And live you yet?—O my sweet lady, pardon. [To VALERIA.]

Vol. I know not where to turn:—O welcome home;

And welcome, general;—And you are welcome all.

Men. A hundred thousand welcomes: I could weep, [come:]

And I could laugh: I am light and heavy: Well—A curse begin at very root of his heart, That is not glad to see thee!—You are three, That Rome should dote on: yet, by the faith of men;

We have some old crab-trees here at home, that will not

Be grafted to your relish. Yet welcome war—We call a nettle, but a nettle; and [riors:]

The faults of fools, but folly.

Com. Ever right.

Cor. Menenius, ever, ever.

Her. Give way there, and go on.

Cor. Your hand, and yours:

[To his Wife and Mother]

Ere in our own house I do shade my head, The good patricians must be visited; From whom I have received not only greetings But with them change of honours.

Vol. I have lived

To see inherited my very wishes, And the buildings of my fancy: only there Is one thing wanting, which I doubt not but Our Rome will cast upon thee.

Cor. Know, good mother, I had rather be their servant in my way, Than sway with them in theirs.

Com. On to the Capitol.

[Flourish. Coronets. Exeunt in state, as before. The Tribunes remain.]

Brutus. All tongues speak of him, and the bleared sights

SCENE II.—The same.—The Capitol.

Enter two OFFICERS, to lay Cushions.

1 Off. Come, come, they are almost here :
How many stand for consulships ?

2 Off. Three, they say : but 'tis thought of every one Coriolanus will carry it.

1 Off. That's a brave fellow ; but he's vengeance proud, and loves not the common people.

2 Off. 'Faith, there have been many great men that have flatter'd the people, who ne'er loved them ; and there be many that they have loved, they know not wherefore : so that if they love they know not why, they hate upon no better a ground : Therefore, for Coriolanus neither to care whether they love or hate him, manifests
the true knowledge he has in their disposition ;
and, out of his noble carelessness, lets them plainly see't.

1 Off. If he did not care whether he had their love, or no, he wou'd indifferently 'twixt doing them neither good nor harm ; but he seeks their hate with greater devotion than they can render it him ; and leaves nothing undone, that may fully discover him their opposite.* Now, to seem to affect the malice and displeasure of the people, is as bad as that which he dislikes, to flatter them for their love.

2 Off. He hath deserved worthily of his country :
And his ascent is not by such easy degrees as those, who, having been supple and courteous to the people, homett'd, † without any further deed to heave them at all into their estimation and reput : but he hath so planted his honours in their eyes, and his actions in their hearts, that for their tongues to be silent, and not confess so much, were a kind of ingratel injury : to report otherwise were a malice, that, giving itself the lie, would pluck reproof and rebuke from every ear that heard it.

1 Off. No more of him ; he is a worthy man :
Make way, they are coming.

A Sennet. Enter, with LACTORS, before them,
COMINIUS the Consul, MENENIUS, CORIO-LANUS, many other SENATORS, SIGINIUS, and BRUTUS. The SENATORS take their places ; the TRIBUNES take theirs also by themselves.

Men. Having determin'd of the Volscs, and
To send for Titus Lartius, it remains,
As the main point of this our after-meeting,
To gratify his noble service, that Hath thus stood for his country : Therefore, please
 you,

Most reverend and grave elders, to desire
The present consul, and last general
In our well-found successes, to report
A tale of that worthy work perform'd
By Caius Marcius Coriolanus ; whom
We meet here, both to thank, and to remember
With honours like himself.

1 Sen. Speak, good Cominius :
Leave nothing out for length, and make us think
Rather our state's defective for requital,
Than we to stretch it out. Masters o'the people
We do request your kindest ears : and, after,
Your loving motion toward the common body,
To yield what passes here.

Sic. We are contented
Upon a pleasing treaty ; and have hearts
Inclined to honour and advance

The theme of our assembly.

A kinder value of the people, than
He hath hereto priz'd them at.

Men. That's off, that's off,*
I would you rather had been silent: Please you
To hear Cominius speak?

Bru. Most willingly:
But yet my caution was more pertinent,
Than the rebuke you give it.

Men. He loves your people;
But tie him not to be their bedfellow.—
Worthy Cominius, speak.—Nay, keep your place.
[CORIOLANUS rises, and offers to go away.]

1 Sen. Sit, Coriolanus: never shame to hear
What you have nobly done.

Cor. Your honours' pardon;
I had rather have my wounds to heal again,
Than hear say how I got them.

Bru. Sir, I hope
My words disench'd you not.

Cor. No, Sir: yet oft,
When blows have made me stay, I fled from words.
You sooth'd not, therefore hurt not: But, your
I love them as they weigh. people,

Men. Pray now, sit down.
Cor. I had rather have one scratch my head
i'the sun,

When the alarum were struck,† than idly sit
To hear my nothings monster'd.

[Exit CORIOLANUS.]
Men. Masters o'the people,
You multiplying spawn how can he flatter,
(That's thousand to one good one,) when you now
see

He had rather venture all his limbs for honour,
Than one of his ears to hear it?—Proceed, Cominius.

Com. I shall lack voice: the deeds of Coriolanus

Should not be utter'd feebly.—It is held,
That valour is the chiefest virtue, and
Most dignifies the bearer:‡ if it be,
The man I speak of cannot in the world
Be singly counterpois'd. At sixteen years,
When Tarquin made a head for Rome, he fought
Beyond the mark of others; our then dictator,
Whom with all praise I point at, saw him fight,
When with his Amazonian chin he drove
The bristled‡ lips before him: he bestrode
An o'er press'd Roman, and i'the consul's view
Slew three opposers: Tarquin's self he met
And struck him on his knee: ¶ in that day's feats,
When he might act the woman in the scene,
He prov'd best man i'the field, and for his meed
Was brow-bound with the oak. His pupil age
Man-enter'd thus, he waxed like a sea;
And, in the brunt of seventeen battles since,
He lurch'd†† all swords o'the gailand. For this Before and in Corioli, let me say, [last
I cannot speak him home: He stopp'd the fiercers;
And, by his rare example, made the coward
Turn terror into sport: as waves before
A vessel under sail, so men obey'd, [stamp,
And fell below his stem: his sword (death's)
Where it did mark, it took; from face to foot
He was a thing of blood, whose every motion ††
Was timed §§ with dying cries! alone he enter'd
The mortal gate o'the city, which he painted
With shunless destiny, aidless came off,
And with a sudden re-enforcement struck
Corioli, like a planet: now all his is:
When by and by the din of war 'gan pierce
His ready sense: then straight his warbled spirit
Re-quick'n'd what in flesh was fatigate, |||
And to the battle came he; where he did Run reeking o'er the lives of men, as if
'Twere a perpetual spoil; and, till we call'd
Both field and city ours, he never stood
To ease his breast with pausing.

Men. Worthy man!

1 Sen. He cannot but with measure fit the
Which we devise him. [honours

Com. Our spoils he kick'd at;
And look'd upon things precious, as they were
The common muck o'the world: he covets less
Than misery * itself would give; rewards
His deeds with doing them; and is content
To spend the time, to end it.

Men. He's right noble;
Let him be call'd so.

1 Sen. Call for Coriolanus.
Off. He doth appear.

Re-enter CORIOLANUS.

Men. The senate, Coriolanus, are well pleas'd
To make thee consul.

Cor. I do owe them still
My life and services.

Men. It then remains,
That you do speak to the people.

Cor. I do beseech you,
Let me o'erleap that custom; for I cannot
Put on the gown, stand naked, and entreat them,
For my wounds' sake, to give their suffrage:
please you,

That I may pass this doing.

Sic. Sir, the people
Must have their voices; neither will they bate
One jot of ceremony.

Men. Put them not to't:—
Pray you, go fit you to the custom: and Take to you, as your predecessors have,
Your honour with your foam.

Cor. It is a part
That I shall blush in acting, and might well
Be taken from the people.

Bru. Mark you that!

Cor. To brag unto them,—Thus I did, and thus;—

Show them the unaching scars which I should hide,
As if I had received them for the hire
Of their breath only:—

* Men. Do not stand upon't.—
We recommend to you, tribunes of the people,
Our purpose to them;—and to our noble consul
Wish we all joy and honour.

Sen. To Coriolanus come all joy and honour!
[Flourish. Then exeunt SENATORS.]

Bru. You see how he intends to use the people

Sic. May they perceive his intent! He that will require them,

As if he did contemn what he requested
Should be in them to give.

Bru. Come, we'll inform them
Of our proceedings here: on the market-place,
I know they do attend us. [Exeunt,

SCENE III.—The same.—The Forum.

Enter several CITIZENS.

1 Cit. Once, if he do require our voices, we ought not to deny him.

2 Cit. We may, Sir, if we will.

3 Cit. We have power in ourselves to do it, but it is a power that we have no power to do:
for if he show us his wounds, and tell us his deeds, we are to put our tongues into those wounds, and speak for them; so, if he tell us his noble deeds, we must also tell him our noble acceptance of them. Ingratitude is monstrous: and for the multitude to be ingrateful were to make a monster of the multitude; of the which, we, being members, should bring ourselves to be monstrous members.

1 Cit. And to make us no better thought of, a little help will serve: for once, when we stood up about the corn, he himself stuck not to call us the many-headed multitude.

3 Cit. We have been called so of many; not that our heads are some brown, some black, some auburn, some bald, but that our wits are so diversly coloured: and truly I think, if all our • Avarice.

wits were to issue out of one scull, they would fly east, west, north, south; and their consent of one direct way should be at once to all the points o'the compass.

2 Cit. Think you so? Which way, you judge my wit would fly?

3 Cit. Nay, your wit will not so soon out as another man's will; 'tis strongly wedged up in a block-head: but if it were at liberty, 'twould, sure south ward.

2 Cit. Why that way?

3 Cit. To lose itself in a fog; where, being three parts melted away with rotten dews, the fourth would return for conscience' sake, to help to get thee a wife.

2 Cit. You are never without your tricks:—You may, you may.

3 Cit. Are you all resolved to give your voices? But that's no matter, the greater part carries it. I say, if he would incline to the people, there was never a worthier man.

Enter CORIOLANUS and MENENIUS.

Here he comes, and in the gown of humility; mark his behaviour. We are not to stay altogether, but to come by him where he stands, by ones, by twos, and by threes. He's to make his requests by particulars: wherein every one of us has a single honour, in giving him our own voices with our own tongues: therefore follow me, and I'll direct you how you shall go by him.

All. Content, content.

[Exeunt.

Men. O Sir, you are not right: have you not known

The worthiest men have done it?

Cor. What must I say?

I pray, Sir,—Plague upon't! I cannot bring My tongue to such a pace:—Look, Sir;—

my wounds;—
I got them in my country's service, when Some certain of your brethren roar'd, and ran From the noise of our own drums.

Men. O me, the gods!

You must not speak of that: you must desire them To think upon you.

Cor. Think upon me? Hang 'em!

I would they would forget me, like the virtues Which our divines lose by them.

Men. You'll mar all;

I'll leave you: Pray you, speak to them, I pray you, In wholesome manner.

[Exit.

Enter two CITIZENS.

Cor. Bid them wash their faces, And keep their teeth clean.—So, here comes a brace:

You know the cause, Sir, of my standing here.
Cit. We do, Sir; tell us what hath brought you to't.

Cor. Mine own desert.

2 Cit. Your own desert!

Cor. Ay, not

Mine own desire.

1 Cit. How! not your own desire?

Cor. No, Sir:

'Twas never my desire yet, To trouble the poor with begging.

1 Cit. You must think, if we give you any We hope to gain by you. [Thus,

Cor. Well then, I pray, your price o'the consulship?

1 Cit. The price is, Sir, to ask it kindly.

Cor. Kindly?

Sir, I pray let me ha't: I have wounds to show you, Which shall be yours in private.—Your good voice, Sir;

What say you?

2 Cit. You shall have it, worthy Sir.

Cor. A match, Sir:—

There is in all two worthy voices begg'd—I have your alms; adieu.

1 Cit. But this is something odd.

2 Cit. An 'twere to give again,—But 'tis no matter. [Exeunt two CITIZENS.

Enter two other CITIZENS.

Cor. Pray you now, if it may stand with the time of your voices, that I may be consul, I have here the customary gown.

3 Cit. You have deserved nobly of your country, and you have not deserved nobly.

Cor. Your enigma?

3 Cit. You have been a scourge to her enemies, you have been a rod to her friends; you have not, indeed, loved the common people.

Cor. You should account me the more virtuous, that I have not been common in my love. I will, Sir, flatter my sworn brother the people, to earn a dearer estimation of them; 'tis a condition they account gentle: and since the wisdom of their choice is rather to have my hat than my heart, I will practise the insinuating nod, and be off to them most counterfeitedly: that is, Sir, I will counterfeit the bewitchment of some popular man, and give it bountifully to the desirers. Therefore, beseech you, I may be consul.

4 Cit. We hope to find you our friend; and therefore give you our voices heartily.

3 Cit. You have received many wounds for your country.

Cor. I will not seal your knowledge with showing them. I will make much of your voices, and so trouble you no further.

Both Cit. The gods give you joy, Sir, heartily! [Exeunt.

Cor. Most sweet voices!—

Better it is to die, better to starve, Than crave the hire which first we do deserve. Why in this woolly gown should I stand here, To beg of Hob and Dick, that do appear, Their needless vouchers: Custom calls me to't:—What custom wills, in all things should we do't; The dust on antique time would he miswept, And mountainous error be too highly heap'd For truth to over-peer.—Rather than fool it so, Let the high office and the honour go. To one that would do thus.—I am halt through; The one part suffer'd, the other will I do.

Enter three other CITIZENS.

Here come more voices.—

Your voices; for your voices I have fought; Watch'd for your voices; for your voices, bear Of wounds two dozen odd; battles thrice six, I have seen and heard of; for your voices, have Done many things, some less, some more: your voices:

Indeed, I would be consul.

5 Cit. He has done nobly, and cannot go without any honest man's voice,

6 Cit. Therefore let him be consul: The gods give him joy, and make him good friend to the people!

All. Amen, Amen,—

God save thee, noble consul!

[Exeunt CITIZENS.

Cor. Worthy voices!

Re-enter MENENIUS, with BRUTUS and SICIINIUS.

Men. You have stood your limitation; and the tribunes

Endue you with the people's voice: Remains, That, in the official marks invested, you Anon do meet the senate.

Cor. Is this done?

Sic. The custom of request you have discharged:

The people do admit you; and are summon'd To meet anon, upon your approbation.

Cor. Where? at the senate-house?

Sic. There, Coriolanus.

Cor. May I then change these garments?

Sic. You may, Sir.

Cor. That I'll straight do; and, knowing myself again, Repair to the senate-house.

Men. I'll keep you company.—Will you along?

Bru. We stay here for the people.

Sic. Fare you well.

[Exeunt CORIOL. and MENEN.]

He has it now; and by his looks, methinks,
Tis warm at his heart.

Bru. With a proud heart he wore
His humble weeds: Will you dismiss the people?

Re-enter CITIZENS.

Sic. How now, my masters? have you chose this man?

1 Cit. He has our voices, Sir.

Bru. We pray the gods, he may deserve your loves.

2 Cit. Amen, Sir: To my poor unworthy no-
He mock'd us, when he begg'd our voices. [twice,

3 Cit. Certainly,

He flouted us downright.

1 Cit. No, 'tis his kind of speech, he did not mock us.

2 Cit. Not one amongst us save yourself, but says

He us'd us scornfully: he should have show'd us his marks of merit, wounds receiv'd for his country.

Sic. Why, so he did, I am sure.

Cit. No; no man saw 'em. [Several speak.]

3 Cit. He said he had wounds, which he could show in private;

And with his hat, thus waving it in scorn,
I would be consul, says he: aged custom,
But by your voices, will not so permit me;
Your voices therefore: When we granted that,
Here was,—I thank you for your voices,—thank you,— [your voices,
Your most sweet voices—now you have left
I have no further with you.—Was not this in mockery?

Sic. Why, either you were ignorant to see't?
Or, seeing it, of such childish friendliness
To yield your voices?

Bru. Could you not have told him,
As you were less'n'd,—When he had no power,
But was a petty servant to the state,
He was your enemy: ever spake against your liberties, and the charters that you bear
I' the body of the weal: and now, arriving
A place of potency, and sway o' the state,
If he should still malignantly remain
Fast foe to the plebeian,* your voices might
Be curses to yourselves? You should have said,
That, as his worthy deeds did claim no less
Than what he stood for, so his gracious nature
Would think upon you for your voices, and Translate his malice towards you into love,
Standing your friendly lord.

Sic. Thus to have said,
As you were fore-advis'd, had touch'd his spirit,
And tried his inclination: from him pluck'd
Either his gracious promise, which you might,
As cause had call'd you up, have held him to;
Or else it would have gall'd his surly nature,
Which easily endures not article
Tying him to ought: so, putting him to rage,
You should have taken the advantage of his choler,
And pass'd him unselected.

Bru. Did you perceive,
He did solicit you in free contempt,
When he did need your loves; and do you think,
That his contempt shall not be bruising to you,
When he hath power to crush? Why, had your bodies

No heart among you? Or had you tongues to cry
Against the rectorship of judgement?

Sic. Have you,

Ere now, denied the asker? and, now again,
On him, that did not ask, but mock, bestow
Your su'd-for tongues?

3 Cit. He's not confirm'd, we may deny him
yet.

2 Cit. And will deny him:
I'll have five hundred voices of that sound.

* Plebeians.

1 Cit. I twice five hundred and their friends to piece 'em.

Bru. Get you hence instantly; and tell those friends,—

They have chose a consul, that will from them take
Their liberties; make them of no more voice
Than dogs, that are as often beat for barking,
As therefore kept to do so.

Sic. Let them assemble;

And, on a safer judgment, all revoke
Your ignorant election: Enforce* his pride,
And his old hate unto you: besides, forget not
With what contempt he wore the humble weed;
How in his suit he scorn'd you: but your love,
Thinking upon his services, took from you
The apprehension of his present portance,†
Which, gibingly, ungravelly he did fashion
After the inveterate hate he bears you.

Bru. Lay

A fault on us, your tribunes; that we 'bourn'd
(No impediment between) but that you must Cast your election on him.

Sic. Say, you chose him

More after our commandment, than as glad-d
By your own true affections: and that, your hands
Pre-occupied with what you rather must do
Than what you should, made you against the

Bru. Ay, spare us not. Say, we read lectures

How youngly he began to serve his country;
How long continued: and what stock he

That Ancus Marcius, Numa's daughter's son,
Who, after great Hostilius, here was king:
Of the same house Publius and Quinctus were,
That our best water brought by conduits hither;
And Censorinus, darling of the people,
And nobly nam'd so, being Censor twice,
Was his great ancestor.

Sic. One thus descended,
That bath beside well in his person wrought
To be set high in place, we did commend
To your remembrances: but you have found,

That he's your fixed enemy, and revoke
Your sudden approbation.

did curse

Against the Volsces, for they had so vilely
Yielded the town: he is retir'd to Antium.

Cor. Spoke he of me?

Lart. He did, my lord.

Cor. How? what?

Lart. How often he had met you, sword to sword:

That, of all things upon the earth, he hated
Your person most: that he would pawn his fortunes

To hopeless restitution, so he might
Be call'd your vanquisher.

Mar. At Antium lives he?

Lart. At Antium.

Cor. I wish I had a cause to seek him there,
To oppose his hatred fully.—Welcome home.

[To LARTIUS.]

Enter SICINIUS and BRUTUS.

Behold! these are the tribunes of the people,
The tongues o'the common mouth. I do despise
them:

For they do prank * them in authority,
Against all noble sufferance.

Sic. Pass no further.

Cor. Ha! what is that?

Brut. It will be dangerous to Go on: no further.

Cor. What makes this change?

Men. The matter?

Com. Hath he not pass'd the nobles, and the commons?

Brut. Commits, no.

Cor. Have I had children's voices?

1 Sen. Tribunes, give way; he shall to the market-place.

Brut. The people are incens'd against him.

Sic. Stop,

Or all will fall in broil.

Cor. Are these your herd?—

Must these have voices, that can yield them
now,

And straight disclaim their tongues?—What are your offices?

You being their mouths, why rule you not their teeth?

Have you not set them on?

Men. Be calm, be calm.

Cor. It is a purpos'd thing, and grows by plot,
To curb the will of the nobility:—

Suffer it, and live with such as cannot rule,
Nor ever will be rul'd.

Brut. Call't not a plot:

The people cry, you mock'd them; and, of late,
When corn was given them gratis, you repun'd;
Scandal'd the supplicants for the people; call'd
them

Time-pleasers, flatterers, foes to nobleness.

Cor. Why, this was known before.

Brut. Not to them all.

Cor. Have you inform'd them since?

Brut. How! I inform them!

Cor. You are like to do such business.

Brut. Not unlike,

Each way to better yours.

Cor. Why then should I be consul? By you
clouds,

Let me deserve so ill as you, and make me
Your fellow-tribune.

Sic. You show too much of that,

For which the people stir: If you will pass
To where you are bound, you must inquire your way,

Which you are out of, with a gentler spirit;
Or never be so noble as a consul,
Nor yoke with him for tribune.

Cor. Now, as I live, I will.—My noble friends,
I crave their pardons:—

Which we ourselves have plough'd for, sow'd and scatter'd,

By mingling them with us, the honour'd number;
Who lack not virtue, no, nor power, but that
Which they have given to beggars.

Com. Well—on to the market-place.

Cor. Whoever gave that counsel, to give forth
The corn o'the storehouse gratis, as 'twas us'd
Sometime in Greece,—

Men. Well, well, no more of that.

Cor. (Though there the people had more absolute power,)

I say, they nourish'd disobedience, fed

The ruin of the state.

* Shuffling. † Treacherously. ‡ Populace.

§ Cockle is a weed which grows up with corn.

|| Lepers. ¶ Scab.  The smallest fish.

†† According to law. ‡‡ Thoughtless.

Bru. Why, shall the people give
One, that speaks thus, their voice?

Cor. I'll give my reasons,
More worthier than their voices. They know,
the corn

Was not our recompence; resting well assur'd
They ne'er did service for't: Being press'd to the war,

Even when the navel of the state was touch'd,
They would not thread * the gates: this kind of service

Did not deserve corn gratis: being i'the war,
Their mutinies and revolts, wherein they show'd
Most valour, spoke not for them: The accusation

Which they have often made against the senate,
All cause unborn, could never be the native †
Of our so frank donation. Well, what then? ‡
How shall this bosom multiplied digest
The senate's courtesy? Let deeds express What's like to be their words:—He did request

it;
We are the greater poll,† and in true fear
*They gave us our demands:—*Thus we debase
The nature of our seats, and make the rabble
Call our cares, fears: which will in time break ope

The locks o'the senate, and bring in the crows
To peck the eagles.—
Men. Come, enough.
Bru. Enough, with over-measure.
Cor. No, take more:

What may be sworn by, both divine and human,
Seal what I end withal!—This double worship—
Where one part does disdain with cause, the other [wisdom]

Insult without all reason; where gentry, title,
Cannot conclude, but by the yea and no
Of general ignorance,—It must omit
Real necessities, and give way the while
To unstable slighness: purpose so barr'd, it follows,

Nothing is done to purpose: Therefore, beseech
you,—
You that will be less fearful than discreet;
That love the fundamental part of state,
More than you doubt ‡ the change of't; that prefer

A noble life before a long, and wish
To jump † a body with a dangerous physic
That's sure of death without it,—at once pluck
out

The multitudinous tongue, let them not lick
The sweet which is their poison: your dishonour
Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state
Of that integrity which should become it;
Not having the power to do the good it would,
For the ill which doth control it.

Bru. He has said enough.
Sic. He has spoken like a traitor, and shall answer
As traitors do.

Cor. Thou wretch! despite o'erwhelm thee!—
What should the people do with these bald tribunes?

On whom depending, their obedience fails
To the greater bench: In a rebellion,
When what's not meet, but what must be, was
law,

Then were they chosen: in a better hour,
Let what is meet, be said it must be meet,
And throw their power i'the dust.

Bru. Manifest treason.
Sic. This a consul? no.
Bru. The Ædiles, ho!—Let him be apprehended.

Sic. Go, call the people; [Exit Brutus.] in whose name, myself

Attach thee, as a traitorous innovator,
A foe to the public weal: Obey, I charge thee,
And follow to thine answer.

Cor. Hence, old goat!

Sen. & Pat. We'll surely him.

Com. Aged Sir, hands off.

Cor. Hence, rotten thing, or I shall shake thy bones

Out of thy garments.

Sic. Help, ye citizens.

Re-enter BRUTUS, with the ÆDILES, and a Rabble of CITIZENS.

Men. On both sides more respect.

Sic. Here's he, that would Take from you all your power.

Bru. Seize him, Ædiles.

Cit. Down with him, down with him!

[Several speak

2 Sen. Weapons, weapons, weapons!

[They all bustle about CORIOLANUS.

Tribunes, patricians, citizens!—what ho!

Scimius, Brutus, Coriolanus, citizens!

Cit. Peace, peace, peace; stay, hold, peace!

Men. What is about to be?—I am out of breath: [buncs

Confusion's near: I cannot speak:—You, tri-

To the people,—Coriolanus, patience;—

Speak, good Scimius.

Sic. Hear me, people;—Peace.

Cit. Let's hear our tribune:—Peace. Speak, speak, speak.

Sic. You are at point to lose your liberties:

Marcus would have all from you; Marcus,

Whom late you have nam'd for consul.

Men. Fie, fie, fie!

This is the way to kindle, not to quench.

1 Sen. To unbuild the city, and to lay all flat.

Sic. What is the city, but the people?

Cit. True,

The people are the city.

Bru. By the consent of all, we were establish'd

The people's magistrates.

Cit. You so remain.

Men. And so are like to do.

Cor. That is the way to lay the city flat;

To bring the root to the foundation;

And bury all, which yet distinctly ranges

In heaps and piles of ruins.

Sic. This deserves death.

Bru. Or let us stand to our authority,

Or let us lose it:—We do here pronounce,

Upon the part o'the people, in whose power

We were elected theirs, Marcus is worthy

Of present death.

Sic. Therefore, lay hold of him;

Bear him to the rock Tarpeian,* and from thence

Into destruction cast him.

Bru. Ædiles, seize him.

Cit. Yield, Marcus, yield.

Men. Hear me one word.

*Beseech you, tribunes, hear me but a word.

Ædi. Peace, peace.

Men. Be that you seem, truly your country's

friend,

And temperately proceed to what you would

Thus violently redress.

Bru. Sir, those cold ways,

That seem like prudent helps, are very poisonous

Where the disease is violent:—Lay hands upon

And bear him to the rock. [him,

Cor. No: I'll die here. [Drawing his Sword.

There's some among you have beheld me fighting; [me,

Come, try upon yourselves what you have seen

Men. Down with that sword,—Tribunes, withdraw a while.

Bru. Lay hands upon him.

Men. Help, Marcus! help,

You that be noble; help him, young and old!

Cit. Down with him, down with him!

[In this Mutiny, the TRIBUNES, the ÆDILES,

and the People are all beat in.

Men. Go, get you to your house; be gone,

All will be naught else. [away,

2 Sen. Get you gone.

* Pass through. † The natural parent, or, the cause.

‡ Numbers. § Fear. ¶ To violently agitate.

* From whence criminals were thrown, and dashed to pieces.

Cor. Stand fast ;
We have as many friends as enemies.
Men. Shall it be put to that ?
1 Sen. The gods forbid !
1 Pat. 'Tis noble friend, home to thy house :
Leave us to cure this cause.
Men. For 'tis a sore upon us, [you]
You cannot tent yourself : Be gone, 'twere best
Com. Come, Sir, along with us.

Cor. I would they were barbarians, (as they are,
Though in Rome litter'd,) not Romans, (as they are not,

Though calv'd i'th' porch o'the Capitol,)—
Men. Be gone ;
Put not your worthy rage into your tongue :
One time will owe another.

Cor. On fair ground,
I could beat forty of them.

Men. I could myself
Take up a brace of the best of them ; yea, the two tribunes.

Com. But now 'tis odds beyond arithmetic ;
And manhood is call'd foolery, when it stands
Against a killing fabric.—Will you hence,
Before the tax * return ? whose rage doth rend
Like interrupted waters, and o'erbear
What they are used to bear.

Men. Pray you, be gone :
I'll try whether my old wit be in request
With those that have but little : this must be
With cloth of any colour. [parted]

Com. Nay, come away.

[Exeunt Cor., Com., and others.]

1 Pat. This man has man'd his tongue.
Men. His nature is too noble for the world :
He would not flatter Neptune for his trident,
Or Jove for his power to thunder. His heart's his mouth ;

What his breast forges, that his tongue must
And being angry, does forget that ever
He heard the name of death. [1 noise within.
Here's goodly work !

2 Pat. I would they were a-bed !

Men. I would they were in Tyber !—What, the vengeance,
Could he not speak them fair ?

Re-enter Brutus and Sicinius, with the Rabble.

Sic. Where's this viper,
That would depopulate the city, and
Be every man himself ?

Men. Our worthy tribunes,—

Sic. He shall be thrown down the Tarpeian rock

With ribrous hands ; he hath resisted law,
And therefore law shall scorn him further trial
Than the severity of the public power,
Which he so sets at nought.

1 Cit. He shall well know,
The noble tribunes are the people's mouths,
And we their hands.

Cit. He shall sure on't. †

[Several speak together.]

Men. Sir,—

Sic. Peace.

Men. Do not cry, havoc, ‡ where you should but hunt

With modest warrant.

Sic. Sir, how comes it, that you
Have help to make this rescue ?

Men. Hear me speak :—
As I do know the consul's worthiness,
So can I name his faults :—

Sic. Consul !—what consul !

Men. The consul Coriolanus.

Bru. He a consul !

Cit. No, no, no, no, no.

Men. If, by the tribunes' leave, and yours,
good people,

I may be heard, I'd crave a word or two ;

The which shall turn you to no further harm,
Than so much loss of time.

Sic. Speak briefly then ;

For we are peremptory to despatch
This viperous traitor : to eject him hence,
Were but one danger ; and, to keep him her
Our certain death ; therefore it is decreed,
He dies to-night.

Men. Now the good gods forbid

That our renowned Rome, whose gratitude
Towards her deserved * children is enroll'd
In Jove's own book, like an unnatural dam
Should now eat up her own !

Sic. He's a disease, that must be cut away.

Men. Oh ! he's a limb, that has but a disease
Mortal, to cut it off, to cure it, easy.

What has he done to Rome, that's worthy death
Killing our enemies ? The blood he hath lost, (Which, I dare vouch, is more than that he hath
By many an ounce,) he dropp'd it for his country—
And, what is left, to lose it by his country, [they]
Were to us all, that do't, and suffer it,
A brand to the end o'the world.

Sic. This is clean kin.

Bru. Merely † awry : when he did love his country,

It honour'd him.

Men. The service of the foot
Being once gangren'd, is not then respected
For what before it was !

Bru. We'll hear no more —
Pursue him to his house, and pluck him thence ;
Lest his infection, being of catching nature,
Spread further.

Men. One word more, one word.
This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find
The harm of uncur'd * swiftness, with too late,
He laden pound to his heels. Proceed by process ;

Lest parties (as he is belov'd) break out,

And sack great Rome with Romans

Bru. If it were so,—

Sic. What do ye talk ?

Have we not had a taste of his obedience ?

Our Adiles smote * our Tribes resisted †—Come ;— Men. Consider this.—He has been bred to wits

Since he could draw a sword, and is ill school'd
In boulding ‡ language, and and brain together
He throws without distinction. Give me leave,
I'll go to him, and undertake to bring him
Where he shall answer, by a lawful form
(In peace) to his utmost peril.

1 Sen. Noble tribunes,

It is the humane way : the other course
Will prove too bloody ; and the end of it
Unknown to the beginning.

Sic. Noble Menenius,
Be you then as the people's officer :
Masters, lay down your weapons.

Bru. Go not home.

Sic. Meet on the market-place :—We'll attend
you there :

Where, if you bring not Marcius, we'll proceed
In our first way.

Men. I'll bring him to you :—
Let me desire your company. [To the SENIORS

He must come,

Or what is worst will follow.

1 Sen. Pray you, let's to him. [Exeunt]

SCENE II.—A Room in CORIOLANUS'S
House.

Enter CORIOLANUS and PATRICIANS.

Cor. Let them pull all about mine ears ; present me

Death on the wheel, or at wild horses' heels ;

Or pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock,

That the precipitation might down stretch

Below the beam of sight, yet will I still

Be thus to them.

* The lowest of the populace, tax, rag, and hobtail.
† Be sure on't. ‡ The signal for slaughter.

* Deserving. † Quite awry. ‡ Absolutely ‡ Inconsiderate haste. † Finely sifted.

Enter VOLUMNIA.I Pat. You do the nobler.Cor. I muse,* my mother

Does not approve me further, who was wont
To call them woollen vassals, things created
To buy and sell with groats; to show bare heads
In congregations, to yawn, be still, and wonder,
When one but of my ordinance † stood up
To speak of peace or war. I talk of you:

[To VOLUMNIA.]

Why did you wish me milder? ‡ Would you have
me

False to my nature? Rather say, I play

The man I am.

Vol. O Sir, Sir, Sir,

I would have had you put your power well on.
Before you had worn it out.

Cor. Let go.

Vol. You might have been enough the man you are,

With striving less to be so: Lesser had been
The thwartings of your dispositions, if
You had not show'd them how you were dispos'd
Ere they lack'd power to cross you.

Cor. Let them hang.Vol. Ay, and buru too.Enter MENENIUS and SENATORS.

Men. Come, come, you have been too rough,
something too rough;
You must return, and mend it.

I Sen. There's no remedy;
Unless, by not so doing, our good city
Cleave in the midst, and perish.

Vol. Pray be counsel'd:

I have a heart as little apt as yours,
But yet a brain, that leads my use of anger
To better vantage.

Men. Well said, noble woman:
Before he should thus stoop to the herd, but that
The violent fit o' the time craves it as physic
For the whole state, I would put mine armour on Which I can scarcely bear.

Cor. What must I do?Men. Return to the tribunus.Cor. Well,

What then? what then?

Men. Repent what you have spoke.

Cor. For them!—I cannot do it to the gods;
Must I then do't to them?

Vol. You are too absolute;
Though therein you can never be too noble,
But when extremities speak. I have heard you say,

Honour and policy, like unsever'd friends
I'the war do grow together: Grant that, and tell
me,

In peace, what each of them by th'other lose,
That they combine not there.

Cor. Tush, tush!Men. A good demand.

Vol. If it be honour, in your wars, to seem
The same you are not, (which, for your best ends,
You adopt your policy,) how is it less, or worse,
That it shall hold companionship in peace
With honour, as in war; since that to both
It stands in like request?

Cor. Why force I you this?

Vol. Because that now it lies on you to speak
To the people; not by our own instruction,
Nor by the matter which your heart prompts you
to,

But with such words that are but rotes in
Your tongue, though but bastards, and syllables
Of no allowance, to your bosom's truth.
Now, this no more dishonours you at all,
Than to take in § a town with gentle words,
Which else would put you to your fortune, and
The hazard of much blood.—

I would dissemble with my nature, where
My fortunes, and my friends, at stake, requir'd
I should do so in honour: I am, in this,
Your wife, your son, these senators, the nobles;

And you will rather show our general lowts*
How you can frown, than spend a fawn upon
them,
For the inheritance of their loves, and safeguard
Of what that want might ruin.

Men. Noble lady!

Come, go with us; speak fair: you may save so,
Not what is dangerous present, but the loss
Of what is past.

Vol. I pr'ythee now, my son,

Go to them, with this bonnet in thy hand;
And thus far having stretch'd it (here be with
them,)

Thy knee bussing the stones, for in such business [rant

Action is eloquence, and the eyes of the igno-
More learned than the ears,) waving thy head,
Which often, thus, correcting thy stout heart,

That humble, as the ripest mulberry,
Now will not hold the handling: Or, say to them,
Thou art their soldier, and, being bred in broils,

Hast not the soft way which, thou dost confess,
Were fit for thee to use, as they to claim,
In asking their good loves; but thou wilt frame
Thyself, forsooth, hereafter theirs, so far

As thou hast power and person.

Men. This but done,

Even as she speaks, why, all their hearts were
yours:

For they have pardons, being ask'd, as free
As words to little purpose.

Vol. Pr'ythee now,

Go, and be rul'd: although, I know, thou hadst
rather

Follow thine enemy in a fiery gulf,
Than flatter him in a bowel. Here is Cominius.

Enter COMINIUS.

Com. I have been i'the market-place: and,
Sir, tis fit

You make strong party, or defend yourself

By calmness, or by absence: all's in angel.

Men. Only fair speech.Com. I think 'twill serve, if he Can thereto frame his spirit.

Vol. He must, and will:—

Pr'ythee, now, say you will, and go about it.

Cor. Must I go show them my unbarb'd sconce? † Must I,

With my base tongue, give to my noble heart

A lie that it must bear? Well, I will do't:

Yet were there but this single plot to lose,
This mould of Marcius, they to dust should grind it, [place:—

And throw it against the wind.—To the market-
You have put me now to such a part, which never
I shall discharge to the life.

Com. Come, come, we'll prompt you.

Vol. I pr'ythee now, sweet son, as thou hast said,

My praises made thee first a soldier, so

To have my praise for this, perform a part

Thou hast not done before.

Cor. Well, I must do't:

Away, my disposition, and possess me

Some harlot's spirit! My throat of war be turn'd,

Which quired with my drum, into a pipe

Small as an enunch, or the virgin voice

That babies lulls asleep! The smiles of knaves

Tent ‡ in my cheeks; and school-boy's tears take

The glasses of my sight! A beggar's tongue [up

Make motion through my lips; and my arm'd knees,

Which bow'd but in my stirrup, bend like his

That hath receiv'd an alms!—I will not do't:

Lest I surcease to honour mine own truth,

And, by my body's action, teach my mind

A most inherent baseness.

Vol. At thy choice then:

To beg of thee, it is my more dishonour,

Than thou of them. Come all to run: let

Thy mother rather feel thy pride, than fear

Thy dangerous stoutness; for I mock at death

* Wonder. † Rank. ‡ Urge. § Subdue.

* Common clown. † Unshaven head. ‡ Dwell.

With as big heart as thou. Do as thou list.
Thy valiantness was mine, thou suck'st it from
But owe * thy pride thyself. [me ;

Cor. Pray, be content :
Mother, I am going to the market-place ;
Chide me no more. I'll mountebank their loves, Cog their hearts from them, and come home be-lov'd

Of all the trades in Rome. Look, I am going :
Commend me to my wife. I'll return consul ;
Or never trust to what my tongue can do
I'll the way of flattery, further.

Vol. Do your will. [Exit.

Com. Away, the tribunes do attend you : arm yourself

To answer mildly ; for they are prepar'd
With accusations, as I hear, more strong
Than are upon you yet.

Cor. The word is mildly :—Pray you, let us
Let them accuse me by invention, I [go :
Will answer in mine honour.

Men. Ay, but mildly.

Cor. Well, mildly be it then : mildly.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same.—The Forum.

Enter SICINIUS and BRUTUS.

Bru. In this point charge him home—that he affects

Tyrannical power : if he evade us there,
Enforce him with his envy † to the people ;
And that the spoil, got on the Antiates,
Was ne'er distributed.—

Enter an ÆDILE.

What, will he come !

Æd. He's coming.

Bru. Well accompanied ?

Æd. With old Menenius, and those senators
That always favour'd him.

Sic. Have you a catalogue
Of all the voices that we have procur'd
Set down by the poll ?

Æd. I have : 'tis ready, here.

Sic. Have you collected them by tribe ?

Æd. I have.

Sic. Assemble presently the people hither :
And when they hear me say, It shall be so
I'll the right and strength o'the commons, be it either

For death, for fine, or banishment, then let them,
If I say fine, cry fine ; if death, cry death ;
Insisting on the old prerogative
And power i'the truth o'the cause.

Æd. I shall inform them.

Bru. And when such time they have begun to cry,

Let them not cease, but with a din confus'd
Enforce the present execution
Of what we chance to sentence.

Æd. Very well.

Sic. Make them be strong, and ready for this hint,
When we shall hap to give't them.

Bru. Go about it.— [Exit ÆDILE.

Put him to choler straight : He hath been us'd
Ever to conquer, and to have his worth
Of contradiction : Being once chaf'd, he cannot Be rein'd again to temperance ; then he speaks
What's in his heart ; and that is there, which looks
With us to break his neck.

Enter CORIOLANUS, MENENIUS, COMINIUS, SENATORS, and PATRICIANS.

Sic. Well, here he comes.

Men. Calmly, I do beseech you.

Cor. Ay, as an ostler, that for the poorest piece

Will bear the knave ‡ by the volume.—The ho- nour'd gods

Keep Rome in safety, and the chairs of justice

* Own. † Accuse him of his hatred.
‡ Will bear being called a knave.

Supplied with worthy men ! plant love among us !
Through our large temples with the shows of peace,
And not our streets with war ?

I Sen. Amen, amen !

Men. A noble wish.

Re-enter ÆDILE, with CITIZENS.

Sic. Draw near, ye people.

Æd. List to your tribunes : audience : Peace,
I say.

Cor. First, hear me speak.

Both Try. Well, say.—Peace, ho.

Cor. Shall I be chaig'd no further than this present ?

Must all determine ?

Sic. I do demand here,
If you submit you to the people's voice—
Allow their officers, and are content
To suffer lawful censure for such faults
As shall be prov'd upon you ?

Cor. I am content.

Men. Lo, citizens, he says, he is content :
The wailike service he has done, consider ;
Think on the wounds his body bears, which show
Like graves i'the holy churchyard.

Cor. Scratches with linters.

Scars to move laughter only

Men. Consider further,
That when he speaks not like a citizen,
You find him like a soldier : Do not take
His rougher accents for malicious sounds,
But, as I say, such as become a soldier,
Rather than envy * you.

Com. Well, well, no more.

Cor. What is the matter,
That being pass'd for consul with full voice,
I am so dishonour'd, that the very hour
You take it off again ?

Sic. Answer to us.

Cor. Say then : 'tis true, I ought so.

Sic. We charge you, that you have contriv'd to take

From Rome all season'd office, and to win
Yourself into a power tyrannical ;
For which, you are a traitor to the people.

Cor. How ! Traitor ?

Men. Nay, temperately : Your promise.

Cor. The fires i'the lowest hell told in the people !

Call me their traitor.—Thou injurious tribune !
Within thine eyes sat twenty thousand deaths,
In thy hands clutch'd ; as many millions, in Thy lying tongue both numbers, I would say,
Thou heest, unto thee, with voice as free
As I do pray the gods.

Sic. Mark you this, people ?

Cit. To the rock with him ! to the rock with him !

Sic. Peace.

We need not put new matter to his charge :
What you have seen him do, and heard him speak,
Beating your officers, cursing yourselves,
Opposing laws with strokes, and here defying
Those whose great power must try him ; even
So criminal, and in such capital kind, [this,
Deserves the extremest death.

Bru. But since he hath

Serv'd well for Rome,—

Cor. What ! do you prate of service ?

Bru. I talk of that, that know it.

Cor. You ?

Men. Is this

The promise that you made your mother ?

Com. Know,

I pray you,—

Cor. I'll know no further :
Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death
Vagabond exile, slaying ; pent to linger
But with a grain a day ; I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word,
Nor check my courage for what they can give
To hav't with saying, Good morrow.

Sic. For that he has

* Injure. † Of long standing. ‡ Grasp'd.

(As much as in him lies) from time to time
 Envied against the people, seeking means
 To pluck away their power: as now at last Given hostile strokes, and that not in the presence
 Of dreaded justice, but on the ministers
 That do distribute it!—In the name o' the people,
 And in the power of us the tribunes, we,
 Even from this instant, banish him our city;
 In peril of precipitation
 From off the rock Tarpeian, never more
 To enter our Rome gates: 't' the people's name, say it shall be so.

Cit. It shall be so,
 It shall be so; let him away: he's banish'd;
 And so it shall be.

Com. Hear me, my masters, and my common
 friends—

Sic. He's sentenc'd: no more hearing

Com. Let me speak:

I have been consul, and can show from * Rome,
 Her enemies' marks upon me. I do love
 My country's good, with a respect more tender,
 More holy, and profound, than mine own life,
 My dear wife's estimate,† her womb's increase,
 And treasure of my loins; then if I would Speak that—

Sic. We know your drift: Speak what?

Bru. There's no more to be said, but he is banish'd,

As enemy to the people and his country:
 it shall be so.

Cit. It shall be so, it shall be so.

Cor. You common cry of curs! whose breath
 I hate

As reek o' the rotten fens, whose love I prize
 As the dead carcasses of unburied men
 That do corrupt my air, I banish you;
 And here remain with your uncertainty!
 Let every feeble rumour shake your hearts!
 Your enemies, with nodding of their plumes,
 Fan you into despair! Have the power still
 To banish your defenders; till, at length,
 Your ignorance (which finds not till it feels,)
 Making not reservation of yourselves,
 (Still your own foes,) deliver you, as most Abated‡ captives, to some nation
 That won you without blows! Despising,
 For you, the city, thus I turn my back:
 There is a world elsewhere.

[*Exeunt CORIOLANUS, COMINIUS, MENENIUS,
 SILENTIUS, and PATRICIANS.*]

Ed. The people's enemy is gone, is gone!

Cit. Our enemy's banish'd! he is gone! Hoo!
 hoo!

[The people shout and throw up their Caps.]

Sic. Go, see him out at gates, and follow him!
 As he hath follow'd you, with all despite:
 Give him deserv'd vexation. Let a guard
 Attend us through the city.

Cit. Come, come, let us see him out at gates;
 come:—

The gods preserve our noble tribunes!—Com.
 [Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The same.—Before a Gate of the City.

Enter CORIOLANUS, VOLUMNIA, VIRGILIA, MENENIUS, COMINIUS, and several young PATRICIANS.

Cor. Come, leave your tears; a brief farewell:
 —the best †

With many heads butts me away.—Nay, mother,
 Where is your ancient courage? you were us'd
 To say, extremity was the tier of spirits;
 That common chances common men could bear;
 That, when the sea was calm, all boats alike
 Show'd mastership in floating: fortune's blows,
 When most struck home, being gentle wounded,
 craves

A noble cunning: you were us'd to load me
 With precepts, that would make invincible
 The heart that cou'd not them.

Vir. O heavens! O heavens!

Cor. Nay, I pry'thee, woman,—

Vol. Now the red pestilence strike all trades in Rome,

And occupations perish!

Cor. What, what, what!

I shall be lov'd when I am lack'd. Nay, mother,
 Resume that spirit, when you were wont to say,
 If you had been the wife of Hercules,
 Six of his labours you'd have done, and sav'd
 Your husband so much sweat.—Cominius, Droop not; adieu:—Farewell, my wife! my mother!

I'll do well yet.—Thou old and true Menenius,
 Thy tears are saller than a younger man's,
 And venomous to thine eyes.—My sometime
 general,

I have seen thee stern, and thou hast oft beheld
 Heart-hard'ning spectacles: tell these sad women,
 'Tis fond * to wail inevitable strokes, † well,
 As 'tis to laugh at them.—My mother, you wot
 My hazards still have been your solace: and Believe't not lightly, (though I go alone,
 Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen Makes fear'd) and talk'd of more than seen your son

Will, or exceed the common, or be caught
 With cautelous ‡ baits and practice.

Vol. My first † son,

Whither wilt thou go? Take good Cominius
 With thee a while: Determine on some course,
 More than a wild exposure § to each chance,
 That starts † the way before thee.

Cor. O the gods!

Com. I'll follow thee a month, devise with thee Where thou shalt rest, that thou may'st hear of us,

And we of thee; so, if the time thrust forth
 A cause for thy repeal, we shall not send O'er the vast world, to seek a single man;
 And lose advantage, which doth ever cool
 I the absence of the needier.

Cor. Fare ye well:—

[Full]

Thou hast years upon thee; and thou art too
 Of the wars' sufferts, to go rove with one
 That's yet unbuis'd: bring me but out at gate.—
 Come, my sweet wife, my dearest mother, and
 My friends of noble touch, † when I am forth,
 Bid me farewell, and smile. I pray you, come.
 While I remain above the ground, you shall Hear from me still; and never of me aught
 But what is like me formerly.

Men. That's worthily

As any ear can hear.—Come, let's not weep.—
 If I could shake off but one seven years
 From these old arms and legs, by the good gods,
 I'd with thee every foot.

Cor. Give me thy hand:—

Come.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same.—A Street near the Gate.

Enter SICIPIUS, BRUTUS, and an EDILE.

Sic. Bid them all home: he's gone, and we'll no farther.—

The nobility are vex'd, who, we see, have sided
 in his behalf.

Bru. Now we have shown our power,
 Let us seem humbler after it is done,
 Than when it was a doing.

Sic. Bid them home:

Say their great enemy is gone, and they Stand in their ancient strength.

Bru. Dismiss them home. [Exit EDILE.]

Enter VOLUMNIA, VIRGILIA, and MENENIUS.

Here comes his mother.

Sic. Let's not meet her.

* For. † Value. ‡ Pack. § Vapour.
 † Subdued. ‡ The government of the people.

* Foolish. † Insidious. ‡ Nobliest.
 † Exposure. ‡ True metal.

Bru. Why?

Sic. She says, she's mad.

Bru. They have ta'en note of us :
Keep on your way.

Vol. Oh ! you're well met : The hoarded plague o'the gods

Requite your love !

Men. Peace, peace : be not so loud.

Vol. If that I could for weeping, you should hear,—

Nay, and you shall hear some.—Will you be gone ?

[To BRUTUS.]

Fir. You shall stay too ; [To SICIN.] I would had the power

To say so to my husband.

Sic. Are you mankind ?

Vol. Ay, fool ; is that a shame ?—Note but this fool.—

Was not a man my father ? Hadst thou foxship *
To banish him that struck more blows for Rome,
Than thou hast spoken words ?

Sic. O blessed heavens !

Vol. More noble blows, than ever thou wise words ;

And for Rome's good.—I'll tell thee what ;—
Yet go :—

Nay but thou shalt stay too :—I would my son
Were in Arabia, and thy tribe before him,
His good sword in his hand.

Sic. What then ?

Fir. What then ?

He'd make an end of thy posterity.

Vol. Bastards, and all.—

Good man, the wounds that he does bear for Rome !

Men. Come, come, peace.

Sic. I would he had continu'd to his country
As he began ; and not unknit himself
The noble knot he made

Bru. I would he had.

Vol. I would he had ! 'Twas you incens'd the rabble :

Cats, that can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of those mysteries which heaven will not have eath to know.

Bru. Pray, let us go.

Vol. Now pray, Sir, get you gone :

You have done a brave deed. Ere you go, hear
this :

As far as doth the Capitol exceed
The meanest house in Rome, so far my son,
(This lady's husband here, this, do you see,)
Whom you have banish'd, does exceed you all.

Bru. Well, well, we'll leave you.

Sic. Why stay we to be baited

With one that wants her wits ?

Vol. Take my prayers with you.—

I would the gods had nothing else to do,
[Exeunt TRIBUNES.]

But to confirm my curses ! Could I meet them
But once a day, it would unclog my heart
Of what lies heavy to't.

Men. You have told them home,
And by my troth, you have cause. You'll sup
with me ?

Vol. Anger's my meat : I sup upon myself,
And so shall starve with feeding.—Come let's go :
Leave this faint puling, and lament as I do,
In anger, Juno-like. Come, come, come.

Men. Fie, fie, fie ! [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—A highway between Rome and Antium.

Enter a ROMAN and a VOLSC, meeting.

Rom. I know you well, Sir, and you know me :
your name, I think, is Adrian.

Vol. It is so, Sir : truly, I have forgot you.

Rom. I am a Roman ; and my services are,
as you are, against them : Know you me yet ?

Vol. Nicanor ? No.

Rom. The same, Sir.

Vol. You had more beard, when I last saw you ; but your favour * is well appeared by your tongue. What's the news in Rome ? I have a note from the Volscian state, to find you out there :

You have well saved me a day's journey.

Rom. There hath been in Rome strange insurrection : the people against the senators, patricians, and nobles.

Vol. Hath been ! Is it ended then ? Our state thinks not so ; they are in a most warlike preparation, and hope to come upon them in the heat of their division.

Rom. The main blaze of it is past, but a small thing would make it flame again. For the nobles receive so to heart the banishment of that worthy Coriolanus, that they are in a ripe aptness to take all power from the people, and to pluck from them their tribunes for ever. This lies glowing I can tell you, and is almost mature for the violent breaking out.

Vol. Coriolanus banished ?

Rom. Banished, Sir.

Vol. You will be welcome with this intelligence, Nicanor.

Rom. The day serves well for them now. I have heard it said, the fittest time to corrupt a man's wife, is when she's fallen out with her husband. Your noble Tullus Aufidius will appear well in these wars, his great opposer, Coriolanus, being now in no request of his country.

Vol. He cannot choose. I am most fortunate thus accidentally to encounter you : You have ended my business, and I will merrily accompany you home.

Rom. I shall, between this and supper, tell you most strange things from Rome ; all tending to the good of their adversaries. Have you an army ready, say you ?

Vol. A most royal one : the centurions and their charges distinctly billeted, already in the entertainment, † and to be on foot at an hour's warning.

Rom. I am joyful to hear of their readiness, and am the man, I think, that shall set them in present action. So, Sir, heartily well met, and most glad of your company.

Vol. You take my part from me, Sir ; I have the most cause to be glad of yours.

Rom. Well, let us go together. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Antium.—Before AUFIDIUS'S
House.

Enter CORIOLANUS, in mean apparel, disguised and muffled.

Cor. A goodly city is this Antium : City,
'Tis I that made thy widows : many an heir
Of these fair edifices 'fore my wars
Have I heard groan, and drop : then know me not Lest that thy wives with spits, and boys with stones,

Enter a CITIZEN.

In puny battle slay me.—Save you, Sir.

Cit. And you.

Cor. Direct me, if it be your will,
Where great Aufidius lies : Is he in Antium ?
Cit. He is, and feasts the nobles of the state
At his house this night.

Cor. Which is his house, 'beseech you ?

Cit. This, here, before you.

Cor. Thank you, Sir : farewell.

[Exit CITIZEN]

O world thy slippery turns ! Friends now fast sworn,
Whose double bosoms seem to wear one heart,
Whose hours, whose bed, whose meal, and exercise,
Are still together, who twin, as 'twere, in love
Unseparable, shall within this hour,
On a dissention of a doth, * break out
To bitterest enmity : So, fellest foes, Whose passions and whose plots have broke their sleep

* Mean censuring

* Countenance.

† In pay.

‡ A small coin,

To take the one the other, by some chance,
Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear
friends,
And interjoin their issues. So with me:
My birth-place hate I, and my love's upon
This enemy town. I'll enter: if he slay me,
He does fair justice, if he give me way
I'll do his country service. [Exit.]

SCENE V.—The same.—A hall in AUFIDIUS'S House.

Music within. Enter a SERVANT.

1 Serv. Wine, wine, wine! What service is here! I think our fellows are asleep. [Exit.]

Enter another SERVANT.

2 Serv. Where's Cotus! my master calls for him. Cotus!

Enter CORIOLANUS.

Cor. A goodly house: The feast smells well:
but I
Appear not like a guest.

Re-enter the first SERVANT.

1 Serv. What would you have, friend? Whence are you? Here's no place for you: Pray, go to the door.

Cor. I have deserv'd no better entertainment in being Coriolanus.*

Re-enter second SERVANT.

2 Serv. Whence are you, Sir? Has the porter his eyes in his head, that he gives entrance to such companions! Pray, get you out.

Cor. Away!

2 Serv. Away? Get you away.

Cor. Now thou art troublesome.

2 Serv. Are you so brave! I'll have you talked with anon.

Enter a third SERVANT. The first meets him.

3 Serv. What fellow's this?

1 Serv. A strange one as ever I looked on: I cannot get him out o'the house: Pr'ythee, call my master to him.

3 Serv. What have you to do here, fellow?
Pray you, avoid the house.

Cor. Let me but stand: I will not hurt your hearth.

2 Serv. What are you?

Cor. A gentleman.

3 Serv. A marvellous poor one.

Cor. True, so I am.

3 Serv. Pray you, poor gentleman, take up some other station; here's no place for you; pray you, avoid: come.

Cor. Follow your function, go!

And batten† on cold bits. [Pushes him away.]

3 Serv. What, will you not? Pr'ythee tell my master what a strange guest he has here. [Exit.]

2 Serv. And I shall.

3 Serv. Where dwellest thou?

Cor. Under the canopy.

2 Serv. Under the canopy?

Cor. Ay.

3 Serv. Where's that?

Cor. 'T the city of kites and crows.

3 Serv. 'T the city of kites and crows?—What an ass it is!—Then thou dwellest with daws too?

Cor. No, I serve not thy master.

3 Serv. How, Sir! do you meddle with my master?

Cor. Ay; 'tis an honestest service than to meddle with thy mistress:

Thou prat'st, and prat'st; serve with thy trencher,
hence! [Beats him away.]

Enter AUFIDIUS and the second SERVANT.

Auf. Where is this fellow?

2 Serv. Here, Sir: I'd have beaten him like a dog, but for disturbing the lords within.

Auf. Whence comest thou? what wouldst thou? Thy name?

Why speak'st not? Speak, man: What's thy name?

Cor. If, Tullius, [Unmuffling.]
Not yet thou know'st me, and seeing me, dost not Think me for the man I am, necessity
Commands me name myself.

Auf. What is thy name?

[SERVANTS retire.]

Cor. A name unmusical to the Volscians' ears,
And harsh in sound to thine.

Auf. Say, what's thy name?

Thou hast a grim appearance, and thy face
Bears a command in't: though thy tackle's torn,
Thou show'st a noble vessel. What's thy name?

Cor. Prepare thy brow to frown: Know'st thou me yet?

Auf. I know thee not:—Thy name?

Cor. My name is Caius Marcius, who hath done

To thee particularly, and to all the Volsces,
Great hurt and mischief; thereto witness may
My surname, Coriolanus: The painful service,
The extreme dangers, and the drops of blood
Shed for my thankless country, are requited
But with that surname; a good memory,*
And witness of the malice and displeasure
Which thou should'st bear me: only that name remains:

The cruelty and envy of the people,
Permitted by our dastard nobles, who
Have all forsook me, hath devour'd the rest;
And suffe'd me by the voice of slaves to be Whoo'd out of Rome. Now, this extremity
Hath brought me to thy hearth; not out of hope, Mistake me not, to save my life; for if
I had fear'd death, of all the men i'the world
I would have voided thee: but in mere spite,
To be full quit of those my banishers,
Stand I before thee here. Then if thou hast
A heart of wreak† in thee, that will revenge Thine own particular wrongs, and stop those mainms;

Of shame seen through thy country, speed thee
straight,

And make my misery serve thy turn: so use it,
That my revengeful services may prove
As benefits to thee; for I will fight Against my canker'd country with the spleen
Of all the under § fiends. But if so be Thou dar'st not this, and that to prove more fortunes

Thou art tir'd, then, in a word, I also am
Longer to live most weary, and present
My throat to thee, and to thy ancient malice,
Which, not to cut, would show thee but a fool;
Since I have ever follow'd thee with hate,
Drawn tuns of blood out of thy country's beast;
And cannot live but to thy shame, unless
It be to do thee service.

Auf. O Marcius, Marcius,
Each word thou hast spoke hath weeded from
my heart

A root of ancient envy. If Jupiter [say,
Should from yon cloud speak divine things, and
'Tis true, I'd not believe them more than thee,
All noble Marcius.—Oh! let me twine
Mine arms about that body, where against
My grained ash an hundred times hath broke,
And scar'd the moon with splinters! Here I clip!

The anvil of my sword; and do contest,
As hotly and as nobly with thy love,
As ever in ambitious strength I did
Contend against thy valour. Know thou first,
I lov'd the maid I married; never man
Sigh'd truer breath; but that I see thee here,
Thou noble thing! more dances my rapt heart.
Than when I first my wedded mistress saw.

* Having derived that name from Corioli.
† Follows. § Feed.

* Memorial. † Resentment. § Wounds, § Infernal. ¶ Embrace.

Bestride my threshold. Why, thou Mars! I tell thee

We have a power on foot; and I had purpose
Once more to hew thy target from thy brawn,*
Or lose mine arm for't: Thou hast beat me out †
Twelve several times, and I have nightly since Dreamt of encounters 'twixt thyself and me;
We have been down together in my sleep
Unbuckling helms, flinging each other's throat,
And wak'd half dead with nothing. Worthy

Marcins,

Had we no quarrel else to Rome, but that Thou art thence banish'd, we would muster all
From twelve to seventy; ‡ and, pouring war
Into the bowels of ungrateful Rome,
Like a bold flood o'er-beat. O come, go in,
And take our friendly senators by the hands;
Who now are here, taking their leaves of me,
Who am prepar'd against your territories,
Though not for Rome itself.

Cor. You bless me, gods!

Auf. Therefore, most absolute Sir, if thou wilt have

The lending of thine own revenges, take
The one half of my commission; and set down—
As best thou art experienc'd, since thou know'st
Thy country's strength and weakness,—thine own ways:

Whether to knock against the gates of Rome,
Or rudely visit them in parts remote,
To fright them, ere destroy. But come in:
Let me commend thee first to those, that shall Say gratias to thy desires. A thousand welcomes!
And more a friend than e'er an enemy;
Yet, Marcins, that was much. Your hand! Most welcome!

[Exit CORIOLANUS and AUFIDIUS.]

1 Serv. [Advancing.] Here's a strange alteration!

2 Serv. By my hand, I had thought to have struck him with a cudgel: and yet my mind gave me, his clothes made a false report of him.

1 Serv. What an arm he has! He turned me about with his finger and his thumb, as one would set up a top.

2 Serv. Nay, I knew by his face that there was something in him: He had, Sir, a kind of face, methought,—I cannot tell how to term it.

1 Serv. He had so: looking as it were,— 'Would I were hanged, but I thought there was more in him than I could think.

2 Serv. So did I, I'll be sworn: He is simply the rarest man i'the world.

1 Serv. I think he is: but a greater soldier than he, you wot'st one.

2 Serv. Who? my master?

Serv. Nay, it's no matter for that.

Serv. Worth six of him.

1 Serv. Nay, not so neither; but I take him to be the greater soldier.

2 Serv. 'Faith, look you, one cannot tell how to say that: for the defence of a town, our general is excellent.

1 Serv. Ay, and for an assault too.

Re-enter third SERVANT.

3 Serv. O slaves, I can tell you news: news,
you rascals.

1. 2. Serv. What, what, what? let's partake.

3 Serv. I would not be a Roman, of all nations: I had as lieve be a condemned man.

1. 2. Serv. Wherefore? wherefore?

3 Serv. Why, here's he that was wont to thwack our general,—Caius Marcius.

1 Serv. Why do you say thwack our general?
3 Serv. I do not say, thwack our general; but he was always good enough for him.

2 Serv. Come, we are fellows and friends:
he was ever too hard for him; I have heard him say so himself.

1 Serv. He was too hard for him directly, to say the truth out: before Coriolanus, he scotched him and notched him like a carbonado.‡

* Arm. † Full. ‡ Years of age. § Know.
‡ Meant cut across to be broiled.

2 Serv. An he had been cannibally given he might have broiled and eaten him too.

1 Serv. But more of thy news?

3 Serv. Why, he is so made on here within,
as if he were son and heir to Mars: set at upper end o'the table: no question asked him by any of the senators, but they stand bald before him: Our general himself makes a mistress of him; sanctifies himself with his hand, and turns up the white o'the eye to his discourse. But the bottom of the news is, our general is cut i'the middle, and but one half of what he was yesterday; for the other was half, by the entreaty, and grant of the whole table. He'll go, he says, and sowle* the porter of Rome gates by the ears:
He will mow down all before him, and leave his passage polled.†

2 Serv. And he's as like to do't as any man
I can imagine.

3 Serv. Do't? he will do't: For, look you, Sir, he has as many friends as cucumbers: which friends, Sir, (as it were,) durst not (look you, Sir,) show themselves (as we term it,) his friends,
whilst he's in directitude.

1 Serv. Directitude? what's that?

3 Serv. But when they shall see, Sir, his crest up again, and the man in blood; ‡ they will out of their burrows, like cones after rain, and revel all with him.

1 Serv. But when goes this forward?

3 Serv. To-morrow; to-day; presently. You shall have the drum struck up this afternoon:
'tis, as it were, a parcel of their feast, and to be executed ere they wipe their lips.

2 Serv. Why then we shall have a stirring world again. This peace is nothing, but to rust iron, increase tailors, and breed ballad-makers.

1 Serv. Let me have war, say I: it exceeds peace, as far as day does night; it's spritely, waking, audible, and full of vent.‡ Peace is a very apoplexy, lethargy, † muffled, ‡ deaf, sleepy, insensible: a getter of more bastard children,
than war's a destroyer of men.

2 Serv. 'Tis so: and as wars, in some sort, may be said to be a ravisher, so it cannot be denied but peace is a great maker of cuckolds.

1 Serv. Ay, and it makes men hate one another.

3 Serv. Reason; because they then less need one another. The wars for my money. I hope to see Romans as cheap as Volscians. They are rising, they are rising.

All. In, in, in, in.

[Exit ant.]

SCENE VI.—Rome.—A Public place.

Enter SICINIUS and BRUTUS.

Sic. We hear not of him, neither need we fear
him:

His remedies are tame i'the present peace
And quietness o'the people, which before
Were in wild hurry. Here do we make his friends Blush, that the world goes well: who rather had,
Though they themselves did suffer by't, behold
Dissentious numbers pestering streets, than see
Our tradesmen singing in their shops, and going
About their functions friendly.

Enter MENENIUS.

Bru. We stood to't in good time. Is this Menenius?

Sic. 'Tis he, 'tis he: Oh! he is grown most Of late.—Hail, Sir! [Kind]

Men. Hail to you both?

Sic. Your Coriolanus, Sir, is not much miss'd,
But with his friends; the common-wealth doth
stand;

And so would do, were he more angry at it.

Men. All's well; and might have been much better, if
He could have temporiz'd.

* Pall. † Cut clear. ‡ Vigour. § Part.
‡ Rumour. † Softened.

Sic. Where is he, near you?

Men. Nay, I hear nothing; his mother and his wife
Hear nothing from him.

Enter Three or Four Citizens.

Cit. The gods preserve you both!

Sic. Good-e'en, our neighbours.

Bru. Good-e'en to you all, good-e'en to you all.

1 Cit. Ourselves, our wives, and children, on our knees.

Are bound to pray for you both

Sic. Live, and thrive!

Bru. Farewell, kind neighbours: we wish'd Coriolanus

Had lov'd you as we did.

Cit. Now the gods keep you!

Both Tri. Farewell, farewell,

[Exit Citizens.]

Sic. This is a happier and more comely time, Than when these fellows ran about the streets, Crying Confusion.

Bru. Caius Marcius was

A worthy officer i'the war; but insolent, O'ercome with pride, ambitious past all thinking, Self-loving.—

Sic. And affecting one sole throne, Without assistance.*

Men. I think not so.

Sic. We should by this, to all our lamentation, If he had gone forth consul, found it so.

Bru. The gods have well prevented it, and sits safe and still without him. [Rome]

Enter ÆDILE.

Æd. Worthy tribunes, There is a slave whom we have put in prison, Reports,—the Volscies with two several powers Are entered in the Roman territories; And with the deepest malice of the war Destroy what lies before them.

Men. 'Tis Aufidius,

Who, hearing of our Marcius' banishment, Thrusts forth his horns again into the world: Which were inshe'll'd, when Marcius stood † for Rome,

And durst not once peep out.

Sic. Come, what talk you Of Marcius?

Bru. Go see this rumourer whipp'd. It cannot be,

The Volscies dare break with us.

Men. Cannot be!

We have record, that very well it can; And three examples of the like have been Within my age. But reason † with the fellow, Before you punish him, where he heard this: Lest you should chance to whip your information, And beat the messenger who bids beware Of what is to be dreaded.

Sic. Tell not me:

I know this cannot be.

Bru. Not possible.

Enter a MESSENGER.

Mess. The nobles, in great earnestness, are going

All to the senate house: some news is come, That turns ‡ their countenances

Sic. 'Tis this slave;— Go whip him †fore the people's eyes:—his raising! Nothing but his report!

Mess. Yes, worthy Sir, The slave's report is seconded; and more, More fearful is deliver'd.

Sic. What more fearful?

Mess. It is spoke freely out of many mouths, (How probable, I do not know) that Marcius, Join'd with Aufidius, leads a power 'gainst Rome; And vows revenge as spacious, as between The young'st and oldest thing.

Sic. This is most likely!

Bru. Rais'd only, that the weaker sort may Good Marcius home again. [Wish]

Sic. The very trick out.

Men. This is unlikely:

He and Aufidius can no more atone,* Than violentest contrariety.

Enter another MESSENGER.

Mess. You are sent for to the senate: A fearful army, led by Caius Marcius, Associated with Aufidius, rages Upon our territories; and have already, O'erborne their way, consum'd with fire, and What lay before them. [took]

Enter COMINIUS.

Com. Oh! you have made good work!

Men. What news? what news?

Com. You have help to ravish your own daughters, and

To melt the city leads upon your pates;

To see your wives dishonour'd to your noses—

Men. What's the news? what's the news?

Com. Your temples burn'd in their cement; and

Your franchises, whereon you stood confin'd Into an augre's bore.†

Men. Pray now, your news?—

You have made fair work, I fear me:—Pray, your news?

If Marcius should be join'd with Volscians,—

Com. If!

He is their god; he leads them like a thing Made by some other deity than nature, That shapes man better; and they follow him. Against us brats, with no less confidence Than boys pursuing summer butterflies, Or butchers killing flies.

Men. You have made good work, You and your apron men; you that stood so much Upon the voice of occupation; ‡ and The breath of garlic-eaters?

Com. He will shake

Your Rome about your ears.

Men. As Hercules

Did shake down mellow fruit: You have made fair work!

Bru. But is this true, Sir?

Com. Ay; and you'll look pale

Before you find it other. All the regions

Do smilingly revolt; † and, who resist,

Are only mock'd for valiant ignorance,

And perish constant fools. Who is't can blame him?

Your enemies, and his, find something in him.

Men. We are all undone, unless

The noble man have mercy.

Com. Who shall ask it?

The tribunes cannot do't for shame: the people Deserve such pity of him, as the wolf Does of the shepherds: for his best friends, if they Should say, Be good to Rome, they charg'd † him As those should do that had deserv'd his hate, And therein show'd like enemies.

Men. 'Tis true:

If he were putting to my house the brand

That should consume it, I have not the face

To say, 'Beseech you, cease.—You have made fair hands,

You and your crafts! you have crafted fair!

Com. You have brought

A trembling upon Rome, such as was never

So incapable of help.

Tri. Say not, we brought it.

Men. How! Was it we? We lov'd him; but like beasts,

And cowardly nobles, gave way to your clusters Who did hoot him out o' the city.

Com. But, I fear

* Suffrage. † Stood up in its defence. ‡ Talk & Changes.

* Unite. † A small round hole; an augre's a carpenter's tool. ‡ Mechanics. § Revolt with pleasure.

They'll roar him in again. Tullus Aufidius, The second name of men, obeys his points As if he were his officer :—Desperation Is all the policy, strength, and defence, That Rome can make against them.

Enter a troop of CITIZENS.

Men. Here comes the clusters.— And is Aufidius with him?—You are they That made the air unwholesome, when you cast Your stinking, greasy caps, in hooting at Coriolanus' exile. Now he's coming; And not a hair upon a soldier's head, Which will not prove a whip; as many cockcombs As you threw caps up, will he tumble down, And pay you for your voices. 'Tis no matter: If he could burn us all into one coal, We have deserv'd it.

Cit. 'Faith, we hear fearful news.

1 Cit. For mine own part.

When I said, banish him, I said, 'twas pity.

2 Cit. And so did I.

3 Cit. And so did I; and, to say the truth, so did very many of us: That we did, we did for the best: and though we willingly consented to his banishment, yet it was against our will.

Com. You are goodly things, you voices!

Men. You have made

Good work, you and your cry! *—Shall us to the Capitol?

Com. Oh! ay; what else?

[Exeunt Com. and Men.]

Sic. Go, masters, get you home, be not dismay'd:

These are a side that would be glad to have This true, which they so seem to fear. Go home, And show no sign of fear.

1 Cit. The gods be good to us! Come, masters, let's home. I ever said we were i'th' wrong, when we banish'd him.

2 Cit. So did we all. But come, let's home.

[Exeunt CITIZENS.]

Bru. I do not like this news.

Sic. Nor I.

Bru. Let's to the Capitol:—'Would half my wealth

Would buy this of a lie!

Sic. Pray, let us go. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.—A Camp, at a small distance from Rome.

Enter Aufidius and his Lieutenant.

Auf. Do they still fly to the Roman?

Lieu. I do not know what witchcraft's in him; but

Your soldiers use him as the grace 'fore meat, Their talk at table, and their thanks at end; And you are darken'd in this action, Sir, Even by your own.

Auf. I cannot help it now;

Unless, by using means, I lame the foot Of our design. He bears himself more prouderly Even to my person, than I thought he would, When first I did embrace him: Yet his nature In that's no changeling; and I must excuse What cannot be amended.

Lieu. Yet I wish, Sir,

(I mean for your particular,) you had not Join'd in commission with him; but either Had borne the action of yourself, or else To him had left it solely.

Auf. I understand thee well; and be thou sure, When he shall come to his account, he knows not

What I can urge against him. Although it seems, And so he thinks, and is no less apparent To the vulgar eye, that he bears all things fairly, And shews good husbandry for the Volscian state; Fights dragon-like, and does achieve as soon As draw his sword; yet he hath left undone That which shall break his neck, or hazard mine, Whene'er we come to our account.

* Pack, alluding to a pack of hounds.

Lieu. Sir, I beseech you, think you he'll carry Rome?

Auf. All places yield to him ere he sits down: And the nobility of Rome are his: The senators and patricians love him too: The tribunes are no soldiers; and their people Will be as rash in the repeal, as hasty To expel him thence. I think he'll be to Rome, As is the osprey * to the fish, who takes it By sovereignty of nature. First he was A noble servant to them; but he could not Carry his honours even: whether 'twas pride, Which out of daily fortune ever taints The happy man; whether defect of judgement, To fail in the disposing of those chances Which he was lord of; or whether nature, Not to be other than one thing, not moving From the casque † to the cushion; ‡ but commanding peace

Even with the same austerity and garb As he controll'd the war; but, one of these (As he hath spies of them all, not all,) For I dare so far free him,) made him fear'd, So hated, and so banish'd: But he has a merit, To choke it in the utterance. So our virtues Lie in the interpretation of the time: And power, unto itself most commendable, Hath not a tomb so evident as a chair To extol what it hath done.

One fire drives out one fire; one nail, one nail; Rights by rights fowler, strengths by strengths do fail.

Come, let's away. When, Camus, Rome is thine, Thou art poor'st of all; then shortly art thou none.

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Rome.—A Public Place.

Enter MENENIUS, COMINIUS, SICINIUS, BRUTUS and others.

Men. No, I'll not go: you hear what he hath said,

Which was sometime his general; who lov'd him In the most dear particular. He call'd me, father: But what o'that? Go, you that banish'd him, A mile before his tent fall down, and kneel The way into his mercy: Nay, if he coy'd; To hear Cominius speak, I'll keep at home.

Com. He will not seem to know me.

Men. Do you hear?

Com. Yet one time he did call me by my name:

I urg'd our old acquaintance, and the drops That we have bled together. Coriolanus He would not answer to: forbad all names: He was a kind of nothing, tillless, Till he had forg'd himself a name i'th' fire Of burning Rome.

Men. Why, so; you have made good work: A pair of tribunes that have rack'd ¶ for Rome To make coals cheap: A noble memory! **

Com. I minded him how royal 'twas to pardon When it was less expected: He replied, It was a bare petition of a state To one whom they had punish'd.

Men. Very well:

Could he say less?

Com. I offer'd to awaken his regard For his private friends: His answer to me was, He could not stay to pick them in a pile Of noisome, musty chaff: He said 'twas folly, For one poor grain or two, to leave unburnt, And still to noise the offence.

Men. For one poor grain Or two? I am one of those; his mother, wife, His child, and this brave fellow too, we are the grains:

* An eagle that preys on fish.

† The chair of civil authority.

‡ Their full extent.

¶ Harassed by exactions.

† Helmet.

‡ Not all in Condescended unwillingly.

 Memorial.

You are the musty chaff; and you are smelt
Above the moon: We must be burnt for you.

Sic. Nay, pray, be patient: If you refuse your aid

In this so never-heeded help, yet do not Upbraid us with our distress. But sure, if you Would be your country's pleader, your good
tongue,

More than the instant arm we can make,
Might stop our countryman.

Men. No; I'll not meddle.

Sic. I pray you, go to him.

Men. What should I do?

Bru. Only make trial what your love can do
For Rome towards Marcius.

Men. Well, and say that Marcius
Return me, as Cominius is return'd,
Unheard; what then?—

But as a discontented friend, grief-shot
With his unkindness? Say't be so?

Sic. Yet your good will

Must have that thanks from Rome, after the measure,

As you intended well.

Men. I'll undertake it:

I think he'll hear me. Yet to bite his lip,
And hum at good Cominius, much unhearts me.
He was not taken well; he had not din'd:

The veins unfill'd, the blood is cold, and then
We pout upon the morning, are unapt

To give or to forgive; but when we have stuff'd
These pipes and these conveyances of our blood

With wine and feeding, we have suppler souls
Than in our priest-like fasts: therefore I'll watch
him

Till he be dieted to my request,

And then I'll set upon him.

Bru. You know the very road into his kindness,
And cannot lose your way.

Men. Good faith, I'll prove him,
Speed how it will. I shall ere long have knowledge

Of my success.

Exit.

Com. He'll never hear him.

Sic. Not?

Com. I tell you; he does sit in gold his eye
Red as 'twould burn Rome; and his injury
The jailer to his pity. I kneel'd before him;

'Twas very faintly he said, Rise; dismiss'd me
Thus, with his speechless hand. What he would do,

He sent in writing after me; what he could not,
Bound with an oath, to yield to his conditions:

So that all hope is vain,
Unless his noble mother, and his wife,

Who, as I hear, mean to solicit him
For mercy to his country—Therefore, let's hence,
And with our fair entreaties haste them on.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—An advanced Post of the Volscian Camp, before Rome. The GUARD at their Stations.

Enter to them, MENENIUS.

1 G. Stay: Whence are you?

2 G. Stand, and go back.

Men. You guard like men; 'tis well: But, by your leave,

I am an officer of state, and come

To speak with Coriolanus.

1 G. From whence?

Men. From Rome.

1 G. You may not pass, you must return: our general

Will no more hear from thence.

2 G. You'll see your Rome embrac'd with fire, before

You'll speak with Coriolanus.

Men. Good my friends,

If you have heard your general talk of Rome,
And of his friends there, it is lots * to blanks,
My name hath touch'd your ears: it is Menenius.

* Prizes.

1 G. Be it so; go back: the virtue of your name is not here passable.

Men. I tell thee, fellow,

Thy general is my lover: * I have been
The book of his good acts, whence men have read
His fame unparallel'd, haply, amplified;
For I have ever veried † my friends,
(Of whom he's chief,) with all the size that verity ‡

Would without lapsing suffer: nay, sometimes,
Like to a bowl upon a subtle § ground,
I have tumbled past the throw; and, in his praise,

Have almost stamp'd the leasing: || Therefore fellow,

I must have leave to pass.

1 G. 'Faith, Sir, if you had told as many lies in his behalf, as you have uttered words in your own, you should not pass here: no, though it were as virtuous to lie, as to live chastely. Therefore, go back.

Men. Pr'ythee, fellow, remember my name is Menenius, always factionary on the party of your general.

2 G. Howsoever you have been his liar, (as you say you have) I am one that, telling true under him, must say, you cannot pass. Therefore, go back.

Men. Has he din'd, can'st thou tell? for I would not speak with him til after dinner.

1 G. You are a Roman, are you?

Men. I am as thy general is.

1 G. Then you should hate Rome, as he does.
Can you, when you have pushed out your gates the very defender of them, and, in a violent popular ignorance, given your enemy your shield, think to front his revenges with the easy groans of old women, the virginal palms of your daughters, or with the palsied intercession of such a decayed dotant ¶ as you seem to be? Can you think to blow out the intended fire your city is ready to flame in, with such weak breath as this? No, you are deceived; therefore back to Rome,
and prepare for your execution: you are condemned, our general has sworn you out of reprieve and pardon.

Men. Sirrah, if this captain knew I were here,
he would use me with estimation.

2 G. Come, my captain knows you not.

Men. I mean, thy general.

1 G. My general cares not for you. Back, I say, go, lest I let forth your half pint of blood; —back,—that's the utmost of your having: — back.

Men. Nay, but fellow, fellow, —

Enter CORIOLANUS and AUFIDIUS.

Cor. What's the matter?

Men. Now your companion,  I'll say an errand for you; you shall know now that I am in estimation; you shall perceive that a Jack †† guardant cannot office me from my son Coriolanus: guess, but by my entertainment with him, if thou stand'st not 'till the state of hanging, or of some death more long in spectatorship, and crueller in suffering: behold now presently, and swoon for what's to come upon thee.—The glorious gods sit in hourly synod about thy particular prosperity, and love thee no worse than thy old father Menenius does! O my son! my son!
thou art preparing fire for us; look thee, here's water to quench it. I was hardly moved to come to thee; but being assured none but myself could move thee, I have been blown out of your gates with sighs: and conjure thee to pardon Rome, and thy petitionary countrymen. The good gods assuage thy wrath, and turn the dregs of it upon this varlet here; this, who, like a block, hath denied my access to thee.

Cor. Away!

Men. How! Away?

* Friend. † Prov'd to. ‡ Truth.
§ Decentful. ¶ Lye. ¶† Dostard.
 Fellow. †† Jack in office.

Cor. Wife, mother, child, I know not. My affairs
Are servanted to others : Though I owe
My revenge properly, my remission lies
In Volscian breasts. That we have been familiar, Ingrate forgetfulness shall poison, rather Than pity note how much.—Therefore, be gone.
Mine ears against your suits are stronger, than Your gates against my force. Yet, for * I lov'd
thee,
Take this along : I writ it for thy sake,

[Gives a Letter.
And would have sent it. Another word, Menenius,

I will not hear thee speak.—This man, Aufidius,
Was my beloved in Rome : yet thou behold'st—
Auf. You keep a constant temper.

[Exeunt CORIOLANUS and AUFIDIUS.

1 G. Now, Sir, is your name Menenius ?
2 G. 'Tis a spell, you see, of much power :
You know the way home again.

1 G. Do you hear how we are shent † for keeping our greatness back ?

2 G. What cause, do you think, I have to swoon ?

Men. I neither care for the world, nor your general : for such things as you, I can scarce think there's any, you are so slight. He that hath a will to die by himself, fears it not from another. Let your general do his worst. For you, be that you are long ; and your misery increase with your age ! I say to you, as I was said to, Away ! [Exit.

1 G. A noble fellow, I warrant him.

2 G. The worthy fellow is our general : He is the rock, the oak not to be wind-shaken.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Tent of CORIOLANUS.

Enter CORIOLANUS, AUFIDIUS, and others.

Cor. We will before the walls of Rome to-morrow

Set down our host.—My partner in this action,
You must report to the Volscian lords, how
I have borne this business. [plainly ;

Auf. Only their ends

You have respected : stopp'd your ears against
The general suit of Rome ; never admitted
A private whisper, no, not with such friends
That thought them sure of you.

Cor. This last old man,
Whom with a crack'd heart I have sent to Rome,
Lov'd me above the measure of a father :
Nay, godded me, indeed. Their latest refuge
Was to send him : for whose old love I have (Though I show'd sourly to him,) once more offer'd

The first conditions, which they did refuse,
And cannot now accept, to grace him only,
That thought he could do more ; a very little
I have yielded too : Fresh embassies, and suits,
Nor from the state, nor private friends, hereafter
Will I lend ear to.—Ha ! what shout is this ?

[Shout within.

Shall I be tempted to infringe my vow
In the same time 'tis made ? I will not.—

Enter in mourning habits, VIRGILIA, VOLU-MENIA, leading young MARCIUS, VALERIA, and ATTENDANTS.

My wife comes foremost ; then the honour'd mould

Wherein this trunk was fram'd, and in her hand
The grand-child to her blood. But, out, affection !
All bond and privilege of nature, break !

Let it be virtuous to be obstinate.—

What is that curt'sy worth ? or those doves' eyes,
Which can make gods forsworn ?—I melt, and am not

Of stronger earth than others.—My mother bows ;
As if Olympus to a molehill should

In supplication nod : and my young boy
Hath an aspect of intercession, which
Great nature cries, Deny not.—Let the Volscies Plough Rome and harrow Italy ; I'll never
Be such a gosling to obey instinct ; but stand
As if a man were author of himself,
And knew no other kin.

Vir. My lord and husband !

Cor. These eyes are not the same I wore in Rome.

Vir. The sorrow, that delivers us thus chang'd
Makes you think so.

Cor. Like a dull actor now,
I have forgot my part, and I am out,
Even to a full disgrace. Best of my flesh,
Forgive my tyranny ; but do not say,
For that, Forgive our Romans.—O! a kiss
Long as my exile, sweet as my revenge !
Now by the jealous queen * of heaven, that kiss
I carried from thee, dear ; and my true lip
Hath virgin'd it e'er since.—You gods ! I pray,
And the most noble mother of the world
Leave us unalinted : Sink, my knee, t' the earth ;

[Kneels.

Of thy deep duty more impression show
Than that of common sons.

Vol. Oh ! stand up bless'd !
Whilst, with no softer cushion than the flint
I kneel before thee ; and unproperly Show duty, as mistaken all the while
Between the child and parent. [Kneels

Cor. What is this ?

Your knees to me ? to your corrected son
Then let the pebbles on the hungry beach
Fillip the stars ; then let the mutinous winds
Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fiery sun,
Murdering impossibility, to make
What cannot be, slight work.

Vol. Thou art my warrior :

I help to frame thee. Do you know this lady ?

Cor. The noble sister of Publicola,
The moon of Rome ; chaste as the icicle
That's curd'd by the frost from purest snow,
And hangs on Dian's temple. Dear Valeria !

Vol. This is a poor epitome of yours,
Which, by the interpretation of full time,
May show like all yourself.

Cor. The god of soldiers,
With the consent of supreme Jove, inform Thy thoughts with nobleness, that thou may'st prove

To shame invulnerable, and stick t' the wars
Like a great sea-mark, standing every flaw, †
And saving those that eye thee !

Vol. Your knee, Sirrah.

Cor. That's my brave boy.

Vol. Even lie, your wife, this lady, and myself,
Are suitors to you.

Cor. I beseech you, peace :

Or, if you'd ask, remember this before :
The things I have forsworn to grant, may never
Be held by you denials. Do not bid me
Dismiss my soldiers, or capitate *
Again with Rome's mechanics : Tell me not Wherein I seem unnatural : Desire not
To allay my rages and revenges, with Your colder reasons.

Vol. Oh ! no more, no more !

You have said, you will not grant us any thing ;
For we have nothing else to ask, but that
Which you deny already : Yet we will ask,
That, if you fail in our request, the blame
May hang upon your hardness : therefore hear us.

Cor. Aufidius, and you Volscies, mark ; for we'll [quest ?

Hear neught from Rome in private.—Your re-Vol. Should we be silent and not speak, our raiment

And state of bodies would bewray ‡ what life
We have led since thy exile. Think with thyself,
How more unfortunate than all living women
Are we come hither ; since that thy sight, which should

* Because. † Reprimanded. ‡ Openly.

* Jane.

* Storm.

‡ Betray

Make your eyes flow with joy, hearts dance with comfort,
Constrains them weep, and shake with fear and sorrow;

Making the mother, wife, and child, to see
The son, the husband, and the father, tearing
His country's bowels out. And to poor we,
Thine enmity's most capital: thou barr'st us
Our prayers to the gods, which can a comfort
That all but we enjoy; for how can we,
Alas! how can we for our country pray,
Whereto we are bound; together with thy victory,
Whereto we are bound? Alack! or we must lose
The country, our dear nurse; or else thy person,
Our comfort in the country. We must find
An evident calamity, though we had
Our wish, which side should win: for either thou Must, as a foreign miscreant, be led
With manacles through our streets, or else
Triumphantly tread on thy country's ruin;
And bear the palm for having bravely shed
Thy wife and children's blood. For myself, son,
I purpose not to wait on fortune, till
These wars determine; * if I cannot persuade thee
Rather to show a noble grace to both parts,
Than seek the end of one, thou shalt no sooner
March to assault thy country, than to tread
(Trust to't, thou shalt not,) on thy mother's womb,
That brought thee to this world.

Vir. Ay, and on mine,
That brought you forth this boy, to keep your Living to time. [name]

Boy. He shall not tread on me;
I'll run away, till I am bigger, but then I'll fight.

Cor. Not of a woman's tenderness to be,
Requires nor child nor woman's face to see.
I have sat too long. [Rising.]

Vol. Nay, go not from us thus.
If it were so, that our request did tend
To save the Romans, thereby to destroy
The Volscues whom you serve, you might condemn us,

As poisonous of your honour: No; our suit
Is, that you reconcile them: while the Volscues May say, This mercy we have show'd; the Romans,

This we receiv'd; and each in either side
Give the all-hail to thee, and cry, Be bless'd
For making up this peace! Thou know'st, great soul,

The end of war's uncertain; but this certain,
That, if thou conquer Rome, the benefit
Which thou shalt thereby reap, is such a name,
Whose repetition will be dogg'd with curses:
Whose chronicle thus writ,—The man was noble,
But with his last attempt he wip'd it out;
Destroyed his country: and his name remains
To the ensuing age, abhorr'd. Speak to me,
son,

Thou hast affected the fine strains of honour,
To imitate the graces of the gods;
To tear with thunder the wide cheeks of the air,
And yet to charge thy sulphur with a bolt
That should but rive an oak. Why dost not speak?

Think'st thou it honourable for a noble man
Still to remember wrongs?—Daughter, speak you;
He cares not for your weeping.—Speak thou, boy:
Perhaps thy childishness will move him more Than can our reasons.—There is no man in the world [prate]

More bound to his mother; yet here he lets me
Like one of the stocks. Thou hast never in thy life
Show'd thy dear mother any courtesy;
When she (poor hen!) fond of no second brood,
Has cluck'd thee too the wars, and safely home,
Loaden with honour. Say, my request's unjust,
And spurn me back: But, if it be not so,
Thou art not honest; and the gods will plague
thee.

That thou restrain'st from me the duty, which
To a mother's part belongs.—He turns away:
Down, ladies; let us shame him with our knees.

* Conclude.

† The niceties.

To his surname Coriolanus 'longs more pride,
Than pity to our prayers. Down; an end:
This is the last;—So we will home to Rome,
And die among our neighbours.—Nay, behold us:
This boy, that cannot tell what he would have,
But kneels, and holds up hands, for fellowship,
Does reason our petition with more strength
Than thou hast to deny't.—Come, let us go:
This fellow had a Volscian for his mother;
His wife is in Corioli, and his child
Like him by chance:—Yet give us our despatch:
I am hush'd until our city be afeare,
And then I'll speak a little.

Cor. O mother, mother!

[Holding VOLUMNIA by the Hands, silent.
What have you done? Behold, the heavens do ope,

The gods look down, and this unnatural scene
They laugh at. O my mother, mother! O!
You have won a happy victory to Rome:
But, for your son,—believe it, oh! believe it,
Most dangerously you have with him prevail'd,
If not most mortal to him. But, let it come:
Aufidius, though I cannot make true wars,
I'll frame convenient peace. Now, good Aufidius,

Were you in my stead, say, would you have heard
A mother less? or granted less, Aufidius?

Auf. I was mov'd withal.

Cor. I dare be sworn you were:
And, Sir, it is no little thing, to make
Mine eyes to sweat compassion. But, good Sir,
What peace you'll make, advise me: For my part,
I'll not to Rome, I'll back with you; and pray
you,

Stand to me in this cause. O mother! wife!
Auf. I am glad thou hast set thy mercy and thy honour

At difference in thee: out of that I'll work
Myself a former fortune. [Aside.]

[The ladies make signs to CORIOLANUS.
Cor. Ay, by and by:

[To VOLUMNIA, VIRGILIA, &c.
But we will drink together; and you shall bear
A better witness back than words, which we,
On like conditions, will have counter-scal'd.
Come, enter with us. Ladies, you deserve
To have a temple built you: all the swords
In Italy, and her confederate arms,
Could not have made this peace. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Rome.—A public Place.

Enter MENENIUS AND SICINIUS.

Men. See you yond' coign * o'the Capitol:
youd' corner stone?

Sic. Why, what of that?

Men. If it be possible for you to displace it with your little finger, there is some hope the ladies of Rome, especially his mother, may prevail with him. But I say, there is no hope in't; our throats are sentenced, and stay upon execution.

Sic. Is't possible that so short a time can alter the condition of a man?

Men. There is difference between a grub and a butterfly; yet your butterfly was a grub. This Marcus is grown from man to dragon: he has wings! he's more than a creeping thing.

Sic. He loved his mother dearly.

Men. So did he me: and he no more remembers his mother now, than an eight year old horse. The tartness of his face sours ripe grapes.
When he walks, he moves like an engine, and the ground shrinks before his treading. He is able to pierce a corslet with his eye; talks like a knell and his hum is a batt'ry. He sits in his state,† as a thing made for Alexander. What he bids be done, is finished with his bidding. He wants nothing of a god but eternity, and a heaven to thrive in.

Sic. Yes, mercy, if you report him truly.

* Angle.

† Stay but for it.

‡ Chair of state.

§ To resemble.

Men. I paint him in the character. Mark what mercy his mother shall bring from him: There is no more mercy in him, than there is milk in a male tiger; that shall our poor city find: and all that is 'long of you.

Sic. The gods be good unto us!

Men. No, in such a case the gods will not be good unto us. When we banished him, we respected not them: and, he returning to break our necks, they respect not us.

Enter a MESSENGER.

Mess. Sir, if you'd save your life, fly to your house:

The plebeians have got your fellow-tribune, And hale him up and down; all swearing, if The Roman ladies bring not comfort home, They'll give him death by inches.

Enter another MESSENGER.

Sic. What's the news?

Mess. Good news, good news:—The ladies have prevail'd,

The Volscies are dislodg'd, and Marcius gone: A merrier day did never yet greet Rome, No, not the expulsion of the Tarquins.

Sic. Friend,

Art thou certain this is true? is it most certain?

Mess. As certain as I know the sun is fire:

Where have you lurk'd, that you make doubt of it? Ne'er through an arch so hurried the blown tide, As the recoinco'tred through the gates. Why bark you?

[Trumpets and Hautboys sounded, and Drums beat, all together. Shouting also within. The trumpets, sackbuts, psalteries, and fifes, Tabors, and cymbals, and the shouting Romans, Make the sun dance. Hark you!]

[Shouting again.]

Men. This is good news:

I will go meet the ladies. This Volturnia Is worth of consuls, senators, patricians, A city full of of tribunes such as you, A sea and land full: You have pray'd well to-day; This morning, for ten thousand of your throats I'd not have given a dot. Hark, how they joy!

[Shouting and Music.]

Sic. First, the gods bless you for their tidings: Accept my thankfulness. [next,

Mess. Sir, we have all

Great cause to give great thanks,

Sic. They are near the city?

Mess. Almost at point to enter.

Sic. We will meet them

And help the joy. [Going.

Enter the Ladies, accompanied by SENATORS, PATRICIANS, and People. They pass over the Stage.

1 Sen. Behold our patroness, the life of Rome: Call all your tribes together, praise the gods, And make triumphant fires; strew flowers before them:

Unshout the noise that banish'd Marcius, Repeat* him with the welcome of his mother; Cry,—Welcome, ladies, Welcome!—

All. Welcome, ladies!

Welcome!

[A flourish with Drums and Trumpets. Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Antium.—A Public Place.

Enter TULLUS AUFIDIUS, with Attendants.

Auf. Go tell the lords of the city, I am here: Deliver them this paper: having read it, Bid them repair to the market-place; where I, Even in theirs and in the commons' ears, Will vouch the truth of it. Him I accuse, The city ports† by this hath enter'd, and Intends to appear before the people, hoping To purge himself with words: Despatch.

[Exeunt Attendants.]

Enter Three or Four CONSPIRATORS of AUFIDIUS's Faction.

Most welcome!

1 Con. How is it with our general?

Auf. Even so,

As with a man by his own alms empoison'd, And with his charity slain.

2 Con. Most noble Sir,

If you do hold the same intent wherein You wish'd us parties, we'll deliver you Of your great danger.

Auf. Sir, I cannot tell:

We must proceed, as we do find the people.

3 Con. The people will remain uncertain, whilst 'Twixt you there's difference; but the fall of either Makes the survivor heir of all.

Auf. I know it;

And my pretext to strike at him admits A good construction. I rans'd him, and I pawn'd Mine honour for his truth: Who being so heighten'd,

He water'd his new plants with dews of flattery, Seducing so my friends; and, to this end, He bow'd his nature, never known before But to be rough, unswayable, and free,

3 Con. Sir, his stoutness,

When he did stand for consul, which he lost By lack of stooping,—

Auf. That I would have spoke of:

Being banish'd for't, he came unto my hearth; Presented to my knife his throat; I took him; Made him joint-servant with me; gave him way In all his own desires; nay, let him choose Out of my files, his project to accomplish, My best and freshest men; serv'd his designments In mine own person; help* to reap the fame, Which he did end all his; and took some pride To do myself this wrong; till, at the last, I seem'd his follower, not partner; and He wag'd me with his countenance,† as if I had been mercenary.

1 Con. So he did, my lord:

The army marvel'd at it. And, in the last, When he had carried Rome, and that we look'd For no less spoil than glory,—

Auf. There was it,—

For which my sinews shall be stretch'd upon him. At a few drops of women's rheum,‡ which are As cheap as lies, he sold the blood and labour Of our great action: Therefore shall he die And I'll renew me in his fall. But, hark!

[Drums and Trumpets sound, with great shouts of the People.]

1 Con. Your native town you enter'd like a post, And had no welcomes home; but he returns, Splitting the air with noise.

2 Con. And patient fools,

Whose children he hath slain, their base throats tear,

With giving him glory.

3 Con. Therefore, at your vantage, Ere he express himself, or move the people With what he would say, let him feel your sword, Which we will second. When he lies along, After your way his tale pronounce shall buy His reasons with his body.

Auf. Say no more:

Here come the lords.

Enter the LORDS of the City.

Lords. You are most welcome home.

Auf. I have not deserv'd it:

But, worthy lords, have you with heed perus'd What I have written to you?

Lords. We have.

1 Lord. And grieve to hear it.

What faults he made before the last, I think, Might have found easy fines: but there to end, Where he was to begin, and give away The benefit of our levies, answering us With our own charge;‡ making a treaty, where There was a yielding; This admits no excuse

§ Rewarding us with our own expenses

Auf. He approaches, you shall hear him.

Enter CORIOLANUS, with Drums and Colours ; a Crowd of CITIZENS with him.

Cor. Hail, lords ! I am returned your soldier ; No more infected with my country's love, Than when I parted hence, but still subsisting Under your great command. You are to know, That prosperously I have attempted, and, With bloody passage led your wars, even to The gates of Rome. Our spoils we have brought home,

Do more than counterpoise, a full third part, The charges of the action. We have made peace, With no less honour to the Antiates, Than shame to the Romans ; and we here deliver, Subscrib'd by the consuls and patricians, Together with the seal o'the senate, what We have compounded on.

Auf. Read it not, noble lords ; But tell the traitor in the highest degree He hath abus'd your powers.

Cor. Traitor !—How now ?

Auf. Ay, traitor, Marcius.

Cor. Marcius !

Auf. Ay, Marcius, Caius Marcius : Dost thou think

I'll grace thee with that robbery, thy stol'n name Coriolanus in Corioli ?—

You lords and heads of the state, perfidiously He has betray'd your business, and given up For certain drops of salt * your city Rome (I say, your city) to his wife and mother : Breaking his oath and resolution, like A twist of rotten silk : never admitting Counsel o'the war ; but at his nurse's tears He whin'd and roar'd away your victory ; That pages blush'd at him, and men of heart Look'd wondering each at other.

Cor. Hear'st thou, Mars ?

Auf. Name not the god, thou boy of tears,—

Cor. Ha !

Auf. No more. †

Cor. Measureless liar, thou hast made my heart Too great for what contains it. Boy ! O slave !— Pardon me, lords, 'tis the first time that ever I was forc'd to scold. Your judgments, my grave lords,

Must give this cur the lie : and his own notion (Who wears my stripes impress'd on him that must bear

My beating to his grave,) shall join to thrust The lie unto him.

1 Lord. Peace, both, and hear me speak.

Cor. Cut me to pieces, Volscies : men and lads, Stain all your edges on me.—Boy ! False hound ! If you have writ your annals true, 'tis there,

That like an eagle in a dove-cote, I Flutter'd your voices in Corioli : Alone I did it.—Boy !

Auf. why, noble lords, Will you be put in mind of his blind fortune, Which was your shame, by this unholly braggart, 'Fore your own eyes and ears ?

Cor. Let him die for't. [Several speak at once.

Cit. [Speaking promiscuously.] Tear him to pieces, do it presently. He killed my son :—my daughter ;—He killed my cousin Marcius :—He killed my father.—

2 Lord. Peace, ho ;—no outrage ;—peace. The man is noble, and his fame folds in This orb o'the earth. * His last offence to us Shall have judicious † hearing.—Stand, Aufidius, And trouble not the peace.

Cor. Oh ! that I had him, With six Aufidiuses, or more, his tribe To use my lawful sword !

Auf. Insolent villain !

Cor. Kill, kill, kill, kill, kill him !

[AUFIDIUS and the CONSPIRATORS draw, and kill CORIOLANUS, who falls, and AUFIDIUS stands on him.

Lords. Hold, hold, hold, hold !

Auf. My noble masters, hear me speak.

1 Lord. O Tullius !—

2 Lord. Thou hast done a deed whereat valour will weep.

3 Lord. Tread not upon him.—Masters, all, be Put up your swords. [quiet]

Auf. My lords, when you shall know (as in this rage, Provok'd by him, you cannot,) the great danger Which this man's life did owe you, you'll rejoice That he is thus cut off. Please it your honours To call me to your senate, I'll deliver Myself your loyal servant, or endure Your heaviest censure.

1 Lord. Bear from hence his body, And mourn you for him : let him be regarded As the most noble corse that ever herald Did follow to his urn.

2 Lord. His own impatience Takes from Aufidius a great part of blame. Let's make the best of it.

Auf. My rage is gone, And I am struck with sorrow.—Take him up : Help, three o'the chiefest soldiers ; I'll be one.— Beat thou the drum, that it speak mournfully : Trail your steel pikes.—Though in this city he Hath widow'd and unchilded many a one, Which to this hour bewail the injury, Yet he shall have a noble memory.

Assist. [Exeunt, bearing the body of CORIOLANUS. A dead March sounded.

* Drops of tears.

† No more than a boy of tears.

* His fame overspreads the world.

JULIUS CESAR.

LITERARY AND HISTORICAL NOTICE.

ABOUT the middle of February, A.U.C. 709, a riotous festival sacred to Pan, and called Lupercales, was held in honour of Cesar, when the regal crown was offered him by Antony. In the middle of the following March he was assassinated. November 27, 710, the Triumvirs, Antony, Lepidus, and Octavius, met at a small island formed by the river Rhenus, near Bononia, and there agreed upon the cruel proscription introduced in Act IV.—In 711, Brutus and Cassius were totally defeated at Philippi.—Shakspeare appears to have produced this play about the year 1607. one, upon the same subject, had been written by a young Scotch Nobleman, the Earl of Sterling; and in many passages of each, a strong similarity may be traced.—this was probably occasioned by both authors drawing their materials from the same source.—A Latin play on this subject, by Dr Lader, of Oxford, who is enumerated amongst the best tragic authors of that age, was published in 1582.—Dr Johnson says of this tragedy:—"Many particular passages deserve regard, and the contention and reconciliation of Brutus and Cassius are universally celebrated, but I have never been strongly agitated in perusing it, and think it somewhat cold and unflattering, compared with some other of Shakspeare's plays: his adherence to the real story, and to Roman manners, seems to have impeded the natural vigour of his genius."

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Rome.—A Street.

Enter FLAVIUS, MARULLUS, and a Rabble of CITIZENS.

Flav. Hence! home, you idle creatures, get you home;

Is this a holiday? What! know you not, Being mechanical, you ought not walk Upon a labouring day, without the sign Of your profession?—Speak, what trade art thou?

1 Cit. Why, Sir, a carpenter.

Mar. Where is thy leather apron, and thy rule? What dost thou with thy best apparel on?—You, Sir; what trade are you?

2 Cit. Truly, Sir, in respect of a fine workman, I am but, as you would say, a cobbler.

Mar. But what trade art thou? Answer me directly.

2 Cit. A trade, Sir, that I hope I may use with a safe conscience; which is, indeed, Sir, a mender of bad soles.

Mar. What trade, thou knave! thou naughty knave, what trade?

2 Cit. Nay, I beseech you, Sir, be not out with me: yet, if you be out, Sir, I can mend you.

Mar. What meanest thou by that? Mend me, thou saucy fellow?

2 Cit. Why, Sir, cobble you.

Flav. Thou art a cobbler, art thou?

3 Cit. Truly, Sir, all that I live by is, with the awl: I meddle with no tradesman's matters, nor woman's matters, but with awl. I am, indeed, Sir, a surgeon to old shoes; when they are in great danger, I recover them. As proper men as ever trod upon neat's-leather, have gone upon my handy-work.

Flav. But wherefore art not in thy shop to-day? Why dost thou lead these men about the streets?

2 Cit. Truly, Sir, to wear out their shoes, to get myself into more work. But, indeed, Sir, we make holiday to see Cesar, and to rejoice in his triumph.

Mar. Wherefore rejoice? What conquest brings he home?

What tributaries follow him to Rome,

To grace in captive bonds his chariot wheels?

You blocks, you stones, you worse than senseless things?

O you hard hearts, you cruel men of Rome, Knew you not Pompey? Many a time and oft

Have you climb'd up to walls and battlements, To towers and windows, yea, to chimney-tops,

Your infants in your arms, and there have sat The live-long day, with patient expectation,

To see great Pompey pass the streets of Rome: And when you saw his chariot but appear,

Have you not made an universal shout, That Tyber trembled underneath her banks

To hear the replication of your sounds, Made in her concave shores?

And do you now put on your best attire?
And do you now call out a holiday?
And do you now strew flowers in his way,
That comes in triumph over Pompey's blood?
Be gone!

Run to your houses, fall upon your knees,
Pray to the gods to intermit the plague
That needs must light on this ingratitude.

Flav. Go, go, good countrymen, and, for this Assemble all the poor men of your sort; [fault,
Draw them to Tyber banks, and weep your tears
Into the channel, till the lowest stream
Do kiss the most exalted shores of all.

[Exeunt CITIZENS.]

See, wher their basest metal be not mov'd;
They vanish tongue-tied in their guiltiness.
Go you down that way towards the Capitol;
This way will I: Disrobe the images,
If you do find them deck'd with ceremonies.*

Mar. May we do so?

You know it is the feast of Lupercal.

Flav. It is no matter; let no images
Be hung with Cesar's trophies. † I'll about,
And drive away the vulgar from the streets:
So do you too where you perceive them thick.
These crowning feathers pluck'd from Cesar's wing,
Will make him fly an ordinary pitch;
Who else would soar above the view of men,
And keep us all in servile fearfulness.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same.—A public Place.

Enter, in Procession, with Music, CESAR; ANTONY, for the course; CALPHURNIA, PORCIA, DECIO, CICERO, BRUTUS, CASSIUS, and CASCIA, a great Crowd following, among them a SOOTHSAYER.

Ces. Calphurnia,—

Casca. Peace, ho! Cesar speaks.

[Music ceases.]

Ces. Calphurnia,—

Cal. Here, my lord.

Ces. Stand you directly in Antonius' way,
When he doth run his course. ‡—Antonius.

Ant. Cesar, my lord.

Ces. Forget not, in your speed, Antonius,
To touch Calphurnia: for our elders say,
The barren touched in this holy chase,
Shake off their sterility.

Ant. I shall remember.

When Cesar says, Do this, it is perform'd.

Ces. Set on; and leave no ceremony out.

[Music.]

Sooth. Cesar!

Ces. Ho! who calls?

Casca. Bid every noise be still:—Peace yet again.

[Music ceases.]

Ces. Who is it in the press that calls on me?
I hear a tongue, shriller than all the music,

Cy. Cesar!—Speak; Cesar is turn'd to hear.

Sooth. Beware the ides of March.

Ces. What man is that?

Bru. A soothsayer bids you beware the ides of March.

Ces. Set him before me, let me see his face.

Cas. Fellow, come from the throng: Look upon Cesar.

Ces. What say'st thou to me now? Speak once again.

Sooth. Beware the ides of March.

Ces. He is a dreamer: let us leave him;—pass.

[Scenet. 5. Exeunt all but BRU. and CAS.]

Cas. Will you go see the order of the course?

Bru. Not I.

Cas. I pray you, do.

Bru. I am not gamesome: I do lack some part
Of that quick spirit that is in Antony.
Let me not hinder, Cassius, your desires;
I'll leave you.

* Honorary ornaments: tokens of respect.

† Adorned with laurel crowns.
observed at the feast of Lupercalia.

‡ A ceremony
§ Flourish of instruments.

Cas. Brutus, I do observe you now of late;
I have not from your eyes that gentleness,
And show of love—as I was wont to have:
You bear too stubborn and too strange a hand
Over your friend that loves you.

Bru. Cassius,
Be not deceived: if I have veil'd my look,
I turn the trouble of my countenance
Merely upon myself. Vexed I am,
Of late, with passions of some difference; *
Conceptions only proper to myself,
Which give some soil, perhaps, to my behaviours:

But let not therefore my good friends be griev'd:
(Among which number, Cassius, be you one)
Nor construe any further my neglect,
Than that poor Brutus, with himself at war,
Forgets the shows of love to other men.

Cas. Then, Brutus, I have much mistook your passion, †

By means whereof, this breast of mine hath buried

Thoughts of great value, worthy cogitations.

Tell me, good Brutus, can you see your face?

Bru. No, Cassius: for the eye sees not itself,
But by reflection, by some other things.

Cas. 'Tis just:
And it is very much lamented, Brutus,
That you have no such mirrors as will turn
Your hidden worthiness into your eye,
That you might see your shadow. I have heard,
Where many of the best respect in Rome,
(Except immortal Cesar) speaking of Brutus,
And groaning underneath this age's yoke,
Have wish'd that noble Brutus had his eyes

Bru. Into what dangers would you lead me,
Cassius,

That you would have me seek into myself

For that which is not in me?

Cas. Therefore, good Brutus, be prepar'd to
hear:

And, since you know you cannot see yourself
So well as by reflection, I, your glass,
Will modestly discover to yourself

That of yourself which you yet know not of.

And be not jealous of me, gentle Brutus:

Were I a common laughter, or did use

To stale ‡ with ordinary oaths my love

To every new protested; if you know

That I do fawn on men, and hug them hard,

And after scandal them; or, if you know

That I profess myself in banqueting

To all the rout, then hold me dangerous.

[Flourish and shout.]

Bru. What means this shouting? I do fear, the people

Choose Cesar for their king.

Cas. Ay, do you fear it?

Then must I think you would not have it so.

Bru. I would not, Cassius; yet I love him
well:—

But wherefore do you hold me here so long?

What is it that you would impart to me?

If it be aught toward the general good,

Set honour in one eye, and death 't' the other,

And I will look on both indifferently:

For, let the gods so speed me, as I love

The name of honour more than I fear death.

Cas. I know that virtue to be in you, Brutus,

As well as I do know your outward favour.

Well, honour is the subject of my story.—

I cannot tell, what you and other men

Think of this life; but, for my single self,

I had as lief not be, as live to be

In awe of such a thing as I myself.

I was born free as Cesar; so were you:

We both have fed as well; and we can both

Endure the winter's cold, as well as he.

For once, upon a raw and gusty day,

The troubled Tyber chafing with her shores,

Cesar said to me, Dar'st thou, Cassius, now

Leap in with me into this angry flood,

* Discordant opinions.

† Feelings.

‡ The nature of your

‡ To nauseate by repetition

And swim to yonder point? Upon the word, Account'd as I was, I plunged in, And bade him follow: so, indeed, he did, The torrent roar'd; and we did buffet it With lusty sinews; throwing it aside And stemming it with hearts of controversy. But, ere we could arrive the point propos'd, Caesar cried, Help me, Cassius, or I sink. I, as Æneas, our great ancestor, Did from the flames of Troy upon his shoulder The old Anchises bear, so, from the waves of Tyber

Did I the tired Cesar; And this man Is now become a god; and Cassius is A wretched creature, and must bend his body, If Cesar carelessly but nod on him. He had a fever when he was in Spain, And, when the fit was on him, I did mark How he did shake: 'tis true, this god did shake: His coward lips did from their colour fly; And that same eye, whose bend doth awe the world,

Did lose its lustre: I did hear him groan: Ay, and that tongue of his, that bade the Romans

Mark him, and write his speeches in their books, Alas! it cried, Give me some drink, Titinius, As a sick girl. Ye gods, it doth amaze me, A man of such a feeble temper should So get the start of the majestic world, And bear the palm alone. [Shout. Flourish.*

Bru. Another general shout! I do believe that these applauses are For some new honours that are heap'd on Cesar.

Cas. Why, man, he doth bestride the narrow world

Like a Colossus; and we petty men Walk under his huge legs, and peep about To find ourselves dishonourable graves. Men at some time are masters of their fates: The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars, But in ourselves, that we are underlings. Brutus and Cesar: What should be in that Cesar?

Why should that name be sounded more than yours?

Write them together, yours is as fair a name; Sound them, it doth become the mouth as well; Weigh them, it is as heavy; conjure them, Brutus will start a spirit as soon as Cesar. [Shout.

Now in the names of all the gods at once, Upon what meat doth this our Cesar feed, That he is grown so great? Age, thou art sham'd! Rome, thou hast lost the breed of noble bloods! When went there by an age, since the great flood, But it was fam'd with more than with one man? When could they say, till now, that talk'd of Rome,

That her wide walks encompass'd but one man? Now is it Rome indeed, and room enough, When there is in it but one only man. Oh! you and I have heard our fathers say, There was a Brutus† once, that would have brook'd

The eternal devil to keep his state in Rome, As easily as a king.

Bru. That you do love me, I am nothing jealous:

What you would work me to, I have some aim: How I have thought of this, and of these times, I shall recount hereafter; for this present, I would not, so with love I might entreat you, Be any further mov'd. What you have said, I will consider; what you have to say, I will with patience hear: and find a time Both meet to hear, and answer, such high things. Till then, my noble friend, chew upon this: Brutus had rather be a villager,‡

Than to repute himself a son of Rome Under such hard conditions as this time Is like to lay upon us.

Cas. I am glad, that my weak words Have struck but thus much show of fire from Brutus.

Re-enter CESAR, and his train.

Bru. The games are done, and Cesar is returning.

Cas. As they pass by, pluck Casca by the sleeve;

And he will, after his sour fashion, tell you What hath proceeded, worthy note, to-day.

Bru. I will do so:—But, look you, Cassius, The angry spot doth glow on Cesar's brow, And all the rest look like a chidden train: Calphurnia's cheek is pale; and Cicero Looks with such ferret and such fiery eyes, As we have seen him in the Capitol, Being cross'd in conference by some senators.*

Cas. Casca will tell us what the matter is.

Ces. Antonius.

Ant. Cesar.

Ces. Let me have men about me that are fat; Sleek-headed men, and such as sleep o' nights: Yond' Cassius has a lean and hungry look; He thinks too much: such men are dangerous.

Ant. Fear him not, Cesar, he's not dangerous; He is a noble Roman, and well given.

Ces. 'Would he were fatter:—But I fear him not:

Yet if my name were liable to fear, I do not know the man I should avoid So soon as that spare Cassius. He reads much; He is a great observer, and he looks Quite through the deeds of men: he loves no plays,

As thou dost, Antony; he hears no music: Seldom he smiles, and smiles in such a sort, As if he mock'd himself, and scorn'd his spirit That could be mov'd to smile at any thing. Such men I he, be never at heart's ease, Whilst they behold a greater than themselves; And therefore are they very dangerous.

I rather tell thee what is to be fear'd, Than what I fear, for always I am Cesar. Come on my right hand, for this ear is deaf, And tell me truly what thou think'st of him.

[Exit CESAR and his Train. CASCA stays behind.

Casca. You pull'd me by the cloak; Would you speak with me?

Bru. Ay, Casca; tell us what hath chanc'd to-day, That Cesar looks so sad.

Casca. Why you were with him, were you not?

Bru. I should not then ask Casca what had chanc'd.

Casca. Why, there was a crown offer'd him; and, being offer'd him, he put it by with the back of his hand, thus; and then the people fell a shouting.

Bru. What was the second noise for?

Casca. Why, for that too.

Cas. They shouted thrice; What was the last cry for?

Casca. Why, for that too.

Bru. Was the crown offer'd him thrice?

Casca. Ay, marry, was't; and he put it by thrice: every time gentler than other; and at every putting by, more honest neighbours shouted.

Cas. Who offer'd him the crown?

Casca. Why, Antony.

Bru. Tell us the manner of it, gentle Casca.

Casca. I can as well be hang'd, as tell the manner of it: it was mere foolery. I did not mark it. I saw Mark Antony offer him a crown;—yet 'twas not a crown neither, 'twas one of these coronets;—and, as I told you, he put it by once; but, for all that, to my thinking, he would fain have had it. Then he offer'd it to him again; then he put it by again: but, to my thinking, he was very loath to lay his fingers off it. And then he offer'd it the third time; he put it the third time by: and still, as he refus'd it,

* Temperament, constitution. † Lucius Junius Brutus. ‡ Not a citizen of Rome.

* A ferret has red eyes.

the rabblement hooted, and clapped their chap-ped hands, and threw up their sweaty night-caps, and uttered such a deal of stinking breath because Caesar refused^{*} the crown, that it had almost choked Caesar; for he swooned and fell down at it: And for mine own part I durst not laugh, for fear of opening my lips, and receiving the bad air.

Cas. But soft, I pray you: What! did Caesar swoon?

Casca. He fell down in the market-place, and foamed at mouth, and was speechless.

Bru. 'Tis very like: he hath the falling-sickness.

Cas. No, Caesar hath it not; but you, and I, And honest Casca, we have the falling-sickness.

Casca. I know not what you mean by that; but, I am sure, Caesar fell down. If the rag-rag people did not clap him, and hiss him, according as he pleased, and displeased them, as they use to do the players in the theatre, I am no true man.

Bru. What said he, when he came unto himself?

Casca. Marry, before he fell down, when he perceiv'd the common herd was glad he refused the crown, he plucked me ope his doublet, and offered them his throat to cut.—An I had been a man of any occupation,* if I would not have taken him at a word, I would I might go to hell among the rogues;—and so he fell. When he came to himself again, he said, If he had done, or said, any thing amiss, he desired their worship to think it was his infirmity. Three or four wenches, where I stood, cried, Alas, good soul!—and forgave him with all their hearts: But there's no heed to be taken of them; if Caesar had stabbed their mothers, they would have done no less.

Bru. And after that, he came, thus said, away?

Casca. Ay.

Cas. Did Cicero say any thing?

Casca. Ay, he spoke Greek.

Cas. To what effect?

Casca. Nay, an I tell you that, I'll ne'er look you i'th' face again: But those that understood him smiled at one another, and shook their heads; but, for mine own part, it was Greek to me. I could tell you more news too: Marullus and Flavius, for pulling scarfs off Caesar's images, are put to silence. Fare you well. There was more foolery yet, if I could remember it.

Cas. Will you sup with me to-night, Casca?

Casca. No, I am promised forth.

Cas. Will you dine with me to-morrow?

Casca. Ay, if I be alive, and your mind hold, and your dinner worth eating.

Cas. Good: I will expect you.

Casca. Do so: Farewell, both.

[Exit CASCA.]

Bru. What a blunt fellow is this grown to be? He was quick mettle, when he went to school.

Cas. So is he now in execution Of any bold or noble enterprise, However he puts on this tardy form. This rudeness is a sauce to his good wit, Which gives men stomach to digest his words With better appetite.

Bru. And so it is. For this time I will leave you:

To-morrow if you please to speak with me, I will come home to you; or, if you will, Come home with me, and I will wait for you.

Cas. I will do so:—till then, think of the world.

[Exit BRUTUS.]

Well, Brutus, thou art noble; yet, I see Thy honourable metal may be wrought From that it is dispos'd of: Therefore 'tis meet That noble minds keep ever with their likes: For who so firm, that cannot be seduc'd? Caesar doth bear me hard;† but he loves Brutus: If I were Brutus now, and he were Cassius,

He should not humour* me. I will this night, In several hands,† in at the windows throw, As if they came from several citizens, Writings all tending to the great opinion That Rome holds of his name; wherein obscurely

Cesar's ambition shall be glanced at: And, after this, let Caesar seat him sure; For we will shake him, or worse days endure.

[Exit.]

SCENE III.—The same.—A Street.

Thunder and Lightning. Enter, from opposite sides, CASCA, with his sword drawn, and CICERO.

C.c. Good even, Casca: Brought you Caesar home?

Why are you breathless? and why stare you so?

Casca. Are you not mov'd, when all the sway i of earth

Shakes, like a thing unfirm? O Cicero, I have seen tempests, when the scolding winds Have riv'd the knotty oaks; and I have seen The ambitious ocean swell, and rage, and foam, To be exalted with the threatening clouds: But never till to-night, never till now, Did I go through a tempest-dropping fire. Either there is a civil strife in heaven, Or else the world, too sancy with the gods, Incenses them to send destruction.

Cic. Why, saw you any thing more wonderful?

Casca. A common slave (you know him well by sight)

Held up his left hand, which did flame, and burn Like twenty torches join'd; and yet his hand, Not sensible of fire, remain'd unscorch'd. Besides, (I have not since put up my sword) Against the Capitol I met a lion,

Who glar'd upon me, and went surly by, Without annoying me: And there were drawn Upon a heap a hundred ghastly women, Transformed with their fear; who swore they saw

Men, all in fire, walk up and down the streets. And yesterday, the bird of night did sit, Even at noon-day, upon the market-place, Hooting, and shrieking. When these prodigies Do so conjointly meet, let not men say

These are their reasons,—They are natural. For, I believe, they are portentous things Unto the climate that they point upon.

Cic. Indeed, it is a strange-disposed time: But men may construe things after their fashion, Clean from the purpose of the things themselves. Comes Caesar to the Capitol to-morrow?

Casca. He doth; for he did bid Antonius Send word to you he would be there to-morrow.

Cic. Good night then, Casca: this disturbed sleep Is not to walk in.

Casca. Farewell, Cicero. [Exit CICERO.]

Enter CASSIUS.

Cas. Who's there?

Casca. A Roman.

Cas. Casca, by your voice.

Casca. Your ear is good. Cassius, what night is this?

Cas. A very pleasing night to honest men.

Casca. Who ever knew the heavens menace so?

Cas. Those, that have known the earth so full of faults.

For my part, I have walk'd about the streets, Submitting me unto the perilous night; And thus unbraced, Casca, as you see, Have baid my bosom to the thunder-stone;‡ And, when the cross blue lightning seem'd to open The breast of heaven, I did present myself Even in the aim and very flash of it.

Casca. But wherefore did you so much tempt the heavens?

It is the part of men to fear and tremble,

* A mechanic. † Has an unfavourable opinion of me.

* Cajoled. † Hand-writings. ‡ Whole momentum of the globe. § Altogether. ¶ Bolt.

When the most mighty gods, by tokens, send
Such dreadful heralds to astonish us.

Cas. You are dull, Casca; and those sparks of
That should be in a Roman, you do want, [life
Or else you use not: You look pale, and gaze,
And put on fear, and cast yourself in wonder,
To see the strange impatience of the heavens:
But if you would consider the true cause,
Why all these fires, why all these gliding ghosts,
Why birds, and beasts, from quality and kind; *
Why old men fools, and children calculate †
Why all these things change, from their ordinance,
Their natures and pre-formed faculties,
To monstrous quality—why, you shall find,
That heaven hath infused them with these spirits,
To make them instruments of fear and warning,
Unto some monstrous state. Now could I, Casca, Name to thee a man most like this dreadful
night;

That thunders, lightens, opens graves, and roars
As doth the lion in the Capitol:
A man no mightier than thyself, or me,
In personal action; yet prodigious grown,
And fearful, as these strange eruptions are,

Casca. 'Tis Cesar that you mean: Is it not,
Cassius?

Cas. Let it be who it is: for Romans now
Have thieves; ‡ and lunks like to their ancestors;
But, woe the while! our fathers' minds are dead,
And we are govern'd with our mothers' spirits;
Our yoke and suzerance show us womanish.

Casca. Indeed, they say, the senators to-morrow mean to establish Cesar as a king: §
And he shall wear his crown, by sea and land,
In every place, save here in Italy.

Cas. I know where I will wear this dagger
then;

Cassius from bondage will deliver Cassius:
Therein, ye gods, you make the weak most strong;
Therein, ye gods, you tyrants do defeat:
Nor stony tower, nor walls of beaten brass,
Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit;
But life, being weary of these worldly baits,
Never lacks power to dismiss itself.
If I know this, know all the world besides,
That part of tyranny that I do bear,
I can shake off at pleasure.

Casca. So can I;

So every bondman in his own hand bears
The power to cancel his captivity.

Cas. And why should Cesar be a tyrant then?
Poor man! I know he would not be a wolf,
But that he sees the Romans are but sheep:
He were no lion, were not Romans hinds. †
Those that with haste will make a mighty fire,
Begin it with weak straws: What trash is Rome,
What rubbish, and what offal, when it serves
For the base matter to illuminate

So vile a thing as Cesar! But, O grief!
Where hast thou led me! I, perhaps, speak this Before a willing bondman; then I know
My answer must be made: But I am arm'd,
And dangers are to me ineffectual.

Casca. You speak to Casca; and to such a
man,
That is no fleering tell-tale. Hold ‡ my hand:
Be factious †, for redress of all these griefs;
And I will set this foot of mine as far,
As who goes farthest.

Cas. There's a bargain made.
Now know you, Casca, I have mov'd already
Some certain of the noblest-minded Romans,
To undergo with me an enterprise
Of honourable dangerous consequence;
And I do know, by this, they stay for me
In Pompey's porch: for now, this fearful night
There is no stir or walking in the streets;
And the complexion of the element,
Is favour'd  like the work we have in hand,
Most bloody, fiery, and most terrible.

Enter CINNA.

Casca. Stand close awhile, for here comes one in haste.

Cas. 'Tis Cinna, I do know him by his gait;
He is a friend.—Cinna, where haste you so?

Cin. To find out you: Who's that? Metellus Cimber?

Cas. No, it is Casca; one incorporate *
To our attempts. Am I not staid for, Cinna?

Cin. I am glad on't. What a fearful night is
this? †

There's two or three of us have seen strange
Cas. Am I not staid for, Cinna? Tell me.

Cin. Yes,
You are. O Cassius, if you could but win
The noble Brutus to our party—

Cas. Be you content: Good Cinna, take this paper,

And look you lay it in the praetor's chair,
Where Brutus may but find it; and throw this
In at his window: set this up with wax
Upon old Brutus' statue: all this done, Repay to Pompey's porch, where you shall find
us.

Are Decius Brutus and Trebonius there?

Cin. All but Metellus Cimber; and he's gone
To seek you at your house. Well, I will lie,
And so bestow these papers as you bade me.

Cas. That done, repay to Pompey's theatre. ‡

[Exit CINNA.]

Come, Casca, you and I will, yet, ere day,
See Brutus at his house: three parts of him
Is ours already; and the man entire,
Upon the next encounter, yields him ours.

Casca. Oh! he sits high in all the people's hearts:

And that, which would appear offence in us,
His countenance, like richest alchymy,
Will change to virtue and to worthiness.

Cas. Him, and his worth, and our great need of him,

You have right well conceited. † Let us go,
For it is after midnight; and, ere day,
We will awake him—and be sure of him.

[Exit.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The same.—BRUTUS' Orchard.

Enter BRUTUS.

Brut. What, Lucius! ho!—
I cannot, by the progress of the stars,
Give guess how near to day.—Lucius, I say!—
I would it were my fault to sleep so soundly.—
When, Lucius, when? awake, I say: What Lucius!

Enter LUCIUS.

Luc. Call'd you, my lord?
Brut. Get me a taper in my study, Lucius:
When it is lighted, come and call me here.

Luc. I will, my lord. [Exit.]

Brut. It must be by his death: and, for my part,
I know no personal cause to spurn at him,
But for the general. He would be crown'd:—
How that might change his nature, there's the question.

It is the bright day, that brings forth the adder;
And that craves wary walking. Crown him?—
That;—

And then, I grant, we put a sting in him,
That at his will he may do danger with.
The abuse of greatness is, when it disjoins
Remorse † from power: And, to speak truth of Cesar,

I have not known when his affections sway'd
More than his reason. But 'tis a common proof, ‡
That lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber upward turns his face:

* Why they deviate from nature. † Prophecy.
‡ Muscles. § Deer. ¶ Here's my hand. † Active.
 Resembles.

* Engaged in. † Conceived. ‡ An exclamation of impatience. § Mercy. ¶ Truth.

But when he once attains the utmost round,
He then unto the ladder turns his back,
Looks in the clouds, scorning the base degrees
By which he did ascend: So Cesar may;
Then, lest he may, prevent. And, since the quarrel

Will bear no colour for the thing he is,
Fashion it thus; that what he is, augmented,
Would run to these and these extremities:
And therefore, think him as a serpent's egg,
Which, hatch'd, would, as his kind, grow mis-
And kill him in the shell. [chievous;

Re-enter LUCIUS.

Luc. The taper burneth in your closet, Sir.
Searching the window for a flint, I found
This paper, thus seal'd up; and, I am sure,
It did not lie there when I went to bed.

Bru. Get you to bed again, it is not day.
Is not to-morrow, boy, the ides of March?

Luc. I know not, Sir.

Bru. Look in the calendar, and bring me word.

Luc. I will, Sir. [Exit.

Bru. The exhalations, whizzing in the air,
Give so much light, that I may read by them.

[Opens the Letter, and reads.

*Brutus, thou sleep'st; awake, and see thyself.
Shalt Rome, &c. Speak—strike—redress!*

Brutus, thou sleep'st; awake.—
Such instigations have been often dropp'd
Where I have took them up.

Shalt Rome, &c. Thus, must I piece it out;
Shall Rome stand under one man's awe? What!
Rome?

My ancestors did from the streets of Rome
The Tarquin drive, when he was call'd a king.
Speak—strike—redress!—Am I entreated then
To speak, and strike? O Rome! I make thee promise,

If the redress will follow, thou receivest
Thy full petition at the hand of Brutus!

Re-enter LUCIUS.

Luc. Sir, March is wasted fourteen days.

[Knock within.

Bru. 'Tis good. Go to the gate; somebody knocks. [Exit LUCIUS.

Since Cassius first did whet me against Cesar,
I have not slept.

Between the acting of a dreadful thing
And the first motion, all the interim is Like a phantasma, or a hideous dream:
The genius, and the mortal instruments,
Are then in council; and the state of man,
Like to a little kingdom, suffers then
The nature of an insurrection.

Re-enter LUCIUS.

Luc. Sir, 'tis your brother Cassius at the door,
Who doth desire to see you.

Bru. Is he alone?

Luc. No, Sir, there are more with him.

Bru. Do you know them?

Luc. No, Sir; their hats are pluck'd about their
And half their faces buried in their cloaks, [ears,
That by no means I may discover them
By any mark or favour.*

Bru. Let them enter. [Exit LUCIUS.

They are the faction. O conspiracy!
Sham'st thou to show thy dangerous brow by night,
When evils are most free! O! then, by day,
Where wilt thou find a cavern dark enough
To mask thy monstrous visage? Seek none,
Hide thy smiles and affability: [spracy;
For if thou path with thy native semblance on, con-
Not Erebus† itself were dim enough
To hide thee from prevention. §

Enter CASSIUS, CASCA, DECIVS, CINNA, ME-TELLUS CIMBER, and TREBONIUS.

Cas. I think we are too bold upon your rest:
Good morrow, Brutus; Do we trouble you?

* Countenance.

† Hell.

‡ Walk in thy true form.

§ Detection

Bru. I have been up this hour; awake, all
night.

Know I these men, that come along with you?

Cas. Yes, every man of them; and no man
here,

But honours you: and every one doth wish
You had but that opinion of yourself,
Which every noble Roman bears of you.

This is Trebonius.

Bru. He is welcome hither.

Cas. This Decius Brutus.

Bru. He is welcome too.

Cas. This, Casca; this, Cinna;

And this, Metellus Cimber.

Bru. They are all welcome.

What watchful cares do interpose themselves

Between your eyes and night?

Cas. Shall I entreat a word? [They whisper.

Dec. Here lies the east: Doth not the day break here?

Casca. No.

Cin. Oh! pardon, Sir, it doth; and you grey lines,

That fret the clouds, are messengers of day.

Casca. You shall confess, that you are both deceiv'd.

Here, as I point my sword, the sun arises;
Which is a great way growing on the south,
Weighing the youthful season of the year.
Some two months hence, up higher toward the north

He first presents his fire; and the high east
Stands, as the Capitol, directly here.

Bru. Give me your hands all over, one by one.

Cas. And let us swear our resolution.

Bru. No, not an oath: If not the face of men,

The sufferance of our souls, the time's abuse,—

If these be motives weak, break off betimes,

And every man hence to his idle bed;

So let high-sighted tyranny range on,

Till each man drop by lottery. But if these,

As I am sure they do, bear fire enough

To kindle cowards, and to steel with valour

The melting spirits of women; then, countrymen,

What need we any spur, but our own cause,

To prick us to redress? What other bond,

Than secret Romans, that have spoke the word,

And will not palter? And what other oath,

Than honesty to honesty engag'd?

That this shall be, or we will fall for it?

Swear priests, and cowards, and men cautious,*

Old feeble carions, and such suffering souls,

That welcome wrongs; unto bad causes swear

Such creatures as men doubt: but do not stain

The even virtue of our enterprise,

Nor the insuppressive mettle of our spirits,

To think that on our cause, or our performance,

Did need an oath; when every drop of blood

That every Roman bears, and nobly bears,

Is guilty of a several bastardy,

If he do break the smallest particle

Of any promise that hath pass'd from him.

Cas. But what of Cicero? Shall we sound him?

I think he will stand very strong with us.

Casca. Let us not leave him out.

Cin. No, by no means.

Met. Oh! let us have him; for his silver hair

Will purchase us a good opinion,

And buy men's voices to commend our deeds:

It shall be said, his judgment rul'd our hands;

Our youths, and wildness, shall no whit appear,

But all be buried in his gravity.

Bru. Oh! name him not; let us not break

with him: †

For he will never follow any thing

That other men begin.

Cas. Then leave him out.

Casca. Indeed, he is not fit.

Dec. Shall no man else be touch'd, but only

Cesar?

Cas. Decius, well urg'd:—I think it is not meet

Mark Antony so well belov'd of Cesar,

* Wary, circumspect.

† Break the matter to him

For tinctures, stains, relics,* and cognizance.
This by Calphurnia's dream is signified.

Ces. And this way have you well expounded it.

Dec. I have, when you have heard what I can say;

And know it now: The senate have concluded
To give, this day, a crown to mighty Cesar.
If you shall send them word you will not come,
Their minds may change. Besides, it were a mock

Apt to be tender'd, for some one to say,
Break up the senate till another time,
When Cesar's wife shall meet with better dreams.

If Cesar hide himself, shall they not whisper,
Lo, Cesar is afraid?

Pardon me, Cesar; for my dear, dear love
To your proceeding bids me tell you this;
And reason to my love is liable.†

Ces. How foolish do your fears seem now, Calphurnia!

I am ashamed I did yield to them.—
Give me my robe, for I will go:—

Enter Publius, Brutus, Ligarius, Metellus, Casca, Trebonius, and Cinna.

And look where Publius is come to fetch me.

Pub. Good morrow, Cesar.

Ces. Welcome, Publius.

What, Brutus, are you stirr'd so early too?
Good morrow, Casca. Caius Ligarius,
Cesar was ne'er so much your enemy,
As that sameague which hath made you lean.—
What is't o'clock?

Br. Cesar, 'tis strucken eight.

Ces. I thank you for your pains and courtesy.

Enter ANTONY.

See! Antony, that revels long o' nights,
Is notwithstanding up:—

Good morrow, Antony.

Ant. So to most noble Cesar.

Ces. Bid them prepare within:—

I am to blame to be thus waited for.—
Now, Cinna—Now, Metellus!—What, Trebonius!
I have an hour's talk in store for you;
Remember that you call on me to-day:
Be near me, that I may remember you.

Treb. Cesar, I will:—and so near will I be,
That your best friends shall wish I had been farther. [Aside.]

Ces. Good friends, go in, and taste some wine
with me;
And we, like friends, will straightway go together.

Br. That every like is not the same, O Cesar,
The heart of Brutus yearns; to think upon!
[Exit.]

SCENE III.—The same.—A street near the Capitol.

Enter ARTEMIDORUS, reading a Paper.

Art. Cesar, beware of Brutus; take heed of Cassius, come not near Casca; have an eye on Cinna; trust not Trebonius; mark well Metel-lus Cimber; Decius Brutus loves thee not; thou hast wronged Caius Ligarius. There is but one mind in all these men, and it is bent against Cesar. If thou be'st not immortal, look about you: Security gives way to conspiracy.
The mighty gods defend thee! Thy lover, §

ARTEMIDORUS.

Here will I stand, till Cesar pass along,
And as a sutor will I give him this.
My heart laments, that virtue cannot live
Out of the teeth of emulation. I
If thou read this, O Cesar, thou may'st live;
If not, the fates with traitors do contrive. [Exit.]

* As to a saint, for reliques. † Subordinate.
‡ Grievous. § Friend. ¶ Envy.

SCENE IV.—The same.—Another part of the same Street before the House of Brutus.

Enter PORTIA and LUCIUS.

Por. I prythee, boy, run to the senate house;
Stay not to answer me, but get thee gone:
Why dost thou stay?

Luc. To know my errand, madam.

Por. I would have had thee there, and here
again,

Ere I can tell thee what thou should'st do there.—
O constancy, be strong upon my side!
Set a huge mountain 'tween my heart and
tongue!

I have a man's mind, but a woman's might.
How hard it is for women to keep counsel!—
Art thou here yet?

Luc. Madam, what should I do?

Run to the Capitol, and nothing else?
And so return to you, and nothing else?

Por. Yes, bring me word, boy, if thy lord
look well,

For he went sickly forth: And take good note,
What Cesar doth, what suitors press to him.

Hark, boy! what noise is that?

Luc. I hear none, madam.

Por. Prythee, listen well;
I heard a bustling rumour like a fray,
And the wind brings it from the Capitol.

Luc. Sooth, madam, I hear nothing.

Enter SOOTHSAYER.

Por. Come hither, fellow:

Which way hast thou been?

Sooth. At mine own house, good lady.

Por. What is't o'clock?

Sooth. About the ninth hour, lady.

Por. Is Cesar yet gone to the Capitol?

Sooth. Madam, not yet; I go to take my stand,
To see him pass on to the Capitol.

Por. Thou hast some suit to Cesar, hast thou
not?

Sooth. That I have, lady: if it will please
Cesar

To be so good to Cesar, as to hear me,
I shall beseech him to bestow himself.

Por. Why, knowest thou any harm's intended towards him?

Sooth. None that I know will be, much that I fear may chance.

Good-morrow to you. Here the street is narrow:
The throng that follows Cesar at the heels
Of senators, of praetors, common sutors,
Will crowd a feeble man almost to death:
I'll get me to a place more void, and there
Speak to great Cesar as he comes along. [Exit.]

Por. I must go in.—Ah me! how weak a thing
The heart of woman is! O Brutus!

The heavens speed thee in thine enterprise!
Sure, the boy heard me:—Brutus hath a suit,

That Cesar will not grant.—Oh! I grow faint:—
Run, Lucius, and commend me to my lord;

Say, I am merry: come to me again,
And bring me word what he doth say to thee
[Exit.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The same.—The Capitol; the Senate sitting.

A Crowd of People in the Street leading to the Capitol; among them ARTEMIDORUS, and the SOOTHSAYER. Flourish. Enter
CESAR, BRUTUS, CASSIUS, CASCA, DECIVS, METELLUS, TREBONIUS, CINNA, ANTONY,
LEPIDUS, POPILIUS, PUBLIUS, and others.

Ces. The Ides of March are come.

Sooth. Ay, Cesar; but not gone.

Art. Hail, Cesar! Read this schedule.

Dec. Trebonius doth desire you to o'er-read
At your best leisure, this his humble suit.

Scene I.

JULIUS CESAR.

39

Art. O Cesar, read mine first; for mine's a suit
That touches Cesar nearer: Read it, great Cesar.
Ces. What touches us ourself, shall be last serv'd.

Art. Delay not, Cesar; read it instantly.

Ces. What, is the fellow mad?

Pub. Sirrah, give place.

Cas. What, urge you your petitions in the street?
Come to the Capitol.

Cesar enters the Capitol, the rest following.
All the SENATORS rise.

Pop. I wish you enterprise to-day may thrive.

Cas. What enterprise, Popilius?

Pop. Fare you well. [Advances to CESAR.]

Brut. What said Popilius Lena?

Cas. He wish'd, to-day our enterprise might I fear our purpose is discovered. [thrive.]

Brut. Look, how he makes to Cesar: Mark him.

Cas. Casca, be sudden, for we fear prevention.—

Brutus, what shall be done? If this be known, Cassius on Cesar never shall turn back, for I will slay myself.

Brut. Cassius, be constant:

Popilius Lena speaks not of our purposes; for, look, he smiles, and Cesar doth not change.

Cas. Trebonius knows his time; for, look you, Brutus,

He draws Mark Antony out of the way.

[Exit ANTONY and TREBONIUS. CESAR and the SENATORS take their Seats.]

Dec. Where is Metellus Cimber? Let him go, And presently prefer his suit to Cesar.

Brut. He is address'd: * press near and second him.

Cin. Casca, you are the first that rears your hand.

Cas. Are we all ready? what is now amiss, That Cesar and his senate must redress?

Met. Most high, most mighty, and most puissant Cesar,

Metellus Cimber throws before thy seat An humble heart. — [Kneeling.]

Cas. I must prevent thee, Cimber.

These couchings, and these lowly courtesies, Might fire the blood of ordinary men; And turn pre-ordnance, and first decree, Into the law of children. Be not fond To think that Cesar bears such rebel blood, That will be thaw'd from the true quality With that which melteth fools; I mean, sweet words,

Low-crook'd curties, and base spaniel fawning. Thy brother by decree is banished;

It thou dost bend, and pray, and fawn for him, I spurn thee like a cur out of my way.

Know, Cesar doth not wrong; nor, without cause, Will he be satisfied.

Met. Is there no voice more worthy than my own,

To sound more sweetly in great Cesar's ear, For the repealing of my banish'd brother?

Brut. I kiss thy hand, but not in flattery, Cesar;

Desiring thee, that Publius Cimber may Have an immediate freedom of repeal.

Ces. What, Brutus!

Cas. Pardon, Cesar; Cesar, pardon: As low as to thy foot doth Cassius fall, To beg enfranchisement for Publius Cimber.

Ces. I could be well mov'd, if I were as you; If I could pray to move, prayers would move me:

But I am constant as the northern star, Of whose true-fix'd and resting quality

There is no fellow in the firmament. The skies are painted with unnumber'd sparks,

They are all fire, and every one doth shine; But there's but one in all doth hold his place:

So, in the world; 'Tis furnish'd well with men

* Ready.

And men are flesh and blood, and apprehensive; *

Yet, in the number, I do know but one That unassailable holds on his rank, Unshak'd of motion: † and that I am he, Let me a little show it, even in this; That I was constant Cimber should be banish'd And constant do remain to keep him so.

Cin. O Cesar—

Ces. Hence! Wilt thou lift Olympus?

Dec. Great Cesar,—

Ces. Doth not Brutus bootless kneel?

Casca. Speak, hands, for me.

[Casca stabs CESAR in the neck. CESAR catches hold of his arm. He is then stabbed by several other Conspirators, and at last by MARCUS BRUTUS.]

Ces. Et tu, Brute?—Then, fall, Cesar.

[Dies. The Senators and People retire in confusion.]

Cin. Liberty! Freedom! Tyranny is dead!—Run hence, proclaim, cry it about the streets.

Cas. Some to the common pulpits, and cry out, Liberty, freedom, and enfranchisement!

Brut. People, and senators! be not affrighted; Fly not; stand still:—ambition's debt is paid.

Casca. Go to the pulpit, § Brutus.

Dec. And Cassius too.

Brut. Where's Publius?

Cin. Here, quite confounded with this mutiny.

Met. Stand fast together, lest some friend of Cesar's

Should chance—

Brut. Talk not of standing—Publius, good cheer;

There is no harm intended to your person, Nor to no Roman else: so tell them, Publius.

Cas. And leave us, Publius; lest that the people, [chief,

Rushing on us, should do your age some mis-

Brut. Do so;—and let no man abide this deed, But we the doers; ‡

Enter TREBONIUS.

Cas. Where's Antony?

Tre. Fled to his house amaz'd: Men, wives, and children, stare, cry out, and run, As it were doom-day.

Brut. Fates! we will know your pleasures:—That we shall die, we know; 'tis but the time, And drawing days out, that men stand upon.

Cas. Why, he that cuts off twenty years of life Cuts off so many years of fearing death.

Brut. Grant that, and then is death a benefit: So are we Cesar's friends, that have abridg'd

His time of fearing death.—Stoop, Romans, stoop, And let us bathe our hands in Cesar's blood

Up to the elbows, and besmear our swords: Then walk we forth, even to the market-place;

And, waving our red weapons o'er our heads, Let's all cry, Peace! Freedom! and Liberty!

Cas. Stoop then, and wash:—How many ages hence,

Shall this our lofty scene be acted o'er, In states unborn, and accents yet unknown!

Brut. How many times shall Cesar bleed in sport,

That now on Pompey's basis lies along, No worthier than the dust!

Cas. So oft as that shall be, So often shall the knot of us be call'd: The men that gave our country liberty.

Dec. What, shall we forth?

Cas. Ay, every man away: Brutus shall lead; and we will grace his heels

With the most boldest and best hearts of Rome.

Enter a SERVANT.

Brut. Soft, who comes here? A friend of Antony's.

* Capable of apprehending. † By entreaty.

‡ And thou, Brutus: § In the forum, the place of harangue. ¶ Steep; as washed with gold.

Serv. Thus, Brutus, did my master bid me kneel;

Thus did Mark Antony bid me fall down;
And, being prostrate, thus he bade me say:
"Brutus is noble, wise, valiant, and honest;
"Cesar was mighty, bold, royal, and loving;
"Say, I love Brutus, and I honour him;
"Say, I fear'd Cesar, honour'd him, and lov'd
"If Brutus will vouchsafe, that Antony
"May safely come to him, and be resolv'd
"How Cesar hath deceiv'd to lie in death,
"Mark Antony shall not love Cesar dead.
"So well as Brutus living; but will follow
"The fortunes and affairs of noble Brutus,
"Thorough the hazards of this untrod state,
"With all true faith." So says my master Antony.

Bru. Thy master is a wise and valiant Roman;
I never thought him worse.
Tell him, so please him, come unto this place,
He shall be satisfied; and, by my honour,
Depart untouched.

Serv. I'll fetch him presently. [Exit SERV.]

Bru. I know, that we shall have him well to friend.

Cas. I wish we may; but yet have I a mind,
That tears him much; and my misgiving still
Falls shrewdly to the purpose.

Re-enter ANTONY.

Bru. But here comes Antony.—Welcome, Mark Antony.

Ant. O mighty Cesar! Dost thou he so low?
Are all thy conquests, glories, triumphs, spoils,
Shrunk to this little measure? Fare thee well.—
I know not, gentlemen, what you intend,
Who else must be let blood, who else is rank:
* If I myself, there is no hour so fit
As Cesar's death hour; nor no instrument
Of half that worth, as those your swords, made rich

With the most noble blood of all this world.
I do beseech ye, if you bear me hard,
Now, whilst your purpled hands do reek and smoke,

Fulfill your pleasure. Live a thousand years,
I shall not find myself so apt to die:
No place will please me so, no mean of death,
As here by Cesar, and by you cut off,
The choice and master spirits of this age.

Bru. O Antony! beg not your death of us.
Though now we must appear bloody and cruel,
As, by our hands, and this our present act,
You see we do; yet see you but our hands;
And this the bleeding business they have done:
Our hearts you see not, they are pitiful;
And pity to the general wrong of Rome
(As fire drives out fire, so pity, pity)
Hath done this deed on Cesar. For your part,
To you our swords have leaden points, Mark
Antony:

Our aims, in strength of malice, and our hearts,
Of brothers' temper, do receive you in
With all kind love, good thoughts, and reverence.
Cas. Your voice shall be as strong as any man's,
In the disposing of new dignities.

Bru. Only be patient, till we have appeas'd
The multitude, beside themselves with fear,
And then we will deliver you the cause,
Why I, that did love Cesar when I struck him,
Have thus proceeded.

Ant. I doubt not of your wisdom.
Let each man render me his bloody hand:
First, Marcus Brutus, will I shake with you;—
Next, Cais Cassius, do I take your hand;—
Now, Decius Brutus, yours;—now yours, Metellus:

Yours, Cinna;—and, my valiant Casca, yours;—
Though last, not least in love, yours, good Trebonius.

Gentlemen all,—alas! what shall I say?
My credit now stands on a slippery ground,

That one of two bad ways you must concert me,
Either a coward or a flatterer.—

That I did love thee, Cesar, oh! 'tis true;
If then thy spirit look upon us now,
Shall it not grieve thee, dearer than thy death,
To see thy Antony making his peace,
Shaking the bloody fingers of thy toes,
Most noble! in the presence of thy corse?
Had I as many eyes as thou hast wounds,
Weeping as fast as they stream forth thy blood,
It would become me better, than to close
In terms of friendship with thine enemies.
Pardon me, Julius!—Here wast thou bay'd, brave hart:

Here didst thou fall; and here thy hunters stand
Sign'd in thy spoil, and crimson'd in thy kith. *
O world! thou wast the forest to this heart;
And this, indeed, O world, the heart of thee.
How like a deer, stricken by many princes,
Dost thou here lie?

Cas. Mark Antony,—

Ant. Pardon me, Cais Cassius:

The enemies of Cesar shall say this;
Then, in a friend, it is cold modesty.

Cas. I blame you not for praising Cesar so;
But what compact mean you to have with us?
Will you be prick'd in number of our friends;
Or shall we on, and not depend on you?

Ant. Therefore I took your hands; but was indeed,

Sway'd from the point, by looking down on Cesar.
Friends am I with you all, and love you all;
Upon this hope, that you shall give me reasons,
Why, and wherein, Cesar was dangerous.

Bru. Or else were this a savage spectacle:
Our reasons are so full of good regard,
That were you, Antony, the son of Cesar,
You should be satisfied.

Ant. That's all I seek:

And am moreover suitor, that I may
Produce his body to the market-place;
And in the pulpit, as becomes a friend,
Speak in the order of his funeral.

Bru. You shall, Mark Antony.

Cas. Brutus, a word with you.
You know not what you do; Do not consent,
That Antony speak in his funeral:
Know you how much the people may be mov'd
By that which he will utter! Aside.

Bru. By your pardon,—
I will myself into the pulpit first,
And show the reason of our Cesar's death:
What Antony shall speak, I will protest
He speaks by leave and by permission;
And that we are contented Cesar shall
Have all true rites, and lawful ceremonies.
It shall advantage more, than do us wrong.

Cas. I know not what may fall; I like it not.

Bru. Mark Antony, here, take you Cesar's body.
You shall not in your funeral speech blame us,
But speak all good you can devise of Cesar;
And say, you do't by our permission;
Else shall you not have any hand at all
About his funeral: And you shall speak
In the same pulpit whereto I am going,
After my speech is ended.

Ant. Be it so;

I do desire no more.

Bru. Prepare the body then, and follow us.
[Exit all but ANTONY]

Ant. O, pardon me, thou piece of bleeding
earth,

That I am meek and gentle with these butchers!
Thou art the ruins of the noblest man
That ever liv'd in the tide of times.

Woe to the hand that shed this costly blood!
Over thy wounds now do I prophesy,
(Which, like dumb mouths, do ope their ruby lips)
To beg the voice and utterance of my tongue—
A curse shall light upon the limbs of men;
Domestic fury, and fierce civil strife,
Shall cumber all the parts of Italy;
Blood and destruction shall be to us use.

* Grown too powerful for the public safety.
† Though strong in the deed just performed.

* Suppose me. † Used by old writers for death.

And dreadful objects so familiar,
That mothers shall but smile, when they behold
Their infants quarter'd with the hands of war;
All pity chok'd with custom of fell deeds:
And Cesar's spirit, ranging for revenge,
With Ate by his side, come hot from hell,
Shall in these confines, with a monarch's voice,
Cry Havoc,* and let slip the dogs of war; †
That this foul deed shall smell above the earth
With carrion men, groaning for burial.

Enter a SERVANT.

You serve Octavius Cesar, do you not?

Serv. I do, Mark Antony.

Ant. Cesar did write for him to come to Rome.

Serv. He did receive his letters, and is coming;

And bid me say to you by word of mouth.—

O Cesar!— [Seeing the Body.]

Ant. Thy heart is big, get thee apart and weep.
Passion, I see, is catching; for mine eyes,
Seeing those beads of sorrow stand in thine,
Began to water. Is thy master coming?

Serv. He lies to-night within seven leagues of Rome.

Ant. Post back with speed, and tell him what hath chanc'd:

Here is a mourning Rome, a dangerous Rome,
No Rome of safety for Octavius yet;
Hie hence, and tell him so. Yet, stay a while;
Thou shalt not back, till I have borne this corse
Into the market-place: there shall I try,
In my oration, how the people take
The cruel issue of these bloody men;
According to the which, thou shalt discourse
To young Octavius of the state of things.
Lend me your hand.

[Exeunt with CESAR'S Body.]

SCENE II.—The same.—The Forum.

Enter BRUTUS and CASSIUS, and a throng of CITIZENS.

Cit. We will be satisfied; let us be satisfied.

Bru. Then follow me, and give me audience,
friends.—

Cassius, go you into the other street,
And part the numbers.— [here;

Those that will hear me speak, let them stay
Those that will follow Cassius, go with him;
And public reasons shall be rendered
Of Cesar's death.

1 Cit. I will hear Brutus speak.

2 Cit. I will hear Cassius, and compare their reasons.

When severally we hear them rendered.

[Exit CASSIUS, with some of the CITIZENS.]

BRUTUS goes into the Rostrum.

3 Cit. The noble Brutus is ascended: Silence!
Bru. Be patient till the last.

Romans, countrymen, and lovers! hear me for my cause, and be silent, that you may hear: believe me for mine honour, and have respect to mine honour, that you may believe: censure me in your wisdom, and awake your senses, that you may the better judge. If there be any in this assembly, any dear friend of Cesar's, to him I say, that Brutus' love to Cesar was no less than his. If then that friend demand, why Brutus rose against Cesar, this is my answer:—Not that I loved Cesar less, but that I loved Rome more.
Had you rather Cesar were living, and die all slaves, than that Cesar were dead, to live all freemen? As Cesar loved me, I weep for him; As he was fortunate, I rejoice at it; as he was va-hant, I honour him; but, as he was ambitious,
I slew him: There are tears for his love; joy for his fortune; honour for his valour; and death for his ambition. Who is here so base, that would be a bondman? If any, speak; for him have I offended. Who is here so vile that would not love his country? If any, speak; for him have

I offended. I pause for a reply.

Cit. None, Brutus, none.

[Several speaking at once.]

Bru. Then none have I offended. I have done no more to Cesar, than you should do to Brutus. The question of his death is enrolled in the Capitol: his glory not extenuated wherein he was worthy; nor his offences enforced, to which he suffered death.

Enter ANTONY and others with CESAR'S Body.

Here comes his body, mourned by Mark Antony:
who, though he had no hand in his death, shall receive the benefit of his dying, a place in the commonwealth; as which of you shall not? With this I depart; That, as I slew my best lover* for the good of Rome, I have the same dagger for myself, when it shall please my country to need my death.

Cit. Live, Brutus, live! live!

1 Cit. Bring him with triumph home unto his house.

2 Cit. Give him a statue with his ancestors.

3 Cit. Let him be Cesar.

4 Cit. Cesar's better parts shall now be crown'd in Brutus.

1 Cit. We'll bring him to his house with shouts and clamours.

Bru. My countrymen,—

2 Cit. Peace! silence! Brutus speaks.

1 Cit. Peace, ho!

Bru. Good countrymen, let me depart alone,
And, for my sake, stay here with Antony:
Do grace to Cesar's corse, and grace his speech
Tending to Cesar's glories; which Mark Antony,
By our permission, is allow'd to make.

I do entreat you, not a man depart,
Save I alone, till Antony have spoken. [Exit.]

1 Cit. Stay, ho! and let us hear Mark Antony.

3 Cit. Let him go up into the public chair;
We'll hear him:—Noble Antony, go up.

Ant. For Brutus' sake, I am beholden to you.

4 Cit. What does he say of Brutus?

3 Cit. He says, for Brutus' sake,

He finds himself beholden to us all.

4 Cit. 'Twere best he speak no harm of Brutus
here.

1 Cit. This Cesar was a tyrant.

3 Cit. Nay, that's certain:

We are bless'd, that Rome is rid of him.

2 Cit. Peace; let us hear what Antony can say.

Ant. You gentle Romans,—

Cit. Peace, ho! let us hear him.

Ant. Friends, Romans, countrymen, lend me your ears;

I come to bury Cesar, not to praise him.
The evil that men do lives after them;
The good is oft interred with their bones;
So let it be with Cesar. The noble Brutus
Hath told you Cesar was ambitious:
If it were so, it was a grievous fault,
And grievously hath Cesar answer'd it.
Here, under leave of Brutus and the rest,
*[For Brutus is an honourable man;
So are they all, all honourable men;]*
Come I to speak in Cesar's funeral.
He was my friend, faithful and just to me:
But Brutus says he was ambitious;
And Brutus is an honourable man.
He hath brought many captives home to Rome,
Whose ransoms did the general coffers fill:
Did this in Cesar seem ambitious?
When that the poor have cried, Cesar hath wept:
Ambition should be made of sterner stuff:
Yet Brutus says he was ambitious;
And Brutus is an honourable man.
You all did see that, on the Lupercal,
I thrice presented him a kingly crown,
Which he did thrice refuse. Was this ambition?
Yet Brutus says he was ambitious;

* The signal for giving no quarter.

† Fire, sword, and famine.

* Friend

And sure he is an honourable man.

I speak not to disprove what Brutus spoke,
But here I am to speak what I do know.
You all did love him once, not without cause;
What cause withholds you then to mourn for him?
O judgment, thou art fled to brutish beasts,
And men have lost their reason!—Bear with me;
My heart is in the coffin there with Caesar,
And I must pause till it come back to me.

Cit. Methinks, there is much reason in his sayings.

Cit. If thou consider rightly of the matter, Caesar has had great wrong.

3 Cit. Has he, masters?

I fear there will a worse come in his place.

4 Cit. Mark'd ye his words? He would not take the crown;

Therefore, 'tis certain he was not ambitious.

1 Cit. If it be found so, some will dear abide it.
2 Cit. Poor soul! his eyes are red as mine with weeping.

3 Cit. There's not a nobler man in Rome, than Antony.

4 Cit. Now mark him, he begins again to speak.

Ant. But yesterday, the world of Caesar might have stood against the world: now lies he there, And none so poor to do him reverence.

O masters! if I were dispos'd to stir

Your hearts and minds to mutiny and rage,

I should do Brutus wrong, and Cassius wrong,

Who, you all know, are honourable men:

I will not do them wrong; I rather choose

To wrong the dead, to wrong myself, and you,

Than I will wrong such honourable men.

But here's a parchment, with the seal of Caesar;

I found it in his closet, 'tis his will:

Let but the commons hear this testament,

(Which, pardon me, I do not mean to read),

And they would go and kiss dead Caesar's wounds,

And dip their napkins in his sacred blood,

Yea, beg a hair of him for memory,

And, dying, mention it within their wills,

Bequeathing it as a rich legacy

Unto their issue.

4 Cit. We'll hear the will: Read it, Mark Antony.

Cit. The will! the will! we will hear Caesar's will.

Ant. Have patience, gentle friends, I must not read it;

It is not meet you know how Caesar lov'd you.

You are not wood, you are not stones, but men;

And, being men, hearing the will of Caesar,

It will inflame you, it will make you mad;

'Tis good you know not that you are his heirs;

For, if you should, oh! what would come of it?

4 Cit. Read the will: we will hear it, Antony;

You shall read us the will, Caesar's will.

Ant. Will you be patient? Will you stay a

I have o'er-shot myself to tell you of it. [while?]

I fear I wrong the honourable men,

Whose daggers have stabb'd Caesar: I do fear it.

4 Cit. They were traitors: Honourable men!

Cit. The will! the testament!

2 Cit. They were villains, murderers: The will! read the will!

Ant. You will compel me then to read the will?

Then make a ring about the corse of Caesar,

And let me show you him that made the will.

Shall I descend? And will you give me leave?

Cit. Come down.

2 Cit. Descend.

[He comes down from the Pulpit.]

3 Cit. You shall have leave.

4 Cit. A ring; stand round.

1 Cit. Stand from the hearse, stand from the body.

2 Cit. Room for Antony;—most noble Antony.

Ant. Nay, press not so upon me; stand far off.

Cit. Stand back! room! hear back!

* All are too proud to shew him any respect.
† Said more than I intended.

Ant. If you have tears, prepare to shed them now.

You all do know this mantle: I remember

The first time ever Caesar put it on:

'Twas on a summer's evening, in his tent,

That day he overcame the Nervii:—

Look, in this place ran Cassius' dagger through:

See, what a rent the envious Casca made:

Through this, the well-beloved Brutus stabb'd,

And, as he pluck'd his cursed steel away,

Mark how the blood of Caesar follow'd it;

As rushing out of doors, to be resolv'd

If Brutus so unkindly knock'd or no;

(For Brutus, as you know, was Caesar's angel)

Judge, O you gods, how dearly Caesar lov'd him!

This was the most unkindest cut of all:

For, when the noble Caesar saw him stab,

Ingratitude, more strong than traitor's arms,

Quite vanquish'd him: then burst his mighty heart;

And, in his mantle muffling up his face,

Even at the base of Pompey's statue*—

Which all the while ran blood,† great Caesar fell.

Oh! what a fall was there, my countrymen!

Then I, and you, and all of us fell down,

Whilst bloody treason flourish'd over us.

Oh! now you weep: and I perceive you feel

The dint of pity: these are gracious drops.

Kind souls, what, weep you, when you but behold

Our Caesar's vesture wounded? Look you here,

Here is himself, marr'd as you see, with traitors.

1 Cit. O piteous spectacle!

2 Cit. O noble Caesar!

3 Cit. O weeful day!

4 Cit. O traitors, villains!

1 Cit. O most bloody sight!

2 Cit. We will be revenged: revenge; about,—seek,—burn,—fire,—kill,—slay!—let not a traitor live.

Ant. Stay, countrymen.

1 Cit. Peace there.—Hear the noble Antony.

2 Cit. We'll hear him, we'll follow him, we'll die with him.

Ant. Good friends, sweet friends, let me not stir you up

To such a sudden flood of mutiny.

They that have done this deed are honourable;

What private griefs they have, alas, I know not,

That made them do it: they are wise and honourable.

And will no doubt, with reasons answer you,

I come not, friends, to steal away your hearts;

I am no orator, as Brutus is:

But, as you know me all, a plain blunt man,

That love my friend: and that they know full well.

That gave me public leave to speak of him.

For I have neither wit, nor words, nor worth,

Action, nor utterance, nor the power of speech,

To stir men's blood: I only speak right on;

I tell you that, which you yourselves do know;

Show you sweet Caesar's wounds, poor, poor

dumb mouths,

And bid them speak for me. But were I Brutus,

And Brutus Antony, there were an Antony

Would ruffle up your spirits, and put a tongue

In every wound of Caesar, that should move

The stones of Rome to rise and mutiny.

Cit. We'll mutiny.

1 Cit. We'll burn the house of Brutus.

3 Cit. Away then, come, seek the conspirators.

Ant. Yet hear me, countrymen; yet hear me speak.

Cit. Peace, ho! Hear Antony, most noble Antony.

Ant. Why, friends, you go to do you know not what:

Wherein hath Caesar thus deserv'd your loves?

Alas, you know not:—I must tell you then:—

You have forgot the will I told you of.

* Statues for statues, is common among the old writers.
† Caesar's blood fell upon the statue, and trickled from it.
‡ Wrongs.

Cit. Most true ;—the will ;—let's stay, and hear the will.

Ant. Here is the will, and under Cesar's seal. To every Roman citizen he gives,
To every several man, seventy-five drachmas.*

2 Cit. Most noble Cesar!—we'll revenge his death.

3 Cit. O royal Cesar!

Ant. Hear me with patience.

Cit. Peace, ho!

Ant. Moreover, he hath left you all his walks, His private arbours, and new-planted orchards, On this side Tyber; he hath left them you, And to your heirs for ever; common pleasures,† To walk abroad, and recreate yourselves. Here was a Cesar: When comes such another?

1 Cit. Never, never:—Come, away, away: We'll burn his body in the holy place. And with the brands fire the traitors' houses. Take up the body.

2 Cit. Go, fetch fire.

3 Cit. Pluck down benches.

4 Cit. Pluck down forums, windows, any thing. [Exit CITIZENS, with the Body.]

Ant. Now let it work; Mischief, thou art afoot, Take thou what course thou wilt!—How now, fellow?

Enter a SERVANT.

Serv. Sir, Octavius is already come to Rome.

Ant. Where is he?

Serv. He and Lepidus are at Cesar's house.

Ant. And thither will I straight to visit him: He comes upon a wish: Fortune is merry, And in this mood will give us any thing.

Serv. I heard him say, Brutus and Cassius Are rid like madmen through the gates of Rome.

Ant. Belike, they had some notice of the people, How I had mov'd them. Bring me to Octavius. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—The same.—A street.

Enter CINNA, the Poet.

Cin. I dreamt to night, that I did feast with Cesar,
And things unlook'd charge my fantasy: § I have no will to wander forth of doors,
Yet something leads me forth.

Enter CITIZENS.

1 Cit. What is your name?

2 Cit. Whither are you going?

3 Cit. Where do you dwell?

4 Cit. Are you a married man, or a bachelor?

2 Cit. Answer every man directly.

1 Cit. Ay, and briefly.

4 Cit. Ay, and wisely.

3 Cit. Ay, and truly, you were best.

Cin. What is my name? Whither am I going? Where do I dwell? Am I a married man, or a bachelor? Then to answer every man directly, and briefly, wisely, and truly. Wisely I say, I am a bachelor.

2 Cit. That's as much as to say, they are fools that marry:—You'll bear me a bang for that, I fear. Proceed; directly.

Cin. Directly, I am going to Cesar's funeral.

1 Cit. As a friend, or an enemy?

Cin. As a friend.

2 Cit. That matter is answered directly.

4 Cit. For your dwelling,—briefly.

Cin. Briefly, I dwell by the Capitol.

3 Cit. Your name, Sir, truly.

Cin. Truly, my name is Cinna.

1 Cit. Tear him to pieces, he's a conspirator.

Cin. I am Cinna the poet, I am Cinna the poet.

4 Cit. Tear him for his bad verses, tear him for his bad verses.

2 Cit. It is no matter, his name's Cinna;

* A drachma is 7d. sterling.—2l. 3s. 4d. † Pleasure-grounds. ‡ His coming is the very thing I wished for. § My mind is oppressed with ill-omens.

pluck but his name out of his heart, and turn him going.

3 Cit. Tear him, tear him. Come, brands, ho! fire-brands. To Brutus', to Cassius'; burn all. Some to Decius' house, and some to Casca's; some to Ligarius': away; go. [Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The same.—A room in ANTONY'S House.

ANTONY, OCTAVIUS, and LEPIDUS, seated at a Table.

Ant. These many then shall die; their names are prick'd.

Oct. Your brother too must die; Consent you, Lepidus?

Lep. I do consent.

Oct. Prick * him down, Antony.

Lep. Upon condition Publius shall not live,

Who is your sister's son, Mark Antony.

Ant. He shall not live; look, with a spot I damn† him.

But, Lepidus, go you to Cesar's house; Fetch the will hither, and we will determine How to cut off some charge in legacies.

Lep. What, shall I find you here?

Oct. Or here, or at

The Capitol. [Exit LEPIDUS.]

Ant. This is a slight unmeritable man, Meet to be sent on errands: Is it fit, The three-fold world divided, he should stand One of the three to share it?

Oct. So you thought him; And took his voice who should be prick'd to die, In our black sentence and proscription.

Ant. Octavius, I have seen more days than you; And though we lay these honours on this man; To ease ourselves of dreis slanderous loads, He shall but bear them as the ass bears gold; To groan and sweat under the business, Either led or driven, as we point the way, And, having brought our treasure where we will, Then take we down his load, and turn him off, Like to the empty ass, to shake his ears, And graze in commons.

Oct. You may do your will; But he's a tired and valiant soldier.

Ant. So is my horse, Octavius; and, for that, I do appoint him store of provender. It is a creature that I teach to fight, To wind, to stop, to run directly on; His corporal motion govern'd by my spirit. And, in some taste, is Lepidus but so; He must be taught, and train'd, and bid go forth; A barren-spirited fellow; one that feeds On objects, arts, and imitations; Which, out of use, and stall'd by other men, Begin his fashion: Do not talk of him, But as a property.‡ And now, Octavius, Listen great things:—Brutus and Cassius, Are levying powers: we must straight make head; Therefore, let our alliance be combin'd, Our best friends made, and our best means stretch'd out;

And let us presently go sit in council, How covert matters may be best disclos'd, And open perils smrest answered.

Oct. Let us do so: for we are at the stake, And bay'd § about with many enemies; And soize, that smile, have in their hearts, I fear Millions of mischief. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—Before BRUTUS' Tent, in the Camp near Sardis.

Drum.—Enter BRUTUS, LUCILIUS, LUCIUS, and Soldiers: TITINIUS and PINDARUS meeting them.

Bru. Stand hence

* Note. † Condemn. ‡ As a thing at our dispose § Surrounded.

Luc. Give the word, ho ! and stand.

Br. What now, Lucius ? is Cassius near ?

Luc. He is at hand ; and Pindarus is come
To do you salutation from his master.

[PINDARUS gives a letter to BRUTUS.
Br. He greets me well.—Your master, Pin-
In his own change, or by ill officers, Pinda-
Hath given me some worthy cause to wish
Things done, undone : but, if he be at hand,
I shall be satisfied.

Pin. I do not doubt

But that my noble master will appear
Such as he is, full of regard, and honour.

Br. He is not doubted.—A word, Lucius :
How he received you, let me be resoly'd.*

Luc. With contest, and with respect enough ;
But not with such familiar instances,
Nor with such free and friendly conference
As he hath used of old.

Br. Thou hast describ'd
A hot friend cooling : Ever note, Lucilius,
When love begins to sicken and decay,
It useth an enforced ceremony.

There are no tricks in plain and simple faith :
But hollow men, like horses hot at hand,
Make gallant show and promise of their mettle :
But when they should endure the bloody spur,
They fall their crests, and like deceitful jades
Sink in the trial. Comes his army on ?

Luc. They mean this night in Sardis to be quarter'd :

The greater part, the horse in general,
Are come with Cassius. [March within.

Br. Hark, he is arriv'd :—
March gently on to meet him.

Enter CASSIUS and Soldiers.

Cas. Stand, ho !

Br. Stand, ho ! Speak the word aloud.

Within. Stand.

Within. Stand.

Cas. Most noble brother, you have done me wrong

Br. Judge me, you gods ! Wrong I mine enemies ?

And, if not so, how should I wrong a brother ?
Cas. Brutus, this sober form of yours hides
And when you do them— [wroongs ;

Br. Cassius, be content,
Speak your griefs softly, I do know you well.—
Before the eyes of both our armies here,
Which should perceive nothing but love from us,
Let us not wrangle : End them move away ;
Then in my tent, Cassius, enlarge your griefs,
And I will give you audience.

Cas. Pindarus,
Bid our commanders lead their charges off
A little from this ground.

Br. Lucius, do the like ; and let no man
Come to our tent till we have done our conference.

Let Lucius and Titinius guard our door.
[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Within the tent of BRUTUS.—
LUCIUS and TITINIUS at some distance from it.

Enter BRUTUS and CASSIUS.

Cas. That you have wrong'd me, doth appear in this :

You have condemn'd and noted [†] Lucius Pella,
For taking bribes here of the Sardians ;
Wherein, my letters, praying on his side,
Because I knew the man, were slighted off.

Br. You wrong'd yourself, to write in such a case.

Cas. In such a time as this, it is not meet
That every nice [‡] offence should bear his comment.

Br. Let me tell you, Cassius, you yourself

Are much condemn'd to have an itching palm.
To sell and mart your offices for gold,
To undeservers.

Cas. I an itching palm ?

You know that you are Brutus that speak this,
Or, by the gods, this speech were else your last.

Br. The name of Cassius honours this corruption,

And chastisement doth therefore hide his head.

Cas. Chastisement !

Br. Remember March, the ides of March remember !

Did not great Julius bleed for justice' sake ?
What villain touch'd his body, that did stab,
And not for justice ? What, shall one of us,
That struck the foremost man of all this world,
But for supporting robbers—shall we now
Contaminate our fingers with base bribes,
And sell the mighty space of our large honours,
For so much trash as may be grasped thus ?—
I'd rather be a dog, and bay ^{*} the moon,
Than such a Roman.

Cas. Brutus, bay not me,
I'll not endure it : you forget yourself,
To hedge me in ; I am a soldier, I Oiler in practice, abler than yourself
To make conditions. †

Br. Go to ; you're not, Cassius.

Cas. I am.

Br. I say, you are not.

Cas. Urge me no more, I shall forget myself ;
Have mind upon your health, tempt me no further.

Br. Away, slight man !

Cas. Is't possible ?

Br. Hear me, for I will speak.

Must I give way and room to your rash choler ?
Shall I be frighted, when a madman stalks ?

Cas. O gods ! ye gods ! Must I endure all this ?

Br. All this [‡] ay, more : Fret till your proud heart break ;

Go, show your slaves how choleric you are,
And make your bondmen tremble. Must I budge ?
Must I observe you ? Must I stand and crouch
Under your testy humour ? By the gods,
You shall digest the venom of your spleen,
Though it do split you ; for from this day forth,
I'll use you for my mirth, yea, for my laughter,
When you are waspish.

Cas. Is it come to this ?

Br. You say, you are a better soldier :

Let it appear so : make your vaunting true,
And it shall please me well : For mine own part
I shall be glad to learn of nobler men.

Cas. You wrong me every way, you wrong me,
Brutus ;

I said an elder soldier not a better :

Did I say, better ?

Br. If you did, I care not.

Cas. When Caesar liv'd he durst not thus have mov'd me.

Br. Peace, peace ; you durst not so have tempted him.

Cas. I durst not ?

Br. No.

Cas. What ? durst not tempt him ?

Br. For your life you durst not.

Cas. Do not presume too much upon my love,
I may do that I shall be sorry for.

Br. You have done that you should be sorry for.

There is no terror, Cassius, in your threats ;
For I am arm'd so strong in honesty,
That they pass by me as the idle wind,
Which I respect not. I did send to you
For certain sums of gold, which you denied me ;—
For I can raise no money by vile means ;
By heaven I had rather cut my heart,
And drop my blood for drachmas, than to wring
From the hard hands of peasants their vile trash
By any indirection. I did send
To you for gold to pay my legions,

* Inform'd ‡ Exposed.

† Complaints.
‡ Small.

* Bark at. † To confer the offices at my disposal.

Which you denied me :—Was that done like Cassius ?

Should I have answer'd Caius Cassius so ?
When Marcus Brutus grows so covetous,
To lock such rascal counters from his friends,
He ready, gods, with all your thunderbolts,
Dash him to pieces !

Cas. I denied you not.

Bru. You did.

Cas. I did not :—he was but a fool,
That brought my answer back.—Brutus hath riv'd * my heart :

A friend should bear his friend's infirmities,
But Brutus makes mine greater than they are.

Bru. I do not, till you practise them on me.

Cas. You love me not.

Bru. I do not like your faults.

Cas. A friendly eye could never see such faults,

Bru. A flatterer's would not though they do appear

As huge as high Olympus

Cas. Come, Antony, and young Octavins, come,
Revenge yourselves alone on Cassius !

For Cassius is aware of the world :

Hated by one he loves ; brav'd by his brother ;

Check'd like a bondman ; all his faults observ'd,

Set in a note-book, learn'd, and conn'd by rote,

To cast into my teeth. Oh ! I could weep

My spirit from mine eyes !—There is my dagger,

And here my naked breast ; within, a heart

Dearer than Plutus' mine, richer than gold :

If that thou be'st a Roman, take it forth ;

I, that denied thee gold, will give my heart :

Strike, as thou didst at Cesar ; for I know,

When thou didst hate him worse, thou lov'd'st him better.

Than ever thou lov'd'st Cassius.

Bru. Sheath your dagger ;

Be angry when you will, it shall have scope ;

Do what you will, dishonour shall be honour.

O Cassius, you are voked with a lamb

That carries anger, as the flint bears fire ;

Which, much enforc'd, shows a hasty spark,

And straight is cold again.

Cas. Hath Cassius liv'd

To be but mirth and laughter to his Brutus,

When grief, and blood ill-temper'd, vexeth

him ?

Bru. When I spoke that, I was ill-temper'd

too.

Cas. Do you confess so much ? Give me your hand.

Bru. And my heart too.

Cas. O Brutus !—

Bru. What's the matter ?

Cas. Have you not love enough to bear with me, [me,

When that rash humour which my mother gave makes me forgetful ?

Bru. Yes, Cassius ; and, henceforth,

When you are over-earnest with your Brutus,

He'll think you another chides, and leave you so.

[Noise within.

Poct. [Within.] Let me go in to see the generals ;

There is some grudge between them, 'tis not meet

they be alone.

Luc. [Within.] You shall not come to them.

Poct. [Within.] Nothing but death shall stay me.

Enter Poet.

Cas. How now ? What's the matter ?

Poct. For shame, you generals : What do you mean !

Love, and be friends, as two such men should be ;

For I have seen more years, I'm sure, than ye.

Cas. Ha, ha ; how vilely doth this cynic rhyme !

Bru. Get you hence, Sirrah : saucy fellow,

hence.

Cas. Bear with him, Brutus ; 'tis his fashion.

• Re-ent.

Bru. I'll know his humour, when he knows
his time :

What should the wars do with the juggling * fools !
Companion, ; hence.

Cas. Away, away, be gone.

[Exit Poet

Enter Lucilius and Titinius.

Bru. Lucilius and Titinius, bid the commanders

Prepare to lodge their companies to-night.

Cas. And come yourselves, and bring Mes-sala with you

Immediately to us.

[Exit Lucilius and Titinius.

Bru. Lucius, a bowl of wine.

Cas. I did not think, you could have been so angry.

Bru. O Cassius, I am sick of many griefs.

Cas. Of your philosophy you make no use,
If you give place to accidental evils.

Bru. No man beats sorrow better :—Portia is dead.

Cas. Ha ! Portia ?

Bru. She is dead.

Cas. How 'scap'd I killing, when I cross'd you so ?—

O insupportable and touching loss !—

Upon what sickness ?

Bru. Impatient of my absence ;

And grief, that young Octavius with Mark Antony

Have made themselves so strong ;—for with her

death

That tidings came ;—With this she fell distract,

And, her attendants absent, swallow'd me.

Cas. And died so ?

Bru. Even so.

Cas. O ye immortal gods !

Enter Lucius, with Wine and Tapers.

Bru. Speak no more of her.—Give me a bowl of wine :—

In this I bury all unkindness, Cassius.

Cas. My heart is thirsty for that noble

pledge :—

Fill, Lucius, till the wine o'erswell the cup ;

I cannot drink too much of Brutus' love.

[Drinks.

Re-enter Titinius, with Messala.

Bru. Come in, Titinius—Welcome, good
Messala.

Now sit we close about this taper here,

And call in question our necessities.

Cas. Portia, art thou gone ?

Bru. No more, I pray you.—

Messala, I have here received letters,

That young Octavius, and Mark Antony

Come down upon us with a mighty power,

Bending their expedition toward Philippi.

Mess. Myself have letters of the self-same tenour.

Bru. With what addition ?

Mess. That by proscription, and bills of out-

Octavius, Antony, and Lepidus, [lawy,

Have put to death a hundred senators.

Bru. Therein our letters do not well agree ;

Mine speak of seventy senators, that died

By their proscriptions, Cicero being one.

Cas. Cicero one ?

Mess. Ay, Cicero is dead,

And by that order of proscription,—

Had you your letters from your wife, my lord ?

Bru. No, Messala.

Mess. Nor nothing in your letters writ of her ?

Bru. Nothing, Messala.

Mess. That, methinks, is strange.

Bru. Why ask you ? Hear you aught of her

in yours ?

Mess. No, my lord.

• Jig, signified a metrical composition.
; A term of reproach.

Bru. Now, as you are a Roman, tell me true.
Mes. Then like a Roman bear the truth I tell:
 For certain she is dead, and by strange manner.
Bru. Why, farewell, Portia.—We must die,
 Messala:

With meditating that she must die once,*
 I have the patience to endure it now.
Mes. Even so great men great losses should endure.

Cas. I have as much of this in art† as you,
 But yet my nature could not bear it so.

Bru. Well, to our work alive. What do you think

Of marching to Philippi presently?

Cas. I do not think it good.

Bru. Your reason?

Cas. This it is:

'Tis better that the enemy seek us:
 So shall he waste his means, weary his soldiers,
 Doing himself offence; whilst we, lying still,
 Are full of rest, defence, and numbness.

Bru. Good reasons must, of force, give place to better.

The people, 'twixt Philippi and this ground,
 Do stand but in a forced affection;
 For they have grudg'd us contribution;
 The enemy, marching along by them,
 By them shall make a fuller number up,
 Come on refresh'd, new-added, and encourag'd:
 From which advantage shall we cut him off,
 If at Philippi we do face him there,
 These people at our back.

Cas. Hear me, good brother.

Bru. Under your pardon—you must note beside,

That we have tried the utmost of our friends,
 Our legions are brim-full, our cause is ripe;
 The enemy increaseth every day,
 We, at the height, are ready to decline.
 There is a tide in the affairs of men,
 Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;
 Omitted, all the voyage of their life
 Is bound in shallows, and in miseries.
 On such a full sea are we now afloat;
 And we must take the current when it serves,
 Or lose our ventures.

Cas. Then, with your will, go on;
 We'll along ourselves, and meet them at Philippi.

Bru. The deep of night is crept upon our talk,
 And nature must obey necessity;
 Which we will niggard with a little rest.
 There is no more to say?

Cas. No more. Good night;
 Early to-morrow will we rise, and hence.

Bru. Lucius, my gown. [Exit LUCIUS.] Farewell, good Messala.—

Good night, Titinius.—Noble, noble Cassius,
 Good night, and good repose.

Cas. O my dear brother!
 This was an ill beginning of the night:
 Never come such division 'tween our souls!
 Let it not, Brutus.

Bru. Every thing is well.

Cas. Good night, my lord.

Bru. Good night, good brother.

Tit. Mes. Good night, lord Brutus.

Bru. Farewell, every one.

[Exit CAS. TIT. and MES.]

Re-enter LUCIUS with the Gown.

Give me the gown. Where is thy instrument?

Luc. Here in the tent.

Bru. What, thou speak'st drowsily?
 Poor knave, I blame thee not; thou art o'erwatch'd.

Call Claudius, and some other of my men;
 I'll have them sleep on cushions in my tent.

Luc. Varro, and Claudius!

Enter VARRO and CLAUDIUS.

Var. Calls my lord?

Bru. I pray you, Sirs, lie in my tent, and
 sleep;

It may be I shall raise you by and by
 On business to my brother Cassius.

Var. So please you, we will stand, and watch your pleasure.

Bru. I will not have it so; he down, good
 Sirs;

It may be, I shall otherwise bethink me.

Look, Lucius, here's the book I sought for so:
 I put it in the pocket of my gown.

[Servants lie down.]

Luc. I was sure your lordship did not give it me.

Bru. Bear with me, good boy, I am much forgetful.

Canst thou hold up thy heavy eyes awhile,
 And touch thy instrument a strain or two?

Luc. Ay, my lord, an it please you.

Bru. It does, my boy:

I trouble thee too much, but thou art willing

Luc. It is my duty, Sir.

Bru. I should not urge thy duty past thy might;

I know, young bloods look for a time of rest.

Luc. I have slept, my lord, already.

Bru. It is well done; and thou shalt sleep
 again;

I will not hold thee long: if I do live,

I will be good to thee.

[Music, and a Song.]

This is a sleepy tune:—O murderous slumber I
 Lay'st thou thy leaden mace upon my boy,
 That plays thee music?—Gentle knave, good
 night;

I will not do thee so much wrong to wake thee
 If thou dost nod, thou break'st thy instrument,
 I'll take it from thee; and, good boy, good
 night.

Let me see, let me see;—Is not the leaf turn'd
 down,

Where I left reading? Here it is, I think.

[He sits down.]

Enter the GHOST of CESAR.

How ill this taper burns!—Ha! who comes
 here?

I think, it is the weakness of mine eyes
 That shapes this monstrous apparition,
 It comes upon me:—Art thou any thing?
 Art thou some god, some angel, or some devil,
 That mak'st my blood cold, and my hair to stare?
 Speak to me, what thou art.

Ghost. Thy evil spirit, Brutus.

Bru. Why com'st thou?

Ghost. To tell thee, thou shalt see me at Philippi.

Bru. Well;

Then I shall see thee again?

Ghost. Ay, at Philippi.

[Ghost vanishes.]

Bru. Why, I will see thee at Philippi
 then.—

Now I have taken heart thou vanishest:
 Ill spirit, I would hold more talk with thee.—
 Boy! Lucius!—AVarro! Claudius! Sirs, awake!— Claudius!

Luc. The strings, my lord, are false.

Bru. He thinks he still is at his instrument.—
 Lucius, awake.

Luc. My lord!

Bru. Didst thou dream, Lucius, that thou so cry'dst out?

Luc. My lord, I do not know that I did cry.

Bru. Yes, that thou didst: Didst thou see any thing?

Luc. Nothing, my lord.

Bru. Sleep again, Lucius.—Sirrah, Claudius!
 Fellow thou! awake.

Var. My lord.

Claud. My lord.

Bru. Why did you so cry out, Sirs, in your
 sleep?

* At some time or other.

† In theory.

• Sceptre.

Var. Clau. Did we, my lord?

Bru. Ay: Saw you any thing?

Var. No, my lord, I saw nothing.

Clau. Nor I, my lord.

Bru. Go, and commend me to my brother

Cassius;

And bid him set on his powers betimes before,

And we will follow.

Var. Clau. It shall be done, my lord.

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Plains of Philippi.

Enter OCTAVIUS ANTONY, and their Army.

Oct. Now, Antony, our hopes are answered :
You said, the enemy would not come down,
But keep the hills and upper regions ;
It proves not so ; their battles are at hand ;
They mean to warn * us at Philippi here,
Answering before we do demand of them.

Ant. Tut, I am in their bosoms, and I know
Wherefore they do it : they could be content
To visit other places ; and come down
With fearful bravery, thinking, by this face,
To fasten in our thoughts that they have courage ;
But 'tis not so.

Enter a MESSENGER.

Mess. Prepare you, generals :
The enemy comes on in gallant show ;
Then bloody sign of battle is hung out,
And something to be done immediately.

Ant. Octavius, lead your battle softly on.
Upon the left hand of the even field.

Oct. Upon the right hand I, keep thou the left.

Ant. Why do you cross me in this exigent ?

Oct. I do not cross you ; but I will do so.

[March.]

Drum. Enter BRUTUS, CASSIUS, and their army, LUCILIUS, TITINIUS, MESSALA, and theirs.

Bru. They stand, and would have parley.

Cas. Stand fast, Titinius : We must out and talk.

Oct. Mark Antony, shall we give sign of battle ?

Ant. No, Cesar, we will answer on their charge.

Make forth, the generals would have some words.
Oct. Stand not until the signal.

Bru. Words before blows : Is it so, countrymen ?

Oct. Not that we love words better, as you do.

Bru. Good words are better than bad strokes, Octavius.

Ant. In your bad strokes, Brutus, you give good words :

Witness the hole you made in Cesar's heart,
Crying, Long live the traitor, Cesar !

Cas. Antony,

The posture of your blows are yet unknown,
But for your words, they rob the Hybla bees
And leave them honeyless.

Ant. Not stungless too.

Bru. Oh ! yes, and soundless too ;
For you have stol'n their buzzing, Antony,
And, very wisely, threat before you sting.

Ant. Vainurs, you did not so, when your vile daggers

Hack'd one another in the sides of Cesar :

You show'd your teeth like apes, and fawn'd like hounds,

And bow'd like bondmen, kissing Cesar's feet ;

Whilst damned Casca, like a cur, behind,

Struck Cesar on the neck. O flatterers !

Cas. Flatterers !—Now, Brutus, thank yourself :

This tongue had not offended so to-day,
If Cassius might have rul'd.

Oct. Come, come, the cause : If arguing make us sweat,

The proof of it will turn to redder drops.

Look ;

I draw a sword against conspirators ;

When think you that the sword goes up again ?—

Never, till Cesar's three and twenty wounds

Be well aveng'd ; or till another Cesar

Have added slaughter to the sword of traitors,

Bru. Cesar, thou can'st not die by traitors,

Unless thou bring'st them with thee.

Oct. So I hope ;

I was not born to die on Brutus's sword.

Bru. Oh ! if thou wert the noblest of thy strain,

Young man, thou could'st not die more honourable.

Cas. A peevish school-boy, worthless of such honour,
Join'd with a masker and a reveller.

Ant. Old Cassius still !

Oct. Come, Antony ; away.—

Defiance, traitors, hurl we in your teeth :

If you dare fight to-day, come to the field ;

If not, when you have stomachs.

[Exeunt OCTAVIUS, ANTONY, and their Army.]

Cas. Why now, blow, wind ; swell, billow ;
and swim, bark !

The storm is up, and all is on the hazard.

Bru. Ho !

Lucilius ; bark, a word with you.

Luc. My lord.

[BRUTUS and LUCILIUS converse apart.]

Cas. Messala,—

Mes. What says my general ?

Cas. Messala,

This is my birth-day ; as this very day
Was Cassius born. Give me thy hand, Messala :
Be thou my witness, that, against my will,
As Pompey was, am I compell'd to set

Upon one battle all our liberties.

You know, that I held Epicurus strong,

And his opinion : now I change my mind,

And partly credit things that do presage.

Coming from Sardis, on our former ensign *

Two mighty eagles fell, and there they perch'd,

Gorging and feeding from our soldiers' hands,

Who to Philippi here consorted us,

This morning are they fled away and gone ;

And, in their steads, do ravens, crows, and kites,

Fly o'er our heads, and downward look on us,

As we were sickly prey ; their shadows seem

A canopy most fatal, under which

Our army lies, ready to give up the ghost.

Mes. Believe not so.

Cas. I but believe it partly ;

For I am fresh of spirit, and resolv'd

To meet all perils very constantly.

Bru. Even so, Lucilius.

Cas. Now, most noble Brutus,

The gods to-day stand friendly ; that we may,

Lovers in peace, lead on our days to age !

But, since the affairs of men rest still uncertain,

Let's reason with the worst that may befall.

If we do lose this battle, then is this

The very last time we shall speak together ;

What are you then determined to do ?

Bru. Even by the rule of that philosophy,

By which I did blame Cato for the death

Which he did give himself—(I know not how,

But I do find it cowardly and vile,

For fear of what might fall, so to prevent

The time of life)—aiming myself with patience,

To stay the providence of some high powers,

That govern us below.

Cas. Then, if we lose this battle,

You are contented to be led in triumph

Thorough the streets of Rome ?

Bru. No, Cassius, no : think not, thou noble Roman,

* Summon.

* First standard.

† Accompanied.

That ever Brutus will go bound to Rome :
He bears too great a mind. But this same day
Must end that work the ides of March begun ;
And whether we shall meet again, I know not.
Therefore our everlasting farewell take :—
For ever, and for ever, farewell, Cassius !
If we do meet again, why we shall smile ;
If not, why then this parting was well made.
Cas. For ever, and for ever, farewell, Brutus !
If we do meet again, we'll smile indeed !
If not, 'tis time this parting was well made.
Bru. Why then, lead on.—Oh ! that a man might know
The end of this day's business ere it come !
But it sufficeth that the day will end,
And then the end is known.—Come, ho ! away !
[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—*The same.—The Field of Battle.*Alarum.—Enter BRUTUS and MESSALA.

Bru. Ride, ride, Messala, ride, and give these bills.
Unto the legions on the other side :
[Loud Alarum.]
Let them set on at once ; for I perceive
But cold demerour in Octavius' wing,
And sudden push gives them the overthrow.
Ride, ride, Messala : let them all come down.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—*The same.—Another part of the Field.*Alarum.—Enter CASSIUS and TITINIUS.

Cas. O, look, Titinius, look, the villains fly !
Myself have to mine own turn'd enemy :
This ensign here of mine was turning back ;
I slew the coward, and did take it from him.
Tit. O Cassius, Brutus gave the word too
early ;
Who having some advantage on Octavius,
Took it too largely, his soldiers fell to spoil,
Whilst we by Antony are all enclosed.

Enter PINDARUS.

Pin. Fly further off, my lord, fly further off ;
Mark Antony is in your tents, my lord !
Fly therefore, noble Cassius, fly far off.
Cas. This hill is far enough. Look, look, Titinius ;
Are there my tents, where I perceive the flag ?
Tit. They are, my lord.
Cas. Titinius, if thou lov'st me,
Mount thou my horse, and hide thy spurs in hims,
Till he have brought thee up to yonder troops,
And here again ; that I may rest assur'd,
Whether yond' troops are friend or enemy.
Tit. I will be here again, even with a thought.
[Exit.]

Cas. Go, Pindarus, get higher on that hill ;
My sight was ever thick, regard Titinius,
And tell me what thou not'st about the field.—
[Exit PINDARUS.]
This day I breathed first : time is come round,
And where I did begin, there I shall end ;
My life has run his compass.—Sirrah, what news ?
Pin. [Above.] O my lord !
Cas. What news ?
Pin. Titinius is Enclosed round about with horsemen, that Make to him on the spur ;—yet he spurs on.—
Now they are almost on him ; now, Titinius !—
Now come 'light.—Oh ! he 'lights too :—he's ta'en ;—and, hark !
[Shout.]

They shout for joy.
Cas. Come down, behold no more.—
O coward that I am, to live so long,
To see my best friend ta'en before my face !

• Bills containing directions.

Enter PINDARUS.

Come hither, Sirrah :
In Parthia did I take thee prisoner ;
And then I swore thee, saving of thy life,
That whatsoever I did bid thee do, Thou should'st attempt it. Come now, keep thine oath !
Now be a freeman ; and, with this good sword,
That ran through Caesar's bowels, search this bosom.
Stand not to answer ; Here, take thou the hilts ;
And, when my face is cover'd as 'tis now,
Guide thou the sword. Caesar, thou art reveng'd,
Even with the sword that kill'd thee.
[Exit.]

Pin. So, I am free ; yet would not so have been,
Durst I have done my will. O Cassius !
Far from this country Pindarus shall run,
Where never Roman shall take note of him.
[Exit.]

Re-enter TITINIUS, with MESSALA.

Mes. It is but change, Titinius, for Octavius
Is overthrow'n by noble Brutus' power,
As Cassius' legions are by Antony.
Tit. These tidings will well comfort Cassius.
Mes. Where did you leave him ?
Tit. All disconsolate,
With Pindarus his bondman, on this hill.
Mes. Is not that he, that lies upon the ground ?
Tit. He lies not like the living. O my heart !
Mes. Is not that he ?
Tit. No, this was he, Messala,
But Cassius is no more.—O setting sun !
As in thy red rays thou dost sink to night,
So in his red blood Cassius' day is set ;
The sun of Rome is set ! Our day is gone ;
Clouds, dew, and dangers come ; our deeds are
done !
Mistrust of my success hath done this deed.
Mes. Mistrust of good success hath done
this deed.
O hateful error, melancholy's child !
Why didst thou show to the apt thoughts of men
The things that are not ? O error, soon concay'd,
Thou never com'st unto a happy birth,
But kill'st the mother that engender'd thee.
Tit. What, Pindarus ! Where art thou, Pindarus ?
Mes. Seek him, Titinius : whilst I go to meet
The noble Brutus, thrusting this report
Into his ears. I may say, thrusting it :
For piercing steel, and darts envenom'd,
Shall be as welcome to the ears of Brutus,
As tidings of this sight.
Tit. Hie you, Messala,
And I will seek for Pindarus the while.
[Exit MESSALA.]

Why didst thou send me forth, brave Cassius ?
Did I not meet thy friends ? and did not they Put on my brows this wreath of victory,
And bid me give't thee ? Didst thou not hear their shouts ?
Alas ! thou hast misconstrued every thing.
But hold thee, take this garland on thy brow ;
Thy Brutus bid me give it thee, and I
Will do his bidding.—Brutus, come apace,
And see how I regard Cæsar Cassius.—
By your leave, gods :—This is a Roman's part :
Come, Cassius' sword, and hnd Titinius' heart.
[Dies.]

Alarum. Re-enter MESSALA, with BRUTUS young CATO, STRATO, VOLUMINIUS, and LUCILIUS.

Bru. Where, where, Messala, doth his body lie ?
Mes. Lo, yonder ; and Titinius mourning it.
Bru. Titinius' face is upward.
Cato. He is slain.
Bru. O Julius Cesar, thou art mighty yet !

Thy spirit walks abroad, and turns our swords
In our own proper entrails.

[Low Alarums.]

Cato. Brave Titinius!
Look, wher' he have not crown'd dead Cassius!
Bru. Aie yet two Romans living such as these?—

The last of all the Romans, fare thee well!
It is impossible that ever Rome
Should breed thy fellow.—Friends, I owe more
tears

To this dead man, than you shall see me pay.—
I shall find time, Cassius, I shall find time.—
Come, therefore, and to Thassos send his body;
His funeral shall not be in our camp,
Lest it discomfort us.—Lucilius, come;
—And come, young Cato; let us to the field.—
Labeo, and Flavius, set our battles on:—
'Tis three o'clock; and, Romans, yet e'er night
We shall try fortune in a second fight.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Another part of the field.

Alarum.—Enter, fighting, Soldiers of both Armies; then BRUTUS, CATO, LUCILIUS, and others.

Bru. Yet, countrymen, oh! yet hold up your heads!

Cato. What bastard doth not? Who will go
with me?

I will proclaim my name about the field:—
I am the son of Marcus Cato, ho!
A foe to tyrants, and my country's friend:
I am the son of Marcus Cato, ho!

[Charges the Enemy.]

Bru. And I am Brutus, Marcus Brutus, I; Brutus, my country's friend; know me for Brutus.

[Exit, charging the Enemy. CATO is overpowered and falls.]

Inc. O young and noble Cato, art thou
down?

Why, now thou diest as bravely as Titinius;
And may'st be honour'd being Cato's son.

1 Sold. Yield, on thou diest.

Inc. Only I yield to die:

There is so much that thou wilt kill me straight;
[Offering Money.]
Kill Brutus, and be honour'd in his death.

1 Sold. We must not.—A noble prisoner!

2 Sold. Room, ho! Tell Antony, Brutus is ta'en.

Sold. I'll tell the news.—Here comes the general:—

Enter ANTONY.

Brutus is ta'en, Brutus is ta'en, my lord.

Ant. Where is he?

Inc. Safe, Antony; Brutus is safe enough:
I dare assure thee, that no enemy
Shall ever take alive the noble Brutus:
The gods defend him from so great a shame!
When you do find him, or alive, or dead,
He will be found like Brutus, like himself.

Ant. This is not Brutus, friend; but, I assume you,

A prize no less in worth: keep this man safe,
Give him all kindness; I had rather have Such men my friends than enemies. Go on,
And see wher' Brutus be alive or dead:
And bring us word unto Octavius' tent,
How every thing is chanc'd.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Another part of the Field.

Enter BRUTUS, DARDANIUS, CLITUS, STRATO, and VOLUMINIUS.

Bru. Come, poor remains of friends, rest on this rock.

• Into our own bodies.

Cl. Statilius show'd the torch-light; but, my
lord,

He came not back; he is or ta'en, or slain.

Bru. Sit thee down, Clitus: Slaying is the word;

It is a deed in fashion. Hark thee, Clitus.—

[Whispering.]

Cl. What, I, my lord? No, not for all the world.

Bru. Peace then, no words.

Cl. I'll rather kill myself

Bru. Hark thee, Dardanius!

[Whispers him.]

Dar. I do such a deed?

Cl. O Dardanius!

Dar. O Clitus!

Cl. What ill request did Brutus make to
thee?

Dar. To kill him, Clitus: Look, he meditates.

Cl. Now is that noble vessel full of grief,
That it runs over even at his eyes.

Bru. Come hither, good Voluminius; list a word.

Vol. What says my lord?

Bru. Why, this, Voluminius:

The ghost of Cesar hath appear'd to me
Two several times by night: at Sardis, once;
And this last night, here in Philippi's fields.
I know my hour is come.

Vol. Not so, my lord.

Bru. Nay, I am sure it is, Voluminius.

Thou see'st the world, Voluminius, how it goes;
Our enemies have beat us to the pit:
It is more worthy to leap in ourselves,
Than tarry till they push us. Good Volumi-
nius,

Thou know'st that we two went to school together;

Even for that our love of old, I pray thee,
Hold thou my sword-hilts, whilst I run on it.

Vol. That's not an office for a friend, my lord.

[Alarum still.]

Cl. Fly, fly, my lord; there is no tarrying
here.

Bru. Farewell to you;—and you;—and you
Voluminius.—

Strato, thou hast been all this while asleep:

Farewell to thee too, Strato.—Countrymen,

My heart doth joy, that yet, in all my life,
I found no man, but he was true to me.

I shall have glory by this losing day
More than Octavius and Mark Antony.

By this vile conquest, shall attain unto.

So, fare you well at once: for Brutus' tongue

Hath almost ended his life's history:

Night hangs upon mine eyes; my bones would rest;

That have but labour'd to attain this hour.

[Alarum. Cry within, Fly, fly, fly.]

Cl. Fly, my lord, fly.

Bru. Hence; I will follow thee.

[*Exeunt CLITUS, DARDANIUS, and VOLUMI-
NIUS.*]

I pray thee, Strato, stay thou by thy lord:

Thou art a fellow of a good respect;

Thy life hath had some snatch of honour in it:

Hold then my sword, and turn away thy face,

While I do run upon it. Wilt thou, Strato?

Str. Give me your hand first: Fare you well,
my lord.

Bru. Farewell, good Strato.—Cesar, now be still:

I kill'd not thee with half so good a will.

[He runs on his Sword and dies.]

Alarum. Retreat. Enter OCTAVIUS, ANTONY, MESSALA, LUCILIUS, and their Army.

Oct. What man is that?

Mes. My master's man.—Strato, where is thy
master?

Str. Free from the bondage you are in,
Messala;

The conquerors can but make a fire of him;

E

For Brutus only overcame himself,
And no man else hath honour by his death.

Luc. So Brutus should be found.—I thank thee, Brutus,

That thou hast prov'd Lucilius' saying true.

Oct. All that serv'd Brutus, I will entertain
them.*

Fellow, wilt thou bestow thy time with me?

Stra. Ay, if Messala will prefer† me to you.

Oct. Do so, Messala.

Mes. How died my master, Strato?

Stra. I held the sword, and he did run on
it.

Mes. Octavius, then take him to follow thee,
That did the latest service to my master.

* Take them into my service.

† Recommend.

Ant. This was the noblest Roman of them all;

All the conspirators, save only he,

Did that they did in envy of great Cesar:

He, only, in a general honest thought,

And common good to all made one of them.

His life was gentle; and the elements

So mix'd in him, that Nature might stand up,

And say to all the world, This was a man!

Oct. According to his virtue let us use
him,

With all respect and rites of burial.

Within my tent his bones to-night shall lie,

Most like a soldier, order'd honourably.

So, call the field to rest: and let's away,

To part the glories of this happy day.

[Ereunt.]

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

LITERARY AND HISTORICAL NOTICE.

THIS play is supposed to have been written in the year 1608; and some of its incidents may have been borrowed from a production of Daniel's, called "The Tragedie of Cleopatra," which was entered on the books of the Stationers' Company in the year 1593. It rapidly condenses the events of a considerable period, commencing with the triple partition of the empire at the death of Brutus, B. C. 41, and terminating with the final overthrow of the Ptolemaic dynasty, B. C. 13. Its historical features are, upon the whole, accurately drawn; and the sentiments of many of the characters are literally copied from Plutarch and other biographers.—Antony's illicit connection with Cleopatra, his brutal treatment of the amiable Octavia, and his absurd assumption of despotic power in bequeathing the Roman provinces to a degraded progeny, were the ostensible grounds of the rupture which ended in his death, and united the whole extent of Roman conquest under one imperial sceptre. The character of Cleopatra, the fascinating, dexterous, and incontinent Egyptian, abounds in poetical beauty; and the rough soldier's description of her passage down the Cydnus, has ever been considered a luxurious specimen of glowing oriental description. But it is in the portrait of Antony that the discriminating reader will chiefly discover the pencil of a master. It is a choice finish to the outline of his character, as given in the play of Julius Cesar. He was then "a masker and a reveller," of comely person, lively wit, and insinuating address;—but the fire of youth, and the dictates of ambition, restrained his licentious cravings within tolerable bounds. In the decline of life, and in the lap of voluptuousness, with wealth at his command, and monarchs at his footstool, we find him alternately playing the fool, the hero, or the barbarian, trifling away the treasures of the East in sensuality and indolence, and destroying a noble army by cowardice and obstinacy. Still, the rays of inherent greatness occasionally gleam through a cloud of ignoble propensities, and glimmerings of Roman greatness partially reclaim a career of the most dotting effeminacy. The philosophy of his mind, and the cool superiority of maturer years, are admirably portrayed in the first re-crematory scene with Octavius Cesar, who, notwithstanding the flattery of historians, "was deceitful, mean-spirited, proud, and revengeful."—Dr. Johnson says: "This play keeps curiosity always busy, and the passions always intersted. The continual hurry of the action, the variety of incidents, and the quick succession of one passage to another, call the mind forwards without intermission from the first act to the last. But the power of delighting is derived principally from the frequent changes of the scene, for, except the feminine arts (some of which are too low) which distinguish Cleopatra, no character is very strongly discriminated."

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Alexandria.—A Room in CLEOPATRA'S Palace.

Enter DEMETRIUS and PHILO.

Phil. Nay, but this dotage of our general's Overflows the measure; those his goodly eyes That o'er the files and musters of the war Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn, The office and devotion of their view

Upon a tawny front: his captain's heart, Which in the scuffles of great fights hath burst The buckles on his breast, reneges all temper; And is become the bellows and the fan To cool a gypsy's lust. Look where they come

Flourish. Enter ANTONY and CLEOPATRA with their Trains: EUNUCHS fanning her.

Take but good note and you shall see in him

• Renounces.

The triple * pillar of the world transform'd
Into a strumpet's fool: behold and see.

Cleo. If it be love indeed, tell me how much!

Ant. There's beggary in the love that can be reckon'd.

Cleo. I'll set a bourn[†] how far to be belov'd.

Ant. Then must thou needs find out new heaven, new earth.

Enter an ATTENDANT.

Att. News, my good lord, from Rome—

Ant. Grates me:—The sum?—

Cleo. Nay, hear them, & Antony:

Fulvia, perchance is angry; or, who knows

If the scarce-bearded Cesar have not sent

His powerful mandate to you, Do this, or this:

Take in that kingdom, and enfranchise that:

Perform't, or else we damn thee.

Ant. How, my love!

Cleo. Perchance,—nay, and most like,

You must not stay here longer: your dismissal

Is come from Cesar; therefore hear it, Antony.—

Where's Fulvia's process?|| Cesar's, I would say?—Both?—

Call in the messengers.—As I am Egypt's queen,

Thou blindest Antony; and that blood of thine

Is Cesar's homager; else so thy cheek pays shame,

When shrill-tongu'd Fulvia scolds—The messengers.

Ant. Let Rome in Tyber melt! and the wide arch

Of the rang'd empire fall! Here is my space:

Kingdoms are clay: our dungy earth alike

Feeds beast as man: the nobleness of life

Is, to do thus; when such a mutual pair,

[Embracing.

And such a twain can do't, in which, I bind

On pain of punishment, the world to weet, &

We stand up peerless.

Cleo. Excellent falsehood!

Why did he marry Fulvia, and not love her?—

I'll seem the fool I am not: Antony

Will be himself.

Ant. But stirr'd by Cleopatra.—

Now, for the love of Love, and her soft hours,

Let's not confound the time with conference

harsh:

There's not a minute of our lives should stretch

Without some pleasure now: What sport to-

night?

Cleo. Hear the ambassadors.

Ant. Fie, wrangling queen!

Whom every thing becomes, to chide, to laugh,

To weep; whose every passion fully strives

To make itself, in thee, fair and admir'd!

No messenger; but thine, and all alone,

To-night we'll wander through the streets, and note

The qualities of people. Come, my queen;

Last night you did desire it:—Speak not to us.

[Exeunt. ANT. and CLEO. with their Train.

Dem. Is Cesar with Antonius priz'd so slight?

Phi. Sir, sometimes, when he is not Antony,

He comes too short of that great property

Which still should go with Antony.

Dem. I'm full sorry,

That he approves the common liar,†† who

Thus speaks of him at Rome: But I will hope

Of better deeds to-morrow. Rest you happy!

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same.—Another Room.

Enter CARMIA, IRAS, ALEXAS, and a SOOTHSAYER.

Char. Lord Alexas, sweet Alexas, most any thing Alexas, almost most absolute Alexas, where's the soothsayer that you praised so to the queen? Oh! that I knew this husband, which, you say, must charge his horns with gar-lands!

Alex. Soothsayer.

Sooth. Your will?

Char. Is this the man?—Is't you, Sir, that know things?

Sooth. In nature's infinite book of secrecy,
A little I can read.

Alex. Show him your hand.

Enter ENOBARBUS.

Eno. Bring in the banquet quickly; wine
Cleopatra's health to drink. [enough,

Char. Good Sir, give me good fortune.

Sooth. I make not, but foresee.

Char. Pray then, foresee me one.

Sooth. You shall be yet far fairer than you are.

Char. He means, in flesh.

Iras. No, you shall paint when you are old.

Char. Wrinkles forbid!

Alex. Vex not his prescience: be attentive.

Char. Hush!

Sooth. You shall be more beloved than beloved.

Char. I had rather heat my liver with drinking.

Alex. Nay, hear him.

Char. Good now, some excellent fortune!

Let me be married to three kings in a forenoon, and widow them all: let me have a child at fifty,

to whom Herod of Jewry* may do homage: find me to marry me with Octavius Cesar, and com-

pamon me with my mistress.

Sooth. You shall outlive the lady whom you serve.

Char. O excellent! I love long life better than figs.†

Sooth. You have seen and proved a fairer

former fortune

Than that which is to approach.

Char. Then, belike, my children shall have no names:‡ Pr'ythee, how many boys and wenches must I have?

Sooth. If every of your wishes had a womb,

And fertile every wish, a million.

Char. Out fool! I forgive thee for a witch.

Alex. You think none but your sheets are privy to your wishes.

Char. Nay, come, tell Iras her's.

Alex. We'll know all our fortunes.

Eno. Mine, and most of our fortunes, to-night, shall be—drunk to bed.

Iras. There's a palm presages chastity, if nothing else.

Char. Even as the overflowing Nilus presageth famine.

Iras. Go, you wild bedfellow, you cannot soothsay.

Char. Nay, if an only palm be not a fruitful prognostication, I cannot scratch mine ear.—

Pr'ythee, tell her but a worky-day fortune.

Sooth. Your fortunes are alike.

Iras. But how, but how? give me particulars.

Sooth. I have said.

Iras. Am I not an inch of fortune better than

she?

Char. Well, if you were but an inch of fortune better than I, where would you choose it?

Iras. Not in my husband's nose.

Char. Our worse thoughts heavens mend!

Alexas,—come, his fortune, his fortune.—Oh!

let him marry a woman that cannot go, sweet

Isis, & I beseech thee! And let her die too, and give him a worse; and let worse follow worse, till the worst of all follow him laughing to his grave, fifty-fold a cuckold! Good Isis, hear me this prayer, though thou deny me a matter of more weight: good Isis, I beseech thee!

Iras. Amen. Dear goddess, hear that prayer of the people! for, as it is a heart-breaking to see a handsome man loose-wived, so it is a deadly sorrow to behold a foul knave uncuckolded.

Therefore, dear Isis, keep decorum, and fortune him accordingly!

* One of the triumvirs: the three masters of the world.

† Bound. ‡ Give me the substance. § News was formerly a plural noun. ¶ Summons. 7 Know.

 Or, of Venus.

†† I am.

* Vulgarly esteemed the fiercest and proudest monarch of antiquity. † A common proverb. ‡ Shall be bastards. § An Egyptian goddess.

Char. Amen.

Alex. Lo, now, if it lay in their hands to make me a cuckold, they would make themselves whores but they'd do't.

Eno. Hush! here comes Antony.

Char. Not he, the queen.

Enter CLEOPATRA.

Cleo. Saw you my lord?

Eno. No, lady.

Cleo. Was he not here?

Char. No, madam,

Cleo. He was dispos'd to mirth; but on the sudden

A Roman thought hath struck him.—Enobarbus,—

Eno. Madam.

Cleo. Seek him, and bring him hither. Where's Alexas?

Alex. Here, madam, at your service.—My lord approaches.

Enter ANTONY, with a MESSENGER, and Attendants.

Cleo. We will not look upon him: Go with us.

[Exit CLEOPATRA, ENOBARBUS, ALEXAS, IRAS, CHARMIAN, SOOTHSEYER, and Attendants.]

Mess. Fulvia thy wife first came into the field.

Ant. Against my brother Lucius?

Mess. Ay:

But soon that war had end, and the time's state Made friends of them, joining their force 'gainst Cesar;

Whose better issue in the war, from Italy, Upon the first encounter, drove them.

Ant. Well,

What worse? Mess. The nature of bad news infects the teller.

Ant. When it concerns the fool or coward.—
On: [thus]

Things that are past, are done, with me.—'Tis Who tells me true, though in his tale he death, I hear him as he flatter'd.

Mess. Libanius

(This is still news) hath, with his Parthian force, Extended * Asia from Euphrates; His conquering banner shook, from Syria To Lydia, and to Ionia;

Whist—

Ant. Antony, thou wouldst say,—

Mess. O my lord!

Ant. Speak to me home; mine not the general tongue;

Name Cleopatra as she's call'd in Rome;

Rail thou in Fulvia's phrase; and taunt my faults [hce]

With such full licence, as both truth and malice Have power to utter. Oh! then we bring forth weeds,

When our quick winds † he still; and our ill told us,

Is as our earring. ‡ Fare thee well a while.

Mess. At your noble pleasure. [Exit]

Ant. From Sicily how the news? Speak there.

1 Att. The man from Sicily.—Is there such a one?

2 Att. He stays upon your will.

Ant. Let him appear,—

These strong Egyptian tethers I must break,

Enter another MESSENGER.

Or lose myself in dotage.—What are you?

2 Mess. Fulvia thy wife is dead.

Ant. Where died she?

2 Mess. In Sicily:

Her length of sickness, with what else more serimonious

Impoisth thee to know, this beats. [Gives a letter.]

Ant. Forbear me.—

[Exit MESSENGER.]

There's a great spirit gone! Thus did I desire it: What our contempts do often hurl from us, We wish it our's again; the present pleasure, By revolution lowering, does become The opposite of itself: she's good, being gone; The hand could pluck her back, that shov'd her on.

I must from this enchanting queen break off; Ten thousand harms, more than the ills I know, My idleness doth hatch.—How now! Enobarbus!

Enter ENOBARBUS.

Eno. What's your pleasure, Sir?

Ant. I must with haste from hence.

Eno. Why, then, we kill all our women: We see how mortal an unkindness is to them; if they suffer our departure, death's the word.

Ant. I must be gone.

Eno. Under a compelling occasion, let women die: It were pity to cast them away for nothing; though, between them and a great cause, they should be esteemed nothing. Cleopatra, catching but the least noise of this, dies instantly: I have seen her die twenty times upon far poorer moment: * I do think there is mettle in death, which commits some loving act upon her, she hath such a celerity in dying.

Ant. She is cunning past man's thought.

Eno. Alack, Sir, no: her passions are made of nothing but the finest part of pure love: we cannot call her winds and waters, sighs and tears; they are greater storms and tempests than almanacks can report: this cannot be cunning in her; if it be, she makes a shower of rain as well as Jove.

Ant. 'Would I had never seen her!

Eno. O Sir, you had then left unseen a wonderful piece of work; which not to have been blessed withal, would have discredited your travel.

Ant. Fulvia is dead.

Eno. Sir?

Ant. Fulvia is dead.

Eno. Fulvia?

Ant. Dead.

Eno. Why, Sir, give the gods a thankful sacrifice. When it pleaseth their deities to take the wife of a man from him, it shows to man the tailors of the earth; comforting therein, that when old robes are worn out, there are members to make new. If there were no more women but Fulvia, then had you indeed a cut, and the case to be lamented: this grief is crowned with consolation—your old smock brings forth a new petticoat:—and indeed the tears live in an onion, that should water this sorrow.

Ant. The business she hath broached in the cannot endure my absence. [state]

Eno. And the business you have broached here cannot be without you; especially that of Cleopatra's, which wholly depends on your abode.

Ant. No more light answers. Let our officers have notice what we purpose. I shall break

The cause of our expedience † to the queen,

And get her love ‡ to part. For not alone

The death of Fulvia, with more urgent touches,

Do strongly speak to us; but the letters too

Of many our contriving friends in Rome

Petition us at home: Sextus Pompeius

Hath given the dare to Cesar, and commands

The empire of the sea: our shippery people

(Whose love is never link'd to the desert,

Till his deserts are past,) begin to throw

Pompey the great, and all his dignities,

Upon his son; who, high in name and power,

Higher than both in blood and life, stands up

For the main soldier: whose quality, going on,

The sides o' the world may danger: Much is breeding,

Which, like the courser's † hair, hath yet but life,

‡ Leave.

* Upon far less reason. † Expedition. ‡ Leave.

† Horat's hair, except into potrid water, was supposed to turn into an animal.

* Seized.

† By some read minds.

‡ Tilling, plowing; prepares us to produce good seed.

And not a serpent's poison. Say, our pleasure,
To such whose place is under us, requires
Our quick remove from hence.

Eno. I shall do't.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.

Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN IRAS, and ALEXAS.

Cleo. Where is he ?

Char. I did not see him since.

Cleo. See where he is, who's with him, what he does :—

I did not send you ; *—If you find him sad,

Say, I am dancing ; if in mirth, report

That I am sudden sick : Quick, and return.

[Exit ALEXAS.]

Char. Madam, methinks, if you did love him

dearly,

You do not hold the method to enforce

The like from him.

Cleo. What should I do, I do not ?

Char. In each thing give him way, cross him in nothing.

Cleo. Thou teachest like a fool : the way to lose him.

Char. Tempt him not so too far : I wish for bear :

In time we hate that which we often fear.

Enter ANTONY.

But here comes Antony.

Cleo. I am sick, and sullen.

Ant. I am sorry to give breathing to my purpose,—

Cleo. Help me away, dear Charmian, I shall fall,

It cannot be thus long ; the sides of nature
Will not sustain it.

Ant. Now, my dearest queen,—

Cleo. Pray you, stand further from me.

Ant. What's the matter ?

Cleo. I know, by that same eye, there's some good news.

What says the married woman ?—You may go,
'Would, she had never given you leave to come !
Let her not say 'tis I that keep you here,
I have no power upon you : her's you are.

Ant. The gods best know,

Cleo. Oh ! never was there queen

So mightily betray'd ! Yet, at the first,

I saw the treasons planted.

Ant. Cleopatra,—

Cleo. Why should I think you can be mine, and true,

Though you in swearing shake the throned gods,
Who have been false to Fulvia ? Riotous madness,

To be entangled with those mouth-made vows,
Which break themselves in swearing !

Ant. Most sweet queen,—

Cleo. Nay, pray you, seek no colour for your going,

[ing.]

But bid farewell, and go : when you sued stay—
Then was the time for words : No going then ;—

Eternity was in our lips, and eyes ;

Bliss in our brows' bent ; † none our parts so poor,
But was a race ‡ of heaven :—They are so still,

Or thou the greatest soldier of the world,

Art turn'd the greatest liar.

Ant. How now, lady !

Cleo. I would, I had thy inches thou shouldst know,

There were a heart in Egypt.

Ant. Hear me, queen :

The strong necessity of time commands

Our services a while ; but my full heart

Remains in use with you, Our Italy

Shines o'er with civil swords ; Sextus Pompeius

Makes his approaches to the port § of Rome :

Equality of two domestic powers

Erreds scrupulous faction : The bated, grown to strength,

[Pompey,]

Are newly grown to love : the condemn'd

Rich in his father's honour, creeps apace

Into the hearts of such as have not thriv'd

Upon the present state, whose numbers threaten ;

And quietness, grown sick of rest, would purge

By any desperate change : My more particular,

And that which most with you should save * my going,

Is Fulvia's death.

Cleo. Though age from folly could not give me freedom,

It does from childishness :—Can Fulvia die ? †

Ant. She's dead, my queen :

Look here, and, at thy sovereign leisure, read

The garboils she awak'd ; ‡ at the last, best :

See, when and where she died.

Cleo. O most false love !

Where be the sacred vials thou should'st fill

With sorrowful water ? Now I see, I see,

In Fulvia's death, how mine receiv'd shall be.

Ant. Grieve no more, but be prepar'd to know

The purposes I bear ; which are, or cease,

As you shall give the advice : Now, by the fire

That quickens Nilus' slime, I go from hence,

Thy soldier, servant, making peace, or war,

As thou affect'st.

Cleo. Cut my lace, Charmian, come ;—

But let it be.—I am quickly ill and well ;

So Antony loves.

Ant. My precious queen, forbear ;

And give true evidence to his love, which stands

An honourable trial.

Cleo. So Fulvia told me.

I pray thee turn aside, and weep for her ;

Then bid adieu to me, and say the tears

Belong to Egypt : Good now, play one scene

Of excellent dissembling, and let it look

Like perfect honour.

Ant. You'll heat my blood, no more.

Cleo. You can do better yet ; but this is meetly.

Ant. Now, by my sword,—

Cleo. And target,—Still he mends ;

But this is not the best : Look, pray thee, Char-
mian,

How this Heircanian Roman does become

The carriage of his chafe.

Ant. I'll leave you, lady.

Cleo. Courteous lord, one word.

Sir, you and I must part,—but that's not it.

Sir, you and I have lov'd,—but there's not it.

That you know well : Something it is I would,—

Oh ! my oblivion § is a very Antony,

And I am all forgotten.

Ant. But that your royalty

Holds idleness your subject, I should take you

For idleness itself.

Cleo. 'Tis sweating labour,

To bear such idleness so near the heart

As Cleopatra this. But, Sir, forgive me ;

Since my becomings kill me, when they do not

Eye well to you : Your honour calls you hence ;

Therefore be deaf to my unplotted folly,

And all the gods go with you ! upon your sword

Sit laurel'd victory ! and smooth success

Be strew'd before your feet !

Ant. Let us go. Come :

Our separation so abides, and flies,

That thou, residing here, go'st yet with me,

And I, hence fleeing, here remain with thee.

Away.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Rome.—An apartment in CESAR'S House.

Enter OCTAVIUS CESAR, LEPIDUS, and Attendants.

Ces. You may see, Lepidus, and henceforth know,

It is not Cesar's natura' vice to hate

One great competitor : || from Alexandria

This is the news—He fishes, drinks, and wastes
The lamps of night in revel : is not more man-like

Than Cleopatra ; nor the queen Ptolemy
More womanly than he : hardly gave audience, or Vouchsaf'd to think he had partners : You shall find there

A man, who is the abstract of all faults
That all men follow.

Lep. I must not think there are
Evils enough to darken all his goodness :
His faults, in him, seem as the spots of heaven,
More fiery by night's blackness ; hereditary,
Rather than purchas'd * what he cannot change,
Than what he chooses.

Ces. You are too indulgent : let us grant, it is
not

Amiss to tumble on the bed of Ptolemy ;
To give a kingdom for a mirth ; to sit
And keep the turn of tippling with a slave ;
To reel the streets at noon, and stand the buffet
With knives that smell of sweat : say, this becomes him,

'As his composure must be rare indeed,
Whom these things cannot blemish, yet must
Antony

No way excuse his soils, when we do hear
So great weight in his lightness. † If he fill'd
His vacancy with his voluptuousness,
Full surfeits, and the dizziness of his bones
Call on him ; for't : but, to confound § such time,
That drums him from his sport, and speaks as loud

As his own state, and ours,—'tis to be chid
As we rate boys, who, being mature in knowledge,
Pawn their experience to their present pleasure,
And so rebel to judgment.

Enter a MESSENGER.

Lep. Here's more news.

Mess. Thy bidding's have been done ; and every hour,

Most noble Cesar, shalt thou have report
How 'tis abroad. Pompey is strong at sea,
And, it appears, he is belov'd of those
That only have fear'd Cesar : to the ports
The discontents ¶ repair, and men's reports
Give him much wrong'd.

Ces. I should have known no less :—
It hath been taught us from the primal state,
That he, which is, was wish'd, until he were ;
And the ebb'd man, ne'er lov'd, till ne'er worth
love

Comes dear'd, by being lack'd. ¶ This common
Like a vagabond flag upon the stream,
Goes to, and back, lacing the varying tide,
To rot itself with motion.

Mess. Cesar, I bring thee word,
Meneceates and Menas, famous pirates,
Make the sea serve them : which they ear  and wound

With keels of every kind : Many hot inroads
They make in Italy ; the borders maritime Lack blood †† to think on't, and flush ‡ youth revolt :

No vessel can peep forth, but 'tis as soon
Taken as seen ; for Pompey's name strikes more Than could his war resisted.

Ces. Antony,
Leave thy lascivious wassals. §§ When thou once
Wast beaten from Modena, where thou slew'st
Hirtius and Pansa, consuls, at thy heel
Did famine follow ; whom thou fought'st against,
Though daintily brought up, with patience more
Than savages could suffer : Thou didst drink
The stale of horses, and the gilded puddle
Which beasts would cough at : thy palate then did deluge
The roughest berry on the rudest hedge ;

Yea, like the stag, when snow the pasture sheets
The barks of trees thou brows'd'st ; on the Alps
It is reported, thou did'st eat strange flesh,
Which some did die to look on : And all this,
(It wounds thine honour, that I speak it now,)
Was borne so like a soldier, that thy cheek
So much as lank'd not.

Lep. It is pity of him.

Ces. Let his shames quickly
Drive him to Rome : 'Tis time we twain
Did show ourselves i'the field ; and, to that end, Assemble we immediate council : Pompey
Thrives in our idleness.

Lep. To-morrow, Cesar,
I shall be furnish'd to inform you rightly
Both what by sea and land I can be able,
To 'front this present time.

Ces. Till which encounter,
It is my business too. Farewell.

Lep. Farewell, my lord : What you shall know mean time

Of stirs abroad, I shall beseech you, Sir,

To let me be partaker.

Ces. Doubt not, Sir ;

I knew it for my bond. *

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Alexandria.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, IRAS, and MARDIAN.

Cleo. Charmian,—

Char. Madam.

Cleo. Ha, ha !—

Give me to drink mandragora. †

Char. Why, madam ;

Cleo. That I might sleep out this great gap of My Antony is away. [time,

Char. You think of him

Too much.

Cleo. O treason !

Char. Madam, I trust, not so,

Cleo. Thou enuch ! Mardian !

Mar. What's your highness' pleasure ?

Cleo. Not now to hear thee sing ; I take no pleasure

In aught a eunuch has : 'Tis well for thee,
That, being unsemin'd, ‡ thy freer thoughts
May not fly forth of Egypt. Hast thou affections ?

Mar. Yes, gracious madam.

Cleo. Indeed ?

Mar. Not in deed, madam ; for I can do nothing

But what in deed is honest to be done .

Yet have I fierce affections, and think

What Venus did with Mars.

Cleo. O Charmian,

Where think'st thou he is now ? Stands he, or sits he ?

Or does he walk ? or is he on his horse ?

O happy horse, to bear the weight of Antony

Do bravely, horse ! for wot'st thou whom thou mov'st ?

The demi-Atlas of this earth, the arm
And bugonet § of men.—He's speaking now,
Or murmuring, Where's my serpent of old Nile ?

For so he calls me : Now I feed myself
With most delicious poison :—Think on me,
That am with Phœbus' amorous pinches black,
And wrinkled deep in time ? Broad-fronted
Cesar,

When thou wast here above the ground, I was
A morsel for a monarch : and great Pompey
Would stand, and make his eyes grow in my brow ;

There would he anchor his aspect, and die
With looking on his life.

Enter ALEXAS.

Alex. Sovereign of Egypt, hail !

Cleo. How much unlike art thou Mark Antony!

Yet, coming from him, that great medicine hath
With his tinct gilded thee.—

How goes it with my brave Mark Antony?

Alex. Last thing he did, dear queen,
He kiss'd,—the last of many doubled kisses,—
This orient pearl.—His speech sticks in my heart.

Cleo. Mine ear must pluck it thence.

Alex. Good friend, quoth he,
Say, the firm Roman to great Egypt sends
This treasure of an oyster; at whose foot
To mend the petty present, I will piece
Her opulent throne with kingdoms; All the east,

Say thou, shall call her mistress. So he nodded,
And soberly did mount a turgent steed,
Who neigh'd so high, that what I would have spoke
Was beastly dumb'd by him.

Cleo. What, was he sad, or merry?

Alex. Like to the time o'the year between the extremes

Of hot and cold; he was nor sad, nor merry.

Cleo. O well-divided disposition!—Note him,
Note him, good Charmian, 'tis the man; but note him:

He was not sad; for he would shine on those
That make their looks by his: he was not merry;
Which seem'd to tell them, his remembrance lay
In Egypt with his joy: but between both:
O heavenly mingle; Be'st thou sad, or merry,
The violence of either thee becomes;

So does it no man else.—Met'st thou my posts?

Alex. Ay, madam, twenty several messengers:
Why do you send so thick?

Cleo. Who's born that day
When I forget to send to Antony,
Shall die a beggar.—Ink and paper, Charmian.—
Welcome, my good Alexas.—Did I, Charmian,
Ever love Cesar so?

Char. O that brave Cesar!

Cleo. Be chok'd with such another emphasis!
Say, the brave Antony.

Char. The valiant Cesar!

Cleo. By Isis, I will give thee bloody teeth,
If thou with Cesar paragon again
My man of men.

Char. By your most gracious pardon,
I slug but after you.

Cleo. My sallad days,
When I was green in judgment!—cold in blood,
To say as I said then!—But, come, away:
Get me ink and paper: he shall have every day
A several greeting, or I'll unpeople Egypt.
[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Mcssia.—A Room in POMPEY'S house.

Enter POMPEY, MENEKRATES, and MENAS.

Pom. If the great gods be just, they shall assist
The deeds of justest men.

Mene. Know, worthy Pompey,
That what they do delay, they not deny.

Pom. Whiles we are suitors to their throne,
The thing we sue for. [decays]

Mene. We, ignorant of ourselves,
Beg often our own harms, which the wise powers
Deny us for our good; so find we profit,
By losing of our prayers.

Pom. I shall do well:
The people love me, and the sea is mine:
My power's a crescent, and my auguring hope
Says, it will come to the full. Mark Antony
In Egypt sits at dinner, and will make
No wars without doors: Cesar gets money, where
He loses hearts: Lepidus flatters both,
Of both is flatter'd; but he neither loves,
Nor either cares for him.

• Furious.

Men. Cesar and Lepidus

Are in the field; a mighty strength they carry.

Pom. Where have you this? 'tis false.

Men. From Silvius, Sir.

Pom. He dreams: I know they are in Rome
together,

Looking for Antony: But all charms of love,
Salt Cleopatra, soften thy wad' * lip!
Let witchcraft join with beauty, lust with both;
Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts,
Keep his brain fuming; Epicurean cooks,
Sharpen with cloyless sauce his appetite;
That sleep and feeding may prorogue his honour,
Even till a Lethe'd dullness!—How now, Varrius?

Enter VARRIUS.

Var. This is most certain that I shall deliver:
Mark Antony is every hour in Rome

Expected; since he went from Egypt, 'tis
A space for further travel.

Pom. I could have given less matter
A better ear.—Menas, I did not think
This amorous surfeiter would have don'd; his
For such a petty war: his soldier'ship
Is twice the other twain: But let us read
The higher our opinion, that our stomach
Can from the lap of Egypt's widow pluck
The ne'er-lust-wearied Antony.

Men. I cannot hope,
Cesar and Antony shall well greet together:
His wife, that's dead, did trespass to Cesar;
His brother war'd upon him; although, I think,
Not mov'd by Antony.

Pom. I know not, Menas,
How lesser enmities may give way to greater.
Were't not that we stand up against them all,
'Twere pregnant they should square between
themselves;

For they have entertained cause enough
To draw their swords; but how the feat of us
May cement their divisions, and bind up
The petty difference, we yet not know.
Be it as our gods will have it! It only stands
Our lives upon, to use our strongest hands.
Come, Menas. [Exit

SCENE II.—Rome.—A Room in the house of LEPIDUS.

Enter ENOBARBUS and LEPIDUS.

Lep. Good Enobarbus, 'tis a worthy deed,
And shall become you well, to entreat your cap-
To soft and gentle speech. [tans]

Eno. I shall entreat him
To answer like himself: if Cesar move him,
Let Antony look over Cesar's head,
And speak as loud as Mars. By Jupiter,
Were I the wearer of Antonius' beard,
I would not shave to-day.

Lep. 'Tis not a time
For private stomaching.
Eno. Every time
Serves for the matter that is then born in it.

Lep. But small to greater matters must give way.

Eno. Not if the small come first,
Lep. Your speech is passion:
But, pray you, stir no embers up. Here comes
The noble Antony.

Enter ANTONY and VENTIDIUS.

Eno. And yonder, Cesar.

Enter CESAR, MENEKRATES, and AGRIPPA.

Ant. If we compose ¶ well here, to Parthia:
Hark you, Ventidius.

Ces. I do not know,
Menekrates; ask Agrippa.

Lep. Noble friends,
That which combin'd us was most great, and let
not

¶ Quarrel. † Aggre.

A leaner action rend us. What's amiss,
May it be gently heard : When we debate
Our trivial difference loud, we do commit
Murder in healing wounds : Then, noble partners,
(The rather, for I earnestly beseech,)
Touch you the sorest points with sweetest terms,
Nor curstness * grow to the matter.

Ant. 'Tis spoken well :
Were we before our armies, and to fight,
I should do thus.

Ces. Welcome to Rome.

Ant. Thank you.

Ces. Sit.

Ant. Sit, Sir !

Ces. Nay,

Then—

Ant. I learn, you take things ill, which are not so ;

Or, being, concern you not.

Ces. I must be laugh'd at,
If, or for nothing, or a little, I Should say myself offended ; and with you Chiefly i'the world : more laugh'd at, that I should

Once name you derogately, when to sound your name

It not concern'd me.

Ant. My being in Egypt, Cesar,
What was't to you ?

Ces. No more than my residing here at Rome
Might be to you in Egypt : Yet, if you there
Did practise † on my state, your being in Egypt
Might be my question. ‡

Ant. How intend you, practis'd ?

Ces. You may be pleas'd to catch at mine intent, [ther,

By what did here befall me. Your wife, and bio-
Made wars upon me ; and their contestation
Was theme for you, you were the word of war.

Ant. You do mistake your business ; my brother never

Did urge me in his act : I did enquire it ;
And have my learning from some true reports, §
That drew their swords with you. Did he not rather

Discredit my authority with yours ;
And make the wars alike against my stomach,
Having alike your cause ? Of this, my letters
Before did satisfy you. If you'll patch a quarrel,
As matter whole you have not to make it with,
It must not be with this.

Ces. You praise yourself
By laying defects of judgment to me ; but you patch'd up your excuses.

Ant. Not so, not so ;

I know you could not lack, I am certain on't
Very necessity of this thought, that I,
Your partner in the cause 'gainst which he fought,

Could not with grateful eyes attend those wars Which 'fronted ¶ mine own peace. As for my wife,

I would you had her spirit in such another :
The third o'the world is yours ; which, with a suffice ¶

You may pace easy, but not such a wife.

Eno. 'Would we had all such wives, that the men might go to wars with the women !

Ant. So much incurable, her garbolls, Cesar,
Made out of her impatience, (which not wanted Shrewdness of policy too,) I grieving grant,
Did you too much disquiet : for that, you must
But say, I could not help it.

Ces. I wrote to you,
When rioting in Alexandria : you
Did pocket up my letters, and with taunts
Did gibe my missive  out of audience.

Ant. Sir,
He fell upon me, ere admitted ; then
Three kings I had newly feasted, and did want

Of what I was i'the morning ; but, next day,
I told him of myself ; which was as much,
As to have ask'd him pardon : Let this fellow
Be nothing of our state ; if we contend,
Out of our question * wipe him.

Ces. You have broken

The article of your oath ; which you shall never Have tongue to charge me with.

Lep. Soft, Cesar.

Ant. No, Lepidus, let him speak :
The honour's sacred which he talks on now,
Supposing that I lack'd it : But on, Cesar ;
The article of my oath,—

Ces. To lend me arms and aid, when I requir'd them ;

The which you both denied.

Ant. Neglected, rather ;
And then, when poison'd hours had bound me up
From mine own knowledge. As nearly as I may,
I'll play the penitent to you : but mine honesty
Shall not make poor my greatness, nor my power
Work without it : Truth is, that Fulvia,
To have me out of Egypt, made wars here ;
For which myself, the ignorant motive, do
So far ask pardon, as befits mine honour
To stoop in such a case.

Lep. 'Tis nobly spoken.

McC. If it might please you to enforce no
further

The griefs † between ye, to forget them quite,
Were to remember that the present need
Speaks to atone ‡ you.

Lep. Worthily spoke, Mecænas.

Eno. Or, if you borrow one another's love for the instant, you may, when you hear no more words of Pompey, return it again : you shall have time to wrangle in, when you have nothing else to do.

Ant. Thou art a soldier only ; speak no more.

Eno. That truth should be silent, I had almost forgot.

Ant. You wrong this presence, therefore speak
no more.

Eno. Go to then ; you considerate stone.

Ces. I do not much dislike the matter, but
The manner of his speech : for it cannot be,
We shall remain in friendship, our conditions
So differing in their acts. Yet, if I knew What hoop should hold us staunch, from edge to edge

O'the world I would pursue it.

Agp. Give me leave, Cesar,—

Ces. Speak, Agrippa.

Agp. Thou hast a sister by the mother's side,
Admir'd Octavia : great Mark Antony
Is now a widower.

Ces. Say not so, Agrippa ;
If Cleopatra heard you, your reproof
Were well deserv'd of rashness.

Ant. I am not married, Cesar : let me hear
Agrippa further speak.

Agp. To hold you in perpetual amity,
To make you brothers, and to knit your hearts
With an unslipping knot, take Antony
Octavia to his wife : whose beauty claims
No worse a husband than the best of men !
Whose virtue, and whose general graces, speak
That which none else can utter. By this marriage,

All little jealousies, which now seem great,
And all great fears, which now import their dangers,

Would then be nothing : truths would be but tales
Where now half tales be truths : her love to both
Would, each to other, and all loves to both,
Draw after her. Pardon what I have spoke :
For 'tis a studied, not a present thought,
By duty ruminated.

Ant. Will Cesar speak ?

Ces. Not till he hears how Antony is touch'd
With what is spoke already.

Ant. What power is in Agrippa,

If I would say, Agrippa, be it so,

Ces. The power of Cesar, and His power unto Octavia.

Ant. May I never
To this good purpose, that so fairly shows,
Dream of impediment!—Let me have thy hand:
Further this act of grace; and, from this hour,
The heart of brothers govern in our loves,
And sway our great designs!

Ces. There is my hand.
A sister I bequeath you, whom no brother
Did ever love so dearly: Let her live
To join our kingdoms and our hearts; and never Fly off our loves again!

Lep. Happily, amen!
Ant. I did not think to draw my sword 'gainst
Pompey,

For he hath laid strange courtesies, and great,
Of late upon me: I must thank him only,
Lest my remembrance suffer ill report:
At heel of that, defy him.

Lep. Time calls upon us:
Of us must Pompey presently be sought,
Or else he seeks out us.

Ant. And where lies he?
Ces. About the mount Misenum.

Ant. What's his strength
By land?
Ces. Great, and increasing: but by sea
He is an absolute master.

Ant. So is the fame.
'Would we had spoke together! Haste we for it:
Yet, ere we put ourselves in arms, despatch we
The business we have talk'd of.

Ces. With most gladness;
And do invite you to my sister's view,
Whither straight I will lead you.

Ant. Let us, Lepidus,
Not lack your company.
Lep. Noble Antony,
Not sickness should detain me.

[Flourish. Exeunt CESAR, ANTONY, and LEPIDUS.]

Mec. Welcome from Egypt, Sir.
Eno. Half the heart of Cesar, worthy Mecasnas!—my honourable friend, Agrippa!—

Ag. Good Enocharbus!
Mec. We have cause to be glad that matters are so well digested. You staid well by it in Egypt.

Eno. Ay, Sir; we did sleep day out of countenance, and made the night light with drinking.

Mec. Eight wild boars roasted whole at a breakfast, and but twelve persons there. Is this true?

Eno. This was but as a fly by an eagle: we had much more monstrous matter of feast, which worthily deserved noting.

Mec. She's a most triumphant lady, if report be square* to her.

Eno. When she first met Mark Antony, she purs'd up his heart upon the river of Cydnus.

Ag. There she appear'd indeed; or my reporter devised well for her.

Eno. I will tell you:
The barge she sat in, like a burnish'd throne,
Burn'd on the water: the poop was beaten gold;
Purple the sails, and so perfum'd, that
The winds were love-sick with them: the oars were silver:

Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke, and made
The water, which they beat, to follow faster,
As amorous of their strokes. For her own person,

It beggar'd all description: she did lie
In her pavilion, (cloth of gold, of tissue,) O'erpicturing that Venus, where we see,
The fancy out-work nature: on each side her,
Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids,
With diverse-colour'd fans, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool,

* Sails with her merits.

And what they undid, did,*

Ag. Oh, rare for Antony!

Eno. Her gentlewomen, like the Nereides,
So many mermaids, tended her 't' the eyes,
And made their bends adornings: † at the helm
A seeming Mermaid steers; the silken tackle
Swell with the touches of those flower-soft hands
That yarely frame ‡ the office. From the barge
A strange invisible perfume hits the sense
Of the adjacent wharfs. The city cast
Her people out upon her; and Antony,
Enthron'd in the market-place, did sit alone,
Whistling to the air; which, but for vacancy,
Had gone to gaze on Cleopatra too,
And made a gap in nature.

Ag. Rare Egyptian!

Eno. Upon her landing, Antony sent to her,
Invited her to supper: she replied,
It should be better he became her guest;
Which she entreated: Our contentious Antony,
Whom ne'er the word of 'No woman heard speak,
Being barber'd ten times o'er, goes to the feast;
And, for his ordinary, pays his heart,
For what his eyes eat only.

Ag. Royal wench!
She made great Cesar lay his sword to bed
He plough'd her, and she crop'd.

Eno. I saw her once
Hop forty paces through the public street;
And having lost her breath, she spoke, and panted,
That she did make defect, perfection,
And, breathless, power breathe forth.

Mec. Now Antony must leave her utterly!.

Eno. Never; he will not;
Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale
Her infinite variety: Other women Cloy th' appetites they feed: but she makes hungry

Where most she satisfies. For vilest things
Become themselves in her, that the holy p
Bless her, when she's fiddish. ||

Mec. If beauty, wisdom, modesty, can settle
The heart of Antony, Octavia is
A blessed lottery to him,

Ag. Let us go.—
Good Enocharbus, make yourself my guest,
Whilst you abide here.

Eno. Humbly, Sir, I thank you, [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same.—A Room in CESAR'S
House.

Enter CESAR, ANTONY, OCTAVIA between them;
ATTENDANTS, and a SOOTH-SAYER.

Ant. The world, and my great office, will sometimes

Divide me from your bosom.

Octa. All which time,
Before the gods my knee shall bow my prayers
To them for you.

Ant. Good night, Sir.—My Octavia,
Read not my blemishes in the world's report:
I have not kept my square; but that to come Shall all be done by the rule. Good night, dear lady.—

Octa. Good night, Sir.

Ces. Good night.

[Exeunt CESAR and OCTAVIA.]
Ant. Now, Sirrah! you do wish yourself in Egypt?

Sooth. Would I had never come from thence,
nor you

Thither!

Ant. If you can, your reason?

Sooth. I see't in

Therefore, O Antony, stay not by his side :
Thy demon, that's thy spirit which keeps thee, is Noble, courageous, high, unmatchable,
Where Cesar's is not ; but, near him, thy angel Becomes a fiend, as being o'erpower'd : therefore Make space enough between you.

Ant. Speak this no more.

Sooth. To none but thee ; no more, but when to thee.

If thou dost play with him at any game,
Thou art sure to lose ; and, of that natural luck,
He beats thee 'gainst the odds ; thy lustre thickens,
When he shines by : I say again, thy spirit
Is all afraid to govern thee near him ;
But, he away, 'tis noble.

Ant. Get thee gone :

Say to Ventidius, I would speak with him :

[Exit SOOTHSAYER.]

He shall to Parthia.—Be it art, or hap,
He hath spoken true : The very dice obey him ;
And, in our sports, my better cunning faints
Under his chance : if we draw lots, he speeds ;
His cocks do win the battle still of mine.
When it is all to thought ; and his quails * ever

And though I make this marriage for my peace,

You must to Parthia ; your commission's ready :
Follow me, and receive it. [Exit.]

Enter LEPIDUS, MELENAS, and AGRIPPA.

Lep. Trouble yourselves no further : pray you,

Your generals after.

Agri. Sir, Mark Antony

Will e'en but kiss Octavia, and we'll follow.

Lep. Till I shall see you in your soldier's dress,
Which will become you both, farewell.

Me. We shall,

As I conceive the journey, be at mount ;
Before you, Lepidus.

Lep. Your way is shorter,
My purposes do draw me much about :
You'll win two days upon me.

dian.

Cleo. As well a woman with an ennuh play'd,
As with a woman ;—Come, you'll play with me,
Sir ?

Mar. As well as I can, madam.

Cleo. And when good will is show'd, though it come too short,

The actor may plead pardon. I'll none now :
Give me mine angle ; we'll to the river : there,
My music playing far off, I will betray
Tawny-fin'd fishes ; my bended hook shall pierce
Their slimy jaws ; and, as I draw them up,
I'll think them every one an Antony,
And say, Ah, ha ! you're caught.

Char. 'Twas merry, when

You wader'd on your angling ; when your diver

Did hang a salt-fish on his hook, which he
With fervency drew up.

Cleo. That time !—O times !—

I laugh'd him out of patience ; and that night
I laugh'd him into patience ; and next morn,
Ere the ninth hour, I drunk him to his bed ;
Then put my tires and mantles on him, whilst
I wore his sword Philippan. Oh ! from Italy ;

Enter a MESSENGER.

Ram thou thy fruitful tidings in mine ears,
That long time have been barren.

Mess. Madam, madam,—

Cleo. Antony's dead ?—

If thou say so, villain, thou kill'st thy mistress
But well and free

If thou so yield him, there is gold, and here
My bluest veins to kiss : a hand, that kings
Have lipp'd, and trembled kissing.

Mess. First, madam, he's well.

Cleo. Why, there's more gold. But, Sirrah, mark : We use

To say the dead are well ; bring it to that,
The gold I give thee will I melt, and pour
Down thy ill-uttering throat.

Mess. Good madam, hear me.

Cleo. Well, go to, I will ;

But there's no goodness in thy face : If Antony
Be free, and healthful, why so tart a favour *
To trumpet such good tidings ? If not well,
Thou should'st come like a fury crown'd with
Not like a formal man. [snakes,

Mess. Will't please you hear me ?

Cleo. I have a mind to strike thee, ere thou
speak'st :

Yet, if thou say, Antony lives, is well,
Or friends with Cesar, or not captive to him,
I'll set thee in a shower of gold, and hail
Rich pearls upon thee.

Miss. Madam, he's well.

Cleo. Well said.

Mess. And friends with Cesar.

Cleo. Thou'rt an honest man.

Mess. Cesar and he are greater friends than ever.

Cleo. Make thee a fortune from me.

Miss. But yet, madam,—

Cleo. I do not like but yet ; it does allay
The good precedence ; † die upon but yet :

But yet is as jester to bring forth
Some monstrous malefactor. Pr'ythee, friend,
Pour out the pack of matter to mine ear,
The good and bad together : He's friend with

Cesar ; [free,

In state of health, thou say'st : and, thou say'st
Miss. Free, madam ! no ; I made no such re-
He's bound unto Octavia. [port :

Cleo. For what good turn ?

Mess. For the best turn 't the bed.

Cleo. I am pale, Charmian.

Mess. Madam, he's married to Octavia.

Cleo. The most infectious pestilence upon thee ! [Strikes him down.

Mess. Good madam, patience.

Cleo. What say you ?—Hence, [Strikes him again.

Horrible villain ! or I'll spout thine eyes
Like balls before me ; I'll unbar thy head ;

[She hurls him up and down.
Thou shalt be whipp'd with wire, and stew'd in Smarting in ling'ring pickle. [brine,

Mess. Gracious madam,

I, that do bring the news, made not the match.
Cleo. Say 'tis not so, a province I will give thee, [badst

And make thy fortunes proud ; the blow thou
Shall make thy peace, for moving me to rage ;
And I will boot ‡ thee with what gift beside Thy modesty can beg.

Mess. He's married, madam.

Cleo. Rogue, thou hast liv'd too long.
[Draws a Dagger.]

* The ancients used to match quails as we match cocks.
† Inclosed. ‡ Mount Misenum. § Nisancholy.
|| Billiards were unknown then.

* So sour a countenance.
† The good news you have told me. ‡ Recompense.

Mess. Nay, then I'll run :—
What mean you, madam? I have made no fault.

Char. Good madam, keep yourself within
The man is innocent. [yourself;]
Cleo. Some innocents 'scape not the thunderbolt.—

Melt Egypt into Nile! and kindly creatures
Turn all to serpents!—Call the slave again :
Though I am mad, I will not bite him.—Call.

Char. He is afraid to come.
Cleo. I will not hurt him :—
These hands do lack nobility, that they strike
A meaner than myself; since I myself
Have given myself the cause.—Come hither, Sir.

Re-entr MESSENGER.

Though it be honest, it is never good
To bring bad news : Give to a gracious message
A host of tongues; but let ill tidings tell Themselves, when they be felt.

Mess. I have done my duty.
Cleo. Is he married?
I cannot hate thee worse than I do,
If thou again say, Yes.

Mess. He is married, madam.
Cleo. The gods confound thee I dost thou hold there still?

Mess. Should I lie, madam?
Cleo. Oh! I would thou didst;
So half my Egypt were submerg'd and made
A cistern for scald'd snakes! Go, get thee hence;
Hadst thou Narcissus in thy face, to me
Thou would'st appear most ugly. He is married?

Mess. I crave your highness' pardon.
Cleo. He is married?
Mess. Take no offence, that I would not offend
you :

To punish me for what you make me do,
Seems much unequal : He is married to Octavia.

Cleo. Oh! that his fault should make a knave
of thee,

That art not!—What? thou'rt sure of't?—Get thee hence :

The merchandise which thou hast brought from
Rome,

Are all too dear for me; Lie they upon thy band,
And be undone by 'em! [Exit MESSENGER.]

Char. Good your highness, patience.

Cleo. In praising Antony, I have disprais'd
Cesar.

Char. Many times, madam.
Cleo. I am paid for't now.

Lead me from hence,
I faint; O Ias, Charmian,—'Tis no matter :—
Go to the fellow, good Alexis; bid him
Report the feature* of Octavia, her years,
Her inclination, let him not leave out
The colour of her hair :—bring me word quickly.— [Exit ALEXAS.]

Let him for ever go :—Let him not—Charmian,
Though he be painted one way like a Gorgon,
T'other way he's a Mars :—Bid you Alexis

[To MARDIAN.]
Bring me word how tall she is.—Pity me, Char-
mian,

But do not speak to me.—Lead me to my chamber. [Exit.]

SCENE VI.—Near Misenum.

Enter POMPEY AND MENAS, at one side; with Drum and Trumpet: at another, CESAR, LEPIDUS, ANTONY, ENOBARRUS, MECÆNAS, with Soldiers marching.

Pom. Your hostages I have, so have you mine;
And we shall talk before we fight.

Ces. Meet meet,
That first we come to words; and therefore have
Our written purposes before us sent; [we]
Which, if thou hast consider'd, let us know
If 'twill tie up this discontented sword,

And carry back to Sicily much tall* youth
That else must perish here.

Pom. To you all three,
The senators alone of this great world,
Chief factors for the gods,—I do not know,
Wherefore my father should revengers want,
Having a son and friends; since Julius Cesar,
Who at Philippi the good Brutus ghosted,†
There saw you labouring for him. What was it,
That mov'd pale Cassius to conspire? And what
Made the all-honour'd, honest Roman, Brutus,
With the arm'd test, courtiers of beauteous
freedom,

To drench the Capitol; but that they would
Have one man but a man? And that is it,
Hath made me rig my navy; at whose burden
The anger'd ocean foams; with which I meant
To scourge the ingratulate that desp'ful Rome
Cast on my noble father.

Ces. Take your time.
Ant. Thou canst not fear; us, Pompey, with thy sails,

We'll speak with thee at sea : at land thou know'st
How much we do o'er-count thee.

Pom. At land, indeed,
Thou dost o'er-count me of my father's house :
But, since the cuckoo builds not for himself,
Remain in't as thou may'st.

Lep. Be pleas'd to tell us,
*[For this is from the present, §] how you take
The offers we have sent you.*

Ces. Their's the point.
Ant. Which do not be entreated to, but weigh
What it is worth embrac'd.

Ces. And what may follow,
To try a larger fortune.

Pom. You have made me offer
Of Sicily, Sardinia; and I must Rid all the sea of pirates; then, to send Measures of wheat to Rome : This 'good upon,
To part with unback'd edges, and beat back
Our large undinted.

Ces. Ant. Lep. That's our offer.

Pom. Know then,
I came before you here, a man prepar'd
To take this offer : But Mark Antony
Put me to some impatience : Though I lose
The praise of it by telling, you must know,
When Cesar and your brothers were at blows,
Your mother came to Sicily, and did find
Her welcome friendly.

Ant. I have heard it, Pompey;
And am well studied for a liberal thanks,
Which I do owe you.

Pom. Let me have your hand :
I did not think, Sir, to have met you here.

Ant. The beds i'the east are soft; and thanks
to you,
That call'd me, timelier than my purpose, hither;
For I have gain'd by it.

Ces. Since I saw you last,
There is a change upon you.

Pom. Well, I know not
What counts|| harsh fortune casts upon my face :
But in my bosom shall she never come,
To make my heart her vassal.

Lep. Well met here.

Pom. I hope so, Lepidus.—Thus we are agreed :

I crave our composition may be written,
And seal'd between us.

Ces. That's the next to do.
Pom. We'll feast each other, ere we part; and let us

Draws lots who shall begin.

Ant. That will I, Pompey.
Pom. No, Antony, take the lot : but, first
Or last, your fine Egyptian cookery
Shall have the fame. I have heard, that Julius Grew fat with feasting there. [Cesar]

Ant. You have heard much.
Pom. I have fair meanings, Sir.

* Likeness.

* Brava. † Haunted.
§ Forego to the point.

‡ Afright.
|| Misas.

Ant. And fair words to them.

Pom. Then so much have I heard :
And I have heard, Apollodorus carried—
Eno. No more of that :—He did so.

Pom. What, I pray you ?

Eno. A certain queen to Cesar in a mattress.

Pom. I know thee now :—How far'st thou, soldier ?

Eno. Well ;
And well am like to do : for, I perceive,
Four feasts are toward.

Pom. Let me shake thy hand ;
I never hated thee : I have seen thee fight,
When I have envied thy behaviour.

Eno. Sir,
I never lov'd you much : but I have prais'd you,
When you have well deserv'd ten times as much
As I have said you did.

Pom. Enjoy thy plainness,
It nothing ill becomes thee.—
Aboard my galley I invite you all :
Will you lead, lords ?

Ces. Ant. Lep. Shew us the way, Sir.

Pom. Come.

[Exit POMPEY, CESAR, ANTONY, LEPIDUS, Soldiers, and Attendants.]

Men. Thy father, Pompey, would ne'er have made this treaty.—[Aside.—] You and I have known, * Sir.

Eno. At sea, I think.

Men. We have, Sir.

Eno. You have done well by water.

Men. And you by land.

Eno. I will praise any man that will praise me : though it cannot be denied what I have done
by land.

Men. Nor what I have done by water.

Eno. Yes, something you can deny for your own safety : you have been a great thief by sea.

Men. And you by land.

Eno. There I deny my land service. But give me your hand, Menas : If our eyes had authority, here they might take two thieves kissing.

Men. All men's faces are true, whatsoever their hands are.

Eno. But there is never a fair woman has a true face.

Men. No slander, they steal hearts.

Eno. We came hither to fight with you.

Men. For my part, I am sorry it is turned to a drinking. Pompey doth this day laugh away his fortune.

Eno. If he do, sure, he cannot weep it back
again.

Men. You have said, Sir. We looked not for Mark Antony : Pray you, is he married to Cleopatra ?

Eno. Cesar's sister is call'd Octavia.

Men. True, Sir ; she was the wife of Caius
Marcellus.

Eno. But she is now the wife of Marcus An-tonius.

Men. Pray you, Sir ?

Eno. 'Tis true.

Men. Then is Cesar, and he, for ever knit together.

Eno. If I were bound to divine of this unity, I would not prophesy so.

Men. I think the policy of that purpose made more in the marriage, than the love of the parties.

Eno. I think so too. But you shall find the band that seems to tie their friendship together, will be the very strangler of their amity :
Octavia is of a holy, cold, and still conversation. †

Men. Who would not have his wife so ?

Eno. Not he that himself is not so ; which is Mark Antony. He will to his Egyptian dish again : then shall the sighs of Octavia blow the fire up in Cesar : and, as I said before, that which is the strength of their amity, shall prove the immediate author of their variance. Antony will use his affection where it is : he married but his occasion here.

Men. And thus it may be. Come, Sir, will you aboard ? I have a health for you.

Eno. I shall take it, Sir : we have used our throats in Egypt.

Men. Come, let's away.

[Exit.]

SCENE VII.—On Board POMPEY'S Galley
lying near Misenum.

Music. Enter two or three SERVANTS with a Banquet.*

1 Serv. Here they'll be, man : Some o'th'ir plants † are ill-rooted already, the least wind i'th' world will blow them down.

2 Serv. Lepidus is high-coloured.

1 Serv. They have made him drunk almsdrunk.

2 Serv. As they pinch one another by the disposition, he cries out, no more ; reconciles them to his entreaty, and himself to the drink.

1 Serv. But it raises the greater war between him and his discretion.

2 Serv. Why, this is to have a name in great men's fellowship ; I had as lief have a reed that will do me no service, as a partizan ‡ I could not heave.

1 Serv. To be called into a huge sphere, and not to be seen to move in't, are the holes where eyes should be, which pitifully disaster the cheeks.

A Sennet sounded. Enter CESAR, ANTONY,
POMPEY, LEPIDUS, AGRIPPA, MECENAS,
ENOBARBUS, MENAS, with other Captains.

Ant. Thus do they, Sir : [To CESAR.] They take the flow o'th' Nile.

By certain scales i'th' pyramid ; they know,
By the height, the lowness, or the mean, § if dearth,

Or soizon, || follow ; The higher Nilus swells,
The more it promises : as it ebbs, the seedsman
Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest.

Lep. You have strange serpents there.

Ant. Ay, Lepidus.

Lep. Your serpent of Egypt is bred now of your mud by the operation of your sun : so is your crocodile.

Ant. They are so.

Pom. Sit,—and some wine.—A health to Lepidus.

Lep. I am not so well as I should be, but I'll ne'er out.

Eno. Not till you have slept ; I fear me, you'll be in, till then.

Lep. Nay, certainly, I have heard the Ptolemies' pyramids ¶ are very goodly things ; without contradiction, I have heard that.

Men. Pompey, a word.

[Aside.]

Pom. Say in mine ear : What is't ?

Men. Forsake thy seat, I do beseech thee,
captain,

[Aside.]

And hear me speak a word.

Pom. Forbear me till anon.—

This wine for Lepidus.

Lep. What manner o'thing is your crocodile ?

Ant. It is shaped, Sir, like itself ; and it is as broad as it hath breadth : it is just so high as it is, and moves with its own organs : it lives by that which nourisheth it ; and the elements once out of it, it transmigrates.

Lep. What colour is it of ?

Ant. Of its own colour too.

Lep. 'Tis a strange serpent.

Ant. 'Tis so. And the tears of it are wet.

Ces. Will this description satisfy him ?

Ant. With the health that Pompey gives him, else he is a very epicure.

Do as I bid you.—Where's this cup I call'd for?

Men. If for the sake of merit thou wilt hear me,

Rise from thy stool.

Pom. I think thou'rt mad. The matter?

[Rises, and walks aside.]
Men. I have ever held my cap off to thy fortunes.

Pom. Thou hast serv'd me with much faith: What's else to say?

Be jolly, lords.

Ant. These quick-sands, Lepidus,

Keep off them, for you sink.

Men. Wilt thou be lord of all the world?

Pom. What say'st thou?

Men. Wilt thou be lord of the whole world? That's twice.

Pom. How should that be?

Men. But entertain it, and,

Although thou think me poor, I am the man

Will give thee all the world.

Pom. Hast thou drunk well?

Men. No, Pompey, I have kept me from the cup.

Thou art, if thou dar'st be, the earthly Jove: Whate'er the ocean pales, * or sky inclips, † is thine, if thou wilt have't.

Pom. Show me which way.

Men. These three world-sharers, these competitors, ‡

Are in thy vessel: let me cut the cable;

And, when we are put off, fall to their throats: All there is thine.

Pom. Ah, this thou should'st have done, And not have spoke out! In me, 'tis villany; In thee it had been good service. Thou must know,

'Tis not my profit that does lead mine honour; Mine honour it. Repent, that e'er thy tongue Hath so betray'd thine act: Being done unknown, I should have found it afterwards well done; But must condemn it now. Desist and drink.

Men. Follow this, [Aside.] I'll never follow thy palld † fortunes more.— Who seeks, and will not take, when once 'tis Shall never find it more. [offer'd,]

Pom. This health to Lepidus.

Ant. Bear him ashore.—I'll pledge it for him, Pompey.

Eno. Here's to thee, Menas.

Men. Enobarbus, welcome.

Pom. Fill, till the cup be hid.

Eno. There's a strong fellow, Menas.

[Pointing to the Attendant who carries off]

LEPIDUS.

Men. Why?

Eno. He bears

The third part of the world, man: See'st not?

Men. The third part then is drunk: 'Would it were all,

That it might go on wheels!

Eno. Drink thou; increase the reels.

Men. Come.

Pom. This is not yet an Alexandrian feast.

Ant. It ripens towards it. Strike the vessels, †

Here is to Cesar. [ho]

Ces. I could well forbear it.

'Tis monstrous labour, when I wash my brain,

And it grows fouler.

Ant. Be a child o'the time.

Ces. Possess † it, I'll make answer: but I had rather fast

From all, four days, than drink so much in one.

Eno. Ha, my brave emperor! [To ANTONY.]

Shall we dance now the Egyptian Bacchanals

And celebrate our drink?

Pom. Let's ha't, good soldier.

Ant. Come, let us all take hands;

Till that the conquering wine hath steep'd our sense

In soft and delicate Lethe.

Eno. All take hands.—

Make battery to our ears with the loud music;— The while, I'll place you: Then the boy shall sing:

The holding * every man shall bear, as loud

As his strong sides can volley.

[Music plays. ENOBARBUS places them hand in hand.]

SONG.

*Come, thou monarch of the vine,
Plump Bacchus, with pink eye †
In thy vats our cares be drown'd
With thy grapes our hairs be crown'd
Cup us, till the world go round;
Cup us, till the world go round!*

Ces. What would you more?—Pompey, good night. Good brother,

Let me request you off: our graver business

Frowns at this levity.—Gentle lords, let's part;

You see, we have burnt our cheeks: strong Enobarbe

Is weaker than the wine; and mine own tongue

Splits what it speaks: the wild disguise hath almost

Antick'd us all. What needs more words? Good

night.—

Good Antony your hand.

Pom. I'll try you o'the shore.

Ant. And shall, Sir: give's your hand.

Pom. O Antony,

You have my father's house, But what † we are

friends:

Come, down into the boat.

Eno. Take heed you fall not.—

[Exit POMPEY, CESAR, ANTONY, and

Attendants.]

Menas, I'll not on shore.

Men. No, to my cabin.—

These drums!—these trumpets, flutes! what!—

Let Neptune hear we bid a loud farewell

To these great fellows: Sound, and be hang'd sound out.

[A Flourish of Trumpets, with Drums.]

Eno. Ho, says 'a!—There's my cap.

Men. Ho!—noble captain!

Come.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A plain in Syria.

Enter VENTIDIUS, as after conquest, with SILIUS, and other Romans, Officers, and Soldiers; the dead body of PACORUS borne before him.

Ven. Now, darting Parthia, art thou struck?

and now

Pleas'd fortune does of Marcus Crassus' death

Make me revenger.—Bear the king's son's body

Before our army:—Thy Pacorus, Orodes, †

Pays this for Marcus Crassus.

Sil. Noble Ventidius,

Whilst yet with Parthian blood thy sword is warm, [Media,

The fugitive Parthians follow; spur through

Mesopotamia, and the shelters whither

The routed fly: so thy grand captain, Antony,

Shall set thee on triumphant chariots, and Put garlands on thy head.

Ven. O Silius, Silius,

I have done enough: A lower place, note well,

May make too great an act: For learn this, Silius;

Better leave undone, than by our deed acquire

Too high a fame, when him we serve's away.

Cesar, and Antony, have ever won

More in their officer than person: Sossius,

Which he achiev'd by the minute, lost his favour

The soldier's virtue, rather makes choice of loss,
Than gain, which darkens him.
I could do more to do Antonius good,
But 'twould offend him; and in his offence
Should my performance perish.

Sil. Thou hast, Ventidius,
That without which a soldier, and his sword,
Grants scarce distinction. Thou wilt write to Antony?

Ven. I'll humbly signify what in his name,
That magical word of war, we have effected;
How, with his banners, and his well-paid ranks,
The ne'er-yet-beaten horse of Parthia
We have jaded out o' the field.

Sil. Where is he now?

Ven. He purposeth to Athens: whither with what haste
The weight we must convey with us will permit,
We shall appear before him.—On, there; pass along. [Exit.

CESAR'S house.

Enter AGRIPPA, and ENOBARBUS, meeting.

Agr. What, are the brothers parted?

Eno. They have despatch'd with Pompey, he is gone,
The other three are sealing. Octavia weeps
To part from Rome: Cesar is sad; and Lepidus,
Since Pompey's feast, as Menas says, is troubled
With the green-sickness.

Agr. 'Tis a noble Lepidus.

Eno. A very fine one: Oh! how he loves Cesar!

Agr. Nay, but how dearly he adores Mark
Antony!

Eno. Cesar? Why, he's the Jupiter of men.

Agr. What's Antony? The god of Jupiter.

Eno. Spake you of Cesar? How! the nonparari!

Agr. O Antony! O thou Arabian bird!*

Eno. Would you praise Cesar, say,—Cesar;
—go no farther.

Agr. Indeed, he plied them both with excellent praises.

Eno. But he loves Cesar best;—Yet he loves
Antony:

Agr. Good fortune, worthy soldier; and fare-
well.

Enter CESAR, ANTONY, LEPIDUS, and Oc-TAVIA.

Ant. No farther, Sir.

Ces. You take from me a great part of myself;

Use me well in it.—Sister, prove such a wife
As my thoughts make thee, and as my furthest
band‡

Shall pass on thy approval.—Most noble Antony,
Let not the piece of virtue,§ which is set
Betwixt us, as the cement of our love,
To keep it builded, be the ram, to batter
The fortress of it: for better might we
Have lov'd without this mean, if on both parts
This be not cherish'd.

Ant. Make me not offended
In your distrust.

Ces. I have said.

Ant. You shall not find,
Though you be therein curious,|| the least cause

For what you seem to fear: So, the gods keep
you,

And make the hearts of Romans serve your ends! I
We will here part.

Ces. Farewell, my dearest sister, fare thee
well;

Thy spirits all of comfort! fare thee well.

Oct. My noble brother!—

Ant. The April's in her eyes: It is love's spring
And these the showers to bring it on.—Be cheerful.

Oct. Sir, look well to my husband's house;
and—

Ces. What,

Octavia?

Oct. I'll tell you in your ear.

Ant. Her tongue will not obey her heart, nor can

Her heart inform her tongue: the swan's down feather,

That stands upon the swell at full of tide,

And neither way inclines.

Eno. Will Cesar weep? [Aside to AGRIPPA.

Agr. Why, Enobarbus?

He cried almost to roaring: and he wept,

When at Philippi he found Brutus slain.

Eno. That year, indeed he was troubled with a rheum;

What willingly he did confound,† he wail'd:

Believe it, till I weep too.

Ces. No, sweet Octavia,
You shall hear from me still; the time shall not
Out-go my thinking on you.

Ant. Come, Sir, come;

I'll wrestle with you in my strength of love:

Look, here I have you; thus I let you go

And give you to the gods.

Ces. Adieu; be happy!

To thy fair way!

Palace.

Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, IRAS, and ALEXAS.

Cleo. Where is the fellow?

Alex. Half afraid to come.

Cleo. Go to, go to:—Come hither, Sir.

Enter a MESSENGER.

Alex. Good majesty,
Herod of Jewry dare not look upon you,
But when you are well pleas'd.

Cleo. That Herod's head

I'll have: But now? when Antony is gone

Through whom I might command it.—Come thou near.

Mess. Most gracious majesty,—

Cleo. Didst thou behold

Octavia?

Mess. Ay, dread queen.

Cleo. Where?

Mess. Madam, in Rome.

I look'd her in the face: and saw her led

Between her brother and Mark Antony.

Cleo. Is she as tall as me?†

Mess. She is not, madam.

Cleo. Didst hear her speak? Is she shrilltongu'd, or low?

Mess. Madam, I heard her speak; she is lowvoic'd.

Cleo. That's not so good:—he cannot like her long.

* Of air and water. † Destroy.
‡ This scene is levelled at Queen Elizabeth's jealousy of her rival, Mary, Queen of Scots.

Char. Like her? O Isis! 'tis impossible.

Cleo. I think so, Charmian: Dull of tongue and dwarfish!

What majesty is in her gait? Remember, If e'er thou look'st on majesty.

Mess. She creeps;

Her motion and her station * are as one: She shows a body rather than a life:

A statue, than a breather.

Cleo. Is this certain?

Mess. Or I have no observance.

Char. Three in Egypt

Cannot make better note.

Cleo. He's very knowing, I do perceive't:—There's nothing in her yet:—

The fellow has good judgment.

Char. Excellent.

Cleo. Guess at her years, I pray thee.

Mess. Madam,

She was a widow.

Cleo. Widow?—Charmian, hark.

Mess. And I do think, she's thirty.

Cleo. Bear'st thou her face in mind? is it long or round?

Mess. Round, even to faultiness.

Cleo. For the most part too, [flour?] they are foolish that are so.—Her hair, what colour?

Mess. Brown, madam: And her forehead is as low

As she would wish it.

Cleo. There is gold for thee.

Thou must not take my former sharpness ill:—

I will employ thee back again; I had thee

Most fit for business: Go, make thee ready;

Our letters are prepar'd. [Exit MESSENGER.]

Char. A proper man.

Cleo. Indeed, he is so: I repent me much,

That so I harry'd him. Why, methinks, by him,

This creature's no such thing.

Char. O nothing, madam.

Cleo. The man hath seen some majesty, and should know.

Char. Hath he seen majesty? Is it else defend,

And serving you so long!

Cleo. I have one thing more to ask him yet, good Charmian:—

But 'tis no matter; thou shalt bring him to me

Where I will write: All may be well enough.

Char. I warrant you, madam. [Exit.]

SCENE IV.—Athens.—A Room in ANTONY'S House.

Enter ANTONY and OCTAVIA.

Ant. Nay, nay, Octavia, not only that,—

That were excusable, that, and thousands more

Of semblable import,—but he hath war'd

New wars 'gainst Pompey; made his will, and read it

To public ear:

Spoke scantily of me: when perforce he could not

But pay me terms of honour, cold and sickly

He vented them; most narrow measure lent me:

When the best hint was given him, he not took't,

Or did it from his teeth. ||

Oct. O my good lord,

Believe not all; or, if you must believe,

Stomach not all. A more unhappy lady,

If this division chance, ne'er stood between,

Praying for both parts:

And the good gods will mock me presently,

When I shall pray, O bless my lord and husband!

Undo that prayer, by crying out as loud,

O bless my brother! Husband win, win brother,

Prays, and destroys the prayer; no midway

'Twixt these extremes at all.

Ant. Gentle Octavia,

Let your best love draw to that point, which seeks

Best to preserve it: If I lose mine honour,

I lose myself: better I were not yours,

Than yours so branchless. But, as you requested,

* Standing.

† Ruffled.

‡ Expressed.

§ Similar tendency.

|| Inductively.

Yourself shall go between us: The mean time, lady,

I'll raise the preparation of a war

Shall stain your brother; Make you soonest haste;

So your desires are join'd.

Oct. Thanks to my lord.

The Jove of power make me most weak, most weak, [be

Your reconciler! Wars 'twixt you twain would

As if the world should cleave, and that slain men

Should solder up the rift. *

Ant. When it appears to you where this begins,

Turn your displeasure that way; for our faults

Can never be so equal, that your love

Can equally move with them. Provide your going; [cost

Choose your own company; and command what

Your heart has mind to. [Exit.]

SCENE V.—The same.—Another Room in the same.

Enter ENOBARBUS and EROS, meeting.

Eno. How now, friend Eros?

Eros. There's strange news come, Sir.

Eno. What, man?

Eros. Cesar and Lepidus have made wars upon

Pompey.

Eno. This is old: What is the success? †

Eros. Cesar, having made use of him in the war 'gainst Pompey, presently denied him

invality; ‡ would not let him partake in the glory of the action: and not resting here, accuses him of letters he had formerly wrote to Pompey; upon his own appeal, § seizes him: So poor the third is up, till death enlarge his confine.

Eno. Then, world, thou hast a pair of chaps;

no more;

And throw between them all the food thou hast,

They'll grind the one the other. Where's Antony?

Eros. He's walking in the garden—thus; and spurns [dus?] the dust that lies before him; cries, Fool, Lepi-

And threatens the throat of that his officer,

That murder'd Pompey.

Eno. Our great navy's rigged.

Eros. For Italy and Cesar. More, Domitius;

My lord desires you presently: my news

I might have told hereafter.

Eno. 'Twill be naught;

But let it be.—Bring me to Antony.

Eros. Come Sir. [Exit.]

SCENE VI.—Rome.—A Room in CESAR'S House.

Enter CESAR, AGRIPPA, and MECENAS.

Ces. Contemning Rome, he has done all this:

And more;

In Alexandria,—here's the manner of it,—

'Tis the market place, on a tribunal silver'd,

Cleopatra and himself in chairs of gold

Were publicly enthron'd: at the feet, sat

Cæsarion whom they call my father's son;

And all the unlawful issue, that their lust

Since then hath made between them. Unto her

He gave the 'establishment of Egypt; made her

Of lower Syria, Cyprus, Lydia,

Absolute queen.

Mec. This in the public eye?

Ces. 'Tis the common show-place, where they exercise.

His sons, he there proclaim'd The kings of kings:

Great Media, Parthia, and Armenia;

He gave to Alexander; to Ptolemy he assign'd

Syria, Cilicia, and Phœnicia: She

In the habitments of the goddess Isis [ence,

That day appear'd; and oft before gave audi-

As 'tis reported, so.

* Opening.

† What follows?

‡ Accusation

§ Equally rank

Mec. Let Rome be thus
Inform'd.

Agr. Who, queasy * with his insolence
Already, will their good thoughts call from him.
Ces. The people know it; and have now re-
His accusations. [ceiv'd

Agr. Whom does he accense ?
Ces. Cesar : and that, having in Sicily
Sextus Pompeius spoil'd, we had not rated † him.
His part o'the isle : then does he say, he lent me
Some shipping unrecor'd : lastly, he frets
That Lepidus of the triumvirate
Should be depos'd ; and, being, that we detain
All his revenue.

Agr. Sir, this should be answer'd

Ces. 'Tis done already, and the messenger
gone.

I have told him, Lepidus was grown too cruel ;
That he his high authority abus'd ;
And did deserve his change ; for what I have conquer'd,

I grant him part ; but then, in his Armenia,
And other of his conquer'd kingdoms, I Demand the like.

Mec. He'll never yield to that.

Ces. Nor must not then be yielded to in this.

Enter OCTAVIA.

Oct. Hail, Cesar, and my lord ! hail, most dear
Cesar !

Ces. That ever I should call thee, east-away !

Oct. You have not call'd me so, nor have you cause.

Ces. Why have you stol'n upon us thus ? You come not

Like Cesar's sister : The wife of Antony
Should have an army for an usher, and
The neighs of horse to tell of her approach,
Long ere she did appear ; the trees by the way,
Should have borne men ; and expectation faint'd,
Longing for what it had not : nay, the dust
Should have ascended to the roof of heaven, Rais'd by your populous troops. But you are come

A masker-maid to Rome ; and have prevented
The ostent † of our love, which, left unshown,
Is often left unlov'd : we should have met you
By sea, and land ; supplying every stage
With an augmented greeting.

Oct. Good my lord

To come thus was I not constrain'd, but did it
On my free-will. My lord, Mark Antony,
Hearing that you prepar'd for war, acquainted
My griev'd ear withal : whereon, I begg'd
His pardon for return.

Ces. Which soon he granted,
Being an obstruct ‡ 'tween his lust and him.

Oct. Do not say so, my lord.

Ces. I have eyes upon him,
And his affairs come to me on the wind.
Where is he now ?

Oct. My lord, in Athens.

Ces. No, my most wounded sister : Cleopatra Hath nodded him to her. He hath given his empire

Up to a whore ; who now are levying [bled
The kings o'the earth for war : He hath assem-
Bocchus, the king of Libya ; Archelaus,
Of Cappadocia ; Philadelphos, king
Of Paphlagonia ; the Thracian king, Adailas :
King Malchus of Arabia ; king of Pont ;
Herod of Jewry ; Mithridates, king
Of Comagene ; Polemon and Antiochus,
The kings of Mede, and Lycaonia, with a
More larger list of sceptres.

Oct. Ah me, most wretched,
That have my heart parted betwixt two friends,
That do afflict each other !

Ces. Welcome hither :

Your letters did withhold our breaking forth ;
Till we perceiv'd, both how you were wrong led,
And we in negligent danger. Cheer your heart :

Be you not troubled with the time, which drives
O'er your content these strong necessities ;
But let determined things to destiny
Hold unbewail'd their way. Welcome to Rome :
Nothing more dear to me. You are abus'd
Beyond the mark of thought ; and the high gods,
To do you justice, make them ministers
Of us, and those that love you. Best of comfort ;
And ever welcome to us.

Agr. Welcome, lady.

Mec. Welcome, dear madam.

Each heart in Rome does love and pity you :
Only the adulterous Antony, most huge
In his abominations, turns you off,
And gives his potent regiment * to a trull, †
That noises ‡ it against us.

Oct. Is it so, Sir ?

Ces. Most certain. Sister, welcome : Play
you,

Be ever known to patience : My dearest sister !
[Lament.

SCENE VII.—ANTONY'S Camp, near the Promontory of Actium.

Enter CLEOPATRA and ENOBARBUS.

Cleo. I will be even with thee, doubt it not.

Eno. But why, why, why ?

Cleo. Thou hast tospoke † my being in these wars ;

And say'st, it is not fit.

Eno. Well, is it, is it ?

Cleo. Is't not ? Denounce against us, why should not we

Be there in person ?

Eno. [Aside.] Well, I could reply :—

If we should serve with horse and mates together, [near

The horse were merely ‡ lost ; the mares won't
A soldier and his horse.

Cleo. What is't you say ?

Eno. Your presence needs must puzzle Antony ;

Take from his heart, take from his brain, fiend
his time,

What should not then be spar'd. He is already Traduc'd for levity ; and 'tis said in Rome,
That Photinus a eunuch, and your maids,
Manage this war.

Cleo. Sink Rome ; and their tongues rot,
That speak against us ! A charge we bear t' the war,

And, as the president of my kingdom, will appear there for a man. Speak not against it ;
I will not stay behind.

Eno. Nay, I have done :
Here comes the emperor.

Enter ANTONY AND CANIDIUS.

Ant. Is't not strange, Canidius,
That from Tarentum, and Brundisium,
He could so quickly cut the Ionian sea,
And take in † Toi-nez ?—You have heard on't
sweet ?

Cleo. Celerity is never more admir'd,
Than by the negligent.

Ant. A good rebuke,
Which might have well becom'd the best of men,
To taunt at slackness.—Canidius, we
Will fight with him by sea.

Cleo. By sea ! What else ?

Can. Why will my lord do so ?

Ant. For * he dares us to't.

Eno. So hath my lord dar'd him to single fight.

Can. Ay, and to wage this battle at Pharsalia, Where Cesar fought with Pompey : But these offers,

Which serve not for his vantage, he shakes off ;
And so should you.

Eno. Your ships are not well mann'd :

* Disguised † Divided ‡ Taken.

* Power and empire. † Harlot. ‡ Threatens ‡ Forbid. † Absolutely. ‡ Subdue.

Your mariners are muleteers,* reapers, people
Ingross'd by swift impress;† in Cesar's fleet
Are those, that often have 'gainst Pompey fought:
Their ships are yare;‡ yours, heavy. No disgrace

Shall fall you for refusing him at sea,
Being prepar'd for land.

Ant. By sea, by sea,

Eno. Most worthy Sir, you therein throw away
The absolute soldiership you have by land;
Distract your army, which doth most consist
Of war-mark'd footmen; leave unexecuted
Your own renowned knowledge; quite forego
The way which promises assurance; and Give up yourself merely to chance and hazard,
From firm security.

Ant. I'll fight at sea.

Cleo. I have sixty sails, Cesar none better.

Ant. Our overplus of shipping will we burn;
And, with the rest full-mann'd, from the head
Of Actium

Beat the approaching Cesar. But if we fail,

Enter a MESSENGER.

We then can do't at land.—Thy business?

Mess. The news is true, my lord; he is des-
Cesar has taken Tolyne. [cried;

Ant. Can he be there in person? 'tis impossible:

Strange, that his power should be.—Canidius,
Our nineteen legions thou shalt hold by land,
And our twelve thousand horse:—We'll to our ship;

Enter a SOLDIER.

Away, my Thetis!§—How now, worthy soldier?

Sold. O noble emperor, do not fight by sea:
Trust not to rotten planks: Do you misdoubt
The sword, and these my wounds? Let the Egyptians,

And the Phœnicians, go a ducking; we
Have used to conquer standing on the earth,
And fighting foot to foot.

Ant. Well, well, away.

[Exeunt ANTONY, CLEOPATRA, and ENOBARBUS.

Sold. By Hercules, I think I am i'the right.

Can. Soldier, thou art: but his whole action grows

Not in the power on't: So our leader's led,
And we are women's men.

Sold. You keep by land
The legions and the horse whole, do you not?

Can. Marcus Octavius, Marcus Justinius,
Publicola, and Cælius, are for sea: [sar's
But we keep whole by land. This speed of Ce-
Carries beyond belief.

Sold. While he was yet in Rome,
His power went out in such distractions;||
Beguill'd all spies.

Can. Who's his lieutenant, hear you?

Sold. They say, one Taurus.

Can. Well I know the man.

Enter a MESSENGER.

Mess. The emperor calls for Canidius.

Can. With news the time's with labour; and throes forth,
Each minute, some. [Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.—A Plain near Actium.

Enter CESAR, TAURUS, Officers, and others.

Ces. Taurus,— Taur. My lord.

Ces. Strike not by land; keep whole:
Provoke not battle, till we have done at sea.
Do not exceed the prescript of this scroll:
Our fortune lies upon this jump.¶ [Exeunt.

* Mule drivers. † Pressed in haste. ‡ Manageable.
§ He calls Cleopatra by the name of the sea-goddess.
|| Such different detachments. ¶ Hazard.

Enter ANTONY and ENOBARBUS.

Ant. Set we our squadrons on your side o'the bill

In eye* of Cesar's battle; from which place
We may the number of the ships behold,
And so plect accordingly. [Exeunt.

Enter CANIDIUS, marching with his Land Army one way, over the Stage; and TAURUS, the Lieutenant of CESAR, the other way. After their departure, is heard the noise of a Sea-fight.

Alarum. Re-enter ENOBARBUS.

Eno. Naught, naught, all naught! I can behold
no longer:

The Automad,† the Egyptian admiral,
With all their sixty, fly, and turn the rudder;
To see't, mine eyes are blasted.

Enter SCARUS

Scar. Gods, and goddesses,

All the whole synd of them!

Eno. What's thy passion?

Scar. The greater cattle‡ of the world is lost
With very ignorance: we have kiss'd away
Kingdoms and provinces.

Eno. How appears the fight?

Scar. On our side like the token'd§ pestilence,
Where death is sure. Yon't bald-rid nag|| of
Egypt,

Whom leprosy o'ertake! i'the midst o'the fight,—
When vantage like a pair of twins appear'd,
Both as the same, or rather owns the elder,
The brize¶ upon her, like a cow in June,
Hoists sails, and flies.

Eno. That I beheld: mine eyes

Did sicken at the sight on't, and could not Endure a further view.

Scar. She once being loof'd,

The noble ruin of her magic, Antony, [lard
Claps on his sea-wing, and like a doting mail-
Leaving the fight in height, flies after her:
I never saw an action of such shame;
Experience, manhood, honour, ne'er before
Did violate so itself.

Eno. Alack, alack!

Enter CANIDIUS.

Can. Our fortune on the sea is out of breath
And sinks most lamentably. Had our general
Been what he knew himself, it had gone well:
Oh! he has given example for our flight,
Most grossly, by his own.

Eno. Ay, are you thereabouts? Why then, good
night

Indeed. [Aside.

Can. Towards Peloponnesus are they fled.

Scar. 'Tis easy to't; and there I will attend
What further comes.

Can. To Cesar will I render

My legions and my horse; six kings already
Show me the way of yielding.

Eno. I'll yet follow

The wounded chance†† of Antony, though my reason

Sits in the wind against me. [Exeunt.

SCENE IX.—Alexandria.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter ANTONY and ATTENDANTS.

Ant. Hark, the land bids me tread no more upon't,

It is ashani'd to bear me!—Friends, come hither
I am so lated‡‡ in the world, that I
Have lost my way for ever:—I have a ship
Laden with gold; take that, divide it; fly,
And make your peace with Cesar.

* Sight. † Name of Cleopatra's ship. ‡ Corner.
§ Spotted. ¶ Common trumpet.
|| The fish-dy that stings cattle.
 Loof is to bring a ship close to the wind.
†† The broken fortunes. ‡‡ Beughted.

Att. Fly! not we.

Ant. I have fled myself; and have instructed cowards

To run and show their shoulders.—Friends, be gone;

I have myself resolv'd upon a course, Which has no need of you; be gone:

My treasure's in the harbour, take it.—Oh!

I follow'd that I blush to look upon:

My very hairs do mutiny; for the white

Reproves the brow: for rashness, and they them

For fear and dotage.—Friends, be gone: you shall

Have letters from me to some friends, that will Sweep your way for you. Pray you, look not sad,

Nor make replies of loathness: take the hint

Which my despair proclaims; let that be left

Which leaves itself: to the sea side straightway:

I will possess you of that ship and treasure.

Leave me, I pray, a little: 'pray you now:—

Nay, do so; for, indeed, I have lost command,

Therefore I pray you:—I'll see you by and by.

[Sits down.]

Enter EROS; and CLEOPATRA led by CHARMIAN and IRAS.

Eros. Nay, gentle madam, to him:—Comfort

him

Irás. Do, most dear queen.

Char. Do! Why, what else?

Cleo. Let me sit down. O Juno!

Ant. No, no, no, no, no.

Eros. See you here, Sir?

Ant. O he, fie, fie.

Char. Madam,—

Irás. Madam; O good empress!—

Eros. Sir, Sir,—

Ant. Yes, my lord, yes:—He, * at Philippi, kept

His sword even like a dancer; while I struck

The lean and wrinkled Cassius; and 'twas I

That the mad Brutus ended: he alone

Dealt on hesitantly,† and no practice had

In the brave squares of war: Yet now—No matter.

Cleo. Ah! stand by.

Eros. The queen, my lord, the queen.

Irás. Go to him, madam, speak to him;

He is unqualified; with very shame.

Cleo. Well then,—Sustain me:—Oh!

Eros. Most noble Sir, arise; the queen approaches;

Her head's declin'd, and death will seize her: but §

Your comfort makes the rescue.

Ant. I have offended reputation;

A most un noble swerving.

Eros. Sir, the queen.

Ant. O whither hast thou led me, Egypt?

See,

How I convey my shame out of thine eyes

By looking back on what I have left behind

* Stic'd in dishonour.

Cleo. O my lord, my lord!

Forgive my fearful sails! I little thought

You would have follow'd.

Ant. Egypt, thou knew'st too well

My heart was to thy rudder tied by the strings,

And thou should'st tow me after: O'er my spirit

Thy full supremacy thou knew'st; and that

Thy beck might from the bidding of the gods

Command me.

Cleo. Oh! my pardon.

Ant. Now I must

To the young man send humble treaties, dodge

And palter in the shifts of lowliness; who

With half the bulk o' the world play'd as I pleas'd,

Making and marring fortunes. You did know

How much you were my conqueror; and that

My sword made weak by my affection, would

Obeey it on all cause.

Cleo. Oh! pardon, pardon.

Ant. Fall not a tear, I say: one of them rates *

All that is won and lost: Give me a kiss;

Even this repays me.—We sent our school-master,

Is he come back?—Love, I am full of lead:—

Some wine, within there, and our viands:—Fortune knows,

We scorn her most, when most she offers blows,

[Exeunt.]

SCENE X.—CESAR'S Camp in Egypt.

Enter CESAR, DOLABELLA, THYREUS, and others.

Ces. Let him appear that's come from An-Know you him? [Tony.—

Dol. Cesar, 'tis his schoolmaster: †

An argument that he is pluck'd, when hither

He sends so poor a minion of his wing,

Which had superfluous kings for messengers,

Not many moons gone by.

Enter EUPHRONIUS.

Ces. Approach, and speak.

Eup. Such as I am, I come from Antony:

I was of late as petty to his ends,

As is the morn-dew on the myrtle leaf

To his grand sea.

Ces. Be it so: Declare thine office.

Eup. Lord of his fortunes he salutes thee, and Requires to live in Egypt: which, not granted,

He lessens his requests; and to thee sues

To let him breathe between the heavens and

earth,

A private man in Athens: This for him.

Next, Cleopatra does confess thy greatness;

Submits her to thy might; and of thee craves

The circle ‡ of the Ptolemies for her heirs,

Now hazarded to thy grace.

Ces. For Antony,

I have no eais to his request. The queen

Of audience, not desire, shall fail; so she

From Egypt drive her all-disgraced friend, §

O! take his life there: This if she perform,

She shall not sue unheard. So to them both.

Eup. Fortune pursue thee!

Ces. Bring him through the bands.

[Exit EUPHRONIUS.]

To try thy eloquence, now 'tis time: Despatch;

From Antony win Cleopatra: promise,

[To THYREUS.]

And in our name, what she requires: add more,

From thine invention, offers: women are not,

In their best fortunes, strong; but want will perjure [Thyrens;]

The ne'er-touch'd vestal: Try thy cunning,

Make thine own edict for thy pains, which we

Will answer as a law.

Thyr. Cesar, I go.

Ces. Observe how Antony becomes his flaw; ¶

And what thou think'st his very action speaks

In every power that moves.

Thyr. Cesar, I shall. [Exeunt.]

SCENE XI.—Alexandria.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter CLEOPATRA, ENOBARBUS, CHARMIAN, and IRAS.

Cleo. What shall we do, Enobarbus?

Eno. Think, and die.

Cleo. Is Antony, or we, in fault for this;

Eno. Antony only, that would make his will

Lord of his reason. What although you fled

From that great face of war, whose several ranges

Frighted each other, why should he follow?

The itch of his affection should not then

Have tick'd ¶ his captainship; at such a point

When half to half the world oppos'd, he being

The inered question,  'twas a shame no less

to

* Is worth.

† Euphronius, schoolmaster to Antony's children.

‡ Duaden, the crown.

§ Paramour. ¶ Bears his misfortunes.  Censored defeated.  The sole occasion of the war

* Cesar.

† Fought by proxy.

‡ Unless.

‡ Bewildered.

Than was his loss, to course your flying flags,
And leave his navy gazing.

Cleo. Prithee, peace.

Enter ANTONY, with EUPHRONIS.

Ant. Is this his answer?

Eup. Ay, my lord.

Ant. The queen

Shall then have courtesy, so she will yield
Us up.

Eup. He says so.

Ant. Let her know it.—

To the boy Cesar send this grizled head,
And he will till thy wishes to the briar
With principalities.

Cleo. That head, my lord?

Ant. To him again: Tell him, he wears the rose
Of youth upon him; from which the world should Something particular: his coin, ships, legions,
May be a coward's; whose minister would prevail

Under the service of a child, as soon
As 't' the command of Cesar: I dare him, therefore,
To lay his gay comparisons * apart,
And answer me, declin'd,† sword against
sword.

Ourselves alone: I'll write it; follow me.

[Exit ANTONY and EUPHRONIS.]

Eno. Yes, like enough, high-battled Cesar will Unstate his happiness, and be stag'd to the show, Against a sworder.—I see, men's judgments are
A parcel; of their fortunes; and things outward
To draw the inward quality after them,
To suffer all alike. That he should dream,
Knowing all measures, the full Cesar will Answer his emptiness!—Cesar, thou hast subdu'd
His judgment too.

Enter an ATTENDANT.

Att. A messenger from Cesar.

Cleo. What, no more ceremony?—See my women!—

Against the blown rose may they stop their nose,
That kneel'd unto the buds.—Admit him, Sir.

Eno. Mine honesty and I begin to square.‡

[Aside.]

The loyalty, well held to fools, does make
Our faith mere folly:—Yet, he that can endure
To follow with allegiance a fallen lord,
Does conquer him that did his master conquer,
And earns a place i'the story.

Enter THYRUS.

Cleo. Cesar's will?

Thyr. Hear it apart.

Cleo. None but friends: say boldly,

Thyr. So, haply,|| are they friends to Antony.

Eno. He needs as many, Sir, as Cesar has;
Or needs not us. If Cesar please, our master
Will leap to be his friend: For us, you know,
Whose he is, we are; and that's Cesar's.

Thyr. So.—

Thus then, thou most renown'd! Cesar entreats,
Not to consider in what case thou stand'st,
Further than he is Cesar.

Cleo. Go on: Right royal.

Thyr. He knows, that you embrace not Antony
As you did love, but as you fear'd him.

Cleo. Oh!

Thyr. The scars upon your honour, therefore,
Does pity, as constrained blemishes, ||he
Not as deserv'd.

Cleo. He is a god, and knows
What is most right: Mine honour was not yielded,
But conquer'd merely.

Eno. To be sure of that, [Aside.]
I will ask Antony.—Sir, Sir, thou'rt so leaky,
That we must leave thee to thy sinking, for Thy dearest quit thee. [Exit ENOBABUS.]

Thyr. Shall I say to Cesar

What you require of him? for he partly begs
To be desir'd to give. It much would please
him,

That of his fortunes you should make a staff
To lean upon: but it would warm his spirits,
To hear from me you had left Antony,
And put yourself under his shroud,
The universal landlord.

Cleo. What's your name?

Thyr. My name is Thyreus.

Cleo. Most kind messenger,
Say to great Cesar this, In disputation *
I kiss his conqu'ring hand; tell him, I am prompt

To lay my crown at his feet, and there to kneel:
Tell him, from his all-obeying† breath I hear
The doom of Egypt.

Thyr. 'Tis your noblest course.

Wisdom and fortune combating together,
If that the former dare but what it can,
No chance may shake it. Give me grace to lay
My duty on your hand.

Cleo. Your Cesar's father

Oft, when he hath mus'd of taking kingdoms in,
Bestow'd his lips on that unworthy place,
As it rain'd kisses.

Re-enter ANTONY and ENOBABUS.

Ant. Favours, by Jove that thunders!—

What art thou, fellow?

Thyr. One, that but performs

The bidding of the fullest man, and worthiest
To have command obey'd.

Eno. You will be whipp'd.

Ant. Approach, there:—Ay, you kite!—Now gods and devils! [He]
Authority melts from me: Of late, when I cry'd,
Like boys unto a muss,‡ kings would start forth,
And cry, Your will! Have you no ears? I am

Enter ATTENDANTS.

Antony yet. Take hence this Jack, § and whip
him.

Eno. 'Tis better playing with a lion's whelp,
Than with an old one dyng.

Ant. Moon and stars! [Butaric's]

Whip him:—Were't twenty of the greatest tri-
That do acknowledge Cesar, should I find them
So saucy with the hand of she here, (What's her
name,

Since she was Cleopatra?)—Whip him, fellows,
Till, like a boy, you see him cringe his face,
And whine aloud for mercy: Take him hence.

Thyr. Mark Antony,—

Ant. Tug him away; being whipp'd,
Bring him again:—This Jack of Cesar's shall Bear us an errand to him.—

[Exit ATTEND. with THYRUS.]

You were half blasted ere I knew you:—Ha!
Have I my pillow left unpress'd in Rome
Forborne the getting of a lawful race,
And by a gem of women, to be abus'd
By one that looks on feeders? ||

Cleo. Good my lord,—

Ant. You have been a boggler ever:
But when we in our viciousness grow hard,
(O misery on't!) the wise gods seal our eyes;
In our own filth drop our clear judgments;
make us

Adore our errors; laugh at us, while we strut
To our confusion.

Cleo. Oh! is it come to this?

Ant. I found you as a morsel cold upon Dead Cesar's trencher: nay, you were a flag-
ment

Of Cneius Pompey's; besides what hotter hours, Unregister'd in vulgar fame, you have
Luxuriously pick'd out:—For I am sure,
Though you can guess what temperance should be
You know not what it is.

* The comparisons in which he indulges on reviewing his fortune and mine. † That am fallen. ‡ Of a piece with. § Quarrel. || Perhaps.

* Supposed to be an error for deputation, i. e. by proxy.
† Breath which all obey. ‡ Scramble. § A term of contempt. || Servant.

Cleo. Wherefore is this?

Ant. To let a fellow that will take rewards
And say, God quit you! be familiar with
My plaiterlow, your hand; this kingly seal,
And plighting of high hearts!—Oh! that I were
Upon the hill of Basan, to outstar
The horned herd! for I have savage cause:
And to proclaim it civilly, were like
A halter'd neck, which does the hangman thank
For being yare * about him.—Is he whipp'd?

Re-enter ATTENDANTS, with THYRUS.

1 Att. Soundly, my lord.

Ant. Ciy'd he? and begg'd he pardon?

1 Att. He did ask favour.

Ant. If that thy father live, let him repent
Thou wast not made his daughter; and be thou
To follow Cesar in his triumph, since [sorely] Thou hast been whipp'd for following him:
henceforth,

The white hand of a lady fever thee,
Shake thou to look on't.—Get thee back to Cesar,
Tell him thy entertainment: Look thou sav,
He makes me angry with him, for he seems
Proud and disdainful, harping on what I am,
Not what he knew I was: He makes me angry;
And at this time most easy 'tis to do't;
When my good stars, that were my former guides,
Have empty left their orbs, and shot their fires
Into the abisin of hell. If he mislike
My speech, and what is done; tell him, he has Hipparchus, my enfranchis'd bondman, whom
He may at pleasure whip, or hang, or torture,
As he shall like, to quit † me: Urge it thou:
Hence, with thy stripes, begone. [Exit THYRUS.]

Cleo. Have you done yet?

Ant. Alack, your terrible moon
Is now eclips'd; and it portends alone
The fall of Antony!

Cleo. I must stay his time.

Ant. To flatter Cesar, would you mingle eyes
With one that ties his points?

Cleo. Not know me yet?

Ant. Cold-hearted toward me!

Cleo. Ah! dear, if I be so,

From my cold heart let heaven engender hail,
And poison it in the source; and the first stone
Drop in my neck; as it determines † so
Dissolve my life! The next Cesarion ‡ smite!
Till, by degrees, the memory of my womb,
Together with my brave Egyptians all,
By the discarding † of this pelleted storm,
Lie graveless; till the flies and gnats of Nile
Have buried them for prey!

Ant. I am satisfied.

Cesar sits down in Alexandria; where
I will oppose his fate. Our force by land
Hath nobly held: our sever'd navy too
Have knit again, and fleet, † threat'ning most sealike.

Where hast thou been, my heart?—Dost thou hear, lady?

If from the field I shall return once more
To kiss these lips, I will appear in blood;
I and my sword will earn our chronicle;
There is hope in it yet.

Cleo. That's my brave lord!

Ant. I will be treble-sinew'd, hearted, breath'd,
And fight maliciously: for when mine hours
Were nice and lucky, men did ransom lives
Of me for jests: but now, I'll set my teeth,
And send to darkness all that stop me.—Come,
Let's have one other gaudy night: call to me
All my sad captains, fill our bowls; once more
Let's mock the midnight bell.

Cleo. It is my birth-day:

I had thought to have held it poor; but, since
my lord

Is Antony again, I will be Cleopatra.

Ant. We'll yet do well.

Cleo. Call all his noble captains to my lord.

Ant. Do so, we'll speak to them; and to-night
I'll force

The wine peep through their scars.—Come on,
my queen;
There's sap in't yet. The next time I do fight,
I'll make death love me; for I will contend
Even with his pestilent scythe.

[Exit ANTONY, CLEOPATRA, and Attendants.]

Eno. Now he'll out-stare the lightning. To be furious,
Is, to be trighted out of fear: and, in that mood,

The dove will peck the estridge; * and I see still,
A diminution in our captain's brain
Restores his heart: When valour preys on reason,
It eats the sword it fights with. I will seek
Some way to leave him. [Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—CESAR'S Camp at Alexandria.

Enter CESAR, reading a Letter; AGRIPPA, MECANAS, and others.

Ces. He calls me boy; and chides, as he had power

To beat me out of Egypt: my messenger
He hath whipp'd with rods; dares me to personal combat;

Cesar to Antony:—Let the old ruffian know,
I have many other ways to die; mean time,
Laugh at his challenge.

Mec. Cesar must think,

When one so great begins to rage, he's hunted
Even to falling. Give him no breath, but now
Make boot † of his distraction: Never anger
Made good guard for itself.

Ces. Let our best heads

Know, that to-morrow the last of many battles
We mean to fight:—Within our files there are
Of those that serv'd Mark Antony but late,
Enough to fetch him in. See it be done;
And feast the army: we have store to do't,
And they have earn'd the waste. Poor Antony!
[Exit.]

SCENE II.—Alexandria.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter ANTONY, CLEOPATRA, ENOPARBUS, CHARMIAN, IRAS, ALEXAS, and others.

Ant. He will not fight with me, Domitius?

Eno. No.

Ant. Why should he not?

Eno. He thinks, being twenty times of better
fortune,
He is twenty men to one.

Ant. To-morrow, soldier,
By sea and land I'll fight: or I will live,
Or bathe my dying honour in the blood
Shall make it live again. Woe't thou fight well?

Eno. I'll strike; and cry, Take all.

Ant. Well said; come on.—

Call forth my household servants; let's to-night
Enter SERVANTS.

Be bounteous at our meal.—Give me thy hand,
Thou hast been rightly honest;—so hast thou;—
And thou,—and thou,—and thou:—you have serv'd me well,
And kings have been your fellows.

Cleo. What means this?

Eno. 'Tis one of those odd tricks, which ser-row shoots [Aside.]

Out of the mind.

Ant. And thou art honest too.

I wish, I could be made so many men; .

And all of you clapp'd up together in

* Handy. † Requite. ‡ Dissolves.
† Her son by Julius Cesar. † Floating. † Melting.

* Ostrich.

† Take advantage

An Antony; that I might do you service,
So good as you have done.

Serv. The gods forbid!

Ant. Well, my good fellows, wait on me to-night:

Scant not my cups; and make as much of me,
As when mine empire was your fellow too,
And suffer'd my command.

Cleo. What does he mean?

Eno. To make his followers weep.

Ant. Tend me to-night;

May be, it is the period of your duty:
Haply,* you shall not see me more: or if,
A mangled shadow: perchance, to-morrow
You'll serve another master. I look on you,
As one that takes his leave. Mine honest friends,
I turn you not away; but, like a master
Married to your good service, stay till death:
Tend me to-night two hours, I ask no more,
And the gods yield† you fort!

Eno. What mean you, Sir,
To give them this discomfort? Look, they weep;
And I, an ass, an onion-ey'd—for shame!
Transform us not to women.

Ant. Ho, ho, ho!

Now the witch take me, if I meant it thus!
Grace grow where those drops fall! My hearty
friends,

You take me in too dolorous a sense:
I spake to you for your comfort: did desire you
To burn this night with torches: Know, my hearts,

I hope well of to-morrow; and will lead you,
Where rather I'll expect victorious life,
Than death and honour. Let's to supper; come
And drown consideration. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same.—Before the Palace.

Enter two SOLDIERS, to their Guard.

1 Sold. Brother, good night: to-morrow is the day.

2 Sold. It will determine one way: fare you
well.

Heard you of nothing strange about the streets?

1 Sold. Nothing: What news?

2 Sold. Belike, 'tis but a rumour:

Good night to you.

1 Sold. Well, Sir, good night.

Enter two other SOLDIERS.

2 Sold. Soldiers,
Have careful watch.

3 Sold. And you: Good night, good night.

[The first two place themselves at their Posts.]

4 Sold. Here we: [They take their Posts.] and if to-morrow

Our navy thrive, I have an absolute hope
Our landmen will stand up.

3 Sold. 'Tis a brave army,
And full of purpose.

[Music of Hautboys under the Stage.]

4 Sold. Peace, what noise?

1 Sold. List, list!

2 Sold. Hark!

1 Sold. Music! 'tis the air.

2 Sold. Under the earth.

4 Sold. It signs § well,
Doesn't not?

3 Sold. No.

1 Sold. Peace, I say. What should this mean?

2 Sold. 'Tis the god Hercules, whom Antony
lov'd,

Now leaves him.

1 Sold. Walk; let's see if other watchmen
Do hear what we do.

[They advance to another Post.]

2 Sold. How now, masters?

Sold. How now?

How now! do you hear this?

[Several speaking together.]

* Perhaps,

† Reward.
‡ Bodes.

§ Desist.

1 Sold. Ay! Is't not strange?

3 Sold. Do you hear, masters? do you hear?

1 Sold. Follow the noise so far as we have quarter;

Let's see how't will give off.

Sold. [Several speaking.] Content: 'Tis strange. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—The same.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter ANTONY and CLEOPATRA; CHARMIAN, and others, attending.

Ant. Eros! mine armour, Eros!

Cleo. Sleep a little.

Ant. No, my chuck,—Eros, come; mine armour, Eros!

Enter EROS, with Armour.

Come, my good fellow, put thine iron on:—

If fortune be not our's to-day, it is Because we brave her.—Come.

Cleo. Nay, I'll help too.

What's this for?

Ant. Ah, let be, let be! thou art [this.]

The armourer of my heart:—False, false; this,

Cleo. Sooth, la, I'll help: Thus it must be.

Ant. Well, well; [tell?]

We shall thrive now.—See'st thou, my good
Go, put on thy defences.

Eros. Briefly,* Sir.

Cleo. Is not this buckled well?

Ant. Rarely, rarely:

He that unbuckles this, till we do please

To doff† for our repose, shall hear a storm.—

Thou fumbliest, Eros; and my queen's a quite

More tight† at this, than thou: Despatch,—O

love, [knew'st]

That thou could'st see my wars to-day, and

The royal occupation! thou should'st see

Enter an OFFICER, armed.

A workman in't.—Good morrow to thee; welcome: [Charge:]

Thou look'st like him that knows a warlike

To business that we love, we rise betime,

And go to it with delight.

1 Off. A thousand, Sir,

Early though it be, have on your rivetted trim

And at the port expect you.

[Shout. Trumpets. Flourish.]

Enter other OFFICERS, and SOLDIERS.

2 Off. The morn is fair.—Good morrow, general.

All. Good morrow, general.

Ant. 'Tis well blown, lads.

This morning, like the spirit of a youth

That means to be of note, begins betimes.—

So, so; come, give me that: this way; well
said.

Fare thee well, dame, whate'er becomes of me:
This is a soldier's kiss: rebukable, [Kisses her.]

And worthy shameful check it were, to stand

On more mechanic compliment; I'll leave thee

Now, like a man of steel.—You, that will fight,

Follow me close; I'll bring you to't.—Adieu.

[Exeunt ANTONY, EROS, OFFICERS, and

SOLDIERS.]

Char. Please you, retire to your chamber?

He goes forth gallantly. That he and Cesar might Determine this great war in single fight!

Then, Antony,—But now,—Well, on.

[Exeunt]

SCENE V.—ANTONY's Camp near Alexandria.

*Trumpets sound.—Enter ANTONY and EROS;
a SOLDIER meeting them.*

Sold. The gods make this a happy day to Antony.

* Shortly.

† Adieu.

Ant. Would, thou and those thy scars had once prevail'd

To make me right at land;

Sold. Had'st thou done so,

The kings that have revolted, and the soldier

That has this morning left thee, would have still follow'd thy heels.

Ant. Who's gone this morning?

Sold. Who?

One ever near thee: Call for Enocharbus,

He shall not hear thee; or from Cesar's camp

Say, I am none of thine.

Ant. What say'st thou?

Sold. Sir,

He is with Cesar

Eros. Sir, his chests and treasure

He has not with him.

Ant. Is he gone?

Sold. Most certain.

Ant. Go, Eros, send his treasure after; do it;

Detain no jot, I charge thee: write to him

(I will subscribe) gentle adieus and greetings:

Say, that I wish he never find more cause

To change a master.—Oh! my fortunes have Corrupted honest men:—Eros, despatch.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—CESAR'S Camp before Alexandria.

Flourish.—Enter CESAR with AGRIPPA, ENO-
CHARBUS, and others.

Ces. Go forth, Agrippa, and begin the fight;

Ours will is, Antony be took alive;

Make it so known.

Ag. Cesar, I shall. [Exit AGRIPPA.]

Ces. The time of universal peace is near:

Prove this a prosperous day, the three-hoof'd shall bear the olive freely. [work]

Enter a MESSENGER.

Mess. Antony

Is come into the field.

Ces. Go, charge Agrippa

Plant those that have revolted in the van,

That Antony may seem to spend his fury
Upon himself.

[Exeunt CESAR and his Train.]

Eno. Alexas did revolt: and went to Jewry,

On affairs of Antony; there did persuade

Great Herod to incline himself to Cesar,

And leave his master Antony: for his pains,

Cesar hath hang'd him. Caudius, and the rest

That fell away, have entertainment, but

No honourable trust. I have done ill

Of which I do accuse myself so sorely,

That I will joy no more.

Enter a SOLDIER of CESAR'S.

Sold. Enocharbus, Antony

Hath after thee sent all thy treasure, with

His bounty overplus: The messenger

Came on my guard; and at thy tent is now,

Unloading of his mules.

Eno. I give it you.

Sold. Mock me not, Enocharbus.

I tell you true: Best that you say'd the bringer

Out of the host: I must attend mine office,

Or would have done't myself. Your emperor Continues still a Jove.

[Exit SOLDIER.]

Eno. I am alone the villain of the earth,

And feel I am so most. O Antony,

Thou meed of bounty, how would'st thou have paid

My better service, when my turpitude

Thou dost so crown with gold! This blows * my heart.

If swift thought break it not, a swifter mean
Shall outstrike thought: but thought † will do't,
I feel.

I fight against thee!—No: I will go seek
Some ditch, wherein to die; the foul'st best fits
My latter part of life. [Exit.]

* Swells.

† Conscience.

SCENE VII.—Field of Battle between the Camps.

Alarum.—Drums and trumpets.—Enter
AGRIPPA, and others.

Ag. Retire, we have engag'd ourselves too far;
Cesar himself has work, and our oppression
Exceeds what we expected. [Exeunt.]

Alarum.—Enter ANTONY, and SCARUS wounded.

Scar. O my brave emperor, this is fought indeed!

Had we done so at first, we had driven them
With clouts about their heads. [Hoine]

Ant. Thou bleed'st apace.

Scar. I had a wound here that was like a T.
But now 'tis made an H.

Ant. They do retire.

Scar. We'll beat 'em into berge-holes; I have yet
Room for six scotches * more.

Enter EROS.

Eros. They are beaten, Sir; and our advantage
For a fair victory: [serves]

Scar. Let us score their backs,

And snatch 'em up, as we take hares, behind;

'Tis sport to maul a runner.

Ant. I will reward thee

Once for thy spritely comfort, and ten fold

For thy good valour. Come thee on.

Scar. I'll halt after. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VIII.—Under the walls of Alexandria.

Alarum. Enter ANTONY, marching; SCARUS, and Forces.

Ant. We have beat him to his camp; Run one before. [row,]

And let the queen know of our guests.—To-morrow the sun shall see us, we'll s, ill the blood

That ha- to-day escap'd. I thank you all;

For doughty †-handed are you: and have fought

Not as you serv'd the cause, but as it had been

Each man's like mine; you have shown all

Hectors.

Enter the city, clasp your wives, your friends,

Tell them your feats; whilst they, with joyful

tears, [kiss]

Wash the congealment from your wounds, and

The honour'd gashes whole.—Give me thy hand;

[To SCARUS.]

Enter CLEOPATRA, attended.

To this great fairy ‡ I'll commend thy acts,
Make her thanks bless thee.—O thou day o'the
world,

Chain mine arm'd neck; leap thou, attire and all,

Through proof of harness to my heart and thine

Ride on the pants triumphing.

Cleo. Lord of lords!

O infinite virtue! com'st thou smiling from

The world's great snare uncaught?

Ant. My nightingale,

We have beat them to their beds. What, girl, though grey [we]

Do something mingle with our brow; yet have

A brain that nourishes our nerves, and can

Get gaul for gaul of youth. Behold this man;

Commend unto his lips thy favouring hand;—

Kiss it, my warrior!—He hath fought to-day,

As if a god, in hate of mankind, had

Destroy'd in such a shape.

Cleo. I'll give thee, friend,

An amour all of gold: it was a king's.

Ant. He has deserv'd it, were it carbuncled

Like holy Phœbus' car.—Give me thy hand;

Through Alexandria make a jolly march;

* Cuts.

† Brave.

‡ Embrace.

§ Beauty, united with power, was the characteristic of fairies.

Bear our back'd targets like the men that owe them : *

Had our great palace the capacity
To camp this host, we all would sup together,
And drink carouses to the next day's fate,
Which promises royal peril.—Trumpeters,
With brazen din blast you the city's ear ;
Make mangle with our rattling tabourines ;
That heaven and earth may strike their sounds
together,

Applauding our approach. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IX.—CESAR'S Camp.

SENTINELS on their Post. Enter ENOBARBUS.

1 Sold. If we be not reliev'd within this hour,
We must return to the court of guard : † The
night

Is shiny ; and, they say, we shall embattle
By the second hour 't' the morn.

2 Sold. This last day was

A shrewd one to us.

Eno. O bear me witness, night !—

3 Sold. What man is this ?

2 Sold. Stand close, and list to him.

Eno. B' witness to me, O thou blessed moon,
When men revolted shall upon record
Bear hateful memory, poor Enobarbus did
Before thy face repent !—

1 Sold. Enobarbus !

3 Sold. Peace ;

Hark further.

Eno. O sovereign mistress of true melancholy,
The poisonous damp of night dispense ‡ upon me ;
That life, a very rebel to my will,
May hang no longer on me : Throw my heart
Against the flint and hardness of my fault ;
Which, being dried with grief, will break to powder,

And finish all fond thoughts. O Antony,

Nobler than my revolt is infamous,

Forgive me in thine own particular ;

But let the world rank me in register

A master-leaver, and a fugitive :

O Antony ! O Antony !

2 Sold. Let's speak

To him.

1 Sold. Let's hear him, for the things he speaks
May concern Cesar.

3 Sold. Let's do so. But he sleeps.

1 Sold. swoons rather ; for so bad a prayer
as his

Was never yet for sleeping.

2 Sold. Go we to him.

3 Sold. Awake, awake, Sir ; speak to us.

2 Sold. Hear you, Sir.

1 Sold. The hand of death hath raught § him.

Hark, the drums

[Drums afar off.]

Demurely wake the sleepers. Let us hear him
To the court of guard ; he is of note : our hour
Is fully out.

3 Sold. Come on then ;

He may recover yet.

[Exeunt with the Body.]

SCENE X.—Between the two Camps.

Enter ANTONY and SCARUS, with Forces marching.

Ant. Their preparation is to-day by sea ;
We please them not by land.

Scar. For both, my lord.

Ant. I would, they'd fight 't' the fire, or in the air :

We'd fight there too. But this it is : Our foot
Upon the hills adjoining to the city,

Shall stay with us ; order for sea is given ;

They have put forth the haven : Further on,

Where their appointment we may best discover,
And look on their endeavour. [Exeunt.]

* As becomes the warriors that own them. † The guard-room. ‡ Four out, as a sponge when squeezed. § The ancient pretense of reach.

Enter CESAR with his Forces, marching.

Ces. But being charg'd, we will be still by land,
Which, as I take't, we shall ; for his best force
Is forth to man his gallees. To the vails,
And hold our best advantage. [Exeunt.]

Re-enter ANTONY and SCARUS.

Ant. Yet they're not join'd : Where yonder
pine does stand,
I shall discover all ; I'll bring thee word
Straight how 'tis like to go. [Exit.]

Scar. Swallows have built
In Cleopatra's sails their nests : the anguereis Say, they know rot,—they cannot tell,—look grimly,

And dare not speak their knowledge. Antony
Is valiant and dejected ; and, by starts,
His fifted fortunes give him hope and fear,
Of what he has and has not.

Alarm afar off, as at a Sea Fight.

Re-enter ANTONY.

Ant. All is lost !

This foul Egyptian hath betrayed me :

My fleet have yielded to the foe ; and yonder

They cast their caps up, and carouse together

Like friends long lost.—Triple-turn'd whore ! *

'tis thou

Hast sold me to this novice ; and my heart

Makes only wars on thee.—Bid them all fly :

For when I am reveng'd upon my charm,

I have done all.—Bid them all fly, begone.

[Exit SCARUS.]

O sun, thy uprise shall I see no more :

Fortune and Antony part here ; even here

Do we shake hands.—All come to this !—The hearts

That spawld me at heels, to whom I gave

Their wishes, do discandy, melt their sweets

On blossoming Cesar ; and this pine is bark'd,

That overtopp'd them all. Betray'd I am :

O this false soul of Egypt ! this grave charm,

Whose eye beck'd † forth my wars, and call'd ‡

them home ;

Whose bosom was my crownnet, my chief end,

Like a right gipsy, hath, at fast and loose, §

Beguild me to the very heart of loss.—

What, Eros, Eros !

Enter CLEOPATRA.

Ah ! thou spell ! Avaunt.

Cleo. Why is my lord enrag'd against his love ?

Ant. Vanish ; or I shall give thee thy deserv-
ing,

And blemish Cesar's triumph. Let him take thee,

And hoist thee up to the shouting plebeians :

Follow his chariot, like the greatest spot

Of all thy sex ; most monster-like, be shown

For poor'st diminutives, to dolts : ¶ and let

Patient Octavia plough thy visage up

With her prepared nails. [Exit CLEO.] 'Tis well thou'rt gone.

If it be well to live : But better 'twere

Thou fell'st into my fury, for one death

Might have prevented many.—Eros, ho !—

The shirt of Nessus is upon me : Trach me,

Alcides, ¶ thou mine ancestor, thy rage :

Let me lodge Lichas  on the horns o' the moon ;

And with those hands, that gasp'd the heaviness
clow,

Subdue my worstiest self. The witch shall die ;

To the Roman boy she hath sold me, and I fall
Under this plot : she dies to't.—Eros, ho !

[Exit.]

* Cleopatra first belonged to Julius Cesar, then to Antony, and now, as Antony supposes, to Augustus.

† This majestic beauty.

‡ Called forth.

§ A cheating game, at present named pricking at the belt.

¶ For the smallest piece of money to clowns.

¶ Hercules.

 The boy that brought the poisoned shirt to Hercules.

SCENE XI.—Alexandria.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, IRAS, and MARDIAN.

Cleo. Help me, my women! Oh, he is more mad Than Telamon* for his shield; the boar of Was never so embosom'd† [Thessaly Char. To the monument; There lock yourself, and send him word you are dead.

The soul and body rive;† not more in parting. Than greatness going off.

Cleo. To the monument:—Mardian, go tell him I have slain myself; Say, that the last I spoke was, Antony; And word it, prythee, piteously: Hence, Mardian; and bring me how he takes my death.—To the monument. [Exit M.]

SCENE XII.—The same.—Another Room.

Enter ANTONY and EROS.

Ant. Eros, thou yet behold'st me?

Eros. Ay, noble lord.

Ant. Sometime, we see a cloud that's dragonish; A vapour, sometime, like a bear, or lion, A tower'd citadel, a pendant rock, A forked mountain, or blue promontory With trees upon't, that nod unto the world, And mock our eyes with air: Thou hast seen these signs;

They are black vespers' pageants.

Eros. Ay, my lord.

Ant. That, which is now a horse, even with a thought, The rack & dislimbs; and makes it indistinct, As water is in water.

Eros. It does, my lord.

Ant. My good knave,|| Eros, now thy captain I've such a body: here I am Antony; [is Yet cannot hold this visible shape, my knave. I made these wars for Egypt; and the queen,— Whose heart, I thought, I had, for she had mine—

(Which, whilst it was mine, had annex'd unto't. A million more, now lost)—she, Eros, has Puck'd cards with Cesar and false play'd my Unto an enemy's triumph.— [glory Nay, weep not, gentle Eros; there is left us Ourselves to end ourselves.—Oh! thy vile lady!

Enter MARDIAN.

She has robb'd me of my sword.

Mar. No, Antony;

My mistress lov'd thee, and her fortunes mingled With thine entirely.

Ant. Hence, saucy eunuch; peace:

She hath betray'd me, and shall die the death.

Mar. Death of one person can be paid but once;

And that she has discharg'd: What thou would'st do,

Is done unto thy hand; the last she spake

Was, Antony! most noble Antony!

Then in the midst a tearing groan did break

The name of Antony, it was divided

Between her heart and lips: she render'd life,

Thy name so buried in her.

Ant. Dead then?

Mar. Dead.

Ant. Eros, unarm: the long day's task is done,

And we must sleep:—That thou depart'st hence safe,

Does pay thy labour richly; Go.—Off, pluck off;— [Exit MARDIAN.

The seven-fold shield of Ajax cannot keep

The battery from my heart. O cleave, my sides!

Heart, once be stronger than thy continent,* Crack thy frail case!—Apace, Eros, apace. No more a soldier!—Bruised pieces, go: You have been nobly borne.—From me awhile.— [Exit Eros.

I will o'ertake thee, Cleopatra, and Weep for my pardon. So it must be, for now All length is torture:—Since the torch is out, Lie down, and stay no further: Now all labour Mars what it does; yea, very force entangles Itself with strength: Seal then,† and all is done.—

Eros!—I come, my queen:—Eros!—Stay for me Where souls do couch on flowers, we'll hand in hand,

And with our sprightly port make the ghosts gaze: Dido and her Aeneas shall want troops, And all the haunt be ours.—Come, Eros, Eros!

Re-enter EROS.

Eros. What would my lord?

Ant. Since Cleopatra died, I have liv'd in such dishonour, that the gods Detest my baseness. I, that with my sword Quarter'd the world, and o'er green Neptune's back

With ships made cities, condemn myself, to lack The courage of a woman; less noble mind Than she, which, by her death, our Cesar tells, I am conqueror of myself. Thou art sworn,

Eros, [now That, when the exigent should come, (which is come indeed) when I should see behind me The inevitable prosecution of Disgrace and horror, that, on my command, Thou then would'st kill me: do't; the time is come:

Thou strik'st not me, 'tis Cesar thou defeat'st.

Put colour in thy cheek.

Eros. The gods withhold me!

Shall I do that, which all the Parthian darts, Though enemy, lost aim and could not?

Ant. Eros, [see Would'st thou be window'd in great Rome, and Thy master thus with pleach'd; arms, bending down

His corrigible neck, his face subdued To penetrative shame; whilst the wheel'd seat Of fortunate Cesar, drawn before him, branded His baseness that ensue'd?

Eros. I would not see't.

Ant. Come then; for with a wound I must be cur'd.

Draw that thy honest sword, which thou hast worn Most useful for thy country.

Eros. O Sir! pardon me.

Ant. When I did make thee free, swor'st thou not then

To do this when I bade thee? Do it at once;

Or thy precedent services are all

But accidents un purpos'd. Draw and come.

Eros. Turn from me then that noble countenance

Wherein the worship of the whole world lies.

Ant. Lo thee. [Turning from him.

Eros. My sword is drawn.

Ant. Then let it do at once

The thing why thou hast drawn it

Eros. My dear master,

My captain, and my emperor! let me say,

Before I strike this bloody stroke, farewell.

Ant. 'Tis said, man,—and farewell.

Eros. Farewell, great chief. Shall I strike now?

Ant. Now, Eros.

Eros. Why, there then:—

[Falls on his Sword.

Thus do I escape the sorrow

Of Antony's death. [Dies.

Ant. Thrice nobler than myself!

Thou teachest me, O valiant Eros, what

* Ajax Telamon for the shield of Achilles.

† Imbosom, in hunting, is when the animal forms at the mouth. ‡ Split. § The track, or form, destroys.

|| Servant.

* Than the body which contains thee

† A metaphor borrowed from civil contracts.

† A metaphor borrowed from civil contracts.

‡ Corrected.

Corroding.

I should, and thou could'st not. My queen and Eros

Have, by their brave instruction, got upon me
A nobleness in record; but I will be
A bridegroom in my death, and run into't
As to a lover's bed. Come then; and, Eros,
Thy master dies thy scholar: to do thus

[Falling on his Sword.

I learn'd of thee. How! not yet dead? not dead?—

The guard!—ho!—Oh! despatch me.

Enter DERCETAS and GUARD.

1 Guard. What's the noise?

Ant. I have done my work ill, friends; Oh! make an end
Of what I have begun.

2 Guard. The star is fallen.

1 Guard. And time is at his period.

All. Alas, and woe!

Ant. Let him that loves me, strike me dead.

1 Guard. Not I.

2 Guard. Nor I.

3 Guard. Nor any one. [Exeunt GUARD.

Der. Thy death and fortunes bid thy followers fly.

This sword but shown to Cesar, with this tidings,
Shall enter me with him.

Enter DIOMEDES.

Dio. Where's Antony?

Der. There, Diomed, there.

Dio. Lives he?

Will thou not answer, man? [Exit DERCETAS.

Ant. Art thou there, Diomed? Draw thy sword, and give me
Sufficing strokes for death.

Dio. Most absolute lord,
My mistress Cleopatra sent me to thee.

Ant. When did she send thee?

Dio. Now, my lord.

Ant. Where is she?

Dio. Lock'd in her monument. She had a prophesying fear
Of what hath come pass; for when she saw
(Which never should be found,) you did suspect
She had dispos'd* with Cesar, and that your rage

Would not be purg'd, she sent you word she was dead;

But, fearing since how it might work, hath sent me
To proclaim the truth; and I am come,
I dread, too late.

Ant. Too late, good Diomed:—Call my guard,
I pray thee.

Dio. What, ho! the emperor's guard! The guard, what ho!
Come, your lord calls.

Enter some of the GUARD.

Ant. Bear me, good friends, where Cleopatra bides:

'Tis the last service that I shall command you.

1 Guard. Woe are we, Sir, you may not live to wear

All your true followers out.

All. Most heavy day!

Ant. Nay, good my fellows, do not please sharp fate

To grace it with your sorrows: bid that welcome
Which comes to punish us, and we punish it Seeming to bear it lightly. Take me up:
have led you off; carry me now, good friends,
And have my thanks for all.

[Exeunt, bearing ANTONY.

SCENE XIII.—The same.—A Monument.

Enter above, CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, and IRAS.

Cleo. O Charmian, I will never go from hence.
Char. Be comforted, dear madam.

Cleo. No, I will not:

* Made terms with

All strange and terrible events are welcome,
But comforts we despise; our size of sorrow,
Proportion'd to our cause, must be as great

Enter DIOMEDES.

As that which makes it.—How now? is he dead?

Dio. His death's upon him, but not dead.

Look out o'the other side your monument,
His guard hath brought him thither.

Enter ANTONY, borne by the GUARD.

Cleo. O thou sun,
Burn the great sphere thou mov'st in!—darkling* stand

The varying shore o'the world!—O Antony!
Antony, Antony!—Charmian, help; help, Iras:
Help, friends below; let's draw him hither.

Ant. Peace:

Not Cesar's valour hath o'erthrown Antony,
But Antony's hath triumphed on itself.

Cleo. So it should be, that none but Antony
Should conquer Antony: but woe 'tis so!

Ant. I am dying, Egypt, dying; only

I here importune death a while, until

Of many thousand kisses the poor last

I lay upon thy lips.—

Cleo. I dare not, dear

(Dear my lord, pardon,) I dare not,
Lest I be taken: not the imperious show

Of the full-figur'd Cesar ever shall Be brooch'd† with me: it knife, drugs, serpents, have

Edge, sting, or operation, I am safe:

Your wife Octavia, with her modest eyes,

And still conclusion, shall acquire no honour Demurring upon me.—But come, come, Antony,—

Help me, my women, we must draw thee up:—
Assist, good friends.

Ant. O quick, or I am gone.

Cleo. Here's sport, indeed!—How heavy weighs
my lord!

Our strength is all gone into heaviness,
That makes the weight: Had I great Juno's
power,

The strong-wing'd Mercury should fetch thee up,
And set thee by Jove's side. Yet come a little,—

Wishers were ever fools;—O come, come, come,
[They draw ANTONY up.

And welcome, welcome! die where thou hast
liv'd:

Quicken with kissing; had my lips that power,
Thou wouldst I wear them out.

All. A heavy sight!

Ant. I am dying, Egypt, dying:

Give me some wine, and let me speak a little.

Cleo. No, let me speak; and let me rail so high,

That the false housewife Fortune break her
Provok'd by my offence. [wheel

Ant. One word, sweet queen:

Of Cesar seek your honour, with your safety.—O!

Cleo. They do not go together.

Ant. Gentle, hear me:

None about Cesar trust, but Procneus.

Cleo. My resolution, and my hands, I'll trust;
None about Cesar.

Ant. The miserable change now at my end,
Lament nor sorrow at: but please your thoughts,
In feeding them with those my former fortunes
Wherein I liv'd, the greatest prince o'the world,
The noblest; and do now not basely die,
Nor cowardly; put off my helmet to
My countryman; a Roman, by a Roman,
Vainly vanquish'd. Now, my spirit is going;
I can no more. [Dies.

Cleo. Noblest of men, woo't die?

Hast thou no care of me? shall I abide

In this dull world, which in thy absence is

No better than a sty?—O see, my women,
The crown o'the earth doth melt:—My lord!—

* Without light.

† Adorned.

Oh! wither'd is the garland of the war,
The soldier's pole* is fallen; young boys, and girls,
Are level now with men: the odds is gone,
And there is nothing left remarkable,
Beneath the visiting moon. [She faints.]

Char. O quietness, lady!

Iras. She is dead too, our sovereign.

Char. Lady,—

Iras. Madam,—

Char. O madam, madam, madam!

Iras. Royal Egypt!
Empress!

Char. Peace, peace, Iras.

Cleo. No more, but e'en a woman; and commanded

By such poor passion as the maid that milks,
And does the meanest chares.†—It were for me
To throw my sceptre at the injurious gods;
To tell them, that this world did equal theirs,
Till they had stolen our jewel. All's but naught;
Patience is scottish; and impatience does
Become a dog that's mad: Then, is it sin,
To rush into the secret house of death,
Ere death dare come to us?—How do you,
women?

What, what? good cheer? Why, how now,
Charman?

My noble girls!—Ah, women, women! look,
Our lamp is spent, it's out:—Good Sirs, take
heart:—

[To the GUARD below.]

We'll bury him: and then, what's brave, what's noble,

Let's do it after the high Roman fashion,
And make death proud to take us. Come, away:
This case of that huge spirit now is cold.
Ah, women, women! come; we have no friend
But resolution, and the briefest end.

[Exeunt: those above bearing off ANTONY's Body.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Cleopatra's Camp before Alexandria.

*Enter CESAR, AGRIPPA, DOLABELLA, MECEN-
AS, GALLUS, PROCULEIUS, and others.*

Ces. Go to him, Dolabella, bid him yield;
Bring so frustrate,‡ tell him, he mocks us by
The pances that he makes.

Dol. Cesar, I shall.

[Exit DOLABELLA.]

Enter DERCETAS, with the sword of ANTONY.

Ces. Wherefore is that? and what art thou, that dar'st

Appear thus § to us?

Der. I am call'd Dercetas: best
Mark Antony I serv'd, who best was worthy
Best to be serv'd: whilst he stood up and spoke,
He was my master; and I wore my life,
To spend upon his haters: If thou please
To take me to thee, as I was to him
I'll be to Cesar; if thou pleasest not,
I yield thee up my life.

Ces. What is't thou say'st?

Der. I say, O Cesar, Antony is dead.

Ces. The breaking of so great a thing should make [shook]

A greater crack: The round world should have Lions into civil streets,
And citizens to their dens:—The death of Antony is not a single doom; in the name lay
A moiety of the world.

Der. He is dead, Cesar;
Not by a public minister of justice,
Nor by a hired knife: but that self hand,
Which writ his honour in the acts it did,

Hath, with the courage which the heart did lend it,

Split the heart.—This is his sword,
I robb'd his wound of it: behold it stain'd
With his most noble blood.

Ces. Look you sad, friends?

The gods rebuke me, but it is a tidings
To wash the eyes of kings.

Agr. And strange it is,
That nature must compel us to lament
Our most persisted deeds.

Mec. His taints and honours
Waged equal with him.

Agr. A rarer spirit never

Did steer humanity: but you, gods, will give us
Some faults to make us men. Cesar is touch'd.

Mec. When such a spacious mirror's set before him,

He needs must see himself.

Ces. O Antony!

I have follow'd thee to this:—But we do lance
Diseases in our bodies: I must perforce
Have shown to thee such a declining day,
Or look on thine; we could not stall together
In the whole world: But yet let me lament,
With tears as sovereign as the blood of hearts,
That thou, my brother, my competitor
In top of all design, my mate in empire,
Friend and companion in the front of war,
The arm of mine own body, and the heart
Where mine his* thoughts did kindle,—that our stars,
Unreconcilable, should divide
Our equalness to this.—Hear me, good friends,—
But I will tell you at some meetest season;

Enter a MESSENGER.

The business of this man looks out of him,
We'll hear him what he says.—Whence are you?

Mess. A poor Egyptian yet. The queen my mistress,
Commend'd in all she has, her monument,
Of thy intents desires instruction:
That she preparedly may frame herself
To the way she's forced to.

Ces. Bid her have good heart;

She soon shall know of us, by some of ours,
How honourable and how kindly we Determine for her: for Cesar cannot live
To be ungentle.

Mess. So the gods preserve thee! [Exit.]

Ces. Come hither, Proculeius: Go, and say,
We purpose her no shame: give her what comforts

The quality of her passion shall require;
Lest, in her greatness, by some mortal stroke
She do defeat us; for her life in Rome,
Would be eternal in our triumph: Go,
And, with your speediest, bring us what she says,
And how you find of her.

Pro. Cesar I shall.

[Exit PROCULEIUS]

Ces. Gallus, go you along.—Where's Dolabella,

To second Proculeius?

[Exit GALLUS.]

Agr. Mec. Dolabella!

Ces. Let him alone, for I remember now
How he's employed: he shall in time be ready.
Go with me to my tent, where you shall see
How hardly I was drawn into this war;
How calm and gentle I proceeded still
In all my writings: Go with me, and see
What I can show in this.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Alexandria.—A Room in the Monument.

Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMAIN, and IRAS.

Cleo. My desolation does begin to make
A better life: 'Tis paltry to be Cesar;
Not being fortune, he's but fortune's knave,†

* The soldier's object of admiration. † Task-work.
‡ Frustrated. § With Antony's bloody sword.

* Ita.

† Servant.

A minister of her will; And it is great
To do that thing that ends all other deeds;
Which shackles accidents, and bolts up change;
Which sleeps, and never palates more the dung,
The beggar's nurse and Cesar's.

Enter, to the Gates of the Monument, PROCULEIUS, GALLUS, and Soldiers.

Pro. Cesar sends greeting to the queen of Egypt;

And bids thee study on what fair demands
Thou mean'st to have him grant thee.

Cleo. [Within.] What's thy name?

Pro. My name is Proculeius.

Cleo. [Within.] Antony

Did tell me of you, bade me trust you; but I do not greatly care to be deceiv'd,
That have no use for trusting. If your master
Would have a queen his beggar, you must tell him,
That majesty, to keep decorum, must
No less beg than a kingdom: if he please
To give me conquer'd Egypt for my son,
He gives me so much of mine own, as I
Will kneel to him with thanks.

Pro. Be of good cheer:

You are fallen into a princely hand; fear nothing;

Make your full reference freely to my lord,
Who is so full of grace, that it flows over
On all that need: Let me report to him
Your sweet dependancy; and you shall find
A conqueror, that will pray in aid for kindness,
Where he for grace is kneel'd to.

Cleo. [Within.] Pray you, tell him
I am his fortune's vassal, and I send him
The greatness he has got.* I hourly learn
A doctrine of obedience, and would gladly
Look him i' the face.

Pro. This I'll report, dear lady.

Have comfort: for I know your plight is pitied
Of him that caus'd it.

Gal. You see how easily she may be surpriz'd;

[Here PROCULEIUS, and two of the Guard, ascend the Monument by a Ladder placed against a Window, and having descended, come behind CLEOPATRA. Some of the Guard unbar and open the Gates.]

Guard her till Cesar come.

[To PROCULEIUS and the Guard. Exit.
GALLUS.]

Jras. Royal queen!

Char. O Cleopatra! thou art taken, queen!

Cleo. Quick, quick, good hands.

[Drawing a Dagger.]

Pro. Hold, worthy lady, hold:

[Seizes and disarms her.]

Do not yourself such wrong, who are in this Reliev'd, but not betray'd.

Cleo. What, of death too?

That rides our dogs of languish?

Pro. Cleopatra,
Do not abuse my master's bounty, by
The undoing of yourself: let the world see
His nobleness well acted, which your death
Will never let come forth.

Cleo. Where art thou, death?
Come hither, come I come, come, and take a queen
Worth many babes and beggars!

Pro. O temperance, lady!

Cleo. Sir, I will eat no meat, I'll not drink,
If idle talk will only be necessary, [Sir]
I'll not sleep neither: This mortal house I'll ruin,

Do Cesar what he can. Know, Sir, that I
Will not wait pinion'd† at your master's court;
Nor once be chastis'd with the sober eye
Of dull Octavia. Shall they hoist me up,
And show me to the shouting varlety?
Of censuring Rome? Rather a ditch in Egypt
Be gentle grave to me! rather on Nilus' mud
Lay me stark naked, and let the water-flics

* The crown which he has won ‡ Battle.

† In bonds.

Bow me into abhorring! rather make
My country's high pyramids my gibbet,
And hang me up in chains!

Pro. You do extend
These thoughts of horror further than you shall Find cause in Cesar.

Enter DOLABELLA.

Dol. Proculeius,
What thou hast done thy master Cesar knows,
And he hath sent for thee: as for the queen,
I'll take her to my guard.

Pro. So, Dolabella,
It shall content me best: be gentle to her.—
To Cesar I will speak what you shall please.

[To CLEOPATRA.]

If you'll employ me to him.

Cleo. Say, I would die.

[Exit PROCULEIUS, and Soldiers.]

Dol. Most noble empress, you have heard of
me?

Cleo. I cannot tell.

Dol. Assuredly, you know me.

Cleo. No matter, Sir, what I have heard, or known.

You laugh, when boys, or women, tell their dreams;

Is't not your trick?

Dol. I understand not, madam.

Cleo. I dream'd, there was an emperor Antony:—

Oh! such another sleep, that I might see
But such another man!

Dol. If it might please you,—

Cleo. His face was as the heavens; and therein stuck

A sun and moon; which kept their course, and lighted

The little O, the earth.

Dol. Most sovereign creature,—

Cleo. His legs bestrid the ocean: his rear'd arm

Crested the world: his voice was propetied
As all the tuned spheres, and that to friends;
But when he meant to quail* and shake the
orb,

He was as rattling thunder. For his bounty,
There was no winter in't; an autumn 'twas,
That grew the more by reaping: His delights
Were dolphin-like; they show'd his back above
The element they liv'd in: In his livery Walk'd crows and crownets; realms and islands were

As plates† dropp'd from his pocket.

Dol. Cleopatra,—

Cleo. Think you there was, or might be, such a man

As this I dream'd of?

Dol. Gentle madam, no.

Cleo. You lie, up to the hearing of the gods.

But, if there be, or ever were one such,
It's past the size of dreaming: Nature wants stuff

To vie strange forms with fancy; yet, to image An Antony, were nature's piece 'gainst fancy, Condemning shadows quite.

Dol. Hear me, good madam:

Your loss is as yourself, great; and you bear it
As answering to the weight: 'Would I might never

O'ertake pursu'd success, but I do feel,
By the rebound of yours, a grief that shoots
My very heart at root.

Cleo. I thank you, Sir

Know you what Cesar means to do with me?

Dol. I am loath to tell you what I would you knew.

Cleo. Nay, pray you, Sir,—

Dol. Though he be honourable,—

Cleo. He'll lead me then in triumph?

Dol. Madam, he will:

I know it.

Within. Make way there,—Cesar.

* Crush.

† Silver money.

Enter CESAR, GALLUS, PROCULEIUS, MECÆNAS, SELVUS, and Attendants.

Ces. Which is the queen
Of Egypt?

Dol. 'Tis the emperor, madam.
[CLEOPATRA kneels.]

Ces. Arise:

You shall not kneel:—

I pray you, rise: rise, Egypt.

Cleo. Sir, the gods

Will have it thus; my master and my lord
I must obey.

Ces. Take to you no hard thoughts:

The record of what injuries you did us,

Though written in our flesh, we shall remember
As things but done by chance.

Cleo. Sole Sir o'the world,
I cannot project * mine own cause so well
To make it clear; but to confess, I have Been laden with like fruitless, which before
Have often sham'd our sex.

Ces. Cleopatra, know,
We will extenuate rather than enforce:
If you apply yourself to our intents,
(Which towards you are most gentle,) you shall find

A benefit in this change: but if you seek
To lay on me a cruelty, by taking Antony's course, you shall bereave yourself
Of my good purposes, and put your children
To that destruction which I'll guard them from,
If thereon you rely. I'll take my leave.

Cleo. And may, through all the world: 'tis yours: and we
Your 'scutcheons, and your signs of conquest, shall

Hang in what place you please. Here, my good
Ces. You shall advise me in all for Cleopatra.

Cleo. This is the brief of money, plate, and jewels,

I am possess'd of: 'tis exactly valued;
Not petty things admitted.—Where's Seleucus?

Sci. Here, madam.

Cleo. This is my treasurer: let him speak, my
lord,

Upon his peril, that I have reserv'd
To myself nothing. Speak the truth, Seleucus.

Sci. Madam,

I had rather seal † my lips, than, to my peril,
Speak that which is not.

Cleo. What have I kept back?

Sci. Enough to purchase what you have made known.

Ces. Nay, blush not, Cleopatra; I approve
Your wisdom in the deed.

Cleo. See, Cesar! O behold

How pomp is follow'd! mine will now be yours;
And, should we shift estates, yours would be mine.

The ingratitude of this Seleucus does

Even make me wild:—O slave, of no more trust
Than love that's hid!—What, guest thou back?—thou shalt

Go back, I warrant thee; but I'll catch thine eyes, Though they had wings: Slave, soulless villain,
dog!

O rarely ‡ base!

Ces. Good queen, let us entreat you.

Cleo. O Cesar, what a wounding shame is
this;

That thou, vouchsafing here to visit me,
Doing the honour of thy lordliness

To one so meek, that mine own servant should Parcel § the sum of my disgraces by

Addition of his envy! Say, good Cesar,

That I some lady trifles have reserv'd,
Immortal toys, things of such dignity

As we greet modern ¶ friends withal; and say,
Some nobler token I have kept apart

For Livia ¶ and Octavia,  to induce

Their mediation; must I be unfolded

With one that I have bred? The gods! it smites
me

Beneath the fall I have. Pr'ythee, go hence;
[To SELEUCUS.]

Or I shall show the cinders of my spirits
Through the ashes of my chance:—Wert thou a
man,

Thou would'st have mercy on me.

Ces. Forbear, Seleucus.

[Exit SELEUCUS.]

Cleo. Be it known, that we, the greatest, are misthought

For things that others do; and, when we fall,
We answer others' merits * in our names,

Are therefore to be pitied.

Ces. Cleopatra,

Not what you have reserv'd, nor what acknowledg'd,

Put we i'the roll of conquest: still be it yours,
Bestow it at your pleasure, and believe,

Cesar's no merchant, to make prize with you
Of things that merchants sold. Therefore be cheer'd;

Make not your thoughts your prisons: no, dear
queen;

For we intend so to dispose you, as Yourselves shall give us counsel. Feed, and sleep:

Our care and pity is so much upon you,

That we remain your friend; And so adieu.

Cleo. My master, and my lord!

Ces. Not so: Adieu.

[Exit CESAR, and his Train.]

Cleo. He wounds me, girls, he wounds me, that I should not

Be noble to myself: but hark thee, Charmian.
[This is CHARMIAN.]

Iras. Finish, good lady: the bright day is done
And we are for the dark.

Cleo. Hee thee again:

I have spoke already, and it is provided;

Go, put it to the haste.

Char. Madam, I will.

Re-enter DOLABELLA.

Dol. Where is the queen?

Char. Behold, Sir.

[Exit CHARMIAN.]

Cleo. Dolabella?

Dol. Madam, as thereto sworn by your command,

Which my love makes religion to obey,
I tell you this: Cesar through Syria

Intends his journey: and, within three days,
You with your children will be send before:

Make your best use of this: I have perform'd
Your pleasure, and my promise.

Cleo. Dolabella,

I shall remain your debtor.

Dol. I your servant.

Adieu, good queen; I must attend on Cesar.

Cleo. Farewell, and thanks.

[Exit DOLABELLA.]

Now, Iras, what think'st thou?
Thou, an Egyptian puppet, shalt be shown

In Rome, as well as I: mechanic slaves,
With greasy aprons, rules, and hammers, shall

Uplift us to the view; in their thick breaths,
Rank of gross diet, shall we be enclouded,

And forc'd to drink their vapour.

Iras. The gods forbid!

Cleo. Nay, 'tis most certain, Iras: Saucy lectors †

Will catch at us, like strumpets ‡ and scald; rhy-
Ballad us out o'tune: the quick comedians

Extemporally will stage us, and present
Our Alexandrian revels: Antony

Shall be brought drunken forth, and I shall see
Some squeaking Cleopatra boy § my greatness

I'the posture of a whore.

Iras. O the good gods!

Cleo. Nay, that is certain.

were played by boys.

Iras. I'll never for it; for, I am sure, my nails
Are stronger than mine eyes.

Cleo. Why that's the way
To fool their preparation, and to conquer
Their most absurd intents.—Now, Charmian?—

Enter CHARMIAN.

Show me, my women, like a queen;—Go fetch
My best attires;—I am again for Cydnus,
To meet Mark Antony:—Sirrah, Iras, go.—
Now, noble Charmian, we'll despatch indeed:
Aud, when thou hast done this chare, I'll give thee leave
To play till doomsday.—Bring our crown and all.
Wherefore's this noise?

[Exit IRAS. A Noise within.]

Enter one of the GUARD.

Guard. Here is a rural fellow,
That will not be denied your highness' presence:

He brings you figs.

Cleo. Let him come in. How poor an instrument
May do a noble deed! he brings me liberty.
My resolution's plac'd, and I have nothing
Of woman in me: Now from head to foot
I am marble-constant: now the fleeting moon
No planet is of mine.

Re-enter GUARD, with a CLOWN bringing a Basket.

Guard. This is the man.

Cleo. Avoid, and leave him.

[Exit GUARD.]

Hast thou the pretty worm * of Nilus there,
That kills and pains not?

Crown. Truly I have him: but I would not be the party that should desire you to touch him, for his biting is immortal: those that die of it, do seldom or never recover.

Cleo. Remembers't thou any that have died
on't?

Crown. Very many, men and women too. I heard of one of them no longer than yesterday—a very honest woman, but something given to lie as a woman should not do, but in the way of honesty—how she died of the biting of it, what pain she felt,—Truly, she makes a very good report o'the worm: But he that will believe all that they say, shall never be saved by half that they do: But this is most fallible, the worm's an odd worm.

Cleo. Get thee hence: farewell.

Crown. I wish you all joy of the worm.

Cleo. Farewell.

[CLOWN sets down the Basket.]

Crown. You must think this, look you, that the worm will do his kind.†

Cleo. Ay, ay; farewell.

Crown. Look you, the worm is not to be trusted, but in the keeping of wise people; for, indeed, there is no goodness in the worm.

Cleo. Take thou no care: it shall be heeded.

Crown. Very good: give it nothing, I pray you, for it is not worth the feeding.

Cleo. Will it eat me?

Crown. You must not think I am so simple, but I know the devil himself will not eat a woman: I know that a woman is a dish for the gods, if the devil dress her not. But, truly, these same whoreson devils do the gods great harm in their women; for in every ten that they make, the devils mar five.

Cleo. Well, get thee gone: farewell.

Crown. Yes, forsooth; I wish you joy of the worm.
[Exit.]

Re-enter IRAS, with a Robe, Crown, &c.

Cleo. Give me my robe, put on my crown; I have

* Serpent.

† Act according to his nature.

Immortal longings in me: Now no more
The juice of Egypt's grape shall moist this lip:—

Yare, yare,* good Iras; quick.—Methinks, I
hear

Antony call; I see him rouse himself
To praise my noble act; I hear him mock
The luck of Cesar, which the gods give men
To excuse their after wrath: Husband, I come:
Now to that name my courage prove my title!
I am fire, and air; my other elements
I give to baser life.—So,—have you done?
Come then, and take the last warmth of my lips.

Farewell, kind Charmian;—Iras, long farewell.

[Kisses them. IRAS falls and dies.]

Have I the aspic in my lips?† Dost fall?
If thou and nature can so gently part,
The stroke of death is as a lover's pinch,
Which hurts and is desired. Dost thou lie still?
If thus thou vanishest, thou tell'st the world
It is not worth leave-taking.

Char. Dissolve, thick cloud and rain; that I may say

The gods themselves do weep!

Cleo. This proves me base:

If she first meet the curled Antony, He'll make demand of her; and spend that
kiss,

Which is my heaven to have. Come, mortal!
wretch,

[To the Asp, which she applies to her Breast.]

With thy sharp teeth this knot intrinsecate
Of life at once untie: poor venomous fool,
Be angry, and despatch. O! could'st thou
speak!

That I might hear thee call great Cesar, Ass

Unpolitic!‡

Char. O eastern star!

Cleo. Peace, peace!

Dost thou not see my baby at my breast,

That sucks the nurse asleep?

Char. O break! O break!

Cleo. As sweet as balm, is soft as air, as gentle—

O Antony!—Nay, I will take thee too:—

[Applying another Asp to her Arm.]

What should I stay—

[Falls on a Bed and Dies.]
Char. In this wild world?—So fare thee
well.—

Now boast thee, death! in thy possession lies
A lass unparallel'd.—Downy windows, close;
And golden Phœbus never be beheld
Of eyes again so royal! Your crown's awry;
I'll mend it, and then play.‖

Enter the GUARD, rushing in.

1 Guard. Where is the queen?

Char. Speak softly, wake her not.

1 Guard. Cesar hath sent—

Char. Too slow a messenger.

[Applies the Asp]
O come; apace, despatch: I partly feel thee.

1 Guard. Approach, ho! All's not well: Ce-sar's beguil'd.

2 Guard. There's Dolabella sent from Cesar:—call him.

1 Guard. What work is here?—Charmian, is this well done?

Char. It is well done, and fitting for a princess

Descended of so many royal kings.

Ah, soldier!

[Dies.]

Enter DOLABELLA.

Dol. How goes it here?

2 Guard. All dead.

* Make haste.

† Are my lips already poisoned by the aspic?
‡ An ass without common policy, thus to leave me to myself. ‖ Play my part in this tragedy.

Dol. Cesar, thy thoughts
Touch their effects in this : Thyself art coming
To see perform'd the dreaded act, which thou
So sought'st to hinder.

Within. A way there, way for Cesar !

Enter CESAR, and Attendants.

Dol. O Sir, you are too sure an angurer ;
That you did fear, is done.

Ces. Bravest at the last :
She levell'd at our purposes, and, being royal,
Took her own way.—The manner of their deaths ?
I do not see them bleed.

Dol. Who was last with them ?

I Guard. A simple countryman, that brought her figs :
This was his basket.

Ces. Poison'd then.

I Guard. O Cesar,
This Chariulan lived but now ; she stood, and spoke :

I found her trimming up the diadem
On her dead mistress ; tremblingly she stood,
And on the sudden dropp'd.

Ces. O noble weakness !—
If they had swallow'd poison, 'twould appear
By external swelling ; but she looks like sleep,

As she would catch another Antony
In her strong toil of grace.

Dol. Here, on her breast,
There is a vent of blood, and something blown,*
The like is on her arm.

I Guard. This is an aspic's trail : and these fig-leaves

Have slime upon them, such as the aspic leaves
Upon the caves of Nile.

Ces. Most probable,
That so she died ; for her physician tells me,
She had pursu'd conclusions † infinite
Of easy ways to die.—Take up her bed ;
And bear her women from the monument :—
She shall be buried by her Antony :
No grave upon the earth shall clip ‡ in it
A pair so famous. High events as these Strike those that make them, and their story is No less in pity, than his glory, which Brought them to be lamented. Our army shall,
In solemn show, attend the funeral ;
And then to Rome.—Come, Dolabella, see
High order in this great solemnity.

[Exeunt]

* Some part of the flesh puff'd.

† Tried experiments. ‡ Enfeld.

TITUS ANDRONICUS.

LITERARY AND HISTORICAL NOTICE.

AS it is intended, in the present collection of Shakspeare's Dramatic Works, to present in regular succession all such as have the scenery, characters, or manners, drawn from the same country, the sanguinary and disgusting Tragedy of Titus Andronicus is placed in immediate sequence to those that are essentially of Roman origin. The events, however, are not of historical occurrence, but were probably borrowed from an old ballad entered on the books of the Stationers' Company in the year 1593, about which period it may also have been written. Its identity, however, as one of Shakspeare's productions, rests on a very doubtful foundation. Dr. Percy supposes it only to have been corrected and re-touched by him; but, says Dr. Johnson, "I do not find his touches very discernible." It is devoid of any striking sentiment—it has none of the philosophic stateliness which generally distinguishes his plays—the anachronisms are gross—the language throughout is as tumid and laboured as the plot is horrid and unnatural;—and the only approach to energy discernible in the play, occurs in the scene between Aaron, the nurse, and Demetrius. Indeed, there is internal evidence enough (in the versification, the character of the composition, the total difference of conduct, language, and sentiment, and also in its resemblance to several dramas of much more ancient date) to prove, with irresistible force, that it has been erroneously ascribed to Shakspeare. Dr. Johnson says, "All the editors and critics agree with Mr. Theobald in supposing this play spurious. I see no reason for differing from them, for the colour of the style is wholly different from that of the other play, and there is an attempt at regular versification and artificial closes, not always inelegant, yet seldom pleasing. The barbarity of the spectacle, and the general massacre which are here exhibited, can scarcely be conceived tolerable to any audience, yet we are told by Jonson, that they were not only borne but applauded. That Shakspeare wrote any part, though Theobald declares it incontestible, I see no reason for believing."

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Rome—Before the Capitol.

The tomb of the ANDRONICI appearing; the TRIBUNES and SENATORS aloft, as in the Senate. Enter, below, SATURNINUS and his Followers, on one side; and BASSIANUS and his Followers on the other; with Drum and Colours.

Sat. Noble patricians, patrons of my right,
Defend the justice of my cause with arms;
And, countrymen, my loving followers,
Plead my successive title * with your swords:
I am his first-born son, that was the last
That wore the imperial diadem of Rome,
Then let my father's honours live in me,
Nor wrong mine age with this indignity.

Bas. Romans,—friends, followers, favourers of of my right,—

If ever Bassianus, Cesar's son,
Were gracious in the eyes of royal Rome,

* My title to the succession.

Keep then this passage to the Capitol:
And suffer not dishonour to approach
The imperial seat, to virtue consecrate,
To justice, continence, and nobility:
But let desert in pure election shine;
And, Romans, fight for freedom in your choice.

Enter MARCUS ANDRONICUS, aloft, with the Crown.

Mar. Princes, that strive by factions and by friends,
Ambitiously for rule and empery,—
Know, that the people of Rome, for whom we stand

A special party, have, by their common voice,
In election for the Roman empery,
Chosen Andronicus, surnamed Pius
For many good and great deserts to Rome;
A nobler man, a braver warrior,
Lives not this day within the city walls:
He by the senate is accited * home,
From weary wars against the barbarous Goths,

* Summured.

That, with his sons, a terror to our foes,
Hath yok'd a nation strong, turn'd up in arms.
Ten years are spent, since first he undertook
This cause of Rome, and chastised with arms
Our enemies' pride: Five times he hath return'd
Bleeding to Rome, bearing his valiant sons
In coffins from the field;
And now, at last, laden with honour's spoils,
Returns the good Andronicus to Rome,
Renowned Titus, flourishing in arms.
Let us entreat,—By honour of his name,
Whom, worthily, you would have now succeed,
And in the Capitol and senate's right,
Whom you pretend to honour and adore,—
That you withdraw you, and abate your strength:
Dismiss your followers, and, as suitors should,
Plead your deserts in peace and humbleness.

Sat. How fair the tribune speaks to calm my thoughts!

Bac. Marcus Andronicus, so I do affy •
In thy uprightness and integrity,
And so I love and honour thee and thine,
Thy nobler brother Titus, and his sons,
And he, to whom my thoughts are humbled all,
Gracious Lavinia, Rome's rich ornament,
That I will here dismiss my loving friends,
And to my fortunes, and the people's favour,
Commit my cause in balance to be weigh'd.

[Exit the Followers of Bassianus.]
Sat. Friends, that have been thus forward in my right,

I thank you all, and here dismiss you all;
And to the love and favour of my country
Commit myself, my person, and my cause.

[Exit the Followers of Saturninus.]
Rome, be as just and gracious unto me,
As I am confident and kind to thee.—
Open the gates, and let me in.

Bac. Tribunes! and me, a poor competitor.
[Sat and Bac. go into the Capitol, and exit with Senators, Marcus, &c.]

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter a CAPTAIN, and others.

Cap. Romans, make way—The good Andronicus,

Faithful of virtue, Rome's best champion,
Successful in the battles that he fights,
With honour and with fortune is return'd,
From where he circumscribed with his sword,
And brought to yoke, the enemies of Rome.

Flourish of Trumpets, &c. Enter MUTIUS and MARIUS: after them, two Men bearing a Coffin covered with black; then QUINTUS and LUCIUS. After them, TITUS ANDRONICUS; and then TAMORA, with ALARBUS, CHIRON, DEMETRIUS, AARON, and other Goths, prisoners. Soldiers and People following. The Bearers set down the Coffin, and TITUS speaks.

Tit. Hail, Rome, victorious in thy mourning weeds!
Lo, as the bark that hath discharged her fraught, †
Returns with precious lading to the bay,
From whence at first she weigh'd her anchorage,
Cometh Andronicus, bound with laurel boughs,
To re-salute his country with his tears;
Tears of true joy for his return to Rome.—
Thou great defender of this Capitol, ‡
Stand gracious to the rights that we intend!—
Romans, of five and twenty valiant sons,
Half of the number that king Priam had,
Behold the poor remains, alive, and dead!
These, that survive, let Rome reward with love:
These, that I bring unto their latest home,
With burial amongst their ancestors:
Here Goths have given me leave to sheath my sword.

True, unkind, and careless of thine own,
Why suffer'st thou thy sons, unburied yet,

To hover on the dreadful shore of Styx?—
Make way to lay them by their brethren.

[The Tomb is opened.]
There greet in silence, as the dead are wont,
And sleep in peace, slain in your country's waist
O sacred receptacle of my joys,
Sweet cell of virtue and nobility,
How many sons of mine hast thou in store,
That thou wilt never render to me more!

Luc. Give us the proudest prisoner of the Goths,

That we may hew his limbs, and, on a pile
Ad manes fratrum sacrifice his flesh,
Before this earthly prison of their bones:
That so the shadows be not unappeas'd,
Nor we disturb'd with prodigies on earth.*

Tit. I give him you; the noblest that survives,
The eldest son of this distressed queen.

Tam. Stay, Roman brethren—Gracious conqueror,

Victorious Titus, rue the tears I shed,
A mother's tears in passion for her son:
And, if thy sons were ever dear to thee,
Oh! think my son to be as dear to me.

Sufficeth not, that we are brought to Rome
To beautify thy triumphs, and return,
Captive to thee, and to thy Roman yoke;
But must my sons be slaughter'd in the streets,
For valiant doings in their country's cause?
Oh! if to fight for king and common weal
Were piety in thine, it is in these.

Andronicus, stain not thy tomb with blood:
Wilt thou draw near the nature of the gods,
Draw near their then in being merciful:
Sweet mercy is nobility's true badge—

Thrice-noble Titus, spare my first-born son.

Tit. Patient yourself, madam, and pardon me.
These are their brethren, whom you Goths beheld

Alive and dead; and, for their brethren slain,
Religiously they ask a sacrifice:
To this your son is mark'd; and die he must,
To appease their groaning shadows that are gone.

Luc. Away with him! and make a fire
straight:

And with your swords, upon a pile of wood,
Let's hew his limbs, till they be clean consum'd.

Exit LUCIUS, QUINTUS, MARTIUS, and MUTIUS, with ALARBUS.

Tam. O cruel, unchristian piety!
Chi. Was ever Scythia half so barbarous?

Dem. Oppose not Scythia to ambitious Rome
Alarbus goes to rest; and we survive

To tremble under Titus' threatening look.
Then, madam, stand resolv'd: but hope withal,
The self-same gods, that arm'd the queen of Troy
With opportunity of sharp revenge

Upon the Thracian tyrant in his tent,
May favour Tamora, the queen of Goth,
(When Goths were Goths, and Tamora was queen.)

To quit the bloody wrongs upon her foes.

Re-enter LUCIUS, QUINTUS, MARIUS, and MUTIUS, with their Swords bloody.

Luc. See, lord and father, how we have perform'd.

Our Roman rites: Alarbus' limbs are lopp'd
And entrails feed the sacrificing fire,
Whose smoke, like incense, doth perfume the sky.
Remaineth nought, but to inter our brethren,
And with loud Janus welcome them to Rome.

Tit. Let it be so, and let Andronicus
Make this his latest farewell to their souls.

[Trumpets sounded, and the Coffins laid in the Tomb.]

In peace and honour rest you here, my sons.
Rome's readiest champions, repose you here,
Secure from worldly chances and mishaps!
Here links no treason, here no envy swells,
Here grow no damned grudges here are no storms.

* It was supposed that the ghosts of unburied people appeared to solicit the rights of funeral.

No noise : but silence and eternal sleep :

Enter LAVINIA.

In peace and honour rest you here, my sons !

Lav. In peace and honour live lord Titus long ;

My noble lord and father, live in fame !

Lo ! at this tomb my tributary tears

I render, for my brethren's obsequies ;

And at thy feet I kneel, with tears of joy

Shed on the earth, for thy return to Rome :

O bless me here with thy victorious hand,

Whose fortunes Rome's best citizens applaud.

Tit. Kind Rome, that hast thus lovingly re-

serv'd

The cordial of mine age to glad my heart !—

Lavinia, live ; outlive thy father's days,

And fame's eternal date, for virtue's praise ! *

Enter MARCUS ANDRONICUS, SATURNINUS, BASSIANUS, and others.

Mar. Long live lord Titus, my beloved brother, Gracious triumpher in the eyes of Rome !

Tit. Thanks, gentle tribune, noble brother Marcus.

Mar. And welcome, nephews, from successful wars,

You that survive, and you that sleep in fame.

Fair lords, your fortunes are alike in all,

That in your country's service drew your swords :

But safer triumph is this funeral pomp,

That hath aspir'd to Solon's happiness, †

And triumphs over chance in honour's bed. —

Titus Andronicus, the people of Rome,

Whose friend in justice thou hast ever been,

Send thee by me, their tribune, and their trust,

This pallament of white and spotless hue ;

And name thee in election for the empire,

With these our late-deceased emperor's sons :

Be candidatus then, and put it on,

And help to set a lead on headless Rome.

Tit. A better head her glorious body fits,

Than his, that shakes for age and feebleness :

What ! should I don this robe, and trouble

you ?

Be chosen with proclamations to-day ;

To-morrow, yield up rule, resign my life,

And set abroad new business for you all ?

Rome, I have been thy soldier forty years,

And buried one and twenty valiant sons,

Knights in field, slain manfully in arms,

In right and service of their noble country :

Give me a staff of honour for mine age,

But not a sceptre to control the world.

Upright he held it, lords, that held it last.

Mar. Titus, thou shalt obtain and ask the empire.

Sat. Proud and ambitious tribune, canst thou tell ?—

Tit. Patience, prince Saturnine.

Sat. Romans, do me right :—

Patricians, draw your swords, and sheath them

not

Till Saturninus be Rome's emperor :—

Andronicus, 'would thou wert shipp'd to hell,

Rather than rob me of the people's hearts.

Luc. Proud Saturnine, interrupter of the good

That noble-minded Titus means to thee !

Tit. Content thee, prince ; I will restore to

thee

The people's hearts, and wean them from themselves.

Luc. Andronicus, I do not flatter thee,

But honour thee, and will do till I die :

My faction if thou strengthen with thy friends,

I will most thankful be : and thanks, to men

Of noble minds, is honourable meed.

Tit. People of Rome, and people's tribunes

here,

* He wishes that her life may be longer than his, and her praise longer than fame.

† The maxim alluded to is, that no man can be pronounced happy before his death.

‡ A robe.

§ Put it on.

I ask your voices, and your suffrages—

Will you bestow them friendly on Andronicus ?

Trib. To gratify the good Andronicus,

And gratulate his safe return to Rome,

The people will accept whom he admits.

Tit. Tribunes, I thank you : and this suit I make,

That you create your emperor's eldest son,

Lord Saturnine, whose virtues will, I hope,

Reflect on Rome as Titus's * rays on earth,

And ripen justice in this common-weal :

Then, if you will elect by my advice,

Crown him, and say,—Long live our emperor !

Mar. With voices and applause of every sort,

Patricians and plebeians, we create

Lord Saturninus, Rome's great emperor ;

And say, Long live our emperor Saturninus.

[A long Flourish.]

Sat. Titus Andronicus, for thy favours done

To us in our election this day,

I give thee thanks in part of thy deserts,

And will with deeds requite thy gentleness :

Aud, for an onset, Titus, to advance

Thy name, and honourable family,

Lavinia will I make my empress,

Rome's royal mistress, mistress of my heart,

And in the sacred Pantheon her espouse :

Tell me, Andronicus, doth this motion please

thee ?

Tit. It doth, my worthy lord ; and, in this match,

I hold me highly honour'd of your grace :

And here, in sight of Rome, to Saturnine,—

King and commander of our common-weal,

The wide world's emperor,—do I consecrate

My sword, my chariot, and my prisoners ;

Presents well worthy Rome's imperial lord :

Receive them then, the tribute that I owe,

Mine honour's ensigns humbled at thy feet.

Sat. Thanks, noble Titus, father of my life !

How proud I am of thee, and of thy gifts,

Rome shall record ; and, when I do forget

The least of these unspeakable deserts,

Romans, forget your fealty to me.

Tit. Now, madam, are you prisoner to an emperor ;

[To Lavinia.]

To him, that for your honour and your state,

Will use you nobly, and your followers.

Sat. A goodly lady, trust me ; of the hue

That I would choose, were I to choose anew.—

Clear up, fair queen, that cloudy countenance :

Though chance of war hath wrought this change of cheer,

Thou canst not to be made a scorn in Rome :

Princely shall be thy usage every way.

Rest on my word, and let not discontent

Damnt all your hopes. Madam, he comforts

you,

Can make you greater than the queen of

Goths.—

Lavinia, you are not displeas'd with this ?

Lav. Not I, my lord ; with true nobility

Warrants these words in princely courtesy.

Sat. Thanks, sweet Lavinia.—Romans, let us go

Ransomless here we set our prisoners free :

Proclaim our honours, keds, with trumpet and drum.

Bas. Lord Titus, by your leave, this maid is

mine.

[Seizing LAVINIA.]

Tit. How, Sir ? are you in earnest then, my

lord ?

Bas. Ay, noble Titus ; and resolv'd withal,

To do myself this reason and this right.

[The Emperor courts TAMORA in dumb

show.]

Mar. Suum cuique is our Roman justice :

This prince in justice seizeth but his own.

Luc. And that he will, and shall, if Lucius live.

Tit. Traitors, avaunt ! Where is the emperor's guard ?

Treason, my lord ! Lavinia is surpris'd.

* The sun.

† Since

Sat. Surpris'd! by whom?

Bas. By him that justly may
Bear his betroth'd from all the world away.

[Exeunt MARCUS and BASSIANUS, with Lavinia.

Mut. Brothers, help to convey her hence
away,
And with my sword I'll keep this door safe.

[Exeunt LUCIUS, QUINTUS, and MARTIUS.

Tit. Follow my lord, and I'll soon bring her back.

Mut. My lord, you pass not here.

Tit. What, villain boy!
Barr'st me my way in Rome?

[Titus kills Mutius.

Mut. Help, Lucius, help.

Re-enter LUCIUS.

Luc. My lord, you are unjust; and, more than so,
In wrongful quarrel you have slain your son.

Tit. Nor thou, nor he, are any sons of
mine:

My sons would never so dishonour me:

Traitor, restore Lavinia to the emperor.

Luc. Dead, if you will: but not to be his wife.

That is another's lawful promis'd love.

[Exit.

Sat. No, Titus, no; the emperor needs her
not,

Not her, nor thee, nor any of thy stock:
I'll trust, by leisure, him that mocks me once:
Thee never, nor thy traitorous haughty sons,
Confederates all thus to dishonour me.

Was there none else in Rome to make a stale* of

But Saturnine? Full well, Andronicus,

Agree these deeds with that proud brag of
thine,

That said'st, I begg'd the empire at thy hands.

Tit. O monstrous! what reproachful words are these?

Sat. But go thy ways: go, give that changing piece

To him that flourish'd for her with his sword:
A valiant son-in-law thou shalt enjoy;

One fit to bandy with thy lawless sons,

To ruffle in the commonwealth of Rome.

Tit. These words are razors to my wounded
heart.

Sat. And therefore, lovely Tamora, queen of Goths,—

That like the stately Phebe 'mongst her nymphs,

Dost overshadow the gallant'st dames of Rome,—

If thou be pleas'd with this my sudden choice,

Behold, I choose thee, Tamora, for my bride,

And will create thee empress of Rome.

Speak, queen of Goths, dost thou applaud my choice?

And here I swear by all the Roman gods,—

With priest and holy water are so near,

And tapers burn so bright, and every thing

In readiness for Hymeneus stand.—

I will not re-salute the streets of Rome,

Or climb my palace, till from forth this place

I lead espous'd my bride along with me.

Lam. And here, in sight of heaven, to Rome
I swear,

If Saturnine advance the queen of Goths,

She will a handmaid be to his desires,

A loving nurse, a mother to his youth,

Sat. Ascend, fair queen, Pantheon:—Lords, company

Your noble emperor, and his lovely bride,

Sent by the heavens for prince Saturnine,

Whose wisdom hath her fortune conquered:

There shall we consummate our spousal rites.

Exeunt SATURNINUS and his followers:

TAMORA and her sons; AARON and
Goths.

Tit. I am not bid* to wait upon this bride:—

Titus, when wert thou wont to talk alone,
Dishonour'd thus, and challenged of wrongs?

Re-enter MARCUS, LUCIUS, QUINTUS, and MARTIUS.

Mar. O Titus, see, oh! see, what thou hast
done!

In a bad quarrel slain a virtuous son.

Tit. No, foolish tribune, no; no son of mine,—

Nor thou, nor these, confederates in the deed

That hath dishonour'd all our family;

Unworthy brother, and unworthy sons!

Luc. But let us give him burial as becomes;
Give Mutus burial with our brethren.

Tit. Traitors, away! he rests not in this tomb

This monument five hundred years hath stood,

Which I have sumptuously re-edified:

Here none but soldiers, and Rome's servitors,

Repose in fame: none basely slain in brawls:—

Bury him where you can, he comes not here.

Mar. My lord, this is impiety in you:

My nephew Mutus' deeds do plead for him:

He must be buried with his brethren.

Quin. Mar. And shall, or him we will accompany.

Tit. And shall? What villain was it spoke that

word?

Quin. He that would vouch't in any place but

here.

Tit. What, would you bury him in my despite?

Mar. No, noble Titus; but entreat of thee

To pardon Mutus, and to bury him.

Tit. Marcus, even thou hast stuck upon my crest,

And, with these boys, mine honour thou hast

My foes I do repute you every one; [wounded:

So trouble me no more, but get you gone.

Mart. He is not with himself; let us withdraw.

Quin. Not I, till Mutus' bones be buried.

[MARCUS and the Sons of TITUS kneel.

Mar. Brother, for in that name doth nature plead.

Quin. Father, and in that name doth nature

speak.

Tit. Speak thou no more, if all the rest will

speak.

Mar. Renowned Titus, more than half my

soul,—

Luc. Dear father, soul and substance of us

all,—

Mar. Suffer thy brother Marcus to inter

His noble nephew here in virtue's nest,

That died in honour and Lavinia's cause.

Thou art a Roman, be not barbarous.

The Greeks, upon advice, did bury Ajax,

That slew himself; and wise Laertes' son

Did graciously plead for his funerals.

Let not young Mutus then, that was thy joy,

Be barr'd his entrance here.

Tit. Rise, Marcus, rise:—

The dismall'st day is this, that e'er I saw,—

To be dishonour'd by my sons in Rome!—

Well, bury him, and bury me the next.

[MUTIUS is put into the Tomb.

Luc. There lie thy bones, sweet Mutus, with thy friends,

Till we with trophies do adorn thy tomb!—

All. No man shed tears for noble Mutus:

He lives in fame that died in virtue's cause.

Mar. My lord,—to step out of these dreary dumps,—

How comes it, that the subtle queen of Goths

Is of a sudden thus advanc'd in Rome?

Tit. I know not, Marcus; but, I know, it is:

Whether by device, or no, the heavens can tell:

Is she not then beholden to the man

That brought her for this high good turn so far?

Yes, and will nobly him remunerate.

* A stalking horse.

† A ruffler was a bully.

* Invited.

Flourish. Re-enter, at one side, SATURNINUS, attended; TAMORA, CHIRON, DEMETRIUS, and AARON: At the other, BASSIANUS, LAVINIA, and others.

Sat. So, Bassianus, you have play'd your prize:

God give you joy, Sir, of your gallant bride.

Bas. And you of your's, my lord, I say no more,

Nor wish no less; and so I take my leave.

Sat. Traitor, if Rome have law, or we have power,

Thou and thy faction shall repent this rape.

Bas. Rape, call you it, my lord, to seize my own,

My true-betrothed love, and now my wife?

But let the laws of Rome determine all:

Mean while I am possess'd of what is mine.

Sat. 'Tis good, Sir: You are very short with

But, if we live, we'll be as sharp with you. [us:]

Bas. My lord, what I have done, as best I may,

Answer I must, and shall do with my life.

Only thus much I give your grace to know—

By all the duties that I owe to Rome,

This noble gentleman, lord Titus here,

Is in opinion, and in honour, wrong'd;

That, in the rescue of Lavinia,

With his own hand did slay his youngest son,

In zeal to you, and highly mov'd to wrath

To be control'd in that he frankly gave:

Receive him then to favour, Saturnine,

That hath express'd himself, in all his deeds,

A father and a friend to thee and Rome.

Tit. Prince Bassianus, leave to plead my deeds;

'Tis thou, and those, that have dishonour'd me;

Rome and the righteous heavens be my judge.

How I have lov'd and honour'd Saturnine!

Tam. My worthy lord, if ever Tamora

Were gracious in those princely eyes of thine,

Then heat me speak indifferently for all;

And at my suit, sweet, pardon what is just.

Sat. What! madam! be dishonour'd openly,

And basely put it up without revenge?

Tam. Not so, my lord: The gods of Rome forefend,*

I should be author to dishonour you!

But, on mine honour, dare I undertake

For good lord Titus' innocence in all,

Whose fury, not dissembled, speaks his griefs:

Then, at my suit, look graciously on him;

Love not so noble a friend on vain suppose,

Nor with sour looks afflict his gentle heart.—

[Aside.

My lord, be rul'd by me, be wou at last,

Dissemble all your griefs and discontents:

You are but newly planted in your throne:

Lest then the people and patricians too,

Upon a just survey, take Titus' part,

And so supplant us for ingratitude,

(Which Rome reputes to be a heinous sin),

Yield at entreats, and then let me alone:

I'll find a day to massacre them all,

And raze their faction, and their family,

The cruel father, and his traitorous sons,

To whom I sued for my dear son's life;

And make them know, what 'tis to let a queen

Kneel in the streets, and beg for grace in vain.—

Come, come, sweet emperor,—come, Andronicus,

Take up this good old man, and cheer the heart

That dies in tempest of thy angry frown.

Sat. Rise, Titus, rise; my empress hath prevail'd.

Tit. I thank your majesty, and her, my lord;

These words, these looks, infuse new life in me.

Tam. Titus, I am incorporate in Rome,

A Roman now adopted happily,

And must advise the emperor for his good.

This day all quarrels die, Andronicus;

And let it be mine honour, good my lord,

That I have reconcil'd your friends and you.—

For you, prince Bassianus, I have pass'd
My word and promise to the emperor,
That you will be more mild and tractable.—
And fear not, lords,—and you, Lavinia,
By my advice, all humble on your knees,
You shall ask pardon of his majesty.

Luc. We do; and vow to heaven, and to his highness,

That what we did was mildly, as we might,
Tending our sister's honour and our own.

Mar. That on mine honour here I do protest.

Sat. Away, and talk not: trouble us no more.—

Tam. Nay, nay, sweet emperor, we must all be friends:

The tribune and his nephews kneel for grace:

I will not be denied. Sweet heart, look back.

Sat. Marcus, for thy sake, and thy brother's here,

And at my lovely Tamora's entreats,

I do remit these young men's heinous faults.

Stand up.

Lavinia, though you left me like a churl,

I found a friend; and sure as death I swore,

I would not part a bachelor from the priest.

Come, if the emperor's court can feast two brides.

You are my guest, Lavinia, and your friends;

This day shall be a love-day, Tamora.

Tit. To-morrow, an it please your majesty,

To hunt the panther and the hart with me,

With horn and hound, we'll give you grace

bonjour.

Sat. Be it so, Titus, and grace, too.

[Exeunt

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The same.—Before the Palace.

Enter AARON.

Aar. Now climbeth Tamora Olympus' top,

Safe out of fortune's shot: and sits aloft,

Secure of thunder's crack, or lightning's dash:

Advanc'd above pale envy's threatening reach.

As when the golden sun salutes the morn,

And having gilt the ocean with his beams,

Gallops the zodiac in his glistering coach,

And overlooks the highest-peering hills:

So Tamora.—

Upon her wit doth early honour wait,

And virtue stoops and trembles at her frown:

Then, Aaron, arm thy heart, and fit thy thoughts,

To mount aloft with thy imperial mistress,

And mount her pitch: whom thou in triumph

long

Hast prisoner held, fetter'd in amorous chains;

And faster bound to Aaron's charming eyes,

Than is Prometheus tied to Caucasus.

Away with slavish weeds, and idle thoughts!

I will be bright, and shine in pearl and gold,

To wait upon this new-made empress.

To wait, said I? to wanton with this queen,

This goddess, this Semiramis—this queen,

This syren, that will charm Rome's Saturnine,

And see his shipwreck, and his commonweal's?

Holla! what storm is this?

Enter CHIRON and DEMETRIUS, braving.

Dem. Chiron, thy years want wit, thy wit wants

edge,

And manners, to intrude where I am grac'd;

And may, for ought thou know'st, affect'd be.

Chi. Demetrius, thou dost o'erween in all;

And so in this to bear me down with braves.

'Tis not the difference of a year or two,

Make me less gracious, thee more fortunate:

I am as able and as fit as thou,

To serve and to deserve my mistress' grace;

And that my sword upon thee shall approve,

And plead my passions for Lavinia's love.

* Forbid

* Grand merci—great thanks.

† Favour.

Aar. Clubs, clubs! * these lovers will not keep the peace.

Dem. Why, boy, although our mother, unadvised,

Gave you a dancing-rapier† by your side,
Are you so desperate grown, to threaten your friends?
Go to! have your lath glued within your sheath,
Till you know better how to handle it.

Chi. Mean while, Sir, with the little skill I have,
Full well shall thou perceive how much I dare.

Dem. Ay, boy, grow ye so brave?

[They draw.]

Aar. Why, how now, lords?

So near the emperor's palace dare you draw,
And maintain such a quarrel openly?
Till well I wot! the ground of all this grudge;
I would not for a million of gold,
The cause were known to them it most concerns:
No, would you your noble mother, for much more,
Be so dishonour'd in the court of Rome.
For shame, put up,

Dem. Not I, till I have sheath'd
My rapier in his bosom, and, withal,
Thrust these reproachful speeches down his throat,
That he hath breath'd in my dishonour here.

Chi. For that I am prepar'd and full resolv'd,— Fool spoken coward! that thunder'st with thy
And I with thy weapon nothing dar'st perform.

Aar. Away, I say.—

Now by the gods, that warlike Goths adore,
This petty brabble will undo us all.—
Why, lords,—and think you not how dangerous
It is to put upon a prince's right?
What, is Lavinia then become so loose,
Or Bassianus so degenerate,
That for her love such quarrels may be broach'd,
Without contrivance, justice, or revenge?
Young lords, beware!—an should the empress
know

This discord's ground, the music would not please.
Chi. I care not, I, knew she and all the world;
I love Lavinia more than all the world.

Dem. Youngling, learn thou to make some meaner choice:

Lavinia is thine elder brother's hope.

Aar. Why, are ye mad? or know ye not, in Rome.

How furious and impatient they be,
And cannot brook competitors in love?
I tell you, lords, you do but plot your deaths
by this device.

Chi. Aaron, a thousand deaths
Would I propose, to achieve her whom I love.

Car. To achieve her!—How?

Dem. Why makest thou it so strange?
She is a woman, therefore may be woo'd;
She is a woman, therefore may be won;
She is Lavinia, therefore must be lov'd.
What, man! more water gildeth by the mill
Than wots the miller of; and easy it is
Of a cut loaf to steal a shive, § we know:
Though Bassianus be the emperor's brother,
Better than he have yet worn Vulcan's badge.

Car. Ay, and as good as Saturninus may.
[Aside.]

Dem. Then why should he despair, that knows to count it

With words, fair looks and liberality?
What, hast thou not full often struck a doe,
And bound her cleanly by the keeper's nose?

Car. Why, then, it seems, some certain snatch, or so,
Would serve your turns.

Chi. Ay, so the turn were serv'd.

Dem. Aaron, thou hast hit it.

Car. Would you had hit it too;

Then should not we be tri'd with this ado.
Why, hark ye, hark ye,—And are you such fools,
To square § for this? Would it offend you then
That both should speed?

Chi. Faith, not me.

Dem. Nor me,

So I were one.

Aar. For shame, be friends; and join for that you jar.

'Tis policy and stratagem must do
That you affect; and so must you resolve:
That what you cannot, as you would, achieve,
You must perforce accomplish as you may.
Take this of me, Lucrece was not more chaste
Than this Lavinia, Bassianus' love.
A speedier course than lingering languishment
Must we pursue, and I have found the path.
My lords, a solemn hunting is in hand;
There will the lovely Roman ladies troop:
The forest walks are wide and spacious,
And many unrequented plots there are,
Fitted by kind * for rape and villainy:
Single you thither then this dainty doe,
And strike her home by force, if not by words:
This way, or not at all, stand you in hope.

Come, come, our empress, with her sacred wit
To villainy and vengeance consecrate,
Will we acquaint with all that we intend:
And she shall file our engines with advice
That will not suffer you to square yourselves,
But to your wishes' height advance you both.

The emperor's court is like the house of fame,
The palace full of tongues, of eyes, of ears:
The woods are ruthless, dreadful, deaf and dull:
There speak, and strike, brave boys, and take your turns: [eye]

There serve your lust, shadow'd from heaven's
And revel in Lavinia's treasury.

Chi. Thy counsel, lad, smells of no cowardice.
Dem. Sit jas aut ne jas, till I find the stream:
To cool this heat, a charm to calm these fits,
Per Styga, per manes ichor. [Exit.

SCENE II.—A Forest near Rome.—A Lady seen at a distance. Horns, and cry of hounds heard.

Enter TITUS ANDRONICUS, with Hunters, &c.
MARCEUS, LUCIUS, QUINTUS, and MARULLUS.

Tit. The hunt is up, the morn is bright and grey, [green]

The fields are fragrant, and the woods are Uncoupled here, and let us make a bay,
And wake the emperor and his lovely bride,
And rouse the prince; and ring a hunter's peal,
That all the court may echo with the noise.
Sons, let it be your charge, as it is ours,
To tend the emperor's person carefully:
I have been troubled in my sleep this night,
But dawning day new comfort hath inspir'd.

Horns and a Peal. Enter SATURNINUS, TI-MORA, BASSIANUS, LAVINIA, CHIRON, DI-
METRIUS, and attendants.

Tit. Many good morrows to your majesty:—
Madam, to you as many and as good!—
I promised your grace a hunter's peal.

Sat. And you have rung it lustily, my lords,
Somewhat too early for new-married ladies.

Bas. Lavinia, how say you?

Lav. I say, no:

I have been broad awake two hours and more.
Sat. Come on then, horse and chariots let us
have,

And to our sport:—Madam, now shall we see
Our Roman hunting. [To TITUS.]

Mar. I have dogs, my lord,
Will rouse the proudest Panther in the chase,
And climb the highest promontory top.

Tit. And I have horse will follow where the game

Makes way, and run like swallows o'er the plain.

Dem. Chiron, we hunt not, we, with horse nor hound,

But hope to pluck a dainty doe to ground.

[Exit.

* This was the usual outcry for assistance, when any riot broke out.
† Know. § Snatch. ¶ Quarrel.

* By nature.
† Sacred here signifies accursed. I stunism.

SCENE III.—A desert Part of the Forest.

Enter AARON, with a Bag of Gold.

Aar. He that had wiv, would think that I had none,

To bury so much gold under a tree,
And never after to inherit * it.
Let him that thinks of me so abjectly,
Know, that this gold must coin a stratagem;
Which, cunningly effected, will beget
A very excellent piece of villany;
And so repose, sweet gold, for their unrest, †
[Hides the Gold.]
That have their ahns out of the empress' chest.

Enter TAMORA.

Tam. My lovely Aaron, wherefore look'st thou sad,

When every thing doth make a gleeful boast?
The birds chaunt melody on every bush;
The snake lies rolled in the cheerful sun;
The green leaves quiver with the cooling wind,
And make a chequer'd shadow on the ground:
Under their sweet shade, Aaron, let us sit;
And—whilest the babbling echo mocks the hounds,
Replying shrilly to the well-tun'd horns,
As if a double hunt were heard at once,—
Let us sit down, and mark their yelling noise:
And—after conflict, such as was suppos'd,
The wandering prince of Dido once enjoy'd,
When with a happy storm they were surpris'd,
And curtain'd with a counsel-keeping cave,—
We may, each wreathed in the other's arms,
Our pastimes done, possess a golden slumber;
While hounds, and horns, and sweet melodious birds,

Be unto us, as is a nurse's song
Of lullaby, to bring her babe asleep.

Aar. Madam, though Venus govern your desires,

Saturn is dominator o'er mine:
What signifies my deadly standing eye,
My silence, and my cloudy melancholy,
My fleece of woolly hair that now curls,
Even as an adder, when she doth unroll
To do some fatal execution?
No, madam, these are no venereal signs;
Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand,
Blood and revenge are hammering in my head.
Hark, Tamora—the empress of my soul,
Which never hopes more heaven than rests in thee,—

This is the day of doom for Bassianus:
His Philomel! must lose her tongue to-day.
Thy sons make pillage of her chastity,
And wash their hands in Bassianus' blood.
Seest thou this letter? Take it up, I pray thee,
And give the king this fatal-plotted scroll:—
Now question me no more, we are espied;
Here comes a parcel of our hopeful booty,
Which dreads not yet their lives' destruction.

Tam. Ah, my sweet Moor, sweeter to me than life!

Aar. No more, great empress, Bassianus comes:
Be cross with him; and I'll go fetch thy sons
To back thy quarrels whatso'er they be.

[Exit.]

Enter BASSIANUS and LAVINIA.

Bas. Who have we here? Rome's royal empress,

Unfurnish'd of her well-beseeming troop!
Or is it Dian, habited like her;
Who hath abandoned her holy groves,
To see the general hunting in this forest?

Tam. Sancy controller of our private steps!
Had I the power that some say, Dian had,
Thy temples should be planted presently
With horns, as was Actæon's; and the hounds
Should drive upon thy new transformed limbs:
Unmannerly intruder as thou art!

Lav. Under your patience, gentle empress,

* 'Tis thought you have a goodly gift in hounding;
And to be doubted, that your Moor and you
Are singled forth to try experiments:
Jove shield your husband from his hounds to-day:
This pity they should take him for a stag.

Bas. Believe me, queen, your swarth Cimmerian

Doth make your honour of his body's hue,
Spotted, detested, and abominable.
Why are you sequester'd from all your train?
Dismounted from your snow-white goodly steed,
And wander'd hither to an obscure plot,
Accompanied with a barbarous Moor,
If foul desire had not conducted you?

Lav. And, being intercepted in your sport,
Great reason that my noble lord be rated
For sauciness.—I pray you, let us hence,
And let her joy her raven colour'd love;
This valley fits the purpose passing well.

Bas. The king, my brother, shall have note of this.

Lav. Ay, for these slips have made him noted long:

Good king! to be so mightily abus'd!

Tam. Why have I patience to endure all this?

Enter CHIRON and DEMETRIUS.

Dem. How now, dear sovereign, and our gracious mother,

Why doth your highness look so pale and wan?

Tam. Have I not reason, think you, to look pale?

These two have 'twic'd me hither to this place,
A barren detested vale, you see, it is:
The trees, though summer, yet forlorn and lean,
O'ercome with moss, and baleful mistletoe.
Here never shines the sun; here nothing breeds,
Unless the nightly owl, or fatal raven;
And, when they show'd me this abhorred pit,
They told me, here, at dead time of the night,
A thousand fiends, a thousand hissing snakes,
Ten thousand swelling toads, as many adders,
Would make such fearful and confused cries,
As any mortal body, hearing it,
Should straight fall mad, or else die suddenly.
No sooner had they told this hellish tale,
But straight they told me, they would band me here

Unto the body of a dismal yew;
And leave me to this miserable death.
And then they call'd me, foul adulterers,
Lascivious Goth, and all the bitterest terms
That ever ear did hear to such effect.
And, had you not by wondrous fortune come,
This vengeance on me had they executed:
Revenge it, as you love your mother's life,
Or be ye not henceforth call'd my children.

Dem. This is a witness that I am thy son.

[Stabs BASSIANUS.]

Chi. And this for me, struck home to show my strength.

[Stabbing him likewise.]

Lav. Ay, come, Semiramis,—nay, barbarous

Tamora!

For no name fits thy nature but thy own!

Tam. Give me thy pomard; you shall know my boys,
Your mother's hand shall right your mother's wrong.

Dem. Stay, madam, here is more belongs to her;

First thrash the corn, then after burn the straw:
This minion stood upon her chastity,
Upon her nuptial vow, her loyalty,
And with that painted hope braves your mightiness.

And shall she carry this unto her grave?

Chi. An if she do, I would I were a eunuch.
Drag hence her husband to some secret hole,
And make his dead trunk pillow to our lust.

Tam. But when you have the honey you desire,

Let not this wasp outlive, us both to sting.

* Possess. † Disquiet.
‡ See Ovid's Metamorphoses, Book VI. § Part.

• Hedge-hogs.

Chi. I warrant you, madam; we will make that sure.—

Come, mistress, now perforce we will enjoy That nice-preserved honesty of your's.

Lav. O Tainora! thou bear'st a woman's face,—

Tam. I will not hear her speak: away with her.

Lav. Sweet lords, entreat her hear me but a word.

Dem. Listen, fair madam: Let it be your glory

To see her tears: but be your heart to them, As unrelenting flint to drops of rain.

Lav. When did the tiger's young ones teach the dam?

Oh! do not learn her wrath; she taught it thee: The milk thou suck'dst from her did turn to marble;

Even at thy teat thou had'st thy tyranny.—

Yet every mother breeds not sons alike;

Do thou entreat her show a woman's pity.

[To CHIRON.]

Chi. What! would'st thou have me prove myself a bastard?

Lav. 'Tis true; the raven doth not hatch a lark:

Yet I have heard (oh! could I find it now!)

The lion mov'd with pity, did endure

To have his princely paws par'd all away.

Some say that ravens foster toison children,

The whilst their own birds tamish in their nests:

Oh! be to me, though thy hard heart say no,

Nothing so kind, but something pitiful!

Tam. I know not what it means: away with her.

Lav. Oh! let me teach thee: for my father's sake,

That gave thee life, when well he might have slain thee,

Be not obdurate, open thy deaf ears.

Tam. Had thou in person ne'er offended me

Even for his sake am I pitiless:—

Remember, boys, I pour'd forth tears in vain

To save your brother from the sacrifice;

But twice Andronicus would not relent.

Therefore away with her, and use her as you will;

The worse to her, the better lov'd of me.

Lav. O Tainora, be call'd a gentle queen,

And with those own hands kill me in this place:

For 'tis not life that I have begg'd so long;

Poor I was slain, when Bassianus died.

Tam. What begg'st thou then: fond woman, let me go.

Lav. 'Tis present death I beg; and one thing more,

That womanhood denies my tongue to tell:

Oh! keep me from their worse than killing lust, And tumble me into some loathsome pit;

Where never man's eye may behold my body:

Do this, and be a charitable murderer.

Tam. So should I rob my sweet sons of their fee:

No, let them satisfy their lust on thee.

Dem. Away, for thou hast staid us here too long.

Lav. No grace? no womanhood? Ah! beastly creature!

The blot and enemy to our general name!

Confusion fall—

Chi. Nay, then, I'll stop your mouth:—Bring thou her husband;

[Dragging off LAVINIA.]

This is the hole where Aaron bid us hide him.

[Exit.]

Tam. Farewell, my sons: see that you make her sure:

Ne'er let my heart know merry cheer indeed, Till all the Andronicus be made away.

Now will I hence to seek my lovely Moon,

And let my spleenful sons this trull deflower.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV.—The same.

Enter AARON, with QUINTUS and MARTIUS.

Aar. Come on, my lords; the better foot before:

Straight will I bring you to the loathsome pit, Where I espy'd the panther fast asleep.

Quin. My sight is very dull, what'er it bodes.

Mart. And mine, I promise you; we'll not for shame,

Well could I leave our sport to sleep awhile.

[MARTIUS falls into the Pit.]

Quin. What art thou fallen? What subtle hole is this,

Whose mouth is cover'd with rude-growing briars;

Upon whose leaves are drops of new-shed blood,

As fresh as morning's dew distill'd on flowers?

A very fatal place it seems to me:—

Speak, brother, hast thou hurt thee with the fall?

Mart. O brother, with the dismal object

That ever eye, with sight, made heart lament.

Aar. [Aside.] Now will I fetch the king to find them here;

That he thereby may give a likely guess,

How these were they that made away his brother

[Exit.]

Mart. Why dost not comfort me, and help me out

From this unhallow'd and blood-stained hole?

Quin. I am surprised with an uncouth fear:

A chilling sweat o'er-runs my trembling joints:

My heart suspects more than mine eye can see.

Mart. To prove thou hast a true-divining

heart,

Aaron and thou look down into this den,

And see a fearful sight of blood and death.

Quin. Aaron is gone; and my compassionate

heart

Will not permit mine eyes once to behold

The thing, whereat it trembles by surmise:

Oh! tell me how it is; for ne'er till now

Was I a child, to fear I know not what.

Mart. Lord Bassianus lies embrewed here,

All on a heap, like to a slaughter'd lamb,

In this detested, dark, blood-drinking pit.

Quin. If it be dark, how dost thou know 'tis he?

Mart. Upon his bloody finger he doth wear

A precious ring, that lightens all the hole,

Which, like a taper in some monument,

Doth shine upon the dead man's earthly cheeks,

And shows the ragged entrails of this pit:

So pale did shine the moon on Pyramus,

When he by night lay bath'd in maiden blood.

O brother, help me with thy taunting hand,—

If fear hath made thee faint, as me it hath,—

Out of this fell devouring receptacle,

As hateful as Cocyus' misty mouth.

Quin. Reach me thy hand, that I may help thee out;

Or, wanting strength to do thee so much good,

I may be pluck'd into the swallowing womb

Of this deep pit, poor Bassianus' grave.

I have no strength to pluck thee to the brink.

Mart. Nor I no strength to climb without thy help.

Quin. Thy hand once more; I will not loose

Till thou art here aloft, or I below:

[again,]

Thou canst not come to me, I come to thee.

[Falls in.]

Enter SATURNINUS and AARON.

Sat. Along with me:—I'll see what hole is here,

And what he is, that now is leap'd into it.

Say, who art thou, that lately didst descend into this gaping hollow of the earth?

Mart. The unhappy son of old Andronicus:

Brought thither in a most unlucky hour,

To find thy brother Bassianus dead.

Sat. My brother dead? I know thou dost, but just:

He and his lady both are at the lodge,

Upon the north side of this pleasant chase:

'Tis not an hour since I left him there.

Mart. We know not where you left him alive,
But, out alas! here have we found him dead.

Enter TAMORA, with Attendants; TITUS ANDRONICUS, and LUCIUS.

Tam. Where is my lord, the king?

Sat. Here, Tamora; though griev'd with killing grief.

Tam. Where is thy brother Bassianus?

Sat. Now to the bottom dost thou search my wound:

Poor Bassianus here lies murdered.

Tam. Then all too late I bring this fatal writ, [Giving a Letter.

The complot of this timeless tragedy;
And wonder greatly, that man's race can fold
In pleasing smiles such murderous tyrann.

Sat. [Reads.] An if we miss to meet him handsomely,—

*Sweet huntsman, Bassianus 'tis, we mean,—
Do thou so much as dig the grave for him;
Thou know'st our meaning; Look for thy reward*

*Among the nettles at the elder tree,
Which overshades the mouth of that same pit,
Where we decreed to bury Bassianus.*

Do this, and purchase us thy lasting friends.

O Tamora! was ever heard the like?

This is the pit, and this the elder tree:

Look, Sirs, if you can find the huntsman out,
That should have murder'd Bassianus here.

Aar. My gracious lord, here is the bag of gold.

Sat. Two of thy whelps, [To Tit.] fell curs of bloody kind,

Have here bereft my brother of his life:—

Sirs, drag them from the pit unto the prison;

There let them bide, until we have devis'd

Some never-heard-of torturing pain for them.

Tam. What, are they in this pit? O wondrous
thing!

How easily murder is discovered!

Tit. High emperor, upon my feeble knee

I beg this boon, with tears not lightly shed,

That this fell fault of my accursed sons,

Accursed, if the fault be prov'd in them,—

Sat. If it be prov'd! you see, it is apparent.—

Who found this letter? Tamora, was it you?

Tam. Andronicus himself did take it up.

Tit. I did, my lord; yet let me be their bail:

For by my father's reverend tomb, I vow,

They shall be ready at your highness' will,

To answer their suspicion with their lives.

Sat. Thou shalt not bail them: see, thou follow me. [Exeunt.]

Some bring the murder'd body, some the murder, let them not speak a word, the guilt is plain;

For, by my soul, were there worse end than

death,

That end upon them should be executed.

Tam. Andronicus, I will entreat the king:

Fear not thy sons, they shall do well enough.

Tit. Come, Lucius, come: stay not to talk with them.

[Exeunt severally.]

SCENE V.—The same.

Enter DEMETRIUS and CHIRON, with LAVINIA, ravished; her Hands cut off, and her Tongue cut out.

Dem. So, now go tell, an if thy tongue can
speak,

Who 'twas that cut thy tongue, and ravish'd thee.

Chi. Write down thy mind, bewray thy meaning so;

And if thy stumps will let thee play the scribe.

Dem. See, how with signs and tokens she can sow!

Chi. Go home, call for sweet water, wash thy hands.

• Unstomely.

Dem. She hath no tongue to call, nor hand to wash;

And so let's leave her to her silent wails.

Chi. An 'twere my case, I should go hang myself.

Dem. If thou hadst hands to help thee knit the cord.

[Exeunt DEMETRIUS and CHIRON.]

Enter MARCUS.

Mar. Who's this,—my niece, that flies away so fast?

Cousin, a word; Where is your husband?—

If I do dream, 'would all my wealth would wake
me!

If I do wake, some planet strike me down,
That I may slumber in eternal sleep!—

Speak, gentle niece, what stern malignant hands
Have lopp'd, and hew'd, and made thy body bare

Of her two branches? those sweet ornaments, Whose circling shadows kings have sought to sleep in;

And might not gain so great a happiness,
As half thy love? Why dost not speak to me?—

Alas, a crimson river of warm blood,
Like to a bubbling fountain stirr'd with wind,
Doth rise and fall between thy parted lips,
Coming and going with thy honey breath.

But sure, some Tereus hath belov'd thee,
And lest thou should'st detect him, cut thy
tongue.

Ah! now thou turnest away thy face for shame,*

And, notwithstanding all this loss of blood,—

As from a conduit with three running spouts,—

Yet do thy cheeks look red as Titan's face,
Blushing to be encounter'd with a cloud.

Shall I speak for thee? shall I say, 'tis so?

Oh! that I knew thy heart; and knew the secret
That I might rail at him to ease my mind!

Sorrow concealed, like an oven stopp'd,
Doth burn the heart to cinders where it is.

Fair Philomela, she but lost her tongue,
And in a tedious sampler sew'd her mind.

But, lovely niece, that mean is cut from thee;
A claffier Tereus nast'rous met withal,

And he hath cut those pretty fingers off,
That could have better sew'd than Philomela.

Oh! had the monster seen those lily hands
Tremble, like aspen leaves, upon a lute,

And make the silken strings delight to kiss them,
He would not then have touch'd them for his
life;

Or, had he heard the heavenly harmony,
Which that sweet tongue hath made,

He would have dropp'd his knife, and fell asleep.

As Cebrenus at the Thracian poet's* feet.

Come, let us go, and make thy father blind:

For such a sight will blind a father's eye:

One hour's storm will drown the fragrant meads;
What will whole months of tears thy father's
eyes?

Do not draw back, for we will mourn with thee;
Oh! could our mourning ease thy misery!

[Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Rome.—A Street.

Enter SENATORS, TRIBUNES, and Officers of Justice, with MARTIUS and QUINTUS, bound, passing on to the Place of Execution: TI-TUS going before, pleading.

Tit. Hear me, grave fathers! noble tribunes stay!

For pity of mine age, whose youth was spent
In dangerous wars, whilst you securely slept;

For all my blood in Rome's great quarrel shed;

For all the frosty nights that I have watch'd;

• Orpheus.

And for these bitter tears, which now you see
Filling the aged wrinkles in my cheeks;
Be pitiful to my condemned sons,
Whose souls are not corrupted as 'tis thought!
For two and twenty sons I never wept,
Because they died in honour's lofty bed:
For these, these, tribunes, in the dust I write [Throwing himself on the Ground]
My heart's deep languor, and my soul's sad tears.
Let my tears staunch the earth's dry appetite:
My sons' sweet blood will make it shame and blush.

[*Exit SENATORS, TRIBUNES, &c.
with the Prisoners.*]

O earth, I will befriend thee more with rain,
That shall distil from these two ancient urns,
Than youthful April shall with all his showers:
In summer's drought, I'll drop upon thee still:
In winter, with warm tears I'll melt the snow,
And keep eternal spring-time on thy face,
So thou refuse to drink my dear sons' blood.

Enter Lucius, with his Sword drawn.

O reverend tribunes! gentle aged men!
Unbind my sons, reverse the doom of death;
And let me say, that never wept before,
My tears are now prevailing orators.

Luc. O noble father, you lament in vain;
The tribunes hear you not, no man is by,
And you recount your sorrows to a stone.

Tit. Ah! Lucius, for thy brothers let me plead:
Grave tribunes, once more I entreat of you.

Luc. My gracious lord, no tribune hears you speak.

Tit. Why, 'tis no matter, man: if they did hear,

They would not mark me; or if they did mark,
All bootless to them, they'd not pity me.
Therefore I tell my sorrows to the stones,
Who, though they cannot answer my distress,
Yet in some sort they're better than the tribunes,
For that they will not intercept my tale:
When I do weep, they humbly at my feet
Receive my tears, and seem to weep with me;
And, were they but attuned in grave weeds,
Rome could afford no tribune like to these.
A stone is soft as wax, tribunes more hard than stones:

A stone is silent, and offendeth not:
And tribunes with their tongues doom men to death.

But wherefore stand'st thou with thy weapon drawn?

Luc. To rescue my two brothers from their death:

For which attempt, the judges have pronounced
My everlasting doom of banishment.

Tit. O happy man, they have befriended thee.
Why, foolish Lucius, dost thou not perceive,
That Rome is but a wilderness of tigers?
Tigers must prey; and Rome affords no prey,
But me and mine: How happy art thou then,
From these devours to be banished!
But who comes with our brother Marcus here?

Enter MARCUS and LAVINIA.

Mar. Titus, prepare thy noble eyes to weep;
Or, if not so, thy noble heart to break;
I bring consuming sorrow to thine age.

Tit. Will it consume me? let me see it then.

Mar. This was thy daughter.

Tit. Why, Marcus, so she is.

Luc. Ah! me, this object kills me!

Tit. Faint heated boy, arise, and look upon her!—

Speak, my Lavinia, what accursed hand
Hath made thee handless in thy father's sight?
What fool hath added water to the sea,
Or brought a taggot to bright burning Troy?
My grief was at the height before thou cam'st,
And now, like Nilus,* it disdaineth bounds,
Give me a sword, I'll chop off my hands too;
For they have fought for Rome, and all in vain;

And they have nurs'd this woe, in feeding him;
In bootless prayer have they been held up,
And they have serv'd me to effectless use:
Now, all the service I require of them
Is, that the one will help to cut the other.—
'Tis well, Lavinia, that thou hast no hands;
For hands, to do Rome service, are but vain.

Luc. Speak, gentle sister, who hath martyr'd thee?

Mar. Oh! that delightful engine of her thoughts,
That blabb'd them with such pleasing eloquence,
Is torn from forth that pretty hollow cage:
Where, like a sweet melodious bird, it sung
Sweet varied notes, enchanting every ear!

Luc. Oh! say thou for her, who hath done this deed?

Mar. Oh! thus I found her, staying in the park,

Seeking to hide herself, as doth the deer,
That hath receiv'd some unrequiting wound.

Tit. It was my deer; and he that wounded her,

Hath hurt me more, than had he kill'd me dead:
For now I stand as one upon a rock,

Environ'd with a wilderness of sea;
Who marks the waxing tide grow wave by wave,

Expecting ever when some furious surge
Will in his brinish bowels swallow him.

This way to death my wretched sons are gone;
Here stands my other son a banish'd man!

And here, my brother, weeping at my woes;
But that which gives my soul the greatest pain,

Is dear Lavinia, dearer than my soul.—
Had I but seen thy picture in this plight,

It would have mad'd me; What shall I do
Now I behold thy lively body so?

Thou hast no hands to wipe away thy tears:
Nor tongue to tell me who has martyr'd thee:

Thy husband he is dead: and, for his death,
Thy brothers are condemn'd and dead by this:—

Look, Marcus! ah! son Lucius, look on her!
When I did name her brothers, then fresh tears

Stood on her cheeks; as doth the honey dew
Upon a gather'd lily almost wither'd.

Mar. Perchance, she weeps because they kill'd her husband:

Perchance, because she knows them innocent.

Tit. If they did kill thy husband, then be joyful,

Because the law hath ta'en revenge on them.
No, no, they would not do so foul a deed;

Witness the sorrow that their sister makes.—
Gentle Lavinia, let me kiss thy lips;

Or make some sign how I may do thee ease:
Shall thy good uncle, and thy brother Lucius,

And thou, and I, sit round about some fountain;
Looking all downwards, to behold our cheeks

How they are stain'd; like meadows, yet not dry

With myr slime left on them by a flood?
And in the fountain shall we gaze so long,

Till the fresh taste be taken from that cleanness,
And made a brim-pit with our bitter tears?

Or shall we cut away our hands, like thine?
Or shall we bite on tongues, and in dumb shows

Pass the remainder of our hateful days?
What shall we do? let us, that have our tongues

Plot some device of further misery,
To make us wonder'd at in time to come.

Luc. Sweet father, cease your tears; for, at your grief,

See how my wretched sister sobs and weeps.

Mar. Patience, dear niece:—good Titus, dry thine eyes.

Tit. Ah, Marcus, Marcus! brother, well I wot,*

Thy napkin† cannot drink a tear of mine,
For thou, poor man, hast drown'd it with thine own.

Luc. Ah! my Lavinia, I will wipe thy cheeks.

* The river Nile.

* Know.

† Handkerchief.

Tit. Mark, Marcus, mark! I understand her signs:

Had she a tongue to speak, now would she say
That to her brother which I said to thee;
His napkin, with his true tears all bewet,
Can do no service on her sorrowful cheeks.
Oh! what a sympathy of woe is this!
As far from help as limbo is from bliss!

Enter AARON.

Aar. Titus Andronicus, my lord the emperor Sends thee this word,—That, if thou love thy sons,

Let Marcus, Lucius, or thyself old Titus,
Or any one of you, chop off your hand,
And send it to the king: he for the same,
Will send thee hither both thy sons alive:
And that shall be the ransom for their fault.

Tit. O gracious emperor! O gentle Aaron!
Did ever raven sing so like a lark,
That gives sweet tidings of the sun's uprise?
With all my heart, I'll send the emperor
My hand.

Good Aaron, wilt thou help to chop it off?

Luc. Stay, father; for that noble hand of thine,

That hath thrown down so many enemies,
Shall not be sent: my hand will serve the turn;
My youth can better spare my blood than you;
And therefore mine shall save my brother's lives.

Mar. Which of your hands hath not defended
Rome,

And rear'd aloft the bloody battle axe,
Writing destruction on the enemy's castle?
O none of both but are of high desert:
My hand hath been but idle; let it serve
To ransom my two nephews from their death;
Then have I kept it to a worthy end.

Aar. Nay, come agree, whose hand shall go along,

For fear they die before their pardon come.

Mar. My hand shall go.

Luc. By heaven it shall not go.

Tit. Sirs, strive no more; such wither'd herbs as these

Are meet for plucking up, and therefore mine.

Luc. Sweet father, if I shall be thought thy
son,

Let me redeem my brothers both from death.

Mar. And, for our father's sake, and mother's care,

Now let me show a brother's love to thee.

Tit. Agree between you: I will spare my hand.

Luc. Then I'll go fetch an axe.

Mar. But I will use the axe.

[Exeunt LUCIUS and MARCUS.

Tit. Come hither, Aaron; I'll deceive them
both:

Lend me thine hand, and I will give thee mine.

Aar. If that be call'd deceit, I will be honest,

And never, whilst I live, deceive men so:—

But I'll deceive you in another sort, [Aside.

And that you'll say, ere half an hour can pass.

[He cuts off Titus' Hand.

Enter LUCIUS and MARCUS.

Tit. Now, stay your strife; what shall be, is despatch'd.—

Good Aaron, give his majesty my hand:
Tell him, it was a hand that warded him
From thousand dangers; bid him bury it;
More hath it merited, that let it have.

As for my sons, say, I account of them
As jewels purchas'd at an easy price;
And yet dear too, because I bought mine own.

Aar. I go, Andronicus: and for thy hand,
Look by and by to have thy sons with thee:—

[Aside.

Their heads, I mean.—Oh! how this villany
Doth fat me with the very thoughts of it!
Let fools do good, and fair men call for grace,
Aaron will have his soul black like his face.

[Exit.

Tit. Oh! here I lift this one hand up to heaven,

And bow this feeble ruin to the earth:

If any power pities wretched tears,

To that I call!—What, wilt thou kneel with me?

[To LAVINIA.

Do then, dear heart; for heaven shall hear our prayers;

Or with our sighs we'll breathe the welkin dim,
And stain the sun with fog, as sometime clouds,
When they do hug him in their melting bosoms.

Mar. O brother, speak with possibilities.
And do not break into these deep extremes.

Tit. Is not my sorrow deep having no bottom?

Then be my passions* bottomless with them.

Mar. But yet let reason govern thy lament.

Tit. If there were reason for these miseries,
Then into limits could I bind my woes:

When heaven doth weep, doth not the earth o'erflow?

If the winds rage, doth not the sea wax mad,

Threat'ning the welkin with his big-swollen face?

And wilt thou have a reason for this coil?†

I am the sea; hark, how her sighs do blow!

She is the weeping welkin, I the earth:

Then must my sea be moved with her sighs;

Then must my earth with her continual tears

Become a deluge, overflow'd and drown'd:

For why? my bowels cannot hide her woes,

But like a drunkard must I vomit them.

Then give me leave; for loaves will have leave

To ease their stomachs with their bitter tongue.

Enter a MESSENGER, with two Heads and a Hand.

Mess. Worthy Andronicus, ill art thou repaid
For that good hand thou sent'st the emperor.

Here are the heads of thy two noble sons;

And here's thy hand, in scorn to thine sent back;

Thy griefs their sports, thy resolution mock'd:

That woe is me to think upon thy woes,

More than remembrance of my father's death.

[Luc.

Mar. Now let hot Ætna cool in Sicily,
And be my heart an ever-burning hell!

These miseries are more than may be borne!

To weep with them that weep doth ease some deal,

But sorrow flouted at is double death.

Luc. Ah! that this sight should make me deep a wound,

And yet detested life not shrink thereat!

That ever death should let life bear his name,

Where life hath no more interest but to breathe?

[LAVINIA kisses him.

Mar. Alas, poor heart, that kiss is comeliest,
As frozen water to a starved snake.

Tit. When will this fearful slumber have an end?

Mar. Now, farewell, flattery: Die, Andronicus;

Thou dost not slumber: see, thy two son's heads,

Thy warlike hand, thy mangled daughter here,

Thy other banish'd son, with this dear sight

Struck pale and bloodless; and thy brother, I,

Even like a stony image, cold and numb.

Ah! now no more will I control thy griefs:

Rent off thy silver hair, thy other hand

Gnawing with thy teeth; and be this dismal sight

The closing up of our most wretched eyes!

Now is a time to storm—why art thou still?

Tit. Ha, ha, ha!

Mar. Why dost thou laugh? it fits not with this hour.

Tit. Why, I have not another tear to shed:

Besides this sorrow is an enemy,

And would usurp upon my watery eyes,

And make them blind with tributary tears:

Then which way shall I find revenge's cave?

For these two heads do seem to speak to me;

And threaten me, I shall never come to bliss,

* Sufferings.

† Stir, bustle.

Till all these mischiefs be return'd again,
Even in their throats that have committed
them.

Come, let me see what task I have to do.—
You heavy people, circle me about;
That I may turn me to each one of you,
And swear unto my soul to right your wrongs.
The vow is made.—Come, brother, take a head;
And in this hand the other will I bear!
Lavinia, thou shalt be employ'd in these things;
Bear thou my hand, sweet wench, between thy teeth.

As for thee, boy, go, got thee from my sight;
Thou art an exile, and thou must not stay:
Hie to the Goths, and raise an army there:
And, if you love me, as I think you do,
Let's kiss and part, for we have much to do.

[Exeunt TITUS, MARCUS, and LAVINIA.
Luc. Farewell, Andronicus, my noble father;
The woeful'st man that ever liv'd in Rome!
Farewell, proud Rome! till Lucius come again,
He leaves his pledges dearer than his life.
Farewell, Lavinia, my noble sister;
Oh! would thou wert as thou 'fore hast been!
But now not Lucius nor Lavinia lives,
But in oblivion, and hateful griefs.
If Lucius live, he will requite your wrongs;
And make proud Saturninus and his empress
Beg at the gates, like Tarquin and his queen.
Now will I to the Goths, and raise a power,
To be reveng'd on Rome and Saturnine.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—A Room in TITUS' House.—
A Banquet set out.

Enter TITUS, MARCUS, LAVINIA, and young
LUCIUS, a boy.

Tit. So, so; now sit: and look, you eat no
more
Than will preserve just so much strength in us
As will revenge these bitter woes of ours.
MARCUS, unknot that sorrow-wreath knot;
Thy niece and I, poor creatures, want our hands,
And cannot passionate our tenfold grief
With folded arms. This poor right hand of mine
Is lent to tyrannise upon my breast;
And when my heart, all mad with misery,
Beats in this hollow prison of my flesh,
Then thus I thump it down.—
Thou map of woe that thus dost talk in signs!

[To LAVINIA.

When thy poor heart beats with outrageous beating,

Thou canst not strike it thus to make it still.
Wound it with sighing, girl, kill it with groans;
Or get some little knife between thy teeth,
And just against thy heart make thou a hole;
That all the tears that thy poor eyes let fall,
May run into that sink, and soaking in,
Drown the lamenting fool in sea-salt tears.

Mar. Fie, brother, fie! teach her not thus to lay
Such violent hands upon her tender life.

Tit. How now! has sorrow made thee dote already?

Why, MARCUS, no man should be mad but I.
What violent hands can she lay on her life!
Ah! wherefore dost thou urge the name of
hands:—

For bid Æneas tell the tale twice o'er,
How Troy was burnt, and he made miserable!
O handle not the theme, to talk of hands;
Lest we remember still, that we have none.—
Fie, fie, how frantically I square my talk!
As if we should forget we had no hands,
If MARCUS did not name the word of hands!—
Come, let's fall to; and, gentle girl, eat this:— Here's no drink! Hark, MARCUS, what she says:—

I can interpret all her martyr'd signs:—
She says, she drinks no other drink but tears, Brew'd with her sorrows, meash'd upon her cheeks:—

* An allusion to brewing.

Speechless complainer, I will learn thy thought;
In thy dumb action will I be as perfect,
As begging hermits in their holy prayers:
Thou shalt not sigh, nor hold thy stumps to
heaven,

Nor wink, nor nod, nor kneel, nor make a sign
But I, of these, will wrest an alphabet,
And, by still * practice, learn to know thy mean-
ing.

Boy. Good grandsire, leave these bitter deep laments:

Make my aunt merry with some pleasing tale.

Mar. Alas! the tender boy, in passion mov'd,
Doth weep to see his grandsire's heaviness.

Tit. Peace, tender sapling; thou art made of
tears,

And tears will quickly melt thy life away.—

[MARCUS strikes the Dish with a Knife.
What dost thou strike at, MARCUS, with thy knife?

Mar. At that that I have kill'd, my lord; a fly.

Tit. Out on thee, murderer! thou kill'st my
heart;

Mine eyes are cloy'd with view of tyranny:

A deed of death, done on the innocent,

Becomes not TITUS' brother: Get thee gone;

I see thou art not for my company.

Mar. Alas! my lord, I have but kill'd a fly.

Tit. But how, if that fly had a father and mother?

How would he hang his slender gilded wings,

And buzz lamenting doings in the air!

Poor harmless fly!

That, with his pretty buzzing melody,

Came here to make us merry; and thou hast
kill'd him.

Mar. Pardon me, Sir; 'twas a black ill-namour'd fly,

Like to the empress' Moor; therefore I kill'd him.

Tit. Oh! oh! oh!

Then pardon me for reprehending thee,

For thou hast done a charitable deed.

Give me thy knife, I will insult on him;

Flattering myself, as it were the Moor

Come hither purposely to poison me.—

There's for thyself, and that's for Tamora.—

Ah! sirrah!—

Yet I do think we are not brought so low,

But that, between us, we can kill a fly,

That comes in likeness of a coal-black Moor

Mar. Alas! poor man! grief has so wrought on him,

He takes false shadows for true substances.

Tit. Come, take away.—Lavinia, go with me:

I'll to thy closet; and go read with thee

Sad stories, chanced in the times of old.—

Come, boy, and go with me; thy sight is young,

And thou shalt read, when mine begins to dazzle.

[Exeunt

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The same.—Before TITUS'
House.

Enter TITUS and MARCUS. Then enter young
LUCIUS, LAVINIA running after him.

Boy. Help, grandsire, help! my aunt Lavinia
Follows me every where, I know not why:—
Good uncle MARCUS, see how swift she comes!
Alas! sweet aunt, I know not what you mean.

Mar. Stand by me, LUCIUS; and do not fear thine aunt.

Tit. She loves thee, boy, too well to do thee harm.

Boy. Ay, when my father was in Rome, she did.

Mar. What means my niece Lavinia by these signs?

* Constant practice.

† This was formerly not a disrespectful expression.

Tit. Fear her not, Lucius:—Somewhat doth she mean:

See, Lucius, see, how much she makes of thee: Somewhither would she have thee go with her. Ah! boy, Cornelia never with more care Read to her sons, than she hath read to thee, Sweet poetry, and Tully's Orator.* Canst thou not guess wherefore she plies thee thus?

Boy. My lord, I know not, I, nor can I guess, Unless some fit or frenzy do possess her: For I have heard my grandsire say full oft, Extremity of griefs would make men mad; And I have read that Hecuba of Troy Ran mad through sorrow: That made me to fear; Although, my lord, I know my noble aunt Loves me as dear as e'er my mother did, And would not, but in fury, fright my youth: Which made me down to throw my books, and fly;

Caseless, perhaps: But pardon me, sweet aunt: And, madam, if my uncle Marcus go, I will most willingly attend your ladyship.

Mar. Lucius, I will.

[LAVINIA turns over the books which LUCIUS has let fall.]

Tit. How now, Lavinia!—Marcus, what means this?

Some book there is that she desires to see:—Which is it, girl, of these?—Open them, boy.—But thou art deeper read, and better skill'd; Come, and take choice of all my library, And so beguile thy sorrow, till the heavens Reveal the damn'd contriver of this deed.—Why lifts she up her arms in sequence thus?

Mar. I think she means, that there was more than one Confederate in the fact:—Ay, more there was:—Or else to heaven she leaves them for revenge.

Tit. Lucius, what book is that she toseth so?

Boy. Grandsire, 'tis Ovid's Metamorphosis; My mother gave't me.

Mar. For love of her that's gone,

Perhaps she could't it from among the rest.

Tit. Soft! see, how busily she turns the leaves! Help her:

What would she find?—Lavinia, shall I read?

This is the tragic tale of Phloemel,

And treats of Tereus' treason and his rape;

And rape, I fear, was root of thine annoy.

Mar. See, mother, see! note, how she quotes the leaves.

Tit. Lavinia, wert thou thus surpris'd, sweet girl,

Ravish'd and wrong'd, as Phloemel was,

Forc'd in the ruthless, vast, and gloomy woods?—

See, see!—

Ay, such a place there is, where we did hunt,

(Oh! had we never, never, hunted there!)

Pattern'd by that the poet here describes.

By nature made for murders and for rapes.

Mar. Oh! why should nature build so foul a den.

Unless the gods delight in tragedies!

Tit. Give signs, sweet girl,—for here are none but friends,—

What Roman lord it was durst do the deed:

Or slunk not Saturnine, as Tarquin erst,

That left the camp to sue in Lucrece' bed?

Mar. Sit down, sweet niece;—brother, sit down by me,—

Apollo, Pallas, Jove, or Mercury,

Inpire me, that I may this treason find!—

My lord, look here,—Look here, Lavinia:

This sandy plot is plain; guide, if thou canst,

This alter me, when I have writ my name

Without the help of any hand at all.

[He writes his name with his staff, and guides it with his feet and mouth.]

Curs'd be that heart, that forc'd us to this shift!—

Write thou, good niece; and here display, at last,

What God will have discover'd for revenge: Heaven guide thy pen to print thy sorrows plain That we may know the traitors and the truth! [She takes the staff in her mouth, and guides it with her stumps, and writes.]

Tit. Oh! do you read, my lord, what she hath Stuprum—Chiron—Demetrius. [Exit?]

Mar. What, what!—the lustful sons of Tamoira

Performers of this heinous, bloody deed?

Tit. Magne Dominator poli, Tam lentus audis scelera? tam lentus vides?

Mar. Oh! calm thee, gentle lord! although, I know,

There is enough written upon this earth, To stir a mutiny in the mildest thoughts, And arm the minds of infants to exclaim.

My lord, kneel down with me; Lavinia, kneel;

And kneel, sweet boy, the Roman Hector's hope:

And swear with me,—as with the woe'd tear,—

And father, of that chaste dishonour'd dame,

Lord Junius Brutus swear to Latrecer's rape,—

That we will prosecute, by good advice,

Mortal revenge upon these traitorous Goths,

And see their blood, or die with this reproach.

Tit. 'Tis sure enough, and you know how.

But if you hunt these bear-whelps, then beware:

The dam will wake; and, if she wound you once,

Sue's will with the hon deeply still in league,

And lulls him whilst she playeth on her back,

And, when he sleeps, will she do what she list.

You're a young huntsman, Marcus; let it alone;

And come, I will go get a leaf of brass,

And with a gad of steel will write these words,

And lay it by: the angry northern wind

Will blow these sands, like Sybil's leaves, abroad,

And where's your lesson then?—Boy, what say you?

Boy. I say, my lord, that if I were a man,

Then mother's bed-chamber should not be safe

For these bad-bondmen to the yoke of Rome.

Mar. Ay, that's my boy! thy father hath full oft,

For this ungrateful country done the like.

Boy. And, uncle, so will I, as I live.

Tit. Come, go with me into mine armoury;

Lucius, I'll fit thee; and withal, my boy

Shall carry from me to the empress' sons

Presents, that I intend to send them both:

Come, come; thou'lt do thy messenger, wilt thou not?

Boy. Ay, with my dagger in their bosoms, grandsire.

Tit. No, boy, not so; I'll teach thee another course.

Lavinia, come:—Marcus, look to my house;

Lucius and I'll go brave it at the court;

Ay, marry, will we, Su: and we'll be waited on.

[Exit TITUS, LAVINIA, and BOY.]

Mar. O heavens, can you hear a good man

groan,

And not relent, or not compassion him?

Marcus, attend him in his ecstasy;

That hath more scars of sorrow in his heart,

Than foe men's marks upon his batter'd shield:

But yet so just, that he will not revenge it—

Revenge the heavens for old Andronicus!— [Exit]

* Tully's Treatise on Eloquence entitled Orator.

† Succession. ‡ Obsequies. § Punish.

* Husband.

† The point of a spear.

I greet your honours from Andronicus :—
And pray the Roman gods, confound you both.

[Aside.]
Dem. Gramercy, lovely Lucius : What's the news ?

Eog. That you are both decipher'd that's the news.

For villains mark'd with rape. [Aside.] May it please you,
My grandsire, well-advis'd, hath sent by me
The goodliest weapons of his armoury,
To gratify your honourable youth.
The hope of Rome ; for so he bade me say ;
And so I do, and with his gifts present
Your lordships, that whenever you have need,
You may be armed and appointed well :
And so I leave you both, [Aside.] like bloody villains.

[Exit Boy and Attendant.]
Dem. What's here ? A scroll ; and written round about ?

Let's see :

*Integer vita, scelerisq; purus,
Non eget Mauri jaculis, nec arcu.*

Chi. Oh ! 'tis a verse in Horace ; I know it
I read it in the grammar long ago. [Well.]

Aar. Ay, just!—a verse in Horace :—right, you have it.—

Now, what a thing it is to be an ass ! [Aside.]
Here's no sound jest ! the old man hath found their guilt ;

And sends the weapons wrapp'd about with lines,
That wound, beyond their feeling, to the quick.
But were our witty empress well-a-foot,
She would applaud Andronicus' conceit.
But let her rest in her nearest awhile.—

And now, young lords, wasn't not a happy star
Led us to Rome, strangers, and, more than so,
Captives, to be advanced to this height ?

It did me good, before the Palace gate,
To brave the tribune in his brother's hearing.

Dem. But me more good, to see so great a lord
Basely in-mate, and send us gifts

Aar. Had he not reason, lord Demetrius ?
Did you not see his daughter very friendly ?

Dem. I would we had a thousand Roman dames

At such a bay, by turn to serve our lust.

Chi. A charitable wish, and full of love.

Aar. Here lacks but your mother for to say
amen.

Chi. And that would she for twenty thousand
more.

Dem. Come, let us go ; and pray to all the
For our beloved mother in her pains. [gods]

Aar. Pray to the devils ; the gods have given us o'er. [Aside. Flourish.]

Dem. Why do the emperor's trumpets flourish
thus ?

Chi. Belike for joy the emperor hath a son.

Dem. Sott ; who comes here ?

Enter a Nurse, with a black-a-moor Child in her arms.

Nur. Good morrow, lords :
Oh ! tell me, did you see Aaron the Moor.

Aar. Well, more or less, or ne'er a whit at
all,

Here Aaron is ; and what with Aaron now ?

Nur. O gentle Aaron, we are all undone !
Now help or woe betide thee evermore !

Aar. Why, what a caterwauling dost thou keep !

What dost thou wrap and fumble in thine arms ?

Nur. Oh ! that which I would hide from heaven's eye, [grace :—]

Our empress' shame, and stately Rome's dis-ble is deliver'd, lords, she is deliver'd.

Aar. To whom ?

Nur. I mean, she's brought to bed.

Aar. Well, God
Give her good rest ! What hath he sent her ?

Nur. A devil.
• Aar. Why then she's the devil's dam ; a joyful issue.

Nur. A joyless, dismal, black, and sorrowful issue :

Here is the babe, as loathsome as a toad
Amongst the fairest breeders of our clime.

The empress sends it thee, thy stamp, thy seal,
And bids thee christen it with thy dagger's point.

Aar. Out, out, you whore ! is black so base a hue ?—

Sweet blowse, you are a beauteous blossom, sure.

Dem. Villain, what hast thou done ?

Aar. Done ! that which thou

Canst not undo.

Chi. Thou hast undone our mother.

Aar. Villain, I have done thy mother.

Dem. And therein, hellish dog, thou hast undone.

Woe to her chance, and damn'd her loathed
choice !

Accurs'd the offspring of so foul a stend !

Chi. It shall not live.

Aar. It shall not die.

Nur. Aaron, it must ; the mother wills it so.

Aar. What, must it, nurse ? then let no man
but I,

Do execution on my flesh and blood.

Dem. I'll broach * the tadpole on my rapier's
point :

Nur. Nurse, give it me ; my sword shall soon despatch
it.

Aar. Sooner this sword shall plough thy bowels up.

[Takes the Child from the Nurse and draws.]

Stay, murderous villains ! will you kill your brother ?

Now, by the burning tapers of the sky,
That shone so brightly when this boy was got,
He dies upon my scimitar's sharp point,
That touches this my first-born son and heir !

I tell you, younglings, not Enclaudas, *
With all his threatening band of Typhon's brood,
Nor great Alcides, † nor the god of war,
Shall seize this prey out of his father's hands.

What, what, ye sanguine, shallow-heated boys !
Ye white-lin'd walls ! ye alehouse painted
signs !

Coal black is better than another hue,
In that it seems to bear another hue :

For all the water in the ocean
Can never turn a swan's black legs to white,
Although she have them homely in the flood.

Tell the empress from me, I am of age
To keep mine own ; excuse it how she can.

Dem. Wilt thou betray thy noble mistress thus ?

Aar. My mistress is my mistress ; this myself ;

The vigour and the picture of my youth :

This, before all the world, do I prefer ;

This mangre ‡ all the world, will I keep safe,
Or some of you shall smoke for it in Rome.

Dem. By this our mother is for ever sham'd.

Chi. Rome will despise her for this foul escape

Nur. The emperor, in his rage, will doom her death.

Chi. I blush to think upon this ignomy, ||

Aar. Why, there's the privilege your beauty bears :

Fie, treacherous hue ! that will betray with blush-
ing

The close enacts and counsels of the heart !

Here's a young lad fram'd of another lee : ¶

Look, how the black slave smiles upon the father ;

As who should say, Old lad, I am thine own.

He is your brother, lords ; sensibly fed
Of that self-blood that first gave life to you ;

And, from that womb where you in prison'd were,
He is enfranchis'd and come to light :

Nay, he's your brother by the surer side,
Although my seal be stamped in his face.

Nur. Aaron, what shall I say unto the empress ?

* Spit.

† Hercules.

‡ A giant, the son of Titan and Terra.

§ In spite of.

|| Ignominy.

¶ Complexion.

Dem. Advise thee, Aaron, what is to be done,
And we will all subscribe to thy advice :
Save thou the child, so we may all be safe.

Aar. Then sit we down, and let us all consult.

*My son and I will have the wind of you :
Keep there : Now talk at pleasure of your safety.*

[They sit on the Ground.]

Dem. How many women saw this child of his ?

Aar. Why, so, brave lords : When we all join in league,

I am a lamb : but if you brave the Moor,
The chafed boar, the mountain lioness,
The ocean swells not so as Aaron storms.—
But, say again, how many saw the child ?

Nur. Cornelia the midwife, and myself,
And no one else, but the delivered empress.

Aar. The empress, the midwife, and yourself :
Two may keep counsel, when the third's away :
Go to the empress ; tell her, this I said :—

[Stabbing her.]

Weke, weke !—so cries a pig prepar'd to the spit.

Dem. What mean'st thou, Aaron ? Wherefore didst thou this ?

Aar. O lord, Sir, 'tis a deed of policy :
Shall she live to betray this guilt of ours ?
A long-tongu'd babbling gossip ? no, lords, no.
And now be it known to you my full intent.
Not far, one Multeus lives, my countryman,
His wife but yesternight was brought to bed,
His child is like to her, fair as you are :
Go pack * with him, and give the mother gold,
And tell them both the circumstance of all ;
And how by this their child shall be advanc'd
And be received for the emperor's heir,
And substituted in the place of mine,
To calm this tempest whirling in the court ;
And let the emperor dandle him for his own,
Hark ye, lords, ye see, that I have given her physic, [Pointing to the Nurse.]

And you must needs bestow her funeral ;
The fields are near and you are gallant grooms :
This done, see that you take no longer days,
But send the midwife presently to me.
The midwife, and the nurse, well made away,
Then let the ladies tattle what they please.

Chi. Aaron, I see, thou wilt not trust the air
With secrets.

Dem. For this care of 'Tamora,
Herself, and her's, are highly bound to thee.

[Exeunt DEM. and CHI. bearing off the Nurse.]

Aar. Now to the Goths, as swift as swallow
flies ;

There to dispose this treasure in mine arms,
And secretly to greet the empress' friends.—
Come on, you thick-lipp'd slave, I'll bear you
hence ;

For it is you that puts us to our shifts :
I'll make you feed on berries, and on roots,
And feed on curds and whey, and suck the goat,
And cabin in a cave ; and bring you up
To be a warrior, and command a camp. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—The same.—A Public Place.

*Enter TITUS, bearing arrows, with letters
at the ends of them ; with him MARCUS, young LUCIUS, and other Gentlemen with bows.*

Tit. Come, Marcus, come ; Kinsmen, this is the way :—

Sir boy, now let me see your archery :
Look ye draw home enough, and 'tis there straight :
Terras Astraea reliquit :

Ye remember'd, Marcus, she's gone, she's fled.

Get, take you to your tools. You, cousins, shall Go sound the ocean, and cast your nets ;
Happily you may find her in the sea ;
Yet there's as little justice as at land :—
No ; Publius and Sempronius, you must do it ;
'Tis you must dig with mattock, and with spade,

* Bargaun with.

And pierce the inmost centre of the earth :
Then, when you come to Pluto's region,
I pray you, deliver him this petition :
Tell him, it is for justice and for aid,
And that it comes from old Andronicus,
Shaken with sorrows in ungrateful Rome.—
Ah ! Rome !—Well, well ; I made three miserable
What time I threw the people's suffrages
On him that thus doth tyrannise o'er me.—
Go, get you gone ; and pray be careful all,
And leave you not a man of war unsearch'd ;
This wicked emperor may have shipp'd her hence,
And, kinsmen, then we may go pipe for justice.

Mar. O Publius, is not this a heavy case,
To see thy noble uncle thus distract ?

Pub. Therefore, my lord, it highly us concerns,

By day and night to attend him carefully ;
And feed his humour kindly as we may,
Till time beget some careful remedy.

Mar. Kinsmen, his sorrows are past remedy.
Join with the Goths ; and with revengeful war
Take wreak on Rome for this ingratitude,
And vengeance on the traitor Saturnine.

Tit. Publius, how now ? how now, my masters ! What,
Have you met with her ?

Pub. No, my good lord ; but Plintos sends you
word,

If you will have revenge from hell, you shall :
Marry, for justice, she is so employ'd, [cise.]
He thinks, with Jove in heaven, or somewhere
So that perforce you must needs stay a time.

Tit. He doth me wrong, to feed me with de-I'll dive into the burning lake below, [lays.]

And pull her out of Acheron by the heel.—
Marcus, we are but shrimbs, no cedars we ;
No big-bon'd men, fram'd of the Cyclop's size :
But metal, Marcus, steel to the very back ;
Yet wing * with wings, more than our backs
can bear :

And sith † there is no justice in earth nor hell,
We will solicit heaven ; and move the gods
To send down justice for to wreak ‡ on wrongs :
Come, to this gear. § You are a good archer,
Marcus. [He gives them the arrows.]

Ad Jovem, that's for you.—Hic, ad Apollin-
Ad Martem, that's for myself ;—[scm.]

Here, boy, to Pallas : Here, to Mercury :
To Saturn, Caus, not to Saturnine,—

You were as good to shoot against the wind.—
To it, boy. Marcus, loose when I bid ;
O' my word, I have written to effect ;
There's not a god left unsolicited.

Mar. Kinsmen, shoot all your shafts into the court :

We will afflict the emperor in his pride.
Tit. Now, masters, draw. [They shoot.] O,

well said, Lucius !
Good boy, in Virgo's lap ; give it Pallas.

Mar. My lord, I aim a mile beyond the moon ;
Your letter is with Jupiter by this.

Tit. Ha ! Publius, Publius what hast thou
done !

See, see, thou hast shot off one of Taurus' horns.
Mar. This was the sport, my lord : when Publius shot,

The bull being gall'd, gave Aries such a knock That down fell both the ram's horns in the court ;

And who should find them but the empress' ?
She laugh'd, and told the Moor, he should not choose

But give them to his master for a present.

Tit. Why, there it goes : God give your lordship joy.

Enter a Clown, with a basket and two pigeons.

News, news from heaven ! Marcus, the post is
come.

Sirrah, what tidings ? have you any letters ?
Shall I have justice ? what says Jupiter ?

* Strained. † Since. ‡ Revenge
§ Dress, furniture.

Clo. Ho! the gibbet maker? he says that he hath taken them down again, for the man must not be hanged till the next week.

Tit. But what says Jupiter, I ask thee?

Clo. Alas, Sir, I know not Jupiter; I never drank with him in all my life.

Tit. Why, villain, art not thou the carrier?

Clo. Ay, of my pigeons, Sir; nothing else.

Tit. Why, didst thou not come from heaven?

Clo. From heaven? alas, Sir, I never came there: God forbid I should be so bold to press to heaven in my young days. Why, I am going with my pigeons to the tribunal plebs,* to take up a matter of brawl betwixt my uncle and one of the imperial's men.

Mar. Why, Sir, that is as fit as can be, to serve for your oration; and let him deliver the pigeons to the emperor for you.

Tit. Tell me, can you deliver an oration to the emperor with a grace?

Clo. Nay, truly, Sir, I could never say grace in all my life.

Tit. Sirrah, come hither: make no more ado, But give your pigeons to the emperor: By me thou shalt have justice at his hands. Hold, hold—mean while, here's money for thy charges.

Give me a pen and ink.—[tion?]

Sirrah, can you with a grace deliver a supplica-

Clo. Ay, Sir.

Tit. Then here is a supplication for you. And when you come to him, at the first approach, you must kneel; then kiss his foot; then deliver up your pigeons, and then look for your reward; I'll be at hand, Sir: see you do it bravely.

Clo. I warrant you, Sir; let me alone.

Tit. Sirrah, hast thou a knife? Come, let me here, Marcus, hold it in the oration; [see it. For thou hast made it like an humble supplication:—

And when thou hast given it to the emperor,

Knock at my door, and tell me what he says.

Clo. God be with you, Sir; I will.

Tit. Come, Marcus, let's go:—Publius, follow me. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The same.—Before the Palace.

Enter SATURNINUS, TAMORA, CHIRON, DEMETRIUS, LORDS, and others: SATURNINUS with the arrows in his hand, that TITUS shot.

Sat. Why, lords, what wrongs are these? Was ever seen

An emperor of Rome thus overborne, Troubled, confounded thus: and, for the extent Of equal justice, us'd in such contempt? My lords, you know, as do the mighty gods, However these disturbers of our peace Buz in the people's ears, there nought hath pass'd,

But even with law, against the wilful sons Of old Andronicus. And what an if His sorrows have so overwhelm'd his wits, Shall we be thus afflicted in his wrecks, His fits, his frenzy, and his bitterness? And now he writes to heaven for his redress: See, here's to Jove, and this to Mercury; This to Apollo; this to the god of war: Sweet scrolls to fly about the streets of Rome! What's this, or libelling against the senate, And blazoning our injustice every where? A goodly humour, is it not, my lords?

As who would say, in Rome no justice were. But, if I live, his feigned ecstasies Shall be no shelter to these outrages: But he and his shall know that justice lives In Saturninus' health; whom, if she sleep, He'll so awake, as she in fury shall Cut off the proud conspirator that lives.

Tam. My gracious lord, my lovely Saturnine, Lord of my life, commander of my thoughts, Calm thee, and bear the faults of Titus' age,

The effects of sorrow for his valiant sons, Whose loss hath pierc'd him deep, and scarr'd his heart;

And rather comfort his distressed plight, Than prosecute the meanest, or the best, For these contempts. Why, thus it shall become High-witted Tamora to gloze* with all: [Aside.

But Titus, I have touch'd thee to the quick, Thy life-blood out: If Aaron now be wise, Then is all safe, the anchor's in the port.—

Enter CLOWN.

How now, good fellow? would'st thou speak with us?

Clo. Yes, forsooth, an your mistership be imperial.

Tam. Empress I am, but yonder sits the emperor.

Clo. 'Tis he.—God and saint Stephen give you good den:—I have brought you a letter, and a couple of pigeons here.

[SATURNINUS reads the Letter.

Sat. Go, take him away, and hang him presently.

Clo. How much money must I have?

Tam. Come, Sirrah, you must be hang'd.

Clo. Hang'd! by'r lady, then I have brought up a neck to a fair end. [Exit guarded.

Sat. Despightful and intolerable wrongs! Shall I endure this monstrous villainy?

I know from whence this same device proceed's:

May this be done?—as if his traitorous sons,

That died by law for murder of our brother,

Have by my means been butcher'd wrongfully.—

Go, drag the villain hither by the hair;

Nor age, nor honour, shall shape privilege:—

For this proud mock, I'll be thy slaughterman;

Sly frantic wretch, that holp'st to make me great

In hope thyself should govern Rome and me.

Enter ÆMILIUS.

What news with thee, Æmilius?

Æmil. Arm, arm, my lord; Rome never had more cause!

The Goths have gather'd head; and with a power

Of high-resolved men, bent to the spoil,

They hither march again, under the conduct

Of Lucius, son to old Andronicus;

Who threats, in course of this revenge, to do

As much as ever Coriolanus did.

Sat. Is warlike Lucius general of the Goths?

These tidings nip me; and I hang the head

As flowers with frost, or grass beat down with storms.

Ay, now begun our sorrows to approach:

'Tis he the common people love so much;

Myself hath often over-heard them say,

(When I have walk'd like a private man,) That Lucius' banishment was wrongfully,

And they have wish'd that Lucius were their emperor.

Tam. Why should you fear? is not your city strong?

Sat. Ay, but the citizens favour Lucius; And will revolt from me, to succour him.

Tam. King, be thy thoughts imperious, † like thy name.

Is the sun dimm'd, that gnats do fly in it?

The eagle suffers little birds to sing,

And is not careful what they mean thereby;

Knowing that with the shadow of his wings,

He can at pleasure stint† their melody:

Even so may'st thou the giddy men of Rome.

Then cheer thy spirit: for know thou, emperor

I will enchant the old Andronicus

With words more sweet, and yet more dangerous,

Than baits to fish, or honey-stalks ‡ to sheep;

When as the one is wounded with the bait,

The other rotted with delicious feed.

Sat. But he will not entreat his son for us.

Tam. If Tamora entreat him, then he will:

* The Clown means to say plebeian tribune, i. e. tribune of the people.
† Equal.

* Flatter. † Imperial. ‡ Stop.
‡ Clover-flowers.

For I can smooth, and fill his aged ear
With golden promises; that were his heart
Almost impregnable, his old ears deaf,
Yet should both ear and heart obey my tongue.—
Go thou before, be our ambassador;

[To ÆMILIUS.
Say, that the emperor requests a pauley
Of warlike Lucius, and appoint the meeting
Even at his father's house, the old Andronicus'.
Sat. Æmilus, do this message honourably:

And if he stand on hostage for his safety,
Bid him demand what pledge will please him best.
Æmil. Your bidding shall I do effectually.

[Exit ÆMILIUS.
Tam. Now will I to that old Andronicus;
And temper him, with all the art I have,
To pluck proud Lucius from the warlike Goth.
And now, sweet emperor, be blithe again,
And bury all thy fear in my devices.

Sat. Then go successfully, and plead to him.

[Exit].

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Plains near Rome.

Enter LUCIUS and GOTHS, with drum and colours.

Luc. Approved warriors, and my faithful friends,
I have received letters from great Rome,
Which signify, what hate they bear their em-
And how desirous of our sight they are. [person]
Therefore, great lords, be, as your titles witness,
Imperious, and impatient of your wrongs;
And, wherein Rome hath done you any scath,*
Let him make tible satisfaction.

1 Goth. Brave slip, sprung from the great Andronicus,
Whose name was once our terror, now our com-
Whose high exploits, and honourable deeds,
Ingrateful Rome requites with foul contempt,
Be bold in us: we'll follow where thou lead'st,—
Like stinging bees in hottest summer's day,
Led by their master to the flower'd fields,—
And be aveng'd on curs'd Tamora.

Goths. And, as he saith, so say we all with him.

Luc. I humbly thank him, and I thank you all.

But who comes here, led by a lusty Goth?

Enter a Goth, leading AARON, with his child in his arms.

2 Goth. Renowned Lucius, from our troops I stray'd,

To gaze upon a ruinous monastery;
And as I earnestly did fix mine eye
Upon the wasted building, suddenly
I heard a child cry underneath a wall:
I made unto the noise; when soon I heard
The crying babe contrail'd with this discourse:
Peace, tawny slave, half me, and half thy dam!

*Did not thy hue bewray whose brat thou art,
Had nature lent thee but thy mother's look,
Villain, thou might'st have been an emperor:
But where the bull and cow are both milk-*

*white,
They never do beget a coal-black calf.
Peace, villain, peace!—even thus he rates the babe,—*

*For I must bear thee to a trusty Goth;
Who, when he knows thou art the empress' babe,*

*Will hold thee dearly for thy mother's sake.
With this my weapon drawn, I rush'd upon him,
Surpris'd him suddenly, and brought him hither,*

To use as you think needful of the man.

* Harm

Luc. O worthy Goth! this is the incarnate devil
That robb'd Andronicus of his good hand:
This is the pearl that pleas'd your empress's eye.*

And here's the base fruit of his boming lust.—
Say, wall-eyed slave, whither would'st thou convey

This growing image of thy fiend-like face?
Why dost not speak? What! deal! No, not a word!

A halter, soldiers; hang him on this tree,
And by his side his fruit of bastardy.

Aar. Touch not the boy, he is of royal blood
Luc. Too like the sire for ever being good.—
First hang the child, that he may see it spawl
A sight to vex the father's soul withal.
Get me a ladder.

[A ladder brought, which AARON is obliged to ascend.

Aar. Lucius, save the child;
And bear it from me to the empress.
If thou do this, I'll show thee wondrous things,
That highly may advantage thee to hear:
If thou wilt not, befall what may befall,
I'll speak no more—But vengeance rot you all!

Luc. Say on; and, if it please me which thou speak'st,

Thy child shall live, and I will see it nourish'd.

Aar. An if it please thee I why, assure thee
Lucius,
'Twill vex thy soul to hear what I shall speak:
For I must talk of murders, rapes, and mansacres,

Acts of black night, abominable deeds,
Complots of mischief, treason, villanies
Ruthful to hear, yet pitiously perjur'd;
And this shall all be bound by my death,
Unless thou swear to me, my child shall live.

Luc. Tell on thy mind. I say, thy child shall live.

Aar. Swear that he shall, and then I will begin.

Luc. Who should I swear by? thou believ'st no god:

That granted, how canst thou believe an oath?

Aar. What if I do not? as indeed, I do not.
Yet,—for I know thou art religious,
And hast a thing within thee, called conscience,
With twenty popish tricks and ceremonies,
Which I have seen thee careful to observe,—
Therefore I urge thy oath:—for that, I know,
An idiot holds his bauble for a god,
And keeps the oath, which by that god he swears;
To that I'll urge him:—Therefore, thou shalt vow

By that same god, what god soe'er it be,
That thou ador'st and hast in reverence,—
To save my boy, to nourish, and bring him up,
Or else I will discover nought to thee.

Luc. Even by my god, I swear to thee, I will.

Aar. First, know thou, I begot him on the empress.

Luc. O most insatiate, luxurious woman!

Aar. Tut, Lucius! this was but a deed of charity.

To that which thou shalt hear of me anon.
'Twas her two sons that murder'd Bassianus:
They cut thy sister's tongue and ravish'd her,
And cut her hands, and trimm'd her as thou saw'st.

Luc. O detestable villain! call'st thou that trimming?

Aar. Why, she was wash'd, and cut, and trimm'd; and 'twas

Trim sport for them that had the doing of it.

Luc. O barbarous, beastly villains, like thyself!

Aar. Indeed, I was their tutor to instruct them;

That coddling spirit had they from their mother,
As sure a card as ever won the set.

* Alluding to the proverb, "A black man is a pearl in a fair woman's eye." † Lascivious.

That bloody hand, I think, they learn'd of me,
As true a dog as ever fought at head.—
Well, let my deeds be witness of my worth.
I train'd thy brethren to that guleful hole,
Where the dead corpse of Bassianus lay;
I wrote the letter that thy father found,
And hid the gold within the letter mention'd,
Confederate with the queen, and her two sons;
And what not done, that thou hast cause to rue,
Wherein I had no stroke of mischief in it?
I play'd the cheater, for thy father's hand;
And, when I had it, drew myself apart,
And almost broke my heart with extreme laughter.

I pry'd me through the crevice of a wall,
When, for his hand, he had his two sons' heads;
Beheld his tears, and laugh'd so heartily,
That both mine eyes were rainy like to his;
And when I told the empress of this sport,
She swooned almost at my pleasing tale,
And, for my tidings, gave me twenty kisses.

Goth. What! canst thou say all this, and never blush?

Aar. Ay, like a black dog, as the saying is.

Luc. Art thou not sorry for these heinous deeds?

Aar. Ay, that I had not done a thousand more.
Even now I curse the day, (and yet I think Few come within the compass of my curse,)
Wherein I did not some notorious ill:
As kill a man, or else devise his death;
Ravish a maid, or plot the way to do it;
Accuse some innocent, and forswear myself;
Set deadly enmity between two friends;
Make poor men's cattle break their necks;
Set me on banns and hay-stacks in the night,
And bid the owners quench them with their tears.
Oft have I digg'd up dead men from their graves,
And set them upright at their dear friends' doors,
Even when their sorrows almost were forgot,
And on their skulls, as on the bark of trees,
Have with my knife carved in Roman letters,
Let not your sorrow die, though I am dead.
Tut, I have done a thousand dreadful things,
As willingly as one would kill a fly;
And nothing grieves me heartily indeed,
But that I cannot do ten thousand more.

Luc. Bring down the devil; for he must not die

So sweet a death as hanging presently.

Aar. If there be devils, 'twould I were a devil,
To live and burn in everlasting fire;
So I might have your company in hell,
But to torment you with my bitter tongue!

Luc. Sirs, stop his mouth, and let him speak no more.

Enter a GOTH.

Goth. My lord, there is a messenger from Rome,
Desires to be admitted to your presence.

Luc. Let him come near.—

Enter ÆMILIUS.

Welcome Æmilius, what's the news from Rome?

Æmil. Lord Lucius, and you princes of the Goths,

The Roman emperor greets you all by me:
And, for he understands you are in arms,
He craves a parley at your father's house,
Willing you to demand your hostages,
And they shall be immediately deliver'd.

1 Goth. What says our general?

Luc. Æmilus, let the emperor give his pledges,
Unto my father and my uncle Marcus,
And we will come.—March away. * [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Rome.—Before Titus' House.

Enter TAMORA, CHIRON, and DEMETRIUS, disguised.

Tam. Thus, in this strange and sad habilliment,
I will encounter with Andronicus;

* Perhaps this is a stage direction, crept into the text.

And say, I am Revenge, sent from below,
To join with him, and right his heinous wrongs,
Knock at his study, where, they say, he keeps,
To ruminate strange plots of dire revenge;
Tell him, Revenge is come to join with him,
And work confusion on his enemies.

[They knock.]

Enter TITUS, above.

Tit. Who doth molest my contemplation?
Is it your trick to make me open the door,
That so my sad decrees may fly away,
And all my study be to no effect?

You are deceiv'd: for what I mean to do,
See here, in bloody lines I have set down;
And what is written shall be executed.

Tam. Titus, I am come to talk with thee.

Tit. No; not a word: How can I grace my Wanting a hand to give it action? [Tals.]
Thou hast the odds of me; therefore no more.

Tam. If thou didst know me, thou would'st talk with me.

Tit. I am not mad; I know thee well enough:
Witness this wretched stump, these crimson lines;
Witness these trenches, made by grief and care;
Witness the tiring day, and heavy night;
Witness all sorrow, that I know thee well
For our proud empress, mighty Tamora:
Is not thy coming to my other hand?

Tam. Know thou, sad man, I am not Tamora:
She is thy enemy, and I thy friend: [mora:]
I am Revenge, sent from the infernal kingdom,
To ease the gnawing vulture of thy mind,
By working wreakful vengeance on thy toes.
Come down, and welcome me to this world's light:

Confer with me of murder and of death,
There's not a hollow cave, or lurking-place;
No vast obscurity, or misty vale,
Where bloody murder, or detested rape,
Can couch for fear, but I will find them out;
And in their ears tell them my dreadful name,
Revenge, which makes the foul offender quake.

Tit. Art thou Revenge? and art thou sent to
To be a torment to mine enemies? [Tam.]

Tam. I am: therefore come down, and welcome me.

Tit. Do me some service, ere I come to thee.
Lo, by the side where Rape and Murder stand,
Now give some surance that thou art Revenge.
Stab them, or tear them on thy chariot wheels;
And then I'll come, and be thy waggoner,
And whirl along with thee about the globes.
Provide thee proper palfries, black as jet,
To hale thy vengeful waggon swift away,
And find out murderers in their guilty caves.
And, when thy car is loaden with their heads,
I will dismount, and by the waggon wheel
Trot, like a servile footman, all day long!
E'en from Hyperion's rising in the east,
Until his very downfall in the sea.

And day by day I'll do this heavy task,
So thou destroy Rapine and Murder there.

Tam. These are my ministers, and come with me.

Tit. Are they thy ministers? what are they call'd?

Tam. Rapine and Murder; therefore called so,
'Cause they take vengeance of such kind of men.

Tit. Good lord, how like the empress' sons they are!
And you the empress! But we worldly men
Have miserable, mad, mistaking eyes.
O sweet Revenge, now do I come to thee:
And, if our arms' embracement will content thee,
I will embrace thee in it by and by.

[Exit Titus from above.]

Tam. This closing with him fits his lunacy:
What'er I forge, to feed his brain-sick fits,
Do you uphold and maintain in your speeches.
For now he firmly takes me for Revenge;
And being credulous in this mad thought,
I'll make him send for Lucius, his son:
And, whilst I at a banquet hold him sure,
I'll find some cunning practice out of hand,

To scatter and disperse the giddy Goths,
Or, at the least, make them his enemies.
See, here he comes, and I must ply my theme.

Enter Titus.

Tit. Long have I been forlorn, and all for thee :

Welcome, dread fury, to my woful house ;—
Rapine, and Murder, you are welcome too :—
How like the empress and her sons you are !
Well are you fitted, had you but a Moor ;—
Could not all hell afford you such a devil ?—
For, well I wot, the empress never wags,
But in her company there is a Moor ;
And, would you represent our queen aright,
It were convenient you had such a devil :
But welcome, as you are. What shall we do ?

Tam. What would'st thou have us do, Andronicus ?

Dem. Show me a murderer, I'll deal with him.
Chi. Show me a villain, that hath done a rape.
And I am sent to be reveng'd on him.

Tam. Show me a thousand that hath done
And I will be revenged on them all. [three wrong,

Tit. Look round about the wicked streets of Rome,

And when thou find'st a man that's like thyself,
Good Murder, stab him : he's a murderer.—
Go thou with him ; and when it is thy hap,
To find another that is like to thee,
Good Rapine, stab him ! he is a ravisher.—
Go thou with them ! and, in the emperor's court,
There is a queen, attended by a Moor ;
Well may'st thou know her by thy own proportion,

For up and down she doth resemble thee :
I pray thee, do on them some violent death,
They have been violent to me and mine.

Tam. Well hast thou lesson'd us ; this shall we do.

But would it please thee, good Andronicus,
To send for Lucius, thy third valiant son,
Who leads towards Rome a band of warlike Goths,
And bid him come and banquet at thy house :
When he is here, even at thy solemn feast,
I will bring in the empress and her sons,
The emperor himself, and all thy foes,
And at thy mercy shall they stoop and kneel,
And on them shall thou ease thy angry heart.
What says Andronicus to this device ?

Tit. Marcus, my brother !—'tis sad Titus calls.

Enter Marcus

Go, gentle Marcus, to thy nephew Lucius !
Thou shalt inquire him out among the Goths :
Bid him repair to me, and bring with him
Some of the chiefest princes of the Goths :
Bid him encamp his soldiers where they are :
Tell him, the emperor and the empress too
Feast at my house : and he shall feast with them.
This do thou for my love ; and so let him,
As he regards his aged father's life.

Mar. This will I do, and soon return again.

[Exit.

Tam. Now will I hence about thy business,
And take my ministers along with me.

Tit. Nay, nay, let Rape and Murder stay with
Or else I'll call my brother back again, [unc ;
And cleave to no revenge but Lucius.

Tam. What say you, boys ? will you abide Whiles I go tell my lord the emperor, [with him,
How I have govern'd our determin'd jest ?
Yield to his humour, smooth and speak him fair,
[Aside.

And tarry with him, till I come again.

Tit. I know them all, though they suppose me mad,
And will o'er-reach them in their own devices ;
A pair of cursed hell-hounds, and their dam.

[Aside.

Dem. Madam, depart at pleasure, leave us
here.

Tam. Farewell, Andronicus : Revenge now goes
To lay a complot to betray thy foes.

[Exit TAMORA.

Tit. I know thou dost ; and, sweet Revenge,
farewell.

Chi. Tell us, old man, how shall we be employ'd.

Tit. Tut, I have work enough for you to do.—
Publius, come hither, Caius, and Valentine !

Enter PUBLIUS, and others.

Pub. What's your will ?

Tit. Know you these two ?

Pub. Th' empress' sons,

I take them, Chiron and Demetrius.

Tit. Fie, Publius, fie ! thou art too much deceived ;

The one is Murder, Rape is the other's name :
And therefore bind them, gentle Publius ;
Caius and Valentine, lay hands on them :
Oft have you heard me wish for such an hour,
And now I find it : therefore bind them sure ;
And stop their mouths, if they begin to cry.

[Exit TITUS.—PUBLIUS, &c. lay hold on CHIRON and DEMETRIUS.

Chi. Villains, forbear : we are the empress' sons.

Pub. And therefore do we what we are commanded.— [word :

Stop close their mouths, let them not speak a
Is he sure bound ? look that you bind them fast.

*Re-enter TITUS ANDRONICUS, with LAVINIA ;
she bearing a basin, and he a knife.*

Tit. Come, come, Lavinia ! look, thy foes are bound :—

Sirs, stop their mouths, let them not speak to me ;
But let them hear what fearful words I utter.—
O villains, Chiron and Demetrius !
Here stands the spring whom you have stain'd with mud ;

This goodly summer with your winter mind.
You kill'd her husband ; and, for that vile fault,
Two of her brothers were condemn'd to death,
My hand cut off, and made a merry jest ;
Both her sweet hands, her tongue, and that more dear

Than hands or tongue, her spotless chastity,
Inhuman traitors, you constrain'd and forc'd.
What would you say, if I should let you speak ?
Villains, for shame you could not beg for grace.
Hark, wretches, how I mean to martyr you.
This one hand yet is left to cut you throats ;
Whilst that Lavinia 'tween her stumps doth hold
The basin that receives your guilty blood.

You know your mother means to feast with me,
And calls herself Revenge, and thinks me mad,—
Hark, villains ! I will grind your bones to dust,
And with your blood and it, I'll make a paste ;
And of the paste a coffin * I will rear,
And make two pasties of your shameful heads ;
And bid that strumpet, your unhallow'd dam,
Like to the earth, swallow her own increase.
This is the feast that I have bid her to,
And this the banquet she shall surfeit on ;
For worse than Philomel you us'd my daughter
And worse than Progne I will be reveng'd :
And now prepare your throats,—Lavinia, come,

[He cuts their Throats.

Receive the blood, and, when that they are dead,
Let me go grind their bones to powder small,
And with this hateful liquor temper it ;
And in this paste let their vile heads be bak'd.
Come, come, be every one officious
To make this banquet ; which I wish may prove
More stern and bloody than the Centaur's feast.
So, now bring them in, for I will play the cook,
And see their ready 'gainst their mother comes.
[Execute, bearing the dead bodies.

SCENE III.—The same.—A Pavilion, with Tables, &c.

Enter LUCIUS, MARCUS, and GOTHs, with AARON, prisoner.

Luc. Uncle Marcus, since 'tis my father's mind
That I repair to Rome, I am content.

* Crust of a raised pye.

I Goth. And our's, with thine, befall what fortune will.

Luc. Good uncle take you in this barbarous Moor,

This ravenous tiger, thus accursed devil;
Let him receive no sustenance, fetter him,
Till he be brought unto the empress' face,
For testimony of her foul proceedings:
And see the ambush of our friends be strong:
I fear the emperor means no good to us.

Aur. Some devil whisper curses in mine ear.
And prompt me, that my tongue may utter forth
The venomous malice of my swelling heart!

Luc. Away, inhuman dog! unhallow'd slave!—
Sirs, help our uncle to convey him in.—

[Exeunt GOTHs, with AARON. Flourish.
The trumpets show, the emperor is at hand.

Enter SATURNINUS and TAMORA, with Tribunes, Senators, and others.

Sat. What, hath the firmament more suns than one?

Luc. What boots * it thee, to call thyself a sun?

Mar. Rome's emperor, and nephew, break† the parle;
These quarrels must be quietly debated.

The feast is ready which the careful Titus
Hath ordain'd to an honourable end,
For peace, for love, for league, and good to Rome:

Please you, therefore, draw nigh, and take your places.

Sat. Marcus, we will.

[Hautboys sound. The Company sit down at table.

Enter TITUS, dressed like a cook, LAVINIA, veiled, young LUCIUS, and others. TITUS places the dishes on the table.

Tit. Welcome, my gracious lord: welcome, dread queen:

Welcome, ye warlike Goths: welcome, Lucius:
And welcome, all: although the cheer be poor,
'Twill nil your stomachs; please you eat of it.

Sat. Why art thou thus attir'd, Andronicus?

Tit. Because I would be sure to have all well,
To entertain your highness and your empress.

Tam. We are beholden to you, good Andronicus.

Tit. An if your highness knew my heart, you were.

My lord the emperor, resolve me this;
Was it well done of rash Virginius,
To slay his daughter with his own right hand,
Because she was entorced, stain'd, and deflower'd?

Sat. It was, Andronicus.

Tit. Your reason, mighty lord!

Sat. Because the girl should not survive her shame,

And by her presence still renew his sorrows.
Tit. A reason mighty, strong, and effectual;
A pattern, precedent, and lively warrant.
For me, most wretched to perform the like:—
Die, die, Lavinia, and thy shame with thee;

[He kills LAVINIA.
And, with thy shame, thy father's sorrow die!

Sat. What hast thou done, unnatural, and unkind?

Tit. Kill'd her, for whom my tears have made
I am as woful as Virginius was: [He blind.
And have a thousand times more cause than he
To do this outrage; and it is now done.

Sat. What, was she ravish'd? tell, who did the deed.

Tit. Will't please you eat? will't please your highness feed?

Tam. Why hast thou slain thine only daughter thus?

Tit. Not I, 'twas Chiron and Demetrius:
They ravish'd her, and cut away her tongue,
And they, 'twas they, that did her all this wrong.

Sat. Go, fetch them hither to us presently.

Tit. Why, there they are both baked in that pye,

Whereof their mother daintily hath fed,
Eating the flesh that she herself hath bred.

'Tis true, 'tis true; witness my knife's sharp point. [Killing TAMORA.

Sat. Die, frantic wretch, for this accursed deed. [Killing TITUS.

Luc. Can the son's eye behold his father bleed?

There's need for meed, death for a deadly deed.

[Kills SATURNINUS. A great tumult. The People in confusion disperse. MARCUS, LUCIUS, and their Partisans, ascend the steps before TITUS' house.

Mar. You sad-fac'd men, people and sons of Rome,

By uproar sever'd, like a flight of fowl
Scatter'd by winds and high tempestuous gusts,
O let me teach you how to knit agau
This scatter'd corn into one mutual sheaf,
These broken limbs again into one body.

Sen. Lest Rome herself be bane unto herself:

And she, whom mighty kingdoms curtsy to,
Like a forlorn and desperate cast-away,
Do shameful execution on herself.

But if my frosty signs and chaps of age,
Grave witnesses of true experience,
Cannot induce you to attend my words,— Speak, Rome's dear friend; [To LUCIUS.] as erst

our ancestor,
When with his solemn tongue he did discourse
To love-sick Dido's sad attending ear,
The story of that baleful burning night,
When subtle Greeks surpris'd king Priam's Troy;

Tell us, what Sinon hath bewitch'd our ears,
Or who hath brought the fatal engine in,
That gives our Troy, our Rome, the civil wound.—

My heart is not compact of flint nor steel;
Nor can I utter all our bitter grief,
But floods of tears will drown my oratory,
And break my very utterance: even if the time
When it should move you to attend me most,
Lending your kind commiseration:
Here is a captain, let him tell the tale;
Your hearts will throb and weep to hear him speak.

Luc. Then, noble auditory, be it known to you,
That curs'd Chiron and Demetrius
Were they that murdered our emperor's brother;
And they it were that ravish'd our sister:
For their fell faults our brothers were beheaded;
Our father's tears despis'd; and * basely cozen'd
Of that true hand, that fought Rome's quarrel out,

And sent her enemies unto the grave.
Lastly, myself unkindly banished,
The gates shut on me, and turn'd weeping out,
To beg relief among Rome's enemies;
Who drown'd their enmity in my true tears,
And op'd their arms to embrace me as a friend:
And I am the turn'd-forti, be it known to you,
That have preserv'd her welfare in my blood;
And from her bosom took the enemy's point,
Sheathing the steel in my advent'rous body.
Alas; you know, I am no vaunter, I;
My scars can witness, dumb although they are,
That my report is just, and full of truth.
But, soft: methinks I do digress too much,
Citing my worthless praise: O pardon me,
For when no friends are by, men praise themselves.

Mar. Now is my turn to speak: Behold this child, [Pointing to the child in the arms of an attendant.

Of this was Tamora delivered;
The issue of an irreligious Moor,
Chief architect and plotter of these woes; .

The villain is alive in Titus' house,
 Damn'd as he is, to witness this is true.
 Now judge, what cause had Titus to revenge
 These wrongs, unspeakable, past patience,
 Or more than any living man could hear.
 Now you have heard the truth, what say you
 Romans?

Have we done aught amiss? Show us wherein,
 And, from the place where you behold us now,
 (The poor remainder of Andronicus)
 We'll hand in hand, all headlong cast us down,
 And on the ragged stones beat forth our brains,
 And make a mutual closure of our house.
 Speak, Romans, speak; and, if you say we shall,

Lo, hand in hand, Lucius and I will fall.

Emil. Come, come, thou reverend man of
 Rome,

And bring our emperor gently in thy hand:

Lucius our emperor; for, well I know

The common voice do cry, it shall be so.

Rom. [Several speak.] Lucius, all hail;
 Rome's royal emperor!

Lucius, &c. descend.

Mar. Go, go into old Titus' sorrowful house;

[To an Attendant.]

And hither hale that misbelieving Moor,

To be adjudg'd some direful slaughtering death,
 As punishment for his most wicked life.

Rom. [Several speak.] Lucius, all hail;
 Rome's gracious governor!

Luc. Thanks, gentle Romans; May I govern
 so,

To heal Rome's harms, and wipe away her woe!

But, gentle people, give me arm awhile,—

For nature puts me to a heavy task;—

Stand all aloof;—but, uncle, draw you near,

To shed obsequious tears upon this trunk;—

O take this warm kiss on thy pale cold lips,

[Kisses Titus.]

These sorrowful drops upon thy blood-stain'd
 face,

The last true duties of thy noble son!

Mar. Teat for tear, and loving kiss for kiss,

Thy brother Marcus tenders on thy lips:

Oh! were the sum of these that I should pay

Countless and infinite, yet would I pay them!

Luc. Come hither, boy; come, come, and learn of us

To melt in showers: Thy grandsire lov'd thee
 well:

Many a time he danc'd thee on his knee,
 Sung thee asleep, his loving breast thy pillow;
 Many a matter hath he told to thee,
 Meet, and agreeing with thine infancy;
 In that respect then, like a loving child,
 Shed yet some small drops from thy tender
 spring,

Because kind nature doth require it so:—
 Friends should associate friends in grief, and Bid him farewell; commit him to the grave;
 Do him that kindness, and take leave of him.

Boy. O grandsire, grandsire! even with all my
 heart

Would I were dead, so you did live again!—

O lord, I cannot speak to him for weeping;

My tears will choke me, if I ope my mouth.

Enter Attendants, with AARON.

I Rom. You sad Andronicus, have done with woes;

Give sentence on this execrable wretch,
 That hath been breeder of these dire events.

Luc. Set him breast-deep in earth, and fashion him;

There let him stand, and rave and cry for food;

If any one relieves or pities him,

For the offence he dies. This is our doom:

Some stay, to see him fasten'd in the earth.

Aar. Oh! I why should wrath be mute, and fury dumb?

I am no baby, I that, with base prayers,
 I should repent the evils I have done:

Ten thousand worse than that ever yet I did

Would I perform, if I might have my will;

If one good deed in all my life I did,

I do repent it from my very soul.

Luc. Some loving friends convey the emperor
 hence,

And give him burial in his father's grave:

My father, and Lavinia, shall forthwith

Be closed in our household's monument

As for that venomous tiger, Tamora,

No funeral rite, nor man in mournful weeds,

No mournful bell shall ring her burial;

But throw her forth to beasts and birds of prey:

Her life was beast-like, and devoid of pity,

And, being so, shall have like want of pity.

See justice done to Aaron, that damn'd Moor,

By whom our heavy days had their beginning:

Then, afterwards, to order well the state;

That like events may never it renew.

[Exeunt.]

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

LITERARY AND HISTORICAL NOTICE.

THIS tragedy was written about the year 1602, and Shakspeare is supposed to have taken the greatest part of its materials from the Troie of Lydgate, an author who derived many of his particulars from a History of Troy, in Latin, by Guido of Columpnus. Chaucer had previously celebrated the loves of Troilus and Cressida, in a translation from a Latin poem of one Lollius, an old Lombard author. The characters in this play (which was not originally divided into acts) are strikingly assimilated to the portraits which history has preserved of them--the aged loquacity of Nestor--the insinuating eloquence of Ulysses--the boasting confidence of Ajax--the sullen self-importance of Achilles--the conscious dignity of Agamemnon, and the sneaking insignificance of the cuckold Menelaus, are excellently displayed in the development of the piece; whilst the scurrile malignity of Thersites most humorously and ingeniously advances its interest throughout. The mode of Hector's death is, however, at variance with historical record, and was probably accompanied with such baseness on the part of Achilles, to perfect the amiable attributes in which the poet chose to invest the character of his Trojan opponent. Troilus, the hero of the play, has little to recommend him beyond personal intrepidity, and the sincerity of a youthful attachment--some authors rank him among the elder of Priam's sons: others (and among them Virgil, who describes in the 1st book of the Æneid, line 474, the manner of his death by the hand of Achilles) call him the youngest. Anachronisms are of frequent occurrence in this play: such as Hector's citing Aristotle, and Ulysses alluding to the "bull-bearing Miles," who did not live till many years after the Trojan war. It must, nevertheless, be remembered, that the greater part of Shakspeare's library consisted of ancient romances; and nothing could be less correct than their computation of dates. The language of the piece is greatly tinctured with the peculiarities of the age in which he lived, and although Dr. Johnson considers it more correctly written than many of its companions, he exempts it from any extent of view or elevation of fancy. "The vicious characters (says that discriminating critic, sometimes dissent, but cannot corrupt, for both Cressida and Pandarus are detested and condemned. The comic characters seem to have been the favourites of the writer: they are of the superficial kind, and exhibit more of manners than nature; but they are copiously filed, and powerfully impressed."

PROLOGUE.

IN Troy there lies the scene. From isles of Greece.
The princes ogulous,* their high blood chaf'd,
Have to the port of Athens sent their ships,
F fraught with the ministers and instruments
Of cruel war: Sixty and nine, that wore
Then crowns regal, from the Athenian bay Put forth toward Phrygia: and then vow is made,
To ransack Troy; within whose strong immures
The ravish'd Helen, Menelaus' queen, With wanton Paris sleeps: And that's the quarrel.
To Tenedos they come;
And the deep-drawing barks do there disgorge
Their warlike freightage;† Now on Dardan plains
The fresh and yet unbruised Greeks do pitch

Their brave pavilions: Priam's six-gated city,
Dardan, and Tymbria, Ilios, Chetas, Trojan,
And Antenorides, with massy staples,
And corresponsive and fulfilling bolts,
Spear* up the sons of Troy.
Now expectation, tickling skittish spirits,
On one and other side, Trojans and Greek,
Sets all on hazard:—And hither am I come
A prologue arm'd,—but not in confidence
Of author's pen, or actor's voice; but suited
In like conditions as our argument,—
To tell you, fair beholders, that our play Leaps o'er the vauit and fistlings of those broils,
Ginling in the middle; starting thence away
To what may be digested in a play
Like, or find fault; do as your pleasures are;
Now good, or bad, 'tis but the chance of war.

† Assault what went before.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Troy.—Before PRIAM'S Palace.

Enter TROILUS arm'd, and PANDARUS.

Tro. Call here my varlet,* I'll unarm again :
Why should I war without the walls of Troy,
That find such cruel battle here within?
Each Trojan that is master of his heart,
Let him to field : Troilus, alas ! hath none.

Pan. Will this gear ne'er be mended?

Tro. The Greeks are strong, and skilful to their strength,
Fierce to their skill, and to their fierceness valiant;

But I am weaker than a woman's tear,
Tamer than sleep, fonder than ignorance;
Less valiant than the virgin in the night,
And skillless as unpractis'd infancy.

Pan. Well, I have told you enough of this;
for my part, I'll not meddle nor make no further.
He that will have a cake out of the wheat must tarry the grinding.

Tro. Have I not tarried?

Pan. Ay, the grinding; but you must tarry the bolting.

Tro. Have I not tarried?

Pan. Ay, the bolting; but you must tarry the leavening.

Tro. Still have I tarried.

Pan. Ay, to the leavening; but here's yet, in the word, hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cake, the heating of the oven, and the baking : nay, you must stay the cooling too, or you may chance to burn your lips.

Tro. Patience herself, (what goddess e'er she be)

Doth lesser bleach† at sufferance than I do

At Priam's royal table do I sit,

And when fair Cressid comes into my thoughts,—
So, traitor !—when she comes !—When is she thence?

Pan. Well, she looked yesternight fairer than ever I saw her look, or any woman else.

Tro. I was about to tell thee,—When my
heart,

As wedged with a sigh, would rive‡ in twain,
Lest Hector or my father should perceive me,
I have (as when the sun doth light a storm,)
Burned this sigh in wrinkle of a smile :

But sorrow that is couch'd in seeming glad-
ness,

Is like that mirth false turns to sudden sadness.

Pan. An her hair were not somewhat darker than Helen's, (well, go to,) there were no more comparison between the women.—But, for my part, she is my kinswoman : I would not, as they term it, praise her.—But I would somebody had heard her talk yesterday, as I did. I will not dispraise your sister Cassandra's wit; but—

Tro. O Pandarus ! I tell thee, Pandarus,—
When I do tell thee, there my hopes lie drown'd,
Reply not in how many fathoms deep
They lie indrench'd. I tell thee, I am mad
In Cressid's love : Thou answer'st, she is fair ;
Pour'st in the open ulcer of my heart
Her eyes, her hair, her cheek, her gait, her voice ;
Handlest in thy discourse, oh ! that her hand,
In whose comparison all whites are lark,

Writing their own reproach ; To whose soft seizure
The cygnet's down is harsh, and spirit of sense Hard as the palm of ploughmen ! This thou tellest me,

As true thou tellest me, when I say—I love her ;
But, saying thus, instead of oil and balm,
Thou lay'st in every gash that love hath given me
The knife that made it.

Pan. I speak no more than truth.

Tro. Thou dost not speak so much.

Pan. Faith, I'll not meddle in't. Let her be as she is : if she be fair, 'tis the better for her ;

an she be not, she has the mends in her own
hands.

Tro. Good Pandarus ! How now, Pandarus ?

Pan. I have had my labour for my travel ; all-thought on of her, and all-thought on of you :
gone between and between, but small thanks for my labour.

Tro. What, art thou angry, Pandarus ? what
with me ?

Pan. Because she is kin to me, therefore, she's not so fair as Helen : an she were not kin to me, she would be as fair on Friday, as Helen is on Sunday. But what care I ? I care not, an she were a black-a-moor ; 'tis all one to me.

Tro. Say I, she is not fair ?

Pan. I do not care whether you do or no.
She's a fool to stay behind her father ; let her to the Greeks ; and so I'll tell her the next time I see her : for my part, I'll meddle nor make no more in the matter.

Tro. Pandarus—

Pan. Not I.

Tro. Sweet Pandarus,—

Pan. Pray you, speak no more to me ; I will leave all as I found it, and there an end.

[Exit PANDARUS. An Alarm.

Tro. Peace, you ungracious clamours ! peace, rude sounds !

Fools on both sides ! Helen must needs be fair,
When with your blood you daily paint her thus.

I cannot fight upon this argument ;

It is too starv'd a subject for my sword.

But Pandarus—O gods, how do you plague me !

I cannot come to Cressid, but by Pandar ;

And he's as tetchy to be woo'd to woo,

As she is stubborn-chaste against all suit. A

Tell me, Apollo, for thy Daphne's love,

What Cressid is, what Pandar, and what we

Her bed is India ; there she lies, a pearl :

Between our hum and where she resides,

Let it be call'd the wild and wandering flood ;

Ourselves, the merchant ; and this sailing Pan-dar,

Our doubtful hope, our convoy, and our bark.

Alarm. Enter AENEAS.

Ænc. How now, prince Troilus ? wherefore not affaid ?

Tro. Because not there. This woman's answer sorts *

For womanish it is to be from thence.

What news, Aeneas, from the field to-day ?

Ænc. That Paris is returned home, and hurt.

Tro. By whom, Aeneas ?

Ænc. Troilus, by Menelaus.

Tro. Let Paris bleed : 'tis but a scar to scorn ;

Paris is gor'd with Menelaus' horn. [Alarm.

Ænc. Hark ! what good sport is out of town to-day !

Tro. Better at home, if you'd I might, were may.—

But to the sport abroad ;—Are you bound thither ?

Ænc. In all swift haste.

Tro. Come, go we then together. [Exit.

SCENE II.—The same.—A Street.

Enter CRESSIDA and ALEXANDER.

Cres. Who were those went by ?

Alex. Queen Hecuba, and Helen.

Cres. And whither go they ?

Alex. Up to the eastern tower,

Whose height commands as subject all the vale
To see the battle. Hector, whose patience

Is as a virtue fix'd, to-day was mov'd :

He chid Andromache, and struck his armourer ;

And, like as there were husbandry in war,

Before the sun rose he was harness'd light,

And to the field goes he ; where every flower

Did as a prophet weep what it foresaw

In Hector's wrath.

Cres. What was his cause of anger ?

* A servant as a knight.

† Shrink

‡ More foolish.

§ Split.

* Is becoming.

Alex. The noise goes, this : There is among the Greeks

A lord of Trojan blood, nephew to Hector ;
They call him, Ajax.

Cres. Good ; And what of him ?

Alex. They say he is a very man per se,^{*}
And stands alone.

Cres. So do all men ; unless they are drunk, sick, or have no legs.

Alex. This man, lady, hath robbed many beasts of their particular additions : † he is as valiant as the lion, churlish as the bear, slow as the elephant : a man into whom nature hath so crowded humours, that his valour is crushed ‡ into folly, his folly sauced with discretion : there is no man hath a virtue that he hath not a glimpse of ; nor any man an attain, but he carries some stain of it : he is melancholy without cause, and merry against the hair : § He hath the joints of every thing ; but every thing so out of joint, that he is a gouty Brachius, many hands and no use : or purblind Argus, all eyes and no sight.

Cres. But how should this man, that makes me smile, make Hector angry ?

Alex. They say, he yesterday coped Hector in the battle, and struck him down ; the disdain and shame whereof hath ever since kept Hector fasting and waking.

Enter PANDARUS.

Cres. Who comes here ?

Alex. Madam, your uncle Pandarus.

Cres. Hector's a gallant man.

Alex. As may be in the world, lady.

Pan. What's that ? what's that ?

Cres. Good morrow, uncle Pandarus.

Pan. Good morrow, cousin Cressid : What do you talk of ?—Good morrow, Alexander.—How do you, cousin ? When were you at Ilum ?

Cres. This morning, uncle.

Pan. What were you talking of when I came ?
Was Hector armed, and gone, ere ye came to Ilum ? Helen was not up, was she ?

Cres. Hector was gone ; but Helen was not up.

Pan. E'en so ; Hector was stirring early.

Cres. That were we talking of, and of his anger.

Pan. Was he angry ?

Cres. So he says here.

Pan. True, he was so ; I know the cause too ;
he'll lay about him to-day, I can tell them that :
and there is Troilus who not come far behind him ; let them take heed of Troilus ; I can tell them that too.

Cres. What, is he angry too ?

Pan. Who, Troilus ? Troilus is the better man of the two.

Cres. O Jupiter ! there's no comparison.

Pan. What, not between Troilus and Hector ?
Do you know a man if you see him ?

Cres. Ay ; if ever I saw him before, and knew
him.

Pan. Well, I say, Troilus is Troilus.

Cres. Then you say as I say ; for I am sure he is not Hector.

Pan. No, nor Hector is not Troilus, in some degrees.

Cres. 'Tis just to each of them ; he is himself.

Pan. Himself ? Alas, poor Troilus ! I would, he were,—

Cres. So he is.

Pan. —'Condition, I have gone barefoot to India.

Cres. He is not Hector.

Pan. Himself ? no, he's not himself.—'Would a were himself ! Well, the gods are above ;
Time must friend, or end : Well, Troilus, well,
—I would my heart were in her body !—No,
Hector is not a better man than Troilus.

Cres. Excuse me.

Pan. He is elder.

Cres. Pardon me, pardon me

Pan. The other's not come to't ; you shall tell me another tale, when the other's come to't.
Hector shall not have his wit this year.

Cres. He shall not need it, if he have his own.

Pan. Nor his qualities,—

Cres. No matter.

Pan. Nor his beauty.

Cres. 'Twould not become him, his own's better.

Pan. You have no judgment, niece : Helen herself swore the other day, that Troilus, for a brown favour, (for so 'tis, I must confess,)—
Not brown neither.

Cres. No, but brown.

Pan. 'Faith, to say truth, brown and not brown.

Cres. To say the truth, true and not true.

Pan. She prais'd his complexion above Paris

Cres. Why, Paris hath colour enough.

Pan. So he has.

Cres. Then, Troilus should have too much :
if she praised him above, his complexion is higher than his ; he having colour enough, and the other higher, is too flaming a praise for a good complexion. I had as lief Helen's golden tongue had commended Troilus for a copper nose.

Pan. I swear to you, I think Helen loves him better than Paris.

Cres. Then she's a merry Greek, indeed.

Pan. Nay, I am sure she does. She came to him the other day into a compassed window,*
—and, you know, he has not past three or four hairs on his chin.

Cres. Indeed, a tapster's arithmetic may soon bring his particulars therein to a total.

Pan. Why, he is very young : and yet will be, within three pound, list as much as his brother
Hector.

Cres. Is he so young a man, and so old a lifter ? †

Pan. But, to prove to you that Helen loves him ;—she, came, and puts me her white hand to his cloven chin, —

Cres. Juno have mercy !—How came it clo-ven ?

Pan. Why, you know, 'tis dimpled : I think, his smiling becomes him better than any man in all Phrygia.

Cres. Oh ! he smiles valiantly.

Pan. Does he not ?

Cres. O yes, an 'twere a cloud in autumn.

Pan. Why, go to then :—But to prove to you that Helen loves Troilus,—

Cres. Troilus will stand to the proof, if you'll prove it so.

Pan. Troilus ? why, he esteems her no more than I esteem an addle egg.

Cres. If you love an addle egg as well as you love an idle head, you would eat chickens i'the shell.

Pan. I cannot choose but laugh, to think how she tickled his chin ;—Indeed, she has a marvellous white hand, I must needs confess.

Cres. Without the rack.

Pan. And she takes upon her to spy a white hair on his chin.

Cres. Alas, poor chin ! many a wart is richer.

Pan. But there was such laughing ;—Queen
Hecuba laughed, that her eyes ran o'er.

Cres. With mill-stones. ‡

Pan. And Cassandra laughed.

Cres. But there was a more temperate fire under the pot of her eyes ;—Did her eyes run o'er too ?

Pan. And Hector laughed.

Cres. At what was all this laughing ?

Pan. Marry, at the white hair that Helen spied on Troilus' chin.

Cres. An't had been a green hair, I should have laughed too.

Pan. They laughed not so much at the hair, as at his pretty answer.

* By himself. † Characters. ‡ Mingled with.
§ Grain.

* Bow window. † Thief. ‡ A proverbial saying

Cres. What was his answer?

Pan. Quoth she, Here's but one and fifty hairs on your chin, and one of them is white.

Cres. This is her question.

Pan. That's true; make no question of that. One and fifty hairs, quoth he, and one white: That white hair is my father, and all the rest are his sons. Jupiter! quoth she, which of these hairs is Paris my husband? The jok'd one, quoth he; pluck it out and give it him. But, there was such laughing! and Helen so blushed, and Paris so chafed, and all the rest so laughed, that it passed.*

Cres. So let it now; for it has been a great while going by.

Pan. Well, cousin, I told you a thing yesterday; think on't.

Cres. So I do.

Pan. I'll be sworn, 'tis true; he will weep you, an 'twere a man born in April.

Cres. And I'll spring up in his tears, an 'twere a nettle against May.

[A Retreat sounded.]

Pan. Hark, they are coming from the field: Shall we stand up here, and see them as they pass toward Ilum? good niece, do; sweet niece Cressida.

Cres. At your pleasure.

Pan. Here, here, here's an excellent place; here we may see most bravely: I'll tell you them all by their names as they pass by: but mark Troilus above the rest.

ENEAS passes over the stage.

Cres. Speak not so loud.

Pan. That's Æneas; is not that a brave man? he's one of the flowers of Troy, I can tell you; But mark Troilus; you shall see anon.

Cres. Who's that?

ANTENOR passes over.

Pan. That's Antenor; he has a shrewd wit, I can tell you; and he's a man good enough; he's one of the soundest judgments in Troy, whosoever, and a proper man of person.—When comes Troilus?—I'll show you Troilus anon: if he see me, you shall see him nod at me.

Cres. Will he give you the nod?

Pan. You shall see.

Cres. If he do, the rich shall have more.

HECTOR passes over.

Pan. That's Hector, that, look you, that; There's a fellow!—Go thy way, Hector!—There's a brave man, niece.—O brave Hector!—Look, how he looks! there's a countenance: Is't not a brave man?

Cres. Oh! a brave man!

Pan. Is a not? It does a man's heart good—Look you what hacks are on his helmet? look you yonder, do you see? look you there! There's no jesting: there's laying on; take't off who will, as they say: there be hacks!

Cres. Be those with swords?

PARIS passes over.

Pan. Swords? any thing, he cares not: an the devil come to him, it's all one: By god's lid, it does one's heart good!—Yonder comes Paris, yonder comes Paris: look ye yonder, niece; Is't not a gallant man too, is't not?—Way, this is brave now.—Who said he came hurt home to-day? he's not hurt: why this will do Helen's heart good now. Hal! 'would I could see Troilus now!—you shall see Troilus anon.

Cres. Who's that?

HELENNUS passes over.

Pan. 'Tis Helennus,—I marvel, where Troilus is:—Helennus!—I think he went not forth to-day.—That's Helennus.

Cres. Can Helennus fight, uncle?

Pan. Helennus? no;—yes, he'll fightadder ent well:—I marvel, where Troilus is!—Hark!—do you not hear the people cry, Troilus?—Helennus is a priest.

Cres. What sneaking fellow comes yonder?

TROILUS passes over.

Pan. Where? yonder! that's Deiphobus: 'Tis Troilus! there's a man, niece!—Helennus!—Brave Troilus! the prince of chivalry!

Cres. Peace, for shame, peace!

Pan. Mark him; note him;—O brave Troilus!—look well upon him, niece; look you, how his sword is bloodied, and his helm* more hack'd than Hector's; And how he looks, and how he goes!—O admirable youth! he ne'er saw three and twenty. Go thy way, Troilus, go thy way; had I a sister were a grace, or a daughter a goddess, he should take his choice. O admirable man! Paris!—Paris is dirt to him; and I warrant, Helen, to change, would give an eye to boot.

Forecs pass over the stage.

Cres. Here come more.

Pan. Asses, fools, dolts! chaff and bran, chaff and bran! porridge after meat! I could live and die the eyes of Troilus. Ne'er look, ne'er look; the eagles are gone; crows and daws, crows and daws! I had rather be such a man as Troilus, than Agamemnon and all Greece.

Cres. There is among the Greeks, Achilles; a better man than Troilus.

Pan. Achilles? a drayman, a porter, a very camel.

Cres. Well, well.

Pan. Well, well?—Why, have you any discretion? have you any eyes? Do you know what a man is? Is not birth, beauty, good shape, discourse, manhood, learning, gentleness, virtue, youth, liberality, and such like, the spice and salt that season a man?

Cres. Ay, a minced man; and then to be baked with no date† in the pye,—for then the man's date is out.

Pan. You are such a woman! one knows not at what ward‡ you lie.

Cres. Upon my back, to defend my belly, upon my wit, to defend my wiles; upon my secrecy, to defend mine honesty; my mask, to defend my beauty; and you, to defend all these: and at all these wards I lie, at a thousand watches.

Pan. Say one of your watches.

Cres. Nay, I'll watch you for that; and that's one of the chiefest of them too: if I cannot ward what I would not have hit, I can watch you for telling how I took the blow; unless it swell past hiding, and then it is past watching.

Pan. You are such another!

Enter TROILUS' Boy.

Boy. Sir, my lord would instantly speak with you.

Pan. Where?

Boy. At your own house; there he unarms him.

Pan. Good boy, tell him I come: [Exit Boy.] I doubt he be hurt.—Fare ye well, good niece.

Cres. Adieu, uncle.

Pan. I'll be with you, niece, by and by.

Cres. To bring, uncle,—

Pan. Ay, a token from Troilus.

Cres. By the same token you are a bawd.

[Exit PANDARUS.]

Words, vows, griefs, tears, and love's full sacrifice,

He offers in another's enterprise:

But more in Troilus thousand fold I see Than in the glass of Pandarus' praise may be;

* Helmet. † An ingredient in all ancient pastry. ‡ A metaphor from the art of defence.

* Exceeded all bounds.

† As if 'twere.

Yet hold I off. Women are angels, wooing:
Things won are done, joy's soul lies in the doing:
That she belov'd knows nought, that knows not
this,—

Men prize the thing ungain'd more than it is:
That he was never yet, that ever knew
Love got so sweet as when desire did sue:
Therefore this maxim out of love I teach,— Achievement is command; ungain'd beecheth:
Then though my heart's content firm love doth
bear,

Nothing of that shall from mine eyes appear.
[Exit.]

SCENE III.—The Grecian Camp.—Before Agamemnon's Tent.

Trumpets. Enter AGAMEMNON, NESTOR, ULYSSES, MENELAUS and others.

Agam. Princes,

What grief hath set the jaundice on your cheeks?
The ample proposition, that hope makes
In all designs begun on earth below,
Fails in the promiss'd largeness; cheeks and disasters

Grow in the veins of actions highest rear'd;
As knots, by the conflux of meeting sap,
Infect the sound pine, and divert his grain
Tortive and errant * from his course of growth.
Not, princes, is it matter new to us,
That we come short of our suppose so far,
That, after seven years' siege, yet Troy walls
stand;

Sith † every action that hath gone before,
Whereof we have record, trial did draw
Bias and thwart, not answering the aim,
And that unbodied figure of the thought That gav't summ'd shape. Why then, you princes,

Do you with cheeks abash'd behold our works;
And thing them shames, which are, indeed,
nought else

But the protractive trials of great Jove.
To find per-severant constancy in men?
The inches of which metal is not found
In fortune's love; for then, the bold and coward,

The wise and fool, the artist and unready,
The hard and soft, seem all afind'd; and kin:
But, in the wind and tempest of her frown,
Distinction, with a broad and powerful fan,
Puffing at all, winnows the light away;
And what hath mass or matter, by itself
Lies, rich in virtue, and unmingled.

Nest. With due observance of thy godlike seat,

Great Agamemnon, Nestor shall apply
Thy latest words. In the reproof of chance Lies the true proof of men: The sea being smooth

How many shallow bawble boats dare sail
Upon her patient breast, making their way
With those of noble bulk.

But let the sulken Boreas once enrage
The gentler Thetis, ‡ and anon, behold
The strong ribb'd bark through liquid mountains cut,

Bounding between the two moist elements,
Like Perseus' horse; Where's then the saucy boat,

Whose weak untimber'd sides but even now
Co-rival'd greatness † either to harbour fled,
Or made a toast for Neptune. Even so
Doth valour's show, and valour's worth, divide,
In storms of fortune: For, in her ray and brightness,

The herd hath more annoyance by the brize, ¶
Than by the tiger: but when the splitting wind
Makes flexible the knees of knotted oaks,
And flies fled under shade, why, then the thing
of courage

As run'd with rage, with rage doth sympathize,
And with an accent turn'd in self-same key,
Returns to chiding fortune.

Ulyss. Agamemnon,— Thou great commander, nerve, and bone of Greece,

Heart of our numbers, soul and only spirit
In whom the tempers and the moods of all
Should be shut up,—hear what Ulysses speaks
Besides the applaus and approbation

The which,—most mighty for thy place and sway,— [To AGAMEMNON.]

And thou most reverend for thy stretch'd-out life,— [To NESTOR.]

I give to both your speeches,—which were such,
As Agamemnon and the hand of Greece
Should hold up high in brass; and such again,
As venerable Nestor, hatch'd in silver,
Should with a bond of air (strong as the axle-tree

On which heaven rides,) knit all the Greekish ears [both;—

To his experienc'd tongue,—yet let it please
Thou great,—and wise,—to hear Ulysses speak.

Then every thing includes itself in power, Power into will will into appetite; And appetite, a universal wolf, So doubly seconded with will and power, Must make perforce a universal prey, And, last, eat up himself. Great Agamemnon, This chaos, when degree is suffocate, Follows the choking.

Ulyss. The great Achilles,—whom opinion crowns

The sinew and the forehead of our host,— Having his ear full of his airy fame, Grows dainty of his worth, and in his tent Lies mocking our designs: With him Patroclus, Upon a lazy bed the livelong day Breaks scurril jests; And with ridiculous and awkward action (Which, slanderer, he imitation calls,) He pageants† us. Sometime, great Agamemnon, Thy topless‡ deputation he puts on; And, like a strutting player,—whose conceit Lies in his hamstring, and doth think it rich To hear the wooden dialogue and sound

*Twixt his stretch'd looting and the scaffold-age, §—

Such to-be-pitied and o'er-wrested || seeming He acts thy greatness in: and when he speaks, 'Tis like a chime a mending; with terms unsquar'd,¶ [dropp'd,

Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon Would seem hyperboles. At this fusty stuff, The large Achilles, on his press'd bed lolling, From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause;

Cries—Excellent!—'tis Agamemnon just.—

Now play me Nestor:—hem, and stroke thy beard,

As he, being dress'd to some oration.

That's done:—as near as the extremest ends

Of parallels; as like as Vulcan and his wife.

Yet good Achilles still cries, Excellent!

'Tis Nestor right! Now play him me, Patroclus,

Arming to answer in a night alarm.

And then, forthwith, the faint defects of age Must be the scent of mirth; to cough, and spit, And with a palsy-fumbling on his gorget, Shake in and out the rivet:—and at this sport, Sir Valour dies; cries, O!—enough, Patroclus;—

Or give me ribs of steel! I shall split all In pleasure of my spleen. And in this fashion, All our abilities, gifts, natures, shapes, Severals and generals of grace exact, Achievements, plots, orders, preventions, Exciements to the field, or speech for truce, Success, or loss, what is, or is not, serves As stuff for these two to make paradoxes.

Nest. And in the imitation of these twain (Whom, as Ulysses says, opinion crowns

With an imperial voice,) many are infect.

Ajax is grown self-will'd; and bears his head

In such a reign, in full as proud a place

As broad Achilles; keeps his tent like him;

Makes factious feasts; rails on our state of war

Bold as an oracle: and sets Theraites

(A slave, whose gall coins slanders like a mint,) To match us in comparisons with dirt;

To weaken and discredit our exposure,

How rank soever rounded in with danger.

Ulyss. They tax our policy, and call it cowardice;

Count wisdom as no member of the war;

Foretell prescience, and esteem no act

But that of hand: the still and mental parts,—

That do contrive how many hands shall strike.

When fitness call them on; and know, by measure

Of their observant toil, the enemies' weight,—

Why, this hath not a finger's dignity:

They call this—bed-work, mappery, closet-war:

So that the ram, that batters down the wall,

For the great swing and rudeness of his poise,

They place before his hand that made the engine;

Or those, that with the fineness of their souls

By reason guide his execution.

Nest. Let this be granted, and Achilles' horse

Makes many Thetis' sons. [Trumpet sounds.

Agam. What trumpet? look, Menelaus.

Enter ÆNEAS.

Men. From Troy.

Agam. What would you fore our tent?

Æne. Is this

Great Agamemnon's tent, I pray?

Agam. Even this.

Æne. May one, that is a herald and a prince,

Do a fair message to his kingly ears?

Agam. With surety stronger than Achilles' arm,

*Foie all the Greekish heads, which with one voice

Call Agamemnon head and general.

Æne. Fair leave, and large security. How may

A stranger to those most imperial looks

Know them from eyes of other mortals?

Agam. How?

Æne. Ay;

I ask, that I might waken reverence,

And bid the cheek be ready with a blush

Modest as morning when she coldly eyes

The youthful Phœbus:

Which is that god in office, guiding men?

Which is the high and mighty Agamemnon?

Agam. This Trojan scorns us; or the men of

Troy,

Are ceremonious courtiers.

Æne. Courtiers as free, as debonaire, unarm'd,

As bending angels; that's their fame in peace:

But when they would seem soldiers, they have galls,

Good arms, strong joints, true swords; and,

Jove's accord,

Nothing so full of heart. But peace, Æneas,

Peace, Trojan; lay thy finger on thy lips!

The worthiness of praise distains his worth,

If that the praise'd himself bring the praise

forth:

But what the repining enemy commends,

That breath fame follows; that praise, sole pure, transcends.

Agam. Sir, you of Troy, call you yourself

Æneas?

Æne. Ay, Greek, that is my name.

Agam. What's your affair, I pray you?

Æne. Sir, pardon; 'tis for Agamemnon's ears.

Agam. He hears nought privately, that comes from Troy.

Æne. Nor I from Troy come not to whisper

him:

I bring a trumpet to awake his ear;

To set his sense on the attentive bent,

And then to speak.

* Army.

¶ Undeputed.

Agam. Speak frankly * as the wind ;
It is not Agamemnon's sleeping hour :
That thou shalt know, Trojan, he is awake,
He tells thee so himself.

Enc. Trumpet blow loud,
Send thy brass voice through all these lazy tents ;—

And every Greek of mettle, let him know,
What Troy means fairly shall be spoke aloud.

[Trumpet sounds.]
We have, great Agamemnon, here in Troy,
A prince call'd Hector, (Priam is his father)
Who in this dull and long-continued truce
Is rusty grown ; he bade me take a trumpet,
And in this purpose speak. Kings, princes,
lords !

If there be one among the fair'st of Greece,
That holds his honour higher than his ease ;
That seeks his praise more than he fears his
peril ;

That knows his valour, and knows not to fear ;
That loves his mistress more than in confession,
(With truant vows to her own lips he loves,)
And dare avow her beauty and her worth,
In other arms than hers,—to him this challenge.

Hector, in view of Trojans and of Greeks,
Shall make it good, or do his best to do it
He hath a lady, wiser, fairer, truer,
Than ever Greek did compass in his arms ;
And will to-morrow with his trumpet call,
Mid-way between your tents and walls of Troy,
To rouse a Grecian that is true in love :
If any come, Hector shall honour him ;
If none, he'll say in Troy, when he retires,
The Grecian dames are sun-burn'd, and not worth

The splinter of a lance. Even so much :
Agam. This shall be told our lovers, lord
Æneas ;

If none of them have soul in such a kind,
We left them all at home. But we are soldiers ;

And may that soldier a mere recreant prove,
That means not, hath not, or is not in love !
If then one is, or hath, or means to be,
That one meets Hector ; if none else, I am he.

Nest. Tell him of Nestor, one that was a
man

When Hector's grandsire suck'd ; he is old now ;
But if there be not in our Grecian host
One noble man, that hath one spark of fire
To answer for his love, tell him from me,—
I'll hide my silver beard in a gold beaver.
And in my vanbrace† put this wither'd brawn ;
And meeting him, will tell him, That my lady
Was fairer than his grandame, and as chaste
As may be in the world : His youth in flood, I'll prove this truth with my three drops of
blood

Ænc. Now heavens forbid such scarcity of youth !

Ulyss. Amen !

Agam. Fair lord Æneas, let me touch your
hand ;

To our pavilion shall I lead you, Sir.
Achilles shall have word of this intent :
So shall each lord of Greece, from tent to tent :
Yourself shall feast with us before you go,
And find the welcome of a noble foe.

[Exeunt all but ULYSSES and NESTOR.]

Ulyss. Nestor,—

Nest. What says Ulysses ?

Ulyss. I have a young conception in my brain,

Be you my time to bring it to some shape.

Nest. What is't ?

Ulyss. This 'tis :

Blunt wedges rise hard knots : The seeded pride
That hath to this maturity blown up
In rank Achilles, must or now be cropp'd,
Or, shedding, breed a nursery of like evil,
To overbulk us all.

Nest. Well, and how ?

Ulyss. This challenge that the gallant Hector sends,

However it is spread in general name,
Relates in purpose only to Achilles.

Nest. The purpose is perspicuous even as substance,

Whose grossness little characters sum up :

And, in the publication, make no strain ; *

But that Achilles, were his brain as barren

As banks of Libya,—though, Apollo knows,

'Tis dry enough,—will, with what great speed of judgment,

As, with celerity, find Hector's purpose

Pointing on him.

Ulyss. And wake him to the answer, think
you ?

Nest. Yes,

It is most meet ; Whom may you else oppose.

That can from Hector bring those honours off,

If not Achilles ? Though't be a sportful combat,

Yet in the trial much opinion dwells ;

For here the Trojans taste our dear'st repute

With their fin'st palate : And trust to me,

Ulysses,

Our imputation shall be oddly pois'd

In this wild action : for the sarcass,

Although particular, shall give a scantling †

Of good or bad into the general ;

And in such indexes, although small pricks ‡

To their subsequent volumes, there is secu

The baby figure of the giant mass

Of things to come at large. It is suppos'd,

He, that meets Hector, issues from our choice :

And choice, being mutual, act of all our souls,

Makes merit her election ; and doth boil,

As 'twere from forth us all, a man distill'd

Out of our virtues ; Who miscarrying,

What heart receives from hence a conquering

part,

To steel a strong opinion to themselves :

Which entertain'd, limbs are his instruments,

In no less working, than are swords and bows

Directive by the limbs.

Ulyss. Give pardon to my speech ;—

Therefore 'tis meet, Achilles meet not Hector.

Let us, like merchants, show our foulest wares,

And think, perchance, they'll sell : if not,

The lustre of the better shall exceed,

By showing the worse first. Do not consent,

That ever Hector and Achilles meet ;

For both our honour and our shame, in this,

Are dogg'd with two strange followers.

Nest. I see them not with my old eyes ; what are they ?

Ulyss. What glory our Achilles shares from Hector,

Were he not proud, we all should share with him :

But he already is too insolent ;

And we were better parch in Afric sun,

Than in the pride and salt scorn of his eyes,

Should he 'scape Hector fair : If he were foil'd,

Why, then we did our main opinion § crush

In taint of our best man. No, make a lottery ,

And, by device, let blockish Ajax draw

The sort ¶ to fight with Hector : Among our selves,

Give him allowance for the better man,

For that will physic the great Myrmidon,

Who broils in loud applause ; and make him fall

His crest, that prouder than blue Iris bends.

If the dull brainless Ajax come safe off,

We'll dress him up in voices : If he fail,

Yet go we under our opinion still

That we have better men. But, hit or miss,

Our project's life this shape of sense assumes—

Ajax, employ'd, plucks down Achilles' plumes.

Nest. Ulysses,

Now I begin to relish thy advice ;

And I will give a taste of it forthwith

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Another part of the Grecian Camp.

Enter AJAX and THERSITES.

Ajax. Thersites,——
Ther. Agamemnon—how if he had boils f full all over, generally?

Ajax. Thersites,——
Ther. And those boils did run?—Say so,—did not the general run then? were not that a boily core?

Ajax. Dog,——
Ther. Then would come some matter from him; I see none now.

Ajax. Thou bitch-wolf's son, canst thou not hear? Feel then. [Strikes him.]

Ther. The plague of Greece upon thee, thou mongrel beef-witted lord!

Ajax. Speak then, thou unsalted laven! speak:
I will beat thee into handsomeness.

Ther. I shall sooner rail thee into wit and holiness: but I think thy horse will sooner con an oration, than thou learn a prayer without book.
Thou canst strike, canst thou? a red murrain
o' thy jade's tricks!

Ajax. Toads-stool, learn me the proclamation.
Ther. Dost thou think I have no sense, thou strikest me thus?

Ajax. The proclamation,——
Ther. Thou art proclaimed a fool, I think.
Ajax. Do not, porcupine, do not; my nugs itch.

Ther. I would thou didst itch from head to foot, and I had the scratching of thee; I would make thee the itchiest scab in Greece. When thou art forth in the incursions, thou strikest as slow as another.

Ajax. I say, the proclamation,——
Ther. Thou grumbliest and rail'st every hour on Achilles; and thou art as full of envy at his greatness as Cerberus at Proserpina's beauty;
ay, that thou barrest at him.

Ajax. Mistress Thersites!
Ther. Thou should'st strike him.

Ajax. Cobloaf!
Ther. He would pun* thee into shivers with his fist, as a sailor breaks a bit-curt.

Ajax. You whoreson cur! [Beating him.]
Ther. Do, do.

Ajax. Thou stool for a witch!
Ther. Ay, do, do; thou sodden-witted lord!
thou hast no more brain than I have in mine elbows; an assinego* may tutor thee: Thou scurvy valiant ass; thou art here put to thrash Trojans; and thou art bought and sold among those of any wit, like a Barbary slave. If thou use† to beat me, I will begin at thy heel, and tell what thou art by inches, thou thing of no bowels, thou!

Ajax. You dog!
Ther. You scurvy lord!

Ajax. You cur! [Beating him.]
Ther. Mars his idiot, do! rudeness; do, canst;
do, do.

Enter ACHILLES and PATROCLUS.

Achil. Why, how now, Ajax? wherefore do you thus?

How now, Thersites? what's the matter, man?
Ther. You see him there, do you?

Achil. Ay; what's the matter?
Ther. Nay, look upon him.

Achil. So I do; What's the matter?
Ther. Nay, but regard him well.

Achil. Well, why I do so.
Ther. But yet you look not well upon him: for whosoever you take him to be, he is Ajax.

Achil. I know that, fool.

Ther. Ay, but that fool knows not himself.

Ajax. Therefore I beat thee.

Ther. Lo, lo, lo, lo, what modicums of wit he utters! his evasions have ears thus long. I have bobbed his brain, more than he has beat my bones: I will buy nine sparrows for a penny and his *pia mater is not worth the ninth part of a sparrow. This lord, Achilles, Ajax,—who wears his wit in his belly, and his guts in his head,—I'll tell you what I say of him.

Achil. What?

Ther. I say this, Ajax——

Achil. Nay, good Ajax.

[Ajax offers to strike him, ACHILLES interposes.]

Ther. Has not so much wit——

Achil. Nay, I must hold you.

Ther. As will stop the eye of Helen's needle, for whom he comes to fight.

Achil. Peace, fool!

Ther. I would have peace and quietness, but the fool will not: he there; that he, look
you there.

Ajax. O thou damned cur! I shall——

Achil. Will you set your wit to a fool's?

Ther. No, I warrant you; for a fool's wit shame it.

Patr. Good words, Thersites.

Achil. What's the quarrel?

Ajax. I bade the vile owl go learn me the tenour of the proclamation, and he rails upon me.

Ther. I serve thee not.

Achil. Well, go to, go to.

Ther. I serve thee voluntary.†

Achil. Your last service was sufferance, 'twas not voluntary; no man is beaten voluntary;
Ajax was here the voluntary, and you as under an impress.

Ther. Even so?—a great deal of your wit too lies in your sinews, or else there be hairs. Hector shall have a great catch, if he knock out either of your brains; a' were as good crack a rusty nut with no kernel.

Achil. What with me too, Thersites?

Ther. There's Ulysses, and old Nestor,—whose wit was mouldy ere your grandsires had nails on their toes,—yoke you like draught oxen, and make you plough up the wars.

Achil. What, what?

Ther. Yes, good sooth; To, Achilles! to Ajax! to!

Ajax. I shall cut out your tongue.

Ther. 'Tis no matter; I shall speak as much as thou afterwards.

Patr. No more words, Thersites; peace.

Ther. I will hold my peace when Achilles' brach‡ bids me, shall I?

Achil. There's for you, Patroclus.

Ther. I will see you hanged, like clopoles ere I come any more to your trunts; I will keep where there is wit stirring, and leave the faction of fools. [Exit.]

Patr. A good riddance.

Achil. Marry, this, Sir, is proclaim'd through all our host:

That Hector, by the first hour of the sun,
Will, with a trumpet, 'twixt our tents and Troy,
To-morrow morning call some knight to arms,
That hath a stomach; and such a one, that dare
Maintain—I know not what; 'tis trash: Fare-
well.

Ajax. Farewell. Who shall answer him?

Achil. I know not it is put to lottery; other-
He knew his man. [wise,

Ajax. Oh! meaning you:—I'll go learn more of it. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—Troy.—A Room in PRIAM'S Palace.

Enter PRIAM, HECTOR, TROILUS, PARIS, and HELENUS.

Pri. After so many hours, lives, speeches spent,

Thus once again says Nestor from the Greeks:
Deliver Helen, and all damage else—
As honour, loss of time, travel, expence,
Wounds, friends, and what else dear that is consum'd

In hot digestion of this cormorant war,—
Shall be struck off—Hector, what say you to't?

Hect. Though no man lesser fears the Greeks than I,

As far as toucheth my particular, yet,
Dread Priam,
There is no lady of more softer bowels,
More springy to suck in the sense of fear,
More ready to cry out—Who knows what follows?

Than Hector is: The wound of peace is surety,
Surety secure; but modest doubt is call'd
The beacon of the wise, the tent that searches
To the bottom of the worst. Let Helen go:
Since the first sword was drawn about this question,

Levy'the soul,* amongst many thousand dismes,*
Hath been as dear as Helen; I mean, of ours:
If we have lost so many tenths of ours,
To guard a thing not ours; not worth to us,
Had it our name, the value of one ten;
What merits in that reason, which denies
The yielding of her up?

Tro. Fie, fie, my brother!

Weigh you the worth and honour of a king,
So great as our dread father, in a scale
Of common ounces? will you with counters sum
The past-proportion of his minute?
And bucket in a waist most fathomless,
With spans and inches so diminutive

As tears and reasons? fie, for godly shame!

Hec. No marvel, though you bite so sharp at reasons,

You are so empty of them. Should not our father [sons],
Bear the great sway of his affairs with reason,
Because your speech hath none, that tells him so?

Tro. You are for dreams and slumbers, brother priest,

You fur your gloves with reason. Here are your reasons:

You know, an enemy intends you harm;
You know, a sword employ'd is perilous,
And reason flies the object of all harm:
Who marvels then, when Helenus beholds
A Grecian and his sword, if he do set
The very wings of reason to his heels;
And fly like chidden Mercury from Jove,
Or like a star disorb'd?—Nay, if we talk of reason,

Let's shut our gates, and sleep: Manhood and should have bare hearts, would they but bat their thoughts

With this cramm'd reason: reason and respect
Make livers pale, and lusthood deject.

Hect. Brother, she is not worth what she doth cost

The holding.

Tro. What is aught, but as 'tis valued?

Hect. But value dwells not in particular will;
It holds his estimate and dignity
As well where 'tis 'tis precious of itself
As in the prize: 'tis mad idolatry,
To make the service greater than the god;
And the will dotes, that is attributive
To what infection itself affects,
Without some image of the affected merit.

Tro. I take to-day a wife, and my election
Is led on in the conduct of my will;
My will enkindled by mine eyes and ears,

* Tenths.

† Caution.

Two traded pilots 'twixt the dangerous shores
Of will and judgment: How may I avoid,
Although my will distaste what it elected,
The wife I chose? there can be no evasion
To blench * from this, and to stand firm by honour:

We turn not back the silks upon the merchant
When we have sold't them; nor the remainder vands

We do not throw in unrespective sieve,†
Because we now are full. It was thought meet,
Paris should do some vengeance on the Greeks:
Your breath with full consent belied his sails;
The seas and winds (old wranglers) took a truce,
And did him service: he touch'd the ports de-arr'd; [captive,
And, for an old aunt,‡ whom the Greeks held
He brought a Grecian queen, whose youth and freshness

Wrinkles Apollo's, and makes pale the morning.
Why keep we her? the Grecians keep our aunt:
Is she worth keeping? why, she is a pearl!
Whose price hath launch'd above a thousand ships,

And turn'd crown'd kings to merchants.
If you'll avouch 'twas wisdom Paris went,
(As you must needs, for you all cried—Go, go,)
If you'll confess, he brought home noble prize,
(As you must needs, for you all clapp'd your hands,

And cried—Inestimable!) why do you now
The issue of your proper wisdom rate;
And do a deed that fortune never did,
Begar the estimation which you priz'd
Richer than sea and land? O theft most base:
That we have stolen what we do fear to keep!
But, thieves, unworthy of a thing so stolen,
That in their country did them that disgrace,
We fear to warrant in our native place!

Cas. [Within.] Cry, Trojans, cry!

Pri. What noise? what shriek is this?

Tro. 'Tis our mad sister, I do know her voice.

Cas. [Within.] Cry, Trojans!

Hect. It is Cassandra.

Enter CASSANDRA, raving.

Cas. Cry, Trojans, cry! lend me ten thousand eyes,
And I will fill them with prophetic tears.

Hect. Peace, sister, peace.

Cas. Virgins and boys, mid-age and wrinkled elders,
Soft infancy, that nothing canst but cry,
Add to my clamours! let us pay betimes
A moiety of that mass of moan to come.
Cry, Trojans, cry! practise your eyes with tears!
Troy must not be, nor goodly Ilium stand;
Our fire-brand brother, Paris, § burns us all.
Cry, Trojans, cry! a Helen, and a woe:
Cry, cry! Troy burns, or else let Helen go.

[Exit.

Hect. Now youthful Troilus, do not these high strains

Of divination in our sister work
Some touches of remorse? or is your blood
So madly hot, that no discourse of reason,
Nor fear of bad success in a bad cause,
Can qualify the same!

Tro. Why, brother Hector,
We may not think the justness of each act
Such and no other than event doth form it
Nor once deject the courage of our minds,
Because Cassandra's mad: her brain-sick raptures

Cannot distaste || the goodness of a quarrel,
Which hath our several honours all engag'd
To make it gracious. ¶ For my private part,
I am no more touch'd than all Priam's sons:
And Jove forbid, there should be done amongst us

* Shrink. † I.e. a common vender.

Hecuba, dreamt she should bring forth a fire-brand.
|| Corrupt, change to a worse estate. ¶ To give it estate.

Such things as might offend the weakest spleen
To fight for and maintain!

Par. Else might the world convince * of levity
As well my undertakings, as your counsels:
But I attest the gods, your full consent
Gave wings to my propension, and cut off
All fears attending on so dire a project.
For what, alas, can these my single arms!
What propugnation† is in one man's valour,
To stand the push and enmity of those
This quarrel would excite? Yet, I protest,
Were I alone to pass the difficulties,
And had as ample power as I have will,
Paris should ne'er retract what he hath done,
Nor faint in the pursuit.

Pri. Paris, you speak
Like one besotted on your sweet delights:
You have the honey still, but these the gall;
So to be valiant, is no praise at all.

Par. Sir, I propose not merely to myself
The pleasures such a beauty brings with it;
But I would have the soil of her fair rape
Wip'd off in honourable keeping her.
What treason were it to the ransack'd queen,
Disgrace to your great worths, and shame to me,
Now to deliver her possession up,
On terms of base compulsion? Can it be,
That so degenerate a strain as this [soms?]
Should once set footing in your generous bosom?
There's not the meanest spirit on our party,
Without a heart to dare, or sword to draw,
When Helen is defended; nor none so noble,
Whose life were ill bestow'd, or death unman'd,
Where Helen is the subject; then, I say,
Well may we fight for her, whom, we know well,
The world's large spaces cannot parallel.

Hect. Paris and Troilus, you have both said
well:

And on the cause and question now in hand
Have glaz'd,—but superficially; ‡ not much
Unlike young men, whom Aristotle thought
Unfit to hear moral philosophy:
The reasons you allege, do more conduce
To the hot passion of distemper'd blood,
Than to make up a free determination
* Twixt right and wrong; For pleasure and revenge

Have hears more deaf than adders to the voice
Of any true decision. Nature craves
All dues be render'd to their owners: Now
What nearer debt in all humanity,
Than wife is to the husband? if this law
Of nature be corrupted through affection;
And that great minds, of § partial indulgence
To their benumbed¶ wills, resist the same;
There is a law in each well-order'd nation,
To curb those raging appetites that are
Most disobedient and refractory.
If Helen then be wife to Sparta's king;—
As it is known she is,—these moral laws
Of nature, and of nations, speak aloud
To have her back return'd: Thus to persist
In doing wrong, extenuates not wrong,
But makes it much more heavy. Hector's opinion

Is this in way of truth: yet ne'ertheless,
My spritely brethren, I propend ¶ to you
In resolution to keep Helen still;
For 'tis a cause that hath no mean dependence
Upon our joint and several dignities.

Tro. Why, there you touch'd the life of our design:

Were it not glory that we more affected
Than the performance of our heaving spleens,
I would not wish a drop of Trojan blood
Spent more in her defence. But, worthy Hector,

She is a theme of honour and renown;
A spur to valiant and magnanimous deeds;
Whose present courage may beat down our foes,
And fame, in time to come, canonize us;

For, I presume, brave Hector would not lose
So rich advantage of a promis'd glory,
As smiles upon the forehead of this action,
For the wide world's revenue.

Hect. I am yours,
You valiant offspring of great Priamus.
I have a roisting * challenge sent amongst
The dull and factious nobles of the Greeks,
Will strike amazement to their drowsy spirits:
I was advertised their great general slept,
Whilst emulation † in the army crept;
This, I presume, will wake him. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The Grecian Camp.—Before ACHILLES' Tent.

Enter THERSITES.

Ther. How now, Thersites? what, lost in the labyrinth of thy fury? Shall the elephant Ajax carry it thus? he beats me, and I rail at him:
O worthy satisfaction! * would it were otherwise;
that I could beat him whilst he railed at me:
'Sfoot, I'll learn to conjure and raise devils, but I'll see some issue of my spiteful execrations.
Then there's Achilles,—a rare engineer. If Troy be not taken till these two undermine it, the walls will stand till they fall of themselves. O thou great thunder-dart of Olymps, forget that thou art Jove the king of gods; and, Mercury, lose all the serpentine craft of thy Caduceus; ‡
if ye take not that little little less-than-little wit from them that they have! which short-armed ignorance itself knows is so abundant scarce, it will not in circumvention deliver a fly from a spider, without drawing their massy moons, and cutting the web. After this, the vengeance on the whole camp! or, rather, the bone-ache! for that, methinks, is the curse dependent on those that war for a placket. I have said my prayers; and devil, envy, say Amen. What, ho! my lord Achilles!

Enter PATROCLUS.

Patr. Who's there? Thersites? Good Thersites, come in and rail.

Ther. If I could have remembered a gilt counterfeit, thou wouldest not have shipped out of my contemplation: but it is no matter: Thyself upon thyself! The common curse of main-kind, folly and ignorance, be thine in great revenue! heaven bless thee from a tutor, and discipline come not near thee! Let thy blood be thy direction till thy death! then if she, that lays thee out, says,—thou art a fair coise, I'll be sworn and sworn upon't, she never shrouded any but lazars. ¶ Amen.—Where's Achilles?

Patr. What, art thou devout? wast thou in prayer?

Ther. Ay; The heavens hear me!

Enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Who's there?

Patr. Thersites, my lord.

Achil. Where, where?—Art thou come? Why, my cheese, my digestion, why hast thou not served thyself in to my table so many meals?
Come; what's Agamemnon?

Ther. Thy commander, Achilles:—Then tell me, Patroclus, what's Achilles?

Patr. Thy lord, Thersites; Then tell me, I pray thee, what's thyself?

Ther. Thy knower, Patroclus; Then tell me
Patroclus, what art thou?

Patr. Thou mayest tell, that knowest.

Achil. Oh! tell, tell.

Ther. I'll decline the whole question. Aga-memnon commands Achilles; Achilles is my lord; I am Patroclus' knower; and Patroclus is a fool.

Patr. You rascal!

Ther. Peace, fool; I have not done.

Ther. Agamemnon is a fool : Achilles is a fool ; Thersites is a fool ; and, as aforesaid, Patroclus is a fool.

Achil. Derive this ; come.

Ther. Agamemnon is a fool to offer to command Achilles ; Achilles is a fool to be commanded of Agamemnon ; Thersites is a fool to serve such a fool ; and Patroclus is a fool positive.

Patr. Why am I a fool ?

Ther. Make that demand of the prover.—It suffices me, thou art. Look you, who comes here !

Enter AGAMEMNON, ULYSSES, NESTOR, DIOMEDES, and AJAX.

Achil. Patroclus, I'll speak with nobody :—Come in with me, Thersites. [Exit.]

Ther. Here is such patchery, such juggling, and such knavery ! all the argument is, a cuckold and a whore ; A good quarrel to draw emulous factions, and bleed to death upon ! Now the dry serpigo ! on the subject ! and war and lechery confound all ! [Exit.]

Agam. Where is Achilles ?

Patr. Within his tent ; but ill dispos'd, my lord.

Agam. Let it be known to him that we are here.

He silent ! our messengers ; and we lay by our appetunments, § visiting of him :

Let him be told so ; lest, perchance, he think We dare not move the question of our place, Or know not what we are.

Patr. I shall say so to him. [Exit.]

Ulyss. We saw him at the opening of his tent : He is not sick.

Ajax. Yes, lion-sick, sick of proud heart : you may call it melancholy, if you will favour the mau, but, by my head, 'tis pride : But why, why ? let him show us a cause.—A word, my lord. [Takes AGAMEMNON aside.]

Nest. What moves Ajax thus to bay at him ?

Ulyss. Achilles hath inveigled his fool from him.

Nest. Who ? Thersites ?

Ulyss. He.

Nest. Then will Ajax lack matter, if he have not his argument. ||

Ulyss. No you see, he is his argument, that has his argument ; Achilles.

Nest. All the better ; then fraction is more our wish, than their faction : But it was a strong composition, a fool could disunite.

Ulyss. The amity that wisdom knits not, folly may easily untie. Here comes Patroclus.

Re-enter PATROCLUS.

Nest. No Achilles with him.

Ulyss. The elephant hath joints, but none for courtesy ; his legs are legs for necessity, not for flexure.

Patr. Achilles bids me say—he is much sorry,

If any thing more than your sport and pleasure Did move your greatness, and this noble state, To call upon him : he hopes, it is no other, but for your health and your digestion sake, And after-dinner's breath. ¶

Agam. Hear you, Patroclus ;—We are too well acquainted with these answers : But his evasion, wing'd thus swift with scorn, Cannot outfly our apprehensions.

Much attribute he hath ; and much the reason Why we ascribe it to him : yet all his virtues,—Not virtuously on his own part beheld,—Do, in our eyes, begin to lose their gloss ; Yea, like fair fruit in an unwholesome dish, Are like to rot untasted. Go and tell him,

We come to speak with him : And you shall not sin,

If you do say—we think him over-proud, And under-honest ; in self-assumption greater, Than in the note of judgment ; and worthier than himself

Patr. I shall ; and bring his answer presently. [Exit.]

Agam. In second voice we'll not be satisfied, We come to speak with him.—Ulysses, enter. [Exit ULYSSES.]

Ajax. What is he more than another ?

Agam. No more than what he thinks he is.

Ajax. Is he so much ? Do you not think, he thinks himself a better man than I am ?

Agam. No question.

Ajax. Will you subscribe his thought, and say—he is ?

Agam. No, noble Ajax ; you are as strong, as valiant, as wise, no less noble, much more gentle, and altogether more tractable.

Ajax. Why should a man be proud ? How doth pride grow ? I know not what pride is.

Agam. Your mind's the clearer, Ajax, and your virtues the fairer. He that is proud, eats up himself : pride is his own glass, his own trumpet, his own chronicle ; and whatever praises itself but in the deed, devours the deed in the praise.

Ajax. I do hate a proud man, as I hate the engendering of toads.

Nest. And yet he loves himself : Is it not strange ? [Aside.]

Re-enter ULYSSES.

Ulyss. Achilles will not to the field to-morrow.

Agam. What's his excuse ?

Ulyss. He doth rely on none ; But carries on the stream of his dispose, Without observance or respect of any, In will peculiar and in self-admission.

Agam. Why will he not, upon our fair request,

Untent his person, and share the air with us ?

Ulyss. Things small as nothing, for request's sake only, [greatness ;

He makes important : Possess'd he is with And speaks not to himself, but with a pride That quarrels at self-breath : imagin'd worth Holds in his blood such swoll and hot discourse,

That, 'twixt his mental and his active parts, Kingdom'd Achilles in commotion rages, And batters down himself : What should I say ? He is so plagu' proud, that the death tokens of it Cry—No recovery.

Agam. Let Ajax go to him.—

Dear lord, go you and greet him in his tent : 'Tis said he holds you well : and will be led, At your request, a little from himself.

Ulyss. O Agamemnon, let it not be so ! We'll consecrate the steps that Ajax makes When they go from Achilles : shall the proud lord, Nest. O noble general, do not do so.

Dio. You must prepare to fight without Achilles

Ulyss. Why, 'tis this naming of him does him harm.

Here is a man—But 'tis before his face;

But pardon, father Nestor, were you days

But be as Ajax.

Ajax. Shall I call you father?

Nest. Ay, my good son.

Dio. Be rul'd by him, lord Ajax.

To call together all his state of war;

Fresh kings are come to Troy: To-morrow,

We must with all our main of power stand fast:

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Troy.—A Room in PRIAM'S Palace.

Enter PANDARUS and a SERVANT.

Pan. Friend! you! pray you, a word: I do not you follow the young lord Paris!

Serv. Ay, Sir, when he goes before me.

Pan. You do depend upon him, I trow?

Serv. Sir, I do depend upon the lord.

Pan. You do depend upon a noble gentleman; I must needs praise him.

Serv. The lord be praised!

Pan. You know me, do you not?

Serv. Faith, Sir, superficially.

Pan. Friend, know me better; I am the lord Pandarus.

Serv. I hope, I shall know your honour better.

Pan. I do desire it.

Serv. You are in the state of grace.

Pan. Grace! not so, friend; [Music within.]

honour and honour: What music is this?

Serv. I do but partly know, Sir; it is music in parts.

Pan. Know you the musicians?

Serv. Wholly, Sir.

Pan. Who play they to?

Serv. To the hearers, Sir.

Pan. At whose pleasure, friend?

Serv. At mine, Sir, and their's that love
music.

Pan. Command, I mean, friend.

Serv. Who shall I command, Sir?

Pan. Friend, we understand not one another;
I am too courtly, and thou art too cunning: At whose request do these men play?

Serv. That's to't, indeed, Sir: Marry, Sir at the request of Paris my lord, who is there in person; with him, the mortal Venus, the beautiful blood of beauty, love's invisible soul,—

Pan. Who, my cousin Cressida?

Serv. No, Sir, Helen; Could you not find out that by her attributes?

Pan. It should seem, fellow, that thou hast not seen the lady Cressida. I come to speak with Paris from the prince Troilus: I will make a complimental assault upon him, for my business seeths.*

Serv. Sudden business! there's a stewed phrase,
indeed!

Enter PARIS and HELEN, attended.

Pan. Fair be to you, my lord, and to all this

Pan. You speak your fair pleasure, sweet
queen.—

Fair prince, here is good broken music.

Par. You have broke it, cousin; and, by my life, you shall make it whole again: you shall piece it out with a piece of your performance.—
Nell, he is full of harmony.

Pan. Truly, lady, no.

Helen. O Sir,—

Pan. Rude, in sooth; in good sooth, very rude.

Par. Well said, my lord! well, you say so in fits.*

Pan. I have business to my lord, dear
queen:—

My lord, will you vouchsafe me a word?

Helen. Nay, this shall not hedge us out; we'll hear you sing, certainly.

Pan. Well, sweet queen, you are pleasant with me.—But (marry) thus, my lord,—My dear lord, and most esteemed friend, your brother Troilus.—

Helen. My lord Pandarus; honey-sweet
lord,—

Pan. Go to, sweet queen, go to:—commends himself most affectionately to you.

Helen. You shall not bob us out of our melody; if you do, our melancholy upon your head!

Pan. Sweet queen, sweet queen; that's a sweet queen, I'faith.

Helen. And to make a sweet lady sad, is a sour offence.

Pan. Nay, that shall not serve your turn;
that shall it not, in truth, la. Nay, I care not for such words; no, no.—And, my lord, he desires you, that, if the king call for him at supper, you will make his excuse.

Helen. My lord Pandarus,—

Pan. What says my sweet queen,—my very very sweet queen?

Par. What exploit's in hand? where snps he
to-night?

Helen. Nay, but my lord,—

Pan. What says my sweet queen?—My cousin will fall out with you. You must not know where he snps.

Par. I'll lay my life, with my disposer Cressida.

Pan. No, no, no such matter, you are wide;
come, your disposer is sick.

Par. Well, I'll make excuse.

Pan. Ay, good my lord. Why should you say —Cressida? no, your poor disposer's sick.

Par. I spy.

Pan. You spy! what do you spy?—Come, give me an instrument.—Now, sweet queen.

Helen. Why, this is kindly done.

Pan. My niece is horribly in love with a thing you have, sweet queen.

Helen. She shall have it, my lord, if it be not my lord Paris.

Pan. He! no, she'll none of him; they two are twain.

Helen. Falling in, after falling out, may make them three.

Pan. Come, come, I'll hear no more of this;
I'll sing you a song now.

Helen. Ay, ay, pray thee now. By my troth, sweet lord, thou hast a fine forehead.

Pan. Ay, you may, you may.

Helen. Let thy song be love: this love will undo us all. O Cupid, Cupid, Cupid!

Pan. Love! ay, that it shall, I'faith.

Par. Ay, good now, love, love, nothing but
love.

Pan. In good troth, it begins so:

*Love, love, nothing but love, still more!
For, oh! love's bow
Shoots buck and doe:*

* By fits.

† Wide of your mark.

*The shaft confounds,
Not that it wounds,
But tickles still the sore.*

*These lovers cry—Oh! oh! they die!
Yet that which seems the wound to kill
Doth turn oh! oh! to ha! ha! he!
So dying love lives still:
Oh! oh! a while, but ha! ha! ha!
Oh! oh! groans out for ha! ha! ha!*

Hey ho!

Helen. In love, I'faith, to the very tip of the nose

Par. He eats nothing but doves, love; and that breeds hot blood, and hot blood begets hot thoughts, and hot thoughts beget hot deeds, and hot deeds is love.

Pan. Is this the generation of love? hot blood, hot thoughts, and hot deeds?—Why, they are vi-pers: is love a generation of vipers? Sweet lord, who's a-field to-day?

Par. Hector, Deiphobus, Helenus, Antenor, and all the gallantry of Troy: I would fain have arrived to-night, but my Nell would not have it so.—
How chance my brother Troilus went not?

Helen. He hangs the lip at something;—you know all, lord Pandarus.

Pan. Not I, honey-sweet queen,—I long to hear how they sped to-day.—You'll remember your brother's excuse?

Par. To a hair.

Pan. Farewell, sweet queen.

Helen. Commend me to your niece.

Pan. I will, sweet queen. [Exit.

[A Retreat sounds.]

Par. They are come from field: let us to Priam's hall,

To greet the warriors. Sweet Helen, I must woo
you

To help unarm our Hector: his stubborn buckles,

With these your white enchanting fingers touch'd
Shall more obey, than to the edge of steel,
Or force of Greekish snaws; you shall do more
Than all the island kings, disarm great Hector!

Helen. 'Twill make us proud to be his servant, Paris:

Yea, what he shall receive of us in duty,
Give us more pain in beauty than we have;
Yea, o'er shines ourself.

Par. Sweet, above thought I love thee.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same. PANDARUS' Orchard.

Enter PANDARUS and a SERVANT, meeting.

Pan. How now? where's thy master? at my cousin Cressida's?

Serv. No, Sir; he stays for you to conduct him thither.

Enter TROIUS.

Pan. Oh! here he comes.—How now, how
now?

Tro. Sirrah, walk off. [Exit. SERVANT.]

Pan. Have you seen my cousin?

Tro. No, Pandarus: I stalk about her door,
Like a strange soul upon the Stygian banks
Staying for waftage. Oh be thou my Chaucer,
And give me swift transportation to those fields,
Where I may wallow in the lily beds,
Propos'd for the deserver! O gentle Pandarus,
From Cupid's shoulder pluck his painted wings,
And fly with me to Cressid!

Pan. Walk here i'the orchard; I'll bring her straight. [Exit PANDARUS.]

Tro. I am giddy: expectation whisks me.
The imaginary relish is so sweet [round.
That it enchants my sense: What will it be
When that the watery palate tastes indeed
Love's thrice-reputed nectar! death, I fear me;
Swooning destruction; or some joy too sweet,
Too subtle-potent, tun'd too sharp in fineness,
For the capacity of my ruder powers:

I fear it much; and I do fear besides,
That I shall lose distinction in my joys;
As doth a battle, when they charge on heaps
The enemy flying.

Re-enter PANDARUS.

Pan. She's making her ready, she'll come straight: you must be witty now. She does so blush, and fetches her wind so short, as if she were frayed with a sprite: I'll fetch her. It is the prettiest villain:—she fetches her breath as short as a new-ta'en sparrow.

[Exit PANDARUS.]

Tro. Even such a passion doth embrace my bosom:

My heart beats thicker than a feverous pulse;
And all my powers do their bestowing lose,
Like vassalage at unawares encount'ring
The eye of majesty.

Enter PANDARUS and CRESSIDA.

Pan. Come, come, what need you blush? shame's a baby.—Here she is now: swear the oaths now to her, that you have sworn to me.—What are you gone again? you must be watched ere you be made tame, must you? Come your ways, come your ways: an you draw backward, we'll put you i'th' fills.*—Why do you not speak to her?—Come, draw this curtain, and let's see your picture. Alas the day, how loath you are to offend daylight! an 'twere dark, you'd close sooner. So, so; rub on, and kiss the mistress.† How now, a kiss in fee-farm! build there, carpenter; the air is sweet. Nay, you shall light your hearts out, ere I part you. The falcon is the tercel,‡ for all the ducks i'th' river: go to, go to.

Tro. You have bereft me of all words, lady.

Pan. Words pay no debts, give her deeds: but she'll bereave you of the deeds too, if she call your activity in question. What, billing again? Here's—*In witness whereof the parties interchangeably—*Come in come in: I'll go get a fire.

[Exit PANDARUS.]

Cres. Will you walk in, my lord?

Tro. O Cressida, how often have I wished me thus?

Cres. Wished my lord?—The gods grant!—O my lord!

Tro. What should they grant? what makes this pretty abrupt? What too curious dregs espies my sweet lady in the fountain of our love?

Cres. More dregs than water if my fears have eyes.

Tro. Fears make devils cherubins; they never see truly.

Cres. Blind fear, that seeing reason leads, finds safer footing than blind reason stumbling without fear: To fear the worst, oft cures the worst.

Tro. Oh! let my lady apprehend no fear: in all Cupid's pageant there is presented no monster.

Cres. Nor nothing monstrous neither?

Tro. Nothing but our undertakings; when we vow to weep seas, live in fire, eat rocks, tame tigers; thinking it harder for our mistress to devise imposition enough, than for us to undergo any difficulty imposed. This is the monstrousness in love, lady,—that the will is infinite, and the execution confined; that the desire is boundless, and the act a slave to it.

Cres. They, say, all lovers swear more performance than they are able, and yet reserve an ability that they never perform; vowing more than the perfection of ten, and discharging less than the tenth part of one. They that have the voice of lions, and the act of hares, are they not monsters?

* I. e. In the shafts. † An allusion to bowling; what is now called the ball was formerly termed the mistress. ‡ The tercel, the male and the falcon the female hawk.

Tro. Are there such? such are not we: Praise us as we are tasted, allow us as we prove; our head shall go bare, till merit crown it: no perfection in reversion shall have a praise in present: we will not name desert, before his birth; and, being born, his addition* shall be humble. Few words to fair truth: Troilus shall be such to Cressid, as what envy can say worst, shall be a mock for his truth; and what truth can speak truest, not truer than Troilus.

Cres. Will you walk in, my lord?

Re-enter PANDARUS.

Pan. What, blushing still? have you not done talking yet?

Cres. Well, uncle, what folly I commit, I dedicate to you.

Pan. I thank you for that: if my lord get a boy of you, you'll give him me: Be true to my lord: if he pinch, chide me for it.

Tro. You know now your hostages: your uncle's word, and my firm faith.

Pan. Nay, I'll give my word for her too; our kindred, though they be long ere they are wooed, they are constant, being won: they are burs, I can tell you; they'll stick where they are thrown.

Cres. Boldness comes to me now, and brings me heart:

Prince Troilus, I have lov'd you night and day for many weary months.

Tro. Why was my Cressid then so hard to win?

Cres. Hard to seem won; but I was won, my lord,

With the first glance that ever—Pardon me; if I confess much, you will play the tyrant. I love you now; but not, till now, so much. But I might master it:—in faith, I lie; My thoughts were like unbudding children, grown too headstrong for their mother: See, we fools!

Why have I blabb'd? who shall be true to us, When we are so unsecret to ourselves? But though I lov'd you well, I woo'd you not; And yet, good faith, I wish'd myself a man; Or that we women had men's privilege Of speaking first. Sweet, bid me hold my tongue; For, in this rapture, I shall surely speak. The thing I shall repent. See, see, your silence, Cunning in dumbness, from my weakness draws My very soul of counsel: Stop my mouth.

Tro. And shall, albeit sweet music issues thence.

Pan. Pretty, I'faith.

Cres. My lord, I do beseech you, pardon me; 'Twas not my purpose, thus to beg a kiss: I am ashamed;—O heavens! what have I done?—For this time will I take my leave, my lord.

Tro. Your leave, sweet Cressid?

Pan. Leave? if an you take leave till to-morrow morning,—

Cres. Pray you, content you.

Tro. What offends you, lady?

Cres. Sir, mine own company.

Tro. You cannot shun Yourself.

Cres. Let me go and try: I have a kind of self resides with you; But an unkind self, that itself will leave, To be another's fool. I would be gone: Where is my wit? I know not what I speak.

Tro. Well know they what they speak, that speak so wisely.

Cres. Perchance my lord, I show more craft than love;

And fell so roundly to a large confession, To angle for your thoughts: But you are wise; Or else you love not; For to be wise, and love, Exceeds man's might; that dwells with gods above.

Tro. Oh! that I thought it could be in a woman,
(As, if it can, I will presume in you,) To feed for aye * her lamp and flames of love;
To keep her constancy in plight and youth,
Outliving beauty's outward, with a mind
That doth renew swifter than blood decays!
O! that persuasion could but thus convince
That my integrity and truth to you [me,—
Might be affronted † with the match and weight
Of such a winnow'd purity in love:
How were I then uplifted! but, alas,
I am as true as truth's simplicity,
And simpler than the infancy of truth.

Cres. In that I'll war with you.

Tro. O virtuous fight,
When right with right wars who shall be most right!
True swains in love, shall in the world to come,
Approve their truths by Troilus: when their rhymes,

Full of protest, of oath, and big compare, ‡
Want similes, truth tri'd with iteration,—
As true as steel, as plantage to the moon,
As sun to day, as turtle to her mate,
As iron to adamant, as earth to the centre,—
Yet, after all comparisons of truth,
As truth's authentic author to be cited,
As true as Troilus shall crown up § the verse,
And sanctify the numbers.

Cres. Prophet may you be!

If I be false, or swerve a hair from truth,
When time is old and hath forgot itself,
When waterdrops have worn the stones of Troy,

And blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are grated
To dusty nothing; yet let memory,
From false to false, among false unids in love,
Upbraid my falsehood! when they have said—
as false

As air, as water, wind, or sandy earth,
As fox to lamb, as wolf to heifer's calf,
Paid to the hind, or stepdame to her son;
Yea, let them say, to stick the heart of falsehood,
As false as Cressid.

Pan. Go to, a bargain made: seal it, seal it;
I'll be the witness.—Here I hold your hand;
here, my cousin's. If ever you prove false one to another, since I have taken such pains to bring you together, let all pitiful goers-between be called to the world's end after my name, call them all—Pandars: let all constant men be Troiluses, all false women Cressids, and all brokers-between Pandars! say, amen.

Tro. Amen.

Cres. Amen.

Pan. Amen. Whereupon I will show you a chamber and a bed; which bed, because it shall not speak of your pretty encounters, press it to death: away.

And Cupid grant all tongue-tied maidens here,
Bed, chamber, Pandar to provide this gear!

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The Grecian Camp.

Enter AGAMEMNON, ULYSSES, DIOMEDES, NESTOR, AJAX, MENELAUS, and CALCHAS.

Cal. Now, princes, for the service I have done you
The advantage of the time prompts me aloud
To call for recompense. Appear it to your mind,
That, though the sight I bear in things, to Jove

I have abandon'd Troy, left my possession,
Incurr'd a traitor's name; expos'd myself,
From certain and possess'd conveniences,
To doubtful fortunes; sequest'ring from me all
That time, acquaintance, custom, and condition,
Made tame and most familiar to my nature;
And here, to do you service, am become

As new into the world, strange, unacquainted:
I do beseech you, as in way of taste,
To give me now a little benefit,
Out of those many register'd in promise,
Which, you say, live to come in my behalf.

Agam. What wouldst thou of us, Trojan? make demand.

Cal. You have a Trojan prisoner, call'd Antenor,

Yesterday took; Troy holds him very dear.
Often have you, (often have you thanks there-fore,)

Desir'd my Cressid in right great exchange,
Whom Troy hath still denied: But this Antenor,

I know, is such a wrest * in their affairs
That their negotiations all must slack,
Wanting his manage; and they will almost
Give us a prince of blood, a son of Priam,
In change of him: let him be sent, great princes,
And he shall buy my daughter; and her presence

Shall quite strike off all service I have done,
In most accepted pain.

Agam. Let Diomedes hear him,
And bring us Cressid hither: Calchas shall have
What he requests of us.—Good Diomed,
Furnish you fairly for this interchange:
Withal, bring word—if Hector will to-morrow
Be answer'd in his challenge: Ajax is ready.

Dio. This shall I undertake; and 'tis a burden
Which I am proud to bear.

[Exeunt DIOMEDES and CALCHAS.]

Enter ACHILLES and PATROCLUS, before their Tent.

Ulyss. Achilles stands i'the entrance of his tent:—

Please it our general to pass strangely † by him,
As if he were forgot; and, princes all,
Lay negligent and loose regard upon him:
I will come last: 'Tis like, he'll question me,
Why such unresponsive eyes are bent, why turn'd
on him:

If so, I have derision med'cinable,
To use between your strangeness and his pride,
Which his own will shall have desire to drink;
It may be good: pride hath no other glass
To show itself, but pride; for supple knees
Feed arrogance, and are the proud man's fees.

Agam. We'll execute your purpose, and put on

A form of strangeness as we pass along;—
So do each lord; and either greet him not,
Or else disdainfully, which shall shake him more

Than if not look'd on. I will lead the way.

Achil. What, comes the general to speak with me?

You know my mind, I'll fight no more 'gainst Troy.

Agam. What says Achilles? would he ought with us?

Nest. Would you, my lord, aught with the general?

Achil. No.

Nest. Nothing, my lord.

Agam. The better.

[Exeunt AGAMEMNON and NESTOR.]

Achil. Good day, good day.

Men. How do you? how do you?

[Exit MENELAUS.]

Achil. What, does the cuckold scorn me?

Ajax. How now, Patroclus?

Achil. Good morrow, Ajax.

Ajax. Ha?

Achil. Good morrow.

Ajax. Ay, and good next day too.

[Exit AJAX.]

Achil. What mean these fellows? Know they not Achilles?

Patr. They pass by strangely: they were us'd to bend,

* Ever. † Met with and match'd.
‡ Comparison. § Conclude it.

* An instrument for tuning harps, &c. † Shyly

To send their smiles before them to Achilles ;
To come as humbly, as they us'd to creep
To holy altars.

Achil. What, am I poor of late ?

'Tis certain, greatness, once fallen out with fortune,

Must fall out with men too : What the declin'd is,
He shall as soon read in the eyes of others,
As feel in his own fall : for men, like butterflies, ^(mer)

Show not their mealy wings, but to the sun-
And not a man, for being simply man,
Hath any honour ; but honour for those honours
That are without him, as place, riches, favour,
Prizes of accident as oft as merit :

Which when they fall, as being slippery standers,
The love that lean'd on them as slippery too,
Do one pluck down another, and together
Lie in the fall. But 'tis not so with me :

Fortune and I are friends ; I do enjoy
At ample point all that I did possess,
Save these men's looks ; who do, methinks,
find out

Something not worth in me such rich beholding
As they have often given. Here is Ulysses ;

I'll interrupt his reading.—

How now, Ulysses ?

Ulyss. Now great Thetis' son ?

Achil. What are you reading ?

Ulyss. A strange fellow here

Writes me, 'That man—how dearly ever parted,*
How much in having, or without, or in—
Cannot make boast to have that which he hath,
Nor feels not what he owes, but by reflection ;
As when his virtues shining upon others
Heat them, and they retort that heat again
To the first giver.'

Achil. This is not strange, Ulysses.
The beauty that is borne here in the face
The bearer knows not, but commends itself
'To others' eyes ; nor doth the eye itself
(That most pure spirit of sense,) behold itself,
Not going from itself ; but eye to eye oppos'd
Salutes each other with each other's form.
For speculation turns not to itself,
Till it hath travell'd, and is married there
Where it may see itself : this is not strange at all.

Ulyss. I do not strain at the position ;
It is familiar ; but at the author's drift :
Who, in his circumstance, † expressly proves—
That no man is the lord of any thing, (Though in and of him there be much consisting,)

Till he communicate his parts to others :
Nor doth he of himself know them for aught
Till he behold them form'd in the applause
Where they are extended ; which, like an arch, reverberates

The voice again : or like a gate of steel
Fronting the sun, receives and renders back
His figure and his heat. I was much rapt in
And apprehended here immediately [this ;
The unknown Ajax.

Heavens, what a man is there ! a very bore ;
That has he knows not what. Nature, what things there are,

Most object in regard, and dear in use !
What things again most dear in the esteem,
And poor in worth ! Now shall we see to-morrow,

An act that very chance doth throw upon him,
Ajax renew'd. O heavens, what some men do,
While some men leave to do !
How some men creep in skittish fortune's hall,
Whiles others play the idiots in her eyes !
How one man eats into another's pride,
Whiles pride is fast upon his wantonness !
To see these Grecian lords !—why, even already
They clap the lubber Ajax on the shoulder ;
As if his foot were on brave Hector's breast,
And great Troy shrinking,

Achil. I do believe it ; for they pass'd by me,
As misers do by beggars : neither gave to me
Good word nor look : What, are my deeds forgot ?

Ulyss. Time hath, my lord, a wallet at his back,
Wherein he puts alms for oblivion,
A great-sized monster of ingratitude ;
Those scraps are good deeds past : which are devour'd

As fast as they are made, forgot as soon
As done : Perseverance, dear my lord,
Keeps honour bright : To have done, is to hang Quite out of fashion, like a rusty mail
In monumental mockery. Take the instant way :

For honour travels in a strait so narrow,
Where one but goes abreast : keep the the path ;
For emulation hath a thousand sons,
That one by one pursue : If you give way,
Or hedge aside from the direct forthright,
Like to an enter'd tide they all rush by,
And leave you hindmost :—

Or, like a gallant horse fallen in first rank,
Lie there for pavement to the abject rear,
O'er-run and trampled on : Thru what they do
in present,

Though less than yours in past, must o'ertop
For time is like a fashionable host, [yours :
That slightly shakes his parting guest by the
hand,

And with his arms out-stretch'd, as he would fly
Grasp in the corner : Welcome ever smiles,
And farewell goes out sighing. Oh ! let not virtue seek

Remuneration for the thing it was ;
For beauty, wit,
High birth, vigour of bone, desert in service,
Love, friendship, charity, are subjects all
To envious and calumniating time.

One touch of nature makes the whole world kin,— [gawds,*
That all, with one consent, praise new-born
Though they are made and moulded of things past ;

And give to dust, that is a little gilt,
More land than gilt o'er-dusted.
The present eye praises the present object :
Turn marvel not, thou great and complete man,
That all the Greeks begin to worship Ajax,
Since things in motion sooner catch the eye,
Than what not stirs. The cry went once on thee,
And still it might ; and yet it may again,
If thou would'st not entomb thyself alive,
And case thy reputation in thy tent ;
Whose glorious deeds, but in these fields of late,
Made emulous missions † 'mongst the gods them-
And drove great Mars to faction. [selves,

Achil. Of this my privacy
I have strong reasons.

Ulyss. But 'gainst your privacy
The reasons are more potent and heroic :
'Tis known, Achilles, that you are in love
With one of Priam's daughters : ‡

Achil. Ha ! known !
Ulyss. Is that a wonder ?
The providence that's in a watchful state,
Knows almost every grain of Priam's gold ;
Finds bottom in the uncomprehensive deeps ;
Keeps place with thought, and almost, like the gods,

Does thoughts unveil in their dumb cradles.
There is a mystery (with whom relation Durst never meddle) in the soul of state,
Which hath an operation more divine,
Than breath, or pen, can give expression to :
All the commerce that you have had with Troy,
As perfectly is ours, as your's my lord ;
And better would it fit Achilles much,
To throw down Hector, than Polyxena :

But it must grieve young Pyrrhus now at home,
When fame shall in our islands sound her
trump,

And all the Greekish girls shall tripping sing,—

* New fashioned toys. † Causing the gods themselves to enlist among the combatants.
‡ Polyxena.

* How ~~of~~ ^{not} ~~sover~~ ^{endowed}.
† ~~of~~ ^{of} ~~argument~~.

*Great Hector's sister did Achilles win ;
But our great Ajax bravely beat down him.
Farewell, my lord : I as your lover * speak ;
The fool slides o'er the ice that you should break.*

[Exit.]

Patr. To this effect, Achilles, have I mov'd
A woman inpatient and mannish grown (you :
Is not more loath'd than an effeminate man
In tune of action. I stand condemn'd for this :
They think my little stomach to the war,
And your great love to me, restrains you thus :
Sweet, rouse yourself ; and the weak wanton

Cupid

Shall from your neck unlouse his amorous fold,
And, like a dew-drop from the lion's mane,
Be shook to air.

Achil. Shall Ajax fight with Hector ?

Patr. Ay, and, perhaps, receive much honour by him.

Achil. I see my reputation is at stake ;

My fame is shrewdly go'd.

Patr. Oh ! then beware ;

Those wounds heal ill, that men do give them-
Omission to do what is necessary [selves :
Seals a commission to a blank of danger ;
And danger, like an ague, subtly taints
Even then when we sit idly in the sun.

Achil. Go call Therites hither, sweet Patro-clus :

I'll send the fool to Ajax, and desire him
To invite the Trojan lords, after the combat,
To see us here unarm'd : I have a woman's
An appetite that I am sick withal, [longing,
To see great Hector in his weeds of peace ;
To talk with him, and to behold his visage,
Even to my full of view. A labour sav'd !

Enter Therites.

Ther. A wonder !

Achil. What ?

Ther. Ajax goes up and down the field, asking for himself.

Achil. How so ?

Ther. He must fight singly to-morrow with Hector ; and is so prophetically proud of an heroical cudgelling, that he raves in saying nothing.

Achil. How can that be ?

Ther. Why, he stalks up and down like a pe-cock, a stride, and a stand : ruminates, like an hossess, that hath no arithmetic but her brain to set down her reckoning : bites his lip with a politic regard, as who should say—there were wit in this head, an 'twould out ; and so there is ;
but it lies as coldly in him as fire in a flint, which will not show without knocking. The man's undone for ever ; for if Hector break not his neck in the combat, he'll break it himself in vain-glory. He knows not me : I said, Good-morrow, Ajax ; and he replies, Thanks, Agamem-non. What think you of this man, that takes me for the general ? He is grown a very land-fish, languageless, a monster. A plague of opinion ! a man may wear it on both sides, like a leather jerkin.

Achil. Thou must be my ambassador to him,
Therites.

Ther. Who, I ? why, he'll answer nobody ;
he professes not answering ; speaking is for beggars ; he wears his tongue in his arms. I will put on his presence ; let Patroclus make demands to me, you shall see the pageant of Ajax.

Achil. To him, Patroclus : Tell him,—I humbly desire the valiant Ajax, to invite the most valorous Hector to come unarm'd to my tent ;
and to procure safe conduct for his person, of the magnanimous and most illustrious six-or-seven-times-honoured captain general of the Grecian army, Agamemnon. Do this.

Patr. Jove bless great Ajax.

Ther. Humph !

Patr. I came from the worthy Achilles,—

Ther. Ha !

Patr. Who most humbly desires you, to invite Hector to his tent !—

Ther. Humph !

Patr. And to procure safe conduct from Agamemnon ?

Ther. Agamemnon ?

Patr. Ay, my lord.

Ther. Ha !

Patr. What say you to't ?

Ther. God be wi' you, with all my heart.

Patr. Your answer, Sir.

Ther. If to-morrow be a fair day, by eleven o'clock it will go one way or other ; howsoever, he shall pay for me ere he has me.

Patr. Your answer, Sir.

Ther. Fare you well, with all my heart.

Achil. Why, but he is not in this tune, is he ?

Ther. No, but he's out o'tune thus. When music will be in him when Hector has knocked out his brains, I know not : But, I am sure, none ; unless the fiddler Apollo get his sinews to make catlings * on.

Achil. Come, thou shalt bear a letter to him
straight.

Ther. Let me bear another to his horse ; for that's the more capable † creature.

Achil. My mind is troubled, like a fountain
stirr'd ;

And I myself see not the bottom of it.

[Exeunt ACHILLES and PATROCLUS.]

Ther. 'Would the fountain of your mind were clear again, that I might water an ass at it ! I had rather be a tick in a sheep, than such a valiant ignorance. [Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Troy.—A Street.

*Enter, at one side, ÆNEAS and SERVANT,
with a torch ; at the other, PARIS, DEAPHO-BUS, ANTEOR, DIOMEDES, and others, with torches.*

Par. See, ho ! who's that there ?

Dei. 'Tis the lord Æneas.

Æne. Is the prince there in person ?—

Had I so good occasion to lie long,

As you, prince Paris, nothing but heavenly business

Should rob my bed-mate of my company.

Dio. That's my mind too.—Good morrow, lord
Æneas.

Par. A valiant Greek, Æneas ; take his hand :

Witness the process of your speech, wherein
You told—how Diomed, a whole week by day,
Did haunt you in the field.

Æne. Health to you, valiant Sir,

During all question ; of the gentle truce :

But when I meet you arm'd, as black defiance

As heart can think, or courage execute.

Dio. The one and other Diomed embraces.

Our bloods are now in calm ; and, so long,
health :

But when contention and occasion meet,

By Jove, I'll play the hunter for thy life,

With all my force, pursuit, and policy.

Æne. And thou shalt hunt a lion, that will fly
With his face backward.—In humane gentle-
ness,

Welcome to Troy ! now, by Anchises' life,

Welcome indeed ! By Venus' hand I swear,

No man alive can love, in such a sort,

The thing he means to kill more excellently.

Dio. We sympathize :—Jove, let Æneas live,

If to my sword his fate be not the glory,

A thousand complete courses of the sun !

But, in mine envious honour, let him die,
With every joint a wound ; and that to-morrow !

* Lute-strings made of catgut.

† Intelligent.

* Friend.

‡ Conversation.

Æne. We know each other well.

Dio. We do; and long to know each other worse.

Par. This is the most despicable gentle greeting,
The noblest hateful love, that e'er I heard of.—
What business, lord, so early?

Æne. I was sent for to the king; but why, I know not.

Par. His purpose meets you; 'Twas to bring this Greek
To Calchas' house; and there to render him,
For the enfranchis'd Antenor, the fair Cressid:
Let's have your company; or, if you please,
Haste there before us: I constantly do think,
Or, rather, call my thought a certain knowledge,)

My brother Troilus lodges there to-night;
Rouse him, and give him note of our approach,
With the whole quality wherefore: I fear,
We shall be much unwelcome.

Æne. That I assure you;
Troilus had rather Troy were borne to Greece,
Than Cressid borne from Troy.

Par. There is no help;
The bitter disposition of the time
Will have it so. On, lord; we'll follow you.

Æne. Good morrow, all. [Exit.]

Par. And tell me, noble Diomed; 'faith, tell me true,

Even in the soul of sound good-fellowship,—
Who, in your thoughts, merits fair Helen best,
Myself, or Menelaus?

Dio. Both alike:
He merits well to have her, that doth seek her
(Not making any scruple of her soilage,
With such a hell of pain, and world of charge;
And you as well to keep her, that defend her
(Not palating the taste of her dishonour,
With such a costly loss of wealth and friends:
He, like a puling cuckold, would drink up
The lees and dregs of a flat tamed piece;
You, like a lecher, out of whorish loins
Are pleas'd to breed out your inheritors:
Both merits pois'd, each weighs nor less nor
more;

But he as he, the heavier for a whore.
Par. You are too bitter to your countrywo-
man.

Dio. She's bitter to her country: I hear me,
Paris,—

For every false drop in her bawdy veins
A Grecian's life hath sunk; for every scruple
Of her contaminated carrion weight,
A Trojan hath been slain; since she could
speak,

She hath not given so many good words breath,
As for her Greeks and Trojans suffer'd death.

Par. Fair Diomed, you do as chapmen do,
Dispraise the thing that you desire to buy:
But we in silence hold this virtue well.—
We'll not commend what we intend to sell,
Here lies our way. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—The same.—Court before the House of PANDARUS.

Enter TROILUS and CRESSIDA.

Tro. Dear, trouble not yourself the morn is cold.

Cres. Then, sweet my lord, I'll call mine uncle down;

He shall unbolt the gates.

Tro. Trouble him not;
To bed, to bed: Sleep till those pretty eyes,
And give as soft attachment to thy senses,
As infants' empty of all thought!

Cres. Good morrow then.

Tro. 'Pr'ythee now, to bed.

Cres. Are you awary of me?

Tro. O Cressida! but that the busy day,
Wak'd by the lark, hath rous'd the ribald
crows,

And dreaming night will hide our joys no longer,
I would not from thee.

Cres. Night hath been too brief.

Tro. Beshrew the witch! with venomous wights she stays,
As tediously as bell; but flies the grasps of love,
With wings more momentary-swift than thought.
You will catch cold, and curse me.

Cres. 'Pr'ythee tarry;—

You men will never tarry.—
O foolish Cressid!—I might have still held off.
And then you would have tarried. Hark! there's one up.

Pan. [Within.] What, are all the doors open
here?

Tro. It is your uncle.

Enter PANDARUS.

Cres. A pestilence on him! now will he be mocking:

I shall have such a life,—

Pan. How now, how now? how go maiden-heads?—Here, you maid! where's my cousin Cressid?

Cres. Go hang yourself, you naughty mocking uncle!

You bring me to do,* and then you flout me too.

Pan. To do what? to do what?—let her say what: what have I brought you to do?

Cres. Come, come; beshrew† your heart!
you'll ne'er be good,
Nor suffer others.

Pan. Ha, ha! Alas, poor wretch! a poor capocchia!‡—last not slept to-night? would he not, a naughty man, let it sleep? a bughat! take him! [Mocking.]

Cres. Did I not tell you?—would he were knock'd o'the head!—

Who's that at door? good uncle, go and see.—

My lord, come you again into my chamber.
You smile, and mock me, as if I meant naughtily.

Tro. Ha, ha!

Cres. Come, you are deceiv'd, I think of no such thing.— [Mocking.]

How earnestly they knock!—pray you, come in.
I would not for half Troy have you seen here.

[Exit TROILUS and CRESSIDA.]

Pan. [Going to the door.] Who's there?
what's the matter? will you beat down the door?
How now? what's the matter?

Enter ÆNEAS.

Æne. Good morrow, lord, good morrow.

Pan. Who's there? my lord Æneas? By my troth, I knew you not: what news with you so early?

Æne. Is not prince Troilus here?

Pan. Here! what should he do here?

Æne. Come, he is here, my lord, do not deny
him;

It doth import him much, to speak with me.

Pan. Is he here, say you? 'tis more than I
know.

I'll be sworn!—For my own part, I came in What should he do here? [late:]

Æne. Who!—nay, then;—

Come, come, you'll do him wrong ere you are
'ware:

You'll be so true to him, to be false to him:
Do not you know of him, yet go fetch him hither—
Go.

As PANDARUS is going out, enter TROILUS.

Tro. How now? what's the matter?

Æne. My lord, I scarce have leisure to salute you,

My matter is so rash: § There is at hand
Paris your brother, and Delphobus,
The Grecian Diomed, and our Antenor
Deliver'd to us: and for him forthwith,
Ere the first sacrifice, within this hour,

* Lead noli.

• A wanton insinuation.

† An Italian word for poor fool.

‡ Ill bodied.

§ Hasty.

We must give up to Diomedes' hand
The lady Cressida.

Tro. Is it so concluded?

Ene. By Priam, and the general state of
Troy:

They are at hand, and ready to effect it.

Tro. How my achievements mock me!

I will go meet them: and, my lord Eneas,

We met by chance; you did not find me here.

Ene. Good, good, my lord: the secrets of nature

Have not more gift in taciturnity.

[Exeunt TROILUS and ENEAS.]

Pan. Is't possible? no sooner got, but lost?
The devil take Antenor! the young prince will go mad. A plague upon Antenor, I would, they had broke's neck!

Enter CRESSIDA.

Cres. How now? What is the matter? Who was here?

Pan. Ah! ah!

Cres. Why sigh you so profoundly? where's my lord gone?

Tell me, sweet uncle, what's the matter?

Pan. 'Would I were as deep under the earth
as I am above!

Cres. O the gods!—What's the matter?

Pan. Pr'ythee, get thee in; 'Would thou had'st ne'er been born! I knew, thou would'st be his death:—O poor gentleman!—A plague upon Antenor!

Cres. Good uncle, I beseech you on my knees,
I beseech you, what's the matter?

Pan. Thou must be gone, wench, thou must be gone: thou art changed for Antenor: thou must to thy father, and begone from Troilus;
'twill be his death; 'twill be his bane; he cannot bear it.

Cres. O you immortal gods!—I will not go.

Pan. Thou must.

Cres. I will not, uncle: I have forgot my
father:

know no touch * of consanguinity;

No kin, no love, no blood, no soul so near me,
As the sweet Troilus.—O you gods divine!

Make Cressid's name the very crown of falsehood,

If ever she leave Troilus! Time, force, and death,
Do to this body what extremes you can;

But the strong base and building of my love

Is as the very centre of the earth,

Drawing all things to it.—I'll go in, and weep;—

Pan. Do, do.

Cres. Tear my bright hair, and scratch my praised cheeks,

Crack my clear voice with sobs, and break my
heart

With sounding Troilus. I will not go from Troy.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same.—Before PANDARUS'
House.

Enter PARIS, TROILUS, ENEAS, DEIPHOBUS,
ANTENOR, and DIOMEDES.

Par. It is great morning; and the hour pre-fix'd

Of her delivery to this valiant Greek

Comes fast upon:—Good my brother Troilus,

Tell you the lady what she is to do,
And haste her to the purpose.

Tro. Walk in to her house;

I'll bring her to the Grecian presently:

And to his hand when I deliver her,
Think it an altar; and thy brother Troilus

A priest, there offering to it his own heart.

[Exit.]

Par. I know what 'tis to love;
And 'would, as I shall pity, I could help!—
Please you, walk in, my lords.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—The same.—A Room in PANDARUS' House.

Enter PANDARUS and CRESSIDA.

Pan. Be moderate, be moderate.

Cres. Why tell you me of moderation?

The grief is fine, full, perfect, that I taste,

And violenteth in a sense as strong

As that which causeth it: How can I moderate

If I could temporize with my affection, [it]

Or brew it to a weak and colder palate,

The like allayment could I give my grief:

My love admits no qualifying dross;

No more my grief, in such a precious loss.

Enter TROILUS.

Pan. Here, here, here he comes.—Ah! sweet ducks!

Cres. O Troilus! Troilus!

[Embracing him.]

Pan. What a pair of spectacles is here! Let me embrace too: O heart,—as the goodly saying is,—

—O heart, O heavy heart,

Why sigh'st thou without breaking?

where he answers again,

Because thou canst not case thy smart,

By friendship, nor by speaking.

There never was a truer rhyme. Let us cast away nothing, for we may live to have need of such a verse; we see it, we see it.—How now, lambs?

Tro. Cressid, I love thee in so strain'd a purity,

That the bless'd gods—as angry with my fancy,
More bright in zeal than the devotion which Cold lips blow to their deities,—take thee from
me.

Cres. Have the gods envy?

Pan. Ay, ay, ay, ay; 'tis too plain a case.

Cres. And is it true, that I must go from

Troy?

Tro. A hateful truth.

Cres. What, and from Troilus too?

Tro. From Troy and Troilus.

Cres. Is it possible?

Tro. And suddenly; where injury of chance Puts back leave-taking, justles roughly by
All time of pause, rudely beguiles our lips
Of all rejoindure, forcibly prevents

Our lock'd embrasures, strangles our dear vows

Even in the birth of our own labouring breath:

We two, that with so many thousand sighs

Did buy each other, must poorly sell ourselves

With the rude brevity and discharge of one.

Injurious time now, with a robber's haste,

Crams his rich thievery up, he knows not how:

As many farewells as be stars in heaven,

With distinct breath and consign'd * kisses to

He fumbles up into a loose adieu; [them,

And scants us with a single famish'd kiss,

Distasted with the salt of broken tears.

Ene. [Within.] My lord! is the lady ready?

Tro. Hark! you are call'd: Some say, the Genius so

Cries, Come! to him that instantly must die.—

Bid them have patience; she shall come anon.

Pan. Where are my tears? rain, to lay this wind, or my heart will be blown up by the root!

[Exit PANDARUS.

Cres. I must then to the Greeks?

Tro. No remedy.

Cres. A woeful Cressid 'mongst the merry

When shall we see again? [Greeks!]

Tro. Hear me, my love: Be thou but true of

heart,—

Cres. I true! how now? what wicked deem'st is this?

Tro. Nay, we must use expostulation kindly,

For it is parting from us:

I speak not, be thou true, as fearing thee;

* Verse or feeling of relationship.

* Sealed.

† Interrupted.

‡ Surmise.

For I will throw my glove to death himself,
That there's no maculation* in thy heart:
But be thou true, say I, to fashion in
My sequent† protestation; be thou true,
And I will see thee.

Cres. Oh! you shall be expos'd, my lord, to dangers
As infinite as imminent I but, I'll be true.

Tro. And I'll grow friend with danger. Wear this sleeve.

Cres. And you this glove. When shall I see
you?

Tro. I will corrupt the Grecian sentinels,
To give thee nightly visitation.
But yet, be true.

Cres. O heavens!—be true again!

Tro. Hear why I speak it, love:
The Grecian youths are full of quality;‡
They're loving, well compos'd, with gifts of nature flowing,
And swelling o'er with arts and exercise;
How novelty may move, and parts with person,
Alas, a kind of godly jealousy
(Which I beseech you, call a virtuous sin,)
Makes me afraid.

Cres. O heavens! you love me not.

Tro. Die I a villain then!
In this I do not call your faith in question,
So mainly as my merit: I cannot sing,
Nor heel the high lavolt,§ nor sweeten talk,
Nor play at subtle games; fair virtues all,
To which the Grecians are most prompt and pregnant:

But I can tell, that in each grace of these
There lurks a still and dumb-discursive devil,
That tempts most cunning; but be not tempted.

Cres. Do you think I will?

Tro. No.

But something may be done, that we will not:
And sometimes we are devils to ourselves,
When we will tempt the frailty of our powers,
Presuming on their changeable potency.

Ene. [Within.] Nay, good my lord,—

Tro. Come, kiss; and let us part.

Par. [Within.] Brother Troilus!

Tro. Good brother, come you hither;
And bring Æneas and, the Grecian, with you.

Cres. My lord, will you be true?

Tro. Who, I? alas, it is my vice, my fault:
While others fish with craft for great opinion,
I with great truth catch mere simplicity;
Whilst some with cunning gild their copper crowns,

With truth and plainness I do wear mine bare.
Fear not my truth; the moral of my wit
Is—plain and true,—there's all the reach of it.

Enter ÆNEAS, PARIS, ANTEONOR, DRIPHOBUS, and DIOMEDES.

Welcome, Sir Diomed! here is the lady,
Which to Antenor we deliver you:
At the port,|| lord, I'll give her to thy hand;
And, by the way, possess ¶ thee what she is.
Entreat her fair; and, by my soul, fair Greek,
If e'er thou stand at mercy of my sword,
Name Cressid, and thy life shall be as safe
As Priam is in Ilion.

Dio. Fair lady Cressid,
So please you, save the thanks this prince expects:

The lustre in your eye, heaven in your cheek,
Pleads your fair usage; and to Diomed
You shall be mistress and command him wholly.

Tro. Grecian, thou dost not use me courteously.

To shame the zeal of my petition to thee,
In praising her: I tell thee, lord of Greece,
She is as far high-soaring o'er thy praises,
As thou unworthy to be call'd her servant.
I charge thee, use her well, even for my charge;
For by the dreadful Pluto, if thou dost not,

Though the great bulk Achilles be thy guard,
I'll cut thy throat.

Dio. Oh! he not mov'd, prince Troilus:
Let me be privileg'd by my place and message,
To be a speaker free; When I am herce,
I'll answer to my lust: * And know you, lord,
I'll nothing do on charge: To her own worth
She shall be priz'd; but that you say—be't so,
I'll speak it in my spirit and honour,—no.

Tro. Come, to the port.—I'll tell thee, Dio-med, [head-
This brave shall oft make thee to hide thy
Lady, give me your hand; and, as we walk,
To our own selves bend we our needful talk.

[Exit TROILUS, CRESSIDA, and DIOMEDES.

[Trumpet heard.

Par. Hark! Hector's trumpet.

Ene. How have we spent this morning!
The prince must think me tardy and remiss,
That swore to ride before him to the field.

Par. 'Tis Troilus' fault: Come, come, to field
with him.

Del. Let us make ready straight.

Ene. Yea, with a bridegroom's fresh alacrity,
Let us address to tend on Hector's heels:
The glory of our Troy doth this day lie,
On his fair worth and single chivalry.

[Exit.

SCENE V.—The Grecian Camp.—*Lists set
out.*

Enter AJAX, armed; AGAMEMNON, ACHILLES, PATROCLUS, MENELAUS, ULYSSES, NESTOR, and others.

Agam. Here art thou in appointment* fresh and fair.

Anticipating time with starting courage,
Give with thy trumpet a loud note to Troy,
Thou dreadful Ajax; that the appalled air
May pierce the head of the great combatant,
And hale him thither.

Ajax. Thou, trumpet, there's my purse.
Now crack thy lungs, and spit thy brazen pipe:
Blow, villain, till thy spher'd bias check
Out-swell the colic of puff'd Aquilon.
Come, stretch thy chest, and let thy eyes spout
blood;

Thou blow'st for Hector. [Trumpet sounds.

Ulyss. No trumpet answers.

Achil. 'Tis but early days.

Agam. Is not you Diomed, with Calchas' daughter?

Ulyss. 'Tis he, I ken the manner of his gait;
He rises on the toe: that spirit of his
In aspiration lifts him from the earth.

Enter DIOMEDES, with CRESSIDA.

Agam. Is this the lady Cressid?

Dio. Even she.

Agam. Most dearly welcome to the Greeks, sweet lady.

Nest. Our general doth salute you with a kiss.

Ulyss. Yet is the kindness but particular;

'Twere better she were kiss'd in general.

Nest. And very courtly counsel: I'll begin—
So much for Nestor.

Achil. I'll take that winter from your lips, fair lady:

Achilles bids you welcome.

Meno. I had good argument for kissing once.

Patr. But that's no argument for kissing now.

For thus popp'd Paris in his hardiment;

And parted thus you and your argument.

Ulyss. O deadly gall, and theme of all our scorns!

For which we lose our heads to gild his horns.

Patr. The first was Menelaus' kiss;—this

Patroclus kisses you. [Music.

Meno. Oh! this is trim!

Patr. Paris, and I, kiss evermore for him.

Meno. I'll have my kiss, Sir:—Lady, by your leave.

* Spot. † Following. ‡ Highly accomplished.
§ A dance. || Catch. ¶ Inform.

* Pleasure, will. † Preparat on.

Cres. In kissing do you render or receive?
Patr. Both take and give.
Cres. I'll make my match to live,
 The kiss you take is better than you give:
 Therefore no kiss.
Men. I'll give you boot, I'll give you three for one.
Cres. You're an odd man; give even or give
 none.
Men. An odd man, lady? every man is odd Cres. No, Paris is not; for, you know 'tis
 true,
 That you are odd, and he is even with you,
Men. You flipp me o'the head.
Cres. No, I'll be sworn.
Ulyss. It were no match, you nail against his horn.—
 May I, sweet lady, beg a kiss of you?
Cres. You may.
Ulyss. I do desire it.
Cres. Why, beg then—
Ulyss. Why then, for Venus' sake, give me
 a kiss,
 When Helen is a maid again, and his.
Cres. I am your debtor, claim it when 'tis due.
Ulyss. Never's my day, and then a kiss of
 you.
Diom. Lady, a word;—I'll bring you to your father. [DIOMEDEUS leads out CRESSIDA.]
Nest. A woman of quick sense.
Ulyss. Fie, fie upon her!
 There's language in her eye, her cheek, her lip;
 Nay, her foot speaks; her wanton spirits look
 At every joint and motive * of her body. [out
 Oh! these encounters, so glib of tongue,
 That give a coasting welcome ere it comes,
 And wide unclasp the tables of their thoughts
 To every ticklish reader! set them down
 For sluttish spoils of opportunity,
 And daughters of the game. [Trumpet within.
All. The Trojan's trumpet.
Agam. Yonder comes the troop.
Enter HECTOR, armed; ÆNEAS, TROILUS, and other Trojans, with Attendants.
Æne. Hail, all the state of Greece! what shall be done [pose,
 To him that victory commands? Or do you pursue a victor shall be known? I will you, the knights Shall to the edge of all extremity
 Pursue each other; or shall they be divided
 By any voice or order of the field?
 Hector bade ask.
Agam. Which way would Hector have it?
Æne. He cares not, he'll obey conditions.
Achil. 'Tis done like Hector; but securely
 done.
 A little proudly, and great deal misprising
 The knight oppos'd.
Æne. If not Achilles, Sir,
 What is your name?
Achil. If not Achilles, nothing.
Æne. Therefore Achilles: But, whatever, know this:—
 In the extremity of great and little,
 Valour and pride excel themselves in Hector;
 The one almost as infinite as all,
 The other blank as nothing. Weigh him well,
 And that, which looks like pride, is courtesy.
 This Ajax is half made of Hector's blood:
 In love whereof, half Hector stays at home;
 Half heart, half hand, half Hector comes to seek
 This bloodied knight, half Trojan, and half Greek.
Achil. A maiden battle then?—Oh! I perceive
 you.

Re-enter DIOMEDEUS.

Agam. Here is Sir Diomed:—Go, gentle
 knight,
 Stand by our Ajax: as you and lord Æneas
 Consent upon the order of their fight,
 So be it; either to the uttermost,

* Motion.

Or else a breath; * the combatants being kn,
 Half stints† their strife before their strokes begin.

[AJAX and HECTOR enter the lists

Ulyss. They are oppos'd already.

Agam. What Trojan is that same that looks so heavy?

Ulyss. The youngest son of Priam, a true
 knight;

Not yet mature, yet matchless; firm of word;
 speaking in deeds and deedless; in his tongue;
 Not soon provok'd, nor, being provok'd, soon
 calm'd:

His heart and hand both open, and both free;
 For what he has, he gives, what thinks, he shows;

Yet gives he not till judgment guide his bounty,
 Nor dignifies an impair'd thought with breath:
 Manly as Hector, but more dangerous;
 For Hector, in his blaze of wrath, subscribes ||
 To tender objects; but he, in heat of action,
 Is more vindictive than jealous love:
 They call him Troilus; and on him erect
 A second hope as fairly built as Hector.
 Thus says Æneas; one that knows the youth
 Even to his lances, and, with private soul,
 Did in great lion thus translate ¶ him to me.

[Alarum. HECTOR and AJAX fight.

Agam. They are in action.

Nest. Now, Ajax, hold thine own!

Tro. Hector, thou sleepest;

Awake thee!

Agam. His blows are well dispos'd:—there,
 Ajax!

Dio. You must no more. [Trumpets cease.

Æne. Princes, enough, so please you.

Ajax. I am not warm yet, let us fight again.

Dio. As Hector pleases.

Hect. Why then will I no more:—
 Thou art, great lord, my father's sister's son,
 A cousin-german to great Priam's seed;
 The obligation of our blood forbids
 A gory  emulation 'twixt us twain:
 Were they communion Greek and Trojan so,
 That thou could'st say—This hand is Grecian
And this is Trojan; the sinews of this leg, all All Greek, and thus all Troy; my mother's
blood

Runs on the dexter † check, and this sinister:—
Bounds in my father's; by Jove multipotent, Thou should'st not bear from me a Greekish
member

Wherein my sword had not impressure made
 Of our rank feud: But the just gods calmsay,
 Than any drop thou borrow'st from thy mother
 My sacred aunt, should by my mortal sword
 Be drain'd! Let me embrace thee, Ajax:
 By him that thunders, thou hast lusty arms;
 Hector would have them fall upon him thus:
 Cousin, all honour to thee!

Ajax. I thank thee, Hector:

Thou art too gentle, and too free a man;
 I came to kill thee, cousin, and bear hence
 A great addition §§ earned in thy death.

Hect. Not Neoptolemus ||| so admirable
 (On whose bright crest Fame walk her loud: † O yes!)

Cries, This is he,) could promise to himself
 A thought of added honour to him from Hector.
Æne. There is expectation here from both the
 What further you will do. [sides,

Hect. We'll answer it:

The issue is embracement:—Ajax, farewell.

Ajax. If I might in entreaties find success
 (As said ¶¶ I have the chance,) I would desire
 My famous cousin to our Grecian tents.

Dio. 'Tis Agamemnon's wish: and great
 Achilles

Doth long to see unarm'd the valiant Hector.
Hect. Æneas, call my brother Troilus to me:

* Or else merely for exercise. † Stops.
 ‡ No longer. § Unsuitable to his character.
 ¶ Yields. ¶ Explains his character.

And signify this loving interview
To the expecters of our Trojan part; [sin;
Desire them home.—Give me thy hand, my cou-
I will go eat with thee, and see your knights.
Ajax. Great Agamemnon comes to meet us
here.

Hect. The worthiest of them tell me name by
name;

But for Achilles, my own searching eyes
Shall find him by his large and portly size.

Agam. Worthy of arms! as welcome as to one
That would be rid of such an enemy;
But that's no welcome: Understand more clear,
What's past and what's to come, is stew'd with
And formless ruin of oblivion; [husks,
But in this extant moment, faith and troth,
Strain'd purely from all hollow bias-drawing,
Bids thee, with most divine integrity,
From heart of every heart, great Hector, welcome.

Hect. I thank thee, most imperious * Aga-memnon.

Agam. My well fam'd lord of Troy, no less to
you. [To TROILUS.

Men. Let me confirm my princely brother's greeting:—

You brace of warlike brothers, welcome hither.

Hect. Whom must we answer?

Men. The noble Menelaus.

Hect. O you, my lord? by Mars his gauntlet,
thanks!

Mock not, that I affect the untraded † oath;
Your quondam ‡ wife swears still by Venus'
glove:

She's well, but bade me not commend her to you.

Men. Name her not now, sir; she's a deadly theme.

Hect. Oh! pardon; I offend.

Nest. I have, thou gallant Trojan, seen thee
Labouring for destiny, make cruel war † off, Through ranks of Greekish youth: and I have seen thee,

As hot as Perseus, spur thy Phrygian steed,
Despising many fortlets and subduements,
When thou hast hung thy advanced sword
in the air,

Not letting it decline on the declin'd; ‡
That I have said to some my standards-by Lo, Jupiter is yonder, dealing life †

And I have seen thee pause, and take thy breath,
When that a ring of Greeks have hemm'd thee in,

Like an Olympian wrestling: This have I seen;
But this thy countenance, still lock'd in steel,
I never saw till now. I knew thy grandsire, ‡

And once fought with him: he was a soldier
good;

But, by great Mars, the captain of us all,
Never like thee: Let an old man embrace thee;
And, worthy warrior, welcome to our tents.

Ene. 'Tis the old Nestor.

Hect. Let me embrace thee, good old chronicle, [time:—

Thou hast so long walk'd hand in hand with Most reverend Nestor, I am glad to clasp thee.

Nest. I would my arms could match thee in contention,

As they contend with thee in courtesy.

Hect. I would they could.

Nest. Ha! [row.

By this white beard, I'd fight with thee to-morrow. Well, welcome, welcome! I have seen the
time—

Ulyss. I wonder now how yonder city stands,
When we have here her base and pillar by us.

Hect. I know your favour, lord Ulysses, well.
Ah! sir, there's many a Greek and Trojan dead,
Since first I saw yourself and Diomed in Ilion, on your Greekish embassy.

Ulyss. Sir, I foretold you then what would ensue:

My prophecy is but half his journey yet;

For yonder walls, that partly front your town,
You towers, whose wanton tops do buss the
clouds,
Must kiss their own feet.

Hect. I must not believe you:
There they stand yet; and modestly I think,
The fall of every Phrygian stone will cost
A drop of Grecian blood: The end crowns all;
And that old common arbitrator, time,
Will one day end it.

Ulyss. So to him we leave it.
Most gentle, and most valiant Hector, welcome.
After the general, I beseech you next
To feast with me, and see me at my tent.

Achil. I shall forestall thee, lord Ulysses, thou I—

Now, Hector, I have fed mine eyes on thee;
I have with exact view perus'd thee, Hector,
And quoted * joint by joint.

Hect. Is this Achilles?

Achil. I am Achilles.

Hect. Stand fair, I pray thee: let me look on
thee.

Achil. Behold thy fill.

Hect. Nay, I have done already.

Achil. Thou art too brief; I will the second
time,

As I would buy thee, view thee limb by limb.

Hect. Oh! like a book of sport thou'lt read me o'er;

But there's more in me than thou understand'st.
Why dost thou so oppress me with thine eye?

Achil. Tell me, you heavens, in which part of his body [there?

Shall I destroy him? whether there, there, or
That I may give the local wound a name;

And make distinct the very breach whereout
Hector's great spirit flew: Answer me, heavens!

Hect. It would discredit the bless'd gods, proud
man,

To answer such a question: Stand again:
Think'st thou to catch my life so pleasantly,

As to prenominate † in nice conjecture,
Where thou wilt hit me dead?

Achil. I tell thee, yea.

Hect. Wert thou an oracle to tell me so,
I'd not believe thee. Henceforth guard thee
well;

For I'll not kill thee there, nor there, nor there.
But, by the forge that studded ‡ Mars his helm,

I'll kill thee every where, yea, o'er and o'er.—
You wisest Grecians, pardon me this brag,

His insolence draws folly from my lips;
But I'll endeavour deeds to match these words,

Or may I never—

Ajax. Do not chafe thee, cousin;—
And you, Achilles, let these threats alone

Till accident or purpose bring you to't:
You may have every day enough of Hector,

If you have stomach; † the general state, I fear
Can scarce entreat you to be odd with him.

Hect. I pray you, let us see you in the field;
We have had pelling ‡ wars, since you refus'd
The Grecians' cause.

Achil. Dost thou entreat me, Hector?
To-morrow do I meet thee, tell as death;

To-night all friends.

Hect. Thy hand upon that match.

Agam. First, all you peers of Greece go to my tent;

There in the full convive † we: afterwards,
As Hector's leisure and your bounties shall

Concur together, severally entreat him.—
Beat loud the tabourines,  let the trumpets blow,

That this great soldier may his welcome know.
[Exeunt all but TROILUS and ULYSSES.

Tro. My lord Ulysses, tell me, I beseech you
In what place of the field doth Calchas keep?

Ulyss. At Menelaus' tent, most princely Troi-lus:

* Imperish. † Singular, not common. ‡ Former.
‡ Fallen. † Laomedon.

* Observed. † Feryname.
‡ Silthy, a smith's shop. † Inclination.
‡ Petty. † Feast.  Small drums.

There Diomed doth feast with him to-night;
Who neither looks upon the heaven, nor earth,
But gives all gaze and bent of amorous view
On the fair Cressida.

Tro. Shall I, sweet lord, be bound to you so much,

After we part from Agamemnon's tent,
To bring me thither?

Ulyss. You shall command me, Sir.

As gentle tell me, of what honour was
This Cressida in Troy? Had she no lover
there

That waits her absence?

Tro. O Sir, to such as boasting show their scars,

A mock is due. Will you walk on, my lord?
She was belov'd, she lov'd; she is, and doth so.
But, still, sweet love is food for fortune's tooth.

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Grecian Camp.—Before
ACHILLES' Tent.

Enter ACHILLES and PATROCLUS.

Achil. I'll heat his blood with Greekish wine
to-night,

Which with my scimitar I'll cool to-morrow.—
Patroclus, let us feast him to the height.

Patr. Here comes Thersites.

Enter THERSITES.

Achil. How now, thou core of envy?

Thou crusty batch of nature, what's the news?

Ther. Why, thou picture of what thou seem-est, and idol of idiot-worshippers, here's a letter for thee.

Achil. From whence, fragment?

Ther. Why, thou full dish of fool, from Troy.

Patr. Who keeps the tent now?

Ther. The surgeon's box, or the patient's wound.

Patr. Well said, Adversity! * and what need these tricks?

Ther. Prythee be silent, boy; I profit not by thy talk: thou art thought to be Achilles' male varlet.

Patr. Male varlet, you rogue! what's that?

Ther. Why, his masculine whore. Now the rotten diseases of the south, the guts-gripping, ruptures, catarrhs, loads o' gravel i'the back, lethargies, cold palsies, raw eyes, dirt-rotten livers, wheezing lungs, bladders full of impossurable, sciaticas, limekilns i'the palm, incurable bone-ache, and the rivelled fee-simple of the tetter; take and take again such preposterous discoveries!

Patr. Why thou damnable box of envy, thou, what meanest thou to curse thus?

Ther. Do I curse thee?

Patr. Why, no, you ruinous butt; you whore-son indistinguishable cur, no.

Ther. No! why art thou then exasperate, thou idle immaterial skein of sieve + silk, thou green saracen flap for a sore eye, thou tassel of a prodigal's purse, thou! Ah! how the poor world is pestered with such water-flies; diminutives of nature!

Patr. Out, gall!

Ther. Finch egg!

Achil. My sweet Patroclus, I am thwarted quite

From my great purpose in to-morrow's battle.

Here is a letter from queen Hecuba:

A token from her daughter, my fair love;

Both taxing me, and gaging me to keep

An oath that I have sworn. I will not break it:

Fall, Greeks; fall, fame; honour, or go, or
stay;

My major vow lies here, this I'll obey.—

* Contrariety

+ Coarse, unwrought.

Come, come, Thersites, help to trim my tent.
This night in banquetting must all be spent.
Away, Patroclus.

[Exeunt ACHILLES and PATROCLUS.]

Ther. With too much blood, and too little brain, these two may run mad; but if with too much brain, and too little blood, they do, I'll be a curer of madmen. Here's Agamemnon,— an honest fellow enough, and one that loves quails; * but he has not so much brain as ear-wax: And the goodly transformation of Jupiter
there, his brother, the bull,—the primitive statue and oblique memorial of cuckolds; + a thrifty shoeing-horn in a chain, hanging at his brother's leg,—to what form, but that he is, should wit lard with malice, and malice forced; with wit turn him to? To an ass, were nothing; he is both ox and ass: to an ox were nothing; he is both ox and ass. To be a dog, a mule, a cat, a fitchew, § a toad, a lizard, an owl, a puttock, or a herring without a row, I would not care: but to be Menelaus,—I would conspire against destiny. Ask me not what I would be, if I were not Thersites; for I care not to be the louse of a lazar, || so I were not Menelaus.—Hey-day!
spirits and fires!

Enter HECTOR, TROILUS, AJAX, AGAMEMNON, ULYSSES, NESTOR, MENELAUS, and DIOMEDES, with Lights.

Agam. We go wrong, we go wrong.

Ajax. No, yonder 'tis;

There, where we see the lights.

Hect. I trouble you.

Ajax. No, not a whit.

Ulyss. Here comes himself to guide you.

Enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Welcome, brave Hector; welcome, princes all.

Agam. So now, fair prince of Troy, I bid good
Ajax commands the guard to tend on you to-night.

Hect. Thanks, and good night to the Greeks'
general,

Men. Good night, my lord.

Hect. Good night, sweet Menelaus.

Ther. Sweet draught: ¶ Sweet, quoth 'a! sweet sink, sweet sewer.

Achil. Good night,

And welcome, both to those that go, or tarry.

Agam. Good night.

Dio. I cannot, lord; I have important business. [Hector.

The tide whereof is now.—Good night, great

Hect. Give me your hand.

Ulyss. Follow his torch, he goes

To Calchas' tent; I'll keep you company.

[Aside to TROILUS

Tro. Sweet Sir, you honour me.

Hect. And so good night.

[Exit DIOMEDES; ULYSSES and TROILUS

following.

Achil. Come, come, enter my tent.

[Exeunt ACHILLES, HECTOR, AJAX, and

NESTOR.

Ther. That same Diomed's a false-hearted rogue, a most unjust knave: I will no more trust him when he leers, than I will a serpent when he hisses: he will spend his month, and promise, like Brabler the bound; but when he performs, astronomers foretell it; it is prodigious,  there will come some change; the sun borrows of the moon, when Diomed keeps his word. I will rather leave to see Hector, than not to dog him: they say, he keeps a Trojan drab, and uses the traitor Calchas' tent: I'll after.—Nothing but lechery! all inconjunct varlets!

SCENE II.—The same.—Before CALCHAS' Tent.

Enter DIOMEDES.

Dio. What I are you up here, ho? speak.

Cal. [Within.] Who calls?

Dio. Diomed.—Calchas, I think.—Where's your laughter?

Cal. [Within.] She comes to you.

Enter TROILUS and ULYSSES, at a distance, after them THERSITES.

Ulyss. Stand where the torch may not discover us.

Enter CRESSIDA.

Tro. Cressid come forth to him!

Dio. How now, my charge?

Cres. Now, my sweet guardian!—Hark! a word with you. [Whispers.]

Tro. Yes, so familiar!

Ulyss. She will sing any man at first sight.

Ther. And any man may sing her, if he can take her cliff;* she's noted.

Dio. Will you remember?

Cres. Remember? yes.

Dio. Nay, but do then;

And let your mind be coupled with your words.

Tro. What should she remember?

Ulyss. List!

Cres. Sweet honey Greek, tempt me no more to folly.

Ther. Roguery!

Dio. Nay, then,—

Cres. I'll tell you what:

Dio. Pho! pho! come, tell a pin: You are forsworn.—

Cres. In faith, I cannot: what would you have me do?

Ther. A juggling trick, to be—secretly open.

Dio. Wh. can you swear you would bestow on me?

Cres. I pry'thee, do not hold me to mine oath;

But do me any thing but that, sweet Greek.

Dio. Good night.

Tro. Hold, patience!

Ulyss. How now, Trojan?

Cres. Diomed,—

Dio. Do, no, good night: I'll be your fool no more.

Tro. Thy better must.

Cres. Hark! one word in your ear.

Tro. O plague and madness!

Ulyss. You are mov'd, prince; let us depart, I pray you,

Lest your displeasure should enlarge itself

To wrathful terms; this place is dangerous;

The time right deadly: I beseech you, go.

Tro. Behold, I pray you!

Ulyss. Now, good my lord, go off:

You flow to great destruction; come, my lord.

Tro. I pry'thee, stay.

Ulyss. You have not patience; come.

Tro. I pray you, stay: by hell, and all hell's torments,

I will not speak a word.

Dio. And so, good night.

Cres. Nay, but you part in anger.

Tro. Doth that grieve thee?

O wither'd truth!

Ulyss. Why, how now, lord?

Tro. By Jove,

I will be patient.

Cres. Guardian!—why, Greek!

Dio. Pho, pho! adieu; you palter.†

Cres. In faith, I do not; come hither once again.

Ulyss. You shake, my lord, at something; will you go?‡

You will break out.

Tro. She strokes his cheek!

Ulyss. Come, come.

Tro. Nay, stay; by Jove, I will not speak a word:

There is between my will and all offenders
A guard of patience:—stay a little while.

Ther. How the devil luxury, with his fat rump and potatoe finger, tickles these together! Fry, leechery, fry!

Dio. But will you then?

Cres. In faith, I will, in; never trust me else.

Dio. Give me some token for the surety of it.

Cres. I'll fetch you one. [Exit.]

Ulyss. You have sworn patience.

Tro. Fear me not, my lord;

I will not be myself, nor have cognition*

Of what I feel: I am all patience.

Re-enter CRESSIDA.

Ther. Now the pledge; now, now, now!

Cres. Here, Diomed, keep this sleeve.

Tro. O beauty! where's thy faith?

Ulyss. My lord,—

Tro. I will be patient: outwardly I will.

Cres. You look upon that sleeve; Behold it well.—

He loved me—O false wench!—Giv't me again.

Dio. Who was't?

Cres. No matter, now I haven't again.

I will not meet with you to-morrow night;

I pry'thee Diomed, visit me no more.

Ther. Now she sharpens;—Well said, whet stone.

Dio. I shall have it.

Cres. What, this!

Dio. Ay, that.

Cres. Oh! all you gods!—O pretty pretty pledge!

Thy master now lies thinking in his bed

Of thee and me; and sighs and takes my glove,

And gives memorial dainty kisses to it.

As I kiss thee.—Nay, do not snatch it from me;

He that takes that, must take my heart withal.

Dio. I had your heart before, this follows it.

Tro. I did swear patience.

Cres. You shall not have it, Diomed; 'faith you shall not:

I'll give you something else,

Dio. I will have this; Whose was it?

Cres. 'Tis no matter.

Dio. Come, tell me whose it was.

Cres. 'Twas one's that loved me better than you will.

But now you have it, take it.

Dio. Whose was it?

Cres. By all Diana's waiting-women vnder,†

And by herself, I will not tell you whose.

Dio. To-morrow will I wear it on my helm;

And grieve his spirit that dares not challenge it.

Tro. Wert thou the devil, and wou'st on thy

It should be challenged. [horn.]

Cres. Well, well, 'tis done, 'tis past;—And yet it is not;

I will not keep my word.

Dio. Why then, farewell!

Thou never shalt mock Diomed again.

Cres. You shall not go:—One cannot speak a word.

But it straight starts you.

Dio. I do not like this fooling.

Ther. Nor I, by Pluto: but that that likes not you, pleases me best.

Dio. What, shall I come? the hour?

Cres. Ay, come:—O Jove!—

Do come:—I shall be plagu'd.

Dio. Farewell till then.

Cres. Good night. I pry'thee, come.—

[Exit DIOMEDES.]

Troilus, farewell! one eye yet looks on thee;

But with my heart the other eye doth see.

Ah! poor our sex! this fault in us I find,

The error of our eye directs our mind:

What error leads, must err; O then, conclude,

Minds, away'd by eyes, are full of turpitude.

[Exit CRESSIDA.]

* Key note.

† Shuffle.

* Knowledge.

† The stars.

Ther. A proof of strength she could not publish more,
Unless she said, My mind is now turn'd whore.
Ulyss. All's done, my lord.

Tro. It is.

Ulyss. Why stay we then?

Tro. To make a recordation * to my soul
Of every syllable that here was spoke.
But, if I tell how these two did co-act
Shall I not be in publishing a truth?
Sith yet there is a credence † in my heart,
And esperance § so obstinately strong,
That doth invert the attest ‖ of eyes and ears;
As if those organs had deceptions functions,
Created only to calumniate.
Was Cressid here?

Ulyss. I cannot conjure, Trojan.

Tro. She was not sure.

Ulyss. Most sure she was.

Tro. Why, my negation ¶ hath no taste of madness.

Ulyss. Nor mine, my lord: Cressid was here but now.

Tro. Let it not be believ'd for womanhood! **
Think, we had mothers; do not give advantage
To stubborn critics ††—apt, without a theme,
For depravation,—to square the general sex
By Cressid's rule: rather think this not Cressid.

Ulyss. What hath she done, prince, that can soil our mothers?

Tro. Nothing at all, unless that this were
she.

Ther. Will be swagger himself out on's own
eyes?

Tro. This she? no, this is Diomed's Cressida:
beauty gave a soul, this is not she;

If souls guide you, if vows be sanctimony,
If sanctimony be the gods' delight,

If there be rule in unity itself,
This was not she. O madness of discourse,

That cause sits up with and against itself!
Bold authority! where reason can revolt

Without petition, and loss assume all reason
Without revolt, this is, and is not, Cressid!

Within my soul there doth commence a fight
Of this strange nature, that a thing inseparate

Divides more widely than the sky and earth;
And yet the spacious breath of this division

Admits no offence for a point as subtle
As is Achæus's broken woof, to enter.

Instance, O instance! strong as Pluto's gates;
Cressid is mine, tied with the bonds of heaven:

Instance, O instance! strong as heaven itself;
The bonds of heaven are shipp'd, dissolv'd, and loos'd;

And with another knot, five-finger tied,

The fractions of her faith, oits of her love,
The fragments, scraps, the bits, and greasy reliquies

Of her o'er-eaten faith, are bound to Diomed.

Ulyss. May worthy Troilus be half attach'd
With that which here his passion doth express?

Tro. Ay, Greek; and that shall be divulged
In characters as red as Mars his heart [well]

Infam'd with Venus: never did young man fancy ††

With so eternal and so fix'd a soul.
Mark, Greek;—As much as I do Cressid love,

So much by weight hate I her Diomed:
That sleeve is mine, that I hear on his helm;

Were it a casque ‡‡ compos'd by Vulcan's skill,
My sword should bite it: not the dreadful spout,

Which shipmen do the hurricano call,
Constring'd ‖ in mass by the almighty sun,

Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's ear
In his descent, than shall my prompted sword

Falling on Diomed.

Ther. He'll tickle it for his concepy. ¶¶

Tro. O Cressid! O false Cressid! false, false, false!

Let all untruths stand by thy stained name,
And they'll seem glorious.

Ulyss. Oh! contain yourself;
Your passion draws eais lither.

Enter ÆNEAS.

Æne. I have been seeking you this hour, my
lord:

Hector, by this, is aiming him in Troy;

Ajax, your guard, stays to conduct you home.

Tro. Have with you, prince:—My courteous lord, adieu:

Farewell, revolted fair!—and, Diomed,
Stand fast, and wear a castle on thy head!

Ulyss. I'll bring you to the gates.

Tro. Accept distracted thanks.

[Exeunt TROILUS, ÆNEAS, and ULYSSES.]

Ther. 'Would I could meet that rogue Diomed!
I would croak like a raven; I would bode,
I would bode. Patroclus will give me any thing for the intelligence of this whore: the parrot will not do more for an almond, than he for a commodious drab. Lechery, lechery; still, wars and lechery; nothing else holds fashion: A burning devil take them!

[Exit]

SCENE III.—Troy.—Before PRIAM'S
Palace.

Enter HECTOR and ANDROMACHÉ.

And. When was my lord so much ungently temper'd,

To stop his ears against admonishment?

Unarm'd, unarm'd, and do not fight to-day.

Hect. You train me to offend you; get you in:

By all the everlasting gods, I'll go.

And. My dreams will, sure, prove ominous to the day.

Hect. No more I say.

Enter CASSANDRA.

Cas. Where is my brother Hector?

And. Here, sister; arm'd, and bloody in intent:

Con-sort with me in loud and dear petition,
Pursue we him on knees; for I have dream'd

Of bloody turbulence, and this whole night Hath nothing been but shapes and forms of slaughter.

Cas. Oh! it is true.

Hect. Ho! had my trumpet sound!

Cas. No notes of sally, for the heavens, sweet brother.

Hect. Begone, I say: the gods have heard me
swear.

Cas. The gods are deaf to hot and peevish *
vows;

They are polluted offerings, more abhorrd
Than spotted livers in the sacrifices.

And. Oh! be persuaded: Do not count it holy

To hunt by being just: it is as lawful,
For we would give much, to use violent thefts

And rob in the behalf of charity.

Cas. It is the purpose that makes strong the vow;

But vows, to every purpose, must not hold:
Unarm, sweet Hector.

Hect. Hold you still, I say;
Mine honour keeps the weather of my fate:

Life every man holds dear; but the dear man Holds honour far more precious-dear † than

life.—

Enter TROILUS.

How now, young man? mean'st thou to fight to-
day?

And. Cassandra, call my father to persuade.
[Exit CASSANDRA.]

Hect. No, 'faith, young Troilus; do! thy harness, youth,

I am to-day i'the vein of chivalry:

* Remembrance. † Since. ‡ Belief
§ Hope. ¶ Testimony. ¶ Denial.
 For the sake of. †† Cynics. ‡‡ Love.
§§ Helmet. || Compressed. ¶¶ Concupiscence.

* Foolish. † Valuable. ‡ Put off.

Let grow thy sinews till their knots be strong,
And tempt not yet the brushes of the war.
Unarm thee, go; and doubt thou not, brave boy,
I'll stand, to-day, for thee, and me, and Troy.
Tro. Brother, you have a vice of mercy in you,
Which better fits a lion than a man.

Hect. What vice is that, good Troilus? chide me for it.

Tro. When many times the captive Grecians fall,
Even in the fan and wind of your fair sword,
You bid them rise, and live.

Hect. Oh! 'tis fair play.

Tro. Fool's play, by heaven, Hector.

Hect. How now? how now?

Tro. For the love of all the gods,
Let's leave the hermit pity with our mother;
And when we have our armours buckled on,
The venom'd vengeance ride upon our swords;
Spur them to ruthless work, rein them from ruth.

Hect. Fie, savage, fie!

Tro. Hector, then 'tis wars.

Hect. Troilus, I would not have you fight to-day.

Tro. Who should withhold me?
Not fate, obedience, nor the hand of Mars
Beckoning with fiery truncheon my retire;
Not Priamus and Hecuba on knees,
Their eyes o'ergalled with recourse of tears;
Nor you, my brother, with your true sword drawn,
Oppos'd to hinder me, should stop my way,
But by my ruin.

Re-enter CASSANDRA, with PRIAM.

Cas. Lay hold upon him, Priam, hold him fast:

He is thy crutch; now if thou lose thy stay,
Thou on him leaning, and all Troy on thee,
Fall altogether.

Pri. Come, Hector, come, go back:
Thy wife hath dream'd; thy mother hath had visions;

Cassandra doth foresee; and I myself
Am like a prophet suddenly enapt,
To tell thee—that this day is ominous:
Therefore, come back.

Hect. Aeneas is a-field;
And I do stand engag'd to many Greeks,
Even in the faith of valour, to appear
This morning to them.

Pri. But thou shalt not go.

Hect. I must not break my faith.
You know me dutiful; therefore, dear Sir,
Let me not shame respect; but give me leave
To take that course by your consent and voice,
Which you do here forbid me, royal Priam.

Cas. O Priam, yield not to him.

And. Do not, dear father.

Hect. Andromache, I am offended with you:
Upon the love you bear me, get you in.

[Exit ANDROMACHE.]

Tro. This foolish, dreaming, superstitious girl
Makes all these bodements.

Cas. O farewell, dear Hector!

Look, now thou diest! look, how thy eye turns pale!

Look, how thy wounds do bleed at many vents!
Hark, how Troy roars! how Hecuba cries out!
How poor Andromache shrills her dolours forth!

Behold, destruction, frenzy, and amazement,
Like wild antics, one another meet,
And all cry—Hector! Hector's dead! O Hector!

Tro. Away!—Away!

Cas. Farewell.—Yet, soft:—Hector, I take my leave:
Thou dost thyself and all our Troy deceive.

[Exit.]

Hect. You are amaz'd, my liege, at her exclaim:

* Raeluf, wceful.

† Mercy.

Go in, and cheer the town: we'll forth, and fight;
Do deeds worth praise, and tell you them at
Pri. Farewell: the gods with safety stand about thee!

[Exeunt severally PRIAM and HECTOR.]

Alarums.

Tro. They are at it; hark! Proud Diomed, believe,
I come to lose my arm, or win my sleeve.

As TROILUS is going out, enter, from the other side, PANDARUS.

Pan. Do you hear, my lord? do you hear?

Tro. What now?

Pan. Here's a letter from jon' poot girl.

Tro. Let me read.

Pan. A whoreson pilsick, a whoreson rascally pilsick so troubles me, and the foolish fortune of this girl: and what one thing, what another, that I shall leave you one o'these days. And I have a rheum in mine eyes too; and such an ache in my bones, that, unless a man were curs'd, I cannot tell what to think out.—What says she there!

Tro. Words, words, mere words, no matter from the heart; [Tearing the letter.]

The effect doth operate another way.—

Go, wind, to wind, there turn and change together.—

My love with words and errors still she feeds;
But edifies another with her deeds.

[Exeunt severally.]

SCENE IV.—Between Troy and the Grecian Camp.

Alarums: Excursions. Enter THERSITES.

Ther. Now they are clapper-clawing one another; I'll go look on. This dissembling abominable varlet, Diomed, has got that same seny doing foolish young knave's sleeve of Troy there, in his helm. I would fain see them meet, that that same young Trojan ass, that loves the whore there, might send that Greekish whoremasterly villain with the sleeve, back to the dissembling luxurious diab, on a sleeveless errand. O' the other side, the policy of those crafty swearing rascals,—that stale old mouse-eaten dry cheese, Nestor: and that same dog-fox, Ulysses,—is not proved worth a blackberry:—they set me up, in policy, that mongrel cur, Ajax, against that dog of as bad a kind, Achilles; and now is the cur Ajax prouder than the cur Achilles, and will not arm to-day: whereupon the Grecians begin to proclaim barbarism, and policy grows into an ill opinion. Soft! here come sleeve, and 'tother.

Enter DIOMEDES, TROILUS following.

Tro. Fly not; for, should'st thou take the river Styx,
I would swim after.

Di. Thou dost miscal retire:
I do not fly; but advantageous care
Withdrew me from the odds of multitude:
Have at thee!

Ther. Hold thy whore, Grecian!—now for thy whore, Trojan!—now the sleeve, now the sleeve!

[Exeunt TROILUS and DIOMEDES, fighting.]

Enter HECTOR.

Hect. What art thou, Greek? art thou for Hector's match?

Art thou of blood, and honour?

Ther. No, no: I am a rascal; a scurvy railing knave; a very filthy rogue.

Hect. I do believe thee;—live. [Exit.]

Ther. God-a-mercy, that thou wilt believe me; But a plague break thy neck, for frightening me! What's become of the wenching rogues? I think they have swallowed one another: I would laugh at that miracle. Yet, in a sort, lechery eats itself. I'll seek them. [Exit.]

SCENE V.—The same.

Enter DIOMEDES and a SERVANT.

Dio. Go, go, my servant, take thou Troilus' horse;

Present the fair steed to my lady Cressid:
Fellow, commend my service to her beauty;
Tell her, I have chastis'd the amorous Trojan,
And am her knight by proof.

Serv. I go, my lord. [Exit SERVANT.]

Enter AGAMEMNON.

Agam. Renew, renew! The fierce Polydamus
Hath beat down Menon: bastard Margarelon
Hath Doreus prisoner:
And stands colossus-wise, waving his beam,*
Upon the pashe'd † corpses of the kings
Epistrophus and Cediüs: Polixenes is slain;
Amphinachus, and Thoas, deadly hurt;
Patroclus ta'en, or slain; and Palamedes
Sore hurt and bruised: the dreadful Sagittary
Appals our numbers: haste we, Diomed,
To reinforcement, or we perish all.

Enter NESTOR.

Nest. Go, bear Patroclus' body to Achilles;
And bid the snail-pac'd Ajax arm for shame.—
There is a thousand Hector's in the field:
Now here he fights on Galathea his horse,
And there lacks work; anon, he's there afoot,
And there they fly, or die, like scaled sculls;
Before the belching whale; then is he yonder,
And there the strawy Greeks, ripe for his edge,
I fall down before him, like the mower's swath:
Here, there, and every where, he leaves, and Dexterly so obeying appetite, † takes;
That what he will he does; and does so much,
That proof is call'd impossibility.

Enter ULYSSES.

I Iyss. Oh! courage, courage, princes! great Achilles

Is arming, weeping, cursing, vowing vengeance:
Patroclus' wounds have rou'd his drowsy blood,
Together with his mangled Myrmidons,
† That noseless, handless, back'd and chipp'd, come
to him.

Crying on Hector. Ajax hath lost a friend,
And loams at mouth, and he is arm'd, and at
it,

Roaring for Troilus; who hath done to-day
Mad and fantastic execution;
Engaging and redeeming of himself,
With such a careless force, and forceless care,
As if that luck, in very spite of cunning,
Hade him win all.

Enter AJAX.

Ajax. Troilus! thou coward Troilus! [Exit.

Dio. Ay, there, there.

Nest. So, so, we draw together.

Enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Where is this Hector?

Come, come, thou boy-queller, † show thy face;
Know what it is to meet Achilles angry.

Hector! where's Hector? I will none but Hector.
[Exit.]

SCENE VI.—Another part of the Field.

Enter AJAX.

Ajax. Troilus, thou coward Troilus, show thy
head!

Enter DIOMEDES.

Dio. Troilus, I say! where's Troilus?

Ajax. What would'st thou?

Dio. I would correct him.

Ajax. Were I the general thou should'st have my office, [Troilus]
Ere that correction:—Troilus, I say! what,

* Iance. † Bruised, crushed.
‡ Should of fish. § Killer.

Enter TROILUS.

Tro. O traitor Diomed!—turn thy false face,
thou traitor,
And pay thy life thou ow'st me for my horse!

Dio. Hal art thou there?

Ajax. I'll fight with him alone: stand, Diomed.

Dio. He is my prize, I will not look upon.*

Tro. Come both, you cogging † Greeks; have at you both. [Exit, fighting.]

Enter HECTOR.

Hect. Yea, Troilus? Oh! well fought my youngest brother!

Enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Now do I see thee: Hal!—Have at thee, Hector.

Hect. Pause, if thou wilt.

Achil. I do disdain thy courtesy, proud Trojan.

Be happy, that my arms are out of use:
My rest and negligence befriend thee now,
But thou anon shalt hear of me again;
Till when go seek thy fortune. [Exit.]

Hect. Fare thee well:—

I would have been much more a fresher man,
Had I expected thee.—How now, my brother?

Re-enter TROILUS.

Tro. Ajax hath ta'en Æneas; Shall it be?
No, by the flame of yonder glorious heaven,
He shall not carry ‡ him; I'll be taken too,
Or bring him off:—Fate, hear me what I say!
I reck † not though I end my life to-day. [Exit.]

Enter one in sumptuous Armour.

Hect. Stand, stand, thou Greek; thou art a goodly mark:—

No? wilt thou not?—I like thy armour well;
I'll frush ‡ it, and unlock the rivets all,
But I'll be master of it:—Wilt thou not, boast, abide?

Why, then, fly on, I'll hunt thee for thy hide.
[Exit.]

SCENE VII.—The same.

Enter ACHILLES, with Myrmidons.

Achil. Come here about me, you my Myr-midons;

Mark what I say.—Attend me where I wheel:
Strike not a stroke, but keep yourselves in
breath;

And when I have the bloody Hector found,
Empale him with your weapons round about;
In fellest manner execute † your arms.
Follow me, sirs, and my proceedings eye:
It is decreed—Hector the great must die.
[Exit.]

SCENE VIII.—The same.

Enter MENELAUS and PARIS, fighting: then THESSITES.

Ther. The cuckold, and the cuckold-maker are at it: Now, bull! now, dog! 'Loo, Paris, 'loo! now my double-benned sparrow! 'loo, Paris, 'loo! The bull has the game:—'ware horns, ho!
[Exit MENELAUS and PARIS.]

Enter MARGARELON.

Mar. Turn, slave, and fight.

Ther. What art thou?

Mar. A bastard son of Priam's.

Ther. I am a bastard too; I love bastards: I am a bastard begot, bastard instructed, bastard in mind, bastard in valour, in every thing illegitimate. One bear will not bite another, and wherefore should one bastard? Take heed, the quarrel's most ominous to us: If the son of a whore fight for a whore, he tempts judgment :

Farewell, bastard.

Mar. The devil take thee, coward !

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IX.—Another part of the field.

Enter HECTOR.

Hect. Most putrified core, so fair without,
Thy goodly armour thus hath cost thy life.
Now is my day's work done ! I'll take good breath :
Rest, sword ; thou hast thy fill of blood and
death !

[Puts off his helmet, and hangs his shield behind him.]

Enter ACHILLES and Myrmidons.

Achil. Look, Hector, how the sun begins to set ;
How ugly night comes breathing at his heels :
Even with the veil and dark'ning of the sun,
To close the day up Hector's life is done.

Hect. I am unarm'd ; forego this vantage, *
Greek.

Achil. Strike, fellows, strike ; this is the man
I seek. [HECTOR falls.]

So, thou, fall thou next ! now, Troy, sunk down ;
Here lies thy heart, thy sinews, and thy bone.—
On, Myrmidons ; and cry you all amain,
Achilles hath the mighty Hector slain.

[A Retreat sounded.]

Hark ! a retreat upon our Grecian part.

Myr. The Trojan trumpets sound the like,
my lord.

Achil. The dragon wing of night o'erspreads
the earth,

And, stickler † like, the armies separates.
My half-suppl'd sword, that frankly ‡ would have fed,

Pleas'd with this dainty hit, thus goes to bed.—
[Sheathes his sword.]

Come, tie his body to my horse's tail ;
Along the field I will the Trojan trail. [Exeunt.]

SCENE X.—The same.

*Enter AGAMEMNON, AJAX, MENELAUS, NESTOR, DIOXEDUS, and others marching.
Shouts within.*

Agam. Hark ! hark ! what shout is that !

Nest. Peace, drums.

[Within] Achilles !
Achilles ! Hector's slain ! Achilles !

Tho. The bruit † is—Hector's slain and by Achilles.

Ajax. If it be so, yet brazen let it be ;

Great Hector was as good a man as he.

Agam. March patiently along :—Let one be sent

To pray Achilles see us at our tent.—

If in his death the gods have us befriended,

Great Troy is our's, and our sharp wars are ended. [Exeunt, marching.]

SCENE XI.—Another part of the field.

Enter AENEAS and TROJANS.

Aene. Stand, ho ! yet are we masters of the field :

Never go home : here starve we out the night.

* Take not this advantage.

† An arbitrator at Athletic games.

‡ Fattening.

§ Noise, rumour.

Enter TROILUS.

Tro. Hector is slain.

All. Hector ?—The gods forbid !

Tro. He's dead ; and at the murderer's horse's tail, [field.—

In beastly sort, dragg'd through the shameful Frown on, you heavens, effect your rage with speed !

Sit, gods, upon your thrones, and smile at Troy !
I say, at once let your brief plagues be mercy,
And linger not our sure destructions on !

Aene. My lord, you do discomfort all the host.

Tro. You understand me not, that tell me so :
I do not speak of flight, of fear, of death ;

But dare all imminence, that gods and men,
Address their dangers in. Hector is gone !

Who shall tell Priam so, or Hecuba ?
Let him that will a screech-owl eye * be call'd !

Go in to Troy, and say there—Hector's dead
There is a word will Priam turn to stone ;

Make wells and Niobes of the maids and wives,
Cold statues of the youth ; and, in a word,

Scare Troy out of itself. But, march, away :
Hector is dead ; there is no more to say.

Stay yet ;—You vile abominable tents,
Thus proudly pitch'd † upon our Phrygian plains,

Let Titan rise as early as he dare,
I'll through and through you !—And thou greatsiz'd coward !

No space of earth shall sunder our two hates

I'll haunt thee like a wicked conscience still,
That mouldeth goblins with a frenzy thoughts.—

Strike a free march to Troy !—with comfort go
Hope of revenge shall hide our inward woe.

Exeunt AENEAS and TROJANS.

As TROILUS is going out, enter from the other side, PANDARUS.

Pan. But hear you, hear you !
Tro. Hence, broker lackey ! ignominy ‡ and shame

Pursue thy life, and live eye § with thy name !

Exit TROILUS.

Pan. A goodly medicine for my aching bones !—O world ! world ! world ! this is the poor agent despised ! O traitors and bawds, how earnestly are you set at work, and how ill requited ! Why should our endeavour be so loved, and the performance so loathed ? what verse for it ? what instance for it ?—Let me

see :—

Full merrily the humble-bee doth sing,
Till he hath lost his honey and his sting :

And being once subdued in armed tail,
Sweet honey and sweet notes together fail.—

Good traders in the flesh, set this in your painted cloths. ¶

As many as be here of Pandar's hall,
Your eyes, half out, weep out at Pandar's fall :

Or, if you cannot weep, yet give some groans,
Though not for me, yet for your aching bones.

Brethren and sisters of the hold-door trade,
Some two months hence my will shall here be
made ;

It should be now, but that my fear is this,—
Some galled goose of Winchester would hiss :

Till then I'll sweat, and seek about for cases ;
And, at that time, bequeath you my diseases.

TIMON OF ATHENS.

LITERARY AND HISTORICAL NOTICE.

THIS play, which contains many perplexed, obscure, and corrupt passages, was written about the year 1610, and was probably suggested by a passage in Plutarch's Life of Antony, wherein the latter professes to imitate the conduct of Timon, by retiring to the woods, and inveighing against the ingratitude of his friends. The finding of hidden gold, (see Act IV.) was an incident borrowed from a MS. play, apparently transcribed about the year 1600, and at one time in the possession of Mr. Strutt the antiquary. A building yet remains near Athens, called Timon's Tower. Phrynia, one of the courtezans whom Timon reviles so outrageously, was that exquisitely beautiful Phryne, who, when the Athenian Judges were about to condemn her for enormous offences, by the sight of her bosom disarmed the court of its severity, and secured her life from the sentence of the law. Alcibiades, known as a hero who, to the principles of a debauchee added the sagacity of a statesman, the intrepidity of a general, and the humanity of a philosopher, is reduced to comparative insignificance in the present production. His relative merits, as to action and construction, are succinctly pointed out by Johnson. He describes it as "a domestic tragedy, which strongly fastens on the attention of the reader. In the plan, there is not much art, but the incidents are natural, and the characters various and exact. The catastrophe affords a very powerful warning against the ostentatious liberality, which scatters bounty, but confers no benefits, and buys flattery but not friendship."

ACT I

SCENE I.—Athens.—A Hall in TIMON'S House.

Enter POET, PAINTER, JEWELLER, MERCHANT, and others, at several Doors.

POET. Good day, Sir.

PAIN. I am glad you are well.

POET. I have not seen you long. How goes the world?

PAIN. It wears, Sir, as it grows.

POET. Ay, that's well known:

But what particular rarity? what strange, Which manifold record not matches? See, Magic of bounty! all these spirits thy power Hath conjur'd to attend. I know the merchant.

PAIN. I know them both; 't'other's a jeweller.

MER. Oh! 'tis a worthy lord.

JEW. Nay, that's most fix'd.

MER. A most incomparable man; breath'd, as it were,

To an untrifling and continue goodness.

He passes.

JEW. I have a jewel here.

* Joured.

† Goes beyond common bounds.

MER. O pray let's see't: For the lord Timon, Sir?

JEW. If he would touch the estimate: But, for that—

POET. When we for recompense have prais'd the vile,

It stains the glory in that happy verse Which aptly sings the good.

MER. 'Tis a good form.

JEW. And rich: here is a water, look you.

PAIN. You are rapt, Sir, in some work, some dedication

To the great lord.

POET. A thing slipp'd idly from me.

Our poesy is as a gum, which oozes From whence 'tis nourished: The fire i'th flint Shows not, till it be struck; our gentle flame Provokes itself, and, like the current, flies Each bound it chafes. What have you there?

PAIN. A picture, Sir.—And when comes your book forth?

POET. Upon the heels of my presentment * Sir. Let's see your piece.

PAIN. 'Tis a good piece. [Int.

POET. So 'tis: this comes off well and excel-

* As soon as my book has been presented to Timon.

K

Pain. Indifferent.

Poet. Admirable: How this grace
Speaks his own standing! What a mental power
This eye shoots forth! how big imagination
Moves in this lip! to the dumbness of the gesture
One might interpret.

Pain. It is a pretty mocking of the life.
Here is a touch; let's good!

Poet. I'll say of it,
It tutors nature: artificial strife
Lives in these touches, livelier than life.

Enter certain SENATORS, and pass over.

Pain. How this lord's follow'd!

Poet. The senators of Athens:—Happy men!

Pain. Look, more!

Poet. You see this confluence, this great flood of visitors.

I have, in this rough work, shap'd out a man,
Whom this beneath world doth embrace and hug

With amplest entertainment: My free drift
Hails not particularly; but moves itself
In a wide sea of wax; no level'd malice
Infects one common in the course I hold;
But flies an eagle flight, hold, and forth on,
Leaving no tract behind.

Pain. How shall I understand you?

Poet. I'll unbolt to you.

You see how all conditions, how all minds,
(As well of glib and slippery creatures, as Of grave and austere quality,) tender down
Their services to lord Timon: his large fortune,
Upon his good and gracious nature hanging,
Subdues and properties to his love and tend-ance

All sorts of hearts; yea, foom the glass-fac'd
flatterer;

To Apemantus, that few things loves better
Than to abhor himself: even he drops down
The knee before him, and returns in peace
Most rich in Timon's nod.

Pain. I saw them speak together.

Poet. Sir, I have upon a high and pleasant hill,

Feign'd Fortune to be thron'd: The base o'the
mount

Is rank'd with all deserts, all kind of natures,
That labour on the bosom of this sphere:

To propagate their states; amongst them all,
Whose eyes are on this sovereign lady fix'd,
One do I personate of lord Timon's frame, Whom Fortune with her ivory hand wants to
her;

Whose present grace to present slaves and servants translates his rivals.

Pain. 'Tis conceiv'd to scope. [thinks,
This throne, this Fortune, and this hill, me-
With one man beckon'd from the rest below,
Bowling his head against the steepy mount
To climb his happiness would be well express'd
In our condition.

Poet. Nay, Sir, but hear me on:
All those which were his fellows but of late,
(Some better than his value,) on the moment
Follow his strides, his lobbies fill with tendance
Rain sacrificial whisperings in his ear,
Make sacred even his sturup, and through him
Drink the free air.

Pain. Ay, marry, what of these?

Poet. When Fortune in her shift and change of mood,
Spurns down her late below'd, all his depend-
Which labour'd after him to the mountain's top,
Even on their knees and hands, let him slip
down,

Not one accompanying his declining foot.

Pain. 'Tis common:
A thousand moral paintings I can show

* The contest of art with nature.

† My poem does not allude to any particular character.
‡ Explain. § Shewing, as a glass does by reflection, the looks of his patron. ¶ To advance their conditions of life. †† Whispers of officious servility.

That shall demonstrate these quick blows of fortune
More pregnantly than words. Yet you do well,
To show lord Timon, that mean eyes have
The foot above the head [seen]

Trumpets sound. Enter TIMON, attended; the SERVANT of VENTIDIUS talking with him.

Tim. Imprison'd is he, say you?

Ven. Ser. Ay, my good lord: five talents is his debt;

His means most short, his creditors most strait:
Your honourable letter he desires [him,
To those have shut him up; which failing to Periods his comfort.

Tim. Noble Ventidius! Well;
I am not of that feather to shake off [him
My friend when he must need me. I do know
A gentleman that well deserves a help,
Which he shall have: I'll pay the debt, and free
him.

Ven. Ser. Your lordship ever binds him.

Tim. Commend me to him: I will send his ransom;

And, being enfranchis'd, bid him to come to
me:—

'Tis not enough to help the feeble up,
But to support him after.—Fare you well.

Ven. Ser. All happiness to your honour! [Exit.

Enter an old ATHENIAN.

Old Ath. Lord Timon, hear me speak.

Tim. Freely, good father.

Old Ath. Thou hast a servant nam'd Lucilius.

Tim. I have so: What of him?

Old Ath. Most noble Timon, call the man before thee.

Tim. Attends he here, or no?—Lucilius!

Enter LUCILIUS.

Luc. Here, at your lordship's service.

Old Ath. This fellow here, lord Timon, this thy creature,

By night frequents my house. I am a man
That from my first have been inclin'd to thrift,
And my estate deserves an heir more rais'd,
Than one which holds a trencher

Tim. Well; what further?

Old Ath. One only daughter have I, no kin
else,

On whom I may confer what I have got:
The maid is fair, o'the youngest for a bride,
And I have bred her at my dearest cost,
In qualities of the best. This man of thine
Attempts her love: I pray thee, noble lord,
Join with me to forbid him her resort;
Myself have spoke in vain.

Tim. The man is honest.

Old Ath. Therefore he will be, Timon:
His honesty rewards him in itself,
It must not bear my daughter.

Tim. Does she love him?

Old Ath. She is young, and apt:
Our own precedent passions do instruct us
What levity's in youth.

Tim. [To LUCILIUS.] Love you the maid?

Luc. Ay, my good lord, and she accepts of it.

Old Ath. If in her marriage my consent be missing,

I call the gods to witness, I will choose
Mine heir from forth the beggars of the world,
And dispossess her all.

Tim. How shall she be endow'd,

If she be mated with an equal husband?

Old Ath. Three talents, on the present; in future, all.

Tim. This gentleman of mine hath serv'd me
long:

To build his fortune, I will strain a little
For 'tis a bold in men. Give him thy daughter!

* Inferior spectators.

What you bestow, in him I'll counterpoise,
And make him weigh with her.

Old Ath. Most noble lord,
Pawn me to this your honour, she is his.

Tim. My hand to thee; mine honour on my promise.

Luc. Humbly I thank your lordship: Never may

That state or fortune fall into my keeping,
Which is not owd' to you!

[Exeunt LUCIUS and old ATHENIAN.]

Poet. Vouchsafe my labour, and long live your lordship!

Tim. I thank you; you shall hear from me anon:

Go not away.—What have you there, my friend?

Pain. A piece of painting, which I do beseech

Tim. Painting is welcome.

The painting is almost the natural man;
For since dishonour traffics with man's nature,
He is but outside: These pencil'd figures are Even such as they give out.* I like your work;

And you shall find, I like it: wait attendance

Till you hear further from me.

Pain. The gods preserve you!

Tim. Well fare you, gentlemen: Give me your hand;

We must needs come together.—Sir, your jewel
Hath suffer'd under praise.

Jew. What, my lord? dispraise?

Tim. A mere satiety of commendations.

If I should pay you for't as 'tis extoll'd,
It would unweild me quite.

Jew. My lord, 'tis rated [know,
As those, which sell, would give: But you well

Things of like value, differing in the owners,
Are prized by their masters: believe't, dear lord,
You mend the jewel by wearing it.

Tim. Well mock'd.

Mer. No, my good lord; he speaks the common tongue,

Which all men speak with him.

Tim. Look, who comes here. Will you be coid?

Enter APEMANTUS.

Jen. We will hear with your lordship.

Mis. He'll spare none.

Tim. Good morrow to thee, gentle Apemantus!

Apem. Till I be gentle, stay for thy good morrow; [honest.

When thou art Timon's dog, and these knaves
Tim. Why dost thou call them knaves? thou know'st them not.

Apem. Are they not Athenians?

Tim. Yes.

Apem. Then I repent not.

Jen. You know me, Apemantus.

Apem. Thou know'st I do; I call'd thee by thy name.

Tim. Thou art proud, Apemantus.

Apem. Of nothing so much, as that I am not like Timon.

Tim. Whither art going?

Apem. To knock out an honest Athenian's brains.

Tim. That's a deed thou'lt die for.

Apem. Right, if doing nothing be death by the law.

Tim. How likest thou this picture, Apemantus?

Apem. The best, for the innocence.

Tim. Wrought he not well, that painted it?

Apem. He wrought better, that made the painter; and yet he's but a filthy piece of work.

Pain. You are a dog.

Apem. Thy mother's of my generation: What's she if I be a dog?

Tim. Wilt dine with me, Apemantus?

Apem. No; I eat not lords.

* What they profess to be.

† Draw out the whole mass of my fortunes.

Tim. An thou should'st, thou'dst anger ladies.

Apem. Oh! they eat lords; so they come by great bellies.

Tim. That's a lascivious apprehension.

Apem. So thou apprehend'st it: Take it for thy labour.

Tim. How dost thou like this jewel, Apemantus?

Apem. Not so well as plain-dealing,* which will not cost a man a doit.

Tim. What dost thou think 'tis worth?

Apem. Not worth my thinking.—How now, poet?

Poet. How now, philosopher?

Apem. Thou liest.

Poet. Art not one?

Apem. Yes.

Poet. Then I lie not.

Apem. Art not a poet?

Poet. Yes.

Apem. Then thou liest: look in thy last work, where thou hast feign'd him a worthy fellow.

Poet. That's not feign'd, he is so.

Apem. Yes, he is worthy of thee, and to pay thee for thy labour: He that loves to be flattered, is worthy o'the flatterer. Heavens, that I were a lord!

Tim. What would'st do then, Apemantus?

Apem. Even as Apemantus does now, hate a lord with my heart.

Tim. What, thyself?

Apem. Ay.

Tim. Wherefore?

Apem. That I had no angry wit to be a lord.—Art not thou a merchant?

Mer. Ay, Apemantus.

Apem. I traffic confound thee, if the gods will not!

Mer. If traffic do it, the gods do it.

Apem. Traffic's thy god, and thy god confound thee!

Trumpets sound. Enter a SERVANT.

Tim. What trumpet's that?

Serv. 'Tis Alcibiades, and

Some twenty horse, all of companionship.

Tim. Pray, entertain them; give them guide to us.—[Exeunt some Attendants.]

You must needs dine with me!—Go not you hence, [done,

Till I have thank'd you; and, when dinner's show me this piece!—I am joyful of your sights.—

Enter ALCIBIADES, with his Company.

Most welcome, Sir! [They salute.]

Apem. So, so; there!—

Aches contract and starve your supple joints!—That there should be small love 'mongst these sweet knaves, [out

And all this court'sy! The strain of man's bred into baboon and monkey.†

Alcib. Sir, you have sav'd my longing, and I Most hungrily on your sight. [feed

Tim. Right welcome, Sir:

Ere we depart, we'll share a bounteous time in different pleasures. Pray you, let us in.

[Exeunt all but APEMANTUS.]

Enter two LOVES.

1 Lord. What time a day is't, Apemantus?

Apem. Time to be honest.

1 Lord. That time serves still.

Apem. The most accursed thou, that still omit'st it.

2 Lord. Thou art going to lord Timon's feast.

Apem. Ay; to see meat fill knaves, and wine heat fools.

2 Lord. Fare thee well, fare thee well.

* Alluding to the proverb: plain-dealing is a jewel, but they who use it beggars.

† His language degenerated into a monkey.

Apem. Thou art a fool, to bid me farewell twice.

2 Lord. Why, Apemantus?

Apem. Shouldst have kept one to thyself, for I mean to give thee none.

1 Lord. Hang thyself.

Apem. No, I will do nothing at thy bidding: make thy requests to thy friend.

2 Lord. Away, unpeaceable dog, or I'll spurn thee hence.

Apem. I will fly, like a dog, the heels of the ass. [Exit.]

1 Lord. He's opposite to humanity. Come, shall we in,
And taste lord Timon's bounty? he outgoes
The very heart of kindness.

2 Lord. He pours it out: Plutus, the god of gold,

Is but his steward: no meed* but he repays
Sevenfold above itself: no gift to him,
But breeds the giver a return exceeding
All use of quittance.†

1 Lord. The noblest mind he carries
That ever govern'd man.

2 Lord. Long may he live in fortunes! Shall we in?

1 Lord. I'll keep you company. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same.—A Room of State in Timon's House.

Hautboys playing loud music. A great banquet served in, FLAVIUS and others attending; then enter TIMON, ALCEBIADES, LUCIUS, LUCULLUS, SEMPRONIUS, and other Athenian Senators, with VENTIDIUS, and Attendants. Then comes, dropping after all, APEMANTUS, discontentedly.

Fen. Most honour'd Timon, 't hath pleas'd the gods remember

My father's age, and call him to long peace.
He is gone happy, and has left me rich;
Then, as in grateful virtue I am bound
To you free heart, I do return those talents, Doubled, with thanks and service, from whose
help

I deriv'd liberty.

Tim. Oh! by no means,
Honest Ventidius: you mistake my love;
I gave it freely ever; and there's none
Can truly say he gives, if he receives:
It our betters play at that game, we must not date

To imitate them: Faults that are rich, are fair.

Fen. A noble spirit.

[They all stand ceremoniously looking on TIMON.]

Tim. Nay, my lords, ceremony
Was but devis'd at first, to set a gloss
On faint deeds, hollow welcomes,
Recanting goodness, sorry ere 'tis shown;
But where there is true friendship, there needs

none.
Pray, sit; more welcome are ye to my fortunes,
Than my fortunes to me.

[They sit.]
1 Lord. My lord, we always have confess'd it.

Apem. Oh, ho, confess'd it? hang'd it, have you not?

Tim. O Apemantus!—you are welcome.

Apem. No.

You shall not make me welcome:
I come to have thee thrust me out of doors.

Tim. Fie, thou art a churl; you have got a humour there

Does not become a man, 'tis much to blame:
Thy say, my lords, that ira furor brevis est,
But void! man's ever angry.

Go, let him have a table by himself;
For he does neither affect company,
Nor is he fit for it, indeed.

Apem. Let me stay at thine own peril, Timon!

I come to observe; I give thee warning on't.

Tim. I take no heed of thee; thou art an Athenian; therefore welcome: I myself would have no power: prythee, let my meat make thee silent.

Apem. I scorn thy meat; 'twould choke me for I should Ne'er flatter thee.—O you gods! what a number

Of men eat Timon, and he sees them not!
It grieves me, to see so many dip their meat
In one man's blood; and all the madness is,
He cheers them up too.*

I wonder men dare trust themselves with men:
Methinks they should invite them without knives;
Good for their meat, and safer for their lives.
There's much example for't: the fellow that Sits next him now, parts bread with him, and pledges

The breath of him in a divided draught,
Is the readiest man to kill him: it has been
If I prov'd.

Were a huge man, I should fear to drink at meals;

Lest they should spy my windpipe's dangerous
notes;
Great men should drink with harness† on their throats.

Tim. My lord, in heart; and let the health go round.

2 Lord. Let it flow this way, my good lord.

Apem. Flow this way! [Timon]
A brave fellow!—he keeps his tides well. Tim.
Those healths will make thee and thy state look ill.

Here's that which is too weak to be a sinuer,
Honest water, which ne'er left man i'th' mire;
This and my food, are equals: there's no odds.
Feasts are too proud to give thanks to the gods.

APEMANTUS' GRACE.

*Immortal gods, I crave no self;
I pray for no man, but myself:
Grant I may never prove so fond, §
To trust man on his oath or bond;
Or a harlot, for her weeping;
Or a dog, that seems a sleeping;
Or a keeper with my freedom;
Or my friends, if I should need 'em.
Amen. So fall't:
Rich men sin, and I eat root.*

[Eats and drinks.]

Much good dich thy good heart, Apemantus!

Tim. Captain Alcibiades, your heart's in the field now.

Alcb. My heart is ever at your service, my
lord.

Tim. You had rather be at a breakfast of euc mies, than a dinner of friends.

Alcb. So they were bleeding new, my lord, there's no meat like them: I could wish my best friend at such a feast.

Apem. 'Would all those flatterers were thine enemies then; that then thou might'st kill 'em, and bid me to 'em.

1 Lord. Might we but have that happiness, my lord, that you would once use our hearts, whereby we might express some part of our zeals, we should think ourselves for ever perfect.¶

Tim. O no doubt, my good friends, but the gods themselves have provided that I shall have much help from you: How had you been my friends else? why have you that charitable ¶ title from thousands, did you not chiefly belong to my heart? I have told more of you to myself, than you can with modesty speak in your own behalf;
and thus far I continue you. O you gods, think

I, what need we have any friends, if we should never have need of them? they were the most needless creatures living, should we ne'er have use for them; and would most resemble sweet instruments hung up in cases, that keep their sounds to themselves. Why, I have often wish'd myself poorer, that I might come nearer to you. We are born to do benefits; and what better or properer can we call our own, than the riches of our friends? Oh! what a precious comfort 'tis, to have so many, like brothers, commanding one another's fortunes! O joy, e'en made away ere it can be born! Mine eyes cannot hold out water, methinks: to forget their faults, I drink to you.

Apem. Thou weep'st to make them drink, Timon.

2 Lord. Joy had the like conception in our eyes, And, at that instant, like a babe sprung up.

Apem. Ho! ho! I laugh to think that babe a bastard.

3 Lord. I promise you, my lord, you mov'd me much.

Apem. Much! [Tucket sounded.]
Tim. What means that trumpet?—How now?

Enter a SERVANT.

Serr. Please you, my lord, there are certain ladies most desirous of admittance.

Tim. Ladies? what are their wills?

Serr. There comes with them a forerunner, my lord, which bears that office, to signify their pleasures.

Tim. I pray, let them be admitted.

Enter CUPID.

Cup. Hail to thee, worthy Timon;—and to all

That of his bounties taste!—The five best senses Acknowledge thee their patron; and come freely

To gratulate this piteous bosom: The ear, Taste touch, smell, all pleas'd from thy table rise;

They only now come but to feast thine eyes.

Tim. They are welcome all, let them have kind admittance.

Music, make their welcome. [Exit CUPID.]

1 Lord. You see, my lord, how ample you are belov'd.

Music.—Re-enter CUPID, with a masque of LADIES as Amazons, with lutes in their hands, dancing, and playing.

Apem. Hey day, what a sweep of vanity comes this way!

They dance! they are mad women.

Like madness is the glory of this life,

As this pomp shows to a little oil, and root.

We make ourselves fools, to sport ourselves;

And spend our flatteries, to drink those men,

Upon whose age we void it up again,

With poisonous spite and envy. Who lives,

that's not

Depraved, or depraves? who dies, that bears

Not one spurn to their graves of their friends' gift?

I should fear, those that dance before me now,

Would one day stamp upon me. It has been

done;

Men shut their doors against a setting sun.

The LORDS rise from table, with much adoring of TIMON; and, to shew their loves, each singles out an Amazon, and all dance, men with women, a lofty strain or two to the hautboys, and cease.

Tim. You have done our pleasures much grace, fair ladies,

Set a fair fashion on our entertainment,

Which was not half so beautiful and kind;

You have added worth unto't, and lively lustre,

And entertain'd me with mine own device;

I am to thank you for it.

1 Lady. My lord, you take us even at the best.

Apem. Faith, for the worst is filthy; and would not hold taking, I doubt me.

Tim. Ladies, there is an idle banquet Attends you: Please you to dispose yourselves.

All Lad. Most thankfully, my lord. [Exeunt CUPID, and LADIES.]

Tim. Flavius,—

Flav. My lord.

Tim. The little casket bring me hither.

Flav. Yes, my lord.—More jewels yet!

There is no crossing him in his humour;

Else I should tell him,—Well,—i'faith, I should

When all's spent, he'd be cross'd* then, as he could.

'Tis pity, bounty had not eyes behind;†

That man might ne'er be wretched for his mind.‡

[Exit, and returns with the casket.]

1 Lord. Where be our men?

Serr. Here, my lord, in readiness.

2 Lord. Our horses.

Tim. O my friends, I have one word

To say to you:—Look you, my good lord, I must

Entreat you, honour me so much, as to Advance this jewel;

Accept and wear it, kind my lord.

1 Lord. I am so far already in your gifts,—

All. So are we all.

Enter a SERVANT.

Serr. My lord, there are certain nobles of the senate

Newly alighted, and come to visit you.

Tim. They are fairly welcome.

Flav. I beseech your honour,

Vouchsafe me a word; it does concern you near.

Tim. Near? why then another time I'll hear

I pray thee, let us be provided [thee:]

To shew them entertainment.

Flav. I scarce know how. [Aside.]

Enter Another SERVANT.

2 Serr. May it please your honour, the lord Lucius,

Out of his free love, hath presented to you

Four milk-white horses, trapp'd in silver.

Tim. I shall accept them fairly: let the presents

Enter a third SERVANT.

Be worthily entertain'd.—How now, what news?

3 Serr. Please you, my lord, that honourable gentleman, Lord Lucullus, entreats your company to-morrow to hunt with him; and has sent your honour two brace of greyhounds.

Tim. I'll hunt with him; And let them be

receiv'd,

Not without fair reward.

Flav. [Aside.] What will this come to?

He commands us to provide, and give great gifts,

And all out of an empty coffer.—

Nor will he know his purse; or yield me this,

To shew him what a beggar his heart is,

Being of no power to make his wishes good;

His promiser fly so beyond his state,

That what he speaks is all in debt, he owes

For every word; he is so kind, that he now

Pays interest for't; his land's put to their books.

Well 'would I were gently put out of office,

Before I were forc'd out!

Happier is he that has no friend to feed,

Than such as do even enemies exceed.

I bleed inwardly for my lord. [Exit.]

Tim. You do yourselves

Much wrong, you bate too much of your own merits:—

Here, my lord, a trifle of our love.

* A play on the word cross: from the piece of money called a cross. † To see the miseries that will follow. ‡ For his generosity of mind.

2 Lord. With more than common thanks I will receive it.

3 Lord. Oh! he is the very soul of bounty!

Tim. And now I remember me, my lord, you gave

Good words the other day of a bay courser I rode on: it is yours, because you lik'd it.

2 Lord. I beseech you, pardon me, my lord, in that.

Tim. You may take my word, my lord; I know, no man

Can justly praise but what he does affect:

I weigh my friend's affection with mine own;

I'll tell you true. I'll call on you.

All Lords. None so welcome.

Tim. I take all and your several visitations

No kind to heart, 'tis not enough to give;

Methinks, I could dead kingdoms to my friends,

And ne'er be weary.—Alcibiades,

Thou art a soldier, therefore seldom rich,

It comes in charity to thee: for all thy living

Is 'mongst the dead; and all the lands thou hast

Lie in a pitch'd field.

Alcib. Ay, dedded land, my lord.

1 Lord. We are so virtuously bound,—

Tim. And so

Am I to you.

2 Lord. So infinitely endear'd,—

Tim. All to you.—Lights, more lights.

1 Lord. The best of happiness,

Honour, and fortunes, keep with you, lord

Timon!

Tim. Ready for his friends.

[Exeunt ALCIBIADES, LORDS, &c.]

Apem. What a coil's here!

Serving of becks,† and jutting out of hums!

I doubt whether their less be worth the sums

That are given for 'em. Friendship's full of dress: [legs]

Methinks, false hearts should never have sound

Thus honest fools lay out their wealth on court'sies.

Tim. Now Apemantus! if thou wert not sullen,

I'd be good to thee.

If I should be brib'd too, there would be none

To rail upon thee: and then thou wouldest sin

the faster.

Thou giv'st so long, Timon, I fear me, thou

Wilt give away thyself in paper: shortly;

What need these feasts, pomps, and vain glories?

Tim. Nay,

An you begin to rail on society once,

I am sworn, not to give regard to you.

Farewell: and come with better music. [Exit.]

Apem. So:—

Thou'lt not hear me now,—thou shalt not then,

I'll lock

Thy heaven's from thee. Oh! that men's ears

should be

To counsel deaf, but not to flattery! [Exit.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The same.—A Room in a SENATOR'S House.

Enter a SENATOR, with papers in his hand.

Sen. And late, five thousand to Varro; and to Isidore

He owes nine thousand; besides my former sum,

Which makes it five and twenty.—Still in motion

Of raging waste! It cannot hold; it will not.

If I want gold, steal but a beggar's dog,

And give it Timon, why, the dog coins gold:

If I would sell my horse, and buy twenty more

Better than he, why, give my horse to Timon,

Ask nothing, give it him, it foals me, straight,

And able horses: No porter at his gate;

But rather one that smiles, and still invites

All that pass by. It cannot hold; no reason
Can found his state in safety. * Caphis, ho!
Caphis, I say!

Enter CAPHIS.

Caph. Here, Sir: What is your pleasure?

Sen. Get on your cloak, and haste you to lord Timon;

Importune him for my monies; he not cras'd†

With slight denial; nor then silenc'd, when—

Commend me to your master—and the cap

Plays in the right hand, thus:—but tell him,

Sirrah,

My uses cry to me, I must serve my turn

Out of mine own; his days and times are past,

And my reliances on his tractated dates

Have smit my credit: I love and honour him;

But must not break my back, to heal his finger:

Immediate are my needs; and my relief

Must not be toss'd and turn'd to me in words,

But find supply immediate. Get you gone:

Put on a most importunate aspect,

A visage of demand; for I do fear,

When every feather sticks in his own wing,

Lord Timon will be left a naked gull,

Which flashes now a phoenix. Get you gone.

Caph. I go, Sir.

Sen. I go, Sir!—take the bonds along with you

And have the dates in compt.

Caph. I will, Sir.

Sen. Go.

[Exeunt]

SCENE II.—The same.—A Hall in TIMON'S House.

Enter FLAVIUS, with many bills in his hand.

Flav. No care, no stop! so senseless of expende,

That he will neither know how to maintain it,

Nor cease his flow of riot: Takes no account

How things go from him; nor resumes no care

Of what is to continue, Never mind

Was to be so unwise, to be so kind.

What shall be done? He will not hear, till feel

I must be round with him now he comes from hunting.

Fie, fie, fie, he!

Enter CAPHIS, and the SERVANTS of ISIDORE and VARRO.

Caph. Good even, Varro: What,

You come for money?

Var. Serv. Is't not your business too?

Caph. It is.—And yours too, Isidore?

Isid. Serv. It is so.

Caph. 'Would we were all discharg'd!

Var. Serv. I fear it.

Caph. Here comes the lord.

Enter TIMON, ALCIBIADES, and LORDS, &c.

Tim. So soon as dinner's done, we'll forth

again,

My Alcibiades.—With me? What's your will?

Caph. My lord, here is a note of certain dues.

Tim. Dues? Whence are you?

Caph. Of Athens here, my lord.

Tim. Go to my steward.

Caph. Please it your lordship, he hath put me off

To the succession of new days this month:

My master is awak'd by great occasion,

To call upon his own; and humbly prays you,

That with your other noble parts you'll suit,

In giving him his right.

Tim. Mine honest friend,

I pry'thee, but repair to me next morning.

Caph. Nay, good my lord,—

Tim. Contain thyself, good friend.

Var. Serv. One Varro's servant, my good

lord,—

Isid. Serv. From Isidore;

He humbly prays your speedy payment,—

* All happiness to you
† In bonds. † Offering salutations
‡ L. c. good advice.

* By no argument can be proved in a solvent state.
† Repulsed.

Caph. If you did know, my lord, my master's wants,—

Var. Serv. 'Twas due on forfeiture, my lord, six weeks,

And past,—

Isid. Serv. Your steward puts me off, my lord;

And I am sent expressly to your lordship.

Tim. Give me breath:—

I do beseech you, good my lords, keep on;

[Exit ALCIBIADES and LORDS.]

I'll wait upon you instantly.—Come hither, pray you.

[To FLAVIUS.]

How goes the world, that I am thus encounter'd
With clamorous demands of date-broke bonds,
And the detention of long-since-due debts,
Against my honour?

Flav. Please you, gentlemen,
The time is unagreeable to this business:
Your importunity cease, till after dinner;
That I may make his lordship understand
Wherefore you are not paid.

Tim. Do so, my friends:

See them well entertain'd. [Exit TIMON.]

Flav. I pray, draw near.

[Exit FLAVIUS.]

Enter APEMANTUS and a FOOL.

Caph. Stay, stay, here comes the fool with Apemantus; let's have some sport with 'em.

Var. Serv. Hang him, he'll abuse us.

Isid. Serv. A plague upon him, dog!

Var. Serv. How dost, fool?

Apem. Dost dialogue with thy shadow?

Var. Serv. I speak not to thee.

Apem. No; 'tis to thyself,—Come away

[To the FOOL.]

Isid. Serv. [To VAR. SERV.] There's the fool hangs on your back already.

Apem. No, thou stand'st single, thou art not on him yet.

Caph. Where's the fool now?

Apem. He last asked the question.—Poor rogues, and usurers' men! bawds between gold and want!

All Serv. What are we, Apemantus?

Apem. Asses.

All Serv. Why?

Apem. That you ask me what you are, and do not know yourselves.—Speak to 'em, fool.

Fool. How do you, gentlemen?

All Serv. Gramercies, good fool: How does your mistress?

Fool. She's e'en setting on water to scald such chickens as you are. 'Would, we could see you at Corinth.

Apem. Good! gramercy.

Enter PAGE.

Fool. Look you, here comes my mistress' page.

Page. [To the FOOL.] Why, how now, captain? what do you in this wise company?—How dost thou, Apemantus?

Apem. 'Would I had a rod in my mouth, that I might answer thee profitably.

Page. Pr'ythee, Apemantus, read me the superscription of these letters; I know not which is which.

Apem. Canst not read?

Page. No.

Apem. There will little learning die then, that day thou art hanged. This is to lord Timon; this to Alcibiades. Go; thou wast born a bastard, and thou'lt die a bawd.

Page. Thou wast whelped a dog; and thou shalt famish a dog's death. Answer not, I am gone. [Exit PAGE.]

Apem. Even so thou out-run'st grace. Fool, I will go with you to lord Timon's.

Fool. Will you leave me there?

Apem. If Timon stay at home.—You three serve three naugers?

All Serv. Ay, 'would they served us!

Apem. So would I,—as good a trick as ever hangman served thief.

Fool. Are you three usurers' men?

All Serv. Ay, fool.

Fool. I think, no usurer but has a fool to his servant: My mistress is one, and I am her fool. When men come to borrow of your masters, they approach sadly, and go away merry; but they enter my mistress' house merrily, and go away sadly: The reason of this?

Var. Serv. I could render one.

Apem. Do it then, that we may account thee a whoremaster and a knave; which, notwithstanding, thou shalt be no less esteemed.

Var. Serv. What is a whoremaster, fool?

Fool. A fool in good clothes, and something like thee. 'Tis a spirit: sometime, it appears like a lord: sometime, like a lawyer; sometime, like a philosopher, with two stones more than his artificial one: He is very often like a knight; and, generally in all shapes, that man goes up and down in, from fourscore to thirteen, this spirit walks in.

Var. Serv. Thou art not altogether a fool.

Fool. Nor thou altogether a wise man; as much foolery as I have, so much wit thou lackest.

Apem. That answer might have become Apemantus.

All Serv. Aside, aside; here comes lord Timon.

Re-enter TIMON and FLAVIUS.

Apem. Come with me, fool, come.

Fool. I do not always follow lower, elder brother, and woman; sometime, the philosopher.

[Exit APEMANTUS and FOOL.]

Flav. 'Pray you, walk near; I'll speak with you anon. [Exit SERV.]

Tim. You make me marvel: Wherefore, ere this time,

Had you not fully laid my state before me;

That I might so have rated my expense,

As I had leave of means?

Flav. You would not hear me,

At many leisures I propos'd.

Tim. Go to:

Perchance, some single vantages you took

When my indisposition put you back;

And that unaptness made your minister,

'Tis to excuse yourself.

Flav. O my good lord!

At many times I brought in my accounts,
Laid them before you; you would throw them off,

And say, you found them in mine honesty.

When, for some trifling present, you have bid me

Return so much, * I have shook my head, and wept:

Yea, 'gainst the authority of manners, pray'd you

To hold your hand more close; I did endure
Not seldom, nor so slight checks; when I have Prompted you, in the ebb of your estate,
And your great flow of debts. My dear-lov'd lord,
Though you hear now, (too late!) yet now's a

time,

The greatest of your having lacks a half

To pay your present debts.

Tim. Let all my land be sold.

Flav. 'Tis all engag'd, some forfeited and

gone;

And what remains will hardly stop the mouth

Of present dues: the future comes apace:

What shall defend the interim? and at length

How goes our reckoning?

Tim. To Lacedæmon did my land extend.

Flav. O my good lord, the world is but

word;

Were it all your's, to give it in a breath,

How quickly were it gone?

Tim. You tell me true.

* L. s. a certain sum.

Flav. If you suspect my husbandry, or false-
Call me before the exactest auditor, ^{[hood,}
And set me on the proof. So the gods bless me,
When all our offices * have been oppress'd
With riotous feeders; when our vaults have wept
With drunken spilt of wine; when every room
Hath blaz'd with lights, and bray'd with minstrelsy;
I have retir'd me to a wasteful cock, †
And set mine eyes at flow.

Tim. Pr'ythee, no more.

Flav. Heavens, have I said, the bounty of this lord! ^{[saints,}
How many prodigal bits have slaves and pea-
This night englutted! Who is not Timon's?
What heart, head, sword, force, means, but is lord Timon's?
Great Timon, noble, worthy, royal Timon?
Ah! when the means are gone, that buy this
praise,
The breath is gone whereof this praise is made:
Feast-won, fast-lost; one cloud of winter
showers,

These flies are couch'd

Tim. Come, sermon me no further:
No villainous bounty yet hath pass'd my heart;
Unwisely, not ignobly, have I given.
Why dost thou weep? Canst thou the conscience lack,

To think I shall lack friends? Secure thy heart:
If I would broach the vessels of my love,
And try the argument of hearts by borrow-
ing,

Men, and men's fortunes, could I frankly use,
As I can bid thee speak.

Flav. Assurance bless your thoughts!

Tim. And, in some sort, these wants of mine are crown'd

That I account them blessings; for by these Shall I try friends: You shall perceive, how
you

Mistake my fortunes; I am wealthy in my friends.
Within there, ho!—Flamininus! Servilius!

Enter FLAMINIUS, SERVILIUS, and other SERVANTS.

Serv. My lord, my lord,—

Tim. I will despatch you severally.—You to lord Lucius,—

To lord Lucullus you: I hunted with his Honour to-day;—You, to Sempronius;
Commend me to their loves; and, I am proud,

That my occasions have found time to use them
Toward a supply of money: let the request
Be fifty talents.

senators,

(Of whom, even to the state's best health, I have Deserv'd this hearing,) bid 'em send o'the instant
A thousand talents to me.

Flav. I have been bold,
(For that I knew it the most general way.)
To them to use your signet, and your name:
But they do shake their heads, and I am here
No richer in return.

Tim. Is't true? can it be?

Flav. They answer, in a joint and corporate voice,

That now they are at fall, ‡ want treasure, can-
not

Do what they would; are sorry—you are honourable,—

But yet they could have wish'd—they know not—but

ACT III.

SCENE I.—*The same place.—A Room in LUCULLUS'
House.*

FLAMINIUS waiting. Enter a SERVANT to him.

Serv. I have told my lord of you, he is coming down to you.

Flam. I thank you, Sir.

Enter LUCULLUS.

Serv. Here's my lord.

Lucul. ^[Aside.] One of Lord Timon's men? a gift, I warrant. Why, this hits right; I dreamt of a silver basin and ewer to-night. Flamininus, honest Flamininus; you are very respectfully welcome, Sir.—Fill me some wine.—<sup>[Exit SER-VANT.]</sup> And how does that honourable, complete, free-hearted gentleman of Athens, thy very bountiful good lord and master?

Flam. His health is well, Sir.

Lucul. I am right glad that his health is well,
Sir: And what hast thou there under thy cloak, pretty Flamininus?

Flam. Faith, nothing but an empty box, Sir;
which in my lord's behalf, I come to entreat your honour to supply; who, having great and instant occasion to use fifty talents, hath sent to your lordship to furnish him; nothing doubting your present assistance therein.

Lucul. La, la, la, la,—nothing doubting, says he? alas, good lord! a noble gentleman 'tis, if he would not keep so good a house. Many a time and often I have dined with him, and told him so: and come again to supper to him, or purpose to have him spend less; and yet he would embrace no counsel, take no warning by my coming. Every man has his fault, and honesty  is his; I have told him so: but I could never get him from it.

* Regarding.

† Abrupt remarks.

‡ A cap slightly moved, not put off.

§ For ingenuously.

|| Liberal.

¶ For respectfully.

 Honesty meaning liberality.

Re-enter SERVANT, with wine.

Serv. Please your lordship, here is the wine.

Lucul. Flammius, I have noted thee always well. Here's to thee.

Flam. Your lordship speaks your pleasure.

Lucul. I have observed thee always for a towardsly prompt spirit,—give thee thy due,—and one that knows what belongs to reason: and canst use the time well, if the time use thee well: good parts in thee.—Get you gone, Sirrah.—[To the SERVANT, who goes out.]—Draw nearer, honest Flammius. Thy lord's a bountiful gentleman: but thou art wise; and thou knowest well enough, although thou comest to me, that this is no time to lend money; especially upon bare friendship, without security. Here's three solidaries* for thee; good boy, wink at me, and say thou saw'st me not. Fare thee well.

Flam. Is't possible, the world should so much differ; And we alive, that liv'd? Fly, damned base-
To him that worships thee.

[Throwing the money away.]

Lucul. Ha! Now I see thou art a fool, and fit for thy master. [Exit LUCULLUS.]

Flam. May these add to the number that may scald thee!

I et molten can be thy damnation,
Thou disease of a friend, and not himself!
Has friendship such a faint and milky heart,
It turns in less than two nights? O you gods,
I feel my master's passion! This slave
Unto his honour, has my lord's meat in him:
Why should it thrive, and him to nuriment,
When he is turn'd to poison!
Oh! may diseases only work upon't!
And, when he is sick to death, let not that part
Of nature
Which my lord paid for, be of any power
To expel sickness, but prolong his hour!
[Exit.]

SCENE II.—The same.—A public place.

Enter LUCIUS, with three STRANGERS.

Luc. Who, the lord Timon? he is my very good friend, and an honourable gentleman.

1 Stran. We know him for no less, though we are but strangers to him. But I can tell you one thing, my lord, and which I hear from common rumours; now lord Timon's happy hours are done† and past, and his estate shrinks from him.

Luc. Fir no, do not believe it; he cannot want for money.

2 Stran. But believe you this, my lord, that, not long ago, one of his men was with the lord Lucullus, to borrow so many talents; nay, urged extremely for't, and showed what necessity belonged to't, and yet was denied.

Luc. How?

2 Stran. I tell you denied, my lord.

Luc. What a strange case was that? now, before the gods, I am ashamed on't. Denied that honourable man! there was very little honour show'd in't. For my own part, I must needs confess, I have received some small kindnesses from him, as money, plate, jewels, and such like trifles, nothing comparing to his; yet, had he mistook him, and lent to me, I should ne'er have denied his occasion so many talents.

Enter SERVILIUS.

Serv. See, by good hap, yonder's my lord; I have sweat to see his honour.—My honoured lord,—[To LUCIUS.]

Luc. Servilius! you are kindly met, Sir. Fare thee well.—Commend me to thy honourable-virtuous lord, my very exquisite friend.

* A piece of Shakespeare's coming

† And we who were alive then, alive now.

‡ Suffering. § His life. ¶ Acknowledge.

¶ Consumed.

Serv. May it please your honour, my lord hath sent—

Luc. Ha! what has he sent? I am so much endeared to that lord, he's ever sending: How shall I thank him, thinkest thou? and what has he sent now?

Serv. He has only sent his present occasion now, my lord, requesting your lordship to supply his instant use with so many talents.

Luc. I know; his lordship is but merry with me;

He cannot want fifty-five hundred talents.

Serv. But in the mean time he wants less, my lord, if his occasion were not virtuous,* [Sings.] I should not urge it so half faithfully.

Luc. Dost thou speak seriously, Servilius?

Serv. Upon my soul, 'tis true, Sir.

Luc. What a wicked beast was I, to disturb myself against such a good time, when I might have shown myself honourable? how unluckily it happened, that I should purchase the day before for a little part, and undo a great deal of honour?—Servilius, now before the gods, I am not able to do't; the more beast, I say.—I was sending to use lord Timon myself these gentlemen can witness; but I would not, for the wealth of Athens, I had done it now. Commend me bountifully to his good lordship; and I hope his honour will conceive the faintest of me, because I have no power to be kind. And tell him this from me, I count it one of my greatest afflictions, say, that I cannot pleasure such an honourable gentleman. Good Servilius, will you befriend me so far as to use mine own words to him?

Serv. Yes, Sir, I shall.

Luc. I will look you out a good turn, Servilius.—[Exit SERVILIUS.]

True, as you said, Timon is shrank, indeed: And he, that's once denied, will hardly speed.

[Exit LUCIUS.]

1 Stran. Do you observe this, Hostilius?

2 Stran. Ay, too well.

1 Stran. Why this

Is the world's soul; and just of the same piece is every flatterer's spirit. Who can call him His friend, that digs in the same dish? for, in my knowing, Timon hath been this lord's father, And kept his credit with his purse; Supported his estate; nay, Timon's money Has paid his men their wages: He ne'er drinks, But Timon's silver treas' upon his lip; And yet, (oh! I see the monstrousness of man When he looks out in an ungrateful shape!) He does deny him, in respect of his, What charitable men afford to beggars.

3 Stran. Religion groans at it.

1 Stran. For mine own part, I never tasted Timon in my life, Nor came any of his bonnies over me, To mark me for his friend, yet, I protest, For his right noble mind, illustrious virtue, And honourable carriage, Had his necessity made use of me, I would have put my wealth into donation; And the best half should have return'd to him, So much I love his heart: But I perceive, Men must learn now with pity to dispense: For policy sits above conscience. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—The same.—A Room in SEMPRONIUS' House.

Enter SEMPRONIUS, and a SERVANT of TIMON'S.

Sem. Must he needs trouble me in't? Humph! 'Bove all others?

He might have tried lord Lucius, or Lucullus; And now Ventidius is wealthy too, Whom he redeem'd from prison: All these three Owe their estates unto him.

Serv. O my lord,

* "If he did not want it for a good use."

† Presented it as a donation.

They have all been touch'd,* and found base metal; for

They have all denied him!

Ser. How! have they denied him?

Has Ventidius and Lucullus denied him?

And does he send to me? Three! hump!—

It shows but little love or judgment in him.

Must I be his last refuge? His friends, like physicians,

Thrive, give him over; Must I take the cure upon me? (him)

He has much disgrac'd me in't; I am angry at That might have known my place: I see no sense for't,

But his occasions might have woo'd me first;

For, in my conscience, I was the first man

That e'er receiv'd gift from him:

And does he think so backwardly of me now,

That I'll requite it last? No: So it may prove

An argument of laughter to the rest,

And I amongst the lords be thought a fool.

I had rather than the worth of thrice the sun,

He had sent to me first, but for my mind's sake;

I had such a courage† to do him good. But now return,

And with their tant reply this answer join;

Who bates mine honour, shall not know my coin.

(Exit.)
Serv. Excellent! Your lordship's a goodly villain. The devil knew not what he did, when he made man politic; he cross'd himself by't: and I cannot think, but, in the end, the villainies of man will set him clear. How fairly this lord strives to appear foul! takes virtuous copies to be wicked: like those that, under hot ardent zeal, would set whole realms on fire.

Of such a nature is his politic love.

This was my lord's best hope: now all are fled,

Save the gods only: Now his friends are dead,

Doors, that were ne'er acquainted with their

wards

Many a bounteous year, must be employ'd

Now to guard sure their master.

And this is all a liberal course allows:

Who cannot keep his wealth, must keep his house.‡ (Exit.)

SCENE IV.—The same.—A Hall in Timon's House.

Enter two Servants of Varro, and the Servant of Lucius, meeting Titus, Hortensius, and other Servants to TIMON'S Creditors, waiting his coming out.

Var. Serv. Well met; good-morrow, Titus and Hortensius.

Tit. The like to you, kind Varro.

Hor. Lucius?

What, do we meet together?

Luc. Serv. Ay, and I think

One business does command us all; for mine is money.

Tit. So is theirs and ours.

Enter PHILOTUS.

Luc. Serv. And Sir

Philotus too!

Phi. Good day at once.

Luc. Serv. Welcome, good brother.

What do you think the hour?

Phi. Labouring for nine.

Luc. Serv. So much?

Phi. Is not my lord seen yet?

Luc. Serv. Not yet.

Phi. I wonder out: he was wont to shine at seven.

Luc. Serv. Ay, but the days are waxed shorter with him:

You must consider, that a prodigal course

Is like the sun's; § but not, like his, recoverable.

I fear,

'Tis deepest winter in lord Timon's purse;

* Tried.
† For fear of duns.

‡ Eager desire.
§ In blaze and splendour.

That is, one may reach deep enough, and yet find little.

Phi. I am of your fear for that.

Tit. I'll show you how to observe a strange event.

Your lord sends now for money.

Hor. Most true, he does.

Tit. And he wears jewels now of Timon's gift

For which I wait for money.

Hor. It is against my heart.

Luc. Serv. Mark, how strange it shows,

Timon in this should pay more than he owes:

And e'en as if your lord should wear rich jewels,

And send for money for 'em.

Hor. I am weary of this charge,* the gods can witness:

I know, my lord hath spent of Timon's wealth,

And now ingratitude makes it worse than stealth.

1 Var. Serv. Yes, mine's three thousand crowns: What's yours?

Luc. Serv. Five thousand mine.

1 Var. Serv. 'Tis much deep: and it should seem by the sun,

Your master's confidence was above mine;

Else, surely, his had equal'd.

Enter FLAMINIUS.

Tit. One of lord Timon's men.

Luc. Serv. Flaminius! Sir, a word: 'Pray, is my lord ready to come forth?

Flam. No, indeed, he is not,

Tit. We attend his lordship; pray, signify so much.

Flam. I need not tell him that: he knows you are too diligent. (Exit FLAMINIUS.)

Enter FLAVIUS in a cloak, muffled.

Luc. Serv. Ha! is not that his steward muffled so?

He goes away in a cloud: call him, call him.

Tit. Do you hear, Sir?

1 Var. Serv. By your leave, Sir,—

Flav. What do you ask of me, my friend?

Tit. We wait for certain money here, Sir.

Flav. Ay,

If money were as certain as your waiting,

'Twere sure enough. Why then pretend you not [at

Your sums and bills, when your false masters

Of my lord's wealth? Then they could smile, and fawn

Upon his debts, and take down the interest

Into their glutinous maws. You do yourselves

but wrong,

To stir me up; let me pass quietly:

Believ't, my lord and I have made an end;

I have no more to reckon, he to spend.

Luc. Serv. Ay, but this answer will not serve.

Flav. It 'twill not,

'Tis not so base as you; for you serve knives.

(Exit.)

1 Var. Serv. How! what does his cashier'd worship mutter?

2 Var. Serv. No matter what; he's poor, and that's revenge enough. Who can speak broader than he that has no house to put his head in?

Such may rail against great buildings.

Enter SERVILIUS.

Tit. Oh! here's Servilius; now we shall know some answer.

Serv. If I might beseech you, gentlemen,

To repair some other hour, I should much

Derive from it: for, take it on my soul,

My lord leans wond'rously to discontent.

His comfortable temper has forsook him;

He is much out of health, and keeps his chamber.

Luc. Serv. Many do keep their chambers, are not sick:

And, if it be so far beyond his health,

Metaphors, he should the sooner pay his debts,

And make a clear way to the gods.

* Commission.

Ser. Good gods!

Tit. We cannot take this for an answer, Sir.

Flam. [Within.] Servilius, help!—my lord!
my lord!—

Enter TIMON, in a rage: FLAMINIUS following.

Tim. What, are my doors oppos'd against my passage.

Have I been ever free, and must my house
Be my retentive enemy, my jail:
The place which I have feasted, does it now,
Like all mankind, show me an iron heart?

Luc. Serv. Put it now, Titus.

Tit. My lord, here is my bill.

Luc. Serv. Here's mine.

Hor. Serv. And mine, my lord.

Both Var. Serv. And ours, my lord.

Phi. All our bills.

Tim. Knock me down with 'em: * cleave me to the girdle.

Luc. Serv. Alas! my lord,—

Tim. Cut my heart in sums.

Tit. Mine, fifty talents.

Tim. Tell out my blood.

Luc. Serv. Five thousand crowns, my lord.

Tim. Five thousand drops pays that.

What yours!—and yours?

1 Var. Serv. My lord,—

2 Var. Serv. My lord,—

Tim. Tear me, take me, and the gods fall upon you! [Exit.]

Hor. Faith, I perceive our masters may throw their caps at their money; these debts may well be called desperate ones, for a madman owes 'em. [Exit.]

Re-enter TIMON and FLAVIUS.

Tim. They have e'en put my breath from me,
the slaves:

Creditors!—devils.

Flav. My dear lord,—

Tim. What if it should be so?

Flav. My lord,—

Tim. I'll have it so:—My steward!

Flav. Here, my lord!

Tim. So hily! Go, bid all my friends again,
Lucius, Lucullus, and Sempronius; all:
I'll once more feast the rascals.

Flav. O my lord,

You only speak from your distracted soul;
There is not so much left, to furnish out
A moderate table.

Tim. Be't not in this care; go.

I charge thee; invite them all: let in the tide
Of knaves once more; my cook and I'll provide.
[Exit.]

SCENE V.—The same.—The Senate-House.

The Senate sitting. Enter ALCIBIADES, attended.

1 Sen. My lord, you have my voice to it; the fault's

bloody; 'tis necessary he should die:
Nothing emboldens sin so much as mercy.

2 Sen. Most true: the law shall bruise him.

Alcib. Honour, health, and compassion to the senate!

1 Sen. Now, captain?

Alcib. I am an humble sutor to your virtues;
For pity is the virtue of the law,
And none but tyrants use it cruelly.

It pleases time, and fortune, to lie heavy
Upon a friend of mine, who in hot blood,
Hath stepp'd into the law, which is past depth
To those that, without heed, do plunge into it.
He is a man, setting his fate aside,†
Of comely virtues:

Nor did he soil the fact with cowardice;
(An honour in him which buys out his fault,)
But, with a noble fury, and fair spirit,

Seeing his reputation touch'd to death,
He did oppose his foe:

And with such sober and unnoted passion *
He did behave † his anger, ere ‡ was spent.
As if he had but prov'd an argument.

1 Sen. You undergo too strict a paradox, ‡
Striving to make an ugly deed look fair

Your words have took such pains, as if they labour'd

To bring manslaughter into form, set quarrelling
Upon the head of valour; which, indeed,
Is valour misbegot, and came into the world
When sects and factions were newly born:
He's truly valiant, that can wisely suffer.
The worst that man can breathe; and make his
wrongs

His outides; wear them like his raiment, care-
And ne'er prefer his injuries to his heart,
To bring it into danger

If wrongs be evils, and enforce us kill,

What folly 'tis, to hazard life for ill?

Alcib. My lord,—

1 Sen. You cannot make gross sins look clear;

To revenge is no valour, but to bear.

Alcib. My lords, then, under favour, pardon
me.

If I speak like a captain,—

Why do fond men expose themselves to battle,
And not endure all threat'nings † sleep upon it,
And let the foes quietly cut their throats

Without repugnancy? but if there be Such valour in the bearing, what make we

Abroad?; why then, women are more valiant,
That stay at home, if bearing carry it;

And th' ass, more captain than the lion; the felon,
Loaden with nouns, wiser than the judge,

If wisdom be in suffering. O my lords,

As you are great, be pitifully good:

Who cannot condemn rashness in cold blood?

To kill, I grant, is sin's extremest quest ‡

But, in defence, by mercy, 'tis most just. §

To be in anger, is impurity;

But who is man, that is not angry?

Weigh but the crime with this.

2 Sen. You breathe in vain.

Alcib. In vain? his service done

At Lacedæmon and Byzantium,

Were a sufficient briber for his life.

1 Sen. What's that?

Alcib. Why, I say, my lords, he's done fair

service,

And slain in fight many of your enemies:

How full of valour did he bear himself

In the last conflict, and made plenteous wounds? †

2 Sen. He has made too much plenty with

'em, he

Is a sworn rioter: he's a sin that often

Drowns him, and takes his valour prisoner:

If there were no foes, that were enough alone

To overcome him: in that beastly fury

He has been known to commit outrages,
And cherish factions: 'Tis infer'd to us,

His days are foul, and his drunk dangerous.

1 Sen. He dies.

Alcib. Hard fate! he might have died in war.

My lords, if not for any parts in him,

(Though his right arm might purchase his own

time,

And be in debt to none,) yet, more to move you,

Take my deserts to his, and join them both:

And, for I know, your reverend ages love

Security, I'll pawn my victories, all

My honour to you, upon his good returns.

If by this crime he owes the law his life,

Why, let the war receive it in valiant gore;

For law is strict, and war is nothing more.

1 Sen. We are for law, he dies; urge it no more, [ther.]

On height of our displeasure: Friend, or bro-

He forfeits his own blood, that spills another.

* A bill was also a battle-axe—Timon, therefore,
plays upon the word.

† With the exception of this one act

* Passion so moderated that no one could note its operation. † Manage. ‡ You undertake a paradox too hard.

§ Resolute. ¶ Why do we take the field?
¶ I call mercy to witness, that deserves violence is just.

Alcib. Must it be so? it must not be. My I do beseech you, know me. [Lords,

2 Sen. How?

Alcib. Call me to your remembrances.

3 Sen. What?

Alcib. I cannot think, but your age has forgot me;

It could not else be, I should prove so base,* To sue and be denied such common grace: My wounds ache at you.

1 Sen. Do you dare our anger?

'Tis in few words, but specious in effect— We banish thee for ever.

Alcib. Banish me?

Banish your dotage; banish usury, That makes the senate ugly.

1 Sen. If, after two days' shame, Athens cannot thee,

Attend our weightier judgment. And, not to swell our spirit,†

He shall be executed presently.

[Exit SERVANTS.]

Alcib. Now the gods keep you old enough, that you may live

Only in bone, that none may look on you!

I am worse than mad: I have kept back their foes,

While they have told their money, and let out Their coin upon large interest; I myself,

Rich only in large hurts—All those, for this?

Is this the balsam, that the usuring senate

Pours into captains' wounds? ha! banishment!

It comes not ill; I hate not to be banish'd;

It is a cause worthy my spleen and fury,

That I may strike at Athens. I'll cheer up

My discontented troops, and lay for hearts;‡

'Tis honour, with most lands to be at odds;

Soldiers should brook as little wrongs as gods.

Exit.

SCENE VI.—A magnificent Room in TIMON'S House.

Music. Tables set out: SERVANTS attending. Enter divers LORDS at several doors.

1 Lord. The good time of day to you, Sir.

2 Lord. I also wish it to you. I think, this honourable lord did but try us this other day.

1 Lord. Upon that were my thoughts tiring, when we encountered: I hope, it is not so low with him, as he made it seem in the trial of his several friends.

2 Lord. It should not be, by the persuasion of his new feasting.

1 Lord. I should think so: He hath sent me an earnest inviting, which many my near occasions did urge me to put off; but he hath conjured me beyond them, and I must needs appear.

2 Lord. In like manner was I in debt to my importunate business, but he would not hear my excuse. I am sorry, when he sent to borrow of me, that my provision was out.

1 Lord. I am sick of that grief too, as I understand how all things go.

2 Lord. Every man here's so. What would he have borrowed of you?

1 Lord. A thousand pieces.

2 Lord. A thousand pieces!

1 Lord. What of you?

3 Lord. He sent to me, Sir.—Here he comes.

Enter TIMON, and Attendants.

Tim. With all my heart, gentlemen both:—And how fare you?

1 Lord. Ever at the best, hearing well of your lordship.

2 Lord. The swallow follows not summer more willing, than we your lordship.

Tim. [Aside.] Nor more willingly leaves winter; such summer-blids are men.—Gentlemen, our dinner will not recompense this long stay: feast your ears with the music awhile; it they will tire so harshly on the trumpet's sound: we shall to't presently.

2 Lord. I hope it remains not unkindly with your lordship, that I returned you an empty messenger.

Tim. O Sir, let it not trouble you.

2 Lord. My noble lord,—

Tim. Ah! my good friend! what cheer?

[The banquet brought in.]

2 Lord. My most honourable lord, I am even sick of shame, that when your lordship this other day sent to me, I was so unfortunate a beggar.

Tim. Think not on't, Sir.

2 Lord. If you had sent but two hours before,—

Tim. Let it not cumber your better remembrance. Come, bring in all together.

2 Lord. All covered dishes!

1 Lord. Royal cheer, I warrant you.

2 Lord. Doubt not that, if money and the season can yield it.

1 Lord. How do you? what's the news?

3 Lord. Alcibiades is banished: Hear you of it?

1 & 2 Lords. Alcibiades banished!

3 Lord. 'Tis so, be sure of it.

2 Lord. How? how?

2 Lord. I pray you, upon what?

Tim. My worthy friends, will you draw near?

3 Lord. I'll tell you more anon. Here's a noble feast toward.†

2 Lord. This is the old man still.

3 Lord. Will't hold? will't hold?

2 Lord. It does: but time will—and so—

3 Lord. I do conceive.

Tim. Each man to his stool with that spin as he would to the lip of his mistress: your diet shall be in all places alike. Make not a city feast of it, to let the meat cool ere we can agree upon the first place: Sit, sit. The gods require our thanks.

You great benefactors, sprinkle our society with thankfulness. For your own gifts, make yourselves proud: but reserve still to give, lest your desires be despoiled. Lend to each man enough, that one need not lend to the other: for, were your godheads to borrow of men, men would forsake the gods. Make the meat be belov'd, more than the man that gives it. Let no assembly of twenty be without a score of villains: If there sit twelve women at the table, let a dozen of them be—as they are.—The rest of your fees, O gods,—the senators of Athens, together with the common lag of people,—what is amiss in them, you gods make suitable for destruction. For these my present friends,—as they are to be nothing, so in nothing bliss them, and to nothing they are welcome.

Uncover, dozs, and lap.

[The dishes uncovered are full of warm water.]

Some speak. What does his lordship mean?

Some other. I know not.

Tim. May you a better least never behold, You knot of month-friends! smoke, and make warm water

Is your perfection. This is Timon's last; Who stuck and spangled you with flatteries, Washes it off, and sprinkles in your faces

[Throwing water in their faces.]

Your reeking villany. Live loath'd, and long,

Most smiling, smooth, detested parasites, Courteous destroyers, affable wolves, meek bears, You fools of fortune, trencher-friends, time's flies, ‡

Of man, and beast, the infinite malady +
Crust you quite o'er!—What, dost thou go?
Solt, take thy physic first—thou too,—and thou;—

Thrus the dishes at them, and drives them out.

Stay, I will lend thee money, borrow none.—
What, all in motion? Henceforth be no feast,
Whereat a villain's not a welcome guest.
Burn, house; sink, Athens! henceforth hated be
Of Timon, man, and all humanity? [Exit.

Re-enter the Lords, with other Lords and SENATORS.

1 Lord. How now, my lords?

2 Lord. Know you the quality of lord Timon's fury?

3 Lord. Pish! did you see my cap?

4 Lord. I have lost my gown.

3 Lord. He's but a mad lord, and nought but humour sways him. He gave me a jewel the other day, and now he has beat it out of my hat.—Did you see my jewel?

4 Lord. Did you see my cap?

3 Lord. Here 'tis.

4 Lord. Here lies my gown.

1 Lord. Let's make no stay.

2 Lord. Lord Timon's mad.

3 Lord. I feel't upon my bones.

4 Lord. One day he gives us diamonds, next day stones. [Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Without the walls of Athens.

Enter TIMON.

Tim. Let me look back upon thee, O thou wall,
That girdest in those wolves! Dive in the earth,
And hence not Athens! Matrons, turn incontinent!

Obedience fail in children! slaves and fools
Pluck the grave wrinkled senate from the bench,

And minister in their steeds! to general filths;
Convert o'the instant, green virginity!
Do't in your parents' eyes! bankrupts, hold fast:
Rather than render back, out with your knives,
And cut your tru-ners' throats! bound servants,
steal!

Large handed robbers your grave masters are,
And pill by law! maid, to thy master's bed;
Thy mistress is o'the brothel! son of sixteen,
Pluck the hind crutch from the old limping
sire,

With it beat out his brains! piety, and fear,
Religion to the gods, peace, justice, truth,
Domestic awe, night-rest, and neighbourhood,
Instruction, manners, mysteries, and trades,
Degrees, observances, customs, and laws,
Decline to your confounding contraries, and
And yet confusion live!—Plagues, incident to
men,

Your potent and infectious fevers heap
On Athens, ripe for stroke! thou cold sciatica,
Cripple our senators, that their limbs may halt
As lamely as their manners! lust and liberty
Creep in the minds and marrow of our youth:
That 'gainst the stream of virtue they may strive,

And drown themselves in riot! Itches, blains,
Sow all the Athenian bosoms; and their crop
Be general leprosy! breath infect breath;
That their society, as their friendship, may
Be merely poison! Nothing I'll bear from thee,

* Jacks of the clock; like those at St. Dunstan's church, in Fleet-street. † Every kind of disease.
‡ Common sewers. § Contraverties, which wars or destroy each other. ¶ Libertinism

But nakedness, thou detestable town!
Take thou that too, with multiplying banes! •
Timon will to the woods; where he shall find
The unkindest beast more kinder than man kind.

The gods confound (hear me, ye good gods all,)
The Athenians both within and out that wall!
And grant, as Timon grows, his hate may grow
To the whole race of inankind, high and low!
Amen. [Exit

SCENE II.—Athens.—A Room in TIMON'S House.

Enter CLAVIUS, with two or three SERVANTS.

1 Ser. Hear you, master steward, where's our master?

Are we undone? cast off? nothing remaining?
Flat. Alack, my fellows, what should I say
to you?

Let me be recorded by the righteous gods,
I am as poor as you.

1 Ser. Such a house broke!
So noble a master fallen! All gone! and not
One friend, to take his fortune by the arm,
And go along with him!

2 Ser. As we do turn our backs
From our companion, thrown into his grave;
So his familiars to his buried fortunes
Shunk all away; leave their false vows with him
Like empty purses pick'd; and his poor self,
A dedicated beggar to the air,
With his disease of all-shunn'd poverty,
Walks, like contempt, alone.—More of our fellows.

Enter other SERVANTS.

Flat. All broken implements of a ruined
house.

3 Ser. Yet do our hearts wear Timon's
livery,

That see I by our faces; we are fellows still,
Serving alike in sorrow: Leak'd is our bark,
And we, poor mates, stand on the dying deck,
Heaving the surges' threat: we must all part
Into this sea of air.

Flat. Good fellows all,
The latest of my wealth I'll share amongst you
Wherever we shall meet, for Timon's sake, Let's yet be fellows; let's shake our heads, and
say,

As 'twere a knell unto our master's fortunes,
We have seen better days. Let each take some;
[Giving them money.

Nay, put out all your hands. Not one word
more:

Thus part we rich in sorrow, parting poor,
Exit SERVANTS.

Oh! the fierce + wretchedness that glory brings us! [cunct,

Who would not wish to be from wealth ex-
Since riches point to misery and contempt?

Who'd be so mock'd with glory, as to live
But in a dream of friendship? [pounds,

To have his pomp, and all what state con-
But only painted like his vanish'd friends?

Poor honest lord, brought low by his own
heart;

Undone by goodness! Strange unusual blood, +
When man's worst sin is, he does too much good!

Who then dares to be half so kind again?
For bounty that makes gods, does still mar
men.

My dearest lord,—bless'd, to be most accus'd,
Rich, only to be wretched.—thy great fortunes
Are made thy chief afflictions. Alas, kind
lord!

He's flung in rage from this ungrateful seat
Of monstrous friends; nor has he with him to Supply his life, or that which can command it.
I'll follow and inquire him out:

• Accumulated curses.
† Quick. ‡ Propensity.

I'll serve his mind with my best will;
Whilst I have gold, I'll be his steward still.

[Exit.]

SCENE III.—The Woods.

Enter TIMON.

Tim. O blessed breeding sun, draw from the earth

Rotten humidity; below thy sister's orb*
Interect the air! Twinn'd brothers of one womb,—
Whose procreation, residence, and birth,
Scarcely is dividant,—touch them with several fortunes;

The greater scorns the lesser: Not nature,
To whom all sores lay siege, can bear great for-
But by † contempt of nature. [tune]

Raise me this beggar, and denude that lord;
The senator shall bear contempt hereditary,
The beggar native honour.

It is the pasture lards the brother's sides,
The want that makes him lean. Who dares,
who dares,

In purity of manhood stand upright,
And say, This man's a flatterer? if one be,
So are they all; for every grize; of fortune
Is smoothed by that below: the learned pate
Ducks to the golden fool: All is oblique;
There's nothing level in our cursed natures,
But direct villany. Therefore, be abhor'd
All feasts, societies, and throngs of men!
His semblable, yea, himself, Timon disdains!
Destruction tang's mankind!—Earth, yield me
roots! [Digging.]

Who seeks for better of thee, sance his palate
With thy most operant poison! What is here?
Gold? yellow, glittering, precious gold? No, gods, [yens]

I am no idle votarist. ¶ Roots, you clear hea-
Thus much of this, will make black white; foul,
fair;

Wrong, right; base, noble; old, young; coward,
valiant.

Ha, you gods! why this? What this, you gods!
Why this

Will lug your priests and servants from your sides;

Pluck stout men's pillows from below their heads:
This yellow slave

Will knit and break religions; bless the accurs'd;

Make the hoar leprosy ador'd; place thieves,
And give them tide, knee, and approbation,
With senators on the bench: this is it,
That makes the wappen'd † widow wed again;
Shr, whom the spital-house, and ulcerous sores
Would cast the gorge at, this embalms and spices

To the April day again.  Come, damned earth,
Thou common whore of mankind, that put'st odds

Among the rout of nations, I will make thee
Do thy right nature.—[March afar off.]—Ha!

a drum!—Thou'rt quick,
But yet I'll bury thee: Thou'rt go, strong thief,

When gouty keepers of thee cannot stand:—
Nay, stay thou out for earnest.

[Keeping some gold.]

Enter ALCIBIADES, with drum and fife, in warlike manner; PHRYNIA and TIMANDRA.

Alcib. What art thou there?

Speak.

Tim. A beast, as thou art. The canker know
thy heart,

For showing me again the eyes of man!

Alcib. What is thy name? Is man so hateful
to thee,

That art thyself a man?

Tim. I am misanthropos, and hate mankind.

* I.e. The moon's. † Without.
‡ Step or degree. § Gripe. ¶ No insincersuppliant. ¶ I want not gold, but roots. c. Sorrowful.
 Restores to all the sweetness and freshness of her
youth.

For thy part, I do wish thou wert a dog,
That I might love thee something.

Alcib. I know thee well;
But in thy fortunes am unlearn'd and strange.

Tim. I know thee too; and more, than that I know thee,

I not desire to know. Follow thy drum;
With man's blood paint the ground, gules,
gules:

Religious canons, civil laws are cruel;
Then what should war be? This fell whore of thine

Hath in her more destruction than thy sword,
For all her cherubin look.

Phr. Thy lips rot off!

Tim. I will not kiss thee; then the rot returns
To thine own lips again.

Alcib. How came the noble Timon to this change?

Tim. As the moon does by wanting light to
But then renew I could not like the moon:
There were no suns to borrow of.

Alcib. Noble Timon,
What friendship may I do thee?

Tim. None, but to Maintain my opinion.

Alcib. What is it, Timon?

Tim. Promise me friendship, but perform none: If

Thou wilt not promise, the gods plague thee: for Thou art a man! if thou dost perform, confound
thee,

For thou'rt a man!

Alcib. I have heard in some sort of thy miseries.

Tim. Thou saw'st them, when I had prosperity.

Alcib. I see them now; thou was a blessed
time.

Tim. As time is now, held with a brace of harlots.

Timan. Is this the Athenian minion, whom the world

Voted so regardfully?

Tim. Art thou Timandra?

Timan. Yes.

Tim. Be a whore still! they love thee not, that use thee:

Give them diseases, leaving with thee their lust.
Make use of thy salt hours: season the slaves

For tubs, and baths; bring down rose-cheeked
To the tub-fast, and the diet.* [youth]

Timan. Hang thee, monster!

Alcib. Pardon him, sweet Timandra; for his wits

Are drown'd and lost in his calamities.—
I have but little gold of late, brave Timon

The want wherof doth daily make revolt
In my penurious band: I have heard and griev'd,

How curs'd Athens, mindless of thy worth,

Forgetting thy great deeds, when neighbour states,
But for thy sword and torturing sword upon them,—

Tim. I prythee, beat thy drum, and get thee
gone.

Alcib. I am thy friend, and pity thee, dear
Timon.

Tim. How dost thou pity him, whom thou dost trouble?

I had rather be alone.

Alcib. Why, fare thee well:

Here's some gold for thee.

Tim. Keep't, I cannot eat it.

Alcib. When I have laid proud Athens on a heap,—

Tim. Warr't thou 'gainst Athens?

Alcib. Ay, Timon, and have cause.

Tim. The gods confound them all i'thy com-quest; and

Three after, when thou hast conquer'd!

Alcib. Why me, Timon?

Tim. That,

By killing villains, thou wast born to conquer

* Used in the cure of a peculiar disorder.

My country.
Put up thy gold. Go on,—here's gold,—go on;
Be as a planetary plague, when Jove
Will o'er some high-wind'd city bang his poison
In the sick air: Let not thy sword skip one:
Pity not honour'd age for his white beard,
He's a usurer. Strike me the counterfeit matron;
It is her habit only that is honest,
Herself's a bawd. Let not the virgin's cheek
Make soft thy trenchant sword; for those milk-

paps,
That through the window-bars bore at men's eyes,
Are not within the leaf of pity writ,
Set them down horrible traitors. Spare not the Hath doubtfully pronounc'd thy throat shall cut,

And mince it sans remorse.‡ Swear against objects; §

Whose proof, nor yells of mothers, maids, nor babes,

Nor sight of priests in holy vestments bleeding,
Shall pierce a jot. There's gold to pay thy soldiers;

Make large confusion: and, thy fury spent,
Confounded be thyself! Speak not, be gone.

Alcib. Hast thou gold yet? I'll take the gold thou art wist me,
Not all thy coinage.

Tim. Dost thou, or dost thou not, heaven's curse upon thee!

Phr. & Timan. Give us some gold, good Timon: Hast thou more?

Tim. Enough to make a whore forswear her trade, [sluts,
And to make whores, a bawd. Hold up, you your aprons mountant! You are not oathable,— Although, I know, you'll swear, terribly swear, into strong shudders, and to heavenly agues,

The immortal gods that hear you,—spare your oaths,

I'll trust to your conditions. ¶ Be whores still:
And he whose pious breath seeks to convert you,
Be strong in whore, allure him, burn him up;
Let your close fire predominate his smoke,

And be no turncoats: Yet may your pains, six months, [roofs
Be quite contrary: And thatch your poor thin with burdens of the dead;—some that were bandg'd,

No matter wear them, betray with them: whore

still;
Paint till a horse may mire upon your face:
A box of wrinkles!

Phr. & Timan. Well, more gold;—What
then!

Believ't, that we'll do any thing for gold.

Tim. Consumptions sow
In hollow bones of man; strike their sharp shins,
And mar men's spurring. Crack the lawyer's

voice,
That he may never more false title plead,
Nor sound his quilllets ¶ shrilly: hoar the flamen,

That scolds against the quality of flesh,
And not believes himself: down with the nose,

Down with it flat; take the bridge quite away
Of him, that his particular to foresee,
Smells from the general weal: make curl'd-pate

ruffians bald;
And let the unscar'd braggarts of the war
Derive some pain from you: Plague all;
That your activity may defeat and quell

The source of all erection.—There's more gold:—
Do you damn others, and let this damn you,
And ditches grave†† you all!

Phr. & Timan. More counsel with more money, bounteous Timon.

Tim. More whore, more mischief first; I have given you earnest.

Alcib. Strike up the drum towards Athens.
Farewell, Timon;
If I thrive well, I'll visit thee again.

Tim. If I hope well, I'll never see thee more.
Alcib. I never did thee harm.

Tim. Yes, thou spok'st well of me.
Alcib. Call'st thou that harm?

Tim. Men daily find it such. Get thee away
And take thy beagles with thee.

Alcib. We but offend him.—
Strike.

[Drum beats. Exeunt ALCEBIADES, PHRYNIA, and TIMANDRA.

Tim. That nature, being sick of man's unkind-
ness,
Should yet be hungry!—Common mother, thou,

[Digging.
Whose womb unmeasurable, and infinite breast,*
Teems, and feeds all; whose self-same mettlic,
Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man, is puff'd,
Engenders the black toad, and adder blue,
The gilded newt, and eyeless venom'd worm,†
With all the abhorred births below crisp'd;
heaven
Whereon Hyperion's quickening fire doth shine;
Yield him, who all thy human sons doth hate,
From forth thy plenteous bosom one poor root!
Ensear thy fertile and conception's womb,
Let it no more bring out ingrateful man!
Go great with tigers, dragons, wolves, and bears
Teem with new monsters, whom thy upward
face
Hath to the marbled mansion all above
Never presented!—Oh! a root,—Dear thanks!
Diy up thy marrows, vines, and plough-torn leas;
Whereof ingrateful man, with liquorish draughts
And morsels unctuous, greases his pure mind,
That from it all consideration slips!

Enter APEMANTUS.
More man? Plague! plague!
Apem. I was directed hither: Men report,
Thou dost affect my manners, and dost use them.
Tim. 'Tis then, because thou dost not keep a dog
Whom I would imitate: Consumption catch thee!
Apem. This is in thee a nature but affected!
A poor unmanly melancholy, sprung
From change of fortune. Why this epade? this place?
This slave-like habit? and these looks of care?
Thy flatterers yet wear silk, drink wine, lie soft,
Hug their diseas'd perfumes, § and have forgot
That ever Timon was. Shame not these woods,
By putting on the cunning of a carper. ¶
Be thou a flatterer now, and seek to thrive
By that which has undone thee: hinge thy knee,
And let his very breath, whom thou'lt observe,
Blow off thy cap; praise this most vicious strain,
And call it excellent. Thou wast told this:
Thou gav'st thine ears, like tapsters, that bio
welcome,
To knaves, and all approachers. 'Tis most just,
That thou turn rascal; had'st thou wealth again, Rascals should hav't. Do not assume my like-
ness.

Tim. Were I like thee, I'd throw away myself.

Apem. Thou hast cast away thyself, being like
thyself;
A madman so long, now a fool: What think'st
That the bleak air, thy boisterous chamberlain,
Will put thy shirt on warm? Will these moss'd trees,
That have outliv'd the eagle, page thy heels,
And skip when thou point'st out? Will the cold brook,
Candied with ice, caudle thy morning taste,

To cure thy o'er-night's surfeit? call the creatures,—

Whose naked natures live in all the spite
Of wreakful heaven; whose bare unhoused trunks,

To the conflicting elements expos'd,
Answer mere nature,—bid them flatter thee.
Oh! thou shalt find—

Tim. A fool of thee: Depart.

Apem. I love thee better now than e'er I did.

Tim. I hate thee worse.

Apem. Why?

Tim. Thou flatter'st misery.

Apem. I flatter not; but say thou art a ca-tiff.

Tim. Why dost thou seek me out?

Apem. To vex thee.

Tim. Always a villain's office, or a fool's.
Dost please thyself in't?

Apem. Ay.

Tim. What! a knave too?

Apem. If thou dost put this sour cold habit on
To castigate thy pride, 'twere well; but thou
Dost it enforcedly; thou dost courtier be again,
Wert thou not beggar. Willing misery

Outlives uncertain pomp, is crown'd before:
The one is filling still, never complete;
The other, at high wish: Best state, contentless,
Hath a distracted and most wretched being,
Worse than the worst, content.

Thou should'st desire to die, being miserable.

Tim. Not by his breath,† that is more miserable.

Thou art a slave, whom Fortune's tender arm
With favour never clasp'd; but bred a dog.
Hadst thou, like us, from our first swath,‡ proceeded

The sweet degrees that this brief world affords
To such as may the passive drugs of it Freely command, thou would'st have plung'd
thyself

In general riot; melted down thy youth
In different beds of lust; and never learn'd
The precepts of respect,§ but follow'd
The sugar'd game before thee. But myself,
Who had the world as my confectionary;
The month's, the tongues, the eyes, and hearts of men

At duty, more than I could frame employment;
That numberless upon me stuck, as leaves
Do on the oak, bare with one winter's brush
Fell from their boughs, and left me open, bare
For every storm that blows. I, to bear this,
That never knew but better, is some burden:
Thy nature did commence in surfeiture, time
Hath made thee hard in't. Why should'st thou hate men?

They never flatter'd thee: What hast thou given?
If thou wilt curse,—thy father, that poor rag,
Must be thy subject; who, in spite, put stuff
To some she beggar, and compounded thee
Poor rogue hereditary. Hence! be gone!—
If thou hadst not been born the worst of men,
Thou hadst been a knave and flatterer.

Apem. Art thou proud yet?

Tim. Ay, that I am not thee.

Apem. I, that I was

No prodigal.

Tim. I, that I am one now;
Were all the wealth I have, shut up in thee,
I'd give thee leave to hang it. Get thee gone.—
That the whole life of Athens were in this!
Thus would I eat it. [Eating a root.]

Apem. Here; I will mend thy feast.

[Offering him something.]
Tim. First mend thy company, take away thyself.

Apem. So I shall mend mine own, by the lack of thine.

Tim. 'Tis not well mended so, it is but botch'd;
If not, I would it were.

Apem. What would'st thou have to Athens?

* Arrives sooner at the completion of his wishes.
† By his sentence.
‡ From infancy.
§ The cold admonitions of prudence.

Tim. Thine (rather in a whirlwind. If thou wilt,

Tell them there I have gold; look, so I have.

Apem. Here is no use for gold.

Tim. The best and truest:

For here it sleeps, and does no hired hatm.

Apem. Where liest o' nights, Timon?

Tim. Under that's above me.

Where feed'st thou o' days, Apemantus?

Apem. Where my stomach finds meat; or,
rather, where I eat it.

Tim. 'Would poison were obedient, and knew my mind!

Apem. Where would'st thou send it?

Tim. To sauce thy dishes.

Apem. The middle of humanity thou never knewest, but the extremity of both ends: When thou wast in thy gilt, and thy perfume, they mocked thee for too much curiosity,* in thy rags thou knowest none, but are despised for the contrary. There's a mediator for thee, eat it.

Tim. On what I hate, I feed not.

Apem. Dost hate a mediator?

Tim. Ay, though it look like thee.

Apem. An thou had'st hated meddlers sooner, thou should'st have loved thyself better now.
What man dost thou ever know unthrift, that was beloved after his means?

Tim. Who, without thee means thou talkest of, didst thou ever know beloved?

Apem. Myself.

Tim. I understand thee; thou had'st some means to keep a dog.

Apem. What things in the world canst thou nearest compare to thy flatterers?

Tim. Women nearest; but men, men are the things themselves. What would'st thou do with the world, Apemantus, if it lay in thy power?

Apem. Give it the beasts, to be rid of the
men.

Tim. Would'st thou have thyself fall in the confusion of men, and remain a beast with the beasts?

Apem. Ay, Timon.

Tim. A beastly ambition, which the gods grant thee to attain to! If thou wert the lion, the fox would beguile thee: if thou wert the lamb, the fox would eat thee: if thou wert the fox, the lion would suspect thee, when, peradventure, thou wert accused by the ass: if thou wert the ass, thy dulness would torment thee: and such thou livest but as a breakfast to the wolf: if thou wert the wolf, thy greediness would afflict thee, and oft thou should'st hazard thy life for thy dinner: wert thou the unicorn, pride and wrath would confound thee, and make thee own self the conquest of thy fury: wert thou a bear, thou would'st be killed by the horse; wert thou
a horse, thou would'st be seized by the leopard;
wert thou a leopard, thou wert german to the lion, and the spots of thy kindred were jurors on thy life: all thy safety were remoteness; and thy defence, absence. What beast could'st thou be, that were not subject to a beast? and what a beast art thou already, that sees not thy loss in transformation?

Apem. If thou could'st please me with speaking to me, thou might'st have hit upon it here:
The commonwealth of Athens is become a forest of beasts.

Tim. How has the ass broke the wall, that thou art out of the city?

Apem. Yonder comes a poet, and a painter:
The plague of company light upon thee! I will fear to catch it, and give way: When I know not what else to do, I'll see thee again.

Tim. When there is nothing living but thee, thou shalt be welcome. I had rather be a beggar's dog, than Apemantus.

Apem. Thou art the cap† of all the fools alive.

* For too much finical delicacy.

† I.e. In being placed at a distance from the lion.
‡ The top.

Tim. 'Would thou wert clean enough to spit upon.
Apem. A plague on thee, thou art too bad to curse.
Tim. All villains that do stand by thee, are pure.
Apem. There is no leprosy but what thou speak'st.
Tim. If I name thee.—
 I'll beat thee,—but I should infect my hands.
Apem. I would my tongue could rot them off!
Tim. Away, thou issue of a mangy dog!
Choler doth kill me that thou art alive;
 I swoon to see thee.
Apem. 'Would thou would'st burst!
Tim. Away,
 Thou tedious rogue! I am sorry I shall lose
 A stone by thee. [Throws a stone at him.]
Apem. Beast!
Tim. Slave!
Apem. Toad!
Tim. Rogue, rogue, rogue!
 [APIMANTUS retreats backwards, as going.]
 I am sick of this false world; and will love
 Nought
 But even the mere necessities upon it.
 Then, Timon, presently prepare thy grave;
 Lie where the light foam of the sea may beat
 Thy grave-stone daily: make thine epitaph,
 That death in me at others' lives may laugh.
 O thou sweet king-killer, and dear divorce
 [Looking on the gold.]
 'Twixt natural son and sure! thou bright defiler
 Of Hymen's purest bed! thou valiant Mars!
 Thou ever young, fre-h, lov'd, and delicate wooer,
 Whose blush doth thaw the consecrated snow
 That lies on Dian's lap! thou visible god,
 That soldier'st close impossibilities,
 And mak'st them kiss! that speak'st with every
 tongue,
 To every purpose! O thou touch* of hearts!
 Think, thy slave man rebels; and by thy virtue
 Set them into contending odds; that beasts
 May have the world in empire!
Apem. 'Would twice so—
 But not till I am dead!—I'll say, thou hast gold:
 Thou wilt be throng'd to shortly.
Tim. Throng'd to?
Apem. Ay.
Tim. Thy back, I pry thee.
Apem. Live, and love thy misery!
Tim. Long live so, and so die!—I am quit.—
 [Exit APIMANTUS.]
 More things like men?—Eat, Timon, and abhor
 them.

Enter THIEVES.

1 Thief. Where should he have this gold? It is some poor fragment, some slender part of his remainder: The mere want of gold, and the falling-from of his friends, drove him into this melancholy.

2 Thief. It is noised, he hath a mass of treasure.

3 Thief. Let us make the assay upon him: if he care not for't, he will supply us easily; if he covetously reserve it, how shall'st get it?

2 Thief. True; for he bears it not about him 'tis hid.

1 Thief. Is not this he?

Thieves. Where?

2 Thief. 'Tis his description.

3 Thief. He; I know him.

Thieves. Save thee, Timon.

Tim. Now thieves?

Thieves. Soldiers, not thieves.

Tim. Both too; and women's sons.

Thieves. We are not thieves, but men that much do want.

Tim. Your greatest want is, you want much of meat, [roots;]

 Why should you want? Behold, the earth hath Within this nule break forth a hundred springs

 The oaks bear mast, the briars scarlet lups;
 The bounteous housewife, nature, on each bush
 Lays her full mess before you. Want? why want?

Thief. We cannot live on grass, on berries,
 As beasts, and birds, and fishes.

Tim. Nor on the beasts themselves, the birds,
 and fishes;

and fishes;
 You must eat men. Yet thanks I must you
 That you are thieves profess'd; that you work
 not

In holier shapes: for there is boundless theft
 In limited* professions. Rascal thieves,

Here's gold: Go, seek the subtle blood of the grape,

Till the high fever seeth your blood to froth,
 And so 'scape hanging: trust not the physician;

His antidotes are poison, and he slays
 More than you rob: take wealth and lives to-

Do villany, do, since you profess to do't,
 Like workmen. I'll example you with thievery:

The sun's a thief, and with his great attraction
 Robs the vast sea: the moon's an arrant thief,

And her pale fire she snatches from the sun:
 The sea's a thief, whose liquid surge resolves

The moon into salt tears: the earth's a thief,
 That feeds and breeds by a composture† stolen

From general excrement: each thing's a thief:
 The laws, your curb and whip, in their rough

power
 Have uncheck'd theft. Love not yourselves:
 Rob one another. There's more gold: Cut

throats;
 All that you meet are thieves: To Athens, go,
 Break open shops; nothing can you steal,

But thieves do lose it: Steal not less, for this
 I give you; and gold confound you howsoever!

Amen.
 [TIMON retires to his Cave.]

3 Thief. He has almost charmed me from my profession, by persuading me to it.

1 Thief. 'Tis in the malice of mankind, that he thus advises us; not to have us thrive in our mystery.

2 Thief. I'll believe him as an enemy, and give o'er my trade.

1 Thief. Let us first see peace in Athens;
 There is no time so miserable, but a man may be true. [Exit THIEVES.]

Enter FLAVIUS.

Flav. O you gods!
 Is you despis'd and ruinous man my lord?
 Fail of decay and railing? O monument
 And wonder of good deeds evilly bestow'd!
 What an alteration of honour! has Desperate want made!

What viler thing upon the earth, than friends,
 Who can bring noblest minds to basest ends!
 How rarely§ does it meet with this time's guise,

When man was wish'd|| to love his enemies:
 Grant, I may ever love, and rather woo [do!]
 Those that would mischief me, than those that
 He has caught me in his eye: I will present
 My honest grief unto him; and, as my lord,
 Still serve him with my life.—My dearest
 master!

TIMON comes forward from his Cave.

Tim. Away! what art thou?

Flav. Have you forgot me, Sir? [men;]

Tim. Why dost ask that? I have forgot all Then, if thou grant'st thou'rt man, I have forgot thee.

Flav. An honest poor servant of yours.

Tim. Then

I know thee not: I ne'er had honest man
 About me, I: all that I kept were knaves,
 To serve in meat to villains.

Flav. The gods are witness,

* Legal.

† Manure.

‡ I. e. From an honourable state to one of disgrace.

§ How happily.

|| Recommended.

Ne'er did poor steward wear a truer grief
For his undone lord, than mine eyes for you.

Tim. What, dost thou weep?—Come nearer:

—then I love thee,

Because thou art a woman, and disclaim'st
Flinty mankind; whose eyes do never give,
But through long and laughter. Pity's sleeping:

Strange times, that weep with laughing, not with weeping!

Flav. I beg of you to know me good my lord, [lasts,

To accept my grief, and whilst this poor wealth
To entertain me as your steward still.

Tim. Had I a steward so true, so just, and
So comfortable? It almost turns [now
My dangerous nature wild. Let me behold
Thy face.—Surely, this man was born of wo-

man.—
Forgive my general and exceptless rashness,
Perpetual-sober gods! I do proclaim

One honest man,—mistake me not,—but one:

No more, I pray,—and he is a steward.—

How fain would I have hated all mankind,

And thou redeem'st thyself: but all save thee,

I fell with curses. [wise,

Methinks, thou art more honest now, than

For, by oppressing and betraying me,

Thou might'st have sooner got another service.

For many so arrive at second masters,

Upon their first lord's neck. But tell me true,

(For I must ever doubt, though ne'er so sure,)

Is not thy kindness subtle, covetous,

If not a usuring kindness; and as rich men deal

gills,

Expecting in return twenty for one?

Flav. No, my most worthy master, in whose breast

Doubt and suspect, alas, are plac'd too late:

You should have fear'd false times, when you did feast:

Suspect still comes where an estate is least.

That which I show, heaven knows, is merely

love,

Duty and zeal to your unmatched mind,

Care of your food and living: and, believe it,

My most honour'd lord,

For any benefit that points to me,

Either in hope, or present, I'd exchange

For this one wish, That you had power and wealth

To requite me, by making rich yourself.

Tim. Look thee, 'tis so!—Thou singly honest

Here take:—the gods out of my misery [man,

Have sent thee treasure. Go, live rich, and happy: [men; *

But thus condition'd; Thou shalt build from

Hate all, curse all: show charity to none;

But let the famish'd flesh slide from the bone,

Ere thou relieve the beggar: give to dogs

What thou deny'st to men; let prisons swallow

them,

Debts wither them: Be men like blasted woods,

And may diseases lick up their false bloods!

And so, farewell, and thrive.

Flav. O let me stay,

And comfort you, my master.

Tim. If thou hat'st

Curses, stay not: fly, whilst thou'rt bless'd and free:

Ne'er see thou man, and let me ne'er see thee.

[Exeunt severally.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The same.—Before TIMON'S Cave.

Enter POET and PAINTER; TIMON behind, unseen.

Pain. As I took note of the place, it cannot be far where he abides.

* Away from the shades of men.

Poet. What's to be thought of him? Does the rumour hold for true, that he is so full of gold?

Pain. Certain: Alcibiades reports it; Phrynia and Timandra had gold of him: he likewise enriched poor straggling soldiers with great quantity: 'Tis said, he gave unto his steward a mighty sum.

Poet. Then this breaking of his has been but a try for his friends.

Pain. Nothing else: you shall see him a palm in Athens again, and flourish with the highest.
Therefore, 'tis not amiss, we tender our loves to him, in this supposed distress of his: it will show honestly in us; and is very likely to load our purposes with what they travel for, if it be a just and true report that goes of his having.

Poet. What have you now to present unto
him?

Pain. Nothing at this time but my visitation:
only I will promise him an excellent piece.

Poet. I must serve him so too: tell him of an intent that's coming toward him.

Pain. Good as the best. Promising is the very air o'the time: it opens the eyes of expectation: performance is ever the duller for his act; and, but in the plainer and simpler kind of people, the deed of saying * is quite out of use.
To promise is most courtly and fashionable: performance is a kind of will and testament, which argues a great sickness in his judgment that makes it.

Tim. Excellent workman! Thou canst not paint a man so bad as is thyself.

Poet. I am thinking what I shall say I have provided for him: It must be a personating of himself: a satire against the softness of prosperity, with a discovery of the adulate flatteries that follow youth and opulence.

Tim. Must thou needs stand for a villain in thine own work? Wilt thou whip thine own faults in other men? Do so, I have gold for
thee.

Poet. Nay, let's seek him:

Then do we in against our own estate,

When we may profit meet, and come too late.

Pain. True;

When the day serves, before black-corner'd

night,

Find what thou want'st by free and offer'd light.

Tim. I'll meet you at the turn. What a god's

gold,

That he is worship'd in a baser temple,

Than where swine feed!

'Tis thou that rig'st the bark, and plough'st the foam;

Settlest admir'd reverence in a slave:

To thee be worship! and thy saints for aye

Be crown'd with plagues, that thee alone obey!

'Tis I do meet them. [Advancing.

Poet. Hail, worthy Timon!

Pain. Our late noble master.

Tim. Have I once liv'd to see two honest

men?

Poet. Sir,

Having often of your open bounty tasted,

Hearing you were retir'd, your friends fall'n off,

Whose thankless natures—O adored spirits!

Not all the whips of heaven are large enough—

What I to you!

Whose star-like nobleness gave life and influence

To their whole being! I'm rapt and cannot cover

The monstrous bulk of this ingratitude

With any size of words.

Tim. Let it go naked, men may see't the

better:

You, that are honest, by being what you are,

Make them best seen, and known.

Pain. He, and myself,

Have travell'd in the great shower of your gifts

And sweetly felt it.

* The doing of what we have said we would do.

Tim. Ay, you are honest men.

Pain. We are hither come to offer you our service.

Tim. Most honest men! Why, how shall I requit you?

Can you eat roots, and drink cold water? no.

Both. What we can do, we'll do, to do you service.

Tim. You are honest men: You have heard that I have gold;

I am sure you have: speak truth: you are honest men.

Pain. So it is said, my noble lord: but there—
Came not my friend, nor I [fore]

Tim. Good honest men!—Thou draw'st a counterfeit.*

Best in all Athens: thou art, indeed, the best;
Thou counterfeit'st most lively.

Pain. So, so, my lord.

Tim. Even so, Sir, as I say:—And, for thy fiction, [To the Poet.

Why thy verse swells with stuff so hue and smooth,

That thou art even natural in thine art.—

But, for all this, my honest-natur'd friends,
I must needs say, you have a little fault:

Marry, 'tis not monstrous in you; neither wish I,
You take much pains to mend.

Both. Beseech your honour,
To make it known to us.

Tim. You'll take it ill.

Both. Most thankfully, my lord.

Tim. Will you, indeed?

Both. Doubt it not, worthy lord.

Tim. There's ne'er a one of you but trusts a
That mightily deceives you. [kneave]

Both. Do we, my lord?

Tim. Ay, and you hear him cog, see him dissemble,

Know his gross patchery, love him, feed him,
Keep in your bosom: yet remain assur'd,

That he's a made-up villain.†

Pain. I know none such, my lord.

Poet. Nor I.

Tim. Look you, I love you well; I'll give you gold,

Rid me these villains from your companies:

Hang them, or stab them, drown them in a draught;

Confound them by some course, and come to me,
I'll give you gold enough.

Both. Name them, my lord, let's know them.

Tim. You that way, and you this, but two in company:—

Each man apart, all single and alone,

Yet an arch villain keeps him company.

If, where thou art, two villains shall not be.

[To the Painter.
Come not near him.—If thou would'st not reside

[To the Poet.
But where one villain is, then him abandon.—

Hence! pack! there's gold, ye came for gold, ye slaves! [Hence!]

You have done work for me, there's payment:
You are an alchymist, make gold of that:—

Out, rascal dogs!

[Exit, beating and driving them out.]

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter FLAVIUS, and two SENATORS.

Flav. It is in vain that you would speak with
For he is set so only to himself, [Timon;
That nothing but himself, which looks like man,
Is friendly with him.

1 Sen. Bring us to his cave:

It is our part and promise to the Athenians,
To speak with Timon.

2 Sen. At all times alike

Men are not still the same: 'Twas time, and griefs,

That fram'd him thus: time, with his fairer hand,

Offering the fortunes of his former days,
The former man may make him: Bring us to
And chance it as it may. [him,

Flav. Here is his cave.—

Peace and content be here! Lord Timon! Timon!
Look out, and speak to friends: The Athenians,

By two of their most reverend senate, greet
Speak to them, noble Timon. [thee:]

Enter TIMON.

Tim. Thou son, that comfort'st, burn!—Speak, and be bang'd:

For each true word, a blister! and each false
Be as a caut'rizing to the root o'the tongue,
Consuming it with speaking!

1 Sen. Worthy Timon—

Tim. Of none but such as you, and you of Timon.

2 Sen. The senators of Athens greet thee, Timon.

Tim. I thank them; and would send them back the plague,

Could I but catch it for them.

1 Sen. Oh! forget

What we are sorry for ourselves in thee.

The senators, with one consent of love,*

Entreat thee back to Athens; who have thought
On special dignities, which vacant lie

For thy best use and wear†

2 Sen. They confess,

Toward thee, forgetfulness too general, gross:

Which now the public body,—which doth seldom
Play the recanter,—feeling in itself

A lack of Timon's aid, hath sense withal

Of its own fall, restraining aid to Timon;

And send forth us, to make their sorrowed render,†

Together with a recompense more fruitful
Than their offence can weigh down by the dram;

Ay, even such heaps and sums of love and
wealth,

As shall to thee blot out what wrongs were theirs,

And write in thee the figures of their love,
Ever to read them thine.

Tim. You witch me in it;

Surprise me to the very brink of tears:

Lend me a fool's heart, and a woman's eyes,

And I'll bewep these comforts, worthy senators.

1 Sen. Therefore, so please thee to return
with us,

And of our Athens (thine, and ours,) to take

The captainship, thou shalt be met with thanks, Allow'd† with absolute power, and thy good
name

Live with authority:—so soon we shall drive back
Of Alcibiades the approaches wild;

Who, like a bear too savage, doth root up
His country's peace.

2 Sen. And shakes his threatening sword
Against the walls of Athens.

1 Sen. Therefore, Timon,—

Tim. Well, Sir, I will; therefore, I will, Sir, Thus,—

If Alcibiades kill my countrymen,

Let Alcibiades know this of Timon, [Athens,
That—Timon cares not. But if he sack fair

And take our goodly aged men by the beards,

Giving our holy virgins to the stain

Of contumelious, beastly, mad-brain'd war;

Then, let him know,—and tell him Timon speaks
it,

In pity of our aged, and our youth,

I cannot chuse but tell him, that—I care not,

And let him tak't at worse; for their knives care
not,

While you have throats to answer: for myself,

There's not a whistle in the unruly camp,

But I do prize it at my love, before [you
The reverend'st throat in Athens. So I leave

* As a portrait was then called.

† A complete villain. ‡ In a jakes, or house of office.

* With an united voice of affection.

† Confession.

‡ Licensed.

§ A clasp knife.

To the protection of the prosperous gods,*
As thieves to keepers.

Flav. Stay not, all's in vain.

Tim. Why, I was writing of my epitaph,
It will be seen to-morrow; My long sickness
Of health,† and living, now begins to mend,
And nothing brings me all things. Go, live
still;

Be Alcibiades your plague, you his,
and last so long enough!

1 Sen. We speak in vain.

Tim. But yet I love my country: and am not
One that rejoices in the common wreck,
As common bruit; doth put it.

1 Sen. That's well spoke.

Tim. Commend me to my loving country-
men,—

1 Sen. These words become your lips as they pass through them.

2 Sen. And enter in our ears like great trium-phers

In their applauding gates.

Tim. Commend me to them;

And tell them, that, to ease them of their griefs,
Their fears of hostile strokes, their aches, losses,
Their pangs of love, with other incident throes
That nature's fragile vessel doth sustain
In life's uncertain voyage, I will some kindness do
them:

I'll teach them to prevent wild Alcibiades' wrath.

2 Sen. I like this well, he will return again.

Tim. I have a tree, which grows here in my close,

That mine own use invites me to cut down,
And shortly must I fell it; Tell my friends,
Tell Athens, in the sequence of degree,‡
From high to low throughout, that whoso please
To stop affliction, let him take his haste,
Come hither, ere my tree hath felt the axe,
And hang himself:—I pray you do my greet-
ing.

Flav. Trouble him no further, thus you still shall find him.

Tim. Come not to me again: but say to Athens,

Timon hath made his everlasting mansion
Upon the beached verge of the salt flood,
Which once a day with his embosomed froth,
The turbulent surge shall cover; thither come,
And let my grave-stone be your oracle,—
Lips, let sour words go by, and language end:
What is amiss, plague and infection mend!
Graves only be men's works; and death, their gain!

Sun, hide thy beams! Timon hath done his reign. [Exit Timon.]

1 Sen. His discontent is unremoveably coupled to his grief.

2 Sen. Our hope in him is dead: let us return.

And strain what other means is left unto us
Our dear † peril.

3 Sen. It requires swift foot. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—The Walls of Athens.

Enter two SENATORS, and a MESSENGER.

1 Sen. Thou hast painfully discover'd; are his files

As full as thy report, the least:
Mess. I have not the least:
Besides, his expectations promises
Present approach.

2 Sen. We stand much hazard, if they bring not Timon.

Mess. I met a courier, one mine ancient
friend;—

Whom, though in general part we were oppos'd,
Yet our old love made a particular force,

* The gods who especially dispense prosperity.

† The disease of life is drawing to a period.

‡ Report. In due succession from highest to lowest. | Swollen truth. | Dreadful.

And made us speak like friends:—this man was riding

From Alcibiades to Timon's cave,
With letters of entreaty, which import'd
His fellowship i'th' cause against your city,
In part for his sake mov'd.

Enter SENATORS from TIMON.

1 Sen. Here come our brothers.

2 Sen. No talk of Timon, nothing of him expect.—

The enemies' drum is heard, and fearful scour-
Doth choke the air with dust: in and prepare;
Ours is the fall, I fear; our foes, the sure.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV.—The Woods.—TIMON'S Cave, and a Tomb-stone seen.

Enter a SOLDIER, seeking TIMON.

Sol. By all description this should be the place.

Who's here? speak, ho!—No answer?—What is
this?

Timon is dead, who hath outstretch'd his span:
Some beast rear'd this; there does not live a man.
Dead, sure; and this his grave.—
What's on this tomb I cannot read; the character
I'll take with wax.

Our captain hath in every figure skill;
An ag'd interpreter, though young in days;
Before proud Athens he's set down by this.
Whose fall the mark of his ambition is. [Exit.]

SCENE V.—Before the Walls of Athens.

Trumpets sound. Enter ALCEBIADES, and Forces.

Alcib. Sound to this coward and lascivious town
Our terrible approach. [A Parley sounded.]

Enter SENATORS on the Walls.

Till now you have gone on, and fill'd the tune
With all licentious measure, making your wills
The scope of justice; till now, myself, and such

As slept within the shadow of your power,
Have wander'd with our traders' arms,* and breath'd,

Our sufferance vainly: Now the time is flush;
When crouching marrow, in the bearer strong,
Cries, of itself, No more: now breathless wrong,
Shall sit and pant in your great chairs of ease;
And pury insolence shall break his wind,
With fear and horrid flight.

1 Sen. Noble and young,
When thy first griefs were but a mere conceit,
Ere thou hadst power, or we had cause of fear,
We sent to thee; to give thy rages balm,
To wipe out our ingratitude with loves
Above their quantity.

2 Sen. So did we too
Transformed Timon to our city's love,
By humble message, and by promise'd means;†
We were not all unkind, nor all deserve
The common stroke of war.

1 Sen. These walls of ours
Were not erected by thy hands, from whom
You have receiv'd your griefs: nor are they such,
Than these great towers, trophies, and schools should fall

For private faults in them.

2 Sen. Nor are they living,
Who were the motives that you first went out;
Shame, that they wanted cunning, in excess
Hath broke their hearts. March, noble lord,
Into our city with thy banners spread:
By decimation, and a tithe'd death,
(If thy revenges hunger for that food,
Which nature loaths,) take thou the death'd tenth;

* Arms revers'd.

† Means.

‡ I.e. By promising him a competent substance.

And by the hazard of the spotted die,
Let die the spotted.

1 Sen. All have not offended;
For those that were, it is not square,* to take,
On those that are, revenges: crimes like lands,
Are not inherited. Then, dear countryman,
Bring in thy ranks, but leave without thy rage:
Spare thy Athenian cradle, and those kin,
Which, in the bluster of thy wrath, must fall,
With those that have offended: like a shepherd,
Approach the fold, and call the infected forth.
But kill not altogether.

2 Sen. What thou wilt,
Thou rather shalt enforce it with thy smile.
Than hew to't with thy sword.

1 Sen. Set but thy foot
Against our rampir'd gates, and they shall open:
So thou wilt send thy gentle heart before,
To say, thou'lt enter friendly.

2 Sen. Throw thy glove.
Or any token of thine honour else,
That thou wilt use the wars as thy redress,
And not as our confusion, all thy powers
Shall make their harbour in our town, till we Have seal'd thy full desire.

Alcib. Then there's my glove;
Descend, and open your uncharged ports;
Those enemies of Timon's, and mine own,
Whom you yourselves shall set out for reproof,
I'll, and no more: and,—to atone† your fears
With my more noble meaning,—not a man
Shall pass his quarter, or offend the stream
Of regular justice in your city's bounds,
But shall be remedied, to your public laws
At heaviest answer.

* Not regular, not equitable.
† Unattacked gate. ‡ Reconcile.

Both. 'Tis most nobly spoken.

Alcib. Descend, and keep your words.

The SENATORS descend, and open the Gates.

Enter a SOLDIER.

Sold. My noble general, Timon is dead;
Entomb'd upon the very hem o'the sea:
And on his grave-stone, this insculpture; which
With wax I brought away, whose soft impression
Interprets for my poor ignorance.

Alcib. [Reads.] *Here lies a wretched corpse,
Of wretched soul bereft:*

Seek not my name: A plague consume you Wicked catiffs left!

Here lie I Timon; who, alive, all living men Did hate:

Pass by, and curse thy fill; but pass, and Stay not here thy gait.

These well express in thee thy latter spirits:
Though thou abhorr'dst in us our human griefs, Scorn'dst our brain's flow,* and those our drop lets which
From nigard nature fall, yet rich conceit
Taught thee to make vast Neptune weep for aye
On thy low grave, on faults forgiven. Dead
Is noble Timon; of whose memory
Hereafter more,—bring me into your city
And I will use the olive with my sword:
Make war breed peace; make peace stunt† war,
make each
Prescribe to other, as each other's leech.‡
Let our drums strike. [Exeunt

* I. e. Our tears. † Physician.
‡ Stop.

PERICLES, PRINCE OF TYRE.

LITERARY AND HISTORICAL NOTICE.

THIS play, the authorship of which has been much disputed, was probably written about the year 1608. Pope ranks it among "the wretched pieces," which cannot be attributed to Shakspeare; but Malone, who divided it into scenes, considers the internal evidence, (such as the congenial sentiments, the situation of the persons, the colour of the style, and the similitude of its expressions, to passages in his undisputed dramas) sufficiently decisive as to his having written the last three acts, and occasional portions of the preceding two. Indeed, unless it be considered as the production of some inferior playwright, amended by Shakspeare, an earlier date must be assigned to its production, than acknowledged authorities will warrant; for no play in the English language is so incorrect as this—the metre is seldom attended to—verse is frequently printed as prose—and the grossest errors appear throughout. With all these faults, however, it is mentioned as a very popular performance, and may still be read with pleasure; for it abounds with situations of difficulty and danger, is full of bustle and vivacity, the interest never lags, and the results are all gratifying. Some of the dialogues are nevertheless gross and nonsensical—those which take place in the brothel are superlatively disgusting, nor can they be excused by the moral intended to be drawn from them. Steevens, upon this portion, has judiciously remarked, that Marina, who is designed for a character of juvenile innocence, appears much too knowing in the impurities of a brothel, nor are her expressions more chastised than her ideas. Theunities of time and place are equally outraged: the action of the piece is alternately occurring at Antioch in Syria—Tyre in Phœnicia—Tarsus in Cilicia—Mitylene in the island of Lesbos—and Ephesus the capital of Ionia. The story on which the play is founded, is of great antiquity; but the dramatic hero bears no resemblance to his great Athenian namesake. It is taken from the history of Appollonius, King of Tyre, in the Gesta Romanorum, a very old book; which is also related by Gower, in his Confessio Amantis, a poem. Many incidents of the plot may be found in the latter work, and even a few of its particular expressions; and, therefore, as Gower himself is introduced, (like the chorus of old) it is reasonable to suppose that Shakspeare chiefly followed the work of that poet.

ACT I.

Enter GOWER.

Before the Palace of Antioch.

To sing a song of old * was sung,
From whose ancient Gower is come;
Assuming man's infirmities,
To glad your ear, and please your eyes.
It hath been sung at festivals,
On ember-eves, and holy ales; †
And lords and ladies of their lives
Have read it for restoratives:
Purpose to make men glorious;
Et quo antiquius, eo melius
Born in these latter times,
I'll give you a more ripe, accept my rhymes,
And that I hear an old man sing,
May to your wishes pleasure bring,

* I. e. That of old.

† Whitsun-ales, &c.

I life would wish and that I might,
Waste it for you, like taper-light.—
This city then, Antioch the great
Built up for his chieftest seat;
The fairest in all Syria;
(I tell you what mine authors say:)
This king unto him took a pheere,
Who died and left a female heir,
So buxom, blithe, and full of face,
As heaven had lent her all his grace,
With whom the father liking took,
And her to incest did provoke:
Bad father! to entice his own
To evil, should be done by none.
By custom, what they did begin,
Was, with long use, account † no sin.
The beauty of this sinful dame
Made many princes thither frame,

* Wife, the word signifies a mate or companion.
† Accounted.

To seek her as a bed-fellow,
In marriage pleasures play fellow :
Which to prevent, he made a law,
(To keep her still, and men in awe,)
That whoso ask'd her for his wife,
His riddle told not, lost his life :
So for her many a wight did die,
As yon grim looks do testify.*

What now ensues, to the judgment of your eye
I give, my cause who best can justify.

[Exit.]

SCENE I.—Antioch.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter ANTIOCHUS, PERICLES, and Attendants.

Ant. Young prince of Tyre, you have at large
receiv'd

The danger of the task you undertake.

Per. I have, Antiochus; and with a soul
Embolden'd with the glory of her praise,
Think death no hazard, in this enterprise.

[Music.]

Ant. Bring in our daughter clothed like a bride,
For the embacements even of Jove himself;
At whose conception, (till Lucina reign'd,)
Nature thus dowry gave, to glad her presence,
The senate-house of planets all did sit,
To knit in her their best perfections.

Enter the DAUGHTER of ANTIOCHUS.

Per. See where she comes, apparell'd like the spring,
Graces her subjects, and her thoughts the king
Of every virtue gives rein to men;
Her face, the book of praises, where is read
Nothing but curious pleasures, as from thence Sorrow were ever raz'd, and testy wrath
Could never be her mild companion.
Ye gods that made me man, and sway in love,
That have inflam'd desire within my breast,
To taste the fruit of you celestial tree,
Or die in this adventure,—be my helps,
As I am son and servant to your will,
To compass such a boundless happiness!

Ant. Prince Pericles,—
Per. That would be son to great Antiochus.

Ant. Before thee stands this fair Hesperides,
With golden fruit, but dangerous to be touch'd;
For death-like dragons here affright thee hard:
Her face, like heaven, enticeth thee to view
A countless glory, which desert must gain:
And which, without desert, because thine eye
Presumes to reach, all thy whole heap must die.
You' sometime famous prizes, like thyself,
Drawn by report, advent'rous by desire,
Tell thee with speechless tongues, and semblance pale,

That, without covering, save you' field of stars,
They here stand martyrs, slain in Cupid's wars:
And with dead cheeks advise thee to desist,
For going on death's net, whom none resist.

Per. Antiochus, I thank thee, who hast taught
My frail mortality to know itself,
And by those fearful objects to prepare
This body, like to them, to what I must:
For death remember'd, should be like a mirror,
Who tells us life's but breath; to trust it, error.
I'll make my will then; and as sick men do,
Who know the world, see heaven, but feeling
woe,

Gripe not at earthly joys, as erst they did:
So I bequeath a happy peace to you,
And all good men, as every prince should do;
My riches to the earth from whence they came;
But my unspotted fire of love to you.

[To the DAUGHTER of ANTIOCHUS.]

Thus ready for the way of life or death,
I wait the sharpest blow, Antiochus,
Scorning advice.

Ant. Read the conclusion then;
Which read, and not expounded, 'tis decreed,
As these before thee, thou thyself shalt bleed.

Daugh. In all, save that, may'st thou prove prosperous!

Per. Like a bold champion, I assume the lists,

Nor ask advice of any other thought
But faithfulness, and courage.

[He reads the Riddle.]

*I am no viper, yet I feed
On mother's flesh, which did me breed:
I sought a husband, in which labour,
I found that kindness in a father.
He's father, son, and husband mild,
I mother, wife, and yet his child.
How they may be, and yet in two,
As you will live, resolve it you.*

Sharp physic is the last: but, O you powers!
That give heaven countless eyes to view men's acts,

Why cloud they not their sights perpetually,
If this be true, which makes me pale to read it?
Fair glass of light, I lov'd you, and could still,
[Takes hold of the hand of the princess.]
Were not this glorious casket stor'd with ill:

But I must tell you,—now, my thoughts revolt;
For he's no man on whom perfectness wait,
That knowing sin within, will touch the gate.
You're a fair viol, and your sense the strings;
Who, finger'd to make man his lawful music,
Would draw heaven down, and all the gods to hearken;

But, being play'd upon before your time,
Hell only danceth at so harsh a clume:
Good sooth, I care not for you.

Ant. Prince Pericles, touch not, upon thy life,
For that's an article within our law,
As dangerous as the rest. Your time's expir'd:
Either expound now, or receive your sentence.

Per. Great king,
Few love to hear the sins they love to act:
'Twould 'braud yourself too near for me to tell it.

Who has a book of all that monarchs do,
He's more secure to keep it shut, than shown;
For vice repeated, is like the wand'ring wind,
Blows dust in others' eyes, to spread itself;
And yet the end of all is bought thus dear,
The breath is gone, and the sore eyes see clear:
To stop the air would hurt them. The blind mole casts

Copp'd * hills towards heaven, to tell the earth is wrong'd [die for't.]

By man's oppression; and the poor worm doth Kings are earth's gods: in vice their law's their will;

And if Jove stray, who dares say, Jove doth ill?
It is enough you know; and it is fit,
What, being more known, grows worse, to smother it.

All love the womb that their first beings bred,
Then give my tongue like leave to love my
head.

Ant. Heaven, that I had thy head; He has found the meaning:—

But I will glaze † with him. [Aside.] Young prince of Tyre,

Though by the tenour of our strict edict,
Your exposition misinterpreting,
We might proceed to cancel of your days; ‡
Yet hope, succeeding from so fair a tree
As your fair self, doth tune us otherwise:
Forty days longer we do respite you;
If by which time our secret be undone,
This mercy shows, we'll joy in such a son;
And, until then, your entertain shall be,
As doth befit our honour, and your worth.

[Exit ANTIOCHUS, his DAUGHTER, and Attendants.]

* Pointing to the scene of the palace gate at Antioch, on which the heads of these unfortunate wights were fixed.
† I.e. That given.

* Rising to a top or head.
† Or, play falsely with him. ‡ To take away your life.

Per. How courtesy would seem to cover sin !
When what is done is like an hypocrite,
The which is good in nothing but in sight.
If it be true that I interpret false,
Then were it certain you were not so bad,
As with foul incest to abuse your soul :
Where * now you're both a father and a son,
By your untimely clasps with your child,
(Which pleasure fits an husband, not a father :)
And she an eater of her mother's flesh,
By the defiling of her parent's bed ;
And both like serpents are, who though they feed
On sweetest flowers, yet they poison breed.
Antioch, farewell ! for wisdom sees, those men
Blush not in actions blacker than the night,
Will shun no course to keep them from the
light :
One sin, I know, another doth provoke ;
Murder's as near to lust, as flame to smoke :
Poison and treason are the hands of sin,
Ay, and the targets, to put off the shame :—
Then, lest my life be crop'd to keep you clear,
By flight I'll shun the danger which I fear.

[Exit.

Re-enter ANTIOCHUS.

Ant. He hath found the meaning, for the which we mean
To have his head.
He must not live to trumpet forth my infamy,
Nor tell the word, Antiochus doth sin
In such a loathed manner :
And therefore instantly, this prince must die ;
For by his fall my honour must keep high.
Who attends on us there ?

Enter THALIARD.

Thal. Doth your highness call ?

Ant. Thaliard, you're of our chamber, and our mind
Partakes her private actions to your secrecy ;
And for your faithfulness we will advance you.
Thaliard, behold, here's poison, and here's gold :
We hate the prince of Tyre, and thou must kill
him.

It fits thee not to ask the reason why,
Because we bid it. Say, is it done ?

Thal. My lord,
'Tis done.

Enter a MESSENGER.

Ant. Enough :
Lest your breath cool yourself, telling your haste.
Mess. My lord, prince Pericles is dead.

[Exit MESSENGER.

Ant. As thou
Wilt live, fly after : and, as an arrow, shot
From a well experienced archer, hits the mark
His eye doth level at, so ne'er return,
Unless thou say, Prince Pericles is dead.

Thal. My lord, if I
Can get him once within my pistol's length,
I'll make him sure : so farewell to your highness.

[Exit.

Ant. Thaliard, adieu ! till Pericles be dead,
My heart can lend no succour to my head.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—Tyre.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter PERICLES, HELICANUS, and other Lords.

Per. Let none disturb us : Why this charge of thoughts ?

The sad companion, dull-eyed melancholy,
By me us'd a guest is, not an hour,
In the day's glorious walk or peaceful night,
(The time where grief should sleep,) can breed
the quiet !

Here pleasures court mine eyes, and mine eyes
shun them,
And danger, which I feared, is at Antioch,
Whose arm seems far too short too hit me here :

* Whereas.

Yet neither pleasure's art can joy my spirits,
Nor yet the other's distance comfort me.
Then it is thus : the passions of the mind,
That have their first conception by mis-dead,
Have after-nourishment and life by care ;
And what was first but fear what might be
done,

Grows elder now, and cares it be not done. *
And so with me :—the great Antiochus
(Gainst whom I am too little to contend,
Since he's so great, can make his will his act,)
Will think me speaking, though I swear to silence ;

Nor boots it me to say, I honour him,
If he suspect I may dishonour him :
And what may make him blush in being known,
He'll stop the course by which it might be
known :

With hostile forces he'll o'erspread the land,
And with the ostent of war will look so huge,
Amazement shall drive courage from the state ;
Our men be vanquish'd, ere they do resist,
And subjects punish'd, that ne'er thought of fence :

Which care of them, not pity of myself,
(Who am no more but as the tops of trees,
Which fence the roots they grow by, and defend
them.)

Makes both my body pine, and soul to languish,
And punish that before, that he would punish.

1 Lord. Joy and all comfort in your sacred
breast !

2 Lord. And keep your mind, till you return
Peaceful and comfortable ! [to u,

Hil. Peace, peace, my lords, and give experience tongue.

They do abuse the king, that flatter him
For flattery is the bellows blows up sin ;
The thing the which is flatter'd, but a spark,
To which that breath gives heat and stronger glowing :

Whereas reproof, obedient and in order,
Fits kings, as they are men, for they may err.
When signior Sooth here does proclaim a peace,
He flatters you, makes war upon your life :
Prince, pardon me, or strike me, if you please ;
cannot be much lower than my knees.

Per. All leave us else : but let your cares o'erlook

What shipping and what lading's in our haven,
And hush return to us. [Exit Lords.] Helic-anus, thou

Hast moved us : what seest thou in our looks ?
Lic. An angry brow, dread lord.

Per. If there be such a dart in princes' frowns,

How durst thy tongue move anger to our face ?

Hil. How dare the plants look up to heaven, from whence

They have their nourishment ?

Per. Thou know'st I have power

To take thy life.

Hil. [Kneeling.] I have ground the axe my-
Do you but strike the blow. [self ;

Per. Rise, prythee rise ;

Sit down, sit down ; thou art no flatterer :

I thank thee for it ; and high heaven forbid

That kings should let their ears hear their faults hid !

Fit counsellor and servant for a prince,

Who by thy wisdom mak'st a prince thy servant

What would'st thou have me do ?

Hil. With patience bear

Such griefs as you do lay upon yourself.

Per. Thou speak'st like a physician, Helicanus :

Who minister'st a potion unto me,

That thou would'st tremble to receive thyself.

Attend me then : I went to Antioch,

Where, as thou know'st, against the face of death

I sought the purchase of a glorious beauty,

From whence an issue I might propagate.

Bring arms to princes, and to subjects joys.

Her face was to mine eye beyond all wonder ;

* L. e. Takes care it be not done.

The rest (hark in thine ear) as black as incest ;
Which, by my knowledge found, the sinful
father
Seem'd not to strike, but smooth : but thou know'st this,
'Tis time to fear, when tyrants seem to kiss.
Which fear so grew in me, I hither fled,
Under the covering of a careful night,
Who seem'd my good protector ; and being here,
Bethought me what was past, what might succeed.

I knew him tyrannous ; and tyrants' fears
Decrease not, but grow faster than their years :
And should he doubt it, (as no doubt he doth)
That I should open to the listening air
How many worthy princes' bloods were shed,
To keep his bed of blackness unalid ope,—
To lop that doubt, he'll fill this land with arms,
And make pretence of wrong that I have done
him ;

When all, for mine, if I may call't offence,
Must feel war's blow, who spares not innocence :

Which love to all (of which thyself art one,
Who now replov'st me for it)—

Hel. Alas, Sir !

Per. Drew sleep out of mine eyes, blood from my cheeks,

Musings into my mind ; a thousand doubts
How I might stop this tempest, ere it came ;
And, minding little comfort to relieve them,
I thought it princely charity to grieve them.

Hel. Well, my lord, since you have given me leave to speak,

Freely I'll speak. Antiochus you fear ;
And justly too, I think, you fear the tyrant,
Who either by public war, or private treason,
Will take away your life.

Therefore, my lord, go travel for a while,
Till that his rage and anger be forgot,
Or De-tunes do cut his thread of life.
Your rule direct to any ; if to me,
Day serves not light more faithful than I'll be.

Per. I do not doubt thy faith :

But should he wrong my liberties in absence—

Hel. We'll mingle bloods together in the earth,

From whence we had our being and our birth.

Per. Tyre, I now look from thee then, and to Tharsus

Intend my travel, where I'll hear from thee ;
And by whose letters I'll dispose myself.

The care I had and have of subjects' good,
On thee I lay, whose wisdom's strength can bear it.

I'll take thy word for faith, not ask thine oath ;
Who shuns not to break one, will sure crack
both :

But in our orbs * we'll live so round and safe,
That time of both this truth shall ne'er convince, †

Thou show'st a subject's shine, I a true
prince. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—Tyre.—An Ante-chamber in the Palace.

Enter THALIARD.

Thal. So, this is Tyre, and this is the court.
Here must I kill king Pericles ; and if I do not,
I am sure to be hanged at home : 'tis dangerous.—Well, I perceive he was a wise fellow, and had good discretion, that being bid to ask what he would of the king, desired he might know none of his secrets. Now do I see he had some reason for it ; for if a king bid a man be a villain, he is bound by the indenture of his oath to be one.—Hush, here come the lords of Tyre.

Enter HELICANUS, ESCANES, and other Lords.

Hel. You shall not need, my fellow peers of Tyre,
Further to question of your king's departure.

* In our different spheres.

† Overcome.

His seal'd commission, left in trust with me,
Doth speak sufficiently—he's gone to travel.

Thal. How ! the king gone !

[Aside.]

Hel. If further yet you will be satisfied,
Why, as it were unlicens'd of your loves,
He would depart, I'll give some light unto you.
Being at Antioch—

Thal. What from Antioch ?

[Aside.]

Hel. Royal Antiochus (on what cause I know
not,)

Took some displeasure at him ; at least he judg'd so :

And doubting lest that he had err'd or sinn'd,
To show his sorrow, would correct himself ;
So puts himself unto the shipman's toil,
With whom each minute threatens life or death.

Thal. Well, I perceive

[Aside.]

I shall not be hang'd now, although I would :
But since he's gone, the king it sure must please :

He scap'd the land, to perish on the seas,—
But I'll present me. Peace to the lords of Tyre !

Hel. Lord Thaliard from Antiochus is welcome.

Thal. From him I come

With message unto princely Pericles ;
But, since my landing, as I have understood,
Your lord has took himself to unknown travels,
My message must return from whence it came.

Hel. We have no reason to desire it, since Commended to our master not to us :

Yet, ere you shall depart, this we desire,—
As friends to Antioch, we may feast in Tyre.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV.—Tharsus.—A Room in the Governor's House.

Enter CLEON, DIONYZA, and Attendants.

Cle. My Dionyza, shall we rest us here,
And by relating tales of others' griefs,
See if 'twill teach us to forget our own ?

Dio. That were to blow at fire, in hope to quench it :

For who digs hills because they do aspire—
Throws down one mountain, to cast up a higher.
O my distressed lord, even such our griefs ;
Here they're but felt, and seen with mistful
eyes, [Exit.]

But like to groves, being topp'd, they higher rise.

Cle. O Dionyza,
Who wanteth food, and will not say he wants it,
Or can conceal his hunger till he faints !
Our tongues and sorrows do sound deep our
woes

Into the air ; our eyes do weep, till Fetch breath that may proclaim them louder ;
that,

If heaven slumber while their creatures want,
They may awake their helps to comfort them.
I'll then discourse our woes, felt several years,
And wanting breath to speak, help me with tears.

Dio. I'll do my best, Sir.

Cle. This Tharsus, o'er which I have government,

(A city on whom plenty held full hand,
For riches, strew'd herself even in the streets ;)
Whose towers bore heads so high, they kiss'd the
clouds,

And strangers ne'er beheld, but wonder'd at ;
Whose men and dames so jettied * and adorn'd,
Like one another's glass to trim † them by :
Their tables were stor'd full, to glad the sight,
And not so much to feed on, as delight ;
All poverty was scorn'd, and pride so great,
The name of help grew odious to repeat.

Dio. Oh ! 'tis too true.

Cle. But see what heaven can do ! By this our change, [Exit.]
These mouths whom but of late, earth, sea, and
Were all too little to content and please,

* To jet, to strut.

† To dress them by.

Although they gave their creatures in abundance,

As houses are defiled for want of use;
They are now starv'd for want of exercise:
Those palates, who not yet too summers younger,

Must have inventions to delight the taste,
Would now be glad of bread, and beg for it:
Those mothers who, to nurse * up their babes,
Thought nought too curious, are ready now
To eat those little darlings whom they lov'd:
So sharp are hunger's teeth, that man and
wife

Draws lots who first shall die, to lengthen life:
Here stands a lord, and there a lady weeping;
Here many sink, yet those which see them fall,
Have scarce strength left to give them burial.
Is not this true?

Di. Our cheeks and hollow eyes do witness
it.

Cle. Oh! let those cities, that of plenty's cup
And her prospectues so largely taste,
With their superfluous riots, hear these tears!
The misery of Tharsus may be their's.

Enter a LORD.

Lord. Where's the lord governor?

Cle. Here. [haste,
Speak out thy sorrows which thou bring'st, in
For comfort is too far for us to expect.

Lord. We have descried, upon our neighbouring shore

A portly sail of ships make hitherward.

Cle. I thought as much.

One sorrow never comes, but brings an heir,
That may succeed as his inheritor;—
And so in our's: some neighbouring nation,
Taking advantage of our misery, [power,†
Hath stuff'd these hollow vessels with their
To beat us down, the which are down already;
And make a conquest of unhappy me,
Whereas no glory's got to overcome.

Lord. That's the least fear; for, by the semblance [peace,
Of their white flags display'd, they bring us
And come to us as favourers, not as foes.

Cle. Thou speak'st like him's untutor'd to repeat; [decent,
Who makes the fairest show, means most But bring they what they will, what need we fear? [there.]

The ground's the low'st, and we are half way
Go tell their general, we attend him here,
To know for what he comes, and whence he
And what he craves. [comes,

Lord. I go, my lord. [Exit.]

Cle. Welcome is peace, if he on peace confirms we are unable to resist. [sist;‡]

Enter PERICLES with Attendants.

Per. Lord governor, (for so we hear you are)
Let not our ships and number of our men,
Be, like a beauteous fir'd, to amaze your eyes.
We have heard your miseries as far as Tyre,
And seen the desolation of your streets;
Nor come we to add sorrow to your tears,
But to relieve them of their heavy load;
And these our ships (you happily § may think
Are, like the Trojan horse, war-stuff'd within,
With bloody views, expecting overthrow)
Are stor'd with corn, to make your needy ★ bread,
And give them life, who are hunger-starv'd,
half dead.

All. The gods of Greece protect you.
And we'll pray for you.

Per. Rise, I pray you, rise:
We do not look for reverence but for love,
And harbourage for ourself, our ships, and men.

Cle. The which when any shall not gratify,
Or pay you with unthankfulness in thought,
Be it our wives, our children, or ourselves,

* Nurse fondly.

‡ If he stands on peace.

† Forces.

§ Perhaps.

The curse of heaven and men succeed their evils! [seen,]

Till when, (the which, I hope, shall ne'er be
Your grace is welcome to our town and us.

Per. Which welcome we'll accept: feast here
a while,

Until our stars, that frown, lend us a smile.
[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

Enter GOWER.

Gow. Here have you seen a mighty king
His child, I wis, * to incest bring;
A better prince, and benign lord,
Prove awful both in deed and word.
Be quiet then, as men should be,
Till he hath pass'd necessity.
I'll show you those in trouble's reign,
Losing a mite, a mountain gain.
The good in conversation †
(To whom I give my benison,) ‡
Is still at Tharsus, where each man
Thinks all is writ he spoken can:
And, to remember what he does,
Gild his statue glorious:
But tidings to the contrary
Are brought your eyes; what need speak I?

Dumb Show.

Enter at one door PERICLES, talking with CLEON; all the train with them. Enter at another door, a GENTLEMAN with a letter to PERICLES; PERICLES shows the letter to CLEON; then gives the Messenger an award, and knights him. Exeunt PERICLES, CLEON, &c. severally.

Gow. Good Helicane hath staid at home,
Not to eat honey, like a droue,
From others' labours; toth he strive
To killen bad, keep good alive;
And to fulfil his prince's desire,
Sends word of all that haps in Tyre:
How Thaliard came full bent with sin,
And hid intent, to murder him;
And that in Tharsus was his rest:
Longer for him to make his rest:
He knowing so, put forth to seas,
Where when men been, there's seldom ease;
For now the wind begins to blow;
Thunder above, and deeps below,
Make such unquiet, that the ship [split;
Should house him safe, is wreck'd and
And he, good prince, having all lost,
By waves from coast to coast is tost:
All perishes of man, of pelf,
Ne aught escapen but himself;
Till fortune, tir'd with doing bad,
Threw him ashore, to give him glad:
And here he comes what shall be next,
Pardon old Gower; this 'longs the text.
[Exit.]

SCENE I.—Pentapolis. §—An open Place by the Sea Side.

Enter PERICLES, wet.

Per. Yet cease your ire, ye angry stars of heaven! [man]
Wind, rain, and thunder, remember, earthly
Is but a substance that must yield to you;
And I, as fits my nature, do obey you.
Alas! the sea hath cast me on the rocks
Wash'd me from shore to shore, and left me
breath
Nothing to think on, but ensuing death:
Let it suffice the greatness of your powers,

* I suppose.

† Blessing.

‡ I.e. in behaviour.

§ Although Pentapolis is found in an ancient map of the world, M. S. in the Cotton library, this is esteemed an imaginary name borrowed from some romance.

To have bereft a prince of all his fortunes;
And having thrown him from your wat'ry grave,
Here to have death in peace, is all he'll crave.

Enter three FISHERMEN.

1 Fish. What, ho, Pilche!

2 Fish. Ho! come and bring away the nets.

1 Fish. What Patch-breech I say!

3 Fish. What say you, master?

1 Fish. Look how thou surrest now! come away, or I'll fetch thee with a wannon.

3 Fish. Faith, master, I am thinking of the poor men that were cast away before us, even now.

1 Fish. Alas, poor souls, it griev'd my heart to hear what pitiful cries they made to us to help them, when, well-a-day, we could scarce help ourselves.

2 Fish. Nay, master, said not I as much, when I saw the porpus, how he bounced and tumbled? they say, they are half fish half flesh; a plague on them, they ne'er come, but I look to be wash'd. Master, I marvel how the fishes live in the sea.

1 Fish. Why as men do a-land; the great ones eat up the little ones: I can compare our rich misers to nothing so fitly as to a whale; 'a plays and tumbles, diving the poor fly before him, and at last devours them all at a mouthful. Such whales have I heard of a'the land, who never leave gaping, till they've swallow'd the whole parish, church, steeple, bells, and all.

Per. A pretty moral.

3 Fish. But, master, if I had been the sexton, I would have been that day in the belfry.

2 Fish. Why, man?

3 Fish. Because he should have swallow'd me too: and when I had been in his belly, I would have kept such a jangling of the bells, that he should have never have left, till he cast bells, steeple, church, and parish, up again. But if the good king Simonides were of my mind—

Per. Simonides!

3 Fish. We would purge the land of these drones that rob the bee of her honey.

Per. How from the many subject of the sea These fishers tell the intimacies of men; And from their wat'ry empire recollect All that may men approve, or men detect! Peace be at your labour, honest fishermen.

2 Fish. Honest! good fellow, what's that? if it be a day tins you, scratch it out of the calendar, and no body will look after it.

Per. Nay, see, the sea hath cast upon your coast—

2 Fish. What a drunken knave was the sea, to cast thee in our way!

Per. A man whom both the waters and the wind,

In that vast tennis-court, hath made the ball For them to play upon, entreats you pity him: He asks of you, that never us'd to beg.

1 Fish. No, friend, cannot you beg? here's them in our country of Greece gets more with begging than we can do with working.

2 Fish. Canst thou catch any fishes then?

Per. I never practis'd it.

2 Fish. Nay, then thou wilt starve sure; for here's nothing to be got now-a-days, unless thou canst fish for't.

Per. What I have been, I have forgot to know;

But what I am, want teaches me to think on: A man shunk up with cold; my veins are chill,

And have no more of life than may suffice To give my tongue that heat, to ask your help; Which if you shall refuse, when I am dead, For I am a man, pray see me buried.

1 Fish. Die quoth-a? Now gods forbid I have a gown here; come, put it on; keep thee warm. Now, afore me, a handsome fellow! Come, thou shalt go home, and we'll have flesh for holidays, fish for fasting-days, and moreo'er puddings and flap-jacks,* and thou shalt be welcome.

Per. I thank you, Sir.

2 Fish. Hark you, my friend, you said you could not beg.

Per. I did not crave.

2 Fish. But crave? Then I'll turn craver too, and so I shall 'scape whipping. [then?] Per. Why, are all your beggars whipp'd?

2 Fish. Oh! not all, my friend, not all: for if all your beggars were whipp'd, I would wish ne better office than to be beadle. But, master, I'll go draw up the net.

[Exeunt two of the FISHERMEN.

Per. How well this honest mirth becomes their labour!

1 Fish. Hark you, Sir! do you know where you are?

Per. Not well.

1 Fish. Why, I'll tell you: this is called Pentapolis, and our king, the good Simonides.

Per. The good king Simonides, do you call him?

1 Fish. Ay, Sir, and he deserves to be so call'd, for his peaceable reign and good government.

Per. He is a happy king, since from his sub-

He gains the name of good, by his government. How far is his court distant from this shore?

1 Fish. Marry, Sir, half a day's journey, and I'll tell you he hath a fair daughter, and to-morrow is her birth-day; and there are princes and knights come from all parts of the world, to just and tourney[†] for her love.

Per. Did but my fortunes equal my desires, I'd wish to make one there.

1 Fish. O Sir, things must be as they may; and what a man cannot get, he may lawfully deal for—his wife's soul.

Re-enter the Two FISHERMEN, drawing up a net.

2 Fish. Help, master, help; here's a fish hangs in the net, like a poor man's right in the law; 'twill hardly come out. Hal! bots on't, 'tis come at last, and 'tis turn'd to a rusty armour.

Per. An armour, friends! I pray you, let me see it.

Thanks, to'time, yet, that after all my crosses, I should give me somewhat to repair myself; And, though it was mine own, part of mine heritage,

Which my dead father did bequeath to me, With this strict charge, (even as he left his life,) Keep it, my Pericles, it hath been a shield 'Till death and death: (and pointed to this brace)

For that it sav'd me, keep it; in like necessity Which gods protect thee from! it may defend thee.

It kept where I kept, I so dearly lov'd it; Till the rough seas, that spare not any man, Took it in rage, though calm'd, they give't again:

I thank thee for't; my shipwreck's now no ill, Since I have here my father's gift by will.

1 Fish. What mean you, Sir?

Per. To beg of you, kind friends, this coat of worth,

For it was sometime target to a king; I know it by this mark. He lov'd me dearly, And for his sake I wish the having of it; And that you'd guide me to your sovereign's court,

Where with't I may appear a gentleman; And if that ever my low fortunes better, I'll pay your bounties: till then, rest your debtor.

1 Fish. Why, wilt thou tourney for the lady? Per. I'll show the virtue I have borne in arms

* Paucakes.

† To tilt as at a tournament.

‡ Armour for the arm.

1 Fish. Why, do ye take it, and the gods give thee good on't!

2 Fish. Ay, but hark you, my friend; 'twas we that made up this garment through the rough seams of the waters: there are certain condolements, certain veils. I hope, Sir, if you thrive, you'll remember from whence you had it.

Per. Believe't, I will.
Now by your furtherance, I am cloth'd in steel;
And, spite of all the rupture of the sea,
This jewel holds his bidding * on my arm:
Unto thy value will I mount myself
Upon a courser, whose delightful steps
Shall make the gazer joy to see him tread.—
Only, my friend, I yet am unprovided
Of a pair of bases. †

2 Fish. We'll sure provide: thou shalt have my best gown to make thee a pair; and I'll bring thee to the court myself.

Per. Then honour be but a goal to my will;
This day I'll rise, or else add ill to ill.

[Exit].

SCENE II.—The same.—A public Way, or Platform, leading to the Lists. A Pavilion by the Side of it, for the reception of the KING, PRINCESS, LORDS, &c.

Enter SIMONIDES, THAISA, LORDS, and Attendants.

Sim. Are the knights ready to begin the triumph?

1 Lord. They are, my liege:
And stay your coming to present themselves.

Sim. Return them; we are ready; and our daughter,
In honour of whose birth these triumphs are,
Sits here, like beauty's child, whom nature gat
For men to see, and seeing wonder at.

[Exit a Lord.]
Thai. It pleaseth you, my father, to express
My commendations great, whose merit's less.

Sim. 'Tis fit it should be so; for princes are
A model, which heaven makes like to itself:
As jewels lose their glory, if neglected,
So princes their renown, if not respected.
'Tis now your honour, daughter, to explain
The labour of each knight, in his device. ‡

Thai. Which, to preserve mine honour, I'll perform.

Enter a Knight; he passes over the Stage, and his Squire presents his Shield to the Princess.

Sim. Who is the first that doth prefer himself?

Thai. A knight of Sparta, my renowned father;

And the device he bears upon his shield
Is a black Ethiop, reaching at the sun:
The word, Lux tua vita mihi.

Sim. He loves you well, that holds his life of you.

[The second Knight passes.]

Who is the second, that presents himself?
Thai. A prince of Macedon, my royal father;
And the device he bears upon his shield
Is an old knight, that's conquer'd by a lady:
The motto thus, in Spanish, Piu per dulcitra que per fuerza. **

[The third Knight passes.]

Sim. And what's the third?

Thai. The third, of Antioch;
And his device, a wreath of chivalry:
The word, Me pompa prorexit apex.

[The fourth Knight passes.]

Sim. What is the fourth?

Thai. A burning torch, that's turned upside down:

The word, Quod me alit, me extinguit.

* The device was fastened by a jewel, which the sea had not removed from its place.

† A kind of hawk-bow.

‡ There was a shield.

§ Offer.

¶ L. e. More by sweetness than by force.

Sim. Which shows that beauty hath his power and will,

Which can as well inflame, as it can kill

[The fifth Knight passes.]

Thai. The fifth, a hand environ'd with clouds:
Holding out gold that's by the touchstone tried:
The motto thus, Sic spectanda fides.

[The sixth Knight passes.]

Sim. And what's the sixth and last, which the knight himself

With such a graceful courtesy deliver'd?

Thai. He seems a stranger; but his present is

A wither'd branch, that's only green at top:

The motto, In hac spe vivo.

Sim. A pretty moral;

From the dejected state wherein he is,

He hopes by you his fortunes yet may flourish.

1 Lord. He had need mean better than his outward show

Can any way speak in his just commend:

For, by his rusty outside, he appears

To have practis'd more the whipsack, * than the lance.

2 Lord. He well may be a stranger, for he comes

To an honour'd triumph strangely furnish'd.

3 Lord. And on set purpose let his armour rust

Until this day, to scour it in the dust.

Sim. Opinion's but a fool, that makes us scan

The outward habit by the inward man.

But stay, the knights are coming; we'll withdraw

Into the gallery.

[Exit.]
[Great shouts, and all cry, The mean knight!]

SCENE III.—The same.—A Hall of State.—A Banquet prepared.

Enter SIMONIDES, THAISA, LORDS, KNIGHTS and Attendants.

Sim. Knights,

To say you are welcome, were superfluous.

To place upon the volume of your deeds,

As in a title-page, your worth in arms,

Were more than you expect, or more than's fit,

Since every worth in show commends itself.

Prepare for mirth, for mirth becomes a feast:

You are my guests.

Thai. But you, my knight and guest:

To whom this wreath of victory I give,

And crown you king of this day's happiness.

Per. 'Tis more by fortune, lady, than my merit.

Sim. Call it by what you will, the day is yours;

And here, I hope, is none that envies it.

In framing artists, art hath thus decreed,

To make some good, but others to exceed;

And you're her labour'd scholar. Come, queen

o'the feast,

[place.]
(For, daughter, so you are,) here take your

Marshal the rest, as they deserve their grace.

Knights. We are honour'd much by good

Simouides.

Sim. Your presence glads our days; honour

we love.

For who hates honour, hates the gods above.

Marsh. Sir, yond's your place.

Per. Some other is more fit.

1 Knight. Content not, Sir; for we are gentlemen,

That neither in our hearts, nor outward eyes,

Envy the great, nor do the low despise.

Per. You are right courteous knights.

Sim. Sit, sit, Sir: sit.

Per. By Jove, I wonder, that is king of

thoughts,

These cares resist me, † she not thought upon.

Thai. By Juno, that is queen

Of marriage, all the vlands that I eat

Do seem unsavoury, wishing him my meat:

Sure he's a gallant gentleman.

* Handle of a whip.

† I. e. These delicacies go against my stomach.

Sim. He's but
A country gentleman:
He has done no more than other knights have Broken a staff, or so: so let it pass. [done]

Thai. To me he seems like diamond to a glass.
Per. You king's to me, like to my father's picture,

Which tells me, in that glory once he was;
Had princes sit, like stars, about his throne,
And he the sun, for them to reverence.
None that beheld him, but, like lesser lights,
Did veil * their crown to his supremacy;
Where now his son's a glow-worm in the night,
The which hath fire in darkness, none in light;
Whereby I see that time's the king of men,
For he's their parent, and he is their grave,
And gives them what he will, not what they crave.

Sim. What, are you merry, knights?

1 Knight. Who can be other, in this royal presence?

Sim. Here, with a cup that's stor'd unto the brim,

(As you do love, fill to your mistress' lips.)

We drink this health to you.

Knights. We thank your grace.

Sim. Yet pause a while:

You knight, methinks, doth sit too melancholy,
As if the entertainment in our court
Had not a show might countervail his worth.
Note it not you, Thaisa?

Thai. What is it?

To me, my father?

Sim. Oh! attend my daughter;
Princes, in this, should live like gods above,
Who freely give to every one that comes
To honour them: and princes, not doing so,
Are like to guats, which make a sound, but kill'd

Are wonder'd at.

Therefore to make's entrance more sweet, here
say,

We drink this standing bowl of wine to him.

Thai. Alas, my father, it befits not me
Unto a stranger knight to be so bold;
He may my proffer take for an offence.
Since men take women's gifts for impudence.

Sim. How!

Do as I bid you, or you'll move me else.

Thai. Now, by the gods, he could not please me better. [Aside]

Sim. And further tell him, we desire to
know,

Of whence he is, his name and parentage.

Thai. The king my father, Sir, has drunk to
you.

Per. I thank him.

Thai. Wishing it so much blood unto your life.

Per. I thank both him and you, and pledge him freely.

Thai. And further he desires to know of you,
Of whence you are, your name and parentage.

Per. A gentleman of Tyre—(my name, Peri-
cles:

My education being in arts and arms:—)

Who, looking for adventures in the world,
Was by the rough seas reft of ships and men,
And, after shipwreck, driven upon this shore.

Thai. He thanks your grace; names himself
Pericles.

A gentleman of Tyre, who, only by Misfortune of the seas, has been bereft
Of ships and men, and cast upon this shore.

Sim. Now, by the gods, I pity his misfortune,

And will awake him from his melancholy.
Come, gentlemen, we sit too long on trifles,
And waste the time, which looks for other revels.

Even in your armours, as you are address'd, †
Will very well become a soldier's dance.
I will not have excuse, with saying, this

Loud music is too harsh for ladies' heads,
Since they love men in arms, as well as beds.

[The KNIGHTS dance.]
So, this was well ask'd, 'twas so well perform'd
Come, Sir:

Here is a lady that wants breathing too;
And I have often heard, you knights of Tyre
Are excellent in making ladies trip;
And that their measures * are as excellent.

Per. In those that practise them, they are my
lord.

Sim. Oh! that's as much as you would be deny'd

[The KNIGHTS and LADIES dance.]
Of your fair courtesy.—Unclasp, unclasp:

Thanks, gentlemen, to all; all have done well;
But you the best. [To PERICLES.] Pages and lights, conduct

[Sir,]
These knights unto their several lodgings; Your's
We have given order to be next our own.

Per. I am at your grace's pleasure.

Sim. Princes, it is too late to talk of love,

For that's the mark I know you level at:

Therefore each one betake him to his rest;

To-morrow, all for speeding do their best.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Tyre.—A Room in the Governor's House.

Enter HELICANES and ESCANES.

Hel. No, no, my Escanes: know this of me,— Antiochus from incest liv'd not free;
For which, the most high gods not minding longer

To withhold the vengeance that they had in store,
Due to this heinous capital offence,

Even in the height and pride of all his glory,
When he was seated, and his daughter with him,

In a chariot of inestimable value,
A fire from heaven came, and shivell'd up

Their bodies, even to loathing; for they so stunk,

That all those eyes ador'd them, † ere their fall,
Scorn now their hand should give them burial.

Escan. 'Twas very strange.

Hel. And yet but just; for though
This king were great, his greatness was no guard
To bar heaven's shaft, but sin had his reward.

Escan. 'Tis very true.

Enter three LORDS.

1 Lord. See, not a man in private conference,
Or council, has respect with him but he.

2 Lord. It shall no longer grieve without reproof.

3 Lord. And curs'd be he that will not second it.

1 Lord. Follow me, then: Lord Helicane, a
word.

Hel. With me? and welcome: Happy day,
my lords.

1 Lord. Know that our griefs are risen to the top,

And now at length they overflow their banks.

Hel. Your griefs, for what? wrong not the prince you love.

1 Lord. Wrong not yourself then, noble Heli-cane;

But if the prince do live, let us salute him,
Or know what ground's made happy by his
breath.

If in the world he live, we'll seek him out;
If in his grave he rest, we'll find him there;

And be resolv'd, ‡ he lives to govern us,
Or dead, gives cause to mourn his funeral,

And leaves us to our free election.

2 Lord. Whose death's, indeed, the strongest in our censure: §

And knowing this kingdom, if without a head,
(Like goodly buildings left without a roof,)
Will soon to ruin fall, your noble self,

* Dances.

† Which adored them.

‡ Satisfied.

§ Most probable is our opinion.

• Lower.

† Account'd

That best know'st how to rule, and how to reign,

We thus submit unto,—our sovereign.

All. Live, noble Helicane!

Hel. Try honour's cause, forbear your sufferings:

If that you love prince Pericles, forbear.

Take I your wish, I leap into the seas,

Where's hourly trouble for a minute's ease.

A twelvemonth longer, let me then entreat you

To forbear choice 'till the absence of your king;

If, in which time expir'd, he not return,

I shall with aged patience bear your yoke.

But if I cannot win you to this love,

Go search like noblemen, like noble subjects,
And in your search spend your adventurous

worth;

Whom if you find, and win unto return,

You shall like diamonds sit about his crown.

1 Lord. To wisdom he's a fool that will not yield;

And, since lord Helicane enjoins us,

We with our travels will endeavour it.

Hel. Then you love us, we you, and we'll clasp hands;

When peers thus knit, a kingdom ever stands.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Pentapolis.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter SIMONIDES, reading a Letter; the KNIGHTS meet him.

1 Knight. Good morrow to the good Simonides.

Sim. Knights, from my daughter this I let you know,

That, for this twelvemonth, she'll not undertake

A married life.

Her reason to herself is only known,

Which from herself by no means can I get

2 Knight. May we not get access to her, my

lord?

Sim. 'Faith, by no means: she hath so strictly tied her

To her chamber, that it is impossible.

One twelve moons more she'll wear Diana's

livery—

This by the eye of Cynthia hath she vow'd

And on her virgin honour will not break it.

3 Knight. Though loath to bid farewell, we take our leaves. [Exeunt.]

Sim. So

They're well despatch'd; now to my daughter's letter:

She tells me here she'll wed the stranger knight,

Or never more to view nor day nor night.

Mistress, 'tis well, your choice agrees with

mine;

I like that well:—nay, how absolute she's in't,

Not minding whether I dislike or no!

Well, I commend her choice;

And will no longer have to be delay'd.

Soft, here he comes.—I must dissemble it.

Enter PERICLES.

Per. All fortune to the good Simonides!

Sim. To you as much, Sir! I am beholden

to you,

For your sweet music this last night: my ears,

I do protest, were never better fed

With such delightful pleasing harmony.

Per. It is your grace's pleasure to commend;

Not my desert.

Sim. Sir, you are music's master.

Per. The worst of all her scholars, my good

lord.

Sim. Let me ask one thing. What do you think, Sir, of

My daughter?

Per. As of a most virtuous princess.

Sim. And she is fair too, is she not?

Per. As a fair day in summer; wondrous fair.

Sim. My daughter, Sir, thinks very well of

you;

Ay, so well, Sir, that you must be her master,
And she'll your scholar be: therefore look to it.

Per. Unworthy I to be her schoolmaster.

Sim. She thinks not so; peruse this writing else.

Per. What's here!

A letter, that she loves the knight of Tyre?

'Tis the king's subtilty, to have my life.

[Aside.]

Oh! seek not to entrap, my gracious lord,

A stranger and distressed gentleman,

That never aim'd so high to love your daughter,

But bent all offices to honour her.

Sim. Thou hast bewitch'd my daughter, and thou art

A villain.

Per. By the gods, I have not, Sir.

Never did thought of mine levy offence;

Nor never did my actions yet commence

A deed might gain her love, or your displeasure.

Sim. Traitor, thou liest.

Per. Traitor!

Sim. Ay, traitor, Sir.

Per. Even in his throat, (unless it be the king.)

That calls me traitor, I return the lie.

Sim. Now, by the gods, I do applaud his courage. [Aside.]

Per. My actions are as noble as my thoughts.

That never relish'd of a base descent.

I came unto your court for honour's cause,

And not to be a rebel to her state;

And he that otherwise accounts of me,

This sword shall prove he's honour's enemy.

Sim. No!—

Here comes my daughter, she can witness it.

Enter THAISIA.

Per. Then, as you are as virtuous as fair,

Resolve your angry father, if my tongue

Did e'er solicit, or my hand subscribe

To any syllable that made love to you?

Thais. Why, Sir, say if you had,

Who takes offence at that would make me glad?

Sim. Yea, mistress, are you so peremptory?—

I am glad of it with all my heart. [Aside.]

I'll tame you;

I'll bring you in subjection.—

Will you, not having my consent, bestow

Your love and your affections on a stranger?

(Who, for ought I know to the contrary,

Or think, may be as great in blood as I.)

[Aside.]

Hear, therefore, mistress; frame your will to

mine.—

And you, Sir, hear you.—Either be rul'd by me,

Or I will make you—man and wife.—

Nay, come; your hands and lips must seal it

too.—

And, being join'd, I'll thus your hopes destroy;

And, for a further grief,—God give you joy!

What, are you both pleas'd?

Thais. Yes, if you love me, Sir.

Per. Even as my life, my blood that fosters it.

Sim. What, are you both agreed?

Both. Yes, 'please your majesty.

Sim. It pleaseth me so well, I'll see you wed;

Then, with what haste you can, get you to bed.

[Exeunt.]

ACT III.

Enter GOWER.

Gow. Now sleep yslaketh hath the rout;

No din but snores, the house about,

Made louder by the o'er-fed breast

Of this most pompous marriage-feast.

The cat, with eyne of burning coal,

Now couches 'fore the mouse's hole:

• Quenched.

And crickets sing at th' oven's mouth,
As the bithur for their drouth.
Hymen hath brought the bride to bed,
Where, by the loss of maidenhead,
A babe is moulded.—Be attend,
And time, that is so briefly spent,
With your fine fancies quaintly echo :
What's dumb in show, I'll plain with speech.

Dumb show.

Enter PERICLES and SIMONIDES at one door, with Attendants ; a Messenger meet them, kneels, and gives PERICLES a letter. PERICLES shows it to SIMONIDES ; the Lords kneel to the former. Then enter THAISIA with child, and LYCHORIDA. SIMONIDES shows his daughter the letter ; she rejoices : she and PERICLES take leave of her father, and depart. Then SIMONIDES, &c. retire.

Gow. By many a dearn † and painful perch :
Of Pericles the careful search
By the four opposing coignes, §
Which the world together joins,
Is made, with all due diligence,
That horse, and sail, and high expense,
Can stand the quest. || At last from Tyre
(Fame answering the most strong inquire,) To the court of king Simonides Are letters brought ; the tenour these :—
Antiochus and his daughter's dead :
The men of Tyros, on the head
Of Helicanus would set on
The crown of Tyre, but he will none ;
The mutiny there he hastes † appease :
Says to them, If king Pericles
Come not, in twice six moons, home,
He, obedient to their doom,
Will take the crown. The sum of this,
Brought hither to Pentapolis,
Y-ravished the regions round,
And every one, with claps, † can sound
Our heir apparent is a king :
If he do, and, who thought, of such a thing ?
Brief, he must hence depart to Tyre ;
His queen, with child, makes her desire
(Which who shall cross it) along to go :
(Omit we all their dole and woe)
Lychorida, her nurse, she takes,
And so to sea. Their vessel shakes
On Neptune's billow ; half the flood
Hath their keel cut ; but fortune's mood †
Varies again : the grizzled north
Disgorges such a tempest forth,
That as a duck for life that dives,
So up and down the poor ship dives.
The lady shrieks, and, well-a-uear ! **
Both fall in travail with her fear :
And what ensues in this fell storm,
Shew, for itself, itself perform.
I will † relate ; action may Conveniently the rest convey ;
Which might not what by me is told.
In your imagination hold
This stage, the ship, upon whose deck
The sea-lass'd prince appears to speak.

[Exit.]

SCENE I.

Enter PERICLES, on a ship at sea.

Per. Thou God of this great vast, † rebuke
these surges,
Which wash both heaven and hell ; and thou,
that hast
Upon the winds command, blind them in brass, Having call'd them from the deep ! Oh ! still thy deafning, [ble,
Thy dreadful thunders ; gently quench thy nim-bulphureous flashes !—O how, Lychorida,

How does my queen ?—This storm, thou ! venomously †

Wilt thou spit all thyself ?—The seaman's whis-is as a whisper in the ears of death, [tle
Unheard.—Lychorida !—Lucina ! † O
Divinest patroness, and midwife, gentle
To those that cry by night, convey thy deity Aboard our dancing boat ; make swift the pangs

Of my queen's travails !—Now, Lychorida—

Enter LYCHORIDA, with an Infant.

Lyc. Here is a thing
Too young for such a place, who, if it had Conceit, I would die as I am like to do.
Take in your arms this piece of your dead
queen.

Per. How ! how, Lychorida !

Lyc. Patience, good Sir : do not assist the storm.

Here's all that is left living of your queen,—
A little daughter : for the sake of it,
Be manly, and take comfort.

Per. O you gods !

Why do you make us love your goodly gifts,
And snatch them straight away ? We, here
below,

Recall not what we give, and therein may
Vie honour † with yourselves.

Lyc. Patience, good Sir,
Even for this charge.

Per. Now, mild may be thy life.

For a more blust'rous birth had never babe :
Quiet and gentle thy conditions !
For thou'rt the rarest welcome'd to this world,
That e'er was prince's child. Happy what follows !

Thou hast as chiding † a nativity,
As fire, air, water, earth, and heaven can make,
To herald thee from the womb : even at the mist,

Thy loss is more than can thy portage quit, †
With all thou canst find here.—Now the good gods
Throw their best eyes upon it !

Enter two SAILORS.

1 Sail. What courage, Sir ! God save you.

Per. Courage enough : I do not fear the flaw ; **

It hath done to me the worst.—Yet, for the love
Of this poor infant, this fresh-new sea-farer,
I would, it would be quiet.

1 Sail. Slack the bolins † there ; thou wilt not, wilt thou ? Blow, and split thyself.

2 Sail. But sea-room, on the brine and cloudy billows kiss the moon, I care not.

1 Sail. Sir, your queen must overboard : the sea works high, the wind is loud, and will not lie, till the ship be cleared of the dead.

Per. That's your superstition.

1 Sail. Pardon us, Sir ; with us at sea it still hath been observed ; and we are strong in carnest. Therefore briefly yield her ; for she must overboard straight.

Per. Be it as you think meet.—Most wretched
queen !

Lyc. Here she lies, Sir.

Per. A terrible child-bed hast thou had, my
dear !

No light, no fire : the unfriendly elements
Forgot thee utterly ; nor have I time
To give thee hallow'd to thy grave, but straight
Must cast thee, scarcely coffin'd, in the ooze ;
Where, for a monument upon thy bones,
And aye-remaining † lamps, the belching whale,
And humming water must o'erwhelm thy corpse,
Lying with simple shells. Lychorida,
Bid Nestor bring me spices, ink, and paper,
My casket and my jewels ; and bid Nicanor
Bring me the satin coffer : lay the babe

A priestly farewell to her: suddenly, woman.

[Exit LYCHORIS.]
2 Sail. Sir, we have a chest beneath the hatches, caul'd and bitum'd ready.

Per. I thank thee. Mariner, say, what coast
is this?

2 Sail. We are near Tharsus.

Per. Thither, gentle mariner, Alter thy course for Tyre. When canst thou reach it?

2 Sail. By break of day, if the wind cease.

Per. Oh! make for Tharsus.

There will I visit Cleon, for the babe
Cannot hold out to Tyros; there I'll leave it
At careful nursing. Go thy ways, good mariner;
I'll bring the body presently.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—Ephesus.—A Room in CERIMON'S
House.

Enter CERIMON, a SERVANT, and some persons who have been shipwrecked.

Cer. Philemon, ho!

Enter PHILEMON.

Phil. Doth my lord call?

Cer. Get fire and meat for these poor men;—
It has been a turbulent and stormy night.

Serv. I have been in many; but such a night as this,

Till now, I ne'er endur'd.

Cer. Your master will be dead ere you return;

There's nothing can be minister'd to nature,
That can recover him. Give this to the 'pothe-
And tell me how it works.

[Car.]

[To PHILEMON.]
[Exit PHILEMON, SERVANT, and those who had been shipwrecked.]

Enter two GENTLEMEN.

1 Gent. Good morrow, Sir.

2 Gent. Good morrow to your lordship.

Cer. Gentlemen,

Why do you stir so early?

1 Gent. Sir,

Our lodgings, standing bleak upon the sea,
Shook, as the earth did quake;
The very principals * did seem to rend,
And all to topple; pure surprise and fear
Made me to quit the house.

2 Gent. That is the cause we trouble you so
'Tis not our husbandry; [early];

Cer. Oh! you say well.

1 Gent. But I much marvel that your lordship, having

Rich tire; about you, should at these early hours
Shake off the golden slumber of repose.

It is most strange,
Nature should be so conversant with pain,
Being thereto not compell'd.

Cer. I held it ever,

Virtue and cunning were endowments greater

Than nobleness and riches: careless heirs

May the two latter darken and expend;

But immortality attends the former,
Making a man a god. 'Tis known, I ever

Have studied physic, through which secret art,
By turning o'er authorities, I have

(Together with my practice,) made familiar

To me and to my aid, the blest infusions

That dwell in vegetables, in metals, stones;

And I can speak of the disturbances

That nature works, and of her cures; which gives me

A more content in course of true delight

Than to be thirsty after tottering honour,

Or to my treasure up in silken bags,

To please the fool and death.

2 Gent. Your honour has through Ephesus
pour'd forth

Your charity, and hundreds call themselves
Your creatures, who by you have been restor'd;
And not your knowledge, personal pain, but even
Your purse, still open, hath built lord Cerimon
Such strong renown as time shall never—

Enter two SERVANTS with a chest.

Serv. So: lift there.

Cer. What is that?

Serv. Sir, even now

Did the sea toss upon our shore this chest.

'Tis of some wreck.

Cer. Set't down, let's look on it

2 Gent. 'Tis like a coffin, Sir,

Cer. Whate'er it be,

'Tis wondrous heavy. Wrench it open straight

If the sea's stomach be o'ercharg'd with gold,

It is a good constraint of fortune, that

It belches upon us.

2 Gent. 'Tis so, my lord.

Cer. How close 'tis caul'd and bitum'd!—

Did the sea cast it up?

Serv. I never saw so huge a billow, Sir,

As toss'd it upon shore.

Cer. Come, wrench it open—

Soft, soft!—it smells most sweetly in my sense.

2 Gent. A delicate odour.

Cer. As e'er hit my nostril; so,—up with it.

O you most potent god! what's here? a coise!

1 Gent. Most strange!

Cer. Shrouded in cloth of state; balin'd and ann-entreasur'd

With bags of spices full! A passport too!

Apollo, perfect me! the characters!

[Tolds a story.]

Here I give to understand, [Reads.]

(If e'er this coffin drive a-land,)

I, king Pericles, have lost

This queen, worth all our mundane * cov't.

Who finds her, give her burying,

She was the daughter of a king:

Breides this treasure for a fit,

The gods requite his charity!

If thou liv'st, Pericles, thou hast a heart
That even cracks for woe!—This chance! tonight.

2 Gent. Most likely, Sir.

Cer. Nay, certainly to-night;

For look, how fresh she looks!—They were too rough,

That threw her in the sea. Make me within;

Fetch hither all the boxes in my closet.

Death may usurp on nature many hours,

And yet the fire of life kindle again

The overpressed spirits. I have heard

Of an Egyptian, had nine hours been dead,

By good appliance was recovered.

Enter a SERVANT, with boxes, raphins, and fire.

Well said, well said; the fire and the cloth.—

The rough and woful music that we have,

Cause it to sound, beseech you.

The vial once more—How thou stir'st, thou block!—

The music there.—I pray you, give her air:—

Gentlemen,

This queen will live: nature awakes; a woman

Breathes out of her; she hath not been entranc'd

Above five hours. See, how she 'gins to blow

Into life's flower again!

1 Gent. The heavens, Sir,

Through you, increase our wonder, and set up

Your fame for ever.

Cer. She's alive—behold

Her eyelids, cases to those heavenly jewels

Which Pericles hath lost,

Begin to part their fringes of bright gold;

* The principals are the strongest rafters in the roof of a building. † Lumber. ‡ I.e. Economical

Scene III.

PERICLES, PRINCE OF TYRE.

161

The diamonds of a most praised water
Appear, to make the world twice rich. O live,
And make us weep to hear your fate, fair creature,

Rare as you seem to be! [She moves.
Thai. O dear Diana,
Where am I? Where's my lord? What world
is this?

2 Gent. Is not this strange?

1 Gent. Most rare.

Cer. Hush, gentle neighbours:

Lend me your hands: to the next chamber bear
her.

Get linen; now this matter must be look'd to,
For her relapse is mortal. Come, come, come;
And Æsculapius guide us!

[Exeunt carrying THAISA away.

SCENE III.—Tharsus.—A Room in CLEON'S
House.

Enter PERICLES, CLEON, DIONYZA, LYCHORIDA, and MARINA.

Per. Most honour'd Cleon, I must needs be
gone;

My twelve months are expir'd, and Tyros stands
In a litigious peace. You, and your lady,
Take from my heart all thankfulness! The gods
Make up the rest upon you!

Cle. Your shafts of fortune, though they hurt
you mortally,

Yet glance full wau'd'ringly on us.

Dion. O your sweet queen!

That the strict fates had pleas'd you had brought her hither,

To have bless'd mine eyes!

Per. We cannot but obey
The powers above us. Could I rage and roar
As doth the sea she lies in, yet the end Must be as 'tis. My babe Marina (whom,
For she was born at sea, I have nam'd so) here
I charge your charity withal, and leave her
The infant of your care; beseeching you
To give her princely training, that she may be Manner'd as she is born.

Cle. I ear not, my lord:

Your grace,* that fed my country with your corn,

(For which the people's prayers still fall upon
you.)

Must in your child be thought on. If neglec-Should therein make me vile, the common
body †

By you reliev'd, would force me to my duty:
But if to that my nature need a spur,
The gods revenge it upon me and mine,
To the end of generation!

Per. I believe you:

Your honour and your goodness teach me credit,
Without your vows. Till she be married,
madam,

By bright Diana, whom we honour all,
I ussard shall this hair of mine remain,
Though I show will ‡ in't. So I take my leave.
Good madam, make me blessed in your care
In bringing up my child.

Dion. I have one myself,
Who shall not be more dear to my respect,
Than your's, my lord.

Per. Madam, my thanks and prayers.

Cle. We'll bring your grace even to the edge
o'the shore;

Then give you up to the mask'd Neptune, § and the gentlest winds of heaven.

Per. I will embrace

Your offer. Come, dear'st madam.—O no tears,
Lychorida, no tears:

Look to your little mistress, on whose grace

You may depend hereafter. Come, my lord.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Ephesus.—A Room in CLEON'S
House.

Enter CERIMON and THAISA.

Cer. Madam, this letter, and some certain
jewels,

Lay with you in your coffer: which are now
At your command. Know you the character?

Thai. It is my lord's.

That I was shipp'd at sea, I well remember.
Even on your yearning* time; but whether
there

Delivered or no, by the holy gods,
I cannot rightly say: But since king Pericles,
My wedded lord, I ne'er shall see again,
A vestal livery will I take me to,
And never more have joy.

Cer. Madam, if this your purpose as you
speak,

Diana's temple is not distant far,
Where you may 'bide until your date expire.

Moreover, if you please, a niece of mine shall there attend you.

Thai. My recompense is thanks; that's all;
Yet my good will is great, though the gift small.
[Exeunt.

ACT IV.

Enter GOWER.

Gow. Imagine Pericles at Tyre,
Welcom'd to his own desire.

His woeful queen leave at Ephesus,
To Dian there a votaress.

Now to Marina bend your mind,
Whom our fast growing scene must find
At Tharsus, and by Cleon train'd
In music, letters, who hath gain'd
Of education all the grace,

Which makes her both the heart and place
Of general wonder. But, alack!
That monster envy, oft the wrack
Of earned praise, Marina's life
Seeks to take off by treason's knife.

And in this kind hath our Cleon
One daughter, and a wench full grown,
Even ripe for marriage fight; this maid
Hight † Philoten: and it is said

For certain in our story, she Would ever with Marina be:
Be't when she weav'd the sleided ‡ silk

With fingers long, small, white as milk;
Or when she would with sharp need § wound
The cambric, which she made more sound
By hurting it; or when to the lute

She sung, and made the night-bird mute,
That still records ¶ with moan † or when
She would with rich and constant pen
Veil to her mistress Dian; still

This Philoten contends in skill
With absolute ¶ Marina: so
With the dove of Paphos might the crow

Vie feathers white. Marina gets
All praises, which are paid as debts,
And not as given. This so darks
In Philoten all graceful marks,

That Cleon's wife, with envy rare,
A present murderer does prepare
For good Marina, that her daughter
Might stand peerless by this slaughter.

The sooner her vile thoughts to stead;
Lychorida, our nurse, is dead;
And curs'd Dionyza hath

The pregnant  instrument of wrath
Prest † for this blow. The unborn event
I do commend to your content:

Only I carry winged time
Post on the lame feet of my rhyme;

* Bounty. † The common noemie.

‡ Appear wilful or perverse by allowing it.
§ Insidious waves that wear a treacherous smile.

* Groaning. † Called.

‡ Needie.  Prepared. †† Ready.

¶ Unwistled.

¶ Accomplished.

Which never could I so convey,
Unless your thoughts went on my way.—
Dionysa does appear,
With Leonine, a murderer.

[Exit.]

SCENE I.—Tharsus.—An open Place near the sea-shore.

Enter DIONYSZA and LEONINE.

Dion. Thy oath remember; thou hast sworn to do it:

'Tis but a blow, which never shall be known.
Thou canst not do a thing if the world so soon,
To yield thee so much profit. Let not conscience,

Which is but cold, inflame love in thy bosom,
Inflame too nicely; nor let pity, which Even women have cast off, melt thee, but be
A soldier to thy purpose.

Leon. I'll do't; but yet she is a goodly creature.

Dion. The fitter then the gods should have her.
Here

Weeping she comes for her old nurse's death.

Thou art resolv'd.

Leon. I am resolv'd.

Enter MARINA, with a Basket of Flowers.

Mar. No, no, I will rob Tellus* of her weeds,
To strew thy green with flowers: the yellows,
blues,
The purple violets, and marigolds,
Shall, as a chaplet, hang upon thy grave,
While summer days do last. Ah me! poor maid,

Born in a tempest, when my mother died,
This world to me is like a lasting storm,
Whirling me from my friends.

Dion. How now, Marina! Why do you keep alone?

How chance my daughter is not with you? Do not Consume your blood with sorrowing; you have A nurse of me. Lord! how your favour's

chang'd

With this unprofitable woe! Come, come;
Give me your wreath of flowers. Ere the sea
mar it,

Walk forth with Leonine;† the air is quick there
Piercing, and sharpens well the stomach.
Come:—

Leonine, take her by the arm, walk with her.

Mar. No, I pray you;
I'll not bereave you of your servant.

Dion. Come, come;
I love the king your father, and yourself,
With more than foreign heart. We every day
Expect him here; when he shall come, and find
Our paragun to all reports, thus blasted,
He will repent the breadth of his great voyage;
Blame both my lord and me, that we have ta'en
No care to your best courses. Go, I pray you,
Walk, and be cheerful once again; reserve
That excellent complexion, which did steal
The eyes of young and old. Care not for me;
I can go home alone.

Mar. Well, I will go;
But yet I have no desire to it.

Dion. Come, come, I know 'tis good for you.
Walk half an hour, Leonine, at the least:
Remember what I have said.

Leon. I warrant you, madam.

Dion. I'll leave you, my sweet lady, for a while;

Pray you walk softly, do not heat your blood:
What! I must have a care of you.

Mar. Thanks, sweet madam.—

[Exit DIONYSZA.]

Is this wind westerly that blows?

Leon. South west.

Mar. When I was born, the wind was north.

Leon. Was't so?

Mar. My father, as nurse said, did never fear,

But cry'd, good seamen! to the sailors, galling
His kingly hands with hauling of the ropes;
And, clasping to the mast, endur'd a sea
That almost burst the deck, and from the ladder-tackle

Wash'd off a canvas-climber: * Ha! says one,
Will out? and, with a dropping industry,
They skip from stem to stern: the boatswain
whistles,

The master calls, and trebles their confusion
Leon. And when was this?

Mar. It was when I was born:

Never were waves nor wind more violent.

Leon. Come, say your prayers speedily.

Mar. What mean you?

Leon. If you require a little space for prayer,
I grant it: Pray; but be not tedious,
For the gods are quick of ear, and I am sworn
To do my work with haste.

Mar. Why, will you kill me?

Leon. To satisfy my lady.

Mar. Why would she have me kill'd?

Now, as I can remember by my troth,
I never did her hurt in all my life;
I never spake bad word, nor did ill turn
To any living creature: believe me, la,
I never kill'd a mouse, nor hurt a fly:
I trod upon a worm against my will,
But I wept for it. How have I offended,
Wherein my death might yield her profit, or
My life imply her danger?

Leon. My commission

Is not to reason of the deed, but do it.

Mar. You will not do't for all the world, I hope.

You are well-favour'd, and your looks foreshew
You have a gentle heart. I saw you lately,
When you caught hurt in parting two that
fought:

Good sooth, it shew'd well in you; do so now:
Your lady seeks my life: come you between,
And save poor me, the weaker.

Leon. I am sworn,
And will despatch.

Enter PIRATES, whilst MARINA is struggling.

1 Pirate. Hold, villain!

[LEONINE runs away.]

2 Pirate. A prize! a prize!

3 Pirate. Half-part, mates, half part. Come let's have her aboard suddenly.

[Exit PIRATES with MARINA.]

SCENE II.—The same.

Re-enter LEONINE.

Leon. These roving thieves serve the great pirate Valdes;

And they have seiz'd Marina. Let her go:
There's no hope she'll return. I'll swear she's
dead,

And thrown into the sea.—But I'll see further:
Perhaps they will but please themselves upon her,
Not carry her aboard. If she remain,
Whom they have ravish'd, must by me be slain.
[Exit.]

SCENE III.—Mitylene.—A Room in a Brothel.

Enter PANDER, BAWD, and BOULT.

Pand. Boul.

Boul. Sir.

Pand. Search the market narrowly; Mitylene is full of gallants. We lost too much money this morn, by bring too wenchless.

Bawd. We were never so much out of creatures. We have but poor three, and they can do no more than they can do; and with continual action are even as good as rotten.

Pand. Therefore let's have fresh ones, what-

* The earth. † Commensance.
; i.e. Ere the coming in of the tide prevent you.

= A ship-boy.

e'er we pay for them. If there be not a conscience to be us'd in every trade, we shall never prosper.

Baud. Thou say'st true: 'tis not the bringing up of poor bazarards, as I think I have brought up some eleven—

Boul. Ay, to eleven, and brought them down again. But shall I search the market?

Baud. What else, man? The stuff we have, a strong wind will blow it to pieces, they are so pitifully sodden.

Pand. Thou say'st true; they are too unwholesome o' conscience. The poor Transilvanian is dead, that lay with the little baggage.

Boul. Ay, she quickly poop'd him; she made him roast meat for worms:—but I'll go search the market. [Exit BOULT.]

Pand. Three or four thousand chequins were as pretty a proportion to live quietly, and so give over.

Baud. Why, to give over, I pray you? Is it a shame to get when we are old?

Pand. Oh! our credit comes not in like the commodity; nor the commodity wages not with the danger: therefore, if in our youths we could pick up some pretty estate, 'twere not amiss to keep our door hatch'd. Besides, the sore terms we stand upon with the gods, will be strong with us for giving over.

Baud. Come, other sorts offend as well as we.

Pand. As well as we I say, and better too; we offend worse. Neither is our profession any trade; it's no calling:—but here comes Boul.

Enter the PIRATES, and BOULT, dragging in MARINA.

Boul. Come your ways. [To MARINA.]—My masters, you say she's a virgin?

1 Pirate. O Sir, we doubt it not.

Boul. Master, I have gone thorough for this piece, you see: if you like her, so; if not, I have lost my earnest.

Baud. Boul, has she any qualities?

Boul. She has a good face, speaks well, and has excellent good clothes; there's no further necessity of qualities can make her be refused.

Baud. What's her price, Boul?

Boul. I cannot be bated one doit of a thousand pieces.

Pand. Well, follow me, my masters; you shall have your money presently. Wife, take her in; instruct her what she has to do, that she may not be raw in her entertainment.

[Exit PANDER and PIRATES.]

Baud. Boul, take you the marks of her; the colour of her hair, complexion, height, age, with warrant of her virginity; and cry, He that will give most, shall have her first. Such a maidenhead were no cheap thing; if men were as they have been. Get this done as I command you.

Boul. Performance shall follow.

[Exit BOULT.]

Mar. Alack, that Leonine was so slack, so slow!

(He should have struck, not spoke;) or that these pirates

(Not enough barbarous,) had not overboard thrown me, to seek my mother!

Baud. Why lament you, pretty one?

Mar. That I am pretty.

Baud. Come, the gods have done their part in you.

Mar. I accuse them not.

Baud. You are lit into my hands, where you are like to live.

Mar. The more my fault,

To 'scape his hands, where I was like to die.

Baud. Ay, and you shall live in pleasure.

Mar. No.

Baud. Yes, indeed, shall you, and taste gentlemen of all fashions. You shall fare well; you shall have the difference of all complexions. What! do you stop your ears?

Mar. Are you a woman?

Baud. What would you have me be, an I be not a woman?

Mar. An honest woman, or not a woman.

Baud. Marry, whip thee, gosling! I think I shall have something to do with you. Come, you are a young foolish sapling, and must be bowed as I would have you.

Mar. The gods defend me!

Baud. If it please the gods to defend you by men, then men must comfort you, men must feed you, men must stir you up.—Boul's returned.

Enter BOULT.

Now, Sir, hast thou cried her through the market?

Boul. I have cried her almost to the number of her hairs; I have drawn her picture with my voice.

Baud. And I prythee tell me, how dost thou find the inclination of the people, especially of the younger sort?

Boul. 'Faith, they listened to me, as they would have hearkened to their father's testament. There was a Spaniard's mouth so watered, that he went to bed to her very description.

Baud. We shall have him here to-morrow with his best ruff on.

Boul. To-night, to-night. But, mistress, do you know the French knight that cowers * the hams?

Baud. Who? Monsieur Veroles?

Boul. Ay; he offered to cut a caper at the proclamation; but he made a groan at it, and swore he would see her to-morrow.

Baud. Well, well: as for him, he brought his disease hither: here he does but repair it. I know, he will come in our shadow, to scatter his crowns in the sun.

Boul. Well, if we had of every nation a traveller, we should lodge them with this sign.

Baud. Pray you, come hither awhile. You have fortunes coming upon you. Mark me: you must seem to do that fearfully, which you commit willingly; to despise profit, where you have most gain. To weep that you live as you do, makes pity in your lovers: Seldom, but that pity begets you a good opinion, and that opinion a mere profit.

Mar. I understand you not.

Boul. O, take her home, mistress, take her home: these blushes of her's must be quenched with some present practice.

Baud. Thou say'st true, 'faith, so they must: for your bride goes to that with shame, which is her way to go with warrant.

Boul. 'Faith some do, and some do not. But, mistress, if I have bargained for the joint,— Baud. Thou may'st cut a morsel off the spit.

Boul. I may so.

Baud. Who should deny it? Come, young one, I like the manner of your garments well.

Boul. Ay, by my faith, they shall not be changed yet.

Baud. Boul, spend thou that in the town: report what a sojourner we have; you'll lose nothing by custom. When nature framed this piece, she meant thee a good turn; therefore say what a paragon she is, and thou hast the harvest out of thine own report.

Boul. I warrant you, mistress, thunder shall not so awake the beds of eels, as my giving out her beauty stir up the lewdly-inclined. I'll bring home some to-night.

Baud. Come your ways; follow me.

Mar. If ares be hot, knives sharp, or waters Untied I still my virgin knot will keep. [deep, Diana, and my purpose!]

* I.e., Half open. † Bid a high price for her ‡ Unskilful in what she has to do.

• Bauds. † A certain profit.

Baud. What have you to do with Diana?
Pray you, will you go with us?

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Tharsus.—A Room in CLEON'S House.

Enter CLEON and DIONYZA.

Dion. Why are you foolish? Can it be undone?

Cle. O Dionyza, such a piece of slaughter
The sun and moon ne'er look'd upon!

Dion. I think
You'll turn a child again.

Cle. Were I chief lord of all the spacious world,

I'd give it to undo the deed. O lady,
Much less in blood than virtue, yet a princess
To equal any single crown o'the earth,
I'the justice of compare! O villain Leonine,
Whom thou hast poison'd too!
If thou hadst drunk to him, it had been a kindness

Becoming well thy feat: * what canst thou say,
When noble Pericles shall demand his child?

Dion. That she is dead. Nurses are not the
To foster it, nor ever to preserve. [fates]
She died by night; I'll say so. Who can cross
it?

Unless you play the impious innocent, †
And, for an honest attribute, cry out
She died by foul play.

Cle. Oh! go to. Well, well,
Of all the faults beneath the heavens, the gods
Do like this worst.

Dion. Be one of those, that think
The petty wrens of Tharsus will fly hence,
And open this to Pericles. I do shame
To think of what a noble strain you are,
And of how coward a spirit.

Cle. To such proceeding
Who ever but his approbation added,
Though not his preconsent, he did not flow
From honourable courses.

Dion. Be it so then:
Yet none does know, but you, how she came
dead,

Nor none can know, Leonine being gone.
She did disdain my child, and stood between Her and her fortunes: None would look on
her,

But cast their gazes on Marina's face;
Whilst ours was blarst at, and held a malkin, ‡
Not worth the time of day. It pierc'd me thorough;

And though you call my course unnatural,
You not your child well loving, yet I find,
It greets me as an enterprise of kindness,
Perform'd to your sole daughter.

Cle. Heavens forgive it!

Dion. And as for Pericles,
What should he say? We wept after her hearse,

And even yet we mourn: her monument
Is almost finish'd, and her epitaphs
In glittering golden characters express
A general praise to her, and care in us
At whose expense 'tis done.

Cle. Thou art like the harpy,
Which, to betray, doth wear an angel's face,
Seize with an eagle's talons.

Dion. You are like one that superstitiously Both swear to the gods, that winter kills the flies:

But yet I know you do as I advise. [Exeunt.]

Enter GOWER, before the Monument of MARINA, at Tharsus.

Gow. Thus time we waste, and longest leagues make short;
Sail seas in cockles; have, and wish but for't;

* I.e. ~~and~~ place with the rest of my exploit.
† ~~and~~ ~~an~~ ~~appellation~~ for an idiot.
‡ A tough wench. † Only.

Making (to take your imagination.)

From bourn to bourn, * region to region.

By you being pardon'd, we commit no crime,

To use one language, in each several clime,
Where our scenes seem to live. I do beseech
you,

To learn of me, who stand i'the gap to teach
you,

The stages of our story. Pericles

Is now again thwarting the wayward seas,

(Attended on by many a lord and knight),

To see his daughter, all his life's delight.

Old Escanes, whom Helicanus late

Advanc'd in time to great and high estate,

Is left to govern. Bear you it in mind,

Old Helicanus goes along behind.

Well-sailing ships, and bounteous winds, have brought

This king to Tharsus, (think his pilot thought;

So with his steerage shall your thoughts grow
on.)

To fetch his daughter home, who first is gone.

Like motes and shadows see them move a while;

Your ears unto your eyes I'll reconcile.

Dumb show.

*Enter at one door PERICLES, with his Train;
CLEON, and DIONYZA at the other. CLEON shows PERICLES the tomb of MARINA; whereat PERICLES makes lamentation, puts on Sackcloth, and in a mighty passion, departs. Then CLEON and DIONYZA retire.*

Gow. See how belief may suffer by foul show!

This borrow'd passion stands for true old woe;

And Pericles, in sorrow all devour'd,

With sighs shot through, and biggest tears o'er-show'd,

Leaves Tharsus, and again embarks. He swears

Never to wash his face, nor cut his hairs:

He puts on sackcloth, and to sea. He bears

A tempest, which his mortal vessel † tears,

And yet he rides it out. Now please you wit:

The epitaph is for Marina writ
By wicked Dionyza.

[*Reads the inscription on MARINA'S
Monument.*]

*The fairest, sweet'st, and best, lies here,
Who utter'd in her spring of year.*

She was of Tyrus, the king's daughter,

On whom foul death hath made this slaugh-

ter;

Marina was she call'd; and at her birth,

Thetis, § being proud, swallow'd some part

o'the earth:

Therefore the earth, fearing to be o'erflow'd,

Hath Thetis' birth-child on the heavens

bestow'd;

Wherefore she does, (and swears she'll never stint, ||)

Make raging battery upon shores of flint.

No visor does become black villany,

So well as soft and tender flattery.

Let Pericles believe his daughter's dead,

And bear his courses to be ordered

By lady Fortune; while our scenes display

His daughter's woe and heavy well-a-day,

In her unholy service. Patience then,

And think you now are all in Mitylene.

[Exit.]

SCENE V.—Mitylene.—A Street before the Brothel.

Enter, from the Brothel, two GENTLEMEN.

1 Gent. Did you ever hear the like?

2 Gent. No, nor never shall do in such a place as this, she being once gone.

* Travelling from country to country.

† His body.

‡ To know.

§ The sea.

|| Never cease.

1 Gent. But to have divinity preached there! Did you ever dream of such a thing?

2 Gent. No, no. Come, I am for no more bawdy-houses: shall we go hear the vestals sing?

1 Gent. I'll do any thing now that is virtuous; but I am out of the road of rutting, for ever.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—The same.—A Room in the Brothel.

Enter PANDER, BAWD, and BOULT.

Pand. Well, I had rather than twice the worth of her, she had ne'er come here.

Bawd. Fie, lie upon her; she is able to freeze the god Priapus, and undo a whole generation. We must either get her ravish'd, or be rid of her. When she should do for clients her flummery, and do me the kindness of our profession, she has me her quirks, her reasons, her master-reacons, her prayers, her knees; that she would make a puritan of the devil, if he should cheapen a kiss of her.

Boult. Faith I must ravish her, or she'll disfigure us of all our cavaliers, and make all our swearers priests.

Pand. Now, the pox upon her green-sickness for me!

Bawd. Faith, there's no way to be rid on't, but by the way to the pox. Here comes the lord Lysimachus, disguised.

Boult. We should have both lord and lown, if the peevish baggage would but give way to customers.

Enter LYSIMACHUS.

Lys. How now? How* a dozen of virginities?

Bawd. Now, the gods to-bless your honour!

Boult. I am glad to see your honour in good health.

Lys. You may so; 'tis the better for you that your resorters stand upon sound legs. How now, wholesome iniquity? Have you that a man may deal withal, and defy the surgeon?

Bawd. We have here one, Sir, if she would—but there never came her like in Nitylene.

Lys. If she'd do the deeds of darkness, thou would'st say.

Bawd. Your honour knows what 'tis to say, well enough.

Lys. Well; call forth, call forth.

Boult. For flesh and blood, Sir, white and red, you shall see a rose; and she were a rose indeed, if she had but—

Lys. What, pr'ythee?

Boult. O Sir, I can be modest.

Lys. That dignifies the renown of a bawd, no less than it gives a good report to a number to be chaste.

Enter MARINA.

Bawd. Here comes that which grows to the stalk;—never plucked yet, I can assure you. Is she not a fair creature?

Lys. Faith, she would serve after a long voyage at sea. Well, there's for you;—leave us.

Bawd. I beseech your honour, give me leave: a word, and I'll have done presently.

Lys. I beseech you, do.

Bawd. First, I would have you note, this is an honourable man.

[To MARINA, whom she takes aside.]

Mar. I desire to find him so, that I may worthily note him.

Bawd. Next, he's the governor of this country, and a man whom I am bound to.

Mar. If he govern the country, you are bound to him indeed; but how honourable he is in that, I know not.

Bawd. Pray you, without any more virginal fencing, will you use him kindly? He will lace your apron with gold.

Mar. What he will do graciously, I will thankfully receive.

Lys. Have you done?

Bawd. My lord, she's not paced yet; you must take some pains to work her to your manage. Come, we will leave his honour and her together.

[Exeunt BAWD, PANDER, and BOULT.]

Lys. Go thy ways.—Now, pretty one, how long have you been at this trade?

Mar. What trade, Sir?

Lys. What I cannot name, but I shall offend.

Mar. I cannot be offended with my trade. Please you to name it.

Lys. How long have you been of this profession?

Mar. Ever since I can remember.

Lys. Did you go to it so young? Were you a gamester* at five, or at seven?

Mar. Earlier too, Sir, if now I be one.

Lys. Why, the house you dwell in, proclaims you to be a creature of sale.

Mar. Do you know this house to be a place of such resort, and will come into it? I hear say, you are of honourable parts, and are the governor of this place.

Lys. Why, hath your principal made known unto you who I am?

Mar. Who is my principal?

Lys. Why, your herb woman: she that sets seeds and roots of shame and iniquity. Oh! you have heard something of my power, and so stand aloof for more serious wooing. But I protest to thee, pretty one, my authority shall not see thee, or else look friendly upon thee. Come, bring me to some private place. Come, come.

Mar. If you were born to honour, show it now;

If put upon you, make the judgment good That thought you worthy of it.

Lys. How's this? how's this?—Some more;—be sage.

Mar. For me,

That am a maid, though most ungentle fortune Hath plac'd me here within this loathsome city, Where, since I came, diseases have been sold Dearer than physic,—O that the good gods Would set me free from this unhallow'd place, Though they did change me to the meanest bird That flies i'the purer air!

Lys. I did not think

Thou couldst have spoke so well; ne'er dream'd thou couldst.

Had I brought hither a corrupted mind, Thy speech had alter'd it. Hail, here's gold for thee:

Perséver still in that clear way thou goest, And the gods strengthen thee!

Mar. The gods preserve you!

Lys. For me, be you thoughten

That I came with no ill intent: for to me The very doors and windows savour vitely. Farewell. Thou art a piece of virtue, and I doubt not but thy trailing hath been noble.—Hold; here's more gold for thee.—

A curse upon him, die he like a thief, That robs thee of thy goodness! If thou hear'st from me,

It shall be for thy good.

[As LYSIMACHUS is putting up his Purse. BOULT enters.

Boult. I beseech your honour, one piece for me.

Lys. Avaunt, thou damned door-keeper! Your house,

* How much shall I give for?

* A wanton.

But for this virgin that doth prop it up,
Would sink, and overwhelm you all. Away!

[Exit LYSIMACHUS.]

Boult. How's this? We must take another course with you. If your peevish chastity, which is not worth a breakfast in the cheapest country under the cope,* shall undo a whole household, let me be gelded like a spaniel. Come your ways.

Mar. Whither would you have me?

Boult. I must have your maidenhead taken off, or the common hangman shall execute it. Come your way. We'll have no more gentlemen driven away. Come your ways, I say.

Re-enter BAWD.

Bawd. How now! what's the matter?

Boult. Worse and worse, mistress: she has here spoken holy words to the lord Lysimachus.

Bawd. Oh! abominable!

Boult. She makes our profession as it were to stunk afore the face of the gods.

Bawd. Marry, hang her up for ever!

Boult. The nobleman would have dealt with her like a nobleman, and she sent him away as cold as a snowball: saying his prayers too.

Bawd. Boult, take her away: use her at thy pleasure; crack the glass of her virginity, and make the rest malleable.

Boult. An if she were a thornier piece of ground than she is, she shall be ploughed.

Mar. Hark, hark, you gods!

Bawd. She conjures: away with her. Would she had never come within my doors! Marry hang you! She's born to undo us. Will you not go the way of women-kind? Marry come up, my dish of chastity with rosemary and bays!

[Exit BAWD.]

Boult. Come, mistress; come your way with me.

Mar. Whither would you have me?

Boult. To take from you the jewel you hold so dear.

Mar. Pr'ythee tell me one thing first.

Boult. Come now, your one thing.

Mar. What canst thou wish thine enemy to be?

Boult. Why, I could wish him to be my master, or rather, my mistress.

Mar. Neither of these are yet so bad as thou art.

Since thee do better thee in their command.
Thou hold'st a place, for which the pained'st

Of hell would! not in reputation change:
Thou'rt the damnd' door-keeper to every coy-

strel †

That hither comes enquiring for his tib;
To the choleric fisting of each rogue thy ear

Is liable; thy very food is such
As hath been belch'd on by infected lungs.

Boult. What would you have me? go to the wars, would you? where a man may serve seven years for the loss of a leg, and have not money enough in the end to buy him a wooden one?

Mar. Do any thing but this thou doest.
Empty

Old receptacles, common sewers, of filth;
Serve by indenture to the common hangman;
Any of these ways are better yet than this:
For that which thou professes't, a taboos,
Could he but speak, would own a name too

dear.
Oh! that the gods would safely from this place
Deliver me! Here, here is gold for thee.

If that thy master would gain ought by me,
Proclaim that I can sing, weave, sew, and dance,

With other virtues, which I'll keep from boast:

And I will undertake all these to teach.

* Canopy of heaven.

† Paltzy fellow.

I doubt not but this populous city will Yield many scholars.

Boult. But can you teach all this you speak of?

Mar. Prove that I cannot, take me home again,

And prostitute me to the basest groom
That doth frequent your house.

Boult. Well, I will see what I can do for thee: if I can place thee, I will.

Mar. But, amongst honest women?

Boult. Faith, my acquaintance lies little amongst them. But since my master and mistress have bought you, there's no going but by their consent; therefore I will make them acquainted with your purpose, and I doubt not but I shall find them tractable enough. Come, I'll do for thee what I can: come your ways.

[Exit.]

ACT V.

Enter GOWLER.

Gow. Marina thus the brothel 'scapes, and chances
Into an honest house, our story says.

She sings like one immortal, and she dances
As goddess-like to her admired lays:

Deep clerks* she dumbs; and with her need composes

Nature's own shape, of bud, bird, branch, or berry;

That even her art sisters the natural roses:
Her inkle, silk, twine with the rubied cherry:

That pupils lacks she none of noble race,
Who pour their bounty on her; and her gain

She gives the cursed bawd. Here we her
place;

And to her father turn our thoughts again.
Where we left him, on the sea. We there him

lost;
Whence, driven before the winds, he is arriv'd
Here where his daughter dwells; and on this coast

Suppose him now at anchor. The city striv'd God Neptune's annual feast to keep: from whence

Lysimachus our Tyrian ship espies,
His banners sable, trimm'd with rich expense;

And to him in his barge with fervour hies;
In your supposing once more put your sight;

Of heavy Pericles think this the bark:
Where, what is done in action, more, if might,

Shall be discover'd; please you, sit, and hark.
[Exit.]

SCENE I.—On board PERICLES' Ship, off Mitylene. A close Pavilion on deck, with a Curtain before it; PERICLES within it, reclined on a Couch. A Barge lying beside the Tyrian Vessel.

Enter two SAILORS, one belonging to the Tyrian Vessel, the other to the Barge; to them
HELICANUS.

Tyr. Sail. Where's the lord Helicanus? he can resolve you.

[To the SAILOR of Mitylene.]

Oh! here he is.—
Sir, there's a barge put off from Mitylene.

And in it is Lysimachus the governor,
Who craves to come aboard. What is your will?

Hel. That he have his. Call up some gentlemen.

Tyr. Sail. Ho, gentlemen! my lord calls.

Enter two GENTLEMEN.

1 Gent. Doth your lordship call?

* Learned men.

Hcl. Gentlemen,
There is some of worth would come aboard : I pray you,
To greet them fairly.
[THE GENTLEMEN and the two SAILORS
descend and go on board the Barge.

Enter, from thence, LYSIMACHUS and LORDS ;
the Tyrian GENTLEMEN, and the two SAILORS.

Tyr. Sail. Sir,
This is the man that can, in aught you would,
Resolve you.

Lys. Hail, reverend Sir ! the gods preserve you !

Hcl. And you, Sir, to out-live the age I am,
And die as I would do.

Lys. You wish me well.
Being on shore, honouring of Neptune's triumphs,
Seeing this goodly vessel ride before us,
I make to it, to know of whence you are.

Hcl. First, Sir, what is your place ?

Lys. I am governor of this place you lie before.

Hcl. Sir,
Our vessel is of Tyre, in it the king ;
A man, who for this three months hath not spoken

To any one, nor taken sustenance,
But to proroque * his grief.

Lys. Upon what ground is his distemper-
ture ?

Hcl. Sir, it would be too tedious to repeat ;
But the main grief of all, springs from the loss
Of a beloved daughter and a wife.

Lys. May we not see him, then ?

Hcl. You may indeed, Sir
But bootless is your sight : he will not speak
To any.

Lys. Yet, let me obtain my wish.

Hcl. Behold him, Sir : [PERICLES discovered.]
this was a goodly person,
Till the disaster, that, one mortal † night,
Drove him to this.

Lys. Sir, king, all hail ! the gods preserve you ! Hail,

Hail, royal Sir !
Hcl. It is in vain : he will not speak to you.
I Lord, Sir, we have a maid in Mitylene, I
durst wager,

Would win some words of him.

Lys. 'Tis well bethought.
She, questionless, with her sweet harmony
And other choice attractions, would allure,
And make a battery through his deafen'd parts ; †

Which now are midway stopp'd :

She, all as happy as of all the fairest,
Is, with her fellow-maidens, now within
The leafy shelter that abuts against
The island's side.

He whispers one of the attendant LORDS.—

Exit LORD, in the Barge of LYSIMACHUS.

Hcl. Sure, all's effectless ; yet nothing we'll omit

That bears recovery's name. But, since your kindness
We have stretch'd thus far, let us beseech you
further,

That for our gold we may provision have,
Wherein we are not destitute for want,
But weary for the staleness.

Lys. O Sir, a courtesy,
Which if we should deny, the most just God
For every graff would send a caterpillar,
And so infect our province.—Yet once more
Let me intreat to know at large the cause
Of your king's sorrow.

Hcl. Sit, Sir, I will recount it :—

But see, I am prevented.

Enter, from the Barge, LORD, MARINA, and a young LADY.

Lys. Oh ! here is
The lady that I sent for. Welcome, fair one !
Is't not a goodly presence ?
Hcl. A gallant lady.

Lys. She's such, that were I well assur'd she came

Of gentle kind, and noble stock, I'd wish
No better choice, and think me rarely wed.
Fair one, all goodness that consists in bounty
Expect even here, where is a kingly patient
If that thy prosperous-artificial feat
Can draw him but to answer thee in aught,
Thy sacred physic shall receive such pay
As thy desires can wish.

Mar. Sir, I will use
My utmost skill in his recovery,
Provided none but I and my companion
Be suffer'd to come near him.

Lys. Come, let us leave her,
And the gods make her prosperous !

[MARINA sings

Lys. Mark'd he your music ?

Mar. No, nor look'd on us.

Lys. See, she will speak to him.

Mar. Hail, Sir ! my lord, lend ear :—

Per. Hum ! ha !

Mar. I am a maid,
My lord, that ne'er before invited eyes,
But have been gaz'd on, comit-like : she speaks

My lord, that, may be, hath endur'd a grief
Might equal yours, if both were justly weigh'd.
Though wayward fortune did malign my state,
My derivation was from ancestors
Who stood equivalent with mighty kings :
But time hath rooted out my parentage,
And to the world and awkward casualties
Bound me in servitude.—I will desist ;
But there is something glows upon my cheek,
And whispers in mine ear, Go not till he speak.

[Aside.

Per. My fortunes—parentage—good parentage—

To equal mine !—was it not thus ? what say
you ?

Mar. I said, my lord, if you did know my parentage,
You would not do me violence.

Per. I do think so.

I pray you, turn your eyes again upon me.—
You are like something that—What countrywoman ?

Here of these shores ?

Mar. No, nor of any shores :
Yet I was mortally brought forth, and am
No other than I appear.

Per. I am great with woe, and shall deliver weeping.

My dearest wife was like this maid, and such a
one

My daughter might have been : my queen's square brows ;

Her stature to an inch ; as wand-like straight ;
As silver-voic'd ; her eyes as jewel-like,

And cas'd as richly : in pace another Juno ;
Who starves the ears she feeds, and makes them
hungry,

The more she gives them speech—Where do you
live ?

Mar. Where I am but a stranger : from the deck

You may discern the place.

Per. Where were you bred ?

And how achiev'd you these endowments,
which

You make more rich to owe ? *

Mar. Should I tell my history.

'Twould seem like lies disdain'd in the reporting.

Per. Pr'ythee speak :

* To prolong.

† I. e. Earn

† Destructive.

* Possess.

Falseness cannot come from thee, for thou look'st Modest as justice, and thou seem'st a palace For the crown'd truth to dwell in: I'll believe thee,

And make my senses credit thy relation, To points that seem impossible; for thou look'st

Like one I lov'd indeed. What were thy friends?

Durst thou not say, when I did push thee back, (Which was when I perceiv'd thee,) that thou can'st

From good descending?

Mar. So indeed I did.

Per. Report thy parentage. I think thou said'st

Thou hadst been toss'd from wrong to injury, And that thou thought'st thy griefs might equal mine,

If both were open'd.

Mar. Some such thing indeed

I said, and said no more but what my thoughts Did warrant me was likely.

Per. Tell thy story:

If thine, consider'd, prove the thousandth part Of my endurance, thou art a man, and I Have suffer'd like a girl: yet thou dost look Like Patience, gazing on kings' graves, and smiling

Extremity out of act. What were thy friends? How lost thou them? Thy name, my most kind virgin?

Recount, I do beseech thee: come, sit by me.

Mar. My name, Sir, is Marina.

Per. Oh! I am mock'd, And thou by some incensed god sent hither To make the world laugh at me.

Mar. Patience, good Sir, Or here I'll cease.

Per. Nay, I'll be patient:

Thou little know'st how thou dost startle me, To call thyself Marina.

Mar. The name, Marina, Was given me by one that had some power; My father, and a king.

Per. How! a king's daughter?

And call'd Marina?

Mar. You said you would believe me; But, not to be a troubler of your peace, I will end here.

Per. But are you flesh and blood?

Have you a working pulse? and are no fairy? No motion?—Well; speak on. Where were you born?

And wherefore call'd Marina?

Mar. Call'd Marina,

For I was born at sea.

Per. At sea?—thy mother?

Mar. My mother was the daughter of a king; Who died the very minute I was born, As my good nurse Lychorida hath oft Deliver'd weeping.

Per. Oh! stop there a little!

This is the rarest dream that e'er dull sleep Did mock sad fools withal: this cannot be. My daughter's buried. [Aside.] Well:—where were you bred?

I'll hear you more, to the bottom of your story, And never interrupt you.

Mar. You'll scarce believe me: 'twere best I did give o'er.

Per. I will believe you by the syllable: Of what you shall deliver. Yet, give me leave:—

How came you in these parts? Where were you bred?

Mar. The king, my father, did in Tharsus leave me;

Till cruel Cleon, with his wicked wife, Did seek to murder me: and having woo'd A villain to attempt it, who having drawn,

A crew of pirates came and rescu'd me: Brought me to Mitylene. But now, good Sir, Whither will you have me? Why do you weep?

It may be,

You think me an impostor: no, good faith; I am the daughter to King Pericles, If good king Pericles be.

Per. Ho, Helicanus!

Hel. Calls my gracious lord?

Per. Thou art a grave and noble counsellor, Most wise in general: Tell me, if thou can'st, What this maid is, or what is like to be, That thus hath made me weep?

Hel. I know not; but

Here is the regent, Sir, of Mitylene, Speaks nobly of her.

Lys. She would never tell

Her parentage, being demanded that, She would sit still and weep.

Per. O Helicanus, strike me, honour'd Sir,

Give me a gash, put me to present pain; Lest this great sea of joys rushing upon me, O'erbear the shores of my mortality, And drown me with their sweetness. O come hither,

Thou that beget'st him that did thee beget; Thou that wast born at sea, buried at Tharsus, And found at sea again! O Helicanus, Down on thy knees, thank the holy gods, as loud

As thunder threatens us: This is Marina.—What was thy mother's name? Tell me but that,

For truth can never be confirm'd enough, Though doubts did ever sleep.

Mar. First, Sir, I pray, What is your title?

Per. I am Pericles of Tyre: but tell me now (As in the rest thou hast been godlike perfect,) My drown'd queen's name, thou art the heir of kingdoms,

And another life to Pericles thy father.

Mar. Is it no more to be your daughter, than To say, my mother's name was Thaisa? Thaisa was my mother, who did end The minute I began.

Per. Now blessing on thee, rise: thou art my child.

Give me fresh garments. Mine own, Helicanus, (Not dead at Tharsus, as she should have been, By savage Cleon,) she shall tell thee all; When thou shalt kneel and justify in knowledge,

She is thy very princess.—Who is this?

Hel. Sir, 'tis the governor of Mitylene, Who, hearing of your melancholy state, Did come to see you.

Per. I embrace you, Sir.

Give me my robes—I am wild in my beholding. O heavens bless my girl! But hark, what music!

Tell Helicanus, my Marina, tell him O'er, point by point, for yet he seems to doubt, How sure you are my daughter.—But what music?

Hel. My lord, I hear none.

Per. None?

The music of the spheres: list, my Marina.

Lys. It is not good to cross him: give him way.

Per. Rarest sounds!

Do ye not hear?

Lys. Music? My lord, I hear—

Per. Most heavenly music:

It nips me unto list'ning, and thick slumber Hangs on mine eye-lids: let me rest.

[He sleeps.]

Lys. A pillow for his head;

[The Curtain before the Pavilion of PERICLES is closed.]

So leave him all.—Well, my companion-friends, If this but answer to my just belief, I'll well remember you.

Exeunt LYSIMACHUS, HELICANUS, MARINA, and attendant LADY.

* I. e. No puppet dressed up to deceive me.
† I will believe every word you say.

SCENE II.—The same.—PERICLES on the Deck asleep: DIANA appearing to him as in a vision.

Dia. My temple stands in Ephesus; hie thee thither,
And do upon mine altar sacrifice.
There, when my maiden priests are met together,
Before the people all,
Reveal how thou at sea didst lose thy wife:
To mourn thy crosses, with thy daughter's call,
And give them repetition to the life.
Perform my bidding, or thou liv'st in woe:
Do't, and be happy, by my silver bow.
Awake, and tell thy dream.

[DIANA disappears.]

Per. Celestial Dian, goddess argentluc,
I will obey thee!—Helicanus!

Enter LYSIMACHUS, HELICANUS, and MARINA.

Hel. Sir.

Per. My purpose was for Tharsus, there to strike

The inhospitable Cleon; but I am
For other service first: toward Ephesus
Turn our blown sails; to-morrow * I'll tell thee why.— [To HELICANUS.]

Shall we refresh us, Sir, upon your shore,
And give you gold for such provision
As our intents will need?

Lys. With all my heart, Sir; and, when you come ashore,
I have another suit.

Per. You shall prevail,
Were it to woo my daughter; for it seems
You have been noble towards her.

Lys. Sir, lend your arm.

Per. Come, my Marina.

[Exeunt.]

Enter GOWER, before the Temple of DIANA at Ephesus.

Gow. Now our sands are almost run;
More a little, and then done.
This, as my last boon, give me,
(For such kindness must relieve me,)
That you aptly will suppose
What pageantry, what feats, what shows,
What minstrelsy, and pretty din,
The regent made in Mitylu,
To greet the king. So he has thriv'd,
That he is promis'd to be wiv'd,
To fair Marina; but in no wise,
Till he had done his sacrifice,
As Dian bade: whereto being bound,
The interim, pray you, all confound. †
In father'd business sails are fill'd,
And wishes fall out as they're will'd.
At Ephesus, the temple see,
Our king, and all his company,
That he can hither come so soon,
Is by your fancy's thankful boon.

[Exit.]

SCENE III.—The Temple of DIANA at Ephesus: THAISIA standing near the Altar, as high Priestess; a number of Virgins on each side; CERIMON and other inhabitants of Ephesus attending.

Enter PERICLES, with his Train; LYSIMACHUS, HELICANUS, MARINA, and a LADY.

Per. Hail Dian! to perform thy just command,
I here confess myself the king of Tyre;
Who, fought from my country, did wed
The fair Thaisa, at Pentapolis.
At sea in childhood died she, but brought forth
A maid-child call'd Marina; who, O goddess,

Wears yet thy silver livery. * She at Tharsus
Was nurs'd with Cleon: whom at fourteen years

He sought to murder: but her better stars
Brought her to Mitylene; against whose shore
Riding, her fortunes brought the maid aboard us,

Where, by her own most clear remembrance, she Made known herself my daughter.

Thai. Voice and favour!—

You are—you are—O royal Pericles!

[She faints]

Per. What means the woman? she dies! help gentlemen!

Cer. Noble Sir.
If you have told Diana's altar true,
This is your wife.

Per. Reverend appearer, no:
I threw her o'erboard with these very arms,
Err. Upon this coast, I warrant you.

Per. 'Tis most certain.

Cer. Look to the lady;—Oh! she's but o'er joy'd.

Early, one blust'ring morn, this lady was Thrown on this shore. I op'd the coffin, and Found there rich jewels; recover'd her, and Plac'd her here in Diana's temple.

Per. May we see them?

Cer. Great Sir, they shall be brought you to my house,

Whither I invite you. Look! Thaisa is Recover'd.

Thai. Oh! let me look!

If he be none of mine, my sanctity
Will to my sense † bend no licentious ear.
But curb it, spite of seeing. O my lord,
Are you not Pericles? Like him you speak,
Like him you are: Did you not name a tempest,

A birth, and death?

Per. The voice of dead Thaisa!

Thai. That Thaisa am I, supposed dead,
And drown'd;—

Per. Immortal Dian!

Thai. Now I know you better.—
When we with tears parted Pentapolis,
The king, my father, gave you such a ring. [Shows a ring.]

Per. This, this: no more, you gods! your present kindness
Makes my past miseries sport: You shall do well,

That on the touching of her lips I may Melt, and no more be seen. O come, be buried
A second time within these arms.

Mar. My heart
Leaps to be gone into my mother's bosom.

Per. Look, who kneels here! Flesh of thy flesh, Thaisa;

Thy burden at the sea, and call'd Marina,
For she was yielded there.

Thai. Bless'd and mine own!

Hel. Hail, madam, and my queen!

Thai. I know you not.

Per. You have heard me say, when I did fly from Tyre,

I left behind an ancient substitute:
Can you remember what I call'd the man?
I have nam'd him oft.

Thai. 'Twas Helicanus then.

Per. Still confirmation:
Embrace him, dear Thaisa: this is he.
Now do I long to hear how you were found;
How possibly preserv'd; and whom to thank,
Besides the gods, for this great miracle.

Thai. Lord Cerimon, my lord; this man
Through whom the gods have shown their power,
That can
From first to last resolve you.

* Soon. † I. e. Pericles.
‡ Confound here signifies to consume.

* I. e. Her white robe of innocence.
† Sensual passion. ‡ Drown'd here means ever whelmed, not suffocated.

Per. Reverend Sir,
The gods can have no mortal officer
More like a god than you. Will you deliver
How this dead queen re-lives?

Cer. I will, my lord.

Beseech you, first go with me to my house,
Where shall be shown you all was found with
her;

How she came placed here within the temple;
No needful thing omitted.

Per. Pure Diana!

I bless thee for thy vision, and will offer
My night oblations to thee. Thaisa,

This prince, the fair-betrothed of your daughter,
Shall marry her at Pentapolis. And now,

This ornament * that makes me look so dismal,

Will I, my lov'd Marina, clip to form;

And what this fourteen years no razor touch'd,

To grace thy marriage-day, I'll beautify.

Thai. Lord Cerimon hath letters of good credit,

Sir, that my father's dead.

Per. Heavens make a star of him! Yet there,
my queen,

We'll celebrate their nuptials, and ourselves

Will in that kingdom spend our following days;

Our son and daughter shall in Tyros reign.

* J. s., His beard.

Lord Cerimon, we do our longing stay,
To hear the rest untold.—Sir, lead the way.

[Exeunt.]

Enter Gowen.

Gow. In Antioch, * and his daughter, you have heard

Of monstrous lust the due and just reward:

In Pericles, his queen and daughter, seen

(Although assail'd with fortune fierce and keen,)

Virtue preserv'd from fell destruction's blast,

Led on by heaven, and crown'd with joy at last.

In Helicanus may you well descry

A figure of truth, of faith, of loyalty:

In reverend Cerimon there well appears,

The worth that learned charity aye wears.

For wicked Cleon and his wife, when fame

Had spread their cursed deed, and honour'd
name

Of Pericles, to rage the city turn;

That him and his they in his palace burn.

The gods for murder seem'd so content

To punish them; although not done, but meant

So on your patience ever more attending,

New joy wait on you! Here our play has ending.

[Exit Gowen.]

* J. s. The king of Antioch.

HAMLET, PRINCE OF DENMARK.

LITERARY AND HISTORICAL NOTICE.

THIS tragedy is supposed to have been written in 1596. The principal incidents were probably drawn from a dramatic piece by one Thomas Ryd, and from a Historie of Hamblet, in black letter, adopted by Belleforest in his collection of novels (published 1564) from the narrative of Saxo-Græmmaticus, the old Danish historian. The play has long been accounted a first-rate dramatic production, for, with some egregious blunders, it contains a variety of unparalleled beauties. As originally written, it consumed four hours in the representation, persons, in Shakspeare's time, visiting the theatre so early as four o'clock, and regarding the quality less than the quantity obtained for their money; this will excuse some of those trifling interlocutions which yet remain. Perhaps none of our poet's undertakings have been subjected to so much erudite and ingenious criticism as this; and none, certainly, after its most severe exercise, have been left with so much to approve. For although it has been observed, with some appearance of justice, that in the management of the piece, Shakspeare has been rather unfortunate, all its most striking circumstances arising so early in the formation, as "not to leave him room for a conclusion suitable to the importance of its beginning;" yet this defect is amply recompened by the sublimity of conception, the didactic morality of sentiment, the pathetic intensity of feeling, the power and comprehensiveness of diction, and the delightful diversity of character, which are displayed in almost every scene. Indeed, were each drama of Shakspeare to be characterized by the particular quality which distinguishes it from the rest, the praise of variety must especially be given to the tragedy of Hamlet; as it is interchangeably contrasted "with merriment that includes judicious and instructive observations; and with solemnity not strained by poetical violence above the natural sentiments of man." To those, however, who are mentally capable of appreciating its excellences as a play, the charm of perusing it in the closet will probably be greater than the delight of witnessing its exhibition; since it is rich in the treasures of contemplative and philosophical speculation, divested of the glare and bustle which captivate or bewilder the senses, whilst the principal character, though furnished with abundant materials, is almost the only support of the piece, and seldom meets with a representative in whom the beauties of the original are effectively embodied. Of the plot it may be observed, that it teems with slaughter, and is justly obnoxious to criticism in many of its parts, but the catastrophe is certainly its most disgusting feature, and can only be tolerated by the known partiality of an English audience for a multiplicity of deaths and bloodshed. "The manner of Hamlet's death (says Dr. Johnson) is not very happily produced; for the exchange of weapons is rather an exponent of necessity, than a stroke of art."

SCENE, Elsinore.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Elsinore.—A Platform before the Castle.

FRANCISCO on his Post.—Enter to him BERNARDO.

Ber. Who's there?

Fran. Nay, answer me: stand, and unfold Yourself.

Ber. Long live the King!

Fran. Bernardo?

Ber. He.

Fran. You come most carefully upon your hour.

Ber. 'Tis now struck twelve; get thee to bed, Francisco.

Fran. For this relief, much thanks: 'tis bitter cold,

And I am sick at heart.

Ber. Have you had quiet guard?

Fran. Not a mouse stirring.

Ber. Well, good night.

If you do meet Horatio and Marcellus, The rivals of my watch, bid them make haste.

Enter HORATIO and MARCELLUS.

Fran. I think I hear them.—Stand, ho! Who is there?

Hor. Friends to this ground.

Mar. And liegemen to the Dane.

Fran. Give you good night.

Mar. O, farewell, honest soldier :
Who hath reliev'd you ?

Fran. Bernardo hath my place.

Give you good night.

[Exit FRANCISCO.]

Mar. Holla ! Bernardo !

Her. Say.

What, is Horatio there ?

Hor. A piece of him.

Her. Welcome, Horatio ; welcome, good Marcellus.

Hor. What, has this thing appear'd again to-night ?

Her. I have seen nothing.

Mar. Horatio says, 'tis but our fantasy ;
And will not let belief take hold of him,
Touching this deadèd sight, twice seen of us :
Therefore I have entreated him, along
With us to watch the minutes of this night,
That, if again this apparition come,
He may approve * our eyes, and speak to it.

Hor. Tush ! tush ! 'twill not appear.

Her. Sit down awhile ;

And let us once again assail your ears,
That are so fortified against our story,
What we two nights have seen.

Hor. Well, sit we down,

And let us hear Bernardo speak of this.

Her. Last night of all,

When yon same star, that's westward from the pole,
Had made his course to illumine that part of heaven
Where now it burns, Marcellus, and myself,
The bell then beating one,—

Mar. Peace, break thee off—look, where it comes again !

Enter GHOST.

Her. In the same figure like the king that's
dead.

Mar. Thou art a scholar, speak to it, Horatio.

Her. Looks it not like the king ? mark it,
Horatio.

Hor. Most like :—it harrows me with fear, and wonder.

Her. It would be spoke to.

Mar. Speak to it, Horatio.

Hor. What art thou, that usurp'st this time of night,
Together with that fair and warlike form
In which the majesty of buried Denmark
Did sometimes march ?—By heaven I charge thee, speak !

Mar. It is offended.

Her. See ! it stalks away.

Hor. Stay ; speak : speak I charge thee, speak.

[Exit GHOST.]

Mar. 'Tis gone, and will not answer.

Her. How now, Horatio ! you tremble, and look pale :

Is not this something more than fantasy ?

What think you of it ?

Hor. Before my God, I might not this believe,
Without the sensible and true avouch
Of mine own eyes.

Mar. Is it not like the king ?

Hor. As thou art to thyself :

Such was the very armour he had on.
When he the ambitious Norway combated :
So frown'd he once, when, in angry parle, †
He smote the sledded ‡ Polack § on the ice.
'Tis strange.

Mar. Thus, twice before, and jump ¶ at this dead hour,

With martial stalk hath he gone by our watch.

Hor. In what particular thought to work, I know not ;

But, in the gross and scope of mine opinion,
This bodes some strange eruption to our state.

Mar. Good now, sit down, and tell me that knows,

Why this same strict and most ob-servant watch
So nightly toils the subject of the land ;
And why such daily cast of brazen cannon,
And foreign mart for implements of war ;
Why such impress of shipwrights, whose sore task

Does not divide the Sunday from the week :
What might be toward, that this sweaty haste Doth make the night joint-labourer with the
day ;

Who is't, that can inform me ?

Hor. That can I ;

At least, the whisper goes so. Our last king,
Whose image even but now appear'd to us,
Was, as you know, by Fortinbras of Norway,
Thereto prick'd on by a most emulate pride,
Dar'd to the combat ; in which our valiant

Hamlet

[him.]

(For so this side of our known world esteem'd)
Did slay this Fortinbras ; who, by a seal'd comwell ratified by law and heraldry, [poet.]
Did forfeit, with his life, all those his lands
Which he stood seiz'd of, to the conqueror :
Against the which, a moiety competent
Was gaged by our king ; which had return'd
To the inheritance of Fortinbras,
Had he been vanquisher ; as, by the same co-mart, *

And carriage of the article design'd, †
His fell to Hamlet : Now, Sir, young Fortin-
Of unimproved mettle hot and full, ‡ [brav.]
Hath in the skirts of Norway, here and there,
Shark'd § up a list of landless resolute,
For food and diet, to some enterprise
That hath a stomach ¶ in't : which is no other
(As it doth well appear unto our state,)

But to recover of us, by strong hand,
And terms compulsory, those 'foresaid lands
So by his father lost : And this, I take it,
Is the main motive of our preparations ;
The source of this our watch ; and the chief

head

Of this post-haste and romage ¶ in the land.

[Her. I think it be no other, but even so :
Well may it sort,  that this portentous figure Comes armed through our watch ; so like the king

That was, and is, the question of these wars.

Hor. A mote it is, to trouble the mind's eye.
In the most high and palmy †† state of Rome,
A little ere the mightiest Julius fell, [dead]
The graves stood tenantless, and the sheeted ‡
Did squeak and gibber in the Roman streets.

As, stars with trains of fire and dews of blood,
Disasters in the sun ; and the moist star, †
Upon whose influence Neptune's empire stand,
Was sick almost to doomsday with eclipse.
And even the like precursor of fierce events,—
As harbingers preceding still the fates,
And prologue to the omen § coming on,
Have heaven and earth together demonstrat'd
Unto our climatures and countrymen.—]

Re-enter GHOST.

But, soft ; behold ! lo, where it comes again !
I'll cross it, though it blast me.—Stay, illusion !

If thou hast any sound, or use of voice,

Speak to me :

If there be any good thing to be done,
That may to thee do ea-e, and grace to me,
Speak to me :

If thou art privy to thy country's fate,
Which happily foreknowing may avoid,
O speak !

Or, if thou hast uphoarded in thy life
Extorted treasure in the womb of earth,
For which, they say, you spirits oft walk in death,
[Clock chimes.]

Speak of it:—stay, and speak.—Stop it, Marcellus.

Mar. Shall I strike at it with my partizan?

Hor. Do, if it will not stand.

Ber. 'Tis here!

Hor. 'Tis here!

Mar. 'Tis gone!

[Exit GHOST.]

We do it wrong, being so majestic,
To offer it the show of violence;
For it is, as the air, invulnerable,
And our vain blows malicious mockery.

Ber. It was about to speak, when the cock crew.

Hor. And then it started like a guilty thing
Upon a fearful summons. I have heard,
The cock, that is the trumpet of the morn,
Doth with his lofty and shrill-sounding throat
Awake the god of day; and, at his warnings,
Whether in sea or fire, in earth or air,
The extravagant and erring spirit hies
To his confine; and of the truth herein
This present object made probation.†

Mar. It faded on the crowing of the cock.
Some say, that ever 'gainst that season comes
Wherein our Saviour's birth is celebrated,
This bird of dawning singeth all night long;
And then they say no spirit dares stir abroad;
The nights are wholesome; then no planets
strike,

No fairy takes, nor witch hath power to charm;
So hallow'd and so gracious is the time.

Hor. So I have heard, and do in part believe it.

But look, the morn, in russet mantle clad,
Walks o'er the dew of yon high eastern hill:
Break we our watch up; and, by my advice,
Let us impart what we have seen to-night
Unto young Hamlet: for, upon my life,
This spirit, dumb to us, will speak to him:
Do you consent we shall acquaint him with it,
As needful in our loves, fitting our duty?

Mar. Let's do't, I pray; and I this morning know

Where we shall find him most convenient.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same.—A Room of State in the same.

Enter the KING, QUEEN, HAMLET, POLONIUS, LAERTES, VOLTIMAND, CORNELIUS, LORDS, and Attendants.

King. Though yet of Hamlet our dear brother's death

The memory be green; and that it us befitted
To beat our hearts in grief, and our whole kingdom

To be contracted in one brow of woe;
Yet so far hath discretion fought with nature,
That we with wisest sorrow think on him,
Together with remembrance of ourselves.
Therefore our sometime sister, now our queen,
The imperial jointress of this warlike state,
Have we, as 'twere, with a defeated joy,—
With one auspicious, and one dropping eye;
With mirth in funeral, and with dirge in marriage,

In equal scale weighing delight and dole,†
Taken to wife: nor have we herein barr'd
Your better wisdoms, which have freely gone
With this affair along.—For all, our thanks.
Now follows, that you know, young Fortinbras—

Holding a weak supposal of our worth;
Or thinking, by our late dear brother's death,
Our state to be disjoint and out of frame,
Colleagu'd with this dream of his advantage,
He hath not fail'd to pester us with message,
Importing our surrender of those lands
Lost by his father, with all bands of law,
To our most valiant brother.—So much for him.

Now for ourself, and for this time of meeting.
Thus much the business is: We have here writ
To Norway, uncle of young Fortinbras,—
Who, impotent and bed-ridden, scarcely hears
Of this his nephew's purpose,—to suppress
His further gait * herein; in that the levies,
The lists, and full proportions, are all made
Out of his subject:—and we here dispatch
You, good Cornelius, and you Voltimand,
For bearers of this greeting to old Norway;
Giving to you no further personal power
To business with the king, more than the scope
Of these dilated articles allow. [duty.]

Farewell; and let your haste commend your Cor. Vol. In that and all things will we show our duty.

King. We doubt it nothing; heartily farewell.

[Exeunt VOLTIMAND and CORNELIUS.]

And now, Laertes, what's the news with you?
You told us of some suit; What is't, Laertes?
You cannot speak of reason to the Dane,
And lose your voice: What would'st thou best, Laertes,

That shall not be my offer, not thy asking?

The head is not more native to the heart,
The hand more instrumental to the mouth,
Than is the throne of Denmark to thy father.

What wouldst thou have, Laertes?

Laer. My dread lord,
Your leave and favour to return to France;
From whence, though willingly, I came to Denmark,

To show my duty in your coronation;
Yet now, I must confess, that duty done,
My thoughts and wishes bend again toward
France,

And bow them to your gracious leave and pardon.
King. Have you your father's leave? What says Polonius?

Pol. He hath, my lord, [wringing from me my slow leave,

By labour'some petition; and, at last,
Upon his will I seal'd my hard consent:]
I do beseech you, give him leave to go.

King. Take thy fair hour, Laertes; time be
thine,

And thy best graces; spend it at thy will.—
But now, my cousin Hamlet, and my son,—

Ham. A little more than kin, and less than kind.† [Aside.]

King. How is it, that the clouds still hang on
you?

Ham. Not so, my lord, I am too much p'the sun.

Queen. Good Hamlet, cast thy nighted colour off,

And let thine eye look like a friend on Denmark.
Do not, for ever, with thy veiled lids;
Seek for thy noble father in the dust:

Thou know'st 'tis common; all that live must die;

Passing through nature to eternity.

Ham. Ay, madam, it is common.

Queen. If it be,

Why seems it so particular with thee?

Ham. Seems, madam! nay, it is I know not seems.

'Tis not alone my lank cloak, good mother,
Nor customary suits of solemn black,
Nor windy suspiration of forc'd breath,
No, nor the fruitful river in the eye,
Nor the dejected haviour of the visage,
Together with all forms, modes, shows of grief,
That can denote me truly: These, indeed,
seem,

For they are actions that a man might play;
But I have that within, which passeth show—
These, but the trappings and the suits of woe.

King. 'Tis sweet and commendable in your nature, Hamlet,

To give these mourning duties to your father:—

* Wand'ring.

† Proof.
‡ Bonds.

§ Grief.

* Way-path
child.

† Kin is the Teutonic word for dejected eyes.

But, you must know, your father lost a father;
That father lost his; and the survivor bound
In filial obligation, for some term
To do obsequious sorrow: But to persevere
In obstinate condolement, is a course
Of impious stubbornness; 'tis unmanly grief:
It shows a will most incorrect to heaven;
A heart unfortified, or mind impatient;
An understanding simple and unschool'd;
For what we know must be, and is as common

As any the most vulgar thing to sense,
Why should we, in our revish opposition,
Take it to heart? Fie! 'Tis a fault to heaven.
A fault against the dead, a fault to nature,
To reason most absurd; whose common theme
Is death of fathers, and who still hath cried,
From the first corse, till he that died to-day,
This must be so. We pray you, throw to earth
This unprevailing woe; and think of us
As of a father: for let the world take note,
You are the most immediate to our throne;
And, with no less nobility of love,
Than that which dearest father bears his son,
Do I impart toward you. For your intent
In going back to school in Wittenberg,
It is most retrograde* to our desire;
And, we beseech you, bend you to remain
Here, in the cheer and comfort of our eye,
Our chiefest courtier, cousin, and our son.
Queen. Let not thy mother lose her prayers,
Hamlet;

I pray thee, stay with us; go not to Wittenberg.
Ham. I shall in all my best obey you, madam.

King. Why, 'tis a loving and a fair reply;
Be as ourself in Denmark.—Madam, come;
This gentle and unforc'd accord of Hamlet
Sits smiling to my heart: in grace whereof,
No jocund health that Denmark drinks to-day,
But the great cannon to the clouds shall tell,
And the king's rouse; the heaven shall bruit;
again,

Re-speaking earthly thunder. Come away.
Exeunt KING, QUEEN, Lords, &c. POLON-NICS, AND LAERTES.

Ham. Oh! that this too too solid flesh would Thaw, and resolve itself into a dew! (melt,
Or that the Everlasting had not fix'd (God!
His canon) 'gainst self-slaughter!—O God! O
How weary, stale, flat, and unprofitable
Seem to me all the uses of this world!
Fie on't! O fie! 'tis an unweeded garden,
That grows to seed; things rank and gross in nature

Possess it merely. † That it should come to this!
But two months dead!—nay, not so much, not
So excellent a king; that was, to this, [two]
Hyperion to a satyr: so loving to my mother,
That he might not betwixt † the winds of heaven

Visit her face too roughly. Heaven and earth!
Must I remember? why, she would hang on him,
As if increase of appetite had grown
By what it fed on: And yet, within a month,— Let me not think on't!—Frailty, thy name is woman!—

A little month: or ere those shoes were old,
With which she follow'd my poor father's body,
Like Niobe, all tears;—why—she, even she,— O heaven! a beast, that wants discourse of reason,

Would have mourn'd longer,—married with my
uncle,
My father's brother; but no more like my father

Than I to Hercules: Within a month,
Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears
Had left the flushing in her galled eyes,
She married!—O most wicked speed, to post
With such dexterity to incestuous sheets!

It is not, nor it cannot come to, good.—
But break, my heart; for I must hold my tongue!

Enter HORATIO, BERNARDO, and MARCELLUS.

Hor. Hail to your lordship!

Ham. I am glad to see you well:
Horatio,—or I do forget myself.

Hor. The same, my lord, and your poor servant ever.

Ham. Sir, my good friend; I'll change that name with you. [two?—

And what make you from Wittenberg, Hora-
Marcellus?

Mar. My good lord,—

Ham. I am very glad to see you; good even
Sir.—

But what, in faith, make you from Wittenberg?

Hor. A truant disposition, good my lord.

Ham. I would not hear your enemy say so:

Nor shall you do mine ear that violence,

To make it trust of your own report.

Against yourself: I know you are no truant.

But what is your affair in Elsinore?

We'll teach you to drink deep ere you depart.

Hor. My lord, I came to see your father's funeral.

Ham. I pray thee, do not mock me, fellow student;

I think, it was to see my mother's wedding.

Hor. Indeed, my lord, it follow'd hard upon.

Ham. Thrift, thrift, Horatio! the funeral bakh'd meats*

Did coldly furnish forth the marriage tables.

'Would I had met my dearest foe in heaven

Or ever I had seen that day, Horatio!

My father,—methinks, I see my father.

Hor. Where,

My lord?

Ham. In my mind's eye, Horatio.

Hor. I saw him once, he was a goodly king.

Ham. He was a man, take him for all in all,

I shall not look upon his like again.

Hor. My lord, I think I saw him yesternight.

Ham. Saw I who?

Hor. My lord, the king your father.

Ham. The king my father?

Hor. Season your admiration for a while

With an attent† ear; till I may deliver,

Upon the witness of these gentlemen,

This marvel to you.

Ham. For God's love, let me hear.

Hor. Two nights together had these gentle-
men,

Marcellus and Bernardo, on their watch,

In the dead waist and middle of the night,

Been thus encounter'd. A figure like your father,

Armed at point, exactly, cap-a-pé,

Appears before them, and, with solemn march,

Goes slow and stately by them: thrice he walk'd

By their oppress'd and fear-surprized eyes,

Within his trunkheon's length; whilst they,

Distill'd

Almost to jelly with the act of fear,

Stand dumb, and speak not to him. This to me

In dreadful secrecy impart they did;

And I with them, the third night, kept the watch;

Where, as they had deliver'd, both in time,

Form of the thing, each word made true and
good,

The apparition comes: I knew your father;

These hands are not more like.

Ham. But where was this?

Hor. My lord, upon the platform where we watch'd.

Ham. Did you not speak to it?

Hor. My lord, I did;

But answer made it none: yet once, methought,

It lifted up its head, and did address

But, even then, the morning cock crew loud,
And at the sound it shrunk in haste away,
And vanish'd from our sight.

Ham. 'Tis very strange.

Hor. As I do live, my honour'd lord, 'tis true;
And we did think it writ down in our duty,
To let you know of it.

Ham. Indeed, indeed, Sirs, but this troubles
Hold you the watch to-night? [me.

All. We do, my lord.

Ham. Arm'd, say you?

All. Arm'd, my lord.

Ham. From top to toe?

All. My lord, from head to foot.

Ham. Then saw you not
His face.

Hor. O yes, my lord; he wore his beaver *
up.

Ham. What, look'd he frowningly?

Hor. A countenance more
In sorrow than in anger.

Ham. Pale, or red?

Hor. Nay, very pale.

Ham. And fix'd his eyes upon you?

Hor. Most constantly.

Ham. I would I had been there.

Hor. It would have much amaz'd you.

Ham. Very like,

Very like: Stay'd it long?

Hor. While one with moderate haste might tell a hundred.

Mar. Ber. Longer, longer.

Hor. Not when I saw it.

Ham. His beard was grizzled? no?

Hor. It was, as I have seen it in his life,
A sable silver'd.

Ham. I will watch to-night:

Perchance, 'twill walk again.

Hor. I warrant it will.

Ham. If it assume my noble father's person,
I'll speak to it, though hell itself should gape,
And bid me hold my peace. I pray you all,
If you have hitherto conceal'd this sight,
Let it be tenable in your silence still;
And whatsoever else shall hap to-night,
Give it an understanding, but no tongue:
I will requite your loves: So, fare you well:
Upon the platform, 'twixt eleven and twelve,
I'll visit you.

All. Our duty to your honour.

Ham. Your loves, as mine to you: Farewell.
[Exit HORATIO, MARCELLUS, and BEN-NANDO.

My father's spirit in arms! all is not well;
I doubt some foul play: 'would, the night were
come!

Till then—sit still, my soul: Foul deeds will rise (Though all the earth o'erwhelm them) to men's eyes. [Exit.

SCENE III.—A Room in POLONIUS' House.

Enter LAERTES and OPHELIA.

Laer. My necessities are embark'd; farewell:
And, sister, as the winds give benefit,
And convey is assistant, do not sleep,
But let me hear from you.

Oph. Do you doubt that?

Laer. For Hamlet, and the trifling of his fa-
Hold it a fashion, and a toy in blood; [your,
A violet in the youth of primy nature,
Forward, not permanent, sweet, not lasting,
The perfume and suppliance of a minute;
No more.

Oph. No more but so?

Laer. Think it no more:

For nature, crescent, † does not grow alone
In thews, and bulk; but, as this temple waxes,
The inward service of the mind and soul
Grows wide withal. Perhaps, he loves you now;

And now no soil, nor cautel, * doth besmirch *
The virtue of his will: but, you must fear,
His greatness weigh'd, his will is not his own;
For he himself is subject to his birth:
He may not, as unvalued persons do,
Carve for himself; for on his choice depends
The safety and the health of the whole state;
And therefore must his choice be circumscrib'd
Unto the voice and yielding of that body, Whereof he is the head: Then if he says he loves you,

It fits your wisdom so far to believe it,
As he in his particular act and place
May give his saying deed; which is no further,
Than the main voice of Denmark goes withal.
Then weigh what loss your honour may sus-tain,

If with too credent † ear you list ‡ his songs;
Or lose your heart: or your chaste treasure open
To his unmaster'd † opportunity.
Fear it, Ophelia, fear it, my dear sister;
And keep you in the rear of your affection,
Out of the shot and danger of desire.

The chariest † maid is prodigal enough,
If she unmask her beauty to the moon:
Virtue itself scapes not calumnious strokes:
The canker galls the infants of the spring,
Too oft before their buttons be disclos'd;
And in the morn and liquid dew of youth
Contagious blastments are most imminent.

Be wary then: best safety lies in fear;
Youth to itself rebels, though none else near.

Oph. I shall effect of this good lesson
keep,

As watchman to my heart: But, good my brother,
Do not, as some ungracious pastors do,
Show me the steep and thorny way to heaven;
Whilst, like a puif'd and and reckless * † libertine,
Himself the prunose path of dalliance tread,
And reck not his own read. ††

Laer. O fear me not.

I stay too long;—But here my father comes.

Enter POLONIUS.

A double blessing is a double grace;
Occasion smiles upon a second leave.

Pol. Yet here, Laertes! aboard, aboard, for
shame;

The wind sits in the shoulder of your sail,
And you are staid for: (n) There,—my blessing
with you;

[Laying his Hand on LAERTES' Head.

Nor any unproportion'd thought his act.
Be thou familiar, but by no means vulgar.
The friends thou hast, and their adoption tried,
Grapple them to thy soul with hooks of steel;
But do not dull thy palm †§ with entertainment
Of each new-hatch'd, unfiedg'd comrade. Beware

Bear it that the opposer may beware of thee,
Give every man thine ear, but few thy voice:
Take each man's censure, †‡ but reserve thy judgment.

But not express'd in fancy; rich, not gaudy:

tion, [that

ing attention in public, and perusal in private.

And it must follow, as the night the day,

Farewell; my blessing season * this in thee!

Lacr. Most humble do I take my leave, my lord.

Pol. The time invites you; go, your servants tend.†

Lacr. Farewell, Ophelia; and remember well What I have said to you.

Oph. 'Tis in memory lock'd,
And you yourself shall keep the key of it.

Lacr. Farewell. [Exit LACRATES.]

Pol. What is't, Ophelia, he hath said to you?

Oph. So please you, something touching the lord Hamlet.

Pol. Marry, well bethought:

'Tis told me, he hath very oft of late Given private time to you; and you yourself Have of your audience been most free and bounteous,

If it be so, (as so 'tis put on me, And that in way of caution,) I must tell you, You do not understand yourself so clearly, As it behoves my daughter and your honour: What is between you? give me up the truth.

Oph. He hath, my lord, of late, made many of his affection to me. [tenders]

Pol. Affection? puh! you speak like a green girl,

Unsettled; in such perilous circumstance.

Do you believe his tenders, as you call them?

Oph. I do not know, my lord, what I should think.

Pol. Marry, I'll teach you: think yourself a baby;

That you have ta'en these tenders for true pay, Which are not sterling. Tender yourself more dearly;

Or (not to crack the wind of the poor phrase, Wronging it thus,) you'll tender me a fool.

Oph. My lord he hath importun'd me with love, In honourable fashion.‡

Pol. Ay, fashion you may call it; go to, go to.

Oph. And hath given countenance to his speech, my lord,

With almost all the holy vows of heaven.

Pol. Ay, springs to catch woodcocks. I do know,

When the blood burns, how prodigal the soul Lends the tongue vows: these blazes, daughter, Giving more light than heat,—extinct in both, Even in their promise, as it is a making,— You must not take for fire. From this time, Be somewhat scater of your maiden presence; Set your entreatments || at a higher rate, Than a command to parley. For lord Hamlet, Believe so much in him, That he is young; And with a larger tether ¶ may he walk, Then may be given you: In few, Ophelia, Do not believe his vows; for they are brokers,  Not of that die which their investments show, But mere importators † of unholy suits, Breathing like sanctified and pious bonds, The better to beguile. This is for all,— I would not, in plain terms, from this time forth,

Have you so slander any moment's leisure, As to give words or talk with the lord Hamlet.

Look to't, I charge you; come your ways.

Oph. I shall obey, my lord. [Exit.]

SCENE IV.—The Platform.

Enter HAMLET, HORATIO, and MARCELLUS.

Ham. The air bites shrewdly; it is very cold.

Hor. It is a nipping and an eager †† air.

Ham. What hour now?

Hor. I think it lacks of twelve.

Mar. No, it is struck.

Hor. Indeed? I heard it not; it then draws near the season,
Wherein the spirit held is wont to walk.

[A Flourish of Trumpets, and Ordinance shot off, within.]

What does this mean, my lord?

Ham. The king doth wake to-night, and takes his rouse,‡

Keeps wassel,† and the swaggering upspring reels;‡

And, as he drains his draughts of Rhenish down, The kettle-drum and trumpet thus bray out The triumph of his pledge.

Hor. Is it a custom †?

Ham. Ay, marry, is't:

But to my mind,—though I am native here, And to the manner born,—it is a custom More honour'd in the breach, than the observance.

This heavy-headed revel, east and west, Makes us traduc'd, and tax'd of other nations: They clepe § us, drunkards, and with swinish phrase

Soil our addition; and, indeed it takes From our achievements, though perform'd at height,

The pith and marrow of our attribute.

So, oft it chances in particular men, That, for some vicious mode of nature in them, As, in their birth, (wherein they are not guilty,

Since nature cannot choose his origin,) By the o'ergrowth of some complexion, ||

Of breaking down the pales and forts of reason;

Or by some habit, that too much o'er-leavens The form of plausive manners;—that these men,—

Carrying, I say, the stamp of one defect; Being nature's livery, or fortune's star,—

Their virtues else (be they as pure as grace, As infinite as man may undergo,

Shall in the general censure take corruption From that particular fault: The drama of base

Doth all the noble substance often doubt, ¶ To his own scandal.

Enter GHOST.

Hor. Look, my lord, it comes!

Ham. Angels and ministers of grace defend us!—

Be thou a spirit of health, or goblin damn'd, Bring with thee airs from heaven, or blasts from hell,

Be thy intents wicked, or charitable, Thou com'st in such a questionable  shape,

That I will speak to thee: I'll call thee, Hamlet, King, father, royal Dane: O answer me!

Let me not burst in ignorance! but tell, Why thy canoniz'd bones, hearsed in death,

Have burst their cerements! why the sepulchre, Wherein we saw thee quietly inurn'd,

Hath op'd his ponderous and marble jaws, To cast thee up again! What may this mean,

That thou, dead creature, again, in complete steel, Revilst'st thus the glimpses of the moon,

Making night hideous; and we fools of nature So horribly to shake our disposition, ††

With thoughts beyond the reaches of our souls? Say, why is this? wherefore? what should we do?

Hor. It beckons you to go away with it, As if it some impartment did desire

To you alone.

Mar. Look, with what courteous action It waves you to a more removed ‡ ground:

But do not go with it.

Hor. No, by no means.

Ham. It will not speak; then I will follow it.

Hor. Do not, my lord.

Ham. Why, what should be the fear?

I do not set my life at a pin's fee; §§

And, for my soul, what can it ^{do} to that,
Being a thing immortal as itself?
It waves me forth again;—I'll follow it!

Hor. What if it tempt you toward the flood,
my lord,

Or to the dreadful summit of the cliff,
That beetles ^{o'er} his base into the sea,
And there assume some other horrible form,
Which might deprive your sovereignty of reason.

And draw you into madness?—think of it;
The very place puts toys of de-peration,
Without more motive, into every brain,
That looks so many fathoms to the sea,
And hears it roar beneath.

Ham. It waves me still:—
Go on, I'll follow thee.

Mar. You shall not go, my lord.

Ham. Hold off your hands.

Hor. Be rul'd, you shall not go.

Ham. My fate cries out,
And makes each petty artery in this body
As hardy as the Nemean lion's nerve.—

[GHOST beckons.
Still am I call'd;—unhand me, gentlemen;—

[Breaking from them.
By heaven, I'll make a ghost of him that lets;

I say, away!—Go on, I'll follow thee. [He :—
[Exit GHOST and HAMLET.]

Hor. He waves desperate with imagination.
Mar. Let's follow: 'tis not fit thus to obey him.

Hor. Have after:—To what issue will this come?

Mar. Something is rotten in the state of Denmark.

Hor. Heaven will direct it.

Mar. Nay, let's follow him. [Exit.]

SCENE V.—A more remote part of the Platform.

Re-enter GHOST and HAMLET.

Ham. Whither wilt thou lead me? Speak:
I'll go no further.

Ghost. Mark me.

Ham. I will.

Ghost. My hour is almost come,
When I to sulphurous and tormenting flames
Must render up myself.

Ham. Alas, poor ghost!

Ghost. Pity me not, but lend thy serious hearing

To what I shall unfold.

Ham. Speak, I am bound to hear.

Ghost. So art thou to revenge, when thou shalt hear.

Ham. What?

Ghost. I am thy father's spirit;
Doom'd for a certain term to walk the night;
And, for the day, confin'd to fast in fires,^(a)
Till the foul crimes, done in my days of nature,
Are burn'd and purg'd away. But that I am
To tell the secrets of my prison-house, ^[forbid]
I could a tale unfold, whose lightest word
Would harrow up thy soul; freeze thy young blood;

Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their Thy knotted and combined locks to part,
Like quills upon the fretful porcupine:

But this eternal blazon [§] must not be
To ears of flesh and blood:—List, list, oh! list!—
If thou didst ever thy dear father love,—

Ham. O heaven!

Ghost. Revenge his foul and most unnatural murder.

Ham. Murder?

Ghost. Murder most foul, as in the best it is;
But this most foul, strange, and unnatural.

And duller shouldst thou be than the fat weed
That rots itself in ease on Lethe wharf, ^[hear] Wouldst thou not stir in this. Now Hamlet,
'Tis given out, that, sleeping in mine orchard,
A serpent stung me; so the whole ear of Denmark is by a forged process of my death ^[mark]
Rankly abus'd: but know, thou noble youth,
The serpent that did sting thy father's life,
Now wears his crown.

Ham. O my prophetic soul! my uncle!

Ghost. Ay, that incestuous, that adulterate beast,

With witchcraft of his wit, with traitorous gifts,
(O wicked wit, and gifts, that have the power
So to seduce!) won to his shameful lust
The will of my most seeming virtuous queen:
O Hamlet, what a falling-off was there!
From me whose love was of that dignity,
That it went hand in hand even with the vow
I made to her in marriage; and to decline
Upon a wretch, whose natural gifts were poor
To those of mine!

But virtue, as it never will be mov'd,
Though lewdness court it in a shape of heaven;
So last, though to a radiant angel link'd,
Will sitte† itself in a celestial bed,
And prey on garbage.

But, soft! methinks I scent the morning air;
Brief let me be:—Sleeping within mine or-
My custom always of the afternoon, ^[chard]
Upon my secure hour thy uncle stole,

With juice of cursed hebenon; in a vial,
And in the porches of mine ears did pour
The leperous distillment; whose effect
Holds such an enmity with blood of man,
That, swift as quicksilver, it courses through
The natural gates and alleys of the body;

And, with a sudden vigour, it doth posset
And curd, like eager droppings into milk,
The thin and wholesome blood: so did it mine.
And a most instant tetter [§] bark'd about,
Most laraz-like, with vile and loathsome crust,
All my smooth body.

Thus was I, sleeping, by a brother's hand,
Of life, of crown, of queen, at once despatch'd:†

But, howsoever thou pursu'st this act,
Taint not thy mind, nor let thy soul contrive
Against thy mother aught; leave her to heav'n,
And to those thorns that in her bosom lodge,
To prick and sting her. Fare thee well at once!

And 'gins to pale his uneffectual fire:

Hamlet, and in all modern representations is spoken by
him.

That youth and observation copied there ;
And thy commandment all alone shall live
Within the book and volume of my brain,
Unmix'd with baser matter : yes, by heav'n !
O most pernicious woman !
O villain, villain, smiling, damned villain !

That one may smile, and smile, and be a villain ;
At least, I am sure, it may be so in Denmark :

So, uncle, there you are. Now to my word :
It is, Adieu, adieu ! remember me.
I have sworn't.

Hor. [Within.] My lord, my lord, —

Mar. [Within.] Lord Hamlet, —

Hor. [Within.] Heaven secure him !

Ham. So be it !

Hor. [Within.] Illo, ho, ho, my lord !

Ham. Hillo, ho, ho, boy ! come, bird, come.

Enter HORATIO AND MARCELLUS.

Mar. How is't, my noble lord ?

Hor. What news, my lord ?

Ham. O wonderful !

Hor. Good my lord, tell it.

Ham. No ;

You will reveal it.

Hor. Not I, my lord, by heaven.

Mar. Nor I, my lord.

Ham. How say you then ; would heart of man once think it !—

But you'll be secret, —

Hor. Mar. Ay, by heaven my lord.

Ham. There's ne'er a villain, dwelling in all Denmark,

But he's an arrant knave,

Hor. There needs no ghost, my lord, come from the grave

To tell us this.

Ham. Why, right ; you are in the right ;

And so, without more circumstance at all,
I hold it fit, that we shake hands, and part :
You, as your business, and desire, shall point
you ;—

For every man hath business, and desire,
Such as it is,—and, for my own poor part,
Look you, I will go pray.

Hor. These are but wild and whirling words,
my lord.

Ham. I am sorry they offend you, heartily ;
Faith, heartily. [Yes]

Hor. There's no offence, my lord.

Ham. Yes, by Saint Patrick, but there is,
Horatio, [here,—]

And much offence too. Touching this vision
It is an honest ghost, that let me tell you ;
For your desire to know what is between us,
O'er-master it as you may. And now, good
friends,

As you are friends, scholars, and soldiers,
Give me one poor request.

Hor. What is't, my lord ?

We will.

Ham. Never make known what you have seen to-night.

Hor. Mar. My lord, we will not.

Ham. Nay, but swear't.

Hor. In faith,

My lord, not I.

Mar. Nor I, my lord, in faith.

Ham. Upon my sword.

Mar. We have sworn, my lord, already.

Ham. Indeed, upon my sword, indeed.

Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear.

Ham. Ha, ha, boy ! say'st thou so ? art thou there, true-penny ? [age,—]
Come on—you hear this fellow in the cellar—
Consent to swear.

Hor. Propose the oath, my lord.

Ham. Never to speak of this that you have ground :—

Come hither, gentlemen,

And lay your hands again upon my sword :

Swear by my sword,

Never to speak of this that you have heard.

Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear by his sword.

Ham. Well said, old mole ! canst work i'th earth so fast ?

A worthy pioneer !—Once more remove, good
friends.

Hor. O day and night, but this is wondrous strange !

Ham. And therefore as a stranger give it
welcome.

There are more things in heaven and earth,
Horatio,

Than are dreamt of in your philosophy.

But come ;—

Here, as before, never, so help you mercy !

How strange or odd soe'er I bear myself,

As I, perchance, hereafter shall think meet

To put an antic disposition on,—

That you, at such times seeing me, never shall,

With arms encumber'd thus, or this head-shake,

Or by pronouncing of some doubtful phrase,

As, Well, well, we know ;—or, We could, an
if we would ;—or, If we list to speak ;—or,

There be, and if they might ;—

Or such ambiguous giving out to note

That you know ought of me :—This do you swear, [you !]

So grace and mercy at your most need help
Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear.

Ham. Rest, rest, perturbed spirit ! So, gentlemen,

With all my love I do commend me to you :

And what so poor a man as Hamlet is

May do, to express his love and friendship to you, [ther :]

And still your fingers on your lips, I pray.

The time is out of joint ;—O cursed spite !

That ever I was born to set it right !

Nay, come, let's go together. [Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Room in POLONIUS' House.

Enter POLONIUS AND REYNALDO.

Pol. Give him this money, and these notes,
Reynaldo.

Rey. I will, my lord.

Pol. You shall do marvellous wisely, good
Reynaldo,

Before you visit him, to make inquiry
Of his behaviour.

Rey. My lord, I did intend it.

Pol. Marry, well said : very well said. Look you, Sir,

Inquire me first what Danvers† are in Paris ;
And how, and who, what means, and where they keep,

What company, at what expense ; and finding,
By this encompassment and drift of question,
That they do know my son, come you more nearer

Than your particular demands will touch it :

Take you, as 'twere, some distant knowledge of
him ;

As thus,—I know his father, and his friends,
And, in part him :—Do you mark this, Rey-naldo ?

Rey. Ay, very well, my lord.

Pol. And, in part, him ;—but, you may say,
not well :

But, if't be he I mean, he's very wild ;
Addicted so and so ;—and there put on him

What forgeries you please; marry, none so rank

As may dishonour him; take heed of that;
But, Sir, such wanton, wild, and usual slips,
As are companions noted and most known
To youth and liberty.

Rey. As gaming, my lord.

Pol. Ay, or drinking, fencing, swearing, quarrelling,

Drabbing:—You may go so far.

Rey. My lord, that would dishonour him.

Pol. 'Faith, no; as you may season it in the charge.

You must not put another scandal on him,
That he is open to incontinency;
That's not my meaning: but breathe his faults
so quaintly,

That they may seem the taints of liberty;

The flash and out-break of a fiery mind;

A savageness in unclaimed blood,

Of general assault.

Rey. But, my good lord,—

Pol. Wherefore should you do this?

Rey. Ay, my lord,

I would know that.

Pol. Marry, Sir, here's my drift;

And, I believe, it is a fetch of warrant:

You laying these slight sullies on my son,

As 'twere a thing a little soil'd 't' the working,

Mark you.

Your party in converse, him you would sound,

Having ever seen in the prenominate crimes,

The youth you breathe of guilty, be assur'd,

He closes with you in this consequence;

Good Sir, or so; or friend, or gentleman,—

According to the phrase, or the addition,

Of man, and country.

Rey. Very good, my lord.

Pol. And then, Sir, does he this,—He does—

What was I about to say?—By the mass, I was about to say something:—Where did I leave?

Rey. At closes in the consequence.

Pol. At closes in the consequence,—Ay,

He closes with you thus:—I know the gentle-

I saw him yesterday, or t'other day, [man;

Or then, or then; with such, or such; and,

as you say,

There was he gaming; there o'ertook in his rouse;

There falling out at tennis; or perchance,

I saw him enter such a house of sale,

(Videlicet, a brothel,) or so forth.—

See you now:

Your bait of falsehood takes this carp of truth:

And thus do we of wisdom and of reach,

With windlances, and with assays of bias,

By indirectness find directions out;

So, by former lecture and advice,

Shall you, my son: You have me, have you not?

Rey. My lord, I have.

Pol. God be wi' you; fare you well.

Rey. Good my lord,—

Pol. Observe his inclination in yourself.

Rey. I shall, my lord.

Pol. And let him play his music.

Rey. Well, my lord. [Exit.]

Enter Ophelia.

Pol. Farewell!—How now, Ophelia? what's the matter;

Oph. O my lord, my lord, I have been so affrighted!

Pol. With what, in the name of heaven?

Oph. My lord, as I was sewing in my closet,

Lord Hamlet,—with his doublet all unbrac'd;

No hat upon his head; his stockings foul'd,

Ungarter'd, and down-gyved to his ankle;

Pale as his shirt; his knees knocking each other;

And with a look so piteous in purport,

As if he had been loosed out of hell,
To speak of horrors,—he comes before me.

Pol. Mad for thy love?

Oph. My lord, I do not know;

But, truly, I do fear it.

Pol. What said he?

Oph. He took me by the wrist, and held me hard;

Then goes he to the length of all his arm;

And, with his other hand thus o'er his brow,

He falls to such perusal of my face,

As he would draw it. Long stay'd he so;

At last,—a little shaking of mine arm,

And thrice his head thus waving up and
down,—

He rais'd a sigh so piteous and profound,

As it did seem to shatter all his bulk,*

And ~~his~~ being: That, done, he lets me go;

And ~~his~~ head over his shoulder turn'd;

He seem'd to find his way without his eyes;

For out o' doors he went without their help,

And, to the last, bended their light on me.

Pol. Come, go with me: I will go seek the

Oph. No, my good lord: but, as you did command,

I did repel his letters, and denied

His access to me.

Pol. That hath made him mad.

I am sorry that with better heed and judgment,

I had not quoted‡ him; I fear'd he did but

It seems it is as proper to our age

To cast beyond ourselves in our opinions,

As it is common for the younger sort

To lack discretion. Come, go we to the king:

This must be known; which, being kept close,

might move

SCENE II.—A Room in the Castle.

Enter KING, QUEEN, ROSENCRANTZ, GUILDEN-
STERN, and Attendants.

King. Welcome, dear Rosenkrantz, and Guildenstern!

Moreover that we much did long to see you,

The need, we have to use you did provoke

Our hasty sending. Something have you heard

Of Hamlet's transformation; so I call it,

Since not the exterior nor the inward man

Resembles that it was: What it should be,

More than his father's death, that thus hath put

him

So much from the understanding of himself,

I cannot dream of: I entreat you both,

That,—being of so young days brought up with

him;

And, since, so neighbour'd to his youth and lin-

That you vouchsafe your rest here in our

court

Some little time: so by your companies

To draw him on to pleasures; and to gather,

So much as from occasion you may glean,

Whether aught, to us unknown, affects him thus,

That, open'd, lies within our remedy.

Queen. Good gentlemen, he hath much talk'd

of you;

And sure I am, two men there are not living,

To whom he more adheres. If it will please

you

To show us so much gentry § and good-will,

As to expend your time with us a while,

For the supply and profit of our hope,

† Already named.
‡ Hanging down like letters.

§ Body.

‡ Observed.

Your visitation shall receive such thanks
As fits a king's remembrance.

Ros. Both your majesties
Might, by the sovereign power you have of us,
Put your dread pleasures more into command
Than to entreaty.

Guil. But we both obey;
And here give up ourselves, in the full bent,*
To lay our service freely at your feet,
To be commanded.

King. Thanks, Rosencrantz, and gentle Guildenstern.

Queen. Thanks, Guildenstern, and gentle Rosencrantz:

And I beseech you instantly to visit
My too much changed son.—Go, some of you,
And bring these gentlemen where Hamlet is.

Guil. Heavens make our presence and our practices

Pleasant and helpful to him!

Queen. Ay, amen!

[Exit ROSCENCRANTZ, GUILDENSTERN, and some Attendants.]

Enter POLONIUS.

Pol. The ambassadors from Norway, my good lord,
Are joyfully return'd.

King. Thon still hast been the father of good news.

Pol. Have I, my lord? Assure you, my good liege,

I hold my duty, as I hold my soul,
Both to my God, and to my gracious king;
And I do think, (or else this brain of mine
Hunts not the trail of policy so sure
As it hath us'd to do,) that I have found
The very cause of Hamlet's lunacy.

King. Oh! speak of that; that I do long to hear.

Pol. Give first admittance to the ambassadors;
My news shall be the fruit to that great feast.

King. Thyself do grace to them, and bring them in. [Exit POLONIUS.]

He tells me, my dear Gertrude, he hath found
The head and source of all your son's distemper.

Queen. I doubt, it is no other but the main;
His father's death, and our o'erhasty marriage.

Re-enter POLONIUS, with VOLTIMAND and CORNELIUS.

King. Well, we shall sift him.—Welcome, my good friends!

Sav, Voltumand, what from our brother Norway?

Volt. Most fair return of greetings and desires.
Upon our first, he sent out to suppress

His nephew's levies; which to him appear'd
To be a preparation 'gainst the Polack; †

But, better look'd into, he truly found
It was against your highness: Whereat griev'd,—

That so his sickness, age, and impotence,
Was falsely borne in hand, ‡ sends out arrests

On Fortinbras, which he, in brief, obey'd;
Receives rebuke from Norway, and, in fine,

Makes vow before his uncle, never more
To give the assay of arms against your majesty.

Whereon old Norway, overcome with joy,
Gives him three thousand crowns in annual fee;

And his commission to employ those soldiers,
So levied as before, against the Polack;

With an entreaty, herein further shown,
[Gives a Paper.]

That it might please you to give quiet pass
Through your dominions for this enterprise;

On such regards of safety, and allowance,
As therein are set down.

King. It likes us well:

And, at our more consider'd time, we'll read,
Answer, and think upon this business.

Meantime, we thank you for your well-took labour:

* Utmost exertion.
† Poland.

‡ Seem'd.
‡ Imposed on.

Go to your rest; at night we'll feast together:
Most welcome home!

[Exit VOLTIMAND and CORNELIUS.]

Pol. This business is well ended.

My liege, and madam, to expostulate*
What majesty should be, what duty is,
Why day is day, night night, and time is time
Were nothing but to waste night, day, and time.

Therefore,—since brevity is the soul of wit,
And tediousness the limbs and outward flourishes,—

I will be brief: Your noble son is mad:
Mad call I it: for, to define true madness,
What is't, but to be nothing else but mad:
But let that go.

Queen. More matter, with less art.

Pol. Madam, I swear I use no art at all.
That he is mad, 'tis true: 'tis true, 'tis pity,
And pity 'tis, 'tis true: a foolish figure;
But farewell it, for I will use no art.

Mad let us grant him then: and now remains,
That we find out the cause of this defect;
Or, rather say, the cause of this defect;
For this effect, defective, comes by cause:
Thus it remains, and the remainder thus.
Perpend.

I have a daughter; have, while she is mine;
Who, in her duty and obedience, mark,
Hath given me this: Now gather and surmise.

—To the celestial, and my soul's idol, the most beautiful Ophelia,—

That's an ill phrase, a vile phrase; beautified is a vile phrase; but you shall hear,—Thus:

In her excellent white bosom, these, &c.

Queen. Came this from Hamlet to her?

Pol. Good madam, stay awhile; I will be faithful.—

Doubt thou the stars are fire; [Reads.]

Doubt that the sun doth move:

Doubt truth to be a liar;

But never doubt I love.

*O dear Ophelia, I am ill at these numbers;
I have not art to reckon my groans, but that I love thee best, O most best, believe it.*

Adieu. Thine evermore, most dear lady, whilst this machine is to him, Hamlet.

This, in obedience, hath my daughter shown me.
And more above, hath his soliciting,

As they fell out by time, by means, and place
All given to mine ear.

King. But how hath she

Receiv'd his love?

Pol. What do you think of me?

King. As of a man faithful and honourable.

Pol. I would fain prove so. But what might you think,

When I had seen this hot love on the wing,
(As I perceiv'd it, I must tell you that,

Before my daughter told me,) what might you,
Or my dear majesty your queen here, think,

If I had play'd the desk, or table-book,
Or given my heart a winking, mute and dumb,

Or look'd upon this love with idle sight:
What might you think? no, I went round to to

work,
And my young mistress thus did I bespeak;

*Lord Hamlet is a prince out of thy sphere;
This must not be:* and then I precepts gave

her,
That she should lock herself from his resort

Admit no messengers, receive no tokens.
Which done, she took the truits of my advice;

And he, repulsed, (a short tale to make)
Fell into a sadness; then into a fast;

Thence to a watch; thence into a weakness;
Thence to a lightness; and, by this declension,

Into the madness wherein now he raves,
And all we mourn for.

* Discuss.

† Roundly, without reserve.

Scene II. HAMLET, PRINCE OF DENMARK.

181

King. Do you think, 'tis this?

Queen. It may be, very likely.

Pol. Hath there been such a time, (I'd fain know that,
That I have positively said, 'Tis so,
When it prov'd otherwise?

King. Not that I know.

Pol. Take this from this, if this be otherwise:
[Pointing to his Head and Shoulder.

If circumstances lead me, I will find
Where truth is hid, though it were hid indeed
Within the centre.

King. How may we try it further?

Pol. You know, sometimes he walks for hours
together,
Here in the lobby.

Queen. So he does, indeed.

Pol. At such a time I'll loose my daughter to
him:

Be you and I behind an arras* then:
Mark the encounter: if he love her not,
And be not from his reason fallen thereon,
Let me be no assistant for a state,
But keep a farm, and carters.

King. We will try it.

Enter HAMLET, reading.

Queen. But, look, where sadly the poor wretch comes reading.

Pol. Away, I do beseech you, both away;
I'll board† him presently:—Oh! give me leave.—

[Exit KING, QUEEN, and Attendants.
How does my good lord Hamlet?

Ham. Well, god'a-mercy.

Pol. Do you know me, my lord?

Ham. Excellent well; you are a fishmonger.

Pol. Not I, my lord.

Ham. Then I would you were so honest a
man.

Pol. Honest, my lord?

Ham. Ay, Sir; to be honest, as this world goes, is to be one man picked out of ten thousand.

Pol. That's very true, my lord.

Ham. For if the sun breed maggots in a dead dog, being a god-kissing carrion,—Have you a daughter?

Pol. I have, my lord.

Ham. Let her not walk i'th' sun: conception† is a blessing; but as your daughter may conceive, § —friend, look to't.

Pol. How say you by that? [Aside.] Still harping on my daughter:—yet he knew me not at first; he said, I was a fishmonger: He is far gone, far gone; and truly, in my youth, I suffered much extremity for love; very near this.
I'll speak to him again.—What do you read, my
lord?

Ham. Words, words, words!

Pol. What is the matter, my lord?

Ham. Between whom?

Pol. I mean the matter that you read, my
lord.

Ham. Slanders, Sir: for the satirical rogue says here, that old men have grey beards; that their faces are wrinkled; their eyes purging thick amber, and plum-tree gum; and that they have a plentiful lack of wit, together with most weak hams: All of which, Sir, though I most powerfully and potentially believe, yet I hold it not honesty to have it thus set down; for yourself, Sir, shall be as old as I am, if, like a crab, you could go backward.

Pol. Though this be madness, yet there's method in it. [Aside.] Will you walk out of the air, my lord?

Ham. Into my grave?

Pol. Indeed, that is out o'th' air.—How pregnant† sometimes his replies are! a happiness that often madness hits on, which reason and sanity‡ could not so prosperously be delivered of.

I will leave him, and suddenly contrive the means of meeting between him and my daughter.
—My honourable lord, I will most humbly take my leave of you.

Ham. You cannot, Sir, take from me any thing, that I will more willingly part withal; except my life, except my life, except my life.

Pol. Fare you well, my lord.

Ham. These tedious old fools!

Enter ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.

Pol. You go to seek the lord Hamlet; there he is.

Ros. God save you, Sir!

[To POLONIUS.

[Exit POLONIUS.

Guil. My honour'd lord!—

Ros. My most dear lord!

Ham. My excellent good friends! How dost thou, Guildenstern? Ah! Rosencrantz! Good lads, how do ye both?

Ros. As the indifferent children of the earth.

Guil. Happy, in that we are not overhappy;
On fortune's cap we are not the very button.

Ham. Nor the soles of her shoe?

Ros. Neither, my lord.

Ham. Then you live about her waist, or in the middle of her favours?

Guil. 'Faith her privates we.

Ham. In the secret parts of fortune? Oh! most true; she is a strumpet. What news?

Ros. None, my lord; but that the world is grown honest.

Ham. Then is doomsday near: But your news is not true. Let me question more in particular:
What have you, my good friends, deserved at the hands of fortune, that she sends you to prison hither?

Guil. Prison, my lord!

Ham. Denmark's a prison.

Ros. Then is the world one.

Ham. A goodly one; in which there are many confiners, wards, and dungeons; Denmark being one of the worst.

Ros. We think not so, my lord.

Ham. Why, then 'tis none to you; for there is nothing either good or bad, but thinking makes it so: to me it is a prison.

Ros. Why, then your ambition makes it one;
'tis too narrow for you mind.

Ham. O God! I could be bounded in a nutshell, and count myself a king of infinite space;
were it not that I have bad dreams.

Guil. Which dreams, indeed, are ambition; for the very substance of the ambitious is merely the shadow of a dream.

Ham. A dream itself is but a shadow.

Ros. Truly, and I hold ambition of no airy and light a quality, that it is but a shadow's shadow.

Ham. Then are our beggars' bodies; and our monarchs and outstretch'd heroes the beggars' shadows: Shall we to the court? for, by my fay,
I cannot reason.

Ros. Guil. We'll wait upon you.

Ham. No such matter: I will not sort you with the rest of my servants; for, to speak to you like an honest man, I am most dreadfully attended.
But, in the beaten way of friendship, what make you at Elsinore?

Ros. To visit you, my lord; no other occasion.

Ham. Beggar that I am, I am even poor in thanks; but I thank you: and sure, dear friends, my thanks are too dear, a halfpenny. Were you not sent for? Is it your own inclining? Is it a free visitation? Come, come: deal justly with me: come, come; nay, speak.

Guil. What should we say, my lord?

Ham. Any thing—but the purpose. You were sent for; and there is a kind of confession in your looks, which your modesties have not craft enough to colour: I know, the good king and queen have sent for you.

Ros. To what end, my lord?

Ham. That you must teach me. But let me conjure you, by the rights of our fellowship, by the consonancy of our youth, by the obligation of our ever-preserved love, and by what more dear a better proposer could charge you withal, be even and direct with me, whether you were sent for or no?

Ros. What say you?

[To GUILDENSTERN.

Ham. Nay, then I have an eye of you; [Aside.]—if you love me, hold not off.

Guil. My lord, we were sent for.

Ham. I will tell you why; so shall my anticipation prevent your discovery, and your secrecy to the king and queen moults no feather. I have of late (but, wherefore, I know not,) lost all my mirth, forgone all custom of exercises; and, indeed, it goes so heavily with my disposition, that this goodly frame, the earth, seems to me a sterl promontory; this most excellent canopy, the air,—look you, this brave o'erhanging firmament, this majestical roof fretted with golden fire,—why, it appears no other thing to me, than a foul and pestilent congregation of vapours. What a piece of work is man! How noble in reason! how infinite in faculties! in form and moving, how express and admirable! in action, how like an angel! in apprehension, how like a god! the beauty of the world! the paragon of animals! And yet, to me, what is this quintessence of dust? man delights not me, nor woman neither; though, by your smiling, you seem to say so.

Ros. My lord, there is no such stuff in my thoughts.

Ham. Why did you laugh then, when I said, Man delights not me?

Ros. To think, my lord, if you delight not in man, what lenient * entertainment the players shall receive from you: we coted † them on the way; and hither are they coming, to offer you service.

Ham. He that plays the king, shall be welcome; his majesty shall have tribute of me: the adventurous knight shall use his foil, and target; the lover shall not sigh gratis; the humorous man shall end his part in peace; the clown shall make those laugh, whose lungs are tickled o'the sere ‡ and the lady shall say her mind freely, or the blank verse shall halt forth,—What players are they?

Ros. Even those you were wont to take such delight in, the tragedians of the city.

Ham. How chances it, they travel?; their residence, both in reputation and profit, was better both ways.

Ros. I think their inhibition comes by the means of the late innovation.

Ham. Do they hold the same estimation they did when I was in the city? Are they so followed?

Ros. No, indeed they are not.

Ham. How comes it? Do they grow rusty?

Ros. Nay, their endeavour keeps in the wonted pace: But there is, Sir, an airy of children, little eyases, § that cry out on the top of question, || and are most tyrannically clapped for't: these are now the fashion; and so berattle the common stages, (so they call them) that many, wearing rapiers, are afraid of goose quills, and dare scarce come thither.

Ham. What are their children? who maintain them? how are they escoted? ¶ Will they pursue the quality  no longer than they can sing? will they not say afterwards, if they should grow themselves to common players, (as it is most like, if their means are no better,) their writers do them wrong, to make them exclaim against their own succession?

Ros. Faith, there has been much to do on both sides; and the nation holds it no sin, to tarre †† them on to controversy: there was, for a while, no money bid for argument, unless the poet and the player went to cuffs in the question.

Ham. Is it possible?

Guil. Oh! there has been much throwing about of brains.

Ham. Do the boys carry it away?

Ros. Ay, that they do, my lord; Hercules and his load too. *

Ham. It is not very strange: for my uncle is king of Denmark, and those that would make mouths at him while my father lived give twenty, forty, fifty, a hundred ducats a-piece, for his picture in little. † 'Sblood, there is something in this more than natural, if philosophy could find it out.

[Flourish of Trumpets within.

Guil. There are the players

Ham. Gentlemen, you are welcome to Elsinore. Your hands. Come then: the aptitude of welcome is fashion and ceremony: let me comply; with you in this garb; lest my extent to the players, which I tell you, must show fairly outward, should more appear like entertainment than yours. You are welcome: But my uncle-father, and aunt-mother, are deceived.

Guil. In what, my dear lord?

Ham. I am but mad north-north-west: when the wind is southerly, I know a hawk from a hand-saw.

Enter POLONIUS.

Pol. Well be with you, gentlemen!

Ham. Hark you, Guildenstern, and you too;—at each ear a hearer: that great baby, you see there, is not yet out of his swaddling-clouts.

Ros. Happily, he's the second time come to them; for, they say, an old man is twice a child.

Ham. I will prophesy he comes to tell me of the players: mark it.—You say right, Sir: o'Monday morning; 'twas then, indeed.

Pol. My lord, I have news to tell you.

Ham. My lord I have news to tell you; When Roscius was an actor in Rome,—

Pol. The actors are come hither, my lord.

Ham. Buz, buz!

Pol. Upon my honour,—

Ham. Then came each actor on his ass.—

Pol. The best actors in the world, either for tragedy, comedy, history, pastoral, pastoral-comical, historical-pastoral, [tragic-historical, tragic-comical-historical-pastoral,] scene indivisible, or poem unlimited: Seneca cannot be too heavy, nor Plautus too light. For the law of writ, § and the liberty, these are the only men.

Ham. O Jephthah, judge of Israel,—what a treasure hadst thou!

Pol. What a treasure had he, my lord?

Ham. Why—One fair daughter, and no more,

The which he loved passing well.

Pol. Still on my daughter. [Aside.

Ham. Am I not i'th'right, old Jephthah?

Pol. If you call me Jephthah, my lord, I have a daughter, that I love passing well.

Ham. Nay, that follows not.

Pol. What follows then, my lord?

Ham. Why, As by lot, God wot, and then, you know, It came to pass, As most like it was,—The first row of the pious chanson || will show you more; for, look, my abridgment comes.

We'll e'en to't like French falconers, fly at any thing we see: We'll have a speech straight; Come, give us a taste of your quality;‡ Come, a passionate speech.

1 Play. What speech, my lord?

Ham. I heard thee speak me a speech once, —but it was never acted; or, if it was, not above once: for the play, I remember, pleased not the million; 'twas caviare § to the general: || but it was (as I received it, and others, whose judgments in such matters, cried in the top ¶ of mine,) an excellent play; well digested in the scenes, set down with as much modesty as cunning. I remember, one said there were no sallads in the lines, to make the matter savoury; nor no matter in the phrase, that might indite the author of affection:†† but called it, an honest method, as wholesome as sweet, and by very much more handsome than fine. One speech in it I chiefly loved: 'twas Aneas' tale to Dido; and thereabout of it especially, where he speaks of Priam's slaughter: If it live in your memory, begin at this line; let me see, let me see;—

The rugged Pyrrhus, like the Hyrcanian beast—'tis not so; it begins with Pyrrhus.

The rugged Pyrrhus, —he, whose subtle arms, Black as his purpose, did the night resemble When he lay couched in the ominous horse, Hath now this dread and black complexion smear'd

With heraldry more dismal; head to foot Now is he total gules;‡‡ horribly trick'd §§ With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons;

Bak'd and impasted with the parching streets, That lend a tyrannous and a damned light To their lord's murder: Roasted in wrath and fire,

And thus o'er-sized with congregate gore, With eyes like carbuncles, the hellish Pyrrhus

Old grandsire Priam seeks;—So proceed you.

Pol. Fore God, my lord, well spoken; with good accent, and good discretion.

1 Play. Anon he finds him Striking too short at Greeks; his antique sword, Rebellious to his arm, lies where it falls, Repugnant to command: Unequal match'd, Pyrrhus at Priam drives; in rage, strikes wide;

But with the whiff and wind of his fell sword The unnerv'd father falls. Then senseless Itum,

Seeming to feel this blow, with flaming top Stoops to his base; and with a hideous crash Takes prisoner Pyrrhus' ear: for, to! his sword,

Which was declining on the milky head Of reverend Priam, seem'd it the air to stick; So, as a painted tyrant, Pyrrhus stood; And, like a neutral to his will and matter, Did nothing.

But, as we often see, against some storm, A silence in the heavens, the rack ||| stand still,

The bold winds speechless, and the orb below As hush as death: anon the dreadful thunder Doth rend the region: So, after Pyrrhus' pause,

A roused vengeance sets him new-a-work; And never did the Cyclops' hammers fall On Mars' armour, forg'd for proof eterne ¶¶

With less remorse than Pyrrhus' bleeding sword

Now falls on Priam!— [Gods] Out, out, thou strumpet, Fortune! All you In general synod, take away her power; Break all the spokes and fellies from her wheel,

And bow the round nave down the hill of heaven,

As low as to the fiends!

Pol. This is too long.

Ham. It shall to the barber's, with your beard.—Prythee, say on:—He's for a jig, or a tale of bawdry, or he sleeps:—say on: come to Hecuba.

1 Play. But who, ah uoe! had seen the mobled* queen—

Ham. The mobled queen?

Pol. That's good; mobled queen is good.

1 Play. Run barefoot up and down, threat'ning the flames

With bisson† rheum; a clout upon that head,

Where late the diadem stood; and, for a robe, About her lank and all o'er-teemed loins, A blanket, in the alarm of fear caught up; Who thus had seen, with tongue in venom steep'd,

'Gainst Fortune's state would treason have pronounc'd:

But if the gods themselves did see her then, When she saw Pyrrhus make malicious sport In mincing with his sword her husband's limbs;

The instant burst of clamour that she made, (Unless things mortal more than men not at all,) Would have made milch‡ the burning eye of heaven,

Pol. Look, whether he has not turn'd his colour, and has tears in's eyes.—Prythee, no more.

Ham. 'Tis well; I'll have thee speak out the rest of this soon.—Good my lord, will you see the players well bestowed? Do you hear, let them be well used; for they are the abstract and brief chronicles of the time: After your death you were better have a bad epitaph, than their ill report while you live.

Pol. My lord, I will use them according to their desert.

Ham. Odd's bodikin, man, much better: Use every man after his desert, and who shall scape whipping? Use them after your own honour and dignity: The less they deserve, the more merit is in your bounty. Take them in.

Pol. Come, Sirs.

[Exit POLONIUS, with some of the PLAYERS.]

Ham. Follow him, friends: we'll hear a play to-morrow.—Dost thou hear me, old friend; can you play the murder of Gonzago?

1 Play. Ay, my lord.

Ham. We'll have it to-morrow night. You could, for a need, study a speech of some dozen or sixteen lines, which I would set down, and insert in't? could you not?

1 Play. Ay, my lord.

Ham. Very well.—Follow that lord; and look you mock him not. [Exit PLAYERS.] My good friends, [To ROS. and GUIL.] I'll leave you till night: you are welcome to Elsinore.

Ros. Good my lord!

[Re-enter ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.]

Ham. Ay, so, God be wi' you:—Now I am alone.

Oh! what a rogue and peasant slave am I! Is it not monstrous that this player here, But in a fiction, in a dream of passion, Could force his soul so to his own conceit, That, from her working, all his visage wann'd; Tears in his eyes, distraction in's aspect, A broken voice, and his whole function suiting With forms to his conceit? What's Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba, [do,
That he should weep for her? What would he
Had he the motive and the cue for passion,
That I have? He would drown the stage with
tears,

And cleave the general ear with horrid speech;
Make mad the guilty, and appal the free,
Confound the ignorant, and amaze, indeed,
The very faculties of eyes and ears.

Yet I,
A dull and muddy-mettled rascal, peak,
Like John a-dreams, unpregnant of my cause,
And can say nothing; no, not for a king,
Upon whose property, and most dear life,
A damn'd defeat* was made. Am I a coward?
Who calls me villain? breaks my pate across?
Plucks off my beard, and blows it in my face?
Tweaks me by the nose? gives me the lie i'th' throat,

As deep as to the lungs? Who does me this?
Ha!

Why, I should take it: for it cannot be,
But I am pigeon-liver'd, and lack gall
To make oppression bitter; or, ere this,
I should have fatted all the region kites
With this slave's offal: Bloody, bawdy villain!

Remorseless, treacherous, lecherous, kindless, +
villain!

Why, what an ass am I? This is most brave;
That I, the son of a dear father murder'd,
Prompted to my revenge by heaven and hell,
Must like a whore, unpack my heart with words,
And fall a cursing, like a very drab,

A scullion!
Fie upon't! foh! About my brains! Humph!
I have heard,

That guilty creatures, sitting at a play,
Have by the very cunning of the scene
Been struck so to the soul, that presently
They have proclaim'd their malefactions;
For murder, though it have no tongue, will
speak

With most miraculous organ. I'll have these Play something like the murder of my father,
Before mine uncle: I'll observe his looks;
I'll tent him to the quick; if he do blench, I know my course. The spirit that I have seen,
May be a devil; and the devil hath power
To assume a pleasing shape; yea, and, perhaps,
Out of my weakness, and my melancholy,
(As he is very potent with such spirits),
Abuses me to damn me: I'll have grounds
More relative than this: The play's the thing,
Wherein I'll catch the conscience of the king.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Room in the Castle.

Enter KING, QUEEN, POLONIUS, OPHELIA, ROSENCRANTZ, and GUILDENSTERN.

King. And can you, by no drift of conference,

Get from him, why he puts on this confusion;
Grating so harshly all his days of quiet
With turbulent and dangerous lunacy?

Ros. He does confess, he feels himself distracted;

But from what cause he will by no means speak.
Guil. Nor do we find him forward to be sounded;

But, with a crafty madness, keeps aloof,
When we would bring him on to some confession of his true state.

Queen. Did he receive you well?

Ros. Most like a gentleman.

Guil. But with much forcing of his disposition.

Ros. Niggard of question; but, of our demands
Most free in his reply.

Queen. Did you assay him

To any pastime?

Ros. Madam, it so fell out, that certain players
We o'er-raught* on the way: of these we told
him;

And there did seem in him a kind of joy

To hear of it: They are about the court;

And, as I think, they have already order'd

This night to play before him.

Pol. 'Tis most true:

And he beseech'd me to entreat your majesties,
To hear and see the matter.

King. With all my heart; and it doth much content me

To hear him so inclin'd.

Good gentlemen, give him a further edge,

And drive his purpose on to these delights.

Ros. We shall, my lord.

[Exit ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.

King. Sweet Gertrude, leave us too:

For we have closely sent for Hamlet hither;

That he, as 'twere by accident, may here

Her father, and myself (lawful espials, ‡)

Will so bestow ourselves, that, seeing, unseen,

We may of their encounter frankly § judge;

And gather by him, as he is behav'd,

If 't be the affliction of his love, or no,

That thus he suffers so.

Queen. I shall obey you:

And, for your part, Ophelia, I do wish

That your good beauties be the happy cause

Of Hamlet's wildness: so shall I hope, your virtues

Will bring him to his wonted way again,

To both your honours.

Oph. Madam, I wish it may.

[Exit QUEEN.

Pol. Ophelia, walk you here:—Giaccio, so
please you,

We will bestow § ourselves:—Read on this book:
[To OPHELIA.

That show of such an exercise may colour

Your loneliness.—We are oft to blame in this,—

'Tis too much prov'd, ¶ that, with devotion's visage,

And pious action, we do sugar o'er

The devil himself.

King. Oh! 'tis too true: how smart

A lash that speech doth give my conscience!

The harlot's cheek, beautified with plastering
art,

Is not more ugly to the thing that helps it,

Than is my deed to my most painted word:

O heavy burden!

[Aside.

Pol. I hear him coming; let's withdraw, my lord. [Exit KING and POLONIUS.

Enter HAMLET.

Ham. To be, or not to be, that is the question:—

Whether 'tis nobler in the mind, to suffer
The slings and arrows of outrageous fortune;

Or to take arms against a sea of troubles,
And, by opposing, end them?—To die—to

sleep,

No more;—and, by a sleep, to say we end

The heart-ache, and the thousand natural shocks

That flesh is heir to,—'tis a consummation

Devoutly to be wish'd. To die—to sleep;

To sleep! perchance to dream;—ay, there's the rub; †

For in that sleep of death what dreams may Come, when we have shuffled off this mortal coil, **

time,
The oppressor's wrong, the proud man's con-
tumely,*

The pangs of despa'd love, the law's delay,
The insolence of office, and the spurns
That patient merit of the unworthy takes,
When he himself might his quietus † make

bear,
To groan and sweat under a weary life,
But that the dread of something after death,—
That undiscover'd country, from whose bourn ||

And makes us rather bear those ills we have,
Than fly to others that we know not of ?
Thus conscience does make cowards of us all ;
And thus the native hue of resolution
Is sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought ;
And enterprises of great pith and moment ,
With this regard, their currents turn awry ,
And lose the name of action.—Soft you, now !
The fair Ophelia :—Nymph, in thy orisons ¶
Be all my sins remember'd.

Oph. Good my lord,
How does your honour for this many a day ?

Ham. I humbly thank you ; well.

Oph. My lord, I have remembrances of
your's

That I have longed long to re-deliver ;
I pray you, now receive them.

Ham. No, not I ;

I never gave you aught.

Oph. My honour'd lord, you know right well ;
you did ;

And, with them, words of so sweet breath compos'd †

As made the things more rich : their perfume
Take these again : for to the noble mind,
Rich gifts wax poor, when givers prove unkind.
There, my lord.

Ham. Ha, ha ! are you honest ?

Oph. My lord ?

Ham. Are you fair ?

Oph. What means your lordship ?

Ham. That if you be honest, and fair, you should admit no discourse to your beauty.

Oph. Could beauty, my lord, have better commence than with honesty ?

Ham. Ay, truly ; for the power of beauty will sooner transform honesty from what it is to a bawd, than the force of honesty can translate beauty into his likeness : this was sometime a paradox, but now the time gives it proof. I did love you once.

Oph. Indeed, my lord, you made me believe
so

Ham. You should not have believed me ; for virtue cannot so inoculate our old stock, but we shall relish of it : I loved you not.

Oph. I was the more deceived.

Ham. Get thee to a nunnery : Why wouldst thou be a breeder of sinners ? I am myself indifferent honest ; but yet I could accuse me of such things, that it were better my mother had not borne me : I am very proud, revengeful, ambitious ; with more offences at my beck, ¶ than I have thoughts to put them in, imagination to give them shape, or time to act them in :
What should such fellows as I do crawling between earth and heaven ! We are arrant knaves, all ; believe none of us : Go thy ways to a nunnery. Where's your father ?

Oph. At home, my lord.

Ham. Let the doors be shut upon him ; that he may play the fool no where but in's own house. Farewell.

Oph. O help him, you sweet heavens !

Ham. If thou dost marry, I'll give thee this plague for thy dowry ; Be thou as chaste as ice, as pure as snow, thou shalt not escape calumny.

Get thee to a nunnery ; farewell : Or, if thou wilt needs marry, marry a fool ; for wise men know well enough, what monsters you make of them. To a nunnery, go ; and quickly too.
Farewell.

Oph. Heavenly powers, restore him !

Ham. I have heard of your paintings too, well enough ; God hath given you one face, and you make yourselves another : you jig, you amble, and you lisp, and nick-name God's creatures,
and make your wantonness your ignorance : Go to : I'll no more of't ; it hath made me mad. I say, we will have no more marriages : those that are married already, all but one, shall live ;
the rest shall keep as they are. To a nunnery,
go. [Exit HAMLET.]

Oph. Oh ! what a noble mind is here o'er-thrown ! [sword]

The courtier's, soldier's, scholar's, eye, tongue,
The expectancy and rose of the fair state,
The glass of fashion, and the mould * of form,
The observ'd of all observers † quite, quite
down !

And I, of ladies most deject and wretched,
That suck'd the honey of his music vows,
Now see that noble and most sovereign reason,
Like sweet bells jangled, out of tune and harsh ;
That unmatch'd form and feature of blown
youth,

Blasted with ecstasy : ‡ O woe is me !

To have seen what I have seen, see what I see.

Re-enter KING and POLONIUS.

King. Love ! his affections do not that way tend ;

Not what he spake, though it lack'd form a little,
Was not like madness. There's something in his
soul,

O'er which his melancholy sits on brood ;
And, I do doubt, the hatch, and the disclose,
Will be some danger : Which for to prevent,
I have, in quick determination,
Thus set it down ; He shall with speed to England,

For the demand of our neglected tribute :
Haply, the seas, and countries different,
With variable objects, shall exel

This something-settled matter in his heart ;
Whereon his brains still beating, puts him thus
From fashion of himself. What think you
on't ?

Pol. It shall do well ; But yet I do believe
The origin and commencement of his grief
Sprung from neglected love.—How now, Ophelia ?

You need not tell us what lord Hamlet said ;
We heard it all.—My lord, do as you please ;

But, if you hold it fit, after the play,
Let his queen mother all alone entreat him
To show his grief ; let her be round † with him ;
And I'll be plac'd, so please you, in the ear
Of all their conference ; if she find him not,
To England send him ; or confine him, where Your wisdom best shall think.

King. It shall be so :

Madness in great ones must not unwatch'd go.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—A Hall in the same.

Enter HAMLET, and certain PLAYERS.

Ham. Speak the speech, I pray you, as I pronounced it to you, trippingly on the tongue ;
but if you mouth it, as many of our players do,
I had as lief the town-crier spoke my lines.
Nor do not saw the air too much with your hand, thus ; but use all gently ; for in the very torrent, tempest, and (as I may say) whirlwind of your passion, you must acquire and beget a temperance, that may give it smoothness. O, it offends me to the soul, to hear a robustious

1 Play. I warrant your honour.

Ham. Be not too tame neither, but let your own discretion be your tutor: suit the action to the word, the word to the action; with this special observance, that you o'erstep not the modesty of nature: for any thing so overdone is from the purpose of playing, whose end both at the first and now, was and is, to hold, as 'twere, the mirror up to nature; to show virtue her own feature, scorn her own image, and the very age and body of the time, his form and pressure. ‡ Now, this, overdone, or come tardy off, though it make the unskilful laugh, cannot but make the judicious grieve; the censure of which one must, in your allowance, § o'erweigh a whole theatre of others. Oh! there be players, that I have seen play,—and heard others praise, and that highly,—not to speak it profanely, that, neither having the accent of Christians, nor the gait of Christian, Pagau, nor man, have so stutted and bellowed, that I have thought some of nature's journeymen had made men, and not made them well, they imitated humanity so abominably.

1 Play. I hope we have reformed that indifferently with us.

Ham. O reform it altogether. And let those that play your clowns, speak no more than is set down for them: for there be of them, that will themselves laugh, to set on some quantity of barren spectators to laugh too; though, in the meantime, some necessary question || of the play be then to be considered: that's villainous; and shows a most awful ambition in the fool that uses it. Go, make you ready.

[Exeunt PLAYERS.]

Enter POLONIUS, ROSENCRANTZ, and GUILDENSTERN.

How now, my lord? will the king hear this piece of work?

Pol. And the queen too, and that presently.

Ham. Bid the players make haste.—

[Exit. POLONIUS.]

Will you two help to hasten them?

Both. Ay, my lord.

[Exeunt ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.]

Ham. What, ho; Horatio!

Enter HORATIO.

Hor. Here, sweet lord, at your service.

Ham. Horatio, thou art e'en as just a man as e'er my conversation cop'd withal.

Hor. O my dear lord,—

Ham. Nay, do not think I flatter:

For what advancement may I hope from thee, That no revenue hast, but thy good spirits, To feed and clothe thee? Why should the poor be flatter'd?

No, let the candied tongue lick absurd pomp, And crook the pregnant hinges of the knee, Where thrift may follow fawning. Dost thou hear?

Since my dear soul was mistress of her choice, And could of men distinguish her election, She hath seal'd thee for herself: for thou hast been

As one in suffering all, that suffers nothing;

A man, that fortune's buffets and rewards

Hast ta'en with equal thanks; and bless'd are those,

Whose blood and judgment are so well co-

That they are not a pipe for fortune's finger

To sound what stop she please: Give me that man [him]

That is not passion's slave, and I will wear

In my heart's core, ay, in my heart of hearts,

As I do thee.—Something too much of this.—

There is a play to-night before the king;

One scene of it comes near the circumstance,

Which I have told thee of my father's death.

I pr'ythee, when thou seest that act afoot,

Even with the very comment of thy soul

Observe my uncle; if his occulted * guilt

Do not itself unkennel in one speech,

It is a damned ghost that we have seen;

And my imaginations are as foul

As Vulcan's stithy. † Give him heedful note:

For I mine eyes will rivet to his face;

And, after, we will both our judgments join

In censure ‡ of his seeming.

Hor. Well, my lord [ing.]

If he steal aught, the whilst this play is play,

And 'scape detecting, I will pay the theft.

Ham. They are coming to the play; I must be idle:

Get you a place.

Danish March.—A Flourish.—Enter KING,

QUEEN, POLONIUS, OPHELIA, ROSEN-

CRANTZ, GUILDENSTERN, and others.

King. How fares our cousin Hamlet?

Ham. Excellent, i'faith; of the camelion's dish: I eat the air, promise-cramm'd: You cannot feed capons so.

King. I have nothing with this answer,

Hamlet: these words are not mine.

Ham. No, nor mine. Now, my lord,—you played once in the university, you say? [To POLONIUS.]

Pol. That did I, my lord; and was accounted a good actor.

Ham. And what did you enact?

Pol. I did enact Julius Cesar; I was killed

't'he Capitol; Brutus killed me.

Ham. It was a brute part of him, to kill so capital a calf there.—Be the players ready?

Ros. Ay, my lord, they stay § upon your patience.

Queen. Come hither, my dear Hamlet, sit by

me.

Ham. No, good mother, here's metal more attractive.

Pol. O ho! do you mark that? [To the KING.]

Ham. Lady, shall I lie in your lap? [Lying down at OPHELIA'S Feet.]

Oph. No, my lord.

Ham. I mean, my head upon your lap?

Oph. Ay, my lord.

Ham. Do you think, I meant country matters? ||

Oph. I think nothing, my lord.

Ham. That's a fall thought to lie between maids' legs.

Oph. What is, my lord?

Ham. Nothing.

Oph. You are merry, my lord.

Ham. Who, I?

Oph. Ay, my lord.

Ham. O! your only jig-maker. What should a man do, but be merry? for, look you, how cheerfully my mother looks, and my father died within these two hours.

Oph. Nay, 'tis twice two months, my lord.

Ham. So long? Nay, then let the devil wear black, for I'll have a suit of sables. ¶ O heavens!

I die two months ago, and not forgotten

yet? Then there's hope a great man's memory may outlive his life half a year: But, by'rlady, he must build churches then: or else shall he suffer not thinking on, with the hobby-horse; whose epitaph is, For, O, for, O, the hobby-horse is forgot.

Trumpets sound. The dumb Show follows.

Enter a King and a Queen, very lovingly; the Queen embracing him, and he her. She kneels, and makes show of protestation unto him. He takes her up, and declines his head upon her neck: lays him down upon a bank of flowers; she, seeing him asleep, leaves him. Anon comes in a fellow, takes off his crown, kisses it, and pours poison in the King's ears, and exit. The Queen returns; finds the King dead, and makes passionate action. The poisoner, with some two or three Mutes, comes in again, seeming to lament with her. The dead body is carried away. The poisoner wooes the Queen with gifts; she seems loath and unwilling awhile, but, in the end, accepts his love. [Exit.

Oph. What means this, my lord?

Ham. Marry, this is mitching mallecho; * it means mischief.

Oph. Belike, this show imports the argument of the play.

Enter PROLOGUE.

Ham. We shall know by this fellow: the players cannot keep counsel; they'll tell all.

Oph. Will he tell us what this show meant?

Ham. Ay, or any show that you'll show him: Be not you asham'd to show, he'll not shame to tell you what it means.

Oph. You are naught, you are naught; I'll mark the play.

Pro. For us, and for our tragedy,
Here stooping to your clemency,
We beg your hearing patiently.

Ham. Is this a prologue, or the posy of a ring?

Oph. 'Tis brief, † my lord.

Ham. As woman's love.

Enter a KING and a QUEEN.

P. King. Full thirty times hath Phœbus' cart;
gone round Neptune's salt wash, and Tellus's orb'd ground;

And thirty dozen moons, with borrow'd sheen, ||
About the world have times twelve thirties been; [hands,

Since love our hearts, and Hymen did our
Unite committal in most sacred bands.

P. Queen. So many journeys may the sun and moon

Make us again count o'er, ere love be done!
But, woe is me, you are so sick of late,
So far from cheer, and from your former state,
That I distrust you. Yet, though I distrust,

Discomfort you, my lord, it nothing must:
For women fear too much, even as they love;
And women's fear and love hold quantity;

In neither aught, or in extremity. [know;

Now, what my love is, proof hath made you
And as my love is siz'd, † my fear is so,
Where love is great, the little doubts are feared; [there.

Where little fears grow great, great love grows
P. King. 'Faith, I must leave thee, love, and shortly too; [do;

My operant  powers their functions leave to
And thou shalt live in this fair world behind,
Honour'd, belov'd; and, haply, one as kind
For husband shalt thou—

P. Queen. O confound the rest!
Such love must needs be treason in my breast:
In second husband let me be accurst!
None wed the second, but who kill'd the first.

Ham. That's wormwood.

P. Queen. The instances, †† that second marriage move,
Are base respects of thrift, but none of love;

A second time I kill my husband dead,
When second husband kisses me in bed.

P. King. I do believe, you think what now you speak;

But, what we do determine, oft we break.
Purpose is but the slave to memory;
Of violent birth, but poor validity;

Which now, like fruit unripe, sticks on the tree;
But fall, unshaken, when they mellow be.
Most necessary 'tis, that we forget

To pay ourselves what to ourselves is debt:
What to ourselves in passion we propose,
The passion ending, doth the purpose lose.

The violence of either grief or joy
Their own enactures * with themselves destroy:
Where joy most revels, grief doth most lament;
Grief joys, joy grieves, on slender accident.

This world is not for aye: † nor 'tis not strange,
That even our loves should with our fortunes
For 'tis a question left us yet to prove, [change;
Whether love lead fortune, or else fortune love.

The great man down, you mark his favourite
flies;

The poor advanc'd makes friends of enemies.
And hitherto doth love on fortune tend;
For who not needs, shall never lack a friend;

And who in want a hollow friend doth try,
Directly seasons him his enemy.

But, orderly to end where I begun,—
Our wills, our fates, do so contrary run,
That our devices still are overthrown;

Our thoughts are ours, their ends none of our own:

So think thou wilt no second husband wed;
But die thy thoughts, when thy first lord is
dead.

P. Queen. Nor earth to give me food, nor heaven light!

Sport and repose lock from me, day, and night!
To desperation turn my trust and hope!
An anchor's † cheer in prison be my scope!

Each opposite, that blinks the face of joy,
Meet what I would have well, and it destroy!
Both here and hence pursue me, lasting still,
If, once a widow, ever I be wife!

Ham. If she should break it now,—
[To OPHELIA.

P. King. 'Tis deeply sworn. Sweet, leave me here a while;

My spirits grow dull, and I am I would beguile
The tedious day with sleep. [Sleeps.

P. Queen. Sleep rock thy brain;
And never come mischance between us twain!
[Exit.

Ham. Madam, how like you this play?
Queen. The lady doth protest too much, methinks.

Ham. Oh! but she'll keep her word.

King. Have you heard the argument? Is there no offence in't?

Ham. No, no, they do but jest; poison in jest;
no offence 't the world.

King. What do you call the play?

Ham. The mouse-trap. † Marry, how? Tropi-cally. This play is the image of a murder done in Vienna: Gonzago is the duke's name;
his wife, Baptista: you shall see anon; 'tis a knavish piece of work: But what of that? your majesty, and we that have free souls, it touches us not: Let the galled jade wince, † our withers are unwarped.—

Enter LUCIANUS.

This is one Lucianus, nephew to the king.

Oph. You are as good as a chorus, my lord.

Ham. I could interpret between you and your love, if I could see the puppets dallying.

Oph. You are keen, my lord, you are keen.

Ham. It would cost you a groaning, to take off my edge.

* Secret wickedness. † Short.
† Car, chariot. † The earth. † Shining, lustre.
† Magnitude, proportion.  Active. †† Motives.

* Determinations. † Ever. † Anchorit's

In which he'll catch the conscience of the king.
† This is a proverbial saying.

Oph. Still better, and worse.

Ham. So you mistake your husbands.—Begin, murderer;—leave thy damnable faces, and begin! Come;—

—The croaking raven
Doth bellow for revenge.

Luc. Thoughts black, hands apt, drugs fit, and time agreeing;

Confederate season, else no creature seeing;
Thou mixture rank, of midnight weeds collected,
With Hecate's ban^{*} thrice blasted, thrice infected,

Thy natural magic and dire property,
On wholesome life usurp immediately.

[Pours the Poison into the Sleeper's Ears.
Ham. He poisons him i'the garden for his estate. His name's Gonzago: the story is extant, and written in very choice Italian: You shall see anon, how the murderer gets the love of Gonzago's wife.

Oph. The king rises.

Ham. What! frightened with false fire!

Queen. How fares my lord?

Pol. Give o'er the play.

King. Give me some light:—away!

All. Lights, lights, lights!

[Exeunt all but HAMLET and HORATIO.

Ham. Why, let the stricken deer go weep,

The hart ungalled play:

For some must watch, while some must sleep;

Thus runs the world away.—

Would not this, Sir, and a forest of feathers, †
(if the rest of my fortunes turn Turk ‡ with me,) with two Provincial roses on my razed § shoes, get me a fellowship in a cry ‖ of players, Sir?

Hor. Half a share.

Ham. A whole one, I.

For thou dost know, O Damon, dear,

This realm dismantled was

Of Jove himself; and now reigns here

A very, very—peacock.

Hor. You might have rhymed.

Ham. O good Horatio, I'll take the ghost's word for a thousand pound. Did'st perceive?

Hor. Very well, my lord.

Ham. Upon the talk of the poisoning,—

Hor. I did very well note him.

Ham. Ah! ha!—Come, some music; come, the recorders. ¶—

For if the king like not the comedy,

Why then, belike,—he likes it not, perdy. **—

[Enter ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.

Come, some music.

Guil. Good, my lord, vouchsafe me a word with you.

Ham. Sir, a whole history.

Guil. The king, Sir—

Ham. Ay, Sir, what of him?

Guil. Is, in his retirement, marvellously discontented.

Ham. With drink, Sir?

Guil. No, my lord, with choler.

Ham. Your wisdom should show itself more richer, to signify this to the doctor; for, for me to put him to his purgation, would, perhaps, plunge him into more choler.

Guil. Good my lord, put your discourse into some frame, and start not so wildly from my affair.

Ham. I am tame, Sir:—pronounce.

Guil. The queen, your mother, in great affliction of spirit, hath sent me to you.

Ham. You are welcome.

Guil. Nay, good my lord, this courtesy is not of the right breed. If it shall please you to make me a wholesome answer, I will do your mother's commandment: if not, your pardon, and my return, shall be the end of my business.

Ham. Sir, I cannot.

Guil. What, my lord?

Ham. Make you a wholesome answer; my wit's diseased: But, Sir, such answer as I can make, you shall command; or rather, as you say, my mother: therefore no more, but to the matter: My mother, you say,—

Ros. Then thus she says; Your behaviour hath strick her into amazement and admiration.

Ham. O wonderful son, that can so astonish a mother!—But is there no sequel at the heels of this mother's admiration? impart.

Ros. She desires to speak with you in her closet, ere you go to bed.

Ham. We shall obey, were she ten times our mother. Have you any further trade^{*} with us?

Ros. My lord, you once did love me.

Ham. And do still, by these pickers and stealers. †

Ros. Good my lord, what is your cause of discontenter? you do, surely, but bar the door upon your own liberty, if you deny your griefs to your friend.

Ham. Sir, I lack advancement.

Ros. How can that be, when you have the voice of the king himself for your succession in Denmark?

Ham. Ay, Sir, but, While the grass grows,—the proverb is something musty.

[Enter the PLAYERS, with Recorders.

Oh! the recorders:—let me see one.—To withdraw with you:—Why do you go about to recover the wind of me, as if you would drive me into a toil?

Guil. Oh! my lord, if my duty be too bold, my love is too unmanually.

Ham. I do not well understand that. Will you play upon this pipe?

Guil. My lord, I cannot.

Ham. I pray you.

Guil. Believe me, I cannot.

Ham. I do beseech you.

Guil. I know no touch of it, my lord.

Ham. 'Tis as easy as lying: govern these ventages ‡ with your fingers and thumb, give it breath with your mouth, and it will discourse most eloquent music. Look you, these are the stops.

Guil. But these cannot I command to any utterance of harmony; I have not the skill.

Ham. Why, look you now, how unworthy a thing you make of me. You would play upon me; you would seem to know my stops; you would pluck out the heart of my mystery; you would sound me from my lowest note to the top of my compass; and there is much music, excellent voice, in this little organ; yet cannot you make it speak. 'Sblood, do you think I am easier to be played on than a pipe? Call me what instrument you will, though you can fret me, you cannot play upon me.

[Enter POLONIUS.

God bless you, Sir.

Pol. My lord, the queen would speak with you, and presently.

Ham. Do you see yonder cloud, that's almost in shape of a camel?

Pol. By the mass, and 'tis like a camel, indeed.

Ham. Methinks, it is like a weasel.

Pol. It is backed like a weasel.

Ham. Or, like a whale?

Pol. Very like a whale.

Ham. Then will I come to my mother by and by.—They fool me to the top of my bent. †—I will come by and by.

Pol. I will say so.

[Exit POLONIUS.

Ham. By and by is easily said.—Leave me, friends.

[Exeunt ROS. GUIL. HOR. &c.

The soul of Nero enter this firm bosom:
Let me be cruel, not unnatural:
I will speak daggers to her, but use none;

How in my words sheever she be shent,*

SCENE III.—A Room in the same.

Enter KING, ROSENCRANTZ, and GUILDENSTERN.

King. I like him not; nor stands it safe with us,
To let his madness range. Therefore, prepare
I your commission will forthwith despatch,
And he to England shall along with you:
The terms of our estate may not endure
Hazard so near us, as doth hourly grow
Out of his lunacy.

Guil. We will ourselves provide:
Most holy and religious fear it is,
To keep those many bodies safe,
That live and feed upon your majesty.

Ros. The single and peculiar life is bound
With all the strength and armour of the mind,
To keep itself from noyance: but much more
That spirit, upon whose weak depend and rest
The lives of many. The cease of majesty
Does not alone; but, like a gulf, doth draw
What's near it, with it: it is a massy wheel,
Fix'd on the summit of the highest mount,
To whose huge spokes ten thousand lesser things
Are mortis'd and adjoin'd; which, when it falls,
Each small annexment, petty consequence,
Attends the boist'rous ruin. Never alone
Did the king sigh, but with a general groan.

King. Aim you, I pray you, to this speedy voyage:
For we will fetters put upon this fear,
Which now goes too free-footed.

Ros. Guil. We will haste us.
[Exit ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.]

Enter POLONIUS.

Pol. My lord, he's going to his mother's closet:
Behind the arras; I'll convey myself,
To hear the process; I'll warrant, she'll tax
him home:

And, as you said, and wisely was it said,
'Tis meet, that some more audience than a mother, [hear]
Since nature makes them partial, should o'er-
The speech, of vantage. Fare you well, my liege;

I'll call upon you ere you go to bed,
And tell you what I know.

King. Thanks, dear my lord.
[Exit POLONIUS.]

Oh! my offence is rank, it smells to heaven;
It hath the primal eldest curse upon't:
A brother's murder!—Pray can I not,
Though inclination be as sharp as will;
My stronger guilt defeats my strong intent;
And, like a man to double business bound,
I stand in pause where I shall first begin,
And both neglect. What, if this cursed hand
Were thicker than itself with brother's blood,
Is there not rain enough in the sweet heavens,
To wash it white as snow? Whereto serves
mercy,

But to confront the visage of offence?
And what's in prayer, but this twofold force,—

To be forestalled, ere we come to fall,
Or pardon'd, being down? Then I'll look up;
My fault is past. But oh! what form of prayer
Can serve my turn? Forgive me my foul murder!—

That cannot be; since I am still possess'd
Of those effects for which I did the murder—
My crown, mine own ambition, and my queen.
May one be pardon'd, and retain the offence?
In the corrupted currents of this world,
Offence's gilded hand may shove by justice;
And oft 'tis seen, the wicked prize itself
Buys out the law: But 'tis not so above:
There is no shuffling; there the action lies
In his true nature; and we ourselves compell'd,
Even to the teeth and forehead of our faults,
To give in evidence. What then? what rests?
Try what repentance can: What can it not?
Yet what can it, when one can repent?
O wretched state! O bosom black as death!
O limed* soul! that, struggling to be free,
Art more engag'd. Help, angels, make assay!
Bow, stubborn knees! and heart, with strings of steel,
Be soft as sinews of the new-born babe;
All may be well! [Retires and kneels.]

Enter HAMLET.

Ham. Now night I do it pat, now he is pray-
ing;
And now I'll do't; and so he goes to heaven:
And so am I reveng'd? That would be scam'd:†

A villain kills my father; and, for that,
I, his sole son, do this same villain send
To heaven.

Why, this is hire and salary, § not revenge.
He took my father grossly, full of bread;
With all his crimes broad blown, as flush as May; [heaven?]

And how his audit stands, who knows, save
But, in our circumstance and course of thought,
'Tis heavy with him: And am I then reveng'd,
To take him in the pining of his soul,
When he is fit and season'd for his passage?
No.

Up, sword; and know thou a more horrid hent.¶
When he is drunk, asleep, or in his rage,
Or in the incestuous pleasures of his bed;
At gaming, sweating, or about some act
That has no relish of salvation in't: [ven,
Then trip him, that his heels may kick at hea-
And that his soul may be as damn'd and black
As hell, whereto it goes. My mother stays:
This physic but prolongs thy sickly days.

[Exit.]

The KING rises and advances.

King. My words fly up, my thoughts remain
below:
Words, without thoughts, never to heaven go.
[Exit.]

SCENE IV.—Another Room in the same.

Enter QUEEN and POLONIUS.

Pol. He will come straight. Look you lay home to him:
Tell him his pranks have been too broad to bear
with;
And that your grace hath screen'd and stood between
Much heat and him. I'll silence me e'en here.
Pray you, be round with him.
Queen. I'll warrant you;
Fear me not:—withdraw, I hear him coming.

[POLONIUS hides himself.]

Enter HAMLET.

Ham. Now, mother; what's the matter?

* Reproved. † Authority to put them in execution.
‡ Lunatics. § Tapestry.

* Caught as with bird-lime. † Should be considered. ‡ Only. § Reward.
¶ Seize him at a more horrid time.

Queen. Hamlet, thou hast thy father much offended.

Ham. Mother, you have my father much offended.

Queen. Come, come, you answer with an idle tongue.

Ham. Go, go, you question with a wicked tongue.

Queen. Why, how now, Hamlet?

Ham. What's the matter now?

Queen. Have you forgot me?

Ham. No, by the rood, * not so:

You are the queen, your husband's brother's wife;

And,—would it were not so!—you are my mother.

Queen. Nay, then I'll set those to you that can speak.

Ham. Come, come, and sit you down; you shall not budge;

You go not, till I set you up a glass

Where you may see the inmost part of you.

Queen. What wilt thou do? thou wilt not murder me?

Help, help, ho!

Pol. [Behind.] What, ho! help!

Ham. How now! a rat?

[Draws.]

Dead, for a ducat, dead.

[HAMLET makes a pass through the Arras.]

Pol. [Behind.] Oh! I am slain.

[Falls and dies.]

Queen. O me, what hast thou done?

Ham. Nay, I know not:

Is it the king?

[Lifts up the Arras and draws forth
POLONIUS.]

Queen. O what a rash and bloody deed is this!

Ham. A bloody deed;—almost as bad, good mother,

As kill a king, and marry with his brother.

Queen. As kill a king!

Ham. Ay, lady, 'twas my word.—

Thou wretched, rash, intruding fool, farewell!

[To POLONIUS.]

I took thee for thy better; take thy fortune:

Thou find'st, to be too busy is some danger.—

Leave wringing of your hands: Peace; sit you down,

And let me wring your heart; for so I shall,

If it be made of penetrable stuff;

If damned custom have not braz'd it so,

That it is proof and bulwark against sense.

Queen. What have I done, that thou dar'st wag thy tongue

In noise so rude against me?

Ham. Such an act,

That blurs the grace and blush of modesty;

Calls virtue, hypocrite; takes off the rose

From the fair forehead of an innocent love,

And sets a blister there; makes marriage vows

As false as dicers' oaths: Oh! such a deed

As from the body of contraction & plucks

The very soul; and sweet religion makes

A rhapsody of words: Heaven's face doth glow;

Yea, this solidity and compound mass,

With tristful visage as against the doom,

Is thought-sick at the act.

Queen. Ah! me, what act,

That roars so loud, and thunders in the index?

Ham. Look here, upon this picture; and on this;

The counterfeit presentment of two brothers.

See, what a grace was seated on this brow,

Hyperion's curls; the front of Jove himself;

An eye like Mars, to threaten and command;

A station like the herald Mercury,

New-lighted on a heaven-kissing hill;

A combination and a form, indeed,

Where every god did seem to set his seal,

To give the world assurance of a man:

* Cross.

This was your husband.—Look you now, what follows:

Here is your husband; like a mildew'd ear,
Blasting his wholesome brother. Have you eyes?

Could you on this fair mountain leave to feed,
And batten * on this moor? Ha! have you eyes?

You cannot call it love; for, at your age,
The hey-day in the blood is tame, it's humble,
And waits upon the judgment; And what judgment

Would step from this to this? Sense, a sure you have,

Else could you not have motion: But, sure, that is apoplex'd: for madness would not err;
Nor sense to ecstasy † was ne'er so thrall'd,
But it reserv'd some quantity of choice,
To serve in such a difference. What devil

was't,
That thus hath cozen'd you at hoodman-blind? §
Eyes without feeling, feeling without sight,
Ears without hands or eyes, smelling sans || all,
Or but a sickly part of one true sense

Could not so mope. ¶
O shame! where is thy blush? † Rebellions hell,

If thou canst mutine in a matron's bones,
To flaming youth let virtue be as wax,

And melt in her own fire: proclaim no shame,
When the compulsive ardour gives the charge;

Since frost itself as actively doth burn,
And reason panders will.

Queen. O Hamlet, speak no more:
Thou turn'st mine eyes into my very soul;

And there I see such black and grained spots,
As will not leave their tinct. **

Ham. Nay, but to live
In the rank sweat of an enseamed †† bed;

Stew'd in corruption; honeying and making love
Over the nasty sty;—

Queen. O speak to me no more;
These words, like daggers, enter in mine ears:

No more, sweet Hamlet.

Ham. A murderer, and a villain:
A slave, that is not twentieth part the tythe

Of your precedent lord:—a vice ‡ of kings:
A cutpurse of the empire and the rule;

That from a shelf the precious diadem stole,
And put it in his pocket!

Queen. No more.

Enter Ghost.

Ham. A king
Of shreds and patches:—

Save me, and hover o'er me with your wings,
You heavenly guards!—What would you, gracious figure?

Queen. Alas! he's mad.

Ham. Do you not come your tardy son to chide,

That, laps'd in time and passion, lets go by
The important acting of your dread command?

O say!

Ghost. Do not forget: This visitation
Is but to whet thy almost blunted purpose.

But, look, amazement on thy mother sits:
O step between her and her fighting soul;

Conceit §§ in weakest bodies strongest works;
Speak to her, Hamlet.

Ham. How is it with you, lady?

Queen. Alas! how is't with you?
That you do bend your eye on vacancy,

And with the incorporal air do hold discourse?
Forth at your eyes your spirits wildly peep;

And, as the sleeping soldiers in the alarm,
Your bedded hair, like life in excrements, |||

Starts up, and stands on end. O gentle son,
Upon the heat and flame of thy distemper

Sprinkle cool patience. Whereon do you look?

† Sensation.

Scene IV. HAMLET, PRINCE OF DENMARK.

191

Ham. On him! on him!— Look you, how pale he glares!
His form and cause conjoin'd, preaching to stones,
Would make them capable. *—Do not look upon me;
Lest with this piteous action, you convert
My stern effects: † then what I have to do
Will want true colour; tears, perchance, ‡ for blood.

Queen. To whom do you speak this?

Ham. Do you see nothing there?

Queen. Nothing at all; yet all, that is, † I see.

Ham. Nor did you nothing hear?

Queen. No, nothing, but ourselves.

Ham. Why, look you there! look, how it steals away!

My father, in his habit as he liv'd!

Look, where he goes, even now, out at the portal!

Queen. This is the very coinage of your brain:
This bodiless creation ecstasy §
Is very cunning in.

Ham. Ecstasy!

My pulse, as yours, doth temperately keep time,
And makes as healthful music: It is not madness,

That I have utter'd: bring me to the test,
And I the matter will re-word; which madness
Would gambol from. Mother, for love of grace,
Lay not that flattering unction to your soul,
That not your trespass but my madness speaks:
It will but skin and film the ulcerous place;
Whiles rank corruption, mining all within,
Infects unseen. Confess yourself to heaven;
Repent what's past; avoid what is to come;
And do not spread the compost ¶ on the weeds,
To make them ranker. Forgive me this my virtue:

For in the fatness of these pursy times,
Virtue itself of vice must pardon beg;
Yea, curb ¶ and woo, for leave to do him good.

Queen. O Hamlet! thou hast cleft my heart in twain.

Ham. O throw away the worse part of it,
And live the purer with the other half;
Good night: but go not to my nuckle's bed;
Assume a virtue, if you have it not.
That monster, custom, who all sense doth eat
Of habit's devil, is angel yet in this;
That to the use of actions fair and good
He likewise gives a frock, or livery,
That aptly is put on: Refrain to-night;
And that shall lend a kind of easiness
To the next abstinence: the next more easy:
For use almost can change the stamp of nature,
And either curb the devil, or throw him out
With wondrous potency. Once more, good night!

And when you are desirous to be bless'd,
I'll blessing beg of you.—For this same lord,
[Pointing to POLONIUS.]

I do repent: But heaven hath pleas'd it so,—
To punish me with this, and this with me,
That I must be their scourge and minister.
I will bestow him, and will answer well
The death I gave him. So, again, good night:—
I must be cruel, only to be kind:
Thus bad begins, and worse remains behind.—
But one word more, good lady.

Queen. What shall I do?

Ham. Not this, by no means, that I bid you do:

Let the bloated king tempt you again to bed:
Pinch wanton on your cheek; call you, his mouse; **

And let him, for a pair or reechy †† kisses,
Or paddling in your neck with his damn'd fingers,

Make you to ravel all this matter out,
That I essentially am not in madness,

But mad in craft. 'Twere good you let him know:

For who, that's but a queen, fair, sober, wise,
Would from a paddock, * from a bat, a gib, †
Such dear concernings hide? who would do so?
No, in despite of sense and secrecy,
Unpeg the basket on the house's top,
Let the birds fly; and, like the famous ape,
To try conclusions, ‡ in the basket creep,
And break your own neck down.

Queen. Be thou assur'd, if words be made of breath,

And breath of life, I have no life to breathe
What thou hast said to me.

Ham. I must to England; you know that?

Queen. Alack!

I had forgot; 'tis so concluded on.

Ham. There's fellows seal'd: and my two school-fellows,—

Whom I will trust, as I will address fang'd, §—
They bear the mandate; they must sweep my way,

And marshal me to knavery: Let it work;
For 'tis the sport, to have the engineer

Hoist with his own petar: ¶ and it shall go hard,

But I will delve one yard below their mines,
And blow them at the moon: Oh! 'tis most sweet,

When in one line two crafts directly meet.—
This man shall set me packing.

I'll lug the guts into the neighbour room:—
Mother, good night.—Indeed, this counsellor
Is now most still, most secret, and most grave
Who was in life a foolish prating knave.

Come, Sir, to draw toward an end with you:—
Good night, mother.

[Exit secreally; HAMLET dragging in POLONIUS.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The same.

Enter KING, QUEEN, ROSENCRANTZ, and GUILDENSTERN.

King. There's matter in these sighs; these profound heaves;

You must translate: 'tis fit we understand them:
Where is your son?

Queen. Bestow this place on us a little while.—

[To ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN, who go out.]

Ah! my good lord, what have I seen to-night! *

King. What, Gertrude? How does Hamlet?

Queen. Mad as the sea, and wind, when both contend

Which is the mightier: In his lawless fit,
Behind the arras bearing something stir,
Whips out his rapier, cries, A rat! a rat!

And, in his brainish apprehension, kills
The unseen good old man.

King. O heavy deed!

It had been so with us, had we been there:
His liberty is full of threats to all;

To you yourself, to us, to every one.
Alas! how shall this bloody deed be answer'd?

It will be laid to us, whose providence
Should have kept short, restrain'd, and out of

hauit, ¶ [love,
This mad young man: but, so much was our
We would not understand what was most fit;

But, like the owner of a foul disease,
To keep it from divulging, let it feed
Even on the pith of life. Where is he gone?

Queen. To draw apart the body he hath kill'd:

O'er whom his very madness, like some ore,

King. O Gertrude, come away!

The sun no sooner shall the mountains touch,
But we will ship him hence; and this vile deed
We must, with all our majesty and skill,
Both countenance and excuse.—Ho! Guilden-stern!

Enter ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.

Friends both, go join you with some further
aid:

Hamlet in madness hath Polonius slain,
And from his mother's closet hath he dragg'd
him:

Go, seek him out; speak fair, and bring the body into the chapel. I pray you, haste in this.

[Exeunt Ros. and GUIL.]
Come, Gertrude, we'll call up our wisest friends;
And let them know, both what we mean to do,
And what's untimely done: so, haply, slau-
der,—

Whose whisper o'er the world's diameter,
As level as the cannon to his blank, † Transports his poison'd shot,—may miss our
name,

And hit the woundless air.—O come away!
My soul is full of discord and dismay.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Another Room in the same.

Enter HAMLET.

Ham.—Safely stowed,—[Ros. &c. within.]
Hamlet! lord Hamlet! But soft!—what noise?
who calls on Hamlet? Oh! here they come.

Enter ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.

Ros. What have you done, my lord, with the dead body?

Ham. Compounded it with dust, whereto 'tis kin.

Ros. Tell us where 'tis; that we may take it thence,

And bear it to the chapel.

Ham. Do not believe it.

Ros. Believe what?

Ham. That I can keep your counsel, and not mine own. Besides, to be demanded of a sponge!—what replication should be made by the son of a king?

Ros. Take you me for a sponge, my lord?

Ham. Ay, Sir; that soaks up the king's countenance, his rewards, his authorities. But such officers do the king best service in the end: He keeps them, like an ape, in the corner of his jaw; first mouthed, to be last swallowed:
When he needs what you have gleaned, it is but squeezing you, and, sponge, you shall be dry
again.

Ros. I understand you not, my lord.

Ham. I am glad of it: A knavish speech sleeps in a foolish ear.

Ros. My lord, you must tell us where the body is, and go with us to the king.

Ham. The body is with the king, but the king is not with the body. The king is a thing—

GUIL. A thing, my lord?

Ham. Of nothing: bring me to him. Hide fox, and all after. ‡

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Another Room in the same.

Enter KING, attended.

King. I have sent to seek him, and to find the body.

How dangerous is it, that this man goes loose?
Yet must we put the strong law on him:
He's lov'd of the distracted multitude,
Who like not in their judgment, but their eyes;
And where 'tis so, the offender's scourge is weigh'd,

But never the offence. To bear all smooth and even,

This sudden sending him away must seem
Deliberate pause: Diseases, desperate grown,
By desperate appliance are reliev'd,

Enter ROSENCRANTZ.

Or not at all.—How now? what hath befallen?

Ros. Where the dead body is bestow'd, my
lord,

We cannot get from him.

King. But where is he?

Ros. Without, my lord; guarded to know your pleasure.

King. Bring him before us,

Ros. Ho, Guildenstern? bring in my lord.

Enter HAMLET and GUILDENSTERN.

King. Now, Hamlet, where's Polonius?

Ham. At supper.

King. At supper? Where?

Ham. Not where he eats, but where he is eaten: a certain convocation of politic worms are e'en at him. Your worm is your only emperor for diet: we fat all creatures else, to fat us; and we fat ourselves for maggots: You fat king, and your lean beggar, is but variable service; two dishes, but to one table; that's the end.

King. Alas, alas!

Ham. A man may fish with the worm that hath eat of a king; and eat of the fish that hath ted of that worm.

King. What dost thou mean by this?

Ham. Nothing, but to show you how a king may go a progress through the guts of a beggar.

King. Where is Polonius?

Ham. In heaven; send thither to see: if your messenger find him not there, seek him i'the other place yourself. But, indeed, if you find him not within this month, you shall nose him as you go up the stairs into the lobby.

King. Go seek him there.

[To some Attendants.]

Ham. He will stay till you come.

[Exeunt Attendants.]

King. Hamlet, this deed, for thine especial safety,—

Which we do tender, as we dearly grieve

For that which thou hast done,—must send thee
hence

With fiery quickness: Therefore, prepare thyself. The bark is ready, and the wind at help,

The associates tend, † and every thing is bent
For England.

Ham. For England?

King. Ay, Hamlet.

Ham. Good.

King. So is it, if thou knew'st our purposes.

Ham. I see a cherub, that sees them.—But,
come; for England!—Farewell, dear mother.

King. Thy loving father, Hamlet.

Ham. My mother: Father and mother is man and wife; man and wife is one flesh; and so, my mother. Come, for England.

[Exit.]

King. Follow him at foot; tempt him with speed aboard;

Delay it not, I'll have him hence to-night:

Away; for every thing is seal'd and done

That else leans on the affair: Pray you, make haste,

[Exeunt Ros. and GUIL.]
And, England, if my love thou hold'st at ought,
(As my great power thereof may give thee sense;

Since yet thy cicatrice looks raw and red
After the Danish sword, and thiv free awe

Pays homage to us,) thou may'st not coldly
set;

Our sovereign process; which imports at full,

By letters conjuring to that effect,

The present death of Hamlet. Do it, England;
For like the hectic in my blood he rages,

* Mine.

† Mark.

‡ Asport among children.

* Right, ready.

‡ Value, estimate.

SCENE IV.—A Plain in Denmark.

Enter FORTINBRAS, and Forces, marching.

For. Go, captain, from me greet the Danish king;
Tell him, that, by his licence, Fortinbras
Craves the conveyance of a promis'd march
Over his kingdom. You know the rendezvous.

If that his majesty would aught with us,
We shall express our duty in his eye.†
And let him know so.

Cap. I will do't, my lord.

For. Go softly on.

[Exeunt FORTINBRAS and Forces.

Enter HAMLET, ROSENCRANTZ, GUILDEN-
STERN, &c.

Ham. Good Sir, whose powers‡ are these?

Cap. They are of Norway, Sir,

Ham. How purpos'd, Sir,

I pray you?

Cap. Against some part of Poland.

Ham. Who

Commands them, Sir?

Cap. The nephew to old Norway, Fortinbras.

Ham. Goes it against the man of Poland, Sir,
Or for some frontier?

Cap. Truly to speak, Sir, and with no addition,

We go to gain a little patch of ground;
That hath in it no profit but the name.
To pay five ducats, five, I would not farm it;
Nor will it yield to Norway, or the Pole,
A ranker rate, should it be sold in fee.

Ham. Why, then the Polack § never will defend it.

Cap. Yes, 'tis already garrison'd.

Ham. Two thousand souls, and twenty thousand ducats,

Will not debate the question of this straw:
This is the imposthume of much wealth and
peace;

That inward breaks, and shows no cause without

Why the man dies.—I humbly thank you, Sir.

Cap. God be wi' you, Sir. [Exit CAPTAIN.

Ros. Won't please you go, my lord?

Ham. I will be with you straight. Go a little before. [Exeunt Ros. and GUIL.

How all occasions do inform against me,
And spur my dull revenge! What is a man,
If his chief good, and market|| of his time,
Be but to sleep and feed? a beast, no more.
Sure he that made us with such large discourse,¶

Looking before and after, gave us not
That capability and godlike reason
To fust in us unus'd. Now, whether it be
Bestial oblivion, or some craven || scruple
Of thinking too precisely on the event,—
A thought, which, quarter'd, hath but one part wisdom,

And, ever, three parts coward,—I do not know
Why yet I live to say, This thing's to do;
Sith†† I have cause, and will, and strength, and
means,

To do't. Examples, gross as earth, exhort me:
Witness, this army of such mass and charge,
Led by a delicate and tender prince;
Whose spirit with divine ambition puff'd,
Makes mouths at the invisible event;
Exposing what is mortal and unsure,
To all that fortune, death, and danger dare,
Even for an egg-shell. Rightly to be great,
Is not to stir without great argument;
But greatly to find quarrel in a straw,

When honour's at the stake. How stand I then,
That have a father kill'd, a mother stain'd,
Excitements of my reason and my blood,
And let all sleep? while, to my shame, I see
The imminent death of twenty thousand men,
That, for a fantasy, and trick of fame,
Go to their graves like beds; fight for a plot
Whereon the numbers cannot try the cause,
Which is not tomb enough, and continent,
To hide the slain?—Oh! from this time forth
My thoughts be bloody, or be nothing worth.

[Exit.

SCENE V.—Elsinore.—A Room in the Castle.

Enter QUEEN and HORATIO.

Queen. —I will not speak with her.

Hor. She is importunate; indeed, distract;
Her mood will needs be pited.

Queen. What would she have?

Hor. She speaks much of her father; says,
she hears,
There's tricks i' the world; and hems, and beats
her heart;
Spurns enviously at straws; speaks things in doubt, [thing,
That carry but half sense: her speech is no.

Yet the unshaped use of it doth move
The hearers to collection; they aim* at it,
And botch the words up fit to their own
thoughts;

Which, as her winks, and nods, and gestures
yield them,
Indeed would make one think, there might be thought,

Though nothing sure, yet much unhappily.

Queen. 'Twere good she were spoken with;
for she may strew

Dangerous conjectures in ill-breeding minds:
Let her come in. [Exit HORATIO.

To my sick soul, as sin's true nature is,
Each toy† seems prologue to some great amiss:
So full of artless jealousy is guilt,
It spills itself in fearing to be spilt.

Re-enter HORATIO, with OPHELIA.

Oph. Where is the beauteous majesty of Denmark?

Queen. How now, Ophelia?

Oph. How should I your true love know

From another one?

By his cockle hat and staff,

And his sandal shoon?† [Singing.

Queen. Alas, sweet lady, what imports this song?

Oph. Say you? nay, pray you, mark.

He is dead and gone;

At his head a grass-green turf,

At his heels a stone.

Oh! ho!

Queen. Nay, but Ophelia,—

Enter KING.

Queen. Alas! look here, my lord.

Oph. Larded § all with sweet flowers;

Which bewept to the grave did go,

With true-love showers.

King. How do you, pretty lady?

Oph. Well, God'ield || you! They say, the

And I a maid at your window,
To be your Valentine:*

Then up he rose, and don'd his clothes,
And dapp'd† the chamber door;
Let in the maid, that out a maid
Never departed more.*

King. Pretty Ophelia!

Oph. Indeed, without an oath, I'll make an end on't:

*By Gis,† and by Saint Charity,
Alack, and fie for shame!
Young men will do't, if they come to't;
By cock, they are to blame.*

*Quoth she, before you tumbled me,
You promised me to wed:*

[He answers.]

*So would I ha' done, by yonder sun,
An thou hadst not come to my bed.*

King. How long hath she been thus?

Oph. I hope, all will be well. We must be patient: but I cannot choose but weep, to think they should lay him i'the cold ground: My brother shall know of it, and so I thank you for your good counsel. Come, my coach! Good night, ladies; good night, sweet ladies: good night, good night. [Exit.]

King. Follow her close: give her good watch, I pray you. [Exit HORATIO.]

Oh! this is the poison of deep grief; it springs All from her father's death: And now behold, O Gertrude, Gertrude, When sorrows come, they come not single spies, But in battalions! First, her father slain; Next, your son gone; and the most violent author

Of his own just remove: The people muddied, Thick and unwholesome in their thoughts and whispers,

For good Polonius' death; and we have done but greenly,§

In hugging muggers|| to inter him: Poor Ophelia Divided from herself, and her fair judgment; Without the which we are pictures, or mere beasts.

Last, and as much containing as all these, Her brother is in secret come from France: Feeds on his woe, keeps himself in clouds, And wants not buzzers to infect his ear With pestilent speeches of his father's death; Wherein necessity, of matter beggar'd, Will nothing stick our person to arraign In ear and ear. O my dear Gertrude, this, Like to a murdering piece, in many places Gives me superfluous death! [A noise within.]

Queen. Alack! what noise is this?

Enter a GENTLEMAN.

King. Attend. [Door:] Where are my Switzers?¶ Let them guard the What is the matter?

And, as the world were now but to begin, Antiquity forgot, custom not known, The ratifiers and props of every word, They cry, 'Choose us; Laertes shall be king! Caps, bands, and toupies, applaud it to the clouds, Laertes shall be king, Laertes king!

Queen. How cheerfully on the false trail* they cry!

Oh! this is counter,† you false Danish dogs.

King. The doors are broke. [Noise within.]

Enter LAERTES, armed; DANCES following.

Laer. Where is this king?—Sirs, stand you all without.

Dan. No, let's come in.

Laer. I pray you, give me leave.

Dan. We will, we will

[They retire without the door.]

Laer. I thank you:—keep the door.—O thou vile king, Give me my father.

Queen. Calmly, good Laertes.

Laer. That drop of blood that's calm, proclaims me bastard;

Cries cuckold to my father; brands the harlot Even here, between the chaste unsmirched i brow Of my true mother.

King. What is the cause, Laertes, That thy rebellion looks so giant-like?— Let him go, Gertrude; do not fear our person; There's such divinity doth hedge a king, That treason can but peep to what it would, Acts little of his will.—Tell me, Laertes, Why thou art thus incens'd;—Let him go, Gertrude, man.

Laer. Where is my father?

King. Dead.

Queen. But not by him.

King. Let him demand his fill.

Laer. How came he dead? I'll not be juggled with:

To hell, allegiance! vows, to the blackest devil! Conscience and grace to the profoundest pit! I dare damnation: To this point I stand,— That both the worlds I give to negligence, Let come what comes; only I'll be reveng'd Most thoroughly for my father.

King. Who shall stay you?

Laer. My will, not all the world's: And, for my means, I'll husband them so well, They shall go far with little.

King. Good Laertes,

If you desire to know the certainty

Of your dear father's death, is't writ in your revenge,

That, sweepstake, you will draw both friend and foe,

Winner and loser?

Laer. None but his enemies.

King. Will you know them then?

Laer. To his good friends thus wide I'll open my arms;

And, like the kind life-rend'ring pelican, Repast them with my blood.

King. Why, now you speak

Like a good child, and a true gentleman.

That I am guiltless of your father's death,

And am most sensibly in grief for it,

It shall as level to your judgment* bear,§

As day does to your eye.

Dances. [Within.] Let her come in.

Laer. How now! what noise is that?

Enter OPHELIA, fantastically dressed with Straus and Flowers.

O heat, dry up my brains! tears seven times salt,

Burn out the sense and virtue of mine eye!— By heaven, thy madness shall be paid by weight,

Till our scale turn the beam. O rose of May!

Dear maid, kind sister, sweet Ophelia!

O heavens! is't possible, a young maid's wits

Should be as mortal as an old man's life?

It could not move thus.

Oph. You must sing, Down-a-down, an you call him, a-down-a. Oh ! how the wheel * he comes it ! It is the false steward, that stole his master's daughter.

Laer. This nothing's more than matter.

Oph. There's the rosemary, that's for remembrance ; pray you, love, remember : and there is pansies, that's for thoughts.

Laer. A document in madness ; thoughts and remembrance fitted.

All flaxen was his poll :

And we cast away moan,

And of all Christian souls ! I pray God. God be wi' you ! [Exit OPHELIA.

Laer. Do you see this, O God !

King. Laertes, I must commune with your grief,

Or you deny me right. Go but apart,
Make choice of whom your wisest friends you will,
And they shall hear and judge 'twixt you and I

They find us touch'd, we will our kingdom give,

Our crown, our life, and all that we call ours,
To you in satisfaction ; but, if not,
Be you content to lend your patience to us,
And we shall jointly labour with your soul
To give it due content.

Laer. Let this be so ;
His means of death, his obscure funeral,—
No trophy, sword, nor hatchment, o'er his bones,
No noble rite, nor formal ostentation,—
Cry to be heard, as 'twere from heaven to earth,
That I must call't in question.

King. So you shall ;
And where the offence is, let the great axe fall.
I pray you, go with me. [Exit.

Enter HORATIO, and a SERVANT.

Hor. What are they, that would speak with me ?

Hor. Let him bless thee too.

1 Sail. He shall, Sir, an't please him. There's a letter for you, Sir ; it comes from the ambassador that was bound for England ; if your name be Horatio, as I am let to know it is.

Hor. [Reads.] Horatio, when thou shalt have overlooked this, give these fellows some means to the king ; they have letters for him. Ere we were two days old at sea, a pirate of very warlike appointment gave us chase : Finding ourselves too slow of sail, we put on a compelled valour : and in the grapple I boarded them : on the instant, they got clear of our ship ; so I alone became their prisoner. They have dealt with me like thieves of mercy ; but they knew what they did ; I am to do a good turn for them. Let the king have the letters I have sent ; and repair thou to me with as much haste as thou wouldst fly death. I have words to speak in thine ear, will make thee dumb ; yet are they much too light for the bore of the matter. These good fellows will bring thee where I am. Rosenkrantz and Guildenstern hold their course for England : of them I have much to tell thee. Farewell.

He that thou knowest thine, Hamlet.
Come, I will give you way for these your letters ;
And do't the speedier, that you may direct me
To him from whom you brought them. [Exit.

SCENE VII.—Another Room in the same.

Enter KING and LAERTES.

King. Now must your conscience my acquittance seal,
And you must put me in your heart for friend ;
Sith * you have heard, and with a knowing ear,
That he, which hath your noble father slain,
Pursu'd my life.

Laer. It well appears :—But tell me,
Why you proceeded not against these feats,
So crimeful and so capital in nature,
As by your safety, greatness, wisdom, all things

else,
You mainly were stirr'd up.
King. Oh ! for two special reasons ;
Which may to you, perhaps, seem much unsinew'd, †

But yet to me they are strong. The queen his mother,
Lives almost by his looks ; and, for myself,
(My virtue, or my plague, be it either which,)
She is so conjunctive to my life and soul,
That, as the star moves not but in his sphere,
I could not but by her. The other motive,
Why to a public count I might not go,
Is, the great love the general gender ‡ bear him :
Who, dipping all his faults in their affection,
Would like the spring § that turneth wood to

stone, ¶
Convert his gyves ¶ to graces ; so that my
Too slightly timber'd for so loud a wind,
Would have reverted to my bow again,
And not where I had aim'd them.

Laer. And so have I a noble father lost ;
A sister driven into desperate terms ;
Whose worth, if praises may go back again,
Stood challenger on mount of all the age
For her perfections :—But my revenge will

come.
King. Break not your sleeps for that : you must not think,
That we are made of stuff so flat and dull,
That we can let our heard be shook with danger,

* Since. † Deprived of strength.
‡ Common people.
§ Petrifying springs are common in many parts of England.
¶ Fetters.

And think it pastime. You shortly shall hear more :

I loved your father, and we love ourself ;
And that, I hope, will teach you to imagine,—
How now ? what news ?

Enter a MESSENGER.

Mess. Letters, my lord, from Hamlet :
This to your majesty ; this to the queen.

King. From Hamlet ! who brought them ?

Mess. Sailors, my lord, they say : I saw them not :

They were given me by Claudio, he receiv'd them

Of him that brought them.

King. Laertes, you shall hear them :—

Leave us.

[Exit MESSENGER.

[Reads.] High and mighty, you shall know, I am set naked on your kingdom. To-morrow shall I beg leave to see your kingly eyes ; when I shall, first asking your pardon thereunto, recount the occasion of my sudden and more strange return. Hamlet.

What should this mean ? Are all the rest come back ?

Or is it some abuse, and no such thing ?

Laer. Know you the hand ?

King. 'Tis Hamlet's character. Naked,—

And in a postscript here, he says, alone :

Can you advise me ?

Laer. I am lost in it, my lord. But let him come ;

It warms the very sickness in my heart,
That I shall live and tell him to his teeth,
Thus diddest thou.

King. If it be so, Laertes,
As how should it be so ? how otherwise ?—
Will you be rul'd by me ?

Laer. Ay, my lord ;

So you will not o'errule me to a peace.

King. To thine own peace. If he be now return'd,—

As checking * at his voyage, and that he means
No more to undertake it,—I will work him
To an exploit, now ripe in my device,
Under the which he shall not choose but fall :
And for his death no wind of blame shall breathe :

But even his mother shall uncharge the practice,
And call it, accident.

Laer. My lord, I will be rul'd ;

The rather, if you could devise it so.

That I might be the organ.

King. It falls right.

You have been talk'd of since your travel much,
And that in Hamlet's hearing, for a quality
Wherein, they say, you shine : your sum of parts

Did not together pluck such envy from him,
As did that one ; and that, in my regard,
Of the unworthiest siege. †

Laer. What part is that, my lord ?

King. A very ribband in the cap of youth,
Yet needful too ; for youth no less becomes
The light and careless livery that it wears,
Than settled age his sables, and his weeds,
Importing health and graveness.—Two months
since,

Here was a gentleman of Normandy ;—
I have seen myself, and serv'd ‡ against the French,
And they can well on horseback : but this gallant

Had witchcraft in't ; he grew into his seat ;
And to such wondrous doing brought his horse,
As he had been incorp'd and demi-natur'd
With the brave beast : so far he topp'd † my thought,

That I, in forgery of shapes and tricks,
Came short of what he did.

Laer. A Norman, was't ?

King. A Norman.

Laer. Upon my life, Lamord.

King. The very same.

Laer. I know him well, he is the brooch, *
indeed,

And gem of all the nation.

King. He made confession of you :
And gave you such a masterly report,
For art and exercise in your defence, †
And for your rapier most especial,
That he cried out, 'twould be a sight indeed,
If one could match you : the scrimers ‡ of their nation,

He swore had neither motion, guard, nor eye,
If you oppos'd them.—Sir, this report of his
Did Hamlet so envenom with his envy,
That he could nothing do, but wish and beg,
Your sudden coming o'er, to play with you.

Now, out of this,—

Laer. What out of this, my lord ?

King. Laertes, was your father dear to you ?
Or are you like the painting of a sorrow,
A face without a heart ?

Laer. Why ask you this ?

King. Not that I think, you did not love your
father ;

But that I know, love is begun by time ;

And that I see, in passages of proof, §

Tune qualifies the spark and fire of it.

There lives within the very flame of love

A kind of wick, or snuff, that will abate it ;

And nothing is at a like goodness still ;

For goodness, growing to a plensury,
Dies in his own too-much : That we would do,
We should do when we would ; for this would changes,

And hath abatements and delays as many,

As there are tongues, are hands, are accidents ;

And then this should is like a spendthrift sigh,

That hurts by easing. But, to the quick o'the ulcer :

Hamlet comes back ; What would you unde-
take, ..

To show yourself in deed your father's son

More than in words ?

Laer. To cut his throat i'the church.

King. No place, indeed, should murder sanc-tuarize ;

Revenge should have no bounds. But, good

Laertes,

Will you do this, keep close within your chamber :

Hamlet, return'd, shall know you are come home :

We'll put on those shall praise your excellence,

And set a double varnish on the fame

The Frenchman gave you ; bring you, in fine,
together,

And wager on your heads : he, being remiss, *

Most generous, and free from all contriving,

Will not peruse the foils ; so that, with ease,

Or with a little shuffling, you may choose

A sword unbated, † and, in a pass of practice, ‡

Require him for your father.

Laer. I will do't :

And, for the purpose, I'll anoint my sword.

I bought an unction of a mountebank,

So mortal, that but dip a knife in it,

Where it draws blood, no cataplasm so rare,

Collected from all simples that have virtue

Under the moon, can save the thing from death,

That is but scratch'd withal : I'll touch my
point

With this contagion ; that, if I gall him slightly,

It may be death.

King. Let's further think of this ;

Weigh what convenience, both of time and
means,

May fit us to our shape : if this should fail,

And that our drift look through our bad performance,

'Twere better not assay'd ; therefore this project

Should have a back, or second, that might hold,

* Ornament.

When in your motion you are hot and dry, (As make your bouts more violent to that end,) And that he calls for drink, I'll have preferr'd ‡ him

A chalice for the nonce: § whereon but sipping, if he by chance escape your venom'd stuck, ¶ Our purpose may hold there. But stay, what noise?

Enter QUEEN.

How now, sweet queen?

Queen. One woe doth tread upon another's heel, [Laertes,] So fast they follow:—Your sister's drown'd, Laer. Drown'd? Oh! where?

Queen. There is a willow grows ascant the brook,

That shows his hoar leaves in the glassy stream; Therewith fantastic garlands did she make Of crow-flowers, nettles, daisies, and long purples, ¶

Laer. Alas then, she is drown'd?

Queen. Drown'd, drown'd.

Laer. Too much of water hast thou, poor Ophelia,

And therefore I forbid my tears: But yet it is our trick; nature her custom holds, Let shame say what it will: when these are gone,

The woman will be out: ‡—Adieu, my lord! I have a speech of fire, that faint would blaze, But that this folly drowns it. [Exit.]

King. Let's follow, Gertrude:

How much I had to do to calm his rage! Now fear I, this will give it start again; Therefore, let's follow. [Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A Church-Yard.

Enter Two CLOWNS, with Spades, &c.

1 Clo. Is she to be buried in Christian burial, that wilfully seeks her own salvation?

2 Clo. I tell thee, she is; therefore make her grave straight: §§ the crowner hath set on her, and finds it Christian burial.

1 Clo. How can that be, unless she drowned herself in her own defence?

2 Clo. Why 'tis found so.

1 Clo. It must be se offendendo; it cannot be else. For here lies the point: If I drown myself wittingly, it argues an act: and an act hath three branches: it is, to act, to do, and to perform; argal, ||| she drowned herself wittingly.

* As fire arms sometimes burst in proving their strength. † Skill.

‡ A euph for the purpose.

¶ Orchis morio mas.

†† Insensible.

§§ Immediately.

‡ Presented.

|| Thurst.

 Licentious.

†† Tears will flow.

||| A blunder for ergo.

2 Clo. Nay, but hear you, Goodman delver.

1 Clo. Give me leave. Here lies the water; good: here stands the man; good: if the man go to this water, and drown himself, it is, will he, nill he, he goes; mark you that: but if the water come to him, and drown him, he drowns not himself: argal, he, that is not guilty of his own death, shortens not his own life.

2 Clo. But is this law?

1 Clo. Ay, marry is't; crowner's-quest law.

2 Clo. Will you ha' the truth on't? If this had not been a gentlewoman, she should have been buried out of Christian burial.

1 Clo. Why, there thou say'st: And the more pity; that great folks shall have countenance in this world to drown or hang themselves, more than their even * Christian. Come, my spade. There is no ancient gentlemen but gardeners, ditchers, and grave-makers; they hold up Adam's profession.

2 Clo. Was he a gentleman?

1 Clo. He was the first that ever bore arms.

2 Clo. Why, he had none.

1 Clo. What, art a heathen? How dost thou understand the scripture? The scripture says, Adam digged; Could he dig without arms? I'll put another question to thee: If thou answerest me not to the purpose, confess thyself—

2 Clo. Go to.

1 Clo. What is he, that builds stronger than either the mason, the shipwright, or the carpenter?

2 Clo. The gallows maker; for that frame out-lives a thousand tenants.

1 Clo. I like thy wit well, in good faith; the gallows does well: But how does it well? it does well to those that do ill: now thou dost ill, to say the gallows is built stronger than the church; argal, the gallows may do well to thee. To't again; come.

2 Clo. Who builds stronger than a mason, a shipwright, or a carpenter?

1 Clo. Ay, tell me that, and anyoak. †

2 Clo. Marry, now I can tell.

1 Clo. To't.

2 Clo. Mass, I cannot tell.

Enter HAMLET and HORATIO, at a distance

1 Clo. Cudgel thy brains no more about it; for your dull ass will not mend his pace with beating; and, when you are asked this question next, say, a grave-maker; the houses that he makes last till doomsday. Go, get thee to Yaughan, and fetch me a stoup of liquor. [Exit 2 CLOWN.]

1 CLOWN digs, and sings.

In youth, when I did love, did love, ‡

Methought, it was very sweet,

To contract, O, the time, for, ah, my behave

O, methought, there was nothing meet.

Ham. Has this fellow no feeling of his business? he sings at grave-making.

Hor. Custom hath made it in him a property of easiness.

Ham. 'Tis e'en so: the hand of little employment hath the dautiest sense.

1 Clo. But age, with his stealing steps,

Hath clau'd me in his closet,

And hath shipped me into the land,

As if I had never been such.

[Throws up a Scull.]

Ham. That scull had a tongue in it, and could sing once: How the knave jowls it to the ground, as if it were Cain's jaw-bone, that did the first murder! This might be the pate of a politician, which this ass now o'er-reaches: one that would circumvent God, might it not?

* Fellow.

† The song entire is printed in Percy's Reliques of Ancient English Poetry, Vol. I. It was written by Lord Vaux

‡ Give over.

Hor. It might, my lord.

Ham. Or of a courtier; which could say,
Good-morrow, sweet lord! How dost thou, good lord! This might be my lord such-a-one,
that praised my lord such-a-one's horse, when he meant to beg it; might it not?

Hor. Ay, my lord.

Ham. Why, e'en so; and now my lady Worm's; chapless, and knocked about the mazzard with a sexton's spade; Here's fine revolution, an we had the trick to see't. Did these bones cost no more the breeding, but to play at loggats* with them? mine ache to think
on't.

1 Clo. A pick-axe, and a spade, a spade, [Sings.

For—and a shrouding sheet;

O, a pit of clay for to be made

For such a guest is meet.

[Throws up a Scull.

Ham. There's another; Why may not that be the scull of a lawyer? Where be his quid-dits; now, his quillets,† his cases, his tenures, and his tricks? why does he suffer this rude knave now to knock him about the sconce‡ with a dirty shovel, and will not tell him of his action of battery? Humph! This fellow might be in's time a great buyer of land, with his statutes, his recognizances, his fines, his double vouchers, his recoveries: Is this the fine of his fines, and the recovery of his recoveries, to have his fine pate full of fine dirt? will his vouchers vouch him no more of his purchases, and double ones too, than the length and breadth of a pair of indentures? The very conveyances of his lands will hardly lie in this box; and must the inheritor himself have no more? ha?

Hor. Not a jot more, my lord.

Ham. Is not parchment made of sheep-skins?

Hor. Ay, my lord, and of calves-skins too.

Ham. They are sheep, and calves, which seek out assurance in that. I will speak to this fellow:—Whose grave's this, Sirrah?

1 Clo. Mine, Sir.—

O, a pit of clay for to be made [Sings.
For such a guest is meet.

Ham. I think it be thine, indeed; for thou liest in't.

1 Clo. You lie out on't, Sir, and therefore it is not yours: for my part, I do not lie in't, yet it is mine.

Ham. Thou dost lie in't, to be in't and say it is thine; 'tis for the dead, not for the quick;
therefore thou liest.

1 Clo. 'Tis a quick lie, Sir; 'twill away again,
from me to you.

Ham. What man dost thou dig it for?

1 Clo. For no man, Sir.

Ham. What woman then?

1 Clo. For none neither.

Ham. Who is to be buried in't?

1 Clo. One, that was a woman, Sir; but, rest her soul she's dead.

Ham. How absolute the knave is! we must speak by the card,|| or equivocation will undo us. By the Lord, Horatio, these three years I have taken note of it; the age is grown so picked,¶ that the toe of the peasant comes so near the heel of the courtier, he galls his kibe.—How long hast thou been a grave-maker?

1 Clo. Of all the days i'the year, I came to't that day that our last king Hamlet overcame Fortinbras.

Ham. How long's that since?

1 Clo. Cannot you tell that? every fool can tell that: It was that very day that young Hamlet was born: he that is mad, and sent into England.

* An ancient game played as quoits are at present.

† Subtilties. ‡ Frivolous distinctions. § Head.

|| By the compass, or chart of directions.

¶ Spruce, affected.

Ham. Ay, marry, why was he sent into England?

1 Clo. Why, because he was mad: he shall recover his wits there: or, if he do not, 'tis no great matter there.

Ham. Why?

1 Clo. 'Twill not be seen in him there; there the men are as mad as he.

Ham. How came he mad?

1 Clo. Very strangely, they say.

Ham. How strangely?

1 Clo. 'Faith, e'en with losing his wits.

Ham. Upon what ground?

1 Clo. Why, here in Denmark; I have been sexton here, man and boy, thirty years.

Ham. How long will a man lie i'the earth ere he rot?

1 Clo. 'Faith, if he be not rotten before he die, (as we have many pocky coises now-a-days, that will scarce hold the laying in,) he will last you some eight year, or nine year: a tanner will last you nine year.

Ham. Why he more than another?

1 Clo. Why, Sir, his hide is so tanned with his trade, that he will keep out water: a great while; and your water is a sore decayer of your whoreson dead body. Here's a scull no hath lain you i'the earth, three-and-twenty years.

Ham. Whose was it?

1 Clo. A whoreson mad fellow's it was.

Whose do you think it was?

Ham. Nay, I know not.

1 Clo. A pestilence on him for a mad rogue! he poured a flagon of Rhenish on my head once. This same scull, Sir, was Yorick's scull, the king's jester.

Ham. This?

[Takes the Scull.

1 Clo. E'en that.

Ham. Alas! poor Yorick!—I knew him,
Horatio; a fellow of infinite jest, of most excellent fancy: he hath borne me on his back a thousand times; and now, how abhorred in my imagination it is! my gorge rises at it. Here hung those lips, that I have kissed I know not how oft. Where be your gibes now? your gambols? your songs? your flashes of merriment, that were wont to set the table on a roar? Not one now, to mock your own grinning?
quite chap-fallen? Now get you to my lady's chamber, and tell her, let her paint an inch thick, to this favour* she must come;
make her laugh at that.—Pr'ythee, Horatio,
tell me one thing.

Hor. What's that, my lord?

Ham. Dost thou think, Alexander looked o'this fashion i'the earth?

Hor. E'en so.

Ham. And smelt so? pah!

[Throws down the Scull.

Hor. E'en so, my lord.

Ham. To what base uses we may return,
Horatio! why may not imagination trace the noble dust of Alexander, till he find it stopping a bung-hole?

Hor. 'Twere to consider too curiously, to consider so.

Ham. No, faith, not a jot; but to follow him thither with modesty enough, and likelihood to lead it: As thus; Alexander died, Alexander was buried, Alexander returneth to dust; the dust is earth; of earth we make loam: And why of that loam, whereto he was converted, might he not stop a beer-barrel?

Imperious† Cesar, dead, and turn'd to clay,

Might stop a hole to keep the wind away:

O! that that earth, which kept the world in awe,

Should patch a wall to expel the winter's

king.

[Retiring with HORATIO.]

Laer. What ceremony else?

Ham. That is Laertes,

A very noble youth: Mark.

Laer. What ceremony else?

† Priest. Her obsequies have been as far enlarg'd

As we have warranty: Her death was doubtful;
And, but that great command o'ersways the order,

She should in ground unsanctified have lodg'd,
Till the last trumpet: for charitable prayers,
Shards, § flints, and pebbles, should be thrown
on her:

Yet here she is allow'd her virgin crants, ||
Her maiden strewments, and the bringing home
Of bell and burial.

Laer. Must there no more be done?

† Priest. No more be done!

We should profane the service of the dead,
To sing a requiem ¶ and such rest to her
As to peace-parted souls.

Laer. Lay her i'th earth:—
And from her fair and unpolluted flesh,
May violets spring!—I tell thee, charlish priest,
A ministr'ing angel shall my sister be,
When thou liest howling.

Ham. What, the fair Ophelia!

Queen. Sweet to the sweet: Farewell!

[Scattering Flowers.]

I hop'd, thou shouldst have been my Hamlet's
wife:

I thought thy bride-bed to have deck'd, sweet
maid,
And not have strew'd thy grave.

Laer. O treble woe

Fall ten times treble on that cursed head,
Whose wicked dead thy most ingenious sense
Depriv'd thee of!—Hold off the earth awhile,
Till I have caught her once more in mine arms;

[Leaps into the Grave.]

Now pile your dust upon the quick  and dead;
Till of this flat a mountain you have made
To o'ertop old Pelion, or the skyish bead
Of blue Olympus.

Ham. [Advancing.] What is he, whose grief
Bears such an emphasis? whose phrase of sorrow
Conjures the wand'ring stars, and makes them
stand

Like wonder-wounded hearers? this is I,
Hamlet the Dane.

[Leaps into the Grave.]

Laer. The devil take thy soul!

[Grappling with him.]

Ham. Thou pray'st not well.

I pray thee, take thy fingers from my throat;
For, though I am not splenetic and rash,
Yet have I in me something dangerous,
Which let thy wisdom fear: Hold off thy hand.

King. Pluck them asunder.

Queen. Hamlet, Hamlet!

All. Gentlemen,—

Hor. Good my lord, be quiet.

[The Attendants part them, and they come out of the Grave.]

Ham. Why, I will fight with him upon this
theme,

Until my eye-lids will no longer wag.

Queen. O my son! what theme?

Ham. I lov'd Ophelia: forty thousand brothers

Could not, with all their quantity of love,
Make up my sum.—What wilt thou do for her?

King. Oh! he is mad, Laertes.

Queen. For love of God, forbear him.

Ham. 'Zounds, show me what thou'lt do:
Woul't weep? woul't fight? woul't fast? woul't tear thyself?

Woul't drink up Esil? * eat a crocodile?

I'll do't.—Dost thou come here to whine?

To outface me with leaping in her grave?

Be buried quick with her, and so will I:

And, if thou prate of mountains, let them throw

Millions of acres on us; till our ground,

Singeing his pate against the burning zone,

Make Ossa like a wart! Nay, an thou'lt mouth,

I'll rant as well as thou.

Queen. This is mere madness:

And thus awhile the fit will work on him;

Anon, as patient as the female dove,

When that her golden compleats are disclos'd, †

His silence will sit drooping.

Ham. Hear you, Sir:

What is the reason that you use me thus?

I lov'd you ever: But it is no matter;

Let Hercules himself do what he may,

The cat will mew, and dog will have his day.

[Exit.]

King. I pray thee, good Horatio, wait upon him.—[Exit HORATIO.]

Strengthen your patience in our last night's speech;

[To LAERTES.]

We'll put the matter to the present push.—

Good Gertrude, set some watch over your son.—

This grave shall have a living monument:

An hour of quiet shortly shall we see;

Till then, in patience our proceeding be.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A Hall in the Castle.

Enter HAMLET and HORATIO.

Ham. So much for this, Sir: now shall you see the other;—

You do remember all the circumstance?

Hor. Remember it, my lord!

Ham. Sir, in my heart there was a kind of fighting,

That would not let me sleep: methought, I lay
Worse than the mutines; in the bilboes. §

Rashly,

And prais'd be rashness for it,—Let us know,

Our indiscretion sometimes serves us well,

When our deep plots do pall: || and that should teach us,

There's a divinity that shapes our ends,

Rough-hew them how we will.

Hor. That is most certain.

Ham. Up from my cabin,

My sea-gown scarf'd about me, in the dark

Grop'd I to find out them; had my desire;

Finger'd their packet; and, in fine, withdrew

To mine own room again; making so bold,

My fears forgetting manners, to unseal

Their grand commission; where I found, Horatio,

O royal knavery; an exact command,—

Larded ¶ with many several sorts of reasons,

Importing Denmark's health, and England's too,

With, ho! such bugs  and goblins in my
life,—

That, on the supervise, †† no leisure bated,

No, not to stay the grudging of the axe,

My head should be struck off.

Hor. Is't possible?

Ham. Here's the commission; read it at more leisure.

But wilt thou hear now how I did proceed?

Hor. Ay, beseech you.

Ham. Being thus benetted round with villains,

the word should be Wine, a river which falls into the Baltic ocean.

Devis'd a new commission; wrote it fair:
I once did hold it, as our statists do,
A baseness to write fair, and labour'd much
To forget that learning; but, Sir, now
It did me yeoman's service: Wilt thou know
The effect of what I wrote?

Hor. Ay, good my lord.

Ham. An earnest conjuration from the king,—

As England was his faithful tributary;
As love between them like the palm might flourish;

As peace should still her wheaten garland wear,
And stand a comma † 'tween their amities;
And many such like as's of great charge,—
That, on the view and knowing of these contents,

Without debate further, more, or less,
He should the bearers put to sudden death,
Not shriving ‡ time allow'd.

Hor. How was this seal'd?

Ham. Why, even in that was heaven ordinate;

I had my father's signet in my purse,
Which was the model § of that Danish seal:
Folded the writ up in form of the other;
Subscrib'd it; gave't the impression; plac'd it safely,

The changeling never known: Now, the next day
Was our sea-fight; and what to this was sequent ¶

Thou know'st already.

Hor. So Guildenstern and Rosencrantz go to't.

Ham. Why, man, they did make love to this employment;

They are not near my conscience; their defeat
Does by their own insinuation grow:
'Tis dangerous, when the baser nature comes
Between the pass and fell incensed points
Of mighty opposites.

Hor. Why, what a king is this!

Ham. Does it not, think thee, stand me now upon?

He that hath kill'd my king and whor'd my mother,
Popp'd in between the election and my hopes;
Thrown out his angle for my proper life,
And with such cozenage; is't not perfect conscience,

To quit  him with this arm? and is't not to be damn'd,

To let this canker of our nature come
In further evil?

Hor. It must be shortly known to him from England,

What is the issue of the business there.

Ham. It will be short; the interim is mine; and a man's life no more than to say, one.

But I am very sorry, good Horatio,
That to Laertes I forgot myself;

For, by the image of my cause, I see

The portraiture of his: I'll count †† his favours:
But, sure, the bravery of his grief did put me
Into a towering passion.

Hor. Peace; who comes here?

Enter Osr.

Osr. Your lordship is right welcome back to Denmark.

Ham. I humbly thank you, Sir.—Dost know this waterfly †††

Hor. No, my good lord.

Ham. Thy state is the more gracious; for 'tis wiser to know him: He hath much land, and fertile: let a beast be lord of beasts, and his crib shall stand at the king's mess: 'Tis a chough, §§ but, as I say, spacious in the possession of dirt.

* Before. † Statesmen. ‡ A note of connection. § Copy. ¶ Following. †† For count some Editors read count. ††† Water-flyes are gnats. ¶¶ A bird like a jackdaw.

Osr. Sweet lord, if your lordship were at leisure, I should impart a thing to you from his majesty.

Ham. I will receive it, Sir, with all diligence of spirit: Your bonnet to its right use; 'tis for the head.

Osr. I thank your lordship, 'tis very hot.

Ham. No, believe me, 'tis very cold; the wind is northerly.

Osr. It is indifferent cold, my lord, indeed.

Ham. But yet, methinks, it is very sultry and hot; or my complexion—

Osr. Exceedingly, my lord; it is very sultry,—as 'twere,—I cannot tell how—My lord, his majesty bade me signify to you, that he has laid a great wager on your head: Sir, this is the matter,—

Ham. I beseech you, remember—

[HAMLET moves him to put on his Hat.]

Osr. Nay, good my lord; for my ease, in good faith. * Sir, here is newly come to court, Laertes: believe me, an absolute gentleman, full of most excellent differences, † of very soft society, and great showing; indeed, to speak feelingly of him, he is the card ‡ or calendar of gentry, for you shall find in him the continent § of what part a gentleman would see.

Ham. Sir, this disfigurement suffers no perdution in you;—though, I know, to divide him inventorially, would dizzy the arithmetic of memory; and yet but raw neither, in respect of his quick sail. But, in the verity of extolment, I take him to be a soul of great article; and his infusion of such dearth and rareness, as, to make true diction of him, his semblable is his mirror; and, who else would trace him, his umbrage, nothing more. ||

Osr. Your lordship speaks most infallibly of him.

Ham. The concernancy, Sir? why do we wrap the gentleman in our more rawer breath?

Osr. Sir?

Ham. Is't not possible to understand in another tongue? You will do't, Sir, really.

Ham. What imports the nomination ¶ of this gentleman?

Osr. Of Laertes?

Ham. His purse is empty already; all his golden words are spent.

Ham. Of him, Sir.

Osr. I know, you are not ignorant—

Ham. I would, you did, Sir; yet, in faith, if you did, it would not much approve  me;—Well, Sir.

Osr. You are not ignorant of what excellence Laertes is—

Ham. I dare not confess that, lest I should compare with him in excellence; but, to know a man well, were to know himself.

Osr. I mean, Sir, for his weapon; but in the imputation laid on him by them, in his meed †† he's unfellowed.

Ham. What's his weapon?

Osr. Rapier and dagger.

Ham. That's two of his weapons; but, well.

Osr. The king, Sir, hath wagered with him six Barbary horses; against the which he has impawned, †† as I take it, six French rapiers and poniards, with their assigns, as girdle, hangings, §§ and so: Three of the carriages, in faith, are very dear to fancy, very responsive to the hills, most delicate carriages, and of very liberal conceit.

Ham. What call you the carriages?

Hor. I knew, you must be edified by the maigent, ||| ere you had done.

Osr. The carriages, Sir, are the hangings.

* The affected phrase of the time.

† Distinguishing excellencies. ‡ Compass or chart.

Ham. The phrase would be more german * to the matter, if we could carry a cannon by our sides; I would, it might be haugers till then. But, on: Six Barbary horses against six French swords, their assignns, and three liberal concerted carriages; that's the French bet against the Danish: Why is this impawned, as you call it?

Osr. The king, Sir, hath laid, that in a dozen passes between yourself and him, he shall not exceed you three hits; he hath laid, on twelve for nine; and it would come to immediate trial, if your lordship would vouchsafe the answer.

Ham. How, if I answer, no?

Osr. I mean, my lord, the opposition of your person in trial.

Ham. Sir, I will walk here in the hall: If it please his majesty, it is the breathing time of day with me: let the foils be brought, the gentleman willing, and the king hold his purpose, I will win for him, if I can; if not, I will gain nothing but my shame, and the odd hits.

Osr. Shall I deliver you so?

Ham. To this effect, Sir; after what flourish your nature will.

Osr. I commend my duty to your lordship.

[Exit.]

Ham. Yours, yours.—He does well to commend it himself; there are no tongues else for's turn.

Hor. This lapwing † runs away with the shell on his head.

Ham. He did comply ‡ with his dug, before he sucked it. Thus has he (and many more of the same breed, that, I know, the drossy † age dotes on,) only got the tune of the time, and outward habit of encounter; a kind of yesty || collection, which carries them through and through the most fond ¶ and winnowed opinions; and do but blow them to their trial, the bubbles are out.

Enter a Lord.

Lord. My lord, his majesty commended him to you by young Osric, who brings back to him, that you attend him in the hall: He sends to know, if your pleasure hold to play with Laertes, or that you will take longer time.

Ham. I am constant to my purposes, they follow the king's pleasure: if his fitness speaks, mine is ready; now, or whensoever, provided I be so able as now.

Lord. The king, and queen, and all are coming down.

Ham. In happy time.

Lord. The queen desires you to use some gentle entertainment to Laertes, before you fall to play.

Ham. She well instructs me. [Exit Lord.]

Hor. You will lose this wager, my lord.

Ham. I do not think so; since he went into France, I have been in continual practice; I shall win at the odds. But thou wouldst not think, how ill all's here about my heart: but it is no matter.

Hor. Nay, good my lord,—

Ham. It is but foolery; but it is such a kind of gall-giving,  as would, perhaps, trouble a woman.

Hor. If your mind dislike any thing, obey it: I will forestal †† their repair hither, and say, you are not fit.

Ham. Not a whit, we defy augury; there is a special providence in the fall of a sparrow. If it be now, 'tis not to come; if it be not to come, it will be now; if it be not now; yet it will come: the readiness is all: Since no man, of aught he leaves, knows what is't to leave betimes? Let be.

Enter KING, QUEEN, LAERTES, LORDS, OSRIC, and Attendants, with Foils, &c.

King. Come, Hamlet, come, and take this hand from me.

[The King puts the Hand of LAERTES into that of HAMLET.]

Ham. Give me your pardon, Sir: I have done you wrong;

But pardon it, as you are a gentleman.

This presence * knows, and you must needs have heard,

How I am punish'd with a sore distraction.

What I have done,

That might your nature, honour, and exception,

Roughly awake, I here proclaim was madness.

Was't Hamlet wrong'd Laertes? Never, Hamlet:

If Hamlet from himself be ta'en away, And, when he is not himself, does wrong Laertes,

Then Hamlet does it not, Hamlet denies it.

Who does it then? His madness? If't be so,

Hamlet is of the faction that is wrong'd,

His madness is poor Hamlet's enemy.

Sir, in this audience,

Let my disclaiming from a purpos'd evil

Free me so far in your most generous thoughts,

That I have shot my arrow o'er the house,

And hurt my brother.

Laer. I am satisfied in nature,

Whose motive, in this case, should stir me most

To my revenge: but in my terms of honour,

I stand aloof, and will no reconciliation,

Till by some elder masters, of known honour,

I have a voice and precedent of peace,

To keep my name ungor'd: † But till that time

I do receive your offer'd love like love,

And will not wrong it.

Ham. I embrace it freely;

And will this brother's wager frankly play.—

Give us the foils; come on.

Laer. Come, one for me.

Ham. I'll be your foil, Laertes; in mine ignorance

Your skill shall, like a star i'th' darkest night,

Stick fiery off, indeed.

Laer. You mock me, Sir.

Ham. No, by this hand.

King. Give them the foils, young Osric.—
Cousin Hamlet,

You know the wager?

Ham. Very well, my lord;

Your grace hath laid the odds o'th' weaker side.

King. I do not fear it: I have seen you both:—

But since he's better'd, we have therefore odds.

Laer. This is too heavy, let me see another.

Ham. This likes me well: These foils have all a length? [They prepare to play.]

Osr. Ay, my good lord.

King. Set me the stoups ‡ of wine upon that table:—

If Hamlet give the first or second hit,

Or quit in answer of the third exchange,

Let all the battlements their ordnance fire;

The king shall drink to Hamlet's better breath;

And in the cup an union † shall be throw,

Richer than that which four successive kings

In Denmark's crown have worn; Give me the cups;

And let the kettle to the trumpet speak,

The trumpet to the cannoneer without,

The cannons to the heavens, the heavens to earth,

Now the King drinks to Hamlet.—Come, begin;—

And you, the judges, bear a wary eye.

Ham. Come on, Sir.

Laer. Come, my lord.

[They play.]

Ham. One.

‡ Large jugs. § A precious pearl.

Laer. No.

Ham. Judgment.

Osr. A hit, a very palpable hit.

Laer. Well,—again.

King. Stay, give me drink; Hamlet, this pearl is thine;

Here's to thy health.—Give him the cup.

[Trumpets sound; and Cannon shot off within.]

Ham. I'll play this bout first, set it by awhile.

Come.—Another hit; What say you?

[They play.]

Laer. A touch, a touch, I do confess.

King. Our son shall win.

Queen. He's fat, and scant o'breath.—

Here, Hamlet, take my napkin,* rub thy brows: The queen carouses † to thy fortune, Hamlet.

Ham. Good madam,—

King. Gertrude, do not drink.

Queen. I will, my lord; I pray you, pardon me.

King. It is the poison'd cup; it is too late.

[Aside.]

Ham. I dare not drink yet, madam; by and by.

Queen. Come, let me wipe thy face.

Laer. My lord, I'll hit him now.

King. I do not think it.

Laer. And yet it is almost against my conscience.

[Aside.]

Ham. Come, for the third, Laertes: You do but dally;

I pray you, pass with your best violence;

I am afeard you make a wanton ‡ of me.

Laer. Say you so? come on.

[They play.]

Osr. Nothing neither way.

Laer. Have at you now.

[LAERTES wounds HAMLET; then, in scuffling, they change Rapiers, and HAMLET wounds LAERTES.]

King. Part them, they are incens'd.

Ham. Nay, come again. [THE QUEEN falls.]

Osr. Look to the queen there, ho!

Hor. They bleed on both sides:—How is it, my lord?

Osr. How is't, Laertes?

Laer. Why, as a woodcock to my own springe, Osrice;

I am justly kill'd with mine own treachery.

Ham. How does the queen?

King. She swoons to see them bleed.

Queen. No, no, the drink, the drink,—O my dear Hamlet!

The drink, the drink: I am poison'd! [Dies.]

Ham. O villainy!—How? let the door be lock'd:

Treachery! seek it out.

[LAERTES falls.]

Laer. It is here, Hamlet: Hamlet, thou art slain;

No medicine in the world can do thee good,

In thee there is not half an hour of life;

The treacherous instrument is in thy hand,

Unbated † and envenom'd: the foul practice

Hath turn'd itself on me; lo, here I lie,

Never to rise again: Thy mother's poison'd;

I can no more; the king, the king's to blame.

Ham. The point

Envenom'd too!—Then, venom, to thy work.

[Stabs the KING.]

Osr. & Lords. Treason! treason!

King. O yet defend me, friends, I am but hurt.

Ham. Here, thou incestuous, murd'rous,

Drunk off this potion:—Is thy union here?

Follow my mother. [KING dies.]

Laer. He is justly serv'd;

It is a poison temper'd ‡ by himself.—

Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet:

Mine and my father's death come not upon thee;

Nor thine on me.

[Dies.]

Ham. Heaven make thee free of it! I follow thee.

I am dead, Horatio:—Wretched queen, adieu!

You that look pale and tremble at this chance,

That are but mutes or audience to this act,

Had I but time, (as this fell sergeant,* death,

Is strict in his arrest,) oh! I could tell you;

But let it be:—Horatio, I am dead;

Thou liv'st; report me and my cause aright

To the unsatisfied.

Hor. Never believe it;

I am more an antique Roman than a Dane,

Here's yet some liquor left.

Ham. As thou'rt a man,—

Give me the cup; let go; by heaven I'll have it.—

O God!—Horatio, what a wounded name,

Things standing thus unknown, shall live behind me †

If thou didst ever hold me in thy heart,

Absent ‡ from felicity awhile,

And in this harsh world draw thy breath in pain,

To tell my story.—

[March afar off, and Shot within.]

What warlike noise is this?

Osr. Young Fortinbras, with conquest come from Poland,

To the ambassadors of England gives

This warlike volley.

Ham. O I die, Horatio;

The potent poison quite o'er-crows † my spirit;

I cannot live to hear the news from England;

But I do prophesy the election lights

On Fortinbras; he has my dying voice;

So tell him, with the occurrents ‡ more or less,

Which have solicited,—The rest is silence.

[Dies.]

Hor. Now cracks a noble heart;—Good night, sweet prince;

And flights of angels sing thee to thy rest!—

Why does the drum come hither?

[March within.]

Enter FORTINBRAS, the ENGLISH AMBASSADORS, and others.

Fort. Where is this sight?

Hor. What is it, ye would see?

If aught of woe, or wonder, cease your search.

Fort. This quarry † cries on havoc! ‡—O proud death!

What feast is toward in thine eternal cell,

That thou so many princes, at a shot,

And our affairs from England come too late;

The ears are senseless, that should give us hearing,

To tell him, his commandment is fulfill'd,

That Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are dead:

Where should we have our thanks?

Hor. Not from his mouth,

Had it the ability of life to thank you;

He never gave commandment for their death.

But since, so jump †† upon this bloody question,

You from the Polack ‡ wars, and you from

England,

Are here arriv'd; give order that these bodies

High on a stage be placed to the view;

And let me speak, to the yet unknowing world,

How these things came about: So shall you hear

Of carnal, bloody, and unnatural acts;

Of accidental judgments, casual slaughters;

Of deaths put on by cunning, and forc'd cause;

And, in this upshot, purposes mistook

Fall'n on the inventors' heads: all this can I

Truly deliver.

Fort. Let us haste to hear it,

Bear Hamlet, like a soldier, to the stage ;
For he was likely, had he been put on,
To have prov'd most royally : and, for his passage,

Go, bid the soldiers shoot. [A dead march.

which, a Peal of Ordnance is shot off.*

In reply to an objection which was raised by an eminent critic, and has been repeated with considerable justice by all who have since written on the incidents of this play, viz. that "there appears no adequate cause for the feigned madness of Hamlet ; as he does nothing which he might not have done with the reputation of sanity ; playing the madman most when he treats Ophelia with so much rudeness, which seems to be useless and wanton cruelty,"—the following novel and satisfactory opinion, condensed from the remarks of a most intelligent and praise-worthy commentator, may be advantageously quoted :—Hamlet resolved to counterfeited madness that he might kill his uncle without being considered as a traitor and a murderer ; this he must have been, having no proof against his father's assassin, except what was said by the ghost to himself alone ; and of course it would have no weight with any other person. Wishing for additional evidence, he had recourse to the play, which confirming the story of the ghost, he would instantly have gratified his vengeance by killing his uncle, but for the extraordinary circumstance of finding him on his knees at prayer ; and shortly afterwards he actually supposed he had done it, when he stabbed Polonius behind the arras, and, finding his mistake, solemnly conjured his mother to retain the secret of his madness being feigned. His treatment of "the young, the beautiful, the harmless, and the pious Ophelia" may be explained in the same way ; for if he behaved in such a frantic manner to her, who was the object of his tenderest regard, it is a certain consequence that not a doubt could be entertained by others of the reality of his distraction ; and thus the delusion was complete.—Bowdler versus Johnson.

OTHELLO, THE MOOR OF VENICE.

LITERARY AND HISTORICAL NOTICE.

THE story upon which this beautiful and instructive tragedy is founded, was taken, according to Mr. Pope, from Cynthio's novels. It was probably written in the year 1611. Mustapha, Selymus's general, invaded Cyprus in May 1570, and conquered it in the following year. His fleet first sailed towards that island; but immediately changing its course for Rhodes, formed a junction with another squadron, and then returned to the attack of Cyprus: thus the actual historical periods of the performance were satisfactorily determined. In addition to the admirable lesson set forth in this impressive tragedy, so well calculated to produce an excellent effect upon the human mind, by portraying that baneful passion, which, when once indulged, is the inevitable destroyer of conjugal happiness; it may justly be considered as one of the noblest efforts of dramatic genius, that has appeared in any age, or in any language. "The fiery openness of Othello, (says Dr. Johnson) magnanimous, artless, and credulous; boundless in his confidence, ardent in his affection, inflexible in his resolution, and obdurate in his revenge—the soft simplicity of Desdemona, confident of merit, and conscious of innocence; her artless perseverance in her suit, and her slowness to suspect that she can be suspected—the cool malignity of Iago, silent in his resentment, subtle in his designs, and studious at once of his interest and his vengeance—are such proofs of Shakspeare's skill in human nature, as I suppose it is in vain to seek in any modern writer; whilst even the inferior characters would be very conspicuous in any other piece, not only for their justness, but their strength." In proportion to the enormity of such a crime as adultery, should be the caution with which a suspicion of it is permitted to be entertained; and our great dramatic moralist was no doubt desirous of enforcing this maxim, when he made it, as he has done, the subject of no less than four of his most finished productions.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Venice.—A Street.

Enter RODERIGO and IAGO.

Rod. Tush, never tell me, I take it much unkindly,
That thou, Iago,—who hast had my purse,
As if the strings were thine,—shouldst know of this.

Iago. 'Sblood, but you will not hear me:—
If ever I did dream of such a matter,
Abhor me.

Rod. Thou told'st me, thou didst hold him in thy hate.

Iago. Despise me, if I do not. Three great ones of the city,

In personal suit to make me his lieutenant,
Oft capp'd* to him;—and, by the faith of man,
I know my price, I am worth no worse a place:
But he, as loving his own pride and purposes,
Evades them, with a bombast circumstance,†
Horribly stuff'd with epithets of war;
And, in conclusion, nonsuits

My mediators; for, certes,* says he,
I have already chose my officer.
And what was he?
Forsooth, a great arithmetician,
One Michael Cassio, a Florentine,
A fellow almost damn'd in a fair wife; †
That never set a squadron in the field,
Nor the division of a battle knows
More than a sponser; unless the bookish theoric, ‡
Wherein the toged consuls § can propose
As masterly as he: mere prattle, without practice, ¶
Is all his soldiership. But he, Sir, had the election;—
And I,—of whom his eyes had seen the proof,
At Rhodes, at Cyprus, and on other grounds
Christian and heathen,—must be be-lee'd and calm'd
By debitor and creditor; this counter-caster, ||
He, in good time, must his lieutenant be,

† Circumlocution.

And I, (God bless the mark!) his Moorship's ancient.

Rod. By heaven, I rather would have been his hangman!

Iago. But there's no remedy; 'tis the curse of service;

Preferment goes by letter and affection,
Not by the old gradation, where each second Stood heir to the first. Now, Sir, be judge
yourself,

Whether I in any just term am affin'd
To love the Moor.

Rod. I would not follow him then.

Iago. O Sir, content you;

I follow him to serve my turn upon him:
We cannot all be masters, nor all masters
Cannot be truly follow'd. You shall mark
Many a duteous and knee-crooking knave,
That, dotting on his own obsequious bondage,
Wears out his time, much like his master's ass,
For nought but provender; and when he's old,

Whip me such honest knaves: Others there are,
Who, trimm'd in forms and visages of duty,
Keep yet their hearts attending on themselves;
And, throwing but shows of service on their lords,
Do well thrive by them; and when they have
lur'd their coats,

Do themselves homage: these fellows have some
soul;

And such a one do I profess myself.

For, Sir,

It is as sure as you are Roderigo,
Were I the Moor, I would not be Iago:
In following him, I follow but myself;
Heaven is my judge, not I for love and duty,
But seeming so, for my peculiar end;
For when my outward action doth demonstrate
The native act and figure of my heart,
In compliment extern, 'tis not long after
But I will wear my heart upon my sleeve
For daws to peck at: I am not what I am.

Rod. What a full fortune does the thick-lips
If he can carry't thus!

Iago. Call up her father,
Rouse him; make after him, poison his delight,
Proclaim him in the streets; incense her kin-
men,

And, though he in a fertile climate dwell,
Plague him with flies; though that his joy be joy,
Yet throw such changes of vexation on't,
As it may lose some colour.

Rod. Here is her father's house: I'll call aloud.

Iago. Do; with like timorous accent, and dire yell,

As when, by night and negligence, the fire
Is spied in populous cities.

Rod. What, ho! Brabantio! signior Braban-tio, ho!

Iago. Awake! what, ho! Brabantio! thieves!
thieves! thieves!

Look to your house, your daughter, and your
Thieves! thieves!

BRABANTIO, above, at a Window.

Bra. What is the reason of this terrible summons? What is the matter there?

Rod. Signior, is all your family within?

Iago. Are your doors lock'd?

Bra. Why? wherefore ask you this?

Iago. 'Zounds, Sir, you are robb'd; for shame,
put on your gown;

Your heart is burst, you have lost half your

Is tupping your white ewe. Arise, arise;
Awake the snorting citizens with the bell,
Or else the devil will make a grandsire of you:
Arise, I say.

Bra. What, have you lost your wits?

Rod. Most reverend signior, do you know my voice?

Bra. Not I; What are you?

Rod. My name is—Roderigo.

Bra. The worse welcome: doors;
I have charg'd thee, not to haunt about my
In honest plainness thou hast heard me say
My daughter is not for thee; and now, in madness,

Being full of supper and distempering draughts,
Upon malicious bravery dost thou come
To start my quiet.

Rod. Sir, Sir, Sir, Sir,—

Bra. But thou must needs be sure,
My spirit and my place have in them power
To make this bitter to thee.

Rod. Patience, good Sir.

Bra. What tell'st thou me of robbing? this is Venice;

My house is not a grange.*

Rod. Most grave Brabantio,
In simple and pure soul I come to you.

Iago. 'Zounds, Sir, you are one of those that will not serve God, if the devil bid you. Because we come to do you service, you think we are ruffians: You'll have your daughter covered with a Barbary house; you'll have your nephews neigh to you: you'll have counsels for cousins, and gemmets for Germans.

Bra. What profane wretch art thou?

Iago. I am one, Sir, that comes to tell you your daughter and the Moor are now making the beast with two backs.

Bra. Thou art a villain.

Iago. You are—a senator.

Bra. This thou shalt answer: I know thee
Roderigo.

Rod. Sir, I will answer any thing. But I beseech you,

If't be your pleasure, and most wise consent,
(As partly, I find, it is,) that your fair daughter,
At this odd-even and dull watch o'the night,
Transported—with no worse nor better guard,
But with a knave of common lute, a gondolier,
To the gross clasps of a lascivious Moor,—
If this be known to you, and your allowance,
We then have done you bold and saucy wrongs:
But if you know not this, my manners tell me,
We have your wrong rebuke. Do not believe
That from the sense of all civility,
If thus would play and trifle with your rever-
Your daughter,—if you have not given her
leave,—

I say again, hath made a gross revolt;
Tying her duty, beauty, wit, and fortunes,
In an extravagant and wheeling stranger, [self;
Of here and every where: Straight satisfy you!
If she be in her chamber, or your house,
Let loose on me the justice of the state
For thus deluding you.

Bra. Strike on the tinder, ho!

Give me a taper;—call up all my people:—

This accident is not unlike my dream,
Belief of it oppresses me already:—
Light, I say! light!

[Exit from above.]

Iago. Farewell; for I must leave you:
It seems not meet, nor wholesome to my place,
To be produc'd (as, if I stay, I shall,)
Against the Moor: For, I do know, the state,
However this may gall him with some check,
Cannot with safety cast him; for he's embark'd
With such loud reason to the Cyprus wars, (Which even now stand in act,) that, for their souls,

Another of his fathom they have not,
To lead their business; in which regard,
Though I do hate him as I do hell pains,
Yet, for necessity of present life,
I must show out a flag and sign of love,
Which is indeed but sign. That you shall surely find him,

Lead to the Sagittary the rais'd search;
And there will I be with him. So, farewell.

[Exit.]

* A lone farm house. † Nephews, here means grandsons. ‡ A Spanish horse. § Wandring. || Dismiss.

Enter below, BRABANTIO, and Servants with Torches.

Bra. It is too true an evil: gone she is:
And what's to come of my despoiled time,
Is nought but bitterness.—Now, Roderigo,
Where didst thou see her?—O unhappy girl!—
With the Moor, say'st thou?—Who would be a
father!—

How didst thou know 'twas she? O thou deceiv'st me

Past thought!—What said she to you?—Get more tapers; [you?]

Raise all my kindred.—Are they married think
Rod. Truly, I think, they are.

Bra. O heaven!—How got she out!—O treason of the blood!—

Fathers, from hence trust not your daughters' minds

By what you see them act.—Are there not charms
By which the property of youth and maidhood
May be abus'd? Have you not read, Roderigo,
Of some such thing?

Rod. Yes, Sir; I have indeed.

Bra. Call up my brother.—O that you had had her!—

Some one way, some another.—Do you know
Where we may apprehend her and the Moor?

Rod. I think, I can discover him, if you please
To get good guard, and go along with me.

Bra. Pray you, lead on. At every house I'll
call;

I may command at most:—Get weapons, ho!
And raise some special officers of night.—
On, good Roderigo;—I'll deserve your pains.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same.—Another Street.

Enter OTHELLO, IAGO, and Attendants.

Iago. Though in the trade of war I have slain
men,

Yet do I hold it very stuff o'the conscience,
To do no contriv'd murder; I lack iniquity
Sometimes, to me do service: Nine or ten times
I had thought to have yer'd him here under the ribs.

Oth. 'Tis better as it is.

Iago. Nay, but be prated,
And spoke such scurvy and provoking terms
Against your honour,
That, with the little godliness I have,
I did full hard forbear him. But, I pray, Sir,
Are you fast married? for be sure of this,—
That the magnificent * is much beloved;
And hath, in his effect, a voice potential
As double as the duke's; he will divorce you;
Or put upon you what restraint and grievance
The law (with all his might, to enforce it on,)
Will give him cable.

Oth. Let him do his spite:

My services, which I have done the signiory, Shall out-tongue his complaints. 'Tis yet to know, [our,

(Which, when I know that boasting is an honi shall promulgate.) I fetch my life and being
From men of royal siege, † and my demerits ‡
May speak, unbonneted, to as proud a fortune
As this that I have reach'd: For know, Iago,
But that I love the gentle Desdemona,
I would not my unhouse'd free condition
Put into circumspection and confine

For the sea's worth. But, look! what lights come yonder?

Enter CASSIO, at a distance, and certain Officers with Torches.

Iago. These are the raised father and his
You were best to go in. [friends:]

Oth. Not I: I must be found;
My parts, my title, and my perfect soul,
Shall manifest me rightly. Is it they?

* The title of a Senator. † Men who have sat upon royal thrones. ‡ Demerits has the same meaning in Shakespeare as merits.

Iago. By Janus, I think no.

Oth. The servants of the duke, and my lieutenant.

The goodness of the night upon you, friends!
What is the news?

Cas. The duke does greet you, general;
And he requires your haste, post-haste appearance,
Even on the instant.

Oth. What is the matter, think you?

Cas. Something from Cyprus, as I may divine;
It is a business of some heat: The galleys
Have sent a dozen sequent * messengers
This very night at one another's heels;
And many of the consuls, rais'd, and met,
Are at the duke's already: You have been holli-call'd for;

When, being not at your lodging to be found,
The senate hath sent about three several quests,
To search you out.

Oth. 'Tis well I am found by you.

I will bestow a word here in the house.
And go with you. [Exit.]

Cas. And what makes me here?

Iago. Faith, he to-night hath boarded a land carack, †

If it prove lawful prize, he's made for ever.

Cas. I do not understand.

Iago. He's married.

Cas. To who?

Re-enter OTHELLO.

Iago. Marry, to—Come, captain, will you go?
Oth. Have with you.

Cas. Here comes another troop to seek for you.
Enter BRABANTIO, RODERIGO, and Officers of Night with Torches and Weapons.

Iago. It is Brabantio:—general, be advised;
He comes to bad intent.

Oth. Holla! stand there!

Rod. Signior, it is the Moor.

Bra. Down with him, thief!

[They draw on both sides.]

Iago. You, Roderigo! come, Sir, I am for you, Oth. Keep up your bright swords, for the dew will rust them.— [years,

Good signior, you shall more command with
Than with your weapons.

Bra. O thou foul thief, where hast thou stow'd
my daughter?

Damn'd as thou art, thou hast enchanted her:
For I'll refer me to all things of sense,
If she in chains of magic were not bound,
Whether a maid so tender, fair and happy,
So opposite to marriage, that she shunn'd
The wealthy cur'd darlings of our nation,
Would ever have, to incur a general mock,
Run from her guardage to the sooty bosom
Of such a thing as thou: to fear not to delight.
Judge me the world, if 'tis not gross in sense,
That thou hast practis'd on her with foul charms;
Abus'd her delicate youth with drugs, or minerals,

That waken motion: I'll have it disputed on;
'Tis probable, and palpable to thinking.

I therefore apprehend and do attach thee,
For an abuser of the world, a practiser
Of arts inhibited and out of warrant—
Lay hold upon him; if he do resist,
Subdue him at his peril.

Oth. Hold your hands,
Both you of my inclining, and the rest:
Were it my cue to fight, I should have known it Without a prompter.—Where will you that I go
To answer this your charge?

Bra. To prison: till fit time
Of law, and course of direct session,
Call thee to answer.

Oth. What if I do obey?
How may the duke be therewith satisfied;
Whose messengers are here about my side,
Upon some present business of the state,
To bring me to him?

* Following.

† To terrify.

Scene III. OTHELLO, THE MOOR OF VENICE.

207

Off. 'Tis true, most worthy signior,
The duke's in council; and your noble self,
I am sure, is sent for.

Bra. How! the duke in council!
In this time of the night!—Bring him away:
Mine's not an idle cause: the duke himself,
Or any of my brothers of the state,
Cannot but feel this wrong as 'twere their own:
For if such actions may have passage free,
Bond-slaves and pagans * shall our statesmen be.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same.—A Council Chamber.
The DUKE and SENATORS, sitting at a Table;
Officers attending.

Duke. There is no composition † in these
That gives them credit. [news,

1 Sen. Indeed, they are disproportion'd;
My letters say, a hundred and seven galleys.

Duke. And mine, a hundred and forty.

2 Sen. And mine two hundred:

But though they jump not on a just account,
(As in these cases, where the aim reports,
'Tis oft with difference,) yet do they all confirm
A Turkish fleet, and bearing up to Cyprus.

Duke. Nay, it is possible enough to judgment;

I do not so secure me in the error,
But the main article I do approve,
In fearful sense.

Sailor. [Within.] What ho! what ho! what ho!

Enter an OFFICER, with a SAILOR.

Off. A messenger from the galleys.

Duke. Now! the business?

Sailor. The Turkish preparation makes for Rhodes;

So was I bid report here to the state,
By signior Angelo.

Duke. How say you by this change?

1 Sen. This cannot be,
By no assay of reason; 'tis pageant,
To keep us in false gaze: When we consider
The importunity of Cyprus to the Turk;
And let ourselves again but understand,
That, as it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question † bear it,
For that it stands not in such warlike brace, ‡
But altogether lacks the abilities
That Rhodes is dress'd in:—if we make thought of this,

We must not think the Turk is so unskilful,
To leave that latest which concerns him first;
Neglecting an attempt of ease and gain,
To wake; and wage a danger profitless.

Duke. Nay, in all confidence, he's not for Rhodes.

Off. Here is more news.

Enter a MESSENGER.

Mess. The Ottomites, reverend and gracious, Steering with due course toward the isle of Rhodes,

Have there enjoined them with an after fleet.

1 Sen. Ay, so I thought:—How many as you guess?

Mess. Of thirty sail: and now do they restem their backward course, bearing with frank appearance [tano,
their purposes toward Cyprus.—Signior Mon-
sur trusty and most valiant servitor,
In his free duty recommends you thus,
Prays you to believe him.

Ukr. 'Tis certain then for Cyprus—

As Lucchesé, is he not in town?

Sen. He's now in Florence.

Ke. Write from us; wish him post-post-haste: despatch.

n. Here comes Brabantio, with the valiant Moor.

Our offices of state will be filled by the pa-bond-slaves of Africa. † Concoquancy.
position. ‡ State of defence.

Enter BRABANTIO, OTHELLO, IAGO, RODERIGO, and Officers.

Duke. Valiant Othello, we must straight employ you
Against the general enemy Ottoman.
I did not see you; welcome, gentle Signior;

[To BRABANTIO]
We lack'd your counsel and your help to-night.

Bra. So did I your's: Good your grace, pardon
me;

Neither my place, nor ought I heard of business
Hath rais'd me from my bed; nor doth the general care

Take hold on me; for my particular grief
Is of so flood-gate and o'erbearing nature,
That it engulfs and swallows other sorrows,
And it is still itself.

Duke. Why, what's the matter?

Bra. My daughter! O my daughter!

Sen. Dead?

Bra. Ay, to me;

She is abus'd, stolen from me, and corrupted
By spells and medicines bought of mountebanks;
For nature so preposterously to err,
Being not deficient, blind, or lame of sense,
Saus * witchcraft could—

Duke. Whoe'er he be, that in this foul proceeding,

Hath thus beguil'd your daughter of herself,
And you of her, the bloody book of law
You shall yourself read in the bitter letter,
After your own sense; yea, though our proper
son

Stood in your action. †

Bra. Humbly I thank your grace.

Here is the man, this Moor; whom now it seems,

Your special mandate, for the state affairs,
Hath hither brought.

Duke & Sen. We are very sorry for it.

Duke. What, in your own part, can you say to this? [To OTHELLO.]

Bra. Nothing but this is so.

Oth. Most potent, grave, and reverend signors,

My very noble and approv'd good masters,
That I have ta'en away this old man's daughter,
It is most true; true, I have married her;
The very head and front of my offending Hath thus extent, no more. Rude am I in my speech,

And little bless'd with the set phrase of peace;
For since these arms of mine had seven years' †
pith, [us'd

Till now some nine moons wasted, they have
Their dearest action † in the tented field;
And little of this great world can I speak,
More than pertains to feats of broil and battle;
And therefore little shall I grace my cause,
In speaking for myself: Yet, by your gracious patience,

I will a round unvarnish'd tale deliver
Of my whole course of love; what drugs, what charms,

What conjuration, and what mighty magic,
(For such proceeding I am charg'd withal),
I won his daughter with.

Bra. A maiden never bold;
Of spirit so still and quiet, that her motion *
Blush'd at herself; And she,—in spite of nature,

Of years, of country, credit, every thing.—
To fall in love with what she fear'd to look on?
It is a judgment maim'd and most imperfect, *
That will confess—perfection so could err
Against all rules of nature; and must be driven
To find out practices of cunning hell,
Why this should be. I therefore vouch again,
That with some mixtures powerful o'er the †
blood,

Or with some dram conjur'd to this effect,
He wrought upon her.

Duke. To vouch this, is no proof;

* Without. † Accusation.

Without more certain and more overt-test,*
Than these thin habits, and poor likelihoods
Of modern seeming,† do prefer against him.

1. Sen. But, Othello, speak!—

Did you by indirect and forced courses
Subdue and poison this young maid's affections?

Or came it by request, and such fair question
As soul to soul affordeth?

Oth. I do beseech you,
Send for the lady to the Sagittary,‡
And let her speak of me before her father:
If you do find me foul in her report,
The trust, the office, I do hold of you,
Not only take away, but let your sentence
Even fall upon my life.

Duke. Fetch Desdemona hither.

Oth. Ancient, conduct them; you best know the place.—

[Exeunt IAGO and Attendants.]

And, till she come, as truly as to heaven
I do confess the vices of my blood,
So justly to your grave ears I'll present
How I did thrive in this fair lady's love,
And she in mine.

Duke. Say it, Othello.

Oth. Her father lov'd me; oft invited me;
Still question'd me the story of my life,
From year to year: the battles, sieges, fortunes,
That I have pass'd.

I ran it through, even from my boyish days,
To the very moment that he bade me tell it.
Wherein I spoke of most disastrous chances,
Of moving accidents, by flood, and field;
Of hair-breadth scapes I'th' imminent deadly
Of being taken by the insolent foe, [breach;
And sold to slavery; of my redemption thence,
And portance § in my travel's history:
Wherein of antres || vast, and deserts idle,
Rough quarries, rocks, and hills whose heads
touch heaven,

It was my hint to speak, such was the process
And of the Cannibals that each other eat,
The Anthropophagi, and men whose heads
Do grow beneath their shoulders. ¶ These things to hear,

Would Desdemona seriously incline: [thence;
But still the house affairs would draw her
Which ever as she could with haste despatch,
She'd come again, and with a greedy ear
Devour up my discourse: Which I observing,
Took once a pliant hour, and found good
means

To draw from her a prayer of earnest heart,
That I would all my pilgrimage dilate,
Whereof by parcels she had something heard,
But not intently:  I did consent;
And often did beguile her of her tears,
When I did speak of some distressful stroke,
That my youth suffer'd. My story being done,
She gave me for my pains a world of sighs;
She swore,—In faith, 'twas strange, 'twas passing strange;

'Twas pitiful, 'twas wondrous pitiful;
She wish'd she had not heard it; yet she wish'd

That heaven had made her such a man; she thank'd me;

And bade me if I had a friend that lov'd her,
I should but teach him how to tell my story,
And that would woo her. Upon this hint, I
She lov'd me for the dangers I had pass'd, [spoke:
And I lov'd her that she did pity them.
This only is the witchcraft I have us'd;
Here comes the lady, let her witness it.

Enter DESDEMONA, IAGO, and Attendants.

Duke. I think this tale would win my daughter too.—

Good Brabantio,
Take up this mangled matter at the best:
Men do their broken weapons rather use,
Than their bare hands.

Bra. I pray you, hear her speak;
If she confess that she was half the wooer,
Destruction on my head, if my bad blame
Light on the man!—Come hither, gentle mistress;

Do you perceive in all this noble company,
Where most you owe obedience?

Des. My noble father,
I do perceive here a divided duty:
To you, I am bound for life and education;
My life and education both do learn me
How to respect you: you are the lord of duty,
I am hitherto your daughter: But here's my husband;

And so much duty as my mother show'd
To you, preferring you before her father,
So much I challenge that I may profess
Due to the Moor my lord.

Bra. God be with you!—I have done:—
Please it your grace, on to the state affairs;
I had rather to adopt a child, than get it.—
Come hither, Moor:

I here do give thee that with all my heart,
Which, but thou hast already, with all my heart [Jewel,

I would keep from thee.—For your sake,
I am glad at soul I have no other child;
For thy escape would teach me tyranny,
To hang clogs on them.—I have done, my lord.

Duke. Let me speak like yourself; * and lay a sentence, [lovers

Which as a grise,† or step, may help these into your favours.
When remedies are past, the griefs are ended,
By seeing the worst, which late on hopes dependent.

To mourn a mischief that is past and gone,
Is the next way to draw new mischief on.
What cannot be preserv'd when fortune takes,
Patience her injury a mockery makes.
The robb'd, that smiles, steals something from the thief;

He robs himself, that spends a bootless grief.
Bra. So let the Turk of Cyprus us beguile;
We lose it not, so long as we can smile.
He bears the sentence well, that nothing bears
But the free comfort which from thence he hears:

But he bears both the sentence and the sorrow,
That, to pay grief, must of poor patience borrow.

These sentences, to sugar, or to gall,
Being strong on both sides, are equivocal:
But words are words; I never yet did hear,
That the bruised heart was pleased through the ear. ‡

I humbly beseech you, proceed to the affairs of state.

Duke. The Turk with a most mighty preparation, makes for Cyprus:—O, the fortification of the place is best known to you: And though we have there subsidies of most allowed sufficiency, yet opinion, a sovereign mistress of effects, throws a more sater voice on you: you must therefore be content to slubber § the gloss of your new fortunes with this more stubbish and boisterous expedition.

Oth. The tyrant custom, most grave senators,
Hath made the flinty and steel couch of war
My thrice-driven bed of down: I do agnize ||
A natural and prompt alacrity,
I find in hardness; and do undertake
These present wars against the Ottomites.
Most humbly therefore bending to your state,
I crave fit disposition for my wife,
Due reference of place, and exhibition.

With such accommodation and besort,
As levels with her breeding.

Duke. If you please,
Be't at her father's.

Bra. I'll not have it so.

Oth. Nor I.

Des. Nor I; I would not there reside,
To put my father in impatient thoughts,
By being in his eye. Most gracious duke,
To my unfolding lend a gracious ear;
And let me find a charter in your voice,
To assist my simpleness.

Duke. What would you, Desdemona?

Des. That I did love the Moor to live with him,

My downright violence and storm of fortunes
May trumpet to the world; my heart's subdued

Even to the very quality * of my lord:

I saw Othello's visage in his mind;
And to his honours, and his valiant parts,
Did I my soul and fortunes consecrate.
So that, dear lords, if I be left behind,
A moth of peace, and he go to the war,
The rights for which I love him, are bereft me,
And I a heavy interim shall support
By his dear absence: Let me go with him.

Oth. Your voices, lords:—'beseech you, let her will

Have a free way.

Vouch with me, heaven; I therefore beg it not
To please the palate of my appetite;
Nor to comply with heat, the young affects,
In my distinct and proper satisfaction;
But to be free and bounteous to her mind:
And heaven defend your good souls, that you think

I will your serious and great business scant,
For 'tis she is with me: No, when light-wing'd toys

Of feather'd Cupid seel [§] with wanton dulness
My speculative and active instruments,
That my dispositions corrupt and taint my business,
Let housewives make a skillet [¶] of my helm, [¶]
And all indign and base adversities
Make head against my estimation!

Duke. Be it as you shall privately determine,
Either for her stay or going: the affair cries,
haste,

And speed must answer it: you must hence
to-night.

Des. To-night, my lord?

Duke. This night.

Oth. With all my heart.

Duke. At nine i'the morning here we'll meet
again.

Othello, leave some officer behind,
And he shall our commission bring to you;
With such things else of quality and respect,
As doth import you.

Oth. Please your grace, my ancient;

A man he is of honesty and trust;
To his conveyance I assign my wife, ^{[think}
With what else needful your good grace [§] shall
To be sent after me.

Duke. Let it be so.—

Good night to every one.—And, noble Signior,
^[TO BRABANTIO.]

If virtue no delighted beauty lack,

Your son-in-law is far more fair than black.

1 Sen. Adieu, brave Moor! use Desdemona
well.

Bra. Look to her, Moor; have a quick eye to
see;

She has deceiv'd her father, and may thee.

^[Exit DUKES, SENATORS, OFFICERS, &c.]

Oth. My life upon her faith.—Honest Iago,

My Desdemona must I leave to thee;

I pr'ythee, let thy wife attend on her;

And bring them after in the best advantage.—

Come, Desdemona; I have but an hour

Of love, of worldly matters, and direction,
To spend with thee, we must obey the time.

^[Exit Othello and Desdemona]

Rod. Iago.

Iago. What say'st thou, noble heart?

Rod. What will I do, thinkst thou?

Iago. Why, go to bed, and sleep.

Rod. I will incontinently * drown myself.

Iago. Well, if thou dost, I shall never love thee after it. Why, thou silly gentleman!

Rod. It is silliness to live, when to live is a torment: and then have we a prescription to die, when death is our physician.

Iago. O villainous! I have looked upon the world for four times seven years; and since I could distinguish between a benefit and an injury, I never found a man that knew how to love himself. Ere I would say, I would drown myself for the love of a Guinea-bag, [†] I would change my humanity with a baboon.

Rod. What should I do? I confess it is my shame to be so fond; but it is not in virtue to amend it.

Iago. Virtue? a fig! 'tis in ourselves, that we are thus, or thus. Our bodies are our gardens; to the which our wills are gardeners: so that if we will plant nettles, or sow lettuce; set hyssop, and weed up thyme: supply it with any gender of herbs, or distract it with many;
either to have it steril with idleness, or manured with industry; why, the power and cor-rigible authority of this lies in our wills. If the balance of our lives had not one scale of reason to poise another of sensuality, the blood and baseness of our natures would conduct us to most preposterous conclusions: But we have reason to cool our raging motions, our carnal stings, our unbitted [‡] lusts: wherof I take this,
that you call—love, to be a sect, [§] or a scion.

Rod. It cannot be.

Iago. It is merely a lust of the blood, and a permission of the will. Come, be a man;
Drown thyself? drown cats and blind puppies.
I have profess'd me thy friend, and I could me knit to thy deserving with cables of per-durable toughness; I could never better stead thee than now. Put money in thy purse; follow these wars; I'll eat thy favour with an usurped beard; ^{||} I say, put money in thy purse. It cannot be, that Desdemona should long continue her love to the Moor,—put money in thy purse;—nor be his to her: it was a violent commencement, and thou shalt see an answerable sequestration;—put but money in thy purse.—These Moors are changeable in their wills;—fill thy purse with money: the food that to him now is as luscious as locusts, shall be to him shortly as bitter as coloquintida.
She must change for youth: when she is sated with his body, she will find the error of her choice.—She must have change, she must:
therefore put money in thy purse.—If thou wilt needs damn thyself, do it a more delicate way than drowning. Make all the money thou canst: If sanctimony and a frail vow, betwixt an erring [¶] barbarian and a supersubtle Venetian, be not too hard for my wits, and all the tribe of hell, thou shalt enjoy her; therefore make money. A pox of drowning thyself! it is clean out of the way: seek thou rather to be hanged in compassing thy joy, than to be drowned and go without her.

Rod. Wilt thou be fast to my hopes, if I depend on the issue?

Iago. Thon art sure of me;—Go, make money:—I have told thee often, and I re-tell thee again and again, I hate the Moor: My cause is hearted: thine hath no less reason:
Let us be conjunctive in our revenge against him: if thou canst cuckold him, thou dost thy-¶ Wandering.

P

self a pleasure, and me a sport. There are many events in the womb of time, which will be delivered. Traverse; * go; provide thy money. We will have more of this to-morrow. Adieu.

Rod. Where shall we meet to-morrow?

Jago. At my lodging.

Rod. I'll be with thee betimes.

Jago. Go to; farewell. Do you hear, Roderigo?

Rod. What say you?

Jago. No more of drowning, do you hear.

Rod. I am changed. I'll sell all my land.

Jago. Go to; farewell: put money enough in your purse. [Exit RODERIGO.]

Thus do I ever make my fool my purse:

For I mine own gain'd knowledge should profane,

If I would time expend with such a snipe,

But for my sport and profit. I hate the Moor;

And it is thought abroad, that 'twixt my sheets

He has done my office: I know not if't be true;

But I, for mere suspicion in that kind,

Will do, as if for surety. He holds me well;

The better shall my purpose work on him.

Cassio's a proper man: Let me see now;

To get his place, and to plume up my will;

In double knavery,—How? how?—Let me see:—

After some time, to abuse Othello's ear,

That he is too familiar with his wife:—

He hath a person, and a smooth dispose,

To be suspected; fram'd to make woman false.

The Moor is of a free and open nature, ^[so]

That thinks men honest, that but seem to be

And will as tenderly be led by the nose,

As asses are.

I have't;—it is engender'd:—Hell and night

Must bring this monstrous birth to the world's light. [Exit.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Sea-port Town in CYPRUS.— A Platform.

Enter MONTANO and Two GENTLEMEN.

Mon. What from the cape can you discern at sea?

1 Gent. Nothing at all: it is a high-wrought flood;

I cannot, 'twixt the heaven and the main,
Descry a sail.

Mon. Methinks, the wind hath spoke aloud at land:

A fuller blast ne'er shook our battlements:
If it hath ruffian'd so upon the sea,
What ribs of oak, when mountains melt on them,
Can hold the mortise? what shall we hear of this?

2 Gent. A segregation † of the Turkish fleet:
For do but stand upon the foaming shore,
The chiding billow seems to pelt the clouds;
The wind-shak'd surge, with high and monstrous main

Seems to cast water on the burning bear ‡
And quench the guards of the ever-fixed pole:
I never did like molestation view
On th' enchain'd flood.

Mon. If that the Turkish fleet
Be not inshelter'd and embay'd, they are drown'd;
It is impossible they bear it out.

Enter a third GENTLEMAN.

3 Gent. News, Lords! our wars are done;
The desperate tempest hath so bang'd the Turks,
That their designment halts: a noble ship of Venice.

Hath seen a grievous wreck and sufferance
On most part of their fleet.

* A military word of command.

† Estrains.

‡ Separation.

§ The constellation Arctophylax.

Mon. How! is this true?

3 Gent. The ship is here put in,

A Veronese; Michael Cassio,
Lieutenant to the warlike Moor, Othello,
Is come on shore: the Moor himself's at sea,
And is in full commission here for Cyprus.

Mon. I am glad on't; 'tis a worthy governor.

3 Gent. But this same Cassio, though he speaks of comfort,

Touching the Turkish loss, yet he looks sadly,
And prays the Moor be safe; for they were parted

With foul and violent tempest.

Mon. 'Pray heaven he be;

For I have serv'd him, and the man commands
Like a full soldier. Let's to the sea-side, ho!
As well to see the vessel that's come in,
As throw out our eyes for brave Othello;
Even till we make the main, and the aerial blue,
An indistinct regard.

3 Gent. Come, let's do so;

For every minute is expectancy

Of more arrivance.

Enter CASSIO.

Cas. Thanks to the valiant of this warlike
isle,

That so approve the Moor; O let the heavens
Give him defence against the elements,
For I have lost him on a dangerous sea!

Mon. Is he well shipp'd?

Cas. His bark is stoutly timber'd, and his pilot

Of very expert and approv'd allowance; †
Therefore my hopes, not surfeited to death,
Stand in bold cure.

[Within.] A sail, a sail, a sail!

Enter another GENTLEMAN.

Cas. What noise?

4 Gent. The town is empty: on the brow o'the sea
Stand ranks of people, and they cry—a sail.

Cas. My hopes do shape him for the governor.

2 Gent. They do discharge their shot of courtesy: [Guns heard]

Our friends, at least.

Cas. I pray you, Sir, go forth,
And give us truth who 'us that is arriv'd.

2 Gent. I shall. [Exit.]

Mon. But, good lieutenant, is your general wiv'd?

Cas. Most unfortunately: he hath achiev'd a maid

That paragons description and wild fame: ‡
One that excels the quirks of blazoning pens,

And in the essential vesture of creation,
Does bear all excellency.—How now? who has put in?

Re-enter second GENTLEMAN.

2 Gent. 'Tis one Iago, ancient to the general.

Cas. He has had most favourable and happy
speed:

Tempests themselves, high seas, and howling
winds,

The gutter'd rocks, and congregated sands,—
Traitors ensteep'd to clog the guiltless keel,—

As having sense of beauty, do omit
Their mortal † natures, letting go safely by
The divine Desdemona.

Mon. What is she?

Cas. She that I spake of, our great captain's
captain,

Left in the conduct of the bold Iago;
Whose footing here anticipates our thoughts,

A se'enight's speed.—Great Jove, Othello guard,
And swell his sail with thine own powerful
breath;

That he may bless this bay with his tall ship,
Make love's quick pants in Desdemona's arms,

Scene I. OTHELLO, THE MOOR OF VENICE.

211

Give renew'd fire to our extincted spirits,
And bring all Cyprus comfort!—O behold,

*Enter DESDEMONA, EMILIA, IAGO, RODERIGO,
and Attendants.*

The riches of the ship is come on shore!
Ye men of Cyprus, let her have your knees!—
Hail to thee, lady! and the grace of heaven,
Before, behind thee, and on every hand,
Enwheel thee round.

Des. I thank you, valiant Cassio.

What tidings can you tell me of my lord?

Cas. He is not yet arriv'd; nor know I aught
But that he's well, and will be shortly here.

Des. O but I fear;—How lost you company?

Cas. The great contention of the sea and skies

Parted our fellowship: But, hark! a sail.

[Cry within, A sail, a sail! Then Guns heard.]

2 Gent. They give their greeting to the citadel:
This likewise is a friend.

Cas. See for the news. [Exit GENTLEMAN.]
Good ancient, you are welcome;—Welcome,
mistress!—

Let it not gall your patience, good Iago,
That I extend my manners: 'tis my breeding
That gives me this bold show of courtesy.

[Kissing her.]

Iago. Sir, would she give you so much of her
lips,

As of her tongue she oft bestows on me,
You'd have enough.

Des. Alas! she has no speech.

Iago. In faith, too much;

I find it still, when I lay list* to sleep:
Marry, before your ladyship, I grant
She puts her tongue a little in her heart,
And chides with thinking.

Emil. You have little cause to say so.

Iago. Come on, come on: you are pictures out of doors,

Bells in your parlours, wild cats in your kitchens,

Saints in your injuries, devils being offended, Players in your housewifery, and housewives in your beds.

Des. O lie upon thee, slanderer!

Iago. Nay, it is true, or else I am a Turk;
You rise to play, and go to bed to work.

Emil. You shall not write my praise.

Iago. No, let me not.

Des. What wouldst thou write of me, if thou shouldst praise me?

Iago. O gentle lady, do not put me to't:

For I am nothing, if not critical.†

Des. Come on, assay:—There's one gone to the harbour.

Iago. Ay, madam.

Des. I am not merry; but I do beguile
The thing I am, by seeming otherwise.—

Come, how wouldst thou praise me?

Iago. I am about it; but, indeed, my invention

Comes from my pate, as birdlime does from
It plucks out brains and all: But my muse labours,

And thus she is deliver'd.

If she be fair and wise,—fairness and wit,—

The one's for use, the other useth it.

Des. Well prais'd! How if she be black and witty?

Iago. If she be black, and thereto have a
wit,

She'll find a white that shall her blackness fit.

Des. Worse and worse.

Emil. How, if fair and foolish?

Iago. She never yet was foolish that was fair;

For even her folly help'd her to her heir.

Des. These are old fond† paradoxes, to make fools laugh i'the alehouse. What miserable praise hast thou for her that's foul and foolish?

* Deceit.

† Censorious.

‡ Foolish.

Iago. There's none so foul, and foolish there-unto,

But does foul pranks which fair and wise ones,
Des. O heavy ignorance!—thou praisest the worst best. But what praise couldst thou bestow on a deserving woman indeed! one, that, in the authority of her merit, did justly put on the vouch of very malice itself?

Iago. She that was ever fair, and never proud;

Had tongue at will, and yet was never loud;

Never lack'd gold, and yet went never gay;

Fled from her wish, and yet said,—now I may;

She that, being anger'd, her revenge being nigh,

Bade her wrong stay, and her displeasure fly;

She, that in wisdom never was so frail,

To change the cod's head for the salmon's tail;

She that could think, and ne'er disclose her
mind,

See suitors following, and not look behind;

She was a wight,—if ever such wight were,—

Des. To do what?

Iago. To suckle fools, and chronicle small beer.

Des. O most lame and impotent conclusion!
—Do not learn of him, Emilia, though he be thy husband.—How say you, Cassio? is he not a most profane and liberal* counsellor?

Cas. He speaks home, madam; you may relish him more in the soldier, than in the scholar.

Iago. [Aside.] He takes her by the palm:
Ay, well said, whisper: with as little a web as this, will I ensnare as great a fly as Cassio. Ay, smile upon her, do; I will give thee in thine own courtship. You say true; 'tis so indeed:
if such tricks as these strip you out of your lieutenantry, it had been better you had not kissed your three fingers so oft, which now again you are most apt to play the Sir in. ‡ Very good, well kissed! an excellent courtesy! § 'tis so, indeed. Yet again your fingers to your lips? would they were clyster-pipes for your sake?—[Trumpet.] The Moor, I know his trumpet.

Cas. 'Tis truly so.

Des. Let's meet him, and receive him.

Cas. Lo, where he comes!

Enter OTHELLO, and Attendants.

Oth. O my fair warrior!

Des. My dear Othello!

Oth. It gives me wonder great as my content,

To see you here before me. O my soul's joy!

If after every tempest come such calms,
May the winds blow till they have waken'd
death!

And let the labouring bark climb hills of seas,
Olympus-high, and duck again as low

As hell's from heaven! If it were now to die,

'Twere now to be most happy; for, I fear,

My soul hath her content so absolute,

That not another comfort like to this

Succeeds in unknown fate.

Des. The heavens forbid,

But that our loves and comforts should increase,

Even as our days do grow!

Oth. Amen to that, sweet powers!—

I cannot speak enough of this content,

It stops me here; it is too much of joy:

And this, and this, the greatest discords be,

[Kissing her.]

That e'er our hearts shall make!

Iago. O you are well tun'd now!

But I'll set down the pegs that make this music,

As honest as I am.

[Aside.]

Oth. Come, let's to the castle.—

News, friends: our wars are done, the Turks are drown'd.

* Gross and licentious.

† Shackles.

‡ To shew your good breeding and gallantry.

§ Spoken when Cassio kisses his hand, and Desdemona curtsies.

How do our old acquaintances of this isle t—
Honey, you shall be well dear'd* in Cyprus,
I have found great love amongst them. O my sweet,

I prattle out of fashion,† and I dote
In mine own comforts.—I prythee, good Iago,
Go to the bay, and disembark my coffers:
Bring thou the Master to the citadel;
He is a good one, and his worthiness
Does challenge much respect.—Come, Desdemona, we will meet at Cyprus. [Mon-[Exeunt OTHELLO, DESDEMONA, and Attendants.]

Iago. Do thou meet me presently at the harbour. Come hither. If thou be'st valiant,—as (they say) base men, being in love, have then a nobility in their natures more than is native to them,—list me. The lieutenant to-night watches on the court of guard: § First, I must tell thee this—Desdemona is directly in love
with him.

Rod. With him? why, 'tis not possible.

Iago. Lay thy finger—thus, and let thy soul be instructed. Mark me with what violence she first loved the Moor, but for bragging, and telling her fantastical lies: And will she love him still for prating? let not thy discreet heart think it.
Her eye must be fed; and what delight shall she have to look on the devil? When the blood is made dull with the act of sport, there should be,
—again to inflame it, and to give satiety a fresh appetite,—loveliness in favour; sympathy in years, manners, and beauties; all which the Moor is defective in: Now, for want of these required conveniences, her delicate tenderness will find itself abused, begin to heave the gorge, disrelish and abhor the Moor; very nature will instruct her in it, and compel her to some second choice. Now, Sir, this granted, (as it is a most pregnant and unforced position,) who stands so emulently in the degree of this fortune, as Cassio does? a knave very voluble; no further conscionable than in putting on the mere form of civil and humane seeming, for the better compassing of his salt and most hidden loose affection? why, none; why, none: A slippery and subtle knave; a finder out of occasions;
that has an eye can stamp and counterfeit advantages, though true advantage never present itself:
a devilish knave! Besides, the knave is handsome, young, and hath all those requisites in him, that folly and green minds|| look after:
A pestilent complete knave: and the woman hath found him already.

Rod. I cannot believe that in her; she is full of most blessed condition.¶

Iago. Blessed fig's end! the wine she drinks is made of grapes: if she had been blessed, she would never have loved the Moor: Blessed pudding! Didst thou not see her paddle with the palm of his hand? didst not mark that?

Rod. Yes, that I did; but that was but courtesy.

Iago. Lechery, by this hand; an index, and obscure prologue to the history of lust and foul thoughts. They met so near with their lips, that their breaths embraced together. Villainous thoughts, Roderigo, when these mutu-alities so marshal the way, hard at hand comes the master and main exercise, and incorporate conclusion: Pish!—But, Sir, be you ruled by me; I have brought you from Venice. Watch you to-night; for the command, I'll lay't upon you: Cassio knows you not;—I'll not be far from you: Do you find some occasion to anger Cassio, either by speaking too loud, or tainting his discipline; or from what other course you please, which the time shall more favourably minister.

Rod. Well.

Iago. Sir, he is rash, and very sudden in

* Much solicited by invitation. † Without method.
‡ Listen to me. § The place where the guard
musters. || Minds unripe. ¶ Qualities.
 Throwing a slur upon his discipline.

choler; and, haply,* with his truncheon may strike at you: Provoke him, that he may; for, even out of that, will I cause these of Cyprus to mutiny; whose qualification shall come into no true taste again, but by the displanting of Cassio. So shall you have a shorter journey to your desires, by the means I shall then have to prefer† them; and the impediment most profitably removed, without the which there were no expectation of our prosperity.

Rod. I will do this, if I can bring it to any opportunity.

Iago. I warrant thee. Meet me by and by at the citadel: I must fetch his necessities ashore.
Farewell.

Rod. Adieu.

[Exit.

Iago. That Cassio loves her, I do well believe it;

That she loves him, 'tis apt, and of great credit:
The Moor—howbeit that I endure him not,—
Is of a constant, loving, noble nature;
And, I dare think, he'll prove to Desdemona
A most dear husband. Now I do love her too;
Not out of absolute lust, (though, peradventure,
I stand accountant for as great a sin.)

But partly led to diet my revenge,
For that I do suspect the lusty Moor
Hath leap'd into my seat; the thought whereof Doth, like a poisonous mineral, gnaw my in-
wards;

And nothing can or shall content my soul,
Till I am even with him, wife for wife;
Or, failing so, yet that I put the Moor
At least into a jealousy so strong That judgment cannot cure. Which thing to do,—

If this poor trash of Venice, whom I trash;
For his quick hunting, stand the putting on,
I'll have our Michael Cassio on the hip;
Abuse him to the Moor in the rank garb, §—
(For I fear Cassio with my night-cap too)
Make the Moor thank me, love me, and reward me,

For making him egregiously an ass,
And practising upon his peace and quiet
Even to madness. 'Tis here, but yet confus'd;
Knavery's plain face is never seen, till us'd.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—A Street.

Enter a HERALD, with a Proclamation;
People following.

Her. It is Othello's pleasure, our noble and valiant general, that, upon certain tidings now arrived, importing the mere perdition of the Turkish fleet, every man put himself into triumph; some to dance, some to make bonfires, each man to what sport and revel his addition leads him; for, besides these benedicious news, it is the celebration of his nuptials: So much was his pleasure should be proclaimed.
All offices¶ are open; and there is full liberty of feasting, from this present hour of five, till the bell hath told eleven. Heaven bless the isle of Cyprus, and our noble general, Othello!

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Hall in the Castle.

Enter OTHELLO, DESDEMONA, CASSIO, and Attendants.

Oth. Good Michael, look you to the guard
to-night:

Let's teach ourselves that honourable stop,
Not to out-sport discretion.

Cas. Iago hath direction what to do;
But, notwithstanding, with my personal eye
Will I look to't.

Oth. Iago is most honest,

* Perhaps.

† To advance them.

‡ To trash was to put a stone on a hound's neck obunder him outstripping his companions.

§ In the grossest manner.

¶ Entire.

¶ Rooms in the castle.

Michael, good night : To-morrow, with your earliest,
Let me have speech with you.—Come, my dear love,
The purchase made, the fruits are to ensue ;
That profit's yet to come 'twixt me and you.—
Good night.

[Exit OTH. DES. and Attend.]

Enter IAGO.

Cas. Welcome, Iago : We must to the watch.

Iago. Not this hour, lieutenant ; 'tis not yet ten o'clock : Our general cast * us thus early, for the love of his Desdemona ; whom let us not therefore blame ; he hath not yet made waition the night with her ; and she is sport for Jove.

Cas. She's a most exquisite lady.

Iago. And, I'll warrant her, full of game.

Cas. Indeed, she is a most fresh and delicate creature.

Iago. What an eye she has ! methinks it sounds a parley of provocation.

Cas. An inviting eye ; and yet, methinks, right modest.

Iago. And, when she speaks, is it not an alarm to love ?

Cas. She is, indeed, perfection.

Iago. Well, happiness to their sheets ! Come, lieutenant, I have a stoup of wine ; and here without are a brace of Cyprus gallants, that would fain have a measure to the health of the black Othello.

Cas. Not to-night, good Iago ; I have very poor and unhappy brains for drinking : I could well wish courtesy would invent some other custom of entertainment.

Iago. O they are our friends ; but one cup ; I'll drink for you.

Cas. I have drunk but one cup to-night, and that was cratically qualified † too, and behold what innovation it makes here : I am unfortunate in the infirmity, and dare not task my weakness with any more.

Iago. What, man ! 'tis a night of revels ; the gallants desire it.

Cas. Where are they ?

Iago. Here at the door ; I pray you, call them in.

Cas. I'll do't ; but it dislikes me.

[Exit CASSIO.]

Iago. If I can fasten but one cup upon him, With that which he hath drunk to-night already,

He'll be as full of quarrel and offence As my young mistress' dog. Now, my sick fool, Roderigo,

Whom love has turn'd almost the wrong side outward,

To Desdemona hath to-night carous'd Potations pottle deep ; and he's to watch : Three lads of Cyprus,—noble swelling spirits, That hold their honours in a wary distance, The very elements of this warlike isle, Have I to-night fluster'd with flowing cups, And they watch too. Now, 'mongst this flock of drunkards,

Am I to put our Cassio in some action That may offend the isle :—But here they come : If consequence do but approve my dream, ‡ My boat sails freely, both with wind and stream.

Re-enter CASSIO, with him MONTANO and Gentlemen.

Cas. 'Fore heaven, they have given me a rouse † already.

Mon. Good faith, a little one ; not past a pint, as I am a soldier.

Iago. Some wine, ho !

[Sings
And let me the canakin clink clink,
And let me the canakin clink :
A soldier's a man ;
A life's but a span ;
Why then, let a soldier drink.

Some wine, boys ! [Wine brought in.]

Cas. 'Fore heaven, an excellent song.

Iago. I learned it in England, where, indeed, they are most potent in potting : your Dane, your German, and your swag-bellied Hollander,—Drink, ho !—are nothing to your English.

Cas. Is your Englishman so expert in his drinking ?

Iago. Why, he drinks you, with facility, your Dane dead drunk ; he sweats not to overthrow your Alman ; he gives your Hollander a vomit ere the next pottle can be filled.

Cas. To the health of our general.

Mon. I am for it, lieutenant ; and I'll do you justice. *

Iago. O sweet England !

King Stephen was a worthy peer,
His breeches cost him but a crown ;
He held them sixpence all too dear,
With that he call'd the tailor—down.

He was a wight of high renown,
And thou art but of low degree :
'Tis pride that pulls the country down,
Then tak' thine auld cloak about thee. †

Some wine, ho !

Cas. Why, this is a more exquisite song than the other.

Iago. Will you hear it again ?

Cas. No ; for I hold him to be unworthy of his place, that does those things.—Well,—Heaven's above all : and there be souls that must be saved, and there be souls must not be saved.

Iago. It's true, good lieutenant.

Cas. For mine own part,—no offence to the general, or any man of quality,—I hope to be saved.

Iago. And so do I too, lieutenant.

Cas. Ay, but, by your leave, not before me ; the lieutenant is to be saved before the ancient. Let's have no more of this ; let's to our affairs.—Forgive us our sins !—Gentlemen, let's look to our business. Do not think, gentlemen, I am drunk : this is my ancient ;—this is my right hand, and this is my left hand :—I am not drunk now ; I can stand well enough, and speak well enough.

All. Excellent well.

Cas. Why, very well, then : you must not think then that I am drunk.

[Exit.]
Mon. To the platform, masters ; come, let's set the watch.

Iago. You see this fellow, that is gone before :—

He is a soldier, fit to stand by Cesar, And give direction : and do but see his vice ; 'Tis to his virtue a just equinox, The one as long as the other : 'tis pity of him. I fear, the trust Othello puts him in, On some odd time of his infirmity Will shake this island.

Mon. But is he often thus ?

Iago. 'Tis evermore the prologue to his sleep : He'll watch the horologe a double set ; ‡ If drink rock not his cradle.

Mon. It were well,

The general were put in mind of it. Perhaps, he sees it not ; or his good nature Prizes the virtue that appears in Cassio, And looks not on his evils : Is not this true ?

* Dismissed.

† Silly mixed with water.

‡ Any scheme existing only in the imagination may be called a dream.

§ More than enough.

* Drunk as much as you do.

† For the whole of this song, see Percy's Relics of Ancient Poetry.

‡ While the clock strikes two rounds, i. e. four-and-twenty hours.

Enter RODRIGO.

Iago. How now, Roderigo? [Aside.
I pray you, after the lieutenant; go.

[Exit RODRIGO.
Mon. And 'tis great pity, that the noble Moor
Should hazard such a place, as his own se-
With one of an ingraft * infirmity:
It were an honest action, to say
So to the Moor.

Iago. Not I, for this fair island:
I do love Cassio well; and would do much
To cure him of this evil. But hark! what noise?
[Cry within,—Help! help!

Re-enter CASSIO, driving in RODRIGO.

Cas. You rogue! you rascal!

Mon. What's the matter, lieutenant?

Cas. A knave!—teach me my duty!
I'll beat the knave into a twiggen † bottle.

Rod. Beat me!

Cas. Dost thou prate, rogue?

[Striking RODRIGO.
Mon. Nay, good lieutenant, [Staying him.
I pray you, Sir, hold your hand.

Cas. Let me go, Sir,

Or I'll knock you o'er the mazzard.

Mon. Come, come, you're drunk.

Cas. Drunk!

Iago. Away, I say! go out, and cry—a mutiny! [Aside to Rod. who goes out.

Nay, good lieutenant,—alas, gentlemen,—
Help, ho!—Lieutenant,—Sir,—Montano,—
Sir!—

Help, masters!—Here's a goodly watch, indeed! [Bell rings.

Who's that that rings the bell?—Diablo, ho!
The town will rise, God's will, lieutenant! hold;
You will be sham'd for ever.

Enter OTHELLO, and Attendants.

Oth. What is the matter here?

Mon. I bleed still, I am hurt to the death;—
he dies.

Oth. Hold, for your lives.

Iago. Hold, hold, lieutenant, Sir, Montano,— gentlemen,—

Have you forgot all sense of place and duty?
Hold, hold! the general speaks to you; hold,
for shame!

Oth. Why, how now, ho! from whence ariseth
this?

Are we turn'd Turks; and to ourselves do that,
Which heaven hath forbid the Ottomites?
For Christian shame, put by this barbarous brawl:

He that stirs next to carve for his own rage,
Holds his soul light; he dies upon his motion.—
Silence that dreadful bell, it frights the isle
From her propriety. —What is the matter, masters?—

Honest Iago, that look'st dead with grieving,
Speak, who began this? on thy love, I charge
thee.

Iago. I do not know;—friends all but now,
even now.

In quarter, and in terms like bride and groom
Devesting them for bed: and then, but now,
(As if some planet had unwitted men.)
Swords out, and tilting one at other's breast,
As opposition bloody. I cannot speak
Any beginning to this peevish odds;
And 'would in action glorious I had lost
Those legs, that brought me to a part of it!

Oth. How comes it, Michael, you are thus forgot?

Cas. I pray you, pardon me, I cannot speak.

Oth. Worthy Montano, you were wont to be civil;

† The gravity and stillness of your youth
The world hath noted, and your name is great

* Rooted. † A wicked bottle.

‡ From her regular and proper state.

§ I.e. You have thus forgotten yourself.

In mouths of wisest censure: What's the matter
That you unlance your reputation thus,
And spend your rich opinion, for the name
Of a night-brawler? Give me answer to it.

Mon. Worthy Othello, I am hurt to danger;
Your officer, Iago, can inform you—
While I spare speech, which something now offends me;—

Of all that I do know: nor know I aught
By me that's said or done since this night;
Unless self-charity * be sometime a vice;
And to defend ourselves it be a sin,
When violence assails us.

Oth. Now, by heaven,
My blood begins my safer guides to rule;
Assays to lead the way: If once I stir
And passion, having my best judgment collid'd,
Or do but lift this arm, the best of you Shall sink in my rebuke. Give me to know
How this foul rout began, who set it on;
And he that is approv'd † in this offence,
Though he had twin'd with me, both at a birth,

Shall lose me.—What! in a town of war,
Yet wild, the people's hearts brimful of fear,
To manage private and domestic quarrel,
In night, and on the court and guard of safety!
'Tis monstrous.—Iago, who began it?

Ans. If partially attir'd, ‡ or leagu'd in office,
Thou dost deliver more or less than truth,
Thou art no soldier.

Iago. Touch me not so near:
I had rather have this tongue cut from my mouth,

Than it should do offence to Michael Cassio;
Yet, I persuade myself, to speak the truth
Shall nothing wrong him.—Thus it is, general.
Montano and myself being in speech,
There comes a fellow, crying out for help;
And Cassio following him with determin'd
sword,

To execute upon him: Sir, this gentleman
Steps in to Cassio, and entreats his pause;
Myself the crying fellow did pursue,
Lest by his clamour, (as it so fell out,

The town might fall in fright: he, swift of foot,
Outran my purpose; and I return'd the rather
For that I heard the clink and fall of swords,
And Cassio high in oath; which, till to-night, †
I ne'er might say before: when I came back,
(For this was brief,) I found them close together
At blow and thrust; even as again they were,
When you yourself did part them.

More of this matter can I not report:—
But men are men; the best sometimes forget:—
Though Cassio did some little wrong to him,—
As men in rage strike those that wish them best,—

Yet surely Cassio, I believe, receiv'd,
From him that died, some strange indignity,
Which patience could not pass.

Oth. I know, Iago,
Thy honesty and love doth mince this matter, ‡
Making it light to Cassio:—Cassio, I love thee;
But never more be officer of mine.—

Enter DESDEMONA, attended.

Look, if my gentle love be not rais'd up;—
I'll make thee an example.

Des. What's the matter, dear?

Oth. All's well now, sweeting; Come away to bed.

Sir, for your hurts,
Myself will be your surgeon: Lead him off.

[To MONTANO who is led off.
Iago, look with care about the town;
And silence those whom this vile brawl distracted.—

Come, Desdemona; 'tis the soldier's life,
To have their balmy slumbers wak'd with strife.

[Exit all but IAGO and CASSIO.
Iago. What are you hart, lieutenant?

* Care of one's self. † Darkened.
‡ Corrupted by proof. § Related by nearness of office.

Cas. Ay, past all surgery.

Iago. Marry, heaven forbid!

Cas. Reputation, reputation, reputation! O I have lost my reputation! I have lost the immortal part, Sir, of myself; and what remains is bestial.—My reputation, Iago, my reputation.

Iago. As I am an honest man, I thought you had received some bodily wound; there is more offence in that, than in reputation. Reputation is an idle and most false imposition; oft got without merit, and lost without deserving: You have lost no reputation at all, unless you repute yourself such a loser. What, man! there are ways to recover the general again: You are but now cast in his mood; * a punishment more in policy than in malice; even so as one would beat his offenceless dog, to affright an impetuous lion: sue to him again, and he's yours.

Cas. I will rather sue to be despis'd, than to deceive so good a commander, with so slight, so drunken, and so indiscreet an officer. Drunk? and speak parrot?† and squabble? swagger? swear? and discourse fustian with one's own shadow?—O thou invisible spirit of wine, if thou hast no name to be known by, let us call thee—devil!

Iago. What was he that you followed with your sword? What had he done to you?

Cas. I know not.

Iago. Is it possible?

Cas. I remember a mass of things, but nothing distinctly; a quarrel, but nothing wherefore.—O that men should put an enemy in their mouths, to steal away their brains! that we should with joy, revel, pleasure, and applause, transform ourselves into beasts!

Iago. Why, but you are now well enough: How came you thus recovered?

Cas. It hath pleased the devil, drunkenness, to give place to the devil, wrath: one unperfectness shows me another, to make me frankly despise myself.

Iago. Come, you are too severe a moralist: As the time, the place, and the condition of this country stands, I could heartily wish this had not befallen; but, since it is as it is mend it for your own good.

Cas. I will ask him for my place again; he shall tell me, I am a drunkard! Had I as many mouths as Hydra, such an answer would stop them all. To be now a sensible man, by and by a fool, and presently a beast! O strange!—Every inordinate cup is unblessed, and the ingredient is a devil.

Iago. Come, come, good wine is a good familiar creature, if it be well used; exclaim no more against it. And, good lieutenant, I think you think I love you.

Cas. I have well approved it, Sir,—I drunk!

Iago. You, or any man living, may be drunk at some time, man. I'll tell you what you shall do. Our general's wife is now the general;—I may say so in this respect, for that he hath devoted and given up himself to the contemplation, mark, and denotement of her parts and graces:—confess yourself freely to her; importune her; she'll help to put you in your place again: she is of so free, so kind, so apt, so blessed a disposition, that she holds it a vice in her goodness, not to do more than she is requested: This broken joint between you and her husband, entreat her to splinter; and, my fortunes against any lay,† worth naming, this crack of your love shall grow stronger than was before.

Cas. You advise me well.

Iago. I protest in the sincerity of love, and honest kindness.

Cas. I think it freely, and, betimes in the morning, I will beseech the virtuous Desdemona to undertake for me: I am desperate of my fortunes, if they check me here.

Iago. You are in the right. Good night, Lieutenant; I must to the watch.

Cas. Good night honest Iago. [Exit Cassio.]

Iago. And what's he then, that says I play the villain?

When this advice is free I give, and honest, Probable to thinking, and (indeed) the course To win the Moor again? For 'tis most easy The inclining Desdemona to subdue In any honest suit; she's fram'd as fruitful* As the free elements. And then for her To win the Moor, were't to renounce his baptism, All seals and symbols of redeemed sin, His soul is so enfetter'd to her love, That she may make, unmake, do what she list, Even as her appetite shall play the god With his weak function. How am I then a villain,

To counsel Cassio to this parallel† course, Directly to his good? Divinity of hell! When devils will their blackest sins put on, They do suggest; at first with heavenly shows, As I do now: For while this honest fool Plies Desdemona to repair his fortunes, And she for him pleads strongly to the Moor, I'll pour this pestilence into his ear,—That she repeals § him for her body's lust; And by how much she strives to do him good, She shall undo her credit with the Moor. So will I turn her virtue into pitch; And out of her own goodness make the net, That shall enmesh them all.—How now, Roderigo.

Enter RODERIGO.

Rod. I do follow here in the chase, not like a bound that hunts, but one that fills up the cry. My money is almost spent; I have been to-night exceedingly well edged; and, I think, the issue will be—I shall have so much experience for my pains; and so, with no money at all, and a little more wit, return to Venice.

Iago. How poor are they, that have not patience!—

What wound did ever heal, but by degrees? Thou know'st we work by wit, and not by witchcraft;

And wit depends on dilatory time. Does't not go well? Cassio hath beaten thee, And thou, by that small hurt, hath cashier'd Cassio:

Though other things grow fair against the sun, Yet fruits that blossom first, will rust by ripe: Content thyself awhile.—By the mass, 'tis morning;

Pleasure and action make the hours seem short. Retire thee; go where thou art billeted: Away, I say; thou shalt know more hereafter: Nay, get thee gone. [Exit Rod.] Two things are to be done,—

My wife must move for Cassio to her mistress; I'll set her on;

Myself, the while, to draw the Moor apart, And bring him jump § when he may Cassio find Soliciting his wife:—Ay, that's the way; Dull not device by coldness and delay. [Exit.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Before the Castle

Enter CASSIO, and some MUSICIANS.

Cas. Masters, play here, I will content your pains, Something that's brief; and bid—good-morrow general. [Music.]

Enter CLOWN.

Clow. Why, masters, have your instruments been at Naples, that they speak!† the more thus? I Mus. How, Sir, how?

* Liberal. † Even. ‡ Tempt.
§ Recall. ¶ Just at the time.

* Dismissed in anger. † Talk foolishly. ‡ Bot.

Clo. Are these, I pray you, called wind instruments?

I Mus. Ay, marry, are they, Sir.

Clo. Oh! thereby hangs a tale.

I Mus. Whereby hangs a tale, Sir?

Clo. Marry, Sir, by many a wind instrument that I know. But, masters, here's money for you: and the general so likes your music, that he desires you, of all loves to make no more noise with it.

I Mus. Well, Sir, we will not.

Clo. If you have any music that may not be heard, to't again: but, as they say, to hear music, the general does not greatly care.

I Mus. We have none such, Sir.

Clo. Then put up your pipes in your bag, for I'll away: Go; vanish into air; away.

[Exeunt MUSICIANS.]

Cas. Dost thou hear, my honest friend?

Clo. No, I hear not your honest friend. I hear you.

Cas. Pr'ythee, keep up thy quillits.* There's a poor piece of gold for thee: if the gentlewoman that attends the general's wife be stirring, tell her, there's one Cassio entreats her a little favour of speech: Wilt thou do this?

Clo. She is stirring, Sir: if she will stir hither, I shall seem to notify unto her. [Exit.]

Enter IAGO.

Cas. Do, good my friend.—In happy time, Iago.

Iago. You have not been a-bed then?

Cas. Why, no; the day had broke Before we parted. I have made bold, Iago, To send in to your wife: My suit to her Is, that she will to virtuous Desdemona Procure me some access.

Iago. I'll send her to you presently; And I'll devise a mean to draw the Moor Out of the way, that your converse and business

May be more free. [Exit.]
Cas. I humbly thank you for't. I never knew A Florentine more kind and honest.

Enter EMILIA.

Emil. Good morrow, good Lieutenant: I am sorry For your displeasure;† but all will soon be well. The general and his wife are talking of it, And she speaks for you stoutly: The Moor replies, That he is hurt is of great fame in Cyprus, And great affinity; and that, in wholesome wisdom, He might not but refuse you: but, he protests he loves you; And needs no other suitor, but his likings, To take the safest occasion by the front, To bring you in again.

Cas. Yet, I beseech you,— If you think fit, or that it may be done, Give me advantage of some brief discourse With Desdemona alone.

Emil. Pray you, come in; I will bestow you where you shall have time To speak your business freely.

Cas. I am much bound to you. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A Room in the Castle.

Enter OTHELLO, IAGO, and GENTLEMEN.

Oth. These letters give, Iago, to the pilot; And, by him, do my duties to the state: That done, I will be walking on the works, Repair there to me.

Iago. Well, my good lord, I'll do't.

Oth. This fortification, gentlemen,—shall we see't?

Gent. We'll wait upon your lordship. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Before the Castle.

Enter DESDEMONA, CASSIO, and EMILIA.

Des. Be thou assur'd, good Cassio, I will do All my abilities in thy behalf.

Emil. Good madam do; I know it grieves my husband, As if the case were his.

Des. O that's an honest fellow.—Do not doubt, Cassio,

But I will have my lord and you again As friendly as you were.

Cas. Bounteous madam,

Whatever shall become of Michael Cassio, He's never any thing but your true servant.

Des. O Sir, I thank you: You do love my lord:

You have known him long; and be you well assur'd,

He shall in strangeness stand no further off Than in a politic distance.

Cas. Ay, but, lady, That policy may either last so long, Or feed upon such nice and waterish diet, Or breed itself so out of circumstance, That, I being absent, and my place supplied, My general will forget my love and service.

Des. Do not doubt that; before Emilia here, I give thee warrant of thy place: assure thee, If I do vow a friendship, I'll perform it To the last article: my lord shall never rest; I'll watch him tame,* and talk him out of patience;

His bed shall seem a school, his board a shrill; † I'll intermingle every thing he does With Cassio's suit: Therefore be merry, Cassio; For thy solicitor shall rather die, Than give thy cause away.

Enter OTHELLO, and IAGO, at a distance.

Emil. Madam, here comes My lord.

Cas. Madam, I'll take my leave.

Des. Why, stay, And hear me speak.

Cas. Madam, not now; I am very ill at ease, Unfit for mine own purposes.

Des. Well, well, Do your discretion. [Exit CASSIO.]

Iago. Ha! I like not that.

Oth. What dost thou say?

Iago. Nothing, my lord: or if—I know not what.

Oth. Was not that Cassio, parted from my wife?

Iago. Cassio, my lord? No, sure, I cannot think it,

That he would steal away so guilty-like, Seeing you coming.

Oth. I do believe 'twas he.

Des. How now, my lord?

I have been talking with a suitor here, A man that languishes in your displeasure.

Oth. Who is't you mean?

Des. Why, your lieutenant Cassio. Good my lord,

If I have any grace, or power to move you, His present reconciliation take; †

For, if he be not one that truly loves you, That errs in ignorance, and not in cunning, I have no judgment in an honest face:

I pr'ythee, call him back.

Oth. Went he hence now?

Des. Ay, sooth, so humbled, That he hath left part of his grief with me;

I suffer with him. Good love, call him back.

Oth. Not now, sweet Desdemona; some other time.

Des. But shall't be shortly?

Oth. The sooner, sweet, for you.

Des. Shall't be to-night at supper?

Oth. No, not to-night.

* Nice distinctions.

† The displeasure you have incurred from Othello.

* Hawks are tamed by keeping them from sleep.

† Accept his submission.

Des. To-morrow dinner then?
Oth. I shall not dine at home;
 I meet the captains at the citadel.
Des. Why then, to-morrow night; or Tuesday morn;
 Or Tuesday noon, or night; or Wednesday
 I pray thee, name the time; but let it not Exceed three days; in faith, he's penitent;
 And yet his trespass, in our common reason, (Save that, they say, the wars must make examples
 Out of their best *) is not almost a fault
 To incur a private check: When shall he come?
 Tell me, Othello. I wonder in my soul,
 What you could ask me, that I should deny,
 Or staid so mammering † on. What! Michael Cassio,
 That came a wooing with you; and many a time,
 When I have spoke of you dispraisingly,
 Hath ta'en your part; to have so much to do
 To bring him in! I Trust me, I could do much,— Oth. Pr'ythee, no more: let him come when he will:
 I will deny thee nothing.
Des. Why, this is not a boon;
 'Tis as I should entreat you wear your gloves,
 Or feed on nourishing dishes, or keep you warm;
 Or sue to you to do peculiar profit
 To your own person: Nay, when I have a suit,
 Wherein I mean to touch your love indeed,
 It shall be full of poize; and difficulty,
 And fearful to be granted.
Oth. I will deny thee nothing:
 Whereon, I do beseech thee, grant me this,
 To leave me but a little to myself.
Des. Shall I deny you? no: Farewell, my
 lord.
Oth. Farewell, my Desdemona: I will come to thee straight.
Des. Emilia, come:—Be it as your fancies teach you;
 Whate'er you be, I am obedient.
[Exit, with EMILIA.]
Oth. Excellent wretch! Perdition catch my
 soul,
 But I do love thee! and, when I love thee not,
 Chaos is come again.
Jago. My noble lord,—
Oth. What dost thou say, Jago?
Jago. Did Michael Cassio, when you woo'd
 my lady,
 Know of your love?
Oth. He did, from first to last: Why dost thou ask?
Jago. But for a satisfaction of my thought;
 No further harm.
Oth. Why of thy thought, Jago?
Jago. I did not think, he had been acquainted with her.
Oth. O yes; and went between us very oft.
Jago. Indeed?
Oth. Indeed! ay, indeed:—Discern'st thou anguish in that?
 Is he not honest?
Jago. Honest, my lord?
Oth. Ay, honest.
Jago. My lord, for aught I know.
Oth. What dost thou think?
Jago. Think, my lord?
Oth. Think, my lord!
 By heaven, he echoes me,
 As if there were some monster in his thought Too hideous to be shown. Thou dost mean something:
 I heard thee say but now,—Thou lik'st not that,
 When Cassio left my wife.—What didst not
 like?
 And, when I told thee he was of my counsel
 In my whole course of wooing, thou criedst,
Indeed?
 And didst contract and purse thy brow together,

As if thou then had'st shut up in thy brain
 Some horrible conceit: If thou dost love me,
 Show me thy thought.
Jago. My lord, you know I love you.
Oth. I think, thou dost;
 And,—for I know thou art full of love and honesty,
 And weigh'st thy words before thou giv'st them
 breath,—
 Therefore these stops of thine fright me the
 For such things, in a false disloyal knave,
 Are tricks of custom; but, in a man that's just,
 They are close denotements, working from the
 heart,
 That passion cannot rule.
Jago. For Michael Cassio,—
 I dare be sworn, I think that he is honest.
Oth. I think so too.
Jago. Men should be what they seem;
 Or, those that be not, 'would they might seem
 none!
Oth. Certain, men should be what they seem.
Jago. Why, then,
 I think that Cassio is an honest man.
Oth. Nay, yet there's more in this:
 I pray thee, speak to me as thy thinkings,
 As thou dost ruminate; and give thy worst of thoughts
 The worst of words.
Jago. Good my lord, pardon me;
 Though I am bound to every act of duty,
 I am not bound to that all slaves are free to.
 Utter my thoughts? Why, say, they are vile and
 false;
 As where's that palace, whereinto foul things
 Sometimes intrude not? who has a breast so pure,
 But some uncleanly apprehensions
 Keep leets * and law-days, and in session sit
 With meditations lawful?
Oth. Thou dost conspire against thy friend,
 Jago,
 If thou but think'st him wrong'd, and mak'st
 his ear
 A stranger to thy thoughts.
Jago. I do beseech you,—
 Though I, perchance, am vicious in my guess,
 As, I confess, it is my nature's plague
 To spy into abuses; and, oft, my jealousy
 Shapes faults that are not,—I entreat you then,
 From one that so imperfectly conjects,
 You'd take no notice; nor build yourself a trouble
 Out of his scattering and unsure observance:—
 It were not for your quiet, nor your good,
 Nor for my manhood, honesty, or wisdom,
 To let you know my thoughts.
Oth. What dost thou mean?
Jago. Good name, in man and woman, dear
 my lord,
 Is the immediate jewel of their souls:
 Who steals my purse, steals trash: 'tis something, nothing;
 'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;
 But he, that filches from me my good name,
 Robs me of that which not enriches him,
 And makes me poor indeed.
Oth. By heaven, I'll know thy thought.
Jago. You cannot, if my heart were in your
 hand;
 Nor shall not, whilst 'tis in my custody.
Oth. Ha!
Jago. O beware, my lord, of jealousy;
 It is the green-eyed monster, which doth mock
 The meat it feeds on: That cuckold lives in bliss,
 Who, certain of his fate, loves not his wronger;
 But oh! what damned minutes tells he o'er,
 Who dotes, yet doubts; suspects, yet strongly
 loves!
Oth. O misery!
Jago. Poor, and content, is rich, and rich a enough;

* Best men. † Hesitating.

* Courts of Enquiry. † Conjectures.

But riches, fineless, * is as poor as winter,
To him that ever fears he shall be poor :—
Good heaven, the souls of all my tribe defend
From jealousy !

Oth. Why I why is this ?

Think'st thou, I'd make a life of jealousy,
To follow still the changes of the moon
With fresh suspicions ? No : to be once in doubt,

Is—once to be resolv'd : Exchange me for a
When I shall turn the business of my soul
To such exsufficate† and blown surmises,
Matching thy inference. 'Tis not to make me
jealous,

To say—my wife is fair, feeds well, loves com-
Is free of speech, sings, plays, and dances well ;
Where virtue is, these are more virtuous :
Nor from mine own weak merits will I draw
The smallest fear, or doubt of her revolt ;
For she had eyes, and those me : No, Iago ;
I'll see, before I doubt ; when I doubt, prove ;
And, on the proof, there is no more but this,—
Away at once with love, or jealousy.

Iago. I am glad of this, for now I shall have reason

To show the love and duty that I bear you
With franker spirit : therefore, as I am bound,
Receive it from me :—I speak not yet of proof.
Look to your wife ; observe her well with Cas-sio ;

Wear your eye thus, not jealous, nor secure :
I would not have your free and noble nature,
Out of self-bounty, be abus'd ; look to't :
I know our country disposition well ;
In Venice they do let heaven see the pranks
They dare not show their husbands ; their best conscience

Is—not to leave undone, but keep unknown.

Oth. Dost thou say so ?

Iago. She did deceive her father, marrying
you ;

And, when she seem'd to shake, and fear your looks,

She lov'd them most.

Oth. And so she did.

Iago. Why, go to, then ;

She that, so young, could give out such a seeming, I

To seal ; her father's eyes up, close as oak,—
He thought 'twas witchcraft :—But I am much to blame ;

I humbly do beseech you of your pardon,
For too much loving you.

Oth. I am bound to thee for ever.

Iago. I see, this hath a little dash'd your spirits.

Oth. Not a jot, not a jot.

Iago. Trust me, I fear it has.

I hope, you will consider what is spoke Comes from my love ;—But, I do see you are mov'd :—

I am to pray you, not to strain my speech
To grosser issues,‡ nor to larger reach,
Than to suspicion.

Oth. I will not.

Iago. Should you do so, my lord,
My speech should fall into such vile success
As my thoughts aim not at. Cassio's my worthy
friend :—

My lord, I see you are mov'd.

Oth. No, not much mov'd :—

I do not think but Desdemona's honest.

Iago. Long live she so ! and long live you to think so !

Oth. And yet, how nature errs from itself,—

Iago. Ay, there's the point : As, to be bold
with you,

Not to affect many proposed matches,
Of her own clime, complexion, and degree ;
Whereto, we see, in all things nature tends :

* Endless. † Strained, or blown. ‡ Appearances.
‡ An expression from falconry : To send a hawk is to aw up his eye-side. † Camellions.

Foh ! one may smell, in such, a will most rank.
Foul disproportion, thoughts unnatural.—
But pardon me ; I do not, in position,
Distinctly speak of her ; though I may fear
Her will, recolling to her better judgment,
May fall to match you with her country forms,
And (happily) repent.

Oth. Farewell, farewell :

If more thou dost perceive, let me know more ;
Set on thy wife to observe : Leave me, Iago.

Iago. My lord, I take my leave. [Going.]

Oth. Why did I marry ?—This honest creature, doubtless, [folds,
Sees and knows more, much more, than he un-Iago. My lord, I would I might entreat your honour

To scan this thing no further : leave it to time :
And though it be fit that Cassio have his place,
(For, sure, he fills it up with great ability,)
Yet if you please to hold him off awhile,
You shall by that perceive him and his means :
Note, if your lady strain his entertainment *
With any strong or vehement opportunity ;
Much will be seen in that. In the meantime,
Let me be thought too busy in my fears
(As worthy cause I have to fear I am),
And hold her free, I do beseech your honour.

Oth. Fear not my government.

Iago. I once more take my leave. [Exit.]

Oth. This fellow's of exceeding honesty,
And knows all qualities, with a learned spirit,
Of human dealings : If I do prove her haggard,
Though that her jesses † were my dear heartstrings,
I'd whistle her off, and let her down the wind,
To prey at fortune. Haply, for I am black,
And have not those soft parts of conversation
That chamberers ‡ have ;—Or, for I am de-clin'd

Into the vale of years ;—yet that's not much ;—
She's gone ; I am abus'd ; and my relief
Must be to loathe her. O curse of marriage,
That we can call these delicate creatures ours,
And not their appetites ! I had rather be a load,

And live upon the vapour of a dungeon,
Than keep a corner in the thing I love,
For others' uses. Yet, 'tis the plague of great
ones ;

Prerogativ'd are they less than the base ;
'Tis destiny unshunnable, like death ;
Even then this forked plague is fated to us,
When we do quicken. ¶ Desdemona comes :

Enter DESDEMONA, and EMILIA.

If she be false, O then heaven mocks itself !—
I'll not believe it.

Des. How now, my dear Othello ?

Your dinner, and the generous issuers,
By you invited, do attend your presence.

Oth. I am to blame.

Des. Why is your speech so faint ? are you not well ?

Oth. I have a pain upon my forehead here.

Des. Faith, that's with watching ; 'twill away
again :

Let me but bind it hard, within this hour
It will be well.

Oth. Your napkin ¶ is too little ;

[He puts the handkerchief from him and it drops.]

Let it alone. Come, I'll go in with you.

Des. I am very sorry that you are not well.

[Exit Oth. and Des.]

Emil. I am glad I have found this napkin ;
This was her first remembrance from the Moor :
My wayward husband hath a hundred times Wood'd me to steal it : but she so loves the token,

* Press hard his recreation to office.

† A term of reproach.

‡ Straps of leather by which a hawk is held on the fist.

¶ Intriguers.

¶ In the north of England and in Scotland this term for a handkerchief is still used

Scene III. OTHELLO, THE MOOR OF VENICE.

219

(For he conjur'd her, she would ever keep it.)
That she reserves it evermore about her,
To kiss and talk to. I'll have the work ta'en out,
And give it Iago:
What he'll do with it, heaven knows, not I;
I nothing, but to please his fantasy.

Enter IAGO.

Iago. How now! what do you here alone?

Emil. Do not you chide; I have a thing for you.

Iago. A thing for me?—It is a common thing,—

Emil. Ha!

Iago. To have a foolish wife.

Emil. O is that all? What will you give me now.

For that same handkerchief?

Iago. What handkerchief?

Emil. What handkerchief?

Why, that the Moor first gave to Desdemona;

That which you so often did bid me steal.

Iago. Hast stolen it from her?

Emil. No, taith; she let it drop by negligence;

And, to the advantage, I being here, took't up.

Look, here it is.

Iago. A good wench: give it me.

Emil. What will you do with it, that you have been so earnest

To have me filch it?

Iago. Why, what's that to you?

[Snatching it.

Emil. If it be not for some purpose of import,

Give it me again: Poor lady! she'll run mad,

When she shall lack it.

Iago. Be not you known of't; * I have use for it.

Go, leave me. [Exit EMILIA.

I will in Cassio's lodging lose this napkin,

And let him find it: Trifles, light as air,

Are, to the jealous, confirmation strong

As proofs of holy writ. This may do something.

The Moor already changes with my poison:—

Dangerous conceits are, in their natures, poi-

sons,

Which, at the first, are scarce found to distaste;

But, with a little act upon the blood,

Burn like the mines of sulphur.—I did say so:—

Enter OTHELLO.

Look where he comes! Not poppy, nor mandragora,†

Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world,

Shall ever medicine thee to that sweet sleep

Which thou ow'd'st‡ yesterday.

Oth. Ha! ha! false to me?

To me?

Iago. Why, how now, general? no more of

that.

Oth. Avaunt! begone! thou hast set me on the rack:—

I swear, 'tis better to be much abus'd,

Than but to know't a little.

Iago. How now, my lord?

Oth. What sense had I of her stolen hours of lust?

I saw it not; thought it not, it harm'd not me:

I slept the next night well, was free and merry;

I found not Cassio's kisses on her lips:

He that is robb'd, not wanting what is stolen,

Let him not know it, and he's not robb'd at all.

Iago. I am sorry to hear this.

Oth. I had been happy, if the general camp,

Pioneers§ and all, had tasted her sweet body,

So I had nothing known: O now, for ever,

Farewell the tranquil mind! farewell content!
Farewell the plumed troop, and the big wars,
That make ambition virtue! O farewell!
Farewell the neighing steed, and the shrill

trump,

The spirit-stirring drum, the ear-piercing fife,

The royal banner; and all quality, [war]

Pride, pomp, and circumstance of glorious

And, O you mortal engines, whose rude throats

The immortal Jove's dread clamours counterfeit,

Farewell! Othello's occupation's gone!

Iago. Is it possible!—My lord,—

Oth. Villain, be sure thou prove my love a

whore;

Be sure of it; give me the ocular proof;

[Taking him by the Throat.

Or, by the worth of mine eternal soul,

Thou hadst been better have been born a dog,

Than answer my wak'd wrath.

Iago. Is it come to this?

Oth. Make me to see it; or (at the least) so prove it,

That the probation bear no hinge, nor loop,

To hang a doubt on: or, woe upon thy lie!

Iago. My noble lord,—

Oth. If thou dost slander her, and torture me,

Never pray more: abandon all remorse; *

On horror's head horrors accumulate:

Do deeds to make heaven weep, all earth

amaz'd,

For nothing canst thou to damnation add,

Greater than that.

Iago. O grace! O heaven defend me!

Are you a man? have you a soul, or sense?—

God be wi' you: take mine office.—O wretched

fool,

That liv'st to make thine honesty a vice!—

O monstrous world! Take note, take note, O

world,

To be direct and honest, is not safe.—

I thank you for this profit; and, from hence,

I'll love no friend, since love breeds such offence.

Oth. Nay, stay:—Thou shouldst be honest.

Iago. I should be wise; for honesty's a fool,

And loses that it works for.

Oth. By the world, [not]

I think my wife be honest, and think she is

I think that thou art just, and think thou art

not; [fresh]

I'll have some proof: Her name, that was as

As Dian's visage, is now begrim'd and black

As mine own face.—If there be cords, or knives,

Poison, or fire, or suffocating streams,

I'll not endure it.—Would, I were satisfied!

Iago. I see, Sir, you are eaten up with passion: I do repent me that I put it to you. [sion:]

You would be satisfied?

Oth. Would I nay, I will.

Iago. And may: but, how? how satisfied, my

lord?

Would you, the supervisor, grossly gape on?

Behold her tupp'd!

Oth. Death and damnation! O!

Iago. It were a tedious difficulty, I think,

To bring them to that prospect: Damn them

then,

If ever mortal eyes do see them bolster,

More than their own! What then? how then?

What shall I say? Where's satisfaction?

It is impossible, you should see this,

Were they as prime as goats, as hot as monkeys,†

As salt as wolves in pride, and fools as gross

As ignorance made drunk. But, yet, I say,

If imputation and strong circumstances,

Which lead directly to the door of truth,

Will give you satisfaction, you may have it.

* All pity.

* Seem as if you knew nothing of the matter.

† The mandrake, or mandragora, was an opiate of the

† It were to be wished that this and many of the succeeding passages could be expunged; but the facts which are adduced as proofs of delirium, are necessarily of such a nature as cannot be expressed in terms of perfect delicacy.

Oth. Give me a living reason she's disloyal.

Jago. I do not like the office ;

But, sith I am entered in this canse so far,— Pick'd to it by foolish honesty and love,—
I will go on. I lay with Cassio lately ;
And, being troubled with a raging tooth,
I could not sleep.

There are a kind of men so loose of soul,
That in their sleeps will mutter their affairs ;
One of this kind is Cassio :

In sleep I heard him say,—*Sweet Desdemona,
Let us be wary, let us hide our loves!* [hand,
And then, Sir, would he gripe, and wring my Cry,—O sweet creature! and then kiss me
As if he pluck'd up kisses by the roots, [hard,
That grew upon my lips : then laid his leg
Over my thigh, and sigh'd, and kiss'd ; and then [floor !

Cried,—Cursed fate! that gave thee to the

Oth. But this denoted a foregone conclusion ;

'Tis a shrewd doubt, though it be but a dream.

Oth. I'll tear her all to pieces.

Jago. Nay, but be wise : yet we see nothing
done :

She may be honest yet. Tell me but this,—

Have you not sometimes seen a handkerchief,
Spotted with strawberries, in your wife's hand ?

Oth. I gave her such a one ; 'twas my first gift.

Jago. I know not that : but such a handkerchief,

(I am sure it was your wife's,) did I to-day
See Cassio wipe his beard with.

Oth. If it be that,—

Jago. If it be that, or any that was her's,
It speaks against her with the other proofs.

Oth. O that the slave had forty thousand
lives ;

One is too poor, too weak for my revenge !

Now do I see 'tis true.—Look here, Iago ;

All my fond love thus I do blow to heaven :

'Tis gone.—

Arise, black vengeance, from thy hollow cell !

Yield up, O love, thy crown, and hearted throne ; [fraught,

To tyrannous hate ! swell, bosom, with thy
For 'tis of aspic's tongues !

Jago. Pray, be content.

Oth. O blood, Iago, blood !

Jago. Patience, I say ; your mind, perhaps,
may change.

Oth. Never, Iago. Like to the Pontic sea,

Whose icy current and compulsive course

Ne'er feels retiring ebb, but keeps due on

To the Propontic and the Hellespont ;

Even so my bloody thoughts, with violent pace, [love,

Shall ne'er look back, ne'er ebb to humble

Not with vain thanks, but with acceptance

bounteous,

And will upon the instant put thee to't :

To furnish me with some swift means of death
For the fair devil. Now art thou my lieutenant-ant.

Jago. I am your own for ever. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The same.

Enter DESDEMONA, EMILIA, and CLOWN.

Des. Do you know, Sirrah, where lieutenant Cassio lies ?

Clo. I dare not say, he lies any where.

Des. Why, man ?

Clo. He is a soldier ; and for me to say a soldier lies, is stabbing.

Des. Go to ; Where lodges he ?

Clo. To tell you where he lodges, is to tell you where I lie.

Des. Can any thing be made of this ?

Clo. I know not where he lodges ; and for me to devise a lodging, and say, he lies here, or he lies there, were to lie in my own throat.

Des. Can you inquire him out, and be edified by report ?

Clo. I will catechise the world for him ; that is, make questions, and by them answer.

Des. Seek him, bid him come hither : tell him I have moved my lord in his behalf, and hope all will be well.

Clo. To do this is within the compass of man's wit ; and therefore I will attempt the doing it. [Exit.

Des. Where should I lose that handkerchief,
Emilia ?

Emil. I know not, madam.

Des. Believe me, I had rather have lost my purse

Full of crusadoes. * And but my noble Moor is true of mind, and made of no such baseness
As jealous creatures are, it were enough

To put him to ill-thinking.

Emil. Is he not jealous ?

Des. Who, he ? I think the sun where he was born,

Drew all such humours from him.

Emil. Look, where he comes.

Des. I will not leave him now, till Cassio
Be call'd to him.—How is't with you, my lord ?

Enter OTHELLO.

Oth. Well, my good lady.—[Aside.] O hardness to dissemble !—

How do you do, Desdemona ?

Des. Well, my good lord.

Oth. Give me your hand : This hand is moist,
my lady.

Des. It yet has felt no age, nor known no
sorrow.

Oth. This argues fruitfulness, and liberal heart ;— [quires

Hot, hot, and moist : This hand of your's re-
A sequester from liberty, fasting and prayer,
Much castigation, † exercise devout ;

For here's a young and sweating devil here,
That commonly rebels. 'Tis a good hand,

A frank one.

Des. You may, indeed, say so ;

For 'twas that hand that gave away my heart.

Oth. A liberal hand : The hearts of old gave
hands ;

But our new heraldry is—hands, not hearts.

Des. I cannot speak of this, Come now, your promise.

Oth. What promise, chuck ?

Des. I have sent to bid Cassio come speak
with you.

Oth. I have a salt and sullen rheum offends
Lend me thy handkerchief. [sue.

Des. Here, my lord.

Oth. That which I gave you.

* A Portuguese coin, &c.

† Penance, discipline.

Des. I have it not about me.

Oth. Not?

Des. No, indeed, my lord.

Oth. That is a fault:

That handkerchief

Did an Egyptian to my mother give;

She was a charmer,* and could almost read

The thoughts of people: she told her, while she kept it, [ther

'Twould make her amiable, and subdue my fa-
Entirely to her love; but if she lost it,

Or made a gift of it, my father's eye [hunt

Should hold her loathly, and his spirits should

After new fancies: She, dying, gave it me;

And bid me, when my fate would have me
wife,

To give it her. I did so: and take heed oft,

Make it a darling like your precious eye;

To lose or give't away, were such perdition,

As nothing else could match.

Des. Is it possible?

Oth. 'Tis true, there's magic in the web of it:

A sibyl, that had number'd in the world

The sun to make two hundred compasses,

In her prophetic fury sew'd the work;

The worms were hallow'd, that did breed the silk;

And it was died in mummy,† which the skillful

Conserv'd of maidens' hearts.

Des. Indeed! is't true?

Oth. Most veritable; therefore look to't well.

Des. Then 'would to heaven that I had never seen it.

Oth. Ha! wherefore?

Des. Why do you speak so startingly and rash?

Oth. Is't lost? is't gone? speak, is it out of the way?

Des. Heaven bless us!

Oth. Say you?

Des. It is not lost; But what an if it were?

Oth. Ha!

Des. I say, it is not lost.

Oth. Fetch't, let me see it.

Des. Why, so I can, Sir, but I will not now;

This is a trick, to put me from my suit;

I pray, let Cassio be receiv'd again.

Oth. Fetch me that handkerchief; my mind mis-gives.

Des. Come, come;

You'll never meet a more sufficient man.

Oth. The handkerchief,—

Des. I pray, talk me of Cassio.

Oth. The handkerchief,—

Des. A man that, all his time,

Hath founded his good fortune on your love;

Shar'd dangers with you;—

Oth. The handkerchief,—

Des. In sooth,

You are to blame.

Oth. Away! [Exit OTHELLO.

Emil. Is not this man jealous?

Des. I ne'er saw this before.

Sure, there's some wonder in this handker-

chief:

I am most unhappy in the loss of it.

Emil. 'Tis not a year or two shows us a man:

They are all but stomachs, and we all but food;

They eat us hungerly, and when they are full,

They belch us. Look you! Cassio, and my husband.

Enter IAGO and CASSIO.

Iago. There is no other way; 'tis she must

do't:

And, lo, the happiness I go, and importune her.

Des. How now, good Cassio! what's the news

with you?

Cas. Madam, my former suit: I do beseech

you,

That, by your virtuous means, I may again

Exist, and be a member of his love,

Whom I, with all the duty of my heart,

Entirely honour; I would not be delay'd:

If my offence be of such mortal kind,

That neither service past, nor present sorrows,

Nor purpos'd merit in futurity,

Can ransom me into his love again,

But to know so must be my benefit;

So shall I clothe me in a forc'd content,

And shut myself up in some other course,

To fortune's alms.

Des. Alas! thrice-gentle Cassio,

My advocacy is not now in tune;

My lord is not my lord; nor should I know him,

Were he in favour,* as in humour, alter'd.

So help me, every spirit sanctified,

As I have spoken for you all my best;

And stood within the blank† of his displeasure,

For my free speech! You must awhile be patient:

What I can do, I will; and more I will,

Than for myself I dare: let that suffice you.

Iago. Is my lord angry?

Emil. He went hence but now,

And certainly in strange unequity.

Iago. Can he be angry? I have seen the cannon,

When it hath blown his ranks into the air,

And, like the devil, from his very arm

Puff'd his own brother;—And can he be angry?

Something of moment, then: I will go meet

him;

There's matter in't indeed, if he be angry.

Des. I pr'ythee, do so.—Something, sure, of state,— [Exit IAGO.

tice,‡

Nor of them look for such observances [zods;

As fit the bridal:—Beshrew me much, Emilia,

I was (unhandsome warrior as I am),

Arraighing his unkindness with my soul;

But now I find, I had subor'd the witness,

And he's indited falsely.

Emil. Pray heaven, it be state matters, as you think;

And no conception, nor no jealous toy,

Concerning you.

Des. Alas, the day! I never gave him cause.

Emil. But jealous souls will not be answered so:

They are not ever jealous for the cause,

But jealous for they are jealous: 'tis a monster,

Begot upon itself, born on itself.

Des. Heaven keep that monster from Othello's mind!

Emil. Lady, amen.

Des. I will go seek him.—Cassio walk here-

about:

If I do find him fit, I'll move your suit,

And seek to effect it to my uttermost.

Cas. I humbly thank your ladyship.

[Exit DESDEMONA and EMILIA.

Enter BIANCA.

* Bian. Save you, friend Cassio!

Cas. What make you from home?

How is it with you, my most fair Bianca?

I'faith, sweet love, I was coming to your house.

Bian. And I was going to your lodging,

Cassio. [lights?

‡ The nuptial feast.

Eight score eight hours? and lovers' absent hours,

More tedious than the dial eight score times?
O weary reckoning!

Cas. Pardon me, Bianca;
I have this while with leaden thoughts been press'd;

But I shall, in a more continuant time,*
Strike off this score of absence. Sweet Bianca, [Giving her DESDEMONA'S Handkerchief.]
Take me this work out.†

Bian. O Cassio, whence came this?
This is some token from a newer friend.
To the felt absence now I feel a cause:
Is it come to this? Well, well.

Cas. Woman, go to!
Throw your vile guesses in the devil's teeth,
From whence you have them. You are jealous now,

That this is from some mistress, some reinem-
No, in good troth, Bianca.

Bian. Why, whose is it?

Cas. I know not, sweet: I found it in my chamber.

I like the work well; ere it be demanded,
(As like enough, it will,) I'd have it copied:
Take it, and do't; and leave me for this time.

Bian. Leave you! wherefore?

Cas. I do attend here on the general;
And think it no addition, nor my wish
To have him see me woman'd.

Bian. Why, I pray you?

Cas. Not that I love you not.

Bian. But that you do not love me.
I pray you, bring me on the way a little,
And say if I shall see you soon at night.

Cas. 'Tis but a little way that I can bring you,
For I attend here: but I'll see you soon.

Bian. 'Tis very good: I must be circumstant'd.‡ [Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The same.

Enter OTHELLO and IAGO.

Iago. Will you think so?

Oth. Think so, Iago?

Iago. What,

To kiss in private?

Oth. An unauthorized kiss.

Iago. Or to be naked with her friend abed,
An hour, or more, not meaning any harm?

Oth. Naked abed, Iago, not mean harm?
It is hypocrisy against the devil:

They that mean virtuously, and yet do so,
The devil their virtue tempts, and they tempt heaven.

Iago. So they do nothing, 'tis a venial slip:
But if I give my wife a handkerchief,—

Oth. What then?

Iago. Why then, 'tis her's, my lord; and being her's,

She may, I think, bestow't on any man.

Oth. She is protectress of her honour too;
May she give that?

Iago. Her honour is an essence that's not seen;

They have it very oft, that have it not:

But, for the handkerchief,—

Oth. By heaven, I would most gladly have forgot it:—

Thou said'st,—O it comes o'er my memory,

As doth the raven o'er the infected house,

Boding to all, he had my handkerchief.

Iago. Ay, what of that?

Oth. That's not so good, now.

* Time less interrupted. ‡ The meaning is not, pick out of the work, but copy it in another handkerchief. † Give way to circumstances. ‡ The raven was thought to be a constant attendant on a house infected with the plague.

Iago. What, if I had said, I had seen him do you wrong!

Or heard him say,—As knaves be such abroad
Who having, by their own importunate suit,
Or voluntary dotage of some mistress,
Convinced or supplied * them, cannot choose
But they must blush—

Oth. Hath he said any thing?

Iago. He hath, my lord; but be you well
assur'd,

No more than he'll unswear.

Oth. What hath he said?

Iago. 'Faith, that he did,—I know not what he did.

Oth. What? what?

Iago. Lie—

Oth. With her?

Iago. With her, on her; what you will.

Oth. Lie with her! lie on her!—We say, lie on her, when they belie her: Lie with her:
that's fulsome.—Handkerchief,—confessions,— handkerchief.—To confess, and be hanged for his labour.†—First to be hanged, and then to confess:—I tremble at it. Nature would not invest herself in such shadowing passion, without some instruction. It is not words, that shake me thus:
—Plish!—Noses, ears, and lips:—Is it possible?—
Confess!—Handkerchief!—O devil!—

[Falls in a Trance.]

Iago. Work on,

My medicine, work! Thus credulous fools are caught;

And many worthy and chaste dames, even thus,
All guiltless meet reproach.—What, ho! my
lord!

Enter CASSIO.

My lord, I say! Othello!—How now, Cassio?

Cas. What is the matter?

Iago. My lord is fallen into an epilepsy;

This is his second fit; he had one yesterday.

Cas. Rub him about the temples.

Iago. No, forbear:

The lethargy must have his quiet course:
If not, he foams at mouth; and, by and by,
Breaks out to savage madness. Look, he stirs:
Do you withdraw yourself a little while,
He will recover straight; when he is gone,
I would on great occasion speak with you.—

[Exit CASSIO.]

How is it general? have you not hurt your
head?

Oth. Dost thou mock me?

Iago. I mock you! no, by heaven:

* Would you would bear your fortunes like a man.

Oth. A horned man's a monster, and a beast.

Iago. There's many a beast then in a populous city,

And many a civil monster.

Oth. Did he confess it?

Iago. Good Sir, be a man;

Think every bearded fellow, that's but yok'd,
May draw with you: there's millions now alive,
That nightly lie in those unproper beds,
Which they dare swear peculiar; your case is better.

O 'tis the spite of hell, the fiend's arch-mock,
To lip a wanton in a secure couch,
And to suppose her chaste! No, let me know;
And, knowing what I am, I know what she shall be.

Oth. O thou art wise; 'tis certain.

Iago. Stand you awhile apart:

Confine yourself but in a patient list.‡

Whilst you were here, ere while mad with your grief,

(A passion most unsuiting such a man.)

Cassio came hither: I shifted him away,

And laid good 'scuse upon your ecstasy;
Bade him anon return, and here speak with
me;

The which he promis'd. Do but enlave § your.

¶ Hide.

And mark the sneers, the gibes, and notable
scorns,

That dwell in every region of his face:
For I will make him tell the tale anew,—
Where, how, how oft, how long ago, and when
He hath, and is again to cope your wife;
I say, but mark his gesture. Marry, patience;
Or I shall say, you are all in all in spleen,
And nothing of a man.

Oth. Dost thou hear, Iago?
I will be found most cunning in my patience;
But (dost thou hear?) most bloody.

Iago. That's not amiss;
But yet keep time in all. Will you withdraw;
[OTHELLO withdraws.]

Now will I question Cassio of Bianca,
A housewife, that, by selling her desires,
Buys herself bread and clothes: it is a creature,
That doates on Cassio,—as 'tis the strumpet's plague,

To beguile many, and be beguild by one;
He, when he hears of her, cannot refrain
From the excess of laughter:—Here he comes:—

Re-enter Cassio.

As he shall smile, Othello shall go mad;
And his unbookish,* jealousy must construe Poor Cassio's smiles, gestures, and light behaviour [tenant]

Quite in the wrong.—How do you now, lieut-
Cas. The worse, that you give me the addi-
Whose want even kills me. [tion]

Iago. Ply Desdemona well, and you are sure of't.

Now, if this suit lay in Bianca's power,
[Speaking lower.]

How quickly should you speed?

Cas. Alas, poor catiff!

Oth. Look, how he laughs already! [Aside.]

Iago. I never knew a woman love man so.

Cas. Alas, poor rogue! I think I faith she loves me. [Aside.]

Oth. Now he denies it faintly, and laughs it out. [Aside.]

Iago. Do you hear, Cassio?

Oth. Now he importunes him

To tell it o'er: Go to; well said, well said.

[Aside.]

Iago. She gives it out, that you shall marry

Do you intend it? [her:]

Cas. Ha, ha, ha!

Oth. Do you triumph, Roman? do you triumph! [Aside.]

Cas. I marry her!—What a customer!† I pr'ythee bear some charity, to my wit; do not think it so unwholesome. Ha, ha, ha!

Oth. So, so, so, so: They laugh that win.

[Aside.]

Iago. 'Faith, the cry goes that you shall marry her.

Cas. Pr'ythee say true.

Iago. I am a very villain else.

Oth. Have you scored me? Well. [Aside.]

Cas. This is the monkey's own giving out:

she is persuaded I will marry her, out of her own love and flattery, not out of my promise.

Oth. Iago beckons me; now he begins the story. [Aside.]

Cas. She was here even now: she haunts me in every place. I was, the other day, talking on the sea-bank with certain Venetians; and thither comes this bauble; by this hand, she falls thus about my neck;—

Oth. Crying, O dear Cassio! as it were: his gesture imports it. [Aside.]

Cas. So hangs, and lolls, and weeps upon me;

so hales and pulls me: ha, ha, ha!

Oth. Now he tells, how she pluck'd him to my chamber: O I see that nose of yours, but not that dog I shall throw it to. [Aside.]

Cas. Well, I must leave her company.

* Ignorant. † Title of Lieutenant.
‡ A common woman.

Iago. Before me! look where she comes.

Enter Bianca.

Cas. 'Tis such another fitchew!† marry, a perfumed one.—What do you mean by this haunting of me?

Bian. Let the devil and his dam haunt you!
What did you mean by that same handkerchief you gave me even now? I was a fine fool to take it. I must take out the whole work!—A likely piece of work, that you should find it in your chamber, and not know who left it there!
This is some minx's token, and I must take out the work? There,—give it your bobby-horse:
whosoever you had it, I'll take out no work on't.

Cas. How now, my sweet Bianca? how now?
how now?

Oth. By heaven, that should be my handkerchief! [Aside.]

Bian. And you'll come to supper to-night, you may: an you will not, come when you are next prepared for. [Exit.]

Iago. After her, after her.

Cas. 'Faith I must, she'll rail in the streets
else.

Iago. Will you sup there?

Cas. 'Faith, I intend so.

Iago. Well, I may chance to see you; for I would very fain speak with you.

Cas. Pr'ythee, come; Will you?

Iago. Go to: say no more. [Exit Cassio.]

Oth. How shall I murder him, Iago?

Iago. Did you perceive how he laughed at his vice?

Oth. O Iago!

Iago. And did you see the handkerchief?

Oth. Was that mine?

Iago. Your's by this hand: and to see how he prizes the foolish woman, your wife! she gave it to him, and he hath given it his whore.

Oth. I would have him nine years a killing:—A fine woman! a fair woman! a sweet

woman!

Iago. Nay, you must forget that.

Oth. Ay, let her rot, and perish, and be damned to-night; for she shall not live: No, my heart is turned to stone; I strike it, and it hurts

my hand. O the world hath not a sweeter creature; she might lie by an emperor's side, and command him tasks.

Iago. Nay, that's not your way.

Oth. Hang her! I do but say what she is:—

So delicate with her needle!—An admirable musician! O she will sing the savageness out of a bear!—Of so high and plenteous wit and invention!

Iago. She's the worse for all this.

Oth. O a thousand, a thousand times:—And then, of so gentle a condition!†

Iago. Ay, too gentle.

Oth. Nay, that's certain: But yet the pity of it, Iago!—O Iago, the pity of it, Iago!

Iago. If you are so fond over her iniquity, give her patent to offend; for, if it touch not you,

it comes near nobody.

Oth. I will chop her into messes:—Cuckold

me!

Iago. O 'tis foul in her.

Oth. With mine officer!

Iago. That's fouler.

Oth. Get me some poison, Iago; this night

—I'll not expostulate with her, lest her body and beauty unprovide my mind again: this night,

Iago.

Iago. Do it not with poison, strangle her in her bed, even the bed she hath contaminated.

Oth. Good, good: the justice of it pleases;

very good.

Iago. And for Cassio,—let me be his undertaker: You shall hear more by midnight.

[A Trumpet within.]

Oth. Excellent good.—What trumpet is that same?

* A pole-cat. † Of so sweet a disposition.

Iago. Something from Venice, sure. 'Tis Lodovico,
Come from the duke: and, see, your wife is with him.

Enter LODOVICO, DESDEMONA, and Attendants.

Lod. 'Save you, worthy general!

Oth. With all my heart, Sir.

Lod. The duke and senators of Venice greet you.

Oth. I kiss the instrument of their pleasures.

Des. And what's the news, good cousin Lodovico?

Iago. I am very glad to see you, signior; Welcome to Cyprus.

Lod. I thank you: How does lieutenant Cassio?

Iago. Lives, Sir.

Des. Cousin, there's fallen between him and my lord

An unkind breach: but you shall make all well.

Oth. Are you sure of that?

Des. My lord?

Oth. This fail you not to do, as you will—[Reads.]

Lod. He did not call; he's busy in the paper. Is there division 'twixt my lord and Cassio?

Des. A most unhappy one! I would do much To atone * them, for the love I bear to Cassio.

Oth. Fire and brimstone!

Des. My lord?

Oth. Are you wise?

Des. What, is he angry?

Lod. May be, the letter mov'd him;

For, as I think, they do command him home, Deputing Cassio in his government.

Des. By my troth, I am glad on't.

Oth. Indeed.

Des. My lord?

Oth. I am glad to see you mad.

Des. How, sweet Othello?

Oth. Devil.

Des. I have not deserv'd this.

Lod. My lord, this would not be believ'd in Venice,

Though I should swear I saw it: 'Tis very much; Make her amends, she weeps.

Oth. O devil, devil!

If that the earth could teem with woman's tears, Each drop she falls would prove a crocodile:— Out of my sight!

Des. I will not stay to offend you.

Lod. Truly, an obedient lady:—

I do beseech your lordship, call her back.

Oth. Mistress,—

Des. My lord?

Oth. What would you with her, Sir?

Lod. Who, I, my lord?

Oth. Ay, you did wish, that I would make her turn:

Sir, she can turn and turn, and yet go on, And turn again: and she can weep, Sir, weep; And she's obedient, as you say,—obedient,— Very obedient:—Proceed you in your tears.— Concerning this, Sir,—O well-painted passion! I am commanded home:—Get you away; I'll send for you anon.—Sir, I obey the mandate,

And will return to Venice:—Hence:—avaunt!

Exit DESDEMONA.
Cassio shall have my place. And, Sir, to-night,

I do entreat that we may sup together. And you are welcome, Sir, to Cyprus.—Goats, and monkeys!

Exit.
Lod. Is this the noble Moor whom our senate

Call all-in-all sufficient?—Thus the noble man—Whom passion could not shake? whose solid virtue

Was shot of accident, nor dart of chance, And neither graze nor pierce?

* Reconcile.

Iago. He is much chang'd.

Lod. Are his wits safe? is he not light of brain?

Iago. He is that he is; I may not breathe my censure.

What he might be, if what he might, he is not,— I would to heaven, he were.

Lod. What, strike his wife!

Iago. Faith, that was not so well; Yet 'would That stroke would prove the worst.

Lod. Is it his use?

Or did the letters work upon his blood, And new-create this fault?

Iago. Alas, alas!

It is not honesty in me to speak

What I have seen and known. You shall observe him;

And his own courses will denote him so,

That I may save my speech: Do but go after,

And mark how he continues.

Lod. I am sorry that I am deceiv'd in him.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—A Room in the Castle.

Enter OTHELLO and EMILIA.

Oth. You have seen nothing then?

Emil. Nor ever heard; nor ever did suspect.

Oth. Yes, you have seen Cassio and she together.

Emil. But then I saw no harm, and then I heard.

Each syllable that breath made up between

Oth. What, did they never whisper?

Emil. Never, my lord.

Oth. Nor send you out o'the way?

Emil. Never.

Oth. To fetch her fan, her gloves, her mask, nor nothing?

Emil. Never, my lord.

Oth. That's strange.

Emil. I durst, my lord, to wager she is honest,

Lay down my soul at stake: if you think Remove your thought; it doth abuse your bosom.

If any wretch hath put this in your head,

Let heaven requite it with the serpent's curse!

For if she be not honest, chaste, and true, There's no man happy; the purest of them is foul as slander.

Oth. Bld her come hither:—go—

[Exit EMILIA.]

She says enough:—yet she's a simple bawd, That cannot say as much. This is a subtle

whore,

A closet-lock-and-key of villainous secrets: And yet she'll kneel and pray; I have seen her do't.

Re-enter EMILIA with DESDEMONA.

Des. My lord, what is your will?

Oth. Pray, chuck, come hither.

Des. What is your pleasure?

Oth. Let me see your eyes;

Look in my face.

Des. What horrible fancy's this?

Oth. Some of your function, mistress;

[To EMILIA]

Leave procreants alone, and shut the door;

Cough, or cry hem, if any body come:

Your mystery, your mystery:—nay, despatch.

[Exit EMILIA.]

Des. Upon my knees, what doth your speech import?

I understand a fury in your words,

But not the words.

Oth. Why, what art thou?

Des. Your wife, my lord; your true And loyal wife.

Oth. Come, swear it, damn thyself; Lest, being like one of heaven, the devils themselves

Should fear to seize thee: therefore be double-Swear thou art honest.

[Damn'd.]

Scene II. OTHELLO, THE MOOR OF VENICE.

225

Des. Heaven doth truly know it.

Oth. Heaven truly knows, that thou art false as hell.

Des. To whom, my lord? with whom? How am I false?

Oth. O Desdemona!—away! away! away!

Des. Alas, the heavy day!—Why do you weep?

Am I the occasion of these tears, my lord? If, haply, you my father do suspect, An instrument of this your calling back, Lay not your blame on me; if you have lost him, Why, I have lost him too.

Oth. Had it pleas'd heaven

To try me with affliction; had he rain'd All kinds of sores and shames on my bare head;

Steep'd me in poverty to the very lips; Given to captivity me and my utmost hopes; I should have found in some part of my soul A drop of patience: but (alas!) to make me A fixed figure for the hand of scorn To point his slow unmoving finger at,—

O! O! Yet could I bear that too; well, very well: But there, where I have garner'd* up my heart, Where either I must live, or bear no life, The fountain from the which my current runs, Or else dries up; to be discarded thence! Or keep it as a cistern, for foul toads To knot and gender in!—turn thy complexion there!

Patience, thou young and rose-lipp'd cherubim; Ay, there, look grim as hell!

Des. I hope, my noble lord esteems me honest.

Oth. O ay; as summer flies are in the shambles,

That quicken even with blowing. O thou weed, Who art so lovely fair, and smell'st so sweet, That the sense aches at thee.—Would, thou had'st ne'er been born!

Des. Alas! what ignorant sin have I committed?

Oth. Was this fair paper, this most goodly book,

Made to write whored-upon? What committed! Committed!—O thou public commoner! I should make very forges of my cheeks, That would to cinders burn up modesty, Did I but speak thy deeds.—What committed! Heaven stops the nose at it, and the moon winks;

The hawdy wind, that kisses all it meets, Is hush'd within the hollow mine of earth, And will not hear it: What committed!—Impudent strumpet!

Des. By heaven, you do me wrong.

Oth. Are not you a strumpet?

Des. No, as I am a Christian:

If to preserve this vessel for my lord, From any other foul unlawful touch, Be—not to be a strumpet, I am none.

Oth. What, not a whore?

Des. No, as I shall be saved.

Oth. Is it possible?

Des. O heaven, forgive us!

Oth. I cry you mercy, then:

I took you for that cunning whore of Venice, That married with Othello.—You, mistress,

Re-enter EMILIA.

That have the office opposite to Saint Peter, And keep the gate of hell; You! you! ay, you! We have done our course; there's money for your pains;

I pray you turn the key, and keep our counsel.

[Exit.]

Emil. Alas, what does this gentlemen conceive?

How do you, madam? how do you, my good lady?

Des. 'Faith, half asleep.

Emil. Good madam, what's the matter with my lord?

Des. With who?

Emil. Why, with my lord, madam.

Des. Who is thy lord?

Emil. He that is your's, sweet lady.

Des. I have none: Do not talk to me, Emilia;

I cannot weep; nor answer I have none, But what should go by water. Pr'see, to-night

Lay on my bed my wedding sheets,—remember;—

And call thy husband hither.

Emil. Here is a change, indeed! [Exit.]

Des. 'Tis meet I should be us'd so, very meet.

How have I been behav'd, that he might stick The small'st opinion on my great'st abuse?

Re-enter EMILIA, with IAGO.

Iago. What is your pleasure, madam? How is it with you?

Des. I cannot tell. Those, that do teach young babes,

Do it with gentle means and easy tasks: He might have chid me so; for, in good faith, I am a child to chiding.

Iago. What's the matter, lady?

Emil. Alas, Iago, my lord hath so bewhord her,

Thrown such despite and heavy terms upon her, As true hearts cannot bear.

Des. Am I that name, Iago?

Iago. What name, fair lady?

Des. Such as, she says, my lord did say I was.

Emil. He call'd her, whore; a beggar, in his drink,

Could not have laid such terms upon his callet.*

Iago. Why did he so?

Des. I do not know; I am sure I am none such.

Iago. Do not weep, do not weep; Alas, the day!

Emil. Has she forsook so many noble matches, Her father, and her country, and her friends,

To be call'd—where? would it not make one weep?

Des. It is my wretched fortune.

Iago. Bewhew him for it!

How comes this trick upon him?

Des. Nay, heaven doth know.

Emil. I will be hang'd, if some eternal villain, Some busy and insinuating rogue,

Some cogging cozening slave, to get some office,

Hath not devis'd this slander; I'll be hang'd.

Iago. Fie, there is no such man: it is impossible.

Des. If any such there be, heaven pardon him!

Emil. A halter pardon him! and hell gnaw his bones!

Why should he call her, whore? who keeps her company?

What place? what time? what form? what likelihood?

The Moor's abus'd by some most villainous Some base notorious knave, some scurvy fellow:—

O heaven, that such companions! thou'dst And put in every honest hand a whip,

To lash the rascal naked through the world, Even from the east to the west!

Iago. Speak within door.

Emil. O fie upon him! some such squire he was,

That turn'd your wit the seamy side† without, And made you to suspect me with the Moor.

Iago. You are a fool; go to.

Des. O good Iago,

What shall I do to win my lord again?

* Treasured up.

* His drab.

† Fellows.

‡ Inside out.

Good friend, go to him; for, by this light of heaven,

I know not how I lost him. Here I kneel:—
If e'er my will did trespass 'gainst his love,
Either in discourse of thought, or actual deed;
Or that mine eyes, mine ears, or any sense,
Delighted them in any other form;
Or that I do not yet, and ever did,
And ever will,—though he do shake me off
To beggary divorce,—love him dearly,
Comfort forswear me! Unkindness may do much;

And his unkindness may defeat my life,
But never taint my love. I cannot say, whore;
It does abhor me, now I speak the word;
To do the act that might the addition* earn,
Not the world's mass of vanity could make me.

Iago. I pray you, be content: 'tis but his humour;

The business of the state does him offence,
And he does chide with you.

Des. If 'twere no other,—

Iago. It is but so, I warrant you.

[Trumpets.]

Hark, how these instruments summon to supper!

And the great messengers of Venice stay:

So in, and weep not; all things shall be well.

[Exeunt DESDEMONA and EMILIA.]

Enter RODRIGO.

How now, Rodrigo?

Rod. I do not find that thou deal'st justly with me!

Iago. What in the contrary?

Rod. Every day thou dost't me with some device, Iago: and rather (as it seems to me now) keep'st from me all conveniency, than suppliest me with the least advantage of hope. I will, indeed, no longer endure it: Nor am I yet persuaded to put up in peace what already I have foolishly suffered.

Iago. Will you hear me, Rodrigo?

Rod. 'Faith, I have heard too much; for your words and performances are no kin together.

Iago. You charge me most unjustly.

Rod. With nought but truth. I have wasted myself out of my means. The jewels you have had from me, to deliver to Desdemona, would half have corrupted a votarist: You have told me—she has received them, and returned me expectations and comforts of sudden respect and acquaintance; but I find none.

Iago. Well; go to; very well.

Rod. Very well I go to! I cannot go to man; nor 'tis not very well: By this hand, I say it is very scurvy; and begin to find myself fobbed in it.

Iago. Very well.

Rod. I tell you, 'tis not very well. I will make myself known to Desdemona: If she will return me my jewels, I will give over my suit, and repent my unlawful solicitation: if not, assure yourself, I will seek satisfaction of you.

Iago. You have said now.

Rod. Ay, and I have said nothing, but what I protest intendment of doing.

Iago. Why, now I see thee'st mettle in thee; and even, from this instant, do build on thee a better opinion than ever before. Give me thy hand, Rodrigo: Thou hast taken against me a most just exception; but yet I protest I have dealt most directly in thy affair.

Rod. It hath not appeared.

Iago. I grant indeed, it hath not appeared; and your suspicion is not without wit and judgment. But, Rodrigo, if thou hast that within thee indeed, which I have greater reason to believe now than ever,—I mean, purpose, courage, and valour,—this might show it: If thou the next night following enjoyest not Desdemona, take me from this world with treachery, and devise engines for my life.*

Rod. Well, what is it? is it within reason, and compass?

Iago. Sir, there is especial commission come from Venice, to depute Cassio in Othello's place.

Rod. Is that true? why, then Othello and Desdemona return again to Venice.

Iago. O no; he goes into Mauritania, and takes away with him the fair Desdemona, unless his abode be lingered here by some accident; wherein none can be so determinate, as the removing of Cassio.

Rod. How do you mean—removing of him?

Iago. Why, by making him incapable of Othello's place; knocking out his brains.

Rod. And that you would have me do?

Iago. Ay; if you dare do yourself a profit, and a right. He sups to-night with a barlot, and thither will I go to him;—he knows not yet of his honourable fortune; if you will watch his going thence, (which I will fashion to fall out between twelve and one,) you may take him at your pleasure: I will be near to second your attempt, and he shall fall between us. Come, stand not amazed at it, but go along with me; I will show you such a necessity in his death, that you shall think yourself bound to put it on him. It is now high supper-time, and the night grows to waste; about it.

Rod. I will hear further reason for this.

Iago. And you shall be satisfied. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Another Room in the Castle.

Enter OTHELLO, LODOVICO, DESDEMONA, EMILIA, and Attendants.

Lod. I do beseech you, Sir, trouble yourself no further.

Oth. O pardon me; 'twill do me good to walk.

Lod. Madam, good night; I humbly thank your ladyship.

Des. Your honour is most welcome.

Oth. Will you walk, Sir?—

Oh!—Desdemona,—

Des. My lord?

Oth. Get you to bed on the instant, I will be returned forthwith: dismiss your attendant there: look, it be done.

Des. I will, my lord.

[Exeunt OTHELLO, LODOVICO, and Attendants.]

Emil. How goes it now? he looks gentler than he did.

Des. He says, he will return incontinent;† He hath commanded me to go to bed, And bade me to dismiss you.

Emil. Dismiss me!

Des. It was his bidding; therefore, good Emilia,

Give me my nightly wearing, and adieu: We must not now displease him.

Emil. I would, you had never seen him!

Des. So would not I: my love doth so approve him, [frowns—
That even his stubbornness, his checks, and (Pr'ythee unpin me)—have grace and favour in them.

Emil. I have laid those sheets you bade me on the bed.

Des. All's one:—Good father! how foolish are our minds!—

If I do die before thee, pr'ythee shroud me In one of those same sheets.

Emil. Come, come, you talk.

Des. My mother had a maid called Barbara; She was in love; and he she lov'd prov'd mad,† And did forsake her: she had a song of willow, An old thug 'twas, but it express'd her fortune,

* This. † Put't me off. ‡ Requital.

* Contrive means to destroy me. † Immediately. ‡ Instant.

And she died singing it : That song, to-night,
Will not go from my mind ; I have much to do,
But to go hang my head all at one side,
And sing it like poor Barbara. Prythee despatch.

Emil. Shall I go fetch your night-gown ?

Des. No, unpin me here.—

This Lodovico is a proper man.

Emil. A very handsome man.

Des. And he speaks well.

Emil. I know a lady in Venice, who would have walked barefoot to Palestine, for a touch of his nether lip.

I.

Des. The poor soul sat sighing by a sycamore tree,
Sing all a green willow ;

[Singing.]
Her hand on her bosom, her head on her knee,
Sing willow, willow, willow :

The fresh streams ran by her, and mur-mur'd her moans ;

Sing willow, &c.

Her salt tears fell from her, and soften'd
the stones ;

Lay by these ;

Sing willow, willow, willow ;

Prythee, lie thee ; he'll come anon.—

Sing all a green willow must be my garland.

II.

Let nobody blame him, his scorn I approve,—

Nay, that's not next.—Hark ! who is it that knocks ?

Emil. It is the wind.

Des. I call'd my love, false love ; but what said he then ?

Sing willow, &c.
If I court no women, you'll couch with no men.

So, get thee gone ; good night. Mine eyes do
Dropt that bode weeping ?

Emil. 'Tis neither here nor there.

Des. I have heard it said so.—O these men,
these men !

Dost thou in conscience think,—tell me, Emil,
That there be women who abuse their husbands
in such gross kind ?

Emil. There be some such, no question.

Des. Wouldst thou do such a deed for all the
world ?

Emil. Why, would not you ?

Des. No, by this heavenly light !

Emil. Nor I neither by this heavenly light ;

I might do't as well i'the dark.

Des. Wouldst thou do such a deed for all the
world ?

Emil. The world is a huge thing : 'Tis a far a small vice.

Des. Good troth, I think thou wouldst not.

Emil. By my troth, I think I should ; and undo't, when I had done. Marry, I would not do such a thing for a joint-ring ; nor for measures of lawn ; nor for gowns, petticoats, nor caps, nor any petty exhibition : but, for the whole world.—Why, who would not make her husband a cuckold, to make him a monarch ? I should venture purgatory for't.

Des. Beshrew me, if I would do such a wrong for the whole world.

Emil. Why, the wrong is but a wrong i'the world ; and, having the world for your labour,
'tis a wrong in your own world, and you might quickly make it right.

Des. I do not think there is any such woman.

* No for more.

Emil. Yes, a dozen ; and as many
To the vantage, as would store the world they play'd for.

But, I do think, it is their husbands' faults,
If wives do fall : Say, that they slack their duties,

And pour our treasures into foreign laps ;
Or else break out in peevish jealousies, Throwing restraint upon us ; or, say, they strike us,

Or scant our former having * in despite :
Why, we have galls ; and, though we have some
grace,

Yet we have some revenge. Let husbands know,
Their wives have sense like them : they see,
and smell,

And have their palates both for sweet and sour,
As husbands have. What is it that they do
When they change us for others ? Is it sport ?

I think it is ; And doth affection breed it ?
I think, it doth. Is't frailty, that thus errs ?
It is so too : And have not we affections ?

Desires for sport ? and frailty, as men have ?
Then, let them use us well : else, let them
know,

The ills we do, their ills instruct us to.

Des. Good night, good night : Heaven me such usage send,
Not to pick bad from bad ; but, by bad, mend !

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A Street.

Enter IAGO and RODERIGO.

Iago. Here, stand behind this bulk ; straight will he come :

Wear thy good rapier bare,† and put it home ;
Quick, quick ; fear nothing ; I'll be at thy elbow :

It makes us, or it mars us ; think on that,
And fix most firm thy resolution.

Rod. Be near at hand ; I may miscarry in't.

Iago. Here, at thy hand ; be bold, and take thy sword.

[Retires to a little distance.]

Rod. I have no great devotion to the deed ;
And yet he has given me satisfying reasons :—

'Tis but a man gone :—forth, my sword ; he dies.
[Goes to his stand.]

Iago. I have rubb'd this young quat almost to the sense,‡

And he grows angry. Now, whether he kill Cas-sio or Cassio him, or each do kill the other, [sio,
Every way makes my gain : Live Roderigo,

He calls me to a restitution large
Of gold and jewels, that I bobb'd ¶ from him,
As gifts to Desdemona ;

It must not be. If Cassio do remain,
He hath a daily beauty in his life,
That makes me ugly ; and, besides, the Moor
May unfold me to him ; there stand I in much
peril :

No, he must die :—But so, I hear him coming.

Enter Cassio.

Rod. I know his gait, 'tis he ;—Villain, thou dost.

[Rushes from his post, and makes a pass at Cassio.]

Cas. That thrust had been mine enemy indeed,

But that my coat is better than thou think'st ;
I will make proof of thine.

[Draws, and wounds Roderigo.]

Rod. O I am slain !

[Iago rushes from his post, cuts Cassio behind in the Leg, ¶ and exits.]

* Abridge out pin-money in a pet.

† Sensation.

‡ Unbush'd. ¶ To the quick.

¶ Because he hears him say he has armour under his coat.

Cas. I am maim'd for ever:—Help, ho! murder! murder!

[Falls.]

Enter OTHELLO, at a distance.

Oth. The voice of Cassio:—Iago keeps his word.

Rod. O villain that I am!

Oth. Hark! his even so.

Cas. O help! ho! light! a surgeon!

Oth. 'Tis he:—O brave Iago, honest, and just, That hast such noble sense of thy friend's wrong!

Thou teachest me,—Minion, your dear lies dead, And your false bias apace:—Strumpet, I come: Faith,* of my heart those charms, thine eyes, are blotted;

Thy bed, lust-stain'd, shall with lust's blood be spotted. [Exit OTHELLO.]

Enter LODOVICO and GRATIANO, at a distance.

Cas. What, ho! no watch? no passage? murder! murder!

Gra. 'Tis some mischance; the cry is very direful.

Cas. O help!

Lod. Hark!

Rod. O wretched villain!

Lod. Two or three groans:—it is a heavy night:

These may be counterfeits; let's think't unsafe To come in to the cry, without more help.

Rod. No body come? then shall I bleed to death.

Enter IAGO, with a Light.

Lod. Hark!

Gra. Here's one comes in his shirt, with light and weapons.

Iago. Who's there? whose noise is this, that cries on murder?

Lod. We do not know.

Iago. Did you not hear a cry?

Cas. Here, here; for heaven's sake, help me.

Iago. What's the matter?

Gra. This is Othello's ancient, as I take it.

Lod. The same, indeed; a very valiant fellow.

Iago. What are you here that cry so grievously?

Cas. Iago? O I am spoil'd, undone by villains! Give me some help.

Iago. O me, lieutenant! what villains have done this?

Cas. I think, that one of them is hereabout, And cannot make away.

Iago. O treacherous villains!—

What are you there? come in, and give some help. [To LODOVICO and GRATIANO.]

Rod. O help me here.

Cas. That's one of them.

Iago. O murderous slave! O villain!

[IAGO STABS RODERIGO.]

Rod. O damn'd Iago! O inhuman dog!—

O! O! O!

Iago. Kill men 't'he dark?—Where be these bloody thieves!

How silent is this town!—Ho! murder! murder! What may you be? are you of good, or evil?

Lod. As you shall prove us, praise us.

Iago. Signior Lodovico!

Lod. He, Sir.

Iago. I cry you mercy; Here's Cassio hurt by villains.

Gra. Cassio?

Iago. How is it, bother?

Cas. My leg is cut in two.

Iago. Marry, heaven forbid!

Light, gentlemen; I'll bind it with my shirt.

Enter BIANCA.

Bian. What is the matter, ho? who is't that cried?

Iago. Who is't that cried?

Bian. O my dear Cassio! my sweet Cassio! O Cassio! Cassio! Cassio!

Iago. O notable strumpet!—Cassio, may you suspect

Who they should be, that have thus mangled you?

Cas. No.

Gra. I am sorry to find you thus: I have been to seek you.

Iago. Lend me a garter: So.—O for a chair, To bear him easily hence!

Bian. Alas, he faints:—O Cassio! Cassio! Cassio!

Iago. Gentlemen all, I do suspect this trash To be a party in this injury.—

Patience awhile, good Cassio.—Come, come;

Lend me a light.—Know we this face, or no?

Alas! my friend, and my dear countryman, Roderigo? no:—Yes, sure: O heaven, Roderigo.

Gra. What, of Venice?

Iago. Even he, Sir; did you know him?

Gra. Know him? ay.

Iago. Signior Gratiano? I cry you gentle pardon;

These bloody accidents must excuse my man-
That so neglected you.

Gra. I am glad to see you.

Iago. How do you, Cassio?—O a chair, a chair!

Gra. Roderigo!

Iago. He, he, 'tis he:—O that's well said;—
the chair:— [A Chair brought in.]

Some good man bear him carefully from hence; I'll fetch the general's surgeon.—For you, mistress,

Save you your labour. He that lies slain here, Cassio,

Was my dear friend: What malice was between you?

Cas. None in the world; nor do I know the man.

Iago. [To BIAN.] What, look you pale?—
O bear him out o'the air.

[CAS. and ROD. are borne off.]

Stay you, good gentlemen:—Look you pale, mistress?

Do you perceive the greatness of her eye?—
Nay, if you stare, we shall hear more anon:—

Behold her well; I pray you, look upon her;

Do you see, gentlemen? nay, guiltiness will Though tongues were out of use. [Speak,]

Enter EMILIA.

Emil. 'Las, what's the matter; what's the matter, husband?

Iago. Cassio hath here been set on in the dark,

By Roderigo, and fellows that are scap'd;

He's almost slain, and Roderigo dead.

Emil. Alas, good gentleman! alas, good Cassio!

Iago. This is the fruit of whoring.—Pr'ythee,

Emilia,

Go know of Cassio where he supp'd to-
night:—

What, do you shake at that?

Bian. He supp'd at my house, but I therefore shake not.

Iago. O did he so? I charge you, go with me.

Emil. Fie, fie upon thee, strumpet!

Bian. I am no strumpet; but of life as honest,
As you that thus abuse me.

Emil. As if I felt it upon thee!

Iago. Kind gentlemen, let's go see poor Cas-sio dress'd:—

Come, mistress, you must tell us another tale,—

Emilia, run you to the citadel,

And tell my lord and lady what has happ'd,—

Will you go on, I pray?—This is the night,

That either makes me, or fordoes me quite. [Aside.]

[Exit.]

* Out. † No passengers. ‡ Thick, cloudy.

Scene II. OTHELLO, THE MOOR OF VENICE.

229

SCENE II.—A Bedchamber: DESDEMONA in Bed asleep.—A Light burning.

Enter OTHELLO.

Oth. It is the cause, it is the cause, my soul,—

Let me not name it to you, you chaste stars!—
It is the cause. Yet I'll not shed her blood;
Nor scar that whiter skin of her's than snow,
And smooth as monumental alabaster,

[Takes off his Sword.]

Yet she must die, else she'll betray more men.
Put out the light, and then put out the light: *

If I quench thee, thou flaming minister,
I can again thy former light restore,
Should I repeat me:—but once put out thine,
Thou cunning'st pattern of excell'ing nature,
I know not where is that Promethean heat,
That can thy light relume. When I have pluck'd thy rose,

I cannot give it vital life again,
It needs must wither: I'll smell it on the tree.— [Kissing her.]

O balmy breath, that dost almost persuade Justice to break her sword!—One more, one

more.—
Be thus when thou art dead, and I will kill
thee,

And love thee after:—One more, and this the
last:

So sweet was ne'er so fatal. I must weep,
But they are cruel tears: This sorrow's heavenly;

It strikes, where it doth love.—She wakes—

Des. Who's there? Othello?

Oth. Ay, Desdemona.

Des. Will you come to bed, my lord?

Oth. Have you pray'd to-night, Desdemona?

Des. Ay, my lord.

Oth. If you bethink yourself of any crime,
Uneconomic[†] as yet to heaven and grace,
Solicit for it straight.

Des. Alas, my lord, what may you mean by
that?

Oth. Well, do it, and be brief; I will walk
by:

I would not kill thy unprepared spirit:
No,—Heaven forbid!† I would not kill thy

soul.

Des. Talk you of killing?

Oth. Ay, I do.

Des. Then, heaven
Have mercy on me!

Oth. Amen, with all my heart!

Des. If you say so, I hope you will not kill
me.

Oth. Hump!

Des. And yet I fear you: for you are fatal
then,

When your eyes roll so: Why I should fear, I
know not,

Since guiltiness I know not; but yet, I feel
I fear.

Oth. Think on thy sins.

Des. They are loves I bear to you.

Oth. Ay, and for that thou diest.

Des. That death's unnatural, that kills for loving.

Alas, why gnaw you so your nether lip?
Some bloody passion shakes your very frame:
These are portents; but yet I nope, I hope,
They do not point on me.

Oth. Peace and be still!

Des. I will so: What's the matter?

Oth. That handkerchief, which I so lov'd, and gave thee,

Thou gav'st to Cassio.

Des. No, by my life and soul;
Send for the man, and ask him.

Oth. Sweet soul, take heed, [bed.]
Take heed of perjury; thou'rt on thy death-
Des. Ay, but not yet to die.
Oth. Yes, presently:

Therefore confess thee freely of thy sin;
For to deny each article with oath, [tion,
Cannot remove, nor choke, the strong conceit
That I do groin withal. Thou art to die.

Des. Then, Lord have mercy on me!

Oth. I say, amen.

Des. And have you mercy too!—I never did
Offend you in my life; never lov'd Cassio,
But with such general warranty of heaven
As I might love: I never gave him token.

Oth. By heaven, I saw my handkerchief in his hand.

O perjur'd woman! thou dost stone my heart,
And unkn'st me call, what I intend to do,
A murder which I thought a sacrifice: *

I saw the handkerchief.

Des. He found it then;

I never gave it him:—Send for him hither,
And let him confess a truth.

Oth. He hath confess'd.

Des. What, my lord?

Oth. That he hath—us'd thee

Des. How? unlawfully?

Oth. Ay.

Des. He'll not say so.

Oth. No, his mouth is stopp'd;

Honest Iago hath ta'en order for't.†

Des. My fear interprets then,—What, is he
dead?

Oth. Had all his hairs been lives, my great revenge

Had stomach for them all.

Des. Alas! he is betray'd, and I undone.

Oth. Out, strumpet! Weep'st thou for him to my face?

Des. O banish me, my lord, but kill me
not.

Oth. Down, strumpet!

Des. Kill me to-morrow, let me live to-night.

Oth. Nay, if you strive,—

Des. But half an hour.

Oth. Being done,

There is no pause.

Des. But while I say one prayer.

Oth. It is too late.† [He smothers her.]

Emil. [Within.] My lord, my lord! what ho! my lord! my lord!

Oth. What noise is this?—Not dead! not yet quite dead!

I, that am cruel, and yet merciful;
I would not have thee linger in thy pain.—

So, so.‡ [Within.] What ho! my lord, my
lord!

Oth. Who's there?

Emil. [Within.] O good my lord, I would speak a word with you.

Oth. Yes:—'Tis Emilia:—by and by.—She's
dead.

'Tis like she comes to speak of Cassio's death:
The noise was high.—Hail no more moving?

Still as the grave. Shall she come in? Were't
good!

I think she stirs again:—No.—What's the
best?

If she come in, she'll sure speak to my wife:
My wife! my wife! what wife?—I have no
wife:

O insupportable! O heavy hour!
Methinks it should be now a huge eclipse
Of sun and moon; and that the affrighted globe
Should yawn at alteration.

* A sacrifice atoning for thy crime.

† Has taken measure.

‡ In the old copies, after this speech, there is an invocation from Desdemona, consisting only of the sacred name thrice repeated; omitted in consequence of the Stat. 3. James I. c. 21, imposing a penalty on the profane use of God's name in stage-plays, &c. It is a passage of supererogatory horror, being uttered whilst she is struggling with death.

§ It is supposed that some theatrical direction has been omitted, and that when Othello says, "So, so," he then smother her. After the repetition of words, Desdemona might speak again with propriety, and yet very soon expire.

Emil. [Within.] I do beseech you I may speak with you,
O good my lord!
Oth. I had forgot thee: O come in, Emilia—
Soft,—by and by.—Let me the curtains draw.—
Where art thou? What's the matter with thee now? [Unlocks the door.]

Enter EMILIA.

Emil. O good my lord, yonder's foul murder done.
Oth. What? now?
Emil. But now, my lord.
Oth. It is the very error of the moon;
She comes more near the earth than she was
And makes men mad. [Wont;]
Emil. Cassio, my lord, has kill'd a young Venetian, Call'd—Roderigo.
Oth. Roderigo kill'd!
And Cassio kill'd!
Emil. No, Cassio is not kill'd.
Oth. Not Cassio kill'd? Then murder's out of tune,
And sweet revenge grows harsh.
Des. O falsely, falsely murder'd!
Emil. Alas! what cry is that?
Oth. That! what?
Emil. Out, and alas! that was my lady's voice:—
Help! help, ho! help!—O lady, speak again!
Sweet Desdemona! O sweet mistress, speak!
Des. A guiltless death I die.
Emil. O who hath done this deed?
Des. Nobody: I myself; farewell:
Commend me to my kind lord; O farewell. [Dies.]

Oth. Why, how should she be murder'd?
Emil. Alas, who knows?
Oth. You heard her say herself, it was not I.
Emil. She said so; I must needs report the truth.
Oth. She's like a liar, gone to burning hell;
'Twas I that kill'd her.
Emil. O the more angel she,
And you the blacker devil!
Oth. She turn'd to folly, and she was a whore.
Emil. Thou dost belie her, and thou art a devil.
Oth. She was false as water.
Emil. Thou art rash as fire to say
That she was false; O she was heavenly true!
Oth. Cassio did tup her; ask thy husband else.
O I were damn'd beneath all depth in hell,
But that I did proceed upon just grounds
To this extremity: Thy husband knew it all.
Emil. My husband?
Oth. Thy husband.
Emil. That she was false to wedlock?
Oth. Ay, with Cassio.
Nay, had she been true,
If heaven would make me such another world
Of one entire and perfect chrysolite,
I'd not have sold her for it.
Emil. My husband?
Oth. Ay, 'twas he that told me first:
An honest man he is, and hates the slime
That sticks on filthy deeds.
Emil. My husband?
Oth. What needs this iteration,† woman? I say, thy husband.
Emil. O mistress, villainy hath made mocks with love:—
My husband say, that she was false?
Oth. He, woman;
I say, thy husband: Dost understand the word?
My friend, thy husband, honest Iago.
Emil. If he say so, may his pernicious soul
Rot half a grain a day! He lies to the heart;
She was too fond of her most filthy bargain.

Oth. Ha!
Emil. Do thy worst:
This deed of thine is no more worthy heaven,
Than thou wast worthy her.
Oth. Peace, you were best.
Emil. Thou hast not half the power to do me harm,
As I have to be hurt. O gull! O dolt!
As ignorant as dirt! thou hast done a deed,—
I care not for thy sword; I'll make thee
known,
Though I lost twenty lives:—Help! help, ho!
help!
The Moor has kill'd my mistress; Murder!
murder!

Enter MONTANO, GRATIANO, and IAGO.

Mon. What is the matter?—How now, general?
Emil. O are you come, Iago? you have done well,
That men must lay their murders on your neck.
Gra. What is the matter?
Emil. Disprove this villain, if thou be'st a man:
He says, thou told'st him that his wife was false:
I know thou did'st not, thou'rt not such a villain;
Speak, for my heart is full. [Hum;]
Iago. I told him what I thought; and told no more Than what he found himself was apt and true.
Emil. But did you ever tell him, she was false?
Iago. I did.
Emil. You told a lie; an odious, damned lie;
Upon my soul, a lie; a wicked lie:—
She false with Cassio?—Did you say, with Cassio?
Iago. With Cassio, mistress; Go to, charm your tongue.
Emil. I will not charm my tongue; I am bound to speak;
My mistress here lies murder'd in her bed.
All. O heavens forfend!
Emil. And your reports have set the murder on.
Oth. Nay, stare not, masters; it is true, indeed.
Gra. 'Tis a strange truth.
Mon. O monstrous act!
Emil. Villany, villany, villany!—
I think upon't,—I think,—I smell't;—O villany!
I thought so then;—I'll kill myself for grief.—
O villany, villany!
Iago. What, are you mad? I charge you, get you home.
Emil. Good gentlemen, let me have leave to speak;
'Tis proper I obey him, but not now:—
Perchance, Iago, I will ne'er go home.
Oth. O! O! O! [Hanging over his wife.]
Emil. Nay, lay thee down, and roar;
For thou hast kill'd the sweetest innocent,
That e'er did lift up eye.
Oth. O she was foul! [Rising.]
I scarce did know you, uncle: there lies your niece,
Whose breath, indeed, these hands have newly stopp'd:
I know, this act shows horrible and grim.
Gra. Poor Desdemona! I am glad thy father's dead;
Thy match was mortal to him, and pure grief
Shore his old thread in twain: did he live now
This sight would make him do a desperate turn,
Yea, curse his better angel from his side,
And fall to reprobation.
Oth. 'Tis pitiful: But yet Iago knows,
That she with Cassio hath the act of shame
A thousand times committed; Cassio confess'd it:

* A precious stone.

† Repetition.

* Forbid.

† Freely.

And she did gratify his amorous works
With that recognizance and pledge of love
Which I first gave her: I saw it in his hand;
It was a handkerchief, an antique token
My father gave my mother.

Emil. O heaven! O heavenly powers!

Jago. Come, hold your peace.

Emil. 'Twill out, 'twill out;—I hold my peace,

Sir? no;

No, I will speak as liberal * as the air;
Let heaven, and men, and devils, let them all,
All, all, cry shame against me, yet I'll speak.

Jago. Be wise, and get you home.

Emil. I will not.

[JAGO offers to stab his Wife.]

Gra. Fie!

Your sword upon a woman?

Emil. O thou dull Moor! that handkerchief thou speak'st of,

I found by fortune, and did give my husband;
For often with a solemn earnestness,
(More than indeed belong'd to such a trifle,) He begg'd of me to steal it.

Jago. Villanous whore!

Emil. She gave it Cassio! no, alas; I found it,
And I did giv't my husband.

Jago. Filth, thou liest.

Emil. By heaven, I do not; I do not, gentlemen:—

O murderous coxcomb! what should such a fool

Do with so good a wife?

[JAGO stabs EMILIA, then runs out.]

Oth. Are there no stones in heaven
But what serve for the thunder?—Precious villain!

Gra. The woman falls; sure, he has kill'd his wife.

Emil. Ay, ay; O lay me by my mistress'
side!

Gra. He's gone, but his wife's kill'd.

Mon. 'Tis a notorious villain. Take you this weapon,

Which I have here recover'd from the Moor:
Come, guard the door without; let him not pass,
But kill him rather: I'll after that same villain,
For 'tis a damned slave.

[Exit MONTANO and GRATIANO.]

Oth. I am not valiant neither.
But every puny whipster gets my sword:—
But why should honour outlive honesty?
Let it go all.

Emil. What did thy song bode, lady?

Hark, canst thou hear me? I will play the swan,

And die in music:—Willow, willow, willow.—
Moor, she was chaste; she lov'd thee, cruel
Moor;

So come my soul to bliss, as I speak true;
So speaking as I think, I die, I die. [Dies.]

Oth. I have another weapon in this chamber,
It is a sword of Spain, the ice-brook's temper—

O here it is:—Uncle, I must come forth.

Gra. [Within.] If thou attempt it, it will cost thee dear;

Thou hast no weapon, and perforce must suffer.

Oth. Look in upon me then, and speak with
me,

Or, naked as I am, I will assault thee.

Re-enter GRATIANO.

Gra. What's the matter?

Oth. Behold! I have a weapon;

A better never did itself sustain
Upon a soldier's thigh: I have seen the day,

That with this little arm, and this good sword,
I have made my way through more impediments

Than twenty times your stop:—But, O vain
boast!

Who can control his fate? 'Tis not so now.—

Be not afraid, though you do see me weapon'd
Here is my journey's end, here is my butt,
And very sea-mark of my utmost sail.
Do you go back dismay'd? 'tis a lost fear;
Man but a rush against Othello's breast,
And he retires:—Where should Othello go?—
Now, how dost thou look now? O ill-starr'd wench!

Pale as thy smock! when we shall meet at compt *

This look of thine will hurl my soul from hea-
And sends will snatch at it. Cold, cold, my girl!

Even like thy chastity.—

O cursed, cursed slave!—Whip me ye devils,
From the possession of this heavenly sight!

Blow me about in winds! roast me in sulphur!
Wash me in steep-down galls of liquid fire!—

O Desdemona! Desdemona! dead!
Dead! O! O! O!

Enter LODOVICO, MONTANO, CASSIO, carried in a Chair, and Officers with JAGO prisoner.

Lod. Where is this rash and most unfortunate
man?

Oth. That's he, that was Othello; here I am.

Lod. Where is that viper? bring the villain
forth.

Oth. I look down towards his feet; †—but that's a fable:

If that thou be'st a devil, I cannot kill thee.

[OTHELLO wounds JAGO.]

Lod. Wrench his sword from him.

Jago. I bleed, Sir; but not kill'd.

Oth. I am not sorry neither; I'd have thee
live;

For, in my sense, 'tis happiness to die.

Lod. O thou Othello, that wast once so good,
Fall'n in the practice; of a cursed slave,
What shall be said to thee?

Oth. Why, any thing.

An honourable murderer, if you will;
For nought I did in hate, but all in honour.

Lod. This wretch hath in part confess'd his villany;

Did you and he consent in Cassio's death?

Oth. Ay.

Cas. Dear general, I never gave you cause.

Oth. I do believe it, and I ask your pardon.

Will you, I pray you demand that demi-devil,
Why he hath thus ensnar'd my soul and body?

Jago. Demand me nothing: What you know,
you know;

From this time forth I never will speak word.

Lod. What? not to pray?

Gra. Torments will ope your lips.

Oth. Well, thou dost best.

Lod. Sir, you shall understand what hath befall'n,

Which, as I think, you know not: Here is a
letter,

Found in the pocket of the slain Roderigo,
And here, another: the one of them imports
The death of Cassio to be undertook

By Roderigo.

Oth. O villain!

Cas. Most heathenish, and most gross!

Lod. Now here's another discontented paper,
Found in his pocket too: and thus it seems,
Roderigo meant to have sent this damned vil-
lain;

But that belike, Iago in the interim

Came in and satisfied him.

Oth. O the pernicious caitiff!—

How came you, Cassio, by that handkerchief
That was my wife's?

Cas. I found it in my chamber:

And he himself confess'd, but even now
That there he dropp'd it, for a special purpose

Which wrought to his desire.

Oth. O fool! fool! fool!

Cas. There is, besides, in Roderigo's letter,—

* Freely. † Steel is hardened by being put red hot into very cold water

* Account. † To see if his feet be coven,
‡ By the stratagem

How he upbraids Iago, that he made him
Brave me on the watch ; whereon it came
That I was cast ; and even but now he spake,
After long seeming dead,—Iago hurt him,
Iago set him on.

Lod. You must forsake this room, and go
with us ;

Your power and your command is taken off,
And Cassio rules in Cyprus. For this slave,—
If there be any cunning cruelty,
That can torment him much, and hold him
long,

It shall be his : You shall close prisoner rest,
Till that the nature of your fault be known
To the Venetian state :—Come, bring him
away.

Oth. Soft you ; a word or two, before you go.
I have done the state some service, and they know it ;

No more of that :—I pray you, in your letters,
When you shall these unlucky deeds relate,
Speak of me as I am ; nothing extenuate,
Nor set down aught in malice : then must you
speak

Of one that lov'd not wisely, but too well ;
Of one, not easily jealous, but, being wrought,
Perplex'd in the extreme ; of one, whose hand,
Like the base Judean, threw a pearl away,
Richer than all his tribe ; of one, whose subdu'd
eyes,

Albeit unnsed to the melting mood,
Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees

Their medicinal gum : Set you down this :

And say, besides,—that in Aleppo once,
Where a malignant and a turbau'd Turk
Beat a Venetian, and traduc'd the state,
I took by the throat the circumcised dog,
And smote him—thus. [Stabs himself.]

Lod. O bloody period !

Gr. All, that's spoke, is marr'd.

Oth. I kiss'd thee, ere I kill'd thee ;—No way but this,

[Falling upon Desdemona.
Killing myself, to die upon a kiss.

[Dies.
Cas. This did I fear, but thought he had no
weapon ;

For he was great of heart.

Lod. O Spartan dog,
More fell than anguish, hunger, or the sea !
Look on the tragic loading of this bed ;

[To Iago.
This is thy work ; the object poisons sight ;—
Let it be hid.—Gratiano, keep the house,
And seize upon the fortunes of the Moor,
For they succeed to you.—To you, lord governor,

Remains the censure * of this hellish villain ;
The time, the place, the torture,—O enforce it !
Myself will straight aboard ; and, to the state,
This heavy act with heavy heart relate.

[Exit

THE reader will frequently be at a loss to reconcile the order and passages of Othello, as given in the present edition, with their accustomed delivery on the stage ; but it is considered a trifling inconvenience, when counteracted by the pleasure of possessing (as nearly as the most authentic resources can afford them,) the actual language and construction of the drama, as given by Shakespeare. In the authorized copies of the prompters' books, and in many editions reprinted from them, the beauty of the original has been somewhat obscured by green-room critics, of conflicting taste, and obsequious managers, more penny-wise than poetical. The scene with the musicians, which introduces Act II.—that incongruous nuisance, the clown—and that equally troublesome excrescence, Bianca the prostitute—are however, with real judgment, omitted in the representation ; and many of the less important passages, such as occur in the scene before the senate—in the soliloquies of Iago—in the dialogues between Montano and a gentleman of Cyprus, on the tempest of the preceding night, and between Desdemona and Emilia, on the temptations to adultery, are very considerably abridged. The order of the scenes is also perpetually varied ; each theatrical copartnership retaining its peculiar programme of Richard or Othello, in common with its wardrobe, thunder, side-scenes, and mould-candles.

ROMEO AND JULIET.

LITERARY AND HISTORICAL NOTICE.

IN 1552 Mr. Arthur Brooke published a poem on "The Tragicall Historie of Romeus and Juliett;" the materials for which he chiefly obtained from a French translation (by Boisteau) of an Italian novel by Luigi da Porto, a Venetian gentleman, who died in 1529. A prose translation of Boisteau's work was also published 1576, by Paister, in his Palace of Pleasure, vol. II.; and upon the incidents of these two works, especially of the poem, Malone decides that Shakspeare constructed his entertaining tragedy. Dr. Johnson has declared this play to be "one of the most pleasing of Shakspeare's performances;" but it contains some breaches of irregularity—many superfluities, tumid conceits, and bombastic ideas, inexcusable even in a lover; with a continued recurrence of jingling periods and trifling quibbles, which obscure the sense, or disgust the reader. Several of the characters are, however, charmingly designed, and not less happily executed; the catastrophe is intensely affecting; the incidents various and expressive; and as the passion which it delineates is one of universal acceptance in the catalogue of human wishes, the tender-like character of the lady, and the notable constancy of the gentleman, are forgotten in the dangers and the calamities of both. The numerous rhymes which occur, are probably seedlings from Arthur Brooke's stock plant. "The nurse (says Dr. Johnson) is one of the characters in which Shakspeare delighted; he has, with great subtlety of distinction, drawn her at once loquacious and secret, obsequious and insolent, trusty and dishonest."

PROLOGUE.

Two households, both alike in dignity,
In fair Verona, where we lay our scene,
From ancient grudge break to new mutiny,
Where civil blood makes civil hands unclean.
From forth the fatal loins of these two foes
A pair of star-cross'd lovers take their life;
Whose misadventur'd piteous overthrows
Do, with their death, bury their parents' strife.

The fearful passage of their death-mark'd love,
And the continuance of their parents' rage,
Which, but their children's end, nought could remove,
Is now the two hours' traffic of our stage;
The which if you with patient ears attend
What here shall miss, our toil shall strive to mend.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—A public Place.

Enter SAMPSON and GREGORY, armed with Swords and Bucklers.

Sam. Gregory, o'my word, we'll not carry coals.*

Gre. No, for then we should be colliers.

Sam. I mean, an we be in choler, we'll draw.

Gre. Ay, while you live, draw your neck out of the collar.

Sam. I strike quickly, being moved.

Gre. But thou art not quickly moved to strike.

Sam. A dog of the house of Montague moves me.

Gre. To move, is—to stir; and to be valiant, is—to stand to it: therefore, if thou art mov'd, thou run'st away.

Sam. A dog of that house shall move me to stand: I will take the wall of any man or maid of Montague's.

* A phrase formerly in use to signify the bearing in fight.

Gre. That shows thee a weak slave; for the weakest goes to the wall.

Sam. True; and therefore women, being the weaker vessels, are ever thrust to the wall:—therefore I will push Montague's men from the wall, and thrust his maids to the wall.

Gre. The quarrel is between our masters, and us their men.

Sam. 'Tis all one, I will show myself a tyrant: when I have fought with the men, I will be cruel with the maids; I will cut off their heads.

Gre. The heads of the maids?

Sam. Ay, the heads of the maids, or their maidenheads; take it in what sense thou wilt.

Gre. They must take it in sense, that feel it.

Sam. Me they shall feel, while I am able to stand: and 'tis known I am a pretty piece of flesh.

Gre. 'Tis well, thou art not fish: if thou hadst, thou hadst been poor John. * Draw thy tool; here comes two † of the house of the Montagues.

Enter ABRAHAM and BALTHAZAR.

Sam. My naked weapon is out; quarrel, I will back thee.

Gre. How? turn thy back, and run?

Sam. Fear me not.

Gre. No, marry: I fear thee!

Sam. Let us take the law of our sides; let them begin.

Gre. I will frown as I pass by: and let them take it as they list.

Sam. Nay, as they dare. I will bite my thumb at them; which is a disgrace to them, if they bear it.

Abr. Do you bite your thumb at us, Sir?

Sam. I do bite my thumb, Sir.

Abr. Do you bite your thumb at us, Sir?

Sam. Is the law on our side, if I say, ay?

Gre. No.

Sam. No, Sir, I do not bite my thumb at you, Sir; but I bite my thumb, Sir.

Gre. Do you quarrel, Sir?

Abr. Quarrel, Sir? no, Sir.

Sam. If you do, Sir, I am for you; I serve as good a man as you.

Abr. No better.

Sam. Well, Sir

Enter BENVOLIO, at a Distance.

Gre. Say—better; here comes one of my master's knismen.

Sam. Yes, better, Sir.

Abr. You lie.

Sam. Draw, if you be men.—Gregory, remember thy smashing blow.

[They fight.]

Ben. Part, fools; put up your swords; you know not what you do.

[Beats down their Swords.]

Enter TYBALT.

Tyb. What, art thou drawn among these heartless hinds?

Turn thee, Benvolio, look upon thy death.

Ben. I do but keep the peace; put up thy sword,

Or manage it to part these men with me.

Tyb. What, drawn, and talk of peace? I hate the word,

As I hate hell, all Montagues, and thee: Have at thee, coward.

[They fight.]

Enter several Partizans of both Houses, who join the Fray: then enter CITIZENS with Clubs.

1 Cit. Clubs, † bills, and partizans! strike! beat them down!

* Poor John is hake, dried and salted.

† The disregard of concord is in character.

‡ Clubs was equivalent to the modern cry of Ward.

Down with the Capulets! down with the Montagues!

Enter CAPULET, in his Gown: and LADY CAPULET.

Cap. What noise is this?—Give me my long sword, ho!

La. Cap. A crutch, a crutch!—Why call you for a sword?

Cap. My sword, I say!—Old Montague is come And flourishes his blade in spite of me.

Enter MONTAGUE, and LADY MONTAGUE.

Mon. Thou villain, Capulet,—Hold me not, let me go.

La. Mon. Thou shalt not stir one foot to seek a foe.

Enter PRINCE, with Attendants.

Prin. Rebellious subjects, enemies to peace, Profaners of this neighbour-stained steel,—Will they not hear?—what ho! you men, you beasts,—

That quench the fire of your pernicious rage With purple fountains issuing from your veins, On pain of torture, from those bloody hands Throw your mistemper'd weapons to the ground,

And hear the sentence of your moved prince.—

Three civil brawls, bred of an airy word,

By thee, old Capulet and Montague,

Have thrice disturb'd the quiet of our streets;

And made Verona's ancient citizens

Cast by their grave beseeching ornaments,

To wield old partizans, in hands as old,

Canker'd with peace to part your canker'd hate:

If ever you disturb our streets again,

Your lives shall pay the forfeit of the peace.

For this time, all the rest depart away:

You, Capulet, shall go along with me;

And, Montague, come you this afternoon,

To know our further pleasure in this case,

To old Free-town, our common judgment-place.

Once more, on pain of death, all men depart.

[Exit PRINCE and Attendants. CAPULET, LADY CAPULET, TYBALT, CITIZENS, and Servants.]

Mon. Who set this ancient quarrel new abroad?

Speak, nephew, were you by when it began?

Ben. Here were the servants of your adversary,

And your's, close fighting ere I did approach:

I drew to part them; in the instant came

The fiery Tybalt, with his sword prepar'd;

Which, as he breath'd defiance to my ears,

He swung about his head, and cut the winds,

Who, nothing hurt withal, hiss'd him in scorn:

While we were interchanging thrusts and blows

Came more and more and fought on part and

part,

Till the prince came, who parted either part.

La. Mon. O where is Romeo?—saw you him to day?

Right glad I am, he was not at his fray.

Ben. Madam, an hour before the worshipp'd sun,

Peer'd through the golden window of the east,

A troubled mind drove me to walk abroad;

Where,—underneath the grove of sycamore,

That westward rooteth from the city's side,—

So early walking did I see your son:

Towards him I made; but he was 'ware of me,

And stole into the covert of the wood:

I, measuring his affections by my own,

That most are busied when they are most alone,

Pursu'd his humour, not pursuing his,

And gladly shunn'd who gladly lov'd from me.

Mon. Many a morning bath he there been seen,

With tears augmenting the fresh morning's dew.

Adding to clouds more clouds with his deep sighs:

* Angry.

Such as I love; and you, among the store, [more.
Once more, most welcome, makes my number
At my poor house, look to behold this night
Earth-treading stars, that make dark heaven
light:

Such comfort, as do lusty young men feel
When well-appeal'd April on the heel
Of limping winter treads, even such delight
Among fresh female buds shall you this night
Inherit* at my house; here all, all see,
And like her most, whose merit most shall be:
Such, amongst view of many, mine being one,
May stand in number, though in reckoning†
none.

Come, go with me;—Go, Sirrah, trudge about
Through fair Verona; find those persons out, Whose names are written there, [Gives a Paper.]
and to them say,

My house and welcome on their pleasure stay.
[Exit CAPULET and PARIS.]
Serv. Find them out, whose names are written here? It is written—that the shoemaker should meddle with his yard, and the tailor with his last, the fisher with his pencil, and the painter with his nets; but I am sent to find those persons, whose names are here writ, and can never find what names the writing person hath here writ. I must to the learned:—in good time.

Enter BENVOLIO and ROMEO.

Ben. Tut, man! one fire burns out another's burning,
One pain is lessen'd by another's anguish;
Turn giddy, and be help by backward turning:
One desperate grief cures with another's languish:

Take thou some new infection to thy eye,
And the rank poison of th' old will die.

Rom. Your plaitain leaf is excellent for
that.

Ben. For what, I pray thee?

Rom. For your broken shin.

Ben. Why, Romeo, art thou mad?

Rom. Not mad, but bound more than a madman is;

Shut up in prison, kept without my food,
Whipp'd, and tormented, and—Good-e'en, good fellow.

Serv. God gi' good e'en.—I pray, Sir, can you read?

Rom. Ay, mine own fortune in my misery.

Serv. Perhaps you have learn'd it without book:

But I pray, can you read any thing you see?

Rom. Ay, if I know the letters, and the language.

Serv. Ye say honestly; Rest you merry!

Rom. Stay, fellow; I can read. [Reads.]

Signior Martino, and his wife and daughters; County Anselme, and his beauteous sisters; The lady widow of Vitruvio; Signior Placentio, and his lovely nieces; Mercutio, and his brother Valentine; Mine uncle
Capulet, his wife, and daughters; My fair niece Rosaline; Livia; Signior Valentio, and his cousin Tybalt; Lucio, and the lively Helena.

A fair assembly; [Gives back the Note.] Whither should they come?

Serv. Up.

Rom. Whither?

Serv. To supper; to our house.

Rom. Whose house?

Serv. My master's.

Rom. Indeed, I should have asked you that before.

Serv. Now I'll tell you without asking: My master is the great rich Capulet; and if you be not of the house of Montagues, I pray, come and crush a cup of wine.* Rest your merry!

[Exit.]

Ben. At this same ancient feast of Capulet's
Supps the fair Rosaline, whom thou so lov'st;
With all the admired beauties of Verona:
Go thither; and, with unattainted eye,
Compare her face with some that I shall show,
And I will make thee think thy swan a crow.

Rom. When the devout religion of mine eye Maintains such falsehood, then turn tears to fires!

And these,—who often drown'd could never die,—
Transparent heretics, be burn'd for liars!
One fairer than my love! th' all-seeing sun
Ne'er saw her match, since first the world began.

Ben. Till you saw her fair, none else being by,
Herself pois'n'd with herself in either eye:
But in those crystal scales let there be weigh'd
Your lady's love against some other maid
That I will show you, shining at this feast,
And she shall scant; show well, that now shows
best.

Rom. Ill go along, no such sight to be shown.
But to rejoice in splendour of mine own.

[Exit.]

SCENE III.—A Room in CAPULET'S HOUSE.

Enter Lady CAPULET and NURSE.

La. Cap. Nurse, where's my daughter? call her forth to me.

Nurse. Now, by my maidenhead, at twelve year old,— [bird!—
I bade her come.—What, lamb! what, lady-
God forbid!—where's this girl?—what, Juliet!

Enter JULIET.

Jul. How now, who calls?

Nurse. Your mother.

Jul. Madam, I am here,

What is your will?

La. Cap. This is the matter:—Nurse, give leave awhile,
We must talk in secret.—Nurse, come back again;
I have remember'd me, thou shalt hear our counsel.

Thou know'st, my daughter's of a pretty age.

Nurse. Faith, I can tell her age unto an hour.

La. Cap. She's not fourteen.

Nurse. I'll lay fourteen of my teeth,

And yet, to my teen § be it spoken, I have but four,—

She is not fourteen: How long is it now
To Lammass tide?

La. Cap. A fortnight, and odd days.

Nurse. Even or odd, of all days in the year,
Come Lammass-eve at night, shall she be fourteen.

Susan and she,—God rest all Christian souls!—
Were of an age.—Well, Susan is with God;
She was too good for me: But, as I said,
On Lammass-eve at night shall she be fourteen;
That shall she, marry; I remember it well.
'Tis since the earthquake now eleven years;
And she was wean'd,—I never shall forget
it,—

Of all the days of the year, upon that day:
For I had then laid wormwood to my dug,
Sitting in the sun under the dove-house wall,
My lord and you were then at Mantua:—
Nay, I do bear a brain: §—but, as I said,
When it did taste the wormwood on the nipple
Of my dug, and felt it bitter, pretty fool!
To see it tetchy, and fall out with the dug.
Shake, quoth the dove-house: 'twas no need,
I trow,
To bid me trudge.

* To inherit, in the language of Shakespeare, is to possess.

† Estimation.

* To crack a bottle, is still a cant phrase.

† Weighed.

‡ Scarcely.

§ To my sorrow.

|| I. e., I have a perfect recollection.

And since that time it is eleven years :
For then she could stand alone ; nay, by the rood *

She could have run and waddled all about.
For even the day before, she broke her brow :
And then my husband—God be with his soul !
‘A was a merry man ;—took up the child :
Yea, quoth he, doſt thou fall upon thy face ?
Thou wilt fall backward, when thou haſt more
wit ;

Wilt thou not, Jule ? and by my holy dam, †
The pretty wretch left crying, and ſaid—Ay :
To ſee now, how a jeſt ſhall come about !
I warrant, an I ſhould live a thouſand years,
I never ſhould forget it ; Wilt thou not, Jule ?
quoth he :

And, pretty fool, it ſtinted, ‡ and ſaid—Ay.

La. Cap. Enough of this ; I pray thee, hold thy peace.

Nurse. Yes, madam ; Yet I cannot chooſe but laugh,

To think it ſhould leave crying, and ſay—Ay :

And yet, I warrant, it had upon its brow
A bump as big as a young cockrel’s ſtone ;
A paſſious knock ; and it cried bitterly.
Yea, quoth my husband, fall’ſt upon thy face ?
Thou wilt fall backward, when thou com’ſt
to age ;

Wilt thou not, Jule ? it ſtinted, and ſaid—Ay.

Jul. And ſtint thou too, I pray thee, nurse, ſay I.

Nurse. Peace, I have done. God mark thee to his grace ! †

Thou waſt the prettiſt babe that e’er I nurſ’d :
An I might live to ſee thee married once,
I have my wiſh.

La. Cap. Marry, that marry is the very
theme

I came to talk of :—Tell me, daughter Juliet,
How ſtands your diſpoſition to be married ?

Jul. It is an honour that I dream not of.

Nurse. An honour ! were not I thiſe only nurse,
I’d ſay, thou haſt ſuck’d wiſdom from thy teat.

La. Cap. Well, think of marriage now ;
younger than thou,

Here in Verona, ladies of eſteem,
Are made already mothers : by my count,
I was your mother much upon theſe years
That you are now a maid. Thus then, in brief ;—

The valiant Paris ſeeks you for his love.

Nurse. A man, young lady ! lady, ſuch a
man,

As all the world—why, he’s a man of wax. ‡

La. Cap. Verona’s ſummer bath not ſuch a flower,

Nurse. Nay, he’s a flower ; in faith, a very flower.

La. Cap. What ſay you ? can you love the gentleman ?

This night you ſhall behold him at our feaſt :
Read o’er the volume of young Paris’ face,
And find delight writ there with beauty’s pen ;
Examine every married lineament,
And ſee how one another lends content ;
And what obſcur’d in this fair volume lies,
Find written in the margin of his eyes. ¶
This precious book of love, this unbound lover,
To beautify him, only lacks a cover :
The fiſh lives in the ſea ;  and ’tis much pride,

For fair without the fair within to hide :
That book in many’s eyes doth ſhare the glory,
That in gold claps locks in the golden ſtory ;
So ſhall you ſhare all that he doth poſſeſs,
By having him, making yourſelf no leſs.

Nurse. No leſs ? nay, bigger ; women grow by
men.

* The croſs. † Holy dame, ‡ e. the bleſſed virgin—
† It ſtopped crying. ‡ Favour.

¶ As wall made as if he had been modelled in wax.
¶ The comments on ancient books were always printed in the margin.

 I. e. is not yet caught, whoſe ſkin was wanted to bind him.

La. Cap. Speak briefly, can you like of Paris
love ?

Jul. I’ll look to like, if looking liking move :
But no more deep will I endart mine eye,
Than your conſent gives ſtrength to make it fly.

Enter a SERVANT.

Serv. Madam, the gueſts are come, ſupper ſerved up, you called, my young lady asked for,
the nurse curſed in the pantry, and every thing in extremity. I muſt hence to wait ; I beſeech you, follow ſtraight.

La. Cap. We follow thee.—Juliet, the county ſtays.

Nurse. Go, girl, ſeek happy nights to happy days. [Exeunt]

SCENE IV.—A Street.

Enter ROMEO, MERCUTIO, BENVOLIO, with five or ſix Maskers, Torch-bearers, and others.

Rom. What, ſhall this ſpeech be ſpoke for our excuse ?

Or ſhall we on without apology ?

Ben. The date is out of ſuch prolixity : *

We’ll have no Cupid hood-wink’d with a ſcarf,
Bearing a Tartar’s painted bow of lath,
Scaring the ladies like a crow-keeper ; †
Nor no without-book prologue, faintly ſpoke
After the prompter, for our entrance :

But, let them meaſure us by what they will,
We’ll meaſure them a meaſure, ‡ and be gone.

Rom. Give me a torch, §—I am not for this ambling ;

Being but heavy, I will bear the light.

Mer. Nay, gentle Romeo, we muſt have you dance.

Rom. Not I, believe me : you have dancingſhoes,

With nimble ſoles : I have a ſoul of lead
So ſtokes me to the ground, I cannot move.

Mer. You are a lover ; borrow Cupid’s wings,
And ſoar with them above a common bound.

Rom. I am too ſore pierced with his ſhaft,
To ſoar with his light feathers ; and ſo bound,
I cannot bound a pitch above dull woe :
Under love’s heavy burden do I ſink.

Mer. And, to ſink in it, ſhould you burden
love ;

Too great oppreſſion for a tender thing.

Rom. Is love a tender thing ? it is too rough,
Too rude, too boiſtrous ; and it picks like thorn.

Mer. If love be rough with you, be rough with love ; [down.—]

Prick love for pricking, and you beat love
Give me a caſe to put my viſage in :

[Putting on a Mask.]

A viſor for a viſor !—what care I,
What curious eye doth quote ¶ deformities ?

Here are the beetle-brows, ſhall bluſh for me.

Ben. Come, knock, and enter ; and no ſooner
But every man betake him to his legs. [in]

Rom. A torch for me : let wansons, light of
heart,

Tickle the ſenſeleſs ruſhes ¶ with their heels ;
For I am proveſt with a grandſire phrase,—

I’ll be a candle-holder, and look on,—
The game was ne’er ſo fair, and I am done. **

Mer. Tut ! dun’s the mouse, the conſtable’s own word :

If thou art dun, we’ll draw thee from the mire
Of this (ſave reverence) love, wherein thou ſtick’ſt.

Up to the ears.—Come, we burn day-light, ho.

* I. e. Long ſpeeches are out of faſhion.

† A ſcare-crow, a figure made up to frighten crows.

‡ A dancer.

¶ A torch-bearer was a conſtant appendage to every troop of maskers. ¶ Obſerve.

¶ L. on in the reign of Charles, the flowers of the beſt hours were ſtroked with ruſhes.

 This is equivalent to phrases in common uſe—I am done for, it is over with me.

Rom. Nay, that's not so.

Mer. I mean, Sir, in delay

We waste our lights in vain, like lamps by day.
Take our good meaning; for our judgment sits
Five times in that, ere once in our five wits.

Rom. And we mean well, in going to this mask;
But 'tis no wit to go.

Mer. Why, may one ask?

Rom. I dreamt a dream to-night.

Mer. And so did I.

Rom. Well, what was yours?

Mer. That dreamers often lie.

Rom. In bed, asleep, while they do dream things true.

Mer. O then, I see, queen Mab hath been with
you.

She is the fairies' midwife; and she comes in shape no bigger than an agate-stone
On the fore-finger of an alderman,
Drawn with a team of little atomies*
Athwart men's noses as they lie asleep:
Her waggon-spokes made of long spinners' legs;
The cover, of the wings of grasshoppers;
The traces, of the smallest spider's web;
The collars, of the moonshine's wat'ry beams;
Her whip, of cricket's bone; the lash of film:
Her waggoner, a small grey-coated gnat,
Not half so big as a round little worm
Prick'd from the lazy finger of a maid:
Her chariot is an empty hazel-nut,
Made by the joiner squirrel, or old grub,
Time out of mind the fairies' coach-makers.
And in this state she gallops night by night
Through lovers' brains, and then they dream of love:

On courtiers' knees, that dream on court'sies
straight:
O'er lawyers' fingers, who straight dream on fees:

O'er ladies' lips, who straight on kisses dream,
Which oft the angry Mab with blisters plagues,
Because their breaths with sweetmeats tainted are.

Sometime she gallops o'er a courtier's nose,
And then dreams he of smelling out a suit:†
And sometimes comes she with a tithe-pig's tail,

Tickling a parson's nose as 'a lies asleep,
Then dreams he of another benefice:
Sometime she driveth o'er a soldier's neck,
And then dreams he of cutting foreign throats,
Of breaches, ambuscadoes, Spanish blades,
Of healths five fathom deep; and then anon Drums in his ear; at which he starts, and wakes,

And, being thus frightened, swears a prayer or two,
And sleeps again. This is that very Mab,
That plats the manes of horses in the night,
And bakes the elf-locks‡ in foul sluggish hairs,
Which, once untangled, much misfortune bodes.
This is the hag, when maids lie on their backs,
That presses them, and learns them first to
bear,

Making them women of good carriage.

This, this is she—

Rom. Peace, peace, Mercutio, peace;
Thou talk'st of nothing.

Mer. True, I talk of dreams;

Which are the children of an idle brain,
Fetters of nothing but vain fantasy;
Which is as thin of substance as the air;
And more inconstant than the wind, who woos
Even now the frozen bosom of the north,
And, being anger'd, puffs away from thence,
Turning his face to the dew-dropping south.

Ben. This wind you talk of blows us from ourselves;

Supper is done, and we shall come too late.

Rom. I fear, too early: for my mind mis-gives

Some consequence, yet hanging in the stars,

Shall bitterly begin his fearful date
With this night's revels; and expire the term
Of a despised life, clos'd in my breast,
By some vile forfeit of untimely death:
But He, that hath the steerage of my course,
Direct my sail!—On, lusty gentlemen.

Ben. Strike, drum.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—A Hall in CAPULET'S House.

Musicians waiting. Enter SERVANTS.

1 Serv. Where's Potpan, that he helps not to take away? he shift a trencher! he scrape a trencher!

2 Serv. When good manners shall lie all in one or two men's hands, and they unwashed too,
'tis a foul thing.

1 Serv. Away with the joint-stools, remove the court-cupboard,‡ look to the plate—good thou, save me a piece of marchpane:† and, as-thou lovest me, let the porter let in Susan Grindstone and Nell.—Antony! and Potpan!

2 Serv. Ay, boy; ready.

1 Serv. You are looked for, and called for,
asked for, and sought for, in the great chamber.

2 Serv. We cannot be here and there too.—
Cheerly, boys; be brisk a while, and the longer liver take all. [They retire behind.]

Enter CAPULET, &c. with the Guests and the Maskers.

Cap. Gentlemen, welcome! ladies, that have their toes [You.—]
Unplagu'd with corns, will have a bout with Ah! my mistresses! which of you all
Will now deny to dance? she that makes dainty,
she,

I'll swear, hath corns; Am I come near you now?
You are welcome, gentlemen! I have seen the
day,

That I have worn a visor, and could tell
A whispering tale in a fair lady's ear,
Such as would please;—'tis gone, 'tis gone, 'tis gone! [Play.]

You are welcome, gentlemen!—Come, musicians,
A hall! a hall! give room, and foot it, girls.

[Music plays, and they dance.]
More light, ye knaves; and turn the tables up,
And quench the fire, the room is grown too hot.—

Ah! Sirrah, this unlook'd-for sport comes well.
Nay, sit, nay, sit, good cousin Capulet;
For you and I are past our dancing days:
How long is't now, since last yourself and I
Were in a mask?

2 Cap. By'r lady, thirty years.

1 Cap. What, man! 'tis not so much; 'tis not so much:

'Tis since the nuptial of Lucentio,
Come pentecost as quickly as it will,
Some five and twenty years; and then we mask'd.

2 Cap. 'Tis more, 'tis more: his son is elder,
His son is thirty. [Sir:]

1 Cap. Will you tell me that?
His son was but a ward two years ago.

Rom. What lady's that, which doth enrich the hand

Of yonder knight?

Serv. I know not, Sir.

Rom. O she doth teach the torches to burn bright!

Her beauty hangs upon the cheek of night
Like a rich jewel in an Ethiop's ear:
Beauty too rich for use, for earth too dear!
So shows a snowy dove trooping with crows,
As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows.
The measure of her life, I'll watch her place of
standing,

And, touching her's, make happy any rude hand.

* A cupboard set in a corner like a buffet on which the plate was placed.

† Almond-cake.

‡ An Ethiopian.

§ A clear hall, or make room.
¶ The dance.

* Atoms.

† A place in court.

‡ I.e. Fairy-locks, locks of hair curled and tangled in the night.

Did my heart love till now? forswear it, sight!
For I ne'er saw true beauty till this night.

Tyb. This, by his voice, should be a Montague:—

Fetch me my rapier, boy:—What! dares the Come hither, cover'd with an antic face,
To flout and scorn at our solemnity?
Now, by the stuck and honour of my kin,
To strike him dead I hold it not a sin.

1 Cap. Why, how now kinsman? wherefore storm you so?

Tyb. Uncle, this is a Montague, our foe;
A villain, that is hither come in spite,
To scorn at our solemnity this night.

1 Cap. Young Romeo is't?

Tyb. 'Tis he, that villain Romeo.

1 Cap. Content thee, gentle coz, let him alone,
He bears him like a portly gentleman;
And, to say truth, Verona brags of him,
To be a virtuous and well-govern'd youth:
I would not, for the wealth of all this town,
Here in my house do him disparagement:
Therefore be patient, take no note of him,
It is my will; the which if thou respect,
Show a fair presence, and put off these frowns,
And all-be-seeming semblance for a feast.

Tyb. It fits, when such a villain is a guest;
I'll not endure him.

1 Cap. He shall be endur'd: [to:—
What, Goodman boy!—I say, he shall;—Go
Am I the master here, or you? I go to. [soul—
You'll not endure him!—God shall mend my You'll make a mutiny among my guests!
You will set cock-a-whoop! you'll be the man!

Tyb. Why, uncle, 'tis a shame.

1 Cap. Go to, go to,
You are saucy, boy;—Is't so, indeed?— [what.
This trick may chance to scath* you;—I know
You must contrary me! marry, 'tis time—
Well said, my hearts:—You are a princely; †
go:—

Be quiet, or—More light, more light, for shame!—
I'll make you quiet; What!—Cheerly, my hearts.

Tyb. Patience perforce with wilful choler meeting, [ing.
Makes my flesh tremble in their different greet-
I will withdraw; but this intrusion shall,
Now seeming sweet, convert to bitter gall.

[Exit.

Rom. If I profane with my unworthy hand
[To JULIET.
This holy shrine, the gentle fine is this,—
My lips, two blushing pilgrims, ready stand
To smooth that rough touch with a tender
kiss.

Jul. Good pilgrim, you do wrong your hand
too much,
Which piounerly devotion shows in this;
For saints have hands that pilgrims' hands do touch,

And palm to palm is holy palmers' kiss.
Rom. Have not saints lips, and holy palmers
too?

Jul. Ay, pilgrim, lips that they must use in prayer.

Rom. O then, dear saint, let lips do what hands do;

They pray, grant thou, lest faith turn to despair.

Jul. Saints do not move, though grant for players' sake.

Rom. Then move not, while my prayer's effect I take.

Thus from my lips, by yours, my sin is purg'd.

[Kissing her. †

Jul. Then have my lips the sin that they have took.

Rom. Sin from my lips? O trespass sweetly
Give me my sin again.

Jul. You kiss by the book.

Nurse. Madam, your mother craves a word
with you.

Rom. What is her mother?

Nurse. Marry, bachelior,
Her mother is the lady of the house,
And a good lady, and a wise, and virtuous:
I nurs'd her daughter, that you talk'd withal;
I tell you,—he, that can lay hold of her,
Shall have the chinks.

Rom. Is she a Capulet?

1 Cap. O dear account! my life is my foe's debt.

Ben. Away, begone; the sport is at the best.

Rom. Ay, so I fear; the more is my unrest.

1 Cap. Nay, gentlemen, prepare not to be gone;

We have a trifling foolish banquet* towards.—

Is it e'en so? Why, then I thank you all;

I thank you, honest gentlemen; good night:—

More torches here!—Come on, then! let's to bed. [late; †

Ah, Sirrah, [To 2 CAP.] by my fay, † it waxes
I'll to my rest.

[Exit all but JULIET and NURSE.
Jul. Come hither, nurse: What is your gentleman?

Nurse. The son and heir of old Tiberio.

Jul. What's he, that now is going out of door?

Nurse. Marry, that, I think, be young Petruchio.

Jul. What's he, that follows there, that would not dance?

Nurse. I know not.

Jul. Go, ask his name:—If he be married,
My grave is like to be my wedding bed.

Nurse. His name is Romeo, and a Montague;
The only son of your great enemy.

Jul. My only love sprung from my only hate!

Too early seen unknown, and known too late!

Prodigious birth of love it is to me,

That I must love a loathed enemy.

Nurse. What's this? what's this?

Jul. A rhyme I learn'd even now
Of one I danc'd withal.

[One calls within, Juliet!
Nurse. Anon, anon:—
Come, let's away; the strangers all are gone.

[Exit.

Enter CHORUS.

Now old desire doth in his death-bed lie,
And young affection gapes to be his heir;
That fair, which love groan'd for, and would die
With tender Juliet match'd, is now not fair.

Now Romeo is belov'd, and loves again,
Alike bewitched by the charm of looks;

But to his foe suppos'd he must complain,
And she steals love's sweet bait from fearful hooks:

Being held a foe, he may not have access
To breathe such vows as lovers use to swear;

And she as much in love, her means much less
To meet her new-beloved any where:

But passion lends them power, time means to meet,

Temp'ring extremities with extreme sweet.
[Exit.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—An open Place, adjoining CAPULET'S Garden.

Enter ROMEO.

Rom. Can I go forward, when my heart is
here?

Turn back, dull earth, † and find thy centre out.
[He climbs the Wall, and leaps down within it.

* Do you an injury. † A cockcomb.
† In our poet's time, a salute in a public assembly might not be esteemed indecorous.

* A collation of fruit, wine, &c. † Faith.

Enter BENVOLIO, and MERCUTIO.

Ben. Romeo! my cousin Romeo!

Merc. He is wise;

And, on my life, hath stolen him home to bed.

Ben. He ran this way, and leap'd this orchard wall;

Call, good Mercutio.

Merc. Nay, I'll conjure too.—

Romeo! humours! madman! passion! lover!

Appear thou in the likeness of a sigh,

Speak but one rhyme, and I am satisfied;

Cry but—Ah me! couple but—love and dove;

Speak to my gossip Venus one fair word,

One nick-name for her purblind son and heir,

Young Adam Cupid, he that shot so trim,

When king Cophetua lov'd the beggar-maid. *—

He heareth not, stirreth not, he moveth not;

The ape† is dead, and I must conjure him.—

I conjure thee by Rosaline's bright eyes,

By her high forehead, and her scarlet lip,

By her fine foot, straight leg, and quivering thigh,

And the demesnes that there adjacent lie,

That in thy likeness thou appear to us.

Ben. An if he hear thee, thou wilt anger him.

Merc. This cannot anger him: 'twould anger

To raise a spirit in his mistress' circle †him

Of some strange nature, letting it there stand

Till she had laid it, and conjur'd it down;

That were some spite: my invocation

Is fair and honest, and, in his mistress' name,

I conjure only but to raise up him.

Ben. Come, he hath hid himself among those trees,

To be consorted with the humorous; night:

Blind is his love, and best befits the dark.

Merc. If love be blind, love cannot hit the mark.

Now will he sit under a medlar tree,

And wish his mistress were that kind of fruit,

As inwards call medlars, when they laugh alone.—

Romeo, good night;—I'll to my truckle-bed;

This field-bed is too cold for me to sleep:

Come, shall we go?

Ben. Go, then; for 'tis in vain

To seek him here, that means not to be found.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—CAPULET'S Garden.

Enter ROMEO.

Rom. He jests at scars, that never felt a wound.—

[JULIET appears above at a Window. But, soft! what light through yonder window breaks?

It is the east, and Juliet is the sun!—

Arise, fair sun, and kill the envious moon,

Who is already sick and pale with grief,

That thou her maid art far more fair than she:

Be not her maid, ‡ since she is envious;

Her vestal livery is but sick and green,

And none but fools do wear it; cast it off.—

It is my lady; O it is my love:

O that she knew she were!—

She speaks, yet she says nothing; What of that?

Her eye discourses, I will answer it.—

I am too bold, 'tis not to me she speaks:

Two of the fairest stars in all the heaven,

Having some business, do entreat her eyes

To twinkle in their spheres till they return.

What if her eyes were there, they in her head

The brightness of her cheek would shame those stars,

As daylight doth a lamp; her eye in heaven

Would through the airy region stream so bright,

That birds would sing, and think it were not

night.

See, how she leans her cheek upon her hand!

* Alluding to the old ballad of the King and the Beggar.

† This phrase in Shakspeare's time was used as an expression of tenderness.

‡ A votary to the moon, to Diana.

O that I were a glove upon that hand,
That I might touch that cheek!

Jul. Ah me!

Rom. She speaks:—

O speak again, bright angel! for thou art

As glorious to this night, being o'er my head,

As is a winged messenger of heaven

Unto the white-upturned wond'ring eyes

Of mortals, that fall back to gaze on him,

When he bestrides the lazy-pacing clouds,

And sails upon the bosom of the air.

Jul. O Romeo, Romeo! wherefore art thou Romeo?

Deny thy father, and refuse thy name:

Or, if thou wilt not, be but sworn my love,

And I'll no longer be a Capulet.

Rom. Shall I hear more, or shall I speak at this? [Aside.]

Jul. 'Tis but thy name, that is my enemy;—

Thou art thyself though, not a Montague.

What's Montague? it is nor hand, nor foot,

Nor arm, nor face, nor any other part

Belonging to a man. O be some other name!

What's in a name? that which we call a rose,

By any other name would smell as sweet:

So Romeo would, were he not Romeo call'd:

Retain that dear perfection which he owes,

Without that title:—Romeo, doff † thy name;

And for that name, which is no part of thee,

Take all myself.

Rom. I take thee at thy word:

Call me but love, and I'll be new baptiz'd:

Henceforth I never will be Romeo.

Jul. What man art thou, that, thus bescreen'd in night,

So stumblest on my counsel?

Rom. By a name

I know not how to tell thee who I am;

My name, dear saint, is hateful to myself,

Because it is an enemy to thee:

Had I it written, I would tear the word.

Jul. My ears have not yet drunk a hundred

words

Of that tongue's utterance, yet I know the sound:

Art thou not Romeo, and a Montague?

Rom. Neither, fair saint, if either thee dislike.

Jul. How cam'st thou hither, tell me? and wherefore?

The orchard walls are high, and hard to climb;

And the place death, considering who thou art,

If any of my kinsmen find thee here.

Rom. With love's light wings did I o'erperch

these walls;

For stony limits cannot hold love out:

And what love can do, that dares love attempt;

Therefore thy kinsmen are no let; to me.

Jul. If they do see thee, they will murder

thee.

Rom. Alack! there lies more peril in thine eye,

Than twenty of their swords: look thou but

And I am proof against their enmity.

Jul. I would not, for the world, they saw thee

here.

Rom. I have night's cloak to hide me from their sight;

And, but thou love me, ‡ let them find me here:

My life were better ended by their hate,

Than death prorogued, wanting of thy love.

Jul. By whose direction found'st thou out this place?

Rom. By love, who first did prompt me to inquire;

He lent me counsel, and I lent him eyes.

I am no pilot: yet, wert thou as far

As that vast shore wash'd with the furthest sea,

I would adventure for such merchandise.

Jul. Thou know'st the mask of night is on my face;

Else would a maiden blush bepaint my cheek,

* Owes.

† Hindrance.

‡ Lay aside.

§ Unless thou love me.

For that which thou hast heard me speak to-night.

Fain would I dwell on form; fain, fain deny
What I have spoke; But farewell compliment!
Dost thou love me? I know thou wilt say

Yes;
And I will take thy word: yet, if thou swear'st,
Thou may'st prove false; at lovers' perjuries,
They say Jove laughs. O gentle Romeo,
If thou dost love, pronounce it faithfully:
Or if thou think'st I am too quickly won,
I'll frown and be perverse, and say thee nay,
So thou wilt woo: but, else, not for the world.
In truth, fair Montague, I am too fond;
And therefore thou may'st think my haviour

light:
But trust me, gentleman, I'll prove more true
Than those that have more cunning to be

strange.*
I should have been more strange, I must confess,
But that thou over-heard'st, ere I was ware,
My true love's passion: therefore pardon me;
And not impute this yielding to light love,
Which the dark night hath so discovered.

Rom. Lady, by yonder blessed moon I swear,
That tips with silver all these fruit-tree tops,—

Jul. O swear not by the moon, the inconstant moon,

That monthly changes in her eclipsed orb,
Lest that thy love prove likewise variable.

Rom. What shall I swear by?

Jul. Do not swear at all;

Or, if thou wilt, swear by thy gracious self,
Which is the god of my idolatry,
And I'll believe thee.

Rom. If my heart's dear love—

Jul. Well, do not swear: although I joy in

thee,
I have no joy in this contract to-night:
It is too rash, too unadvised, too sudden;
Too like the lightning, which doth cease to be,
Ere one can say—It lightens. Sweet, good

night!
This bud of love, by summer's ripening breath,
May prove a beauteous flower when next we

meet.
Good night, good night! as sweet repose and

rest
Come to thy heart, as that within my breast!

Rom. O wilt thou leave me so unsatisfied?

Jul. What satisfaction canst thou have to-

night?
Rom. The exchange of thy love's faithful vow for mine.

Jul. I gave thee mine before thou didst request it;

And yet I would it were to give again.

Rom. Would'st thou withdraw it? for what purpose, love?

Jul. But to be frank,† and give it thee again.
And yet I wish but for the thing I have:
My bounty is as boundless as the sea,
My love as deep; the more I give to thee,
The more I have, for both are infinite.

[Nurse calls within.
I hear some noise within; Dear love, adieu!
And, good nurse!—Sweet Montague, be true.
Stay but a little, I will come again.] [Exit.

Rom. O blessed blessed night! I am afraid,
Being in night, all this is but a dream,
Too flattering-sweet to be substantial.

Re-enter JULIET, above.

Jul. Three words, dear Romeo, and good night indeed.

If that thy heart of love be honourable,
Thy purpose marriage, send me word to-morrow,
By one that I'll procure to come to thee,
Where and what time thou wilt perform the rite;
And all my fortunes at thy foot I'll lay,
And follow thee, my lord, throughout the

* J. v. More artfully assume coldness.
† Freely. ‡ Inclination.

Nurse. [Within.] Madam.

Jul. I come, anon:—But if thou mean'st not

I do beseech thee,— [well,

Nurse. [Within.] Madam.

Jul. By and by, I come:—

To cease thy suit, and leave me to my grief:

To-morrow will I send.

Rom. So thrive my soul,—

Jul. A thousand times good night! [Exit.

Rom. A thousand times the worse to want thy

light—

Love goes toward love, as schoolboys from their books;

But love from love, toward school with heavy looks. [Retiring slowly.

Re-enter JULIET, above.

Jul. Hie! Romeo, hie!—O for a falconer's

voice,

To lure this tassel-gentle* back again!

Bondage is hoarse, and may not speak aloud;

Else would I tear the cave where Echo lies,

And make her airy tongue more hoarse than

mine

With repetition of my Romeo's name.

Rom. It is my soul, that calls upon my name:

How silver-sweet sound lovers' tongues by night,

Like softest music to attending ears!

Jul. Romeo!

Rom. My sweet!

Jul. At what o'clock to-morrow

Shall I send to thee?

Rom. At the hour of nine.

Jul. I will not fail; 'tis twenty years till

then.

I have forgot why I did call thee back.

Rom. Let me stand here till thou remember

it.

Jul. I shall forget, to have thee still stand

there,

Rememb'ring how I love thy company.

Rom. And I'll still stay, to have thee still forget

Forgetting any other home but this.

Jul. 'Tis almost morning, I would have thee

gone:

And yet no further than a wanton's bird;

Who lets it hop a little from her hand,

Like a poor prisoner in his twisted evens,†

And with a silk thread plucks it black again,

So loving-jealous of his liberty.

Rom. I would I were thy bird.

Jul. Sweet, so would I:

Yet I should kill thee with much cherishing.

Good night, good night! Parting is such sweet

sorrow,

That I shall say—good night, till it be morrow.

[Exit.

Rom. Sleep dwell upon thine eyes, peace in thy breast!—

'Would I were sleep and peace, so sweet to rest!

Hence will I to my ghostly father's cell:

His help to crave, and my dear hap‡ to tell.

[Exit.

SCENE III.—Friar LAURENCE'S CELL.

Enter Friar LAURENCE, with a Basket.

Fri. The grey-eyed morn smiles on the frowning night, [light;

Checking the eastern clouds with streaks of

And becked‡ darkness like a drunkard reels

From forth day's path-way, made by Titan's‡ wheels:

Now ere the sun advance his burning eye,

The day to cheer, and night's dank dew to dry,

I must fill up this osier cage of ours,

With baleful weeds, and precious-juiced flowers.

The earth, that's nature's mother, is her tomb;

What is her burying grave, that is her womb:

And from her womb children of divers kind

We sucking on her natural bosom end;

* The male of the goshawk. † Fetters.
‡ Chance. § Spotted, streaked. ¶ The sun.

Many for many virtues excellent,
None but for some, and yet all different.
O mickle is the powerful grace* that lies
In herbs, plants, stones, and their true qualities;
For nought so vile that on the earth doth live,
But to the earth some special good doth give;
Nor aught so good, but strain'd from that fair
use,
Revolts from true birth, stumbling on abuse:
Virtue itself turns vice, being misapplied;
And vice sometime's by action dignified.
Within the infant rind of this small flower
Poison hath residence, and med'cine power:
For this, being smelt, with that part cheers
each part;
Being tasted, slays all senses with the heart.
Two such opposed foes encamp them still
In man as well as herbs—grace and rude will;
And, where the worse is predominant,
Full soon the canker death eats up that plant.

Enter ROMEO.

Rom. Good morrow, father;

Fri. Benedicite!

What early tongue so sweet saluteth me?—
Young son, it argues a distemper'd head,
So soon to bid good morrow to thy bed;
Care keeps his watch in every old man's eye,
And where care lodges, sleep will never lie;
But where unbruised youth with unstuff'd brain
Doth couch his limbs, there golden sleep doth reign:

Therefore thy earliness doth me assure,
Thou art up-ris'n'd by some distemper'd nature;
Or, if not so, then here I hit it right—
Our Romeo hath not been in bed to night.

Rom. That last is true, the sweeter rest was
mine.

Fri. God pardon sin! wast thou with Rosaline?

Rom. With Rosaline, my ghostly father? no;
I have forgot that name, and that name's woe.

Fri. That's my good son: But where hast thou been then?

Rom. I'll tell thee, ere thou ask it me again.
I have been feasting with mine enemy;
Where, on a sudden, one hath wounded me,
That's by me wounded; both our remedies
Within thy help and holy physic lies:
I bear no hatred, blessed man; for, lo,
My intercession likewise steads my foe.

Fri. Be plain, good son, and homely in thy drift;

Riddling confession finds but riddling shrift.

Rom. Then plainly know, my heart's dear love is set

On the fair daughter of rich Capulet:
As mine on her's, so her's is set on mine;
And all combin'd save what thou must combine

By holy marriage: When, and where, and how,
We met, we woo'd, and made exchange of vow,
I'll tell thee as we pass; and this I pray,
That thou consent to marry us this day.

Fri. Holy Saint Francis! what a change is
here!

Is Rosaline, whom thou didst love so dear,
So soon forsaken? young men's love then lies
Not truly in their hearts, but in their eyes.
Jesu Maria! what a deal of brine
Hath wash'd thy sallow cheeks for Rosaline!
How much salt water thrown away in waste,
To season love, that of it doth not taste!
The sun not yet thy sighs from heaven clears,
Thy old groans rung yet in my ancient ears;
Lo, here upon thy cheek the stain doth sit
Of an old tear that is not wash'd off yet:
If e'er thou wast thyself, and these woes thine,
Thou and these woes were all for Rosaline;
And art thou chang'd? pronounce this sentence
then—

Women may fall, when there's no strength in

* Virtue.

Rom. Thou chid'st me oft for loving Rosaline.

Fri. For doting, not for loving, pupil mine.

Rom. And had'st me bury love.

Fri. Not in a grave,

To lay one in, another out to have.

Rom. I pray thee, chide not: she, whom I love now,

Doth grace for grace, and love for love allow;

The other did not so.

Fri. O she knew well,

Thy love did read by rote, and could not spell.

But come, young waverer, come go with me,

In one respect I'll thy assistant be;

For this alliance may so happy prove,

To turn your households' rancour to pure love.

Rom. O let us hence; I stand on sudden haste.*

Fri. Wisely and slow; they stumble that run fast. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—A Street.

Enter BENVOLIO AND MERCUTIO.

Mer. Where the devil should this Romeo be?
—Came he not home to-night?

Ben. Not to his father's; I spoke with his
man.

Mer. Ah! that same pale hard-hearted wench,
that Rosaline,

Torments him so, that he will sure run mad.

Ben. Tybalt, the kinsman of old Capulet,

Hath sent a letter to his father's house.

Mer. A challenge, on my life.

Ben. Romeo will answer it.

Mer. Any man, that can write, may answer a letter.

Ben. Nay, he will answer the letter's master, how he dares, being dared.

Mer. Alas, poor Romeo, he is already dead;
stabbed with a white wench's black eye; shot thorough the ear with a love-song; the very pun of his heart cleft with the blind bow-boy's butt-shaft;† And is he a man to encounter Tybalt?

Ben. Why, what is Tybalt?

Mer. More than prince of cats;‡ I can tell you. O he is the courageous captain of compliments. He fights as you sing prick-song,§ keeps time, distance, and proportion; rests me his minims rest, one, two, and the third in your bosom: the very butcher of a silk button, a duellist, a duellist; a gentleman of the very first house,—of the first and second cause: Ah, the immortal passado! the punto reverse! the lay!

Ben. The what?

Mer. The pox of such antic, lapwing, affecting, fantasies; these new tuners of accents!—*By Jesu,
a very good blade!—a very tall man!—
a very good whore!*—Why, is not this a lament-table thing, grandsire, that we should be thus afflicted with these strange flies, these fashionmongers, these pardonnez-moys, who stand so much on the new form, that they can sit at ease on the old bench? O their bons, their bons!¶

Enter ROMEO.

Ben. Here comes Romeo, here comes Romeo.

Mer. Without his roe, like a dried herring:
—O flesh, flesh, how art thou shiftd!—Now is he for the numbers that Petrarch flow'd in:
Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen-wench;
—marry, she had a better love to be-rhyme her
To: A dowsy; Cleopatra, a gipsy; Helen and Hero, hildings and harlots; Thisbe, a grey eye or so, but not to the purpose.—Signior Romeo, bon jour! there's a French salutation to your French slop. You gave us the counterfeit fairly last night.

* I.e. It is of the utmost consequence for me to be hasty.
† Arrow.

‡ See the story of Reynard the Fox.

§ By notes prick'd down.

¶ In ridicule of Frenchified combats.

 Trowsers or pantaloons, a French fashion in Shakespeare's time.

Rom. Good-morrow to you both. What counterfeit did I give you?

Mer. The slip, Sir, the slip; * Can you not conceive?

Rom. Pardon, good Mercutio, my business was great; and in such a case as mine, a man may strain courtesy.

Mer. That's as much as to say—such a case as your's constrains a man to bow in the hams.

Rom. Meaning—to court'ay.

Mer. Thou hast most kindly bit it.

Rom. A most courteous exposition.

Mer. Nay, I am the very pink of courtesy.

Rom. Pink for flower.

Mer. Right.

Rom. Why, then is my pump † well-flowered.

Mer. Well said: Follow me this jest now, till thou hast worn out thy pump; that, when the single sole of it is worn, the jest may remain, after the wearing, solely singular.

Rom. O single-soled ‡ jest, solely singular for the singleness!

Mer. Come between us, good Benvolio; my wits fail.

Rom. Switch and spurs, switch and spurs; or I'll cry a match.

Mer. Nay, if thy wits run the wild-goose chase, § I have done; for thou hast more of the wild-goose in one of thy wits, than, I am sure, I have in my whole five: Was I with you there for the goose?

Rom. Thou wast never with me for any thing, when thou wast not there for the goose.

Mer. I will bite thee by the ear for that jest.

Rom. Nay, good goose, bite not.

Mer. Thy wit is a very bitter sweeting; ¶ it is a most sharp sauce.

Rom. And is it not well served in to a sweet goose?

Mer. O here's a wit of cheverel, ¶ that stretches from an inch narrow to an ell broad!

Rom. I stretch it out for that word—broad; which added to the goose, proves thee far and wide a broad goose.

Mer. Why, is not this better now than groaning for love? now art thou sociable, now art thou Romeo; now art thou what thou art, by art as well as by nature: for this drivelling love is like a great natural, that runs lolling up and down to hide his bauble in a hole.

Ben. Stop there, stop there.

Mer. Thou desirest me to stop in my tale against the hair.

Ben. Thou wouldst else have made thy tale large.

Mer. O thou art deceived, I would have made it short: for I was come to the whole depth of my tale; and meant, indeed, to occupy the argument no longer.

Rom. Here's goodly geer!

Enter Nurse and Peter.

Mer. A sail, a sail, a sail!

Ben. Two, two; a shirt and a smock.

Nurse. Peter!

Peter. Anon!

Nurse. My fan, Peter. **

Mer. Pr'ythee, do, good Peter, to hide her face; for her fan's the fairer of the two.

Nurse. God ye good-morrow, gentlemen.

Mer. God ye good den, †† fair gentlewoman.

Nurse. Is it good den?

Mer. 'Tis no less, I tell you; for the bawdy hand of the dial is now upon the prick †† of noon.

Nurse. Out upon you! what a man are you?

Rom. One, gentlewoman, that God hath made himself to mar.

Nurse. By my troth, it is well said;—For himself to mar, quoth'a?—Gentlemen, can any of you tell me where I may find the young Romeo?

* A pun on counterfeit money called slips.

† Shoes. ‡ Slight, thin.

§ A horse race in any direction the leader chooses to take.

¶ An apple. ¶ Soft stretching leeching.

 This was formerly the practice, though ridiculous to modern ideas.

†† Good even.

‡† Point.

Rom. I can tell you; but young Romeo will be older when you have found him, than he was when you sought him: I am the youngest of that name, for 'fault of a worse.

Nurse. You say well.

Mer. Yea, is the worst well? very well took, I'faith; wisely, wisely.

Nurse. If you be he, Sir, I desire some confidence with you.

Ben. She will invite him to some supper.

Mer. A bawd, a bawd, a bawd! So be!

Rom. What hast thou found?

Mer. No hare, Sir; unless a hare, Sir, in a lenten pie, that is something stale and hoar ere it be spent.

*An old hare hoar, **

And an old hare hoar,

Is very good meat in lent:

But a hare that is hoar,

Is too much for a score,

When it hoars ere it be spent.—

Romeo, will you come to your father's? we'll to dinner thither.

Rom. I will follow you.

Mer. Farewell, ancient lady; farewell, lady, lady, † lady.

[Exeunt MERCUTIO and BENVOLIO.]

Nurse. Marry farewell!—I pray you, Sir, what saucy meichant ‡ was this, that was so full of his ropery? §

Rom. A gentleman, nurse, that loves to hear himself talk; and will speak more in a minute, than he will stand to in a month.

Nurse. An 'a speak any thing against me, I'll take him down an 'a were lustier than he is, and twenty such Jacks; and if I cannot, I'll find those that shall. Scurvy knave! I am none of his flirt-gills; I am none of his skainsmates: ¶ —And thou must stand by too, and suffer every knave to use me at his pleasure?

Pet. I saw no man use you at his pleasure; if I had, my weapon should quickly have been out, I warrant you: I dare draw as soon as another man, if I see occasion in a good quarrel, and the law on my side.

Nurse. Now, afore God, I am so vexed, that every part about me quivers. Scurvy knave!—Pray you, Sir, a word; and, as I told you, my young lady bade me inquire you out; what she bade me say, I will keep to myself: but first let me tell ye, if ye should lead her into a fool's paradise, as they say, it were a very gross kind of behaviour, as they say: for the gentlewoman, is young; and, therefore, if you should deal double with her, truly, it were an ill thing to be offered to any gentlewoman, and very weak dealing.

Rom. Nurse, commend me to thy lady and mistress. I protest unto thee,— Nurse. Good heart! and I'faith, I will tell her as much: Lord, lord, she will be a joyful woman.

Rom. What wilt thou tell her, nurse? thou dost not mark me.

Nurse. I will tell her, Sir,—that you do protest; which, as I take it, is a gentlemanlike offer.

Rom. Bid her devise some means to come this afternoon; ¶ [to shift ¶]

And there she shall, at friar Laurence's cell, Be shriv'd and married. Here is for thy pains.

Nurse. No, truly, Sir; not a penny.

Rom. Go to; I say you shall.

Nurse. This afternoon, Sir? well, she shall be there.

Rom. And stay, good nurse, behind the abbey-wall:

Within this hour my man shall be with thee; And bring thee cords made like a tackled stair; Which to the high top-gallant  of my joy Must be my convoy in the secret night.

* Hoary, mouldy.

† The burden of an old song.

‡ A term in contradistinction to gentleman.

§ Roguery. ¶ Not one of those that wore a skarn or short sword.

 The highest extremity of a ship's mast.

Farewell!—Be trusty, and I'll quit * thy pains.
Farewell!—Commend me to thy mistress.

Nurse. Now God in heaven bless thee!—Mark you, Sir.

Rom. What say'st thou, my dear nurse?

Nurse. Is your man secret? Did you ne'er hear say—

Two may keep counsel, putting one away?

Rom. I warrant thee; my man's as true as steel.

Nurse. Well, Sir; my mistress is the sweetest lady—Lord, lord!—when 'twas a little prating thing,—O,—there's a nobleman in town, one Paris, that would fain lay knife aboard; but she, good soul, had as lieve see a toad, a very toad, as see him. I anger her sometimes, and tell her that Paris is the properer man; but I'll warrant you, when I say so, she looks as pale as any clout in the varsal world. Doth not rosemary and Romeo begin both with a letter?

Rom. Ay, nurse; What of that? both with an R.

Nurse. Ah, mocker! that's the dog's name. R is for the dog. No; I know it begins with some other letter; and she hath the prettiest sententions of it, of you and rosemary, that it would do you good to hear it.

Rom. Commend me to thy lady. [Exit.]

Nurse. Ay, a thousand times.—Peter!

Pet. Anon.

Nurse. Peter, take my fan, and go before. [Exit.]

SCENE V.—CAPULET'S Garden.

Enter JULIET.

Jul. The clock struck nine, when I did send the nurse;

In half an hour she promis'd to return.

Percance, she cannot meet him: that's not so—

O she is lame! love's heralds should be thoughts,
Which ten times faster glide than the sun's beams,

Driving back shadows upon low'ring hills;
Therefore do nimble-pinion'd doves draw love,
And therefore hath the wind swift Cupid wings.
Now is the sun upon the highest hill
Of this day's journey; and from nine till twelve

Is three long hours,—yet she is not come.
Had she affections, and warm youthful blood,
She'd be as swift in motion as a ball;
My words would bandy† her to my sweet love,
And his to me:
But old folks, many feign as they were dead;
Unwieldy, slow, heavy, and pale as lead.

Enter NURSE and PETER.

O God, she comes!—O honey nurse, what news?

Hast thou met with him? Send thy man away.

Nurse. Peter, stay at the gate.

[Exit PETER.]

Jul. Now, good sweet nurse,—O lord! why look'st at thou sad?

Though news be sad, yet tell them merrily;
If good, thou sham'st the music of sweet news,
By playing it to me with so sour a face.

Nurse. I am weary, give me leave a while;—
Lie, how my bones ache! What a jaunt have I had!

Jul. I would thou hadst my bones, and I thy news:

Nay, come, I pray thee, speak;—good, good nurse, speak.

Nurse. Jesu! What haste! can you not stay awhile?

Do you not see, that I am out of breath?

Jul. How art thou out of breath, when thou hast breath

To say to me that thou art out of breath?
The excuse that thou dost make in this delay,
Is longer than the tale thou dost excuse.
Is thy news good or bad? answer to that;
Say either, and I'll say the circumstance.
Let me be satisfied, I st good or bad?

Nurse. Well, you have made a simple choice,
you know not how to choose a man: Romeo, no, not he; though his face be better than any man's, yet his leg excels all men's; and for a hand, and a foot, and a body,—though they be not to be talked on, yet they are past compare: He is not the flower of courtesy,—but, I'll warrant him, as gentle as a lamb.—Go thy ways, wench; serve God.—What, have you din'd at home?

Jul. No, no: But all this did I know before,
What says he to our marriage? what of that?

Nurse. Lord, how my head aches! what a head have I!

It beats as it would fall in twenty pieces.

My back o't'other side,—O my back, my back!—
Besiege * your heart, for sending me about,
To catch my death with jaunting up and down!

Jul. Prithee, I am sorry that thou art not well:

Sweet, sweet, sweet nurse, tell me, what says my love?

Nurse. Your love says like an honest gentleman,

And a courteous and a kind, and a handsome,
And, I warrant, a virtuous:—Where is your mother?

Jul. Where is my mother?—why, she is within;

Where should she be? How oddly thou repliest!

Your love says like an honest gentleman,—
Where is your mother?

Nurse. O God's lady dear!

Are you so hot? Marry, come up, I trow;
Is this the pointance for my aching bones?

Henceforward do your messages yourself.

Jul. Here's such a celly,—come, what says Romeo?

Nurse. Have you got leave to go to shutt to-day?

Jul. I have.

Nurse. Then hie you hence to find Laurence's cell.

There stays a husband to make you a wife.
Now comes the wanton blood up in your cheeks,

They'll be in scarlet straight at any news.
Hie you to church: I must another way,

To fetch a ladder, by the which your love
Must climb a bird's nest soon when it is dark:
I am the drudge, and toil in your delight;

But you shall bear the burden soon at night.
Go, I'll to dinner; hie you to the cell.

Jul. Hie to high fortune! honest nurse, farewell. [Exit.]

SCENE VI.—Friar LAURENCE'S Cell.

Enter Friar LAURENCE and ROMEO.

Fri. So smile the heavens upon this holy act,
That after-hours with sorrow chide us not!

Rom. Amen, amen! but come what sorrow can,

It cannot countervail the exchange of joy
That one short minute gives me in her sight:

Do thou but close our hands with holy words,
Then love-devouring death do what he dare,
It is enough I may but call her mine.

Fri. These violent delights have violent ends,
And in their triumph die; like fire and powder,

Which, as they kiss, consume: the sweetest honey

Is loathsome in his own deliciousness,
And in the taste confounds the appetite:

Therefore, love moderately; long love doth so;
Too swift arrives as tardy as too slow.

* Requite.
† Drive her, as a ball struck with a bandy or battledore.

* Ill betide. † A pet, or disturbance.

Enter JULIET.

Here comes the lady:—O so light a foot
Will ne'er wear out the everlasting flint: *
A lover may bestide the gossamers †
That idle in the wanton summer air,
And yet not fall; so light is vanity.

Jul. O good even to my ghostly confessor.

Fri. Romeo shall thank thee, daughter, for us both.

Jul. As much to him, else are his thanks too much.

Rom. Ah! Juliet, if the measure of thy joy
Be heap'd like mine, and that thy skill be more

To blazon it, then sweeten with thy breath
This neighbour air, and let rich music's tongue
Unfold the imagined happiness that both
Receive in either by this dear encounter.

Jul. Conceit, more rich in matter than in words,
Brags of his substance, not of ornament:
They are but beggars that can count their worth;

But my true love is grown to such excess,
I cannot sum up half my sum of wealth.

Fri. Come, come with me, and we will make short work;

For, by your leaves, you shall not stay alone,
Till holy church incorporate two in one.

[Licent.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Public Place.

Enter MERCUTIO, BENVOLIO, Page, and Servants.

Ben. I pray you, good Mercutio, let's retire;
The day is hot, the Capulets abroad,
And, if we meet, we shall not 'scape a brawl;
For now, these hot days, is the mad blood stirring.

Merc. Thou art like one of those fellows, that, when he enters the confines of a tavern,
claps me his sword upon the table, and says,
'God send me no need of thee!' and, by the operation of the second cup, draws it on the drawer, when, indeed, there is no need.

Ben. Am I like such a fellow?

Merc. Come, come, thou art as hot a Jack in the mood as any in Italy; and as soon moved to be moody, and as soon moody to be moved.

Ben. And what to?

Merc. Nay, and there were too such, we should have none shortly, for one would kill the other. Thou! why thou wilt quarrel with a man that hath a hair more or a hair less in his beard than thou hast. Thou wilt quarrel with a man for cracking nuts, having no other reason but because thou hast hazel eyes;
What eye, but such an eye, would spy out such a quarrel? Thy head is as full of quarrels, as an egg is full of meat; and yet thy head hath been beaten as added as an egg, for quarrelling.
Thou hast quarrelled with a man for coughing in the street, because he hath awakened thy dog that hath lain asleep in the sun. Didst thou not fall out with a tailor for wearing his new doublet before Easter? with another, for tying his new shoes with old ribband? and yet
thou wilt not fight me from quarrelling!

Ben. Am I were so apt to quarrel as thou art, any man should buy the fee-simple of my life for an hour and a quarter.

Merc. The fee-simple? O simple!

Enter TYBALT, and others.

Ben. By my head here come the Capulets

Merc. By my heel, I care not.

* How everlasting flint could be worn out, is doubtful.

† The long white filament which flies in the air.

‡ Paint, dis-lay.

§ Imagination.

Tyb. Follow me close, for I will speak to them.—Gentlemen, good den: a word with one of you.

Merc. And but one word with one of us?
Couple it with something; make it a word and a blow.

Tyb. You will find me apt enough to that,
Sir, if you will give me occasion.

Merc. Could you not take some occasion without giving?

Tyb. Mercutio, thou consortest with Romeo,—

Merc. Consort? what, dost thou make us minstrels? an thou make minstrels of us, look to hear nothing but discords: here's my fiddle-stick; here's that shall make you dance.
'Zounds, consort!

Ben. We talk here in the public haunt of
men:

Either withdraw into some private place,

Or reason coldly of your grievances,

Or else depart: here all eyes gaze on us.

Merc. Man's eyes were made to look, and let them gaze;

I will not budge for no man's pleasure, I.

Enter ROMEO.

Tyb. Well, peace be with you, Sir! here comes my man.

Merc. But I'll be hanged, Sir, if he wear your livery:

Marry, go before to field, he'll be your follower;
Your worship, in that sense, may call him—
man.

Tyb. Romeo, the hate I bear thee can afford

No better term than this—Thou art a villain.

Rom. Tybalt, the reason that I have to love
Doth much excuse the appertaining rage [three
To such a greeting:—Villain am I none;] [three Therefore farewell; I see, thou know'st me

Tyb. Boy, this shall not excuse the injuries
That thou hast done me; therefore turn, and draw.

Rom. I do protest I never injur'd thee;
But love thee better than thou canst desire,
Till thou shalt know the reason of my love:
And so, good Capulet,—which name I tender
As dearly as mine own,—be satisfied.

Merc. O calm, dishonourable, vile submission!

A la stoccata * carries it away. [Draus.]

Tybalt, you rat-catcher, will you walk?

Tyb. What wouldst thou have with me?

Merc. Good king of cats, nothing but one of your nine lives; that I mean to make bold withal, and, as you shall use me hereafter, dry-beat the rest of the eight. Will you pluck your sword out of his pitcher † by the ears?
make haste, lest mine be about your ears ere it be out.

Tyb. I am for you.

[Drawing.]

Rom. Gentle Mercutio, put thy rapier up.

Tyb. Come, Sir, your passado. [They fight.]

Rom. Draw, Benvolio; [Shame]

Beat down their weapons:—Gentlemen, for Forbear this outrage;—Tybalt—Mercutio—
The prince expressly hath forbid this bandying in Verona streets:—hold, Tybalt;—good Mer-cutio.

[Exeunt TYBALT and his Partizans.]

Merc. I am hurt:—

A plague o' both the houses!—I am sped:—
Is he gone, and hath nothing?

Ben. What art thou hurt?

Merc. Ay, ay, a scratch, a scratch; marry,

'tis enough. [Geom.]

Where is my page?—go, villain, fetch a sur-
[Exit Page.]

Rom. Courage, man: the hurt cannot be much.

Merc. No, 'tis not so deep as a well, nor so

* The Italian term for a thrust or stab with a rapier.

† Case or scabbard.

wide as a church door; but 'tis enough, 'twill serve: ask for me to-morrow, and you shall find me a grave man. I am peppered, I warrant, for this world.—A plague o' both your houses!—Zounds, a dog, a rat, a mouse, a cat, to scratch a man to death! a braggart, a rogue, a villain, that fights by the book of arithmetic!—Why the devil came you between us? I was hurt under your arm.

Rom. I thought all for the best.

Merc. Help me into some house, Benvolio, Or I shall faint.—A plague o' both your houses! They have made worm's meat of me: I have it, and soundly too:—Your houses!

[Exeunt MERCUTIO and BENVOLIO.]

Rom. This gentleman, the prince's near ally, My very friend, hath got his mortal hurt In my behalf; my reputation stain'd With Tybalt's slander, Tybalt, that an hour Hath been my kinsman: O sweet Juliet, Thy beauty hath made me effeminate, And in my temper soften'd valour's steel.

Re-enter BENVOLIO.

Ben. O Romeo, Romeo, brave Mercutio's dead; That gallant spirit hath aspir'd the clouds, Which too untimely here did scorch the earth.

Rom. This day's black fate on more days doth depend; This but begins the woe, others must end.

Re-enter TYBALT.

Ben. Here comes the furious Tybalt back again.

Rom. Alive! in triumph! and Mercutio slain! Away to heaven, respective* lenity, And fire-eyed fury be my conduct! now!—Now, Tybalt, take the villain back again, That late thou gav'st me; for Mercutio's soul Is but a little way above our heads, Staying for thine to keep him company; Either thou, or I, or both, must go with him.

Tyb. Thon, wretched boy, that didst consort; him here, Shalt with him hence.

Rom. This shall determine that.

[They fight; TYBALT falls.]

Ben. Romeo, away, be gone! The citizens are up, and Tybalt slain: [death, Stand not amaz'd:—the prince will doom thee If thou art taken:—hence!—be gone!—away!]

Rom. O! I am fortune's fool!

Ben. Why dost thou stay? [Exit ROMEO.]

Enter CITIZENS, &c.

1 Cit. Which way ran he, that kill'd Mercutio?

Tybalt, that murderer, which way ran he?

Ben. There lies that Tybalt.

1 Cit. Up, Sir, go with me; I charge thee in the prince's name, obey.

Enter PRINCE, attended; MONTAGUE, CAPULET, their Wives and others,

Prin. Where are the vile beginners of this fray?

Ben. O noble prince, I can discover all The unlucky manage of this fatal brawl: There lies the man slain by young Romeo, That slew thy kinsman, brave Mercutio.

La. Cap. Tybalt, my cousin!—O my brother's child!

Unhappy fellow, the blood is spill'd Of my dear kinsman!—Prince, as thou art true,

For blood of ours shed blood of Montague.—O cousin, cousin!

Prin. Benvolio, who began this bloody fray?

Ben. Tybalt, here slain, whom Romeo's hand did slay;

* Cool, considerate gentleness.

† Conduct the conductor.

‡ Just and upright.

Romeo that spoke him fair, bade him bethink How nice* the quarrel was, and urg'd withal Your high displeasure:—All this—uttered With gentle breath, calm look, knees humbly bow'd,—

Could not take truce with the unruly spleen Of Tybalt deaf to peace, but that he kills With piercing steel at bold Mercutio's breast; Who, all as hot, turns deadly point to point, And, with a martial scorn, with one hand beats Cold death aside, and with the other sends It back to Tybalt, whose dexterity Retorts it: Romeo he cries aloud, Hold, friends! friends, part! and, swifter than his tongue,

His agile arm beats down their fatal points, And 'twixt them rushes; underneath whose arm

An envious thrust from Tybalt hit the life Of stout Mercutio, and then Tybalt fled: But by and by comes back to Romeo, Who had but newly entertain'd revenge, And to't they go like lightning; for, ere I Could draw to part them, was stout Tybalt slain;

And, as he fell, did Romeo turn and fly:

This is the truth, or let Benvolio die.

La. Cap. He is a kinsman to the Montague, Affection makes him false, he speaks not true: Some twenty of them fought in this black strife, And all those twenty could but kill one life: I beg for justice, which thou, prince, must give;

Romeo slew Tybalt, Romeo must not live.

Prin. Romeo slew him, he slew Mercutio; Who now the price of his dear blood doth owe?

Mon. Not Romeo, prince, he was Mercutio's friend; His fault concludes but what the law should The life of Tybalt.

Prin. And, for that offence, Immediately we do exile him hence: I have an interest in your hate's proceeding, My blood for your rude brawls doth lie a bleeding;

But I'll amerce you with so strong a fine, That you shall all repent the loss of mine: I will be deaf to pleading and excuses: Nor tears, nor prayers, shall purchase out abuses;

Therefore use none: let Romeo hence in haste, Else, when he's found, that hour is his last.

Bear hence this body and attend our will: Mercy but murders, pardoning those that kill.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A Room in CAPULET'S House.

Enter JULIET.

Jul. Gallop apace, you fiery-footed steeds, Towards Phœbus' mansion! such a waygoner As Phœton would whip you to the west, And bring in cloudy night immediately.—Spread thy close curtain, love-performing night!

That run-away's eyes may wink; and Romeo Leap to these arms, untalk'd of, and unseen!—Lovers can see to do their amorous rites By their own beauties; or, if love be blind, It best agrees with night.—Come, civil! night, Thou sober-suited matron, all in black, And learn me how to lose a winning match, Play'd for a pair of stainless maidenhoods: Hood my unmann'd blood bating in my cheeks, With thy black mantle; till strange love, grown bold,

Think true love acted, simple modesty.

Come, night!—Come, Romeo! come, thou day in night!

For thou wilt be upon the wings of night Whiter than new snow on a raven's back.—

* Slight, unimportant.

† Grave, solemn.

‡ These are terms of falconry

Come, gentle night; come, loving, black-brow'd night,

Give me my Romeo: and, when he shall die,
Take him and cut him out in little stars,
And he will make the face of heaven so fine,
That all the world will be in love with night,
And pay no worship to the garish sun.—
O I have bought the mansion of a love,
But not possess'd it; and, though I am sold,
Not yet enjoy'd: So tedious is this day,
As is the night before some festival
To an impatient child, that hath new robes,
And may not wear them. O here comes my nurse,

Enter Nurse, with Cords.

And she brings news; and every tongue, that speaks [sequence.—
But Romeo's name, speaks heavenly elo-
Now, nurse, what news? What hast thou there, the cords
That Romeo bade thee fetch?

Nurse. Ay, ay, the cords.

[Throws them down.]

Jul. Ah me! what news? why dost thou wring thy hands?

Nurse. Ah well-a-day! he's dead, he's dead,
he's dead!

We are undone, lady, we are undone!—
Alack the day!—he's gone, he's kill'd, he's
dead!

Jul. Can heaven be so envious?

Nurse. Romeo can,
Though heaven cannot:—O Romeo! Romeo!—
Who ever would have thought it!—Romeo!

Jul. What devil art thou, that dost torment me thus?

This torture should be roar'd in dismal hell.
Hath Romeo slain himself? say thou but I,†
And that bare vowel I shall poison more
Than the death-darting eye of cockatrice:
I am not I, if there be such an I;
Or those eyes shut, that make thee answer, I.
If he be slain, say—I; or if not, no:
Brief sounds determine of my weal or woe,

Nurse. I saw the wound, I saw it with mine
eyes,—

God save the mark!—here on his manly breast:
A piteous corse, a bloody piteous corse;
Pale, pale as ashes, all bedawb'd in blood,
All in gore blood; I swooned at the sight.

Jul. O break my heart!—poor bankrupt, break at once!

To prison, eyes! ne'er look on liberty!
Vile earth, to earth resign: end motion here;
And thou and Romeo press one heavy bier!

Nurse. O Tybalt, Tybalt, the best friend I had!

o courteous Tybalt! honest gentleman!
That ever I should live to see thee dead!

Jul. What storm is this, that blows so contrary?

Is Romeo slaughter'd? and is Tybalt dead?
My dear-lov'd cousin, and my dearer lord?
—Then, dreadful trumpet, sound the general doom!

For who is living, if those two are gone?

Nurse. Tybalt is gone, and Romeo banished;
Romeo, that kill'd him, he is banished.

Jul. O God!—did Romeo's hand shed Tybalt's
blood?

Nurse. It did, it did; alas the day! it did.

Jul. O serpent heart, hid with a flow'ring
face!

Did ever dragon keep so fair a cave?
Beautiful tyrant! fiend angelical!
Dove-feather'd raven! wolfish-ravenshank lamb!
Despised substance of divinest show!
Just opposite to what thou justly seem'st,
A damned saint, an honourable villain!—
O nature! what hadst thou to do in hell,

When thou didst bower the spirit of a fiend
In mortal paradise of such sweet flesh?
Was ever book, containing such vile matter,
So fairly bound? Oh! that deceit should dwell
In such a gorgeous palace!

Nurse. There's no trust,
No faith, no honesty in men; all perjur'd,
All forsworn, all naught, all dissemblers.—
Ah! where's my man? give me some aquavita:—

These griefs, these woes, these sorrows make me
Shame come to Romeo!

Jul. Blister'd be thy tongue,
For such a wish! he was not born to shame:
Upon his brow shame is asham'd to sit;
For 'tis a throne where honour may be crown'd
Sole monarch of the universal earth.
O what a beast was I to chide at him!

Nurse. Will you speak well of him that kill'd your cousin?

Jul. Shall I speak ill of him that is my husband?

Ah! poor my lord, what tongue shall smooth
thy name,

When I, thy three-hours wife, have mangled
it?—

But, wherefore, villain, didst thou kill my coutin? That villain cousin would have kill'd my husband:

Back, foolish tears, back to your native spring;
Your tributary drops belong to woe,
Which you, mistaking, offer up to joy.
My husband lives, that Tybalt would have slain;
And Tybalt's dead, that would have slain my
husband:

All this is comfort: Wherefore weep I then?
Some word there was, worse than Tybalt's
death,

That murder'd me: I would forget it fain;
But oh! it presses to my memory,
Like damned guilty deeds to sinners' minds:
Tybalt is dead, and Romeo—banished;
That—banished, that one word—banished,
Hath slain ten thousand Tybalts.† Tybalt's
death

Was woe enough, if it had ended there:
Or,—if sour woes delights in fellowship,
And needily will be rank'd with other griefs,—
Why follow'd not, when she said Tybalt's dead,
Thy father, or thy mother, nay, or both,
Which modern lamentation might have mov'd?
But, with a rearward following Tybalt's death,
Romeo is banished,—to speak that word,
Is father, mother, Tybalt, Romeo, Juliet,
All slain, all dead:—Romeo is banished.—
There is no end, no limit, measure, bound,
In that word's death; no words can that woe
sound,—

Where is my father, and my mother, nurse?

Nurse. Weeping and wailing over Tybalt's corse;

Will you go to them: I will bring you thither.

Jul. Wash they his wounds with tears: mine shall be spent,

When theirs are dry, for Romeo's banishment.

Take up those cords:—Poor ropes, you are be-guil'd;

Both you and I, for Romeo is exil'd:
He made you for a highway to my bed;

But I, a maid, the maiden-widowed.

Come, cords; come, nurse; I'll to my wedding bed:

And death, not Romeo, take my maidenhead!

Nurse. Hie to your chamber: I'll find Romeo
To comfort you:—I wot of well where he is.

Hark ye, your Romeo will be here at night;
I'll to him; he is hid at Laurence's cell.

Jul. O find him! give this ring to my true
knight,
And bid him come to take his last farewell.

[Exeunt.]

* Gaudy, showy. † In Shakespeare's time the affirmative particle ay was usually written ye, and here it is necessary to retain the old spelling.

* To smooth, in ancient language, is to attend, to comfort.
† I. e. it was more than the loss of ten thousand Tybalts.

SCENE III.—Friar LAURENCE'S Cell.

Enter Friar LAURENCE and ROMEO.

Fri. Romeo, come forth; come forth, thou fearful man;
Affliction is enshroud'd of thy parts,
And thou art wedded to calamity.

Rom. Father, what news? what is the prince's doom?

What sorrow craves acquaintance at my hand,
That I yet know not?

Fri. Too familiar
Is my dear son with such sour company:
I bring thee tidings of the prince's doom.

Rom. What less than doomsday is the prince's doom?

Fri. A gentler judgment vanish'd from his lips,
Not body's death, but body's banishment.

Rom. Ha! banishment? be merciful, say—
death:

For exile hath more terror in his look,
Much more than death: do not say—banish-
ment.

Fri. Hence from Verona art thou banished:
Be patient, for the world is broad and wide.

Rom. There is no world without Verona walls,

But purgatory, torture, hell itself.
Hence-banished is banish'd from the world,
And world's exile is death:—thou banishment is death misterm'd: calling death banishment,
Thou cut'st my head off with a golden axe,
And smil'st upon the stroke that murders me.

Fri. O deadly sin! O rude thankfulness!
Thy fault our law calls death; but the kind prince,

Taking thy part, hath rush'd aside the law,
And turn'd that black word death to banish-
ment:

This is dear mercy, and thou seest it not.

Rom. 'Tis torture, and not mercy: heaven is
here,

Where Juliet lives; and every cat, and dog,
And little mouse, every unworthy thing,
Live here in heaven, and may look on her,
But Romeo may not.—More validity,
More honourable state, more courtship lives
In carrion flies, than Romeo: they may seize
On the white wonder of dear Juliet's hand,
And steal immortal blessing from her lips;
Who, even in pure and vestal modesty,
Still blush, as thinking their own kisses sin;
But Romeo may not; he is banished:
Flies may do this, when I from this must fly;
They are free men, but I am banished.
And say'st thou yet, that exile is not death?
Hast thou no poison mix'd, no sharp-ground
knife,

No sudden mean of death, though ne'er so mean,
But—banished—to kill me: banished?
O friar, the damned use that word in hell;
Howlings attend it: How hast thou the heart,
Being a divine, a ghostly confessor,
A sin-absolver, and my friend profess'd,
To mangle me, with that word—banishment?

Fri. Thou fond mad man, hear me but speak a word.

Rom. O thou wilt speak again of banish-
ment.

Fri. 'I'll give thee armour to keep off that
word!

Adversity's sweet milk, philosophy,
To comfort thee, though thou art banished.

Rom. Yet banished?—Hang up philosophy!
Unless philosophy can make a Juliet,
Displant a town, reverse a prince's doom;
It helps not, it prevails not—talk no more.

Fri. O then I see that madmen have no ears.

Rom. How should they, when that wise men have no eyes?

Fri. Let me dispute with thee of thy estate.

* Worth value.

Rom. Thou canst not speak of what thou dost not feel:

Wert thou as young as I, Juliet thy love,
An hour but married, Tybalt murdered,
Doting like me, and like me banished,
Then might'st thou speak, then might'st thou tear
thy hair,

And fall upon the ground, as I do now,
Taking the measure of an unmade grave.

Fri. Arise; one knocks; good Romeo, hide
thyself.

Rom. Not I, unless the breath of heart-stick groans,
Mist-like, unfold me from the search of eyes.

Fri. Hark, how they knock!—Who's there?—
Romeo, arise;

Thou wilt be taken:—Stay a while: stand up:
Run to my study:—By and by:—God's will!

What wilfulness is this!—I come, I come.

Who knocks so hard? whence come you? what's your will?

Nurse. [Within.] Let me come in, and you shall know my errand;

I come from lady Juliet.

Fri. Welcome then.

Enter NURSE.

Nurse. O holy friar, O tell me, holy friar,
Where is my lady's lord, where's Romeo?

Fri. There on the ground, with his own tears made drunk.

Nurse. O he is even in my mistress' care,
Just in her case!

Fri. O woeful sympathy!
Piteous predicament!

Nurse. Even so, as she,
Blubbering and weeping, weeping and blubber-
ing:—

Stand up, stand up: stand, as you be a man:
For Juliet's sake, for her sake, rise and stand;

Why should you fall into so deep an O?

Rom. Nurse!

Nurse. Ah Sir! ah Sir!—Well, death's the end of all.

Rom. Spak'st thou of Juliet? how is it with
her?

Dost she not think me an old murderer?
Now I have stain'd the childhood of my joy
With blood removed but little from her own?

Where is she? and how doth she? and what say'st
My conceal'd lady to our conceal'd love?

Nurse. O she says nothing, Sir, but weeps and weeps;

And now falls on her bed; and then starts up,
And Tybalt calls; and then on Romeo cries,
And then down falls again.

Rom. As if that name,
Shot from the deadly level of a gun,

Did murder her; as that name's cursed hand
Murder'd her kinsman.—O tell me, friar, tell me,
In what vile part of this anatomy

Doth my name lodge? tell me, that I may sack
The hateful mansion.

[Drawing his sword.]
Fri. Hold thy desperate hand:

Art thou a man? thy form cries out thou art;
Thy tears are womanish: thy wild acts denote
The unreasonable fury of a beast:

Unseemly woman, in a seeming man!
Or ill-beseeming beast, in seeming both!

Thou hast amaz'd me: by my holy order,
I thought thy disposition better temper'd.

Hast thou slain Tybalt? wilt thou slay thyself?
And slay thy lady too that lives in thee,
By doing damned hate upon thyself?

Why rail'st thou on thy birth, the heaven, and earth?

Since birth, and heaven, and earth, all three do
meet

In thee at once; which thou at once wouldst lose.
Fie, fie! thou sham'st thy shape, thy love, thy
wit;

Which, like an usurer, abound'st in all,

And nest none in that true use indeed
Which should bedeck thy shape, thy love, thy wit.

Thy noble shape is but a form of wax,
Digressing from the valour of a man;
Thy dear love, sworn, but hollow purjury,
Killing that love which thou hast vow'd to cherish:

Thy wit, that ornament to shape and love,
Misshapen in the conduct of them both,
Like powder in a skill-less soldier's flask,
Is set on fire by thine own ignorance,
And thou dismember'd with thine own defence.*
What, rouse thee, man! thy Juliet is alive,
For whose dear sake thou wast but lately dead;
There art thou happy: Tybalt would kill thee,
But thou sleest[†] Tybalt; there art thou happy too:

The law, that threaten'd death, becomes thy friend,
And turns it to exile; there art thou happy:
A pack of blessings lights upon thy back;
Happiness courts thee in her best array;
But, like a mis-behaved and sullen wench,
Thou pout'st upon thy fortune and thy love:
Take heed, take heed, for such die miserably.
Go, get thee to thy love, as was decreed,
Ascend her chamber, hence and comfort her;
But look thou stay not till the watch be set,
For then thou canst not pass to Mantua;
Where thou shalt live, till we can find a time
To blaze your marriage, reconcile your friends,
Beg pardon of the prince, and call thee back
With twenty hundred thousand times more joy
Than thou wast forth in lamentation.—
Go before, nurse: commend me to thy lady;
And bid her hasten all the house to bed,
Which heavy sorrow makes them apt unto:
Romeo is coming.

Nurse. O Lord, I could have staid here all the night,
To hear good counsel: Oh! what learning is!—
My lord, I'll tell my lady you will come.

Rom. Do so, and bid my sweet prepare to chide.

Nurse. Here, Sir, a ring she bid me give you, Sir:
Hie you, make haste, for it grows very late.

Rom. How well my comfort is reviv'd by this! [Exit Nurse.]

Fri. Go hence: Good night; and here stands all your state; †

Either be gone before the watch be set,
Or by the break of day disguis'd from hence:
Sojourn in Mantua: I'll find out your man,
And he shall signify, from time to time,
Every good hap to you that chances here:
Give me thy hand; 'tis late: farewell; good night.

Rom. But that a joy past joy calls out on me,
It were a grief, so brief to part with thee:
Farewell. [Exit Fri.]

SCENE IV.—A Room in CAPULET'S House.

Enter CAPULET, Lady CAPULET, and PARIS.

Cap. Things have fallen out, Sir, so unluckily,
That we have had no time to move our daughter:

Look you, she lov'd her kinsman Tybalt dearly,
And so did I;—Well, we were born to die.—
'Tis very late, she'll not come down to-night:
I promise you, but for your company,
I would have been a-bed an hour ago.

Par. These times of woe afford no time to woo:

Madam, good night: commend me to your daughter.

La. Cap. I will, and know her mind early to-morrow;

To-night she's mew'd[‡] up to her heaviness.

* Torn to pieces with thine own weapons.

† The whole of your fortune depends on this.

‡ Shut up.

Cap. Sir Paris, I will make a desperate^{*} tender

Of my child's love: I think, she will be rul'd
In all respects by me; nay more, I doubt it not.
Wife, go you to her ere you go to bed;
Acquaint her here of my son Paris' love;
And bid her, mark you me, on Wednesday next—

But, soft; What day is this?

Par. Monday, my lord.

Cap. Monday! ha! ha! Well, Wednesday is too soon,

O'Thursday let it be;—O'Thursday, tell her,
She shall be married to this noble earl:—
Will you be ready? do you like this haste?
We'll keep no great ado;—a friend, or two:—
For hark you, Tybalt being slain so late,
It may be thought we held him carelessly,
Being our kinsman, if we revel much:
Therefore we'll have some half a dozen friends,
And there an end. But what say you to Thursday?

Par. My lord, I would that Thursday were to-morrow.

Cap. Well, get you gone:—O'Thursday be it then:—

Go you to Juliet ere you go to bed,
Prepare her, wife, against this wedding day.—
Farewell, my lord.—Light to my chamber, ho!
Afore me, it is so very late, that we May call it early by and by:—Good night. [Exit Cap.]

SCENE V.—JULIET'S Chamber.

Enter ROMEO and JULIET.

Jul. Wilt thou be gone? It is not yet his day:

It was the nightingale, and not the lark,
That pierc'd the fearful hollow of thine ear:
Nightly she sings on yon pomegranate-tree:
Believe me, love, it was the nightingale.

Rom. It was the lark, the herald of the morn,
No nightingale: look, love, what envious streaks
Do lace the severing clouds in yonder east:
Night's candles are burnt out, and jocund day
Stands tip-toe on the misty mountain-tops:
I must be gone and live, or stay and die.

Jul. You light is not daylight, I know it, I:
It is some meteor that the sun exhal'd,
To be to thee this night a torch-bearer,
And light thee on thy way to Mantua:
Therefore stay yet, thou need'st not to be gone.

Rom. Let me be ta'en, let me be put to death;
I am content, so thou wilt have it so.

I'll say, yon grey is not the morning's eye,
'Tis but the pale reflex of Cynthia's brow; †
Nor that is not the lark, whose notes do beat
The vaulty heaven so high above our heads:
I have more care to stay, than will to go;—
Come, death, and welcome! Juliet wills it so.—

How is't, my soul? let's talk, it is not day.

Jul. It is, it is, hie hence, be gone, away;
It is the lark that sings so out of tune,
Straining harsh discords, and unpleasant sharps.
Some say, the lark makes sweet division; ‡
This doth not so, for she divideth us:
Some say, the lark and loathed toad change

eyes;
O now I would they had chang'd voices too!
Since arm from arm that voice doth us affray,
Hunting thence hence with hunts-up[§] to the day.
O now be gone; more light and light it grows.

Rom. More light and light!—more dark and dark our woes.

Enter Nurse.

Nurse. Madam!

Jul. Nurse!

* Bold.

† Inclination.

‡ Reflection of the moon.

§ Division was the technical phrase for musical composition.

‡ A tune played to wake hunters, also a morning song to a woman the day after marriage.

Nurse. Your lady mother's coming to your chamber:
The day is broke; be wary, look about.

[Exit Nurse.]
Jul. Then, window, let day in, and let life out.

Rom. Farewell, farewell! one kiss, and I'll descend.

Jul. Art thou gone so? my love! my lord! my friend!

I must hear from thee every day in the hour,
For in a minute there are many days:
Oh! by this count I shall be much in years,
Ere I again behold my Romeo.

Rom. Farewell! I will omit no opportunity
That may convey my greetings, love, to thee.

Jul. O think'st thou we shall ever meet again?

Rom. I doubt it not; and all these woes shall serve

For sweet discourses in our time to come.

Jul. O God! I have an ill-divining soul:
Methinks I see thee, now thou art below,
As one dead in the bottom of a tomb;
Either my eye-sight fails, or thou look'st pale.

Rom. And trust me, love, in my eye so do you.

Dry sorrow drinks our blood. Adieu! adieu!
[Exit Romeo.]

Jul. O fortune, fortune! all men call thee fickle:

If thou art fickle, what dost thou with him
That is renown'd for faith? Be fickle, fortune;
For then, I hope, thou wilt not keep him long,
But send him back.

La. Cap. [Within.] Ho, daughter! are you up?

Jul. Who is't that calls? is it my lady mother?

Is she not down so late, or up so early?
What uncustom'd cause procures her hither?

Enter Lady Capulet.

La. Cap. Why, how now, Juliet?

Jul. Madam, I am not well.

La. Cap. Evermore weeping for your cousin's death?

What, wilt thou wash him from his grave with
An if thou couldst, thou couldst not make him live;

Therefore, have done: Some grief shows much of love;

But much of grief shows still some want of wit.

Jul. Yet let me weep for some few lines of loss.

La. Cap. So shall you feel the loss, but not the friend

Whom you weep for.

Jul. Feeling so the loss,

I cannot choose but ever weep the friend:

La. Cap. Well, girl, thou weep'st not so much for his death,

As that the villain lives which slaughter'd him.

Jul. What villain, madam?

La. Cap. That same villain, Romeo.

Jul. Villain and he are many miles asunder.
God pardon him! I do, with all my heart;

And yet no man like he doth grieve my heart;

La. Cap. That is, because the traitor murderer lives.

Jul. Ay, madam, from the reach of these my hands.

[Death.]

'Would, none but I might vengeance on his cousin's
La. Cap. We will have vengeance for it, fear thou not:

Then weep no more. I'll send to one in Mantua
Where that same banish'd rascal doth live,—

That shall bestow on him so sure a draught,
That he shall soon keep Tybalt company:

And then, I hope, thou wilt be satisfied.

Jul. Indeed I never shall be satisfied
With Romeo, till I behold him—dead—
In my poor heart so for a kinsman vex'd—

• Brings

Madam, if you could find out but a man
To bear a poison, I would temper it,
That Romeo should, upon receipt thereof,
Soon sleep in quiet.—O, how my heart abhors
To hear him nam'd,—and cannot come to

him,—
To wreak the love I bore my cousin Tybalt
Upon his body that hath slaughter'd him!

La. Cap. Find thou the means, and I'll find such a man.

But now I'll tell thee joyful tidings, girl.

Jul. And joy comes well in such a needful time:

What are they, I beseech your ladyship?

La. Cap. Well, well, thou hast a careful father, child;

One, who, to put thee from thy heaviness,
Hath sorted out a sudden day of joy,

That thou expect'st not, nor I look'd not for.

Jul. Madam, in happy time what day is that?

La. Cap. Marry, my child, early next Thursday morn,

The gallant, young, and noble gentleman,
The county Paris, at Saint Peter's church,

Shall happily make thee there a joyful bride.

Jul. Now, by Saint Peter's church, and Peter too,

He shall not make me there a joyful bride.

I wonder at this haste; that I must wed
Ere he, that should be husband, comes to woo.

I pray you, tell my lord and father, madam,
I will not marry yet; and, when I do, I swear

It shall be Romeo, whom you know I hate,
Rather than Paris:—These are news indeed!

La. Cap. Here comes your father: tell him so yourself.

And see how he will take it at your hands.

Enter Capulet and Nurse.

Cap. When the sun sets, the air doth drizzle
But for the sunset of my brother's son, it rains downright.—

How now! a conduit, girl? what, still in tears? Evermore showering? In one little body

Thou counterfeist'st a bark, a sea, a wind;
For still thy eyes, which I may call the sea,

Do ebb and flow with tears; the bark thy body is,
Sailing in this salt flood; the winds, thy sighs;

Who, raging with thy tears, and they with them,—
Without a sudden calm, will overset

Thy tempest-tossed body.—How now, wife? Have you delivered to her our decree?

La. Cap. Ay, sir; but she will none, she gives you thanks.

I would, the fool were married to her grave!

Cap. Soft, take me with you, take me with you, wife.

How! will she none? doth she not give us thanks?

Is she not proud? doth she not count her blessing?

Unworthy as she is, that we have wrought
So worthy a gentleman to be her bridegroom?

Jul. Not proud, you have; but thankful, that you have.

Proud can I never be of what I hate;
But thankful even for hate, that is meant love.

Cap. How now! how now, chop-logic! What is this?

Proud,—and, I thank you,—and, I thank you not;—

And yet not proud;—Mistress minion, you, Thank me no thankings, nor proud me no prouds,

But settle your fine joints 'gainst Thursday next
To go with Paris to Saint Peter's church,

Or I will drag thee on a hurdle thither.
Out, you green-sickness carrion! out, you baggage,

You tallow-face!

La. Cap. Fie, fie! what are you mad?

Jul. Good father, I beseech you on my knees,
Hear me with patience but to speak a word.

Cap. Hang thee, young baggage! disobedient wretch!

I tell thee what,—get thee to church o' Thurs-
Or never after look me in the face:
Speak not, reply not, do not answer me:
My fingers itch.—Wife, we scarce thought us

blest'd,
That God had sent us but this only child;
But now I see this one is one too much,
And that we have a curse in having her:
Out on her, bidding I!

Nurse. God in heaven bless her!—
You are to blame, my lord, to rate her so.

Cap. And why, my lady wisdom? hold your tongue,

Good prudence; smatter with your gossips, go.

Nurse. I speak no treason.

Cap. O! God ye good den!

Nurse. May not one speak?

Cap. Peace, you mumbling fool!
Utter your gravity o'er a gossip's bowl,
For here we need it not.

La. Cap. You are too hot.

Cap. God's bread! it makes me mad: Day, night, late, early,
At home, abroad, alone, in company,
Waking, or sleeping, still my care hath been
To have her match'd: and having now provided

A gentleman of princely parentage,
Of fair demesnes, youthful, and nobly train'd,
Stuff'd (as they say,) with honourable parts,
Proportion'd as one's heart could wish a man,—
And then to have a wretched puling fool,
A whining mammet, in her fortune's tender,
To answer—'I'll not wed, I cannot love,
I am too young,—I pray you, pardon me,—
But, as you will not wed, I'll pardon you:
Gaze where you will, you shall not house with
me;

Look to't, think on't, I do not use to jest.
Thursday is near; lay hand on heart, advise:
An you be mine, I'll give you to my friend;
An you be not, hang, beg, starve, die i'th streets,

For, by my soul, I'll ne'er acknowledge thee,
Nor what is mine shall never do thee good:
Trust to't, bethink you, I'll not be forsworn.

[Exit.]

Jul. Is there no pity sitting in the clouds,
That sees into the bottom of my grief?
O sweet my mother, cast me not away!
Delay this marriage for a month, a week;
Or, if you do not, make the bridal bed
In that dim monument where Tybalt lies.

La. Cap. Talk not to me, for I'll not speak a
word;

Do as thou wilt, for I have done with thee.

[Exit.]

Jul. O God!—O nurse! how shall this be prevented?

My husband is on earth, my faith in heaven;
How shall that faith return again to earth,
Unless that husband send it me from heaven
By leaving earth?—Comfort me, counsel me.—
Alack, alack, that heaven should practise stratagems

Upon so soft a subject as myself!—
What say'st thou? hast thou not a word of joy?
Some comfort, nurse.

Nurse. Faith, here 'tis: Romeo
Is banished; and all the world to nothing,
That he dares ne'er come back to challenge
you;

Or, if he do, it needs must be by stealth.
Then, since the case so stands as now it doth,
I think it best you married with the county.
Oh! he's a lovely gentleman!
Romeo's a disclout to him; an eagle, madam,
Hath not so green, so quick, so fair an eye,
As Paris hath. Beshrew my very heart,
I think you happy in this second match,
For it exceeds your first; or if it did not,

* Base woman.

Your first is dead; or 'twere as good he were,
As living here and you no use of him.

Jul. Speakest thou from thy heart?

Nurse. From my soul too;

Or else beshrew them both.

Jul. Amen!

Nurse. To what?

Jul. Well, thou hast comforted me marvellous much.

Go in; and tell my lady I am gone,
Having displeas'd my father, to Laurence' cell,
To make confession, and to be absolv'd.

Nurse. Marry, I will; and this is wisely don'.
[Exit.]

Jul. Ancient damnation! O most wicked fiend!

Is it more sin to wish me thus forsworn,
Or to dispraise my lord with that same tongue
Which she hath prais'd him with above compare

So many thousand times?—Go, counsellor;
Thou and my bosom henceforth shall be twain.—

I'll to the friar, to know his remedy;

If all else fail, myself have power to die.

[Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Friar LAURENCE'S Cell.

Enter Friar LAURENCE, and PARIS.

Fri. On Thursday, Sir? the time is very short.

Par. My father Capulet will have it so;
And I am nothing slow, to slack his haste.

Fri. You say you do not know the lady's
mind:

Uneven is the course, I like it not.

Par. Immoderately she weeps for Tybalt's
death,

And therefore have I little talk'd of love;
For Venus smiles not in a house of tears.
Now, Sir, her father counts it dangerous,
That she doth give her sorrow so much sway;
And, in his wisdom, bastes our marriage,
To stop the inundation of her tears;
Which, too much minded by herself alone,
May be put from her by society:
Now do you know the reason of this haste.

Fri. I would I knew not why it should be slow'd.

[Aside.]

Look, Sir, here comes the lady towards my cell.

Enter JULIET.

Par. Happily met, my lady, and my wife!

Jul. That may be, Sir, when I may be a
wife.

Par. That may be, must be, love, on Thursday next.

Jul. What must be shall be.

Fri. That's a certain text.

Par. Come you to make confession to this father?

Jul. To answer that, were to confess to you.

Par. Do not deny to him, that you love me.

Jul. I will confess to you, that I love him.

Par. So will you, I am sure, that you love
me.

Jul. If I do so, it will be of more price, Being spoke behind your back, than to your face.

Par. Poor soul, thy face is much abus'd with
tears.

Jul. The tears have got small victory by
that;

For it was bad enough, before their spite.

Par. Thou wrong'st it, more than tears, with that report.

Jul. That is no slander, Sir, that is a truth;
And what I spake, I spake it to my face.

Par. Thy face is mine, and thou hast slan-der'd it.

Jul. It may be so, for it is not mine own.—
Are you at leisure, holy father, now;
Or shall I come to you at evening mass?

Fri. My leisure serves me, pensive daughter,
now:—
My lord, we must entreat the time alone.

Par. God shield, I should disturb devotion—

Juliet, on Thursday early will I rouse you:—
Till then, adieu! and keep this holy kiss.

[Exit PARIS.]

Jul. O shut the door! and when thou hast done so,
Come weep with me; Past hope, past cure,
past help!

Fri. Ah! Juliet, I already know thy grief;
It strains me past the compass of my wits:
I bear thou must, and nothing must prorogue it,
On Thursday next be married to this county.

Jul. Tell me not, friar, that thou hear'st of
this,

Unless thou tell me how I may prevent it:
If, in thy wisdom, thou canst give no help,
Do thou but call my resolution wise,
And with this knife I'll help it presently.
God join'd my heart and Romeo's, thou our
hands:

And ere this hand, by thee to Romeo seal'd,
Shall be the label to another deed,
Or my true heart with treacherous revolt
Turn to another, this shall slay them both:
Therefore, out of thy long-experienc'd time,
Give me some present counsel; or, behold,
Twixt my extremes and me this bloody knife
Shall play the umpire;— arbitrating that
Which the commission of thy years and art
Could to no issue of true honour bring.
Be not so long to speak; I long to die,
If what thou speak'st speak not of remedy.

Fri. Hold, daughter; I do spy a kind of
Which craves as desperate an execution [hope,
As that is desperate which we would prevent.
If, rather than to marry county Paris,
Thou hadst the strength of will to slay thyself;
Then is it likely, thou wilt undertake
A thing like death to chide away this shame,
That cop'st with death himself to scape from it;
And, if thou dar'st, I'll give thee remedy.

Jul. O bid me leap, rather than marry Paris,
From off the battlements of yonder tower;
Or walk in thievish ways; or bid me lurk
Where serpents are; chain me with roaring
Or shut me nightly in a charnel-house, [bears;
O'er-cover'd quite with dead men's rattling
bones,

With rocky shanks, and yellow chapless skulls;
Or bid me go into a new-made grave,
And hide me with a dead man in his shroud;
Things that, to hear them told, have made me
tremble:

And I will do it without fear or doubt,
To live an unstain'd wife to my sweet love.

Fri. Hold, then; go home, be merry, give consent

To marry Paris; Wednesday is to-morrow;
To-morrow night look that thou lie alone,
Let not thy nurse lie with thee in thy chamber:
Take thou this phial, being then in bed,
And this distilled liquor drink thou off:
When presently, through all thy veins shall run
A cold and drowsy humour, which shall seize Each vital spirit; for no pulse shall keep
His natural progress, but surcease to beat:
No warmth, no breath, shall testify thou liv'st;
The roses in thy lips and cheeks shall fade
To pale ashes; thy eyes' windows fall,
Like death when he shuts up the day of life;
Each part, depriv'd of supple government,
Shall stiff, and stark, and cold appear like
death:

And in this borrow'd likeness of shrunk death
Thou shalt remain full two and forty hours,

• Decide the struggle between me and my distresses.
• Authority of power.

And then awake as from a pleasant sleep.
Now when the bridegroom in the morning
comes [dead:

To rouse thee from thy bed, there art thou
Then (as the manner of our country is,)
In thy best robes uncover'd on the bier,
Thou shalt be borne to that same ancient vault,
Where all the kindred of the Capulets lie.
In the meantime, against thou shalt awake,
Shall Romeo by my letters know our drift;
And hither shall he come; and he and I
Will watch thy waking, and that very night
Shall Romeo bear thee hence to Mantua.
And this shall free thee from this present shame;
If no unconstant toy, nor womanish fear,
Abate thy valour in the acting it.

Jul. Give me, O give me! tell me not of fear.

Fri. Hold; get you gone, be strong and prosperous

In this resolve: I'll send a friar with speed
To Mantua, with my letters to thy lord.

Jul. Love, give me strength! and strength shall help afford.

Farewell, dear father.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—A Room in CAPULET'S House.

Enter CAPULET, LADY CAPULET, NURSE, and SERVANTS.

Cap. So many guests invite as here are writ.— [Exit SERVANT.

Sirrah, go hire me twenty cunning cooks.
2. Serv. You shall have none ill, Sir; for I'll try if they can lick their fingers.

Cap. How canst thou try them so?

2. Serv. Marry, Sir, 'tis an ill cook that cannot lick his own fingers; therefore he that cannot lick his fingers goes not with me.

Cap. Go, begone.— [Exit SERVANT.

We shall be much unfurnish'd for this time.—
What is my daughter gone to visit?

Nurse. Ay, forsooth.

Cap. Well, he may chance to do some good
on her:

A preavis self-will'd harlotry it is.

Enter JULIET.

Nurse. See, where she comes from shrill* with merry look.

Cap. How now, my headstrong? what have you been gadding?

Jul. Where I have learn'd me to repent the
Of disobedient opposition
To you and your behests, and am enjoin'd[†]
By holy Laurence to fall prostrate here,
And beg your pardon:—Pardoun, I beseech
Henceforward I am ever rul'd by you.

Cap. Send for the county; go tell him of
this;

I'll have this knot knit up to-morrow morn.
Jul. I met the youthful lord at Laurence's cell;

And gave him what becom'd; love I might,
Not stepping o'er the bounds of modesty.

Cap. Why, I am glad on't; this is well,—
stand up:

This is as't should be.—Let me see the county;
Ay, marry, go, I say, and fetch him hither.—
Now, afore God, this reverend holy friar,
All our whole city is much bound to him.

Jul. Nurse, will you go with me into my closet,

To help me sort such needful ornaments

As you think fit to furnish me to-morrow?

La. Cap. No, not till Thursday; there is time enough.

Cap. Go, nurse, go with her:—We'll to church to-morrow.

[Exit JULIET and NURSE.]

La. Cap. We shall be short in our provision;
'Tis now near night.

Cap. Tush! I will stir about, [wife:
And all things shall be well, I warrant thee.

• Confession. † Commands. ‡ Becoming.

Go thou to Juliet, help to deck up her ;
I'll not to bed to-night ;—let me alone ; [Ho !—
I'll play the housewife for this once.—What,
They are all forth : well, I will walk myself
To county Paris, to prepare him up [light,
Against to-morrow : my heart is wondrous
Since this same wayward girl is so reclaim'd.
[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—JULIET'S Chamber.

Enter JULIET and NURSE.

Jul. Ay, those attires are best :—But, gentle nurse,
I pray thee, leave me to myself to-night ;
For I have need of many orisons *
To move the heavens to smile upon my state,
Which, well thou know'st, is cross and full of sin.

Enter LADY CAPULET.

La. Cap. What, are you busy ? do you need my help ?

Jul. No, madam ; we have cull'd such necessities

As are be-hoveful for our state to-morrow :
So please you, let me now be left alone,
And let the nurse this night sit up with you ;
For, I am sure, you have your hands full all
In this so sudden business.

La. Cap. Good night !

Get thee to bed, and rest ; for thou hast need.

[Exeunt Lady CAPULET and NURSE.

Jul. Farewell !—God knows, when we shall meet again.
I have a faint cold fear thrills through my veins,

That almost freezes up the heat of life :
I'll call them back again to comfort me :—
Nurse !—What should she do here ?
My dismal scene I needs must act alone.—
Come hither.—

What if this mixture do not work at all ?
Must I of force be married to the county ?—
No, no ;—this shall forbid it :—he thou there. — [Laying down a Dagger.

What if it be a poison, which the friar
Subtly hath minister'd to have me dead,
Lest in this marriage he should be dishonour'd,
Because he married me before to Romeo ?
I fear, it is ; and yet methinks it should not,
For he hath still been tried a holy man :
I will not entertain so bad a thought.—
How if, when I am laid into the tomb,
I wake before the time that Romeo
Come to redeem me ? there's a fearful point !
Shall I not then be stifled in the vault,
To whose foul mouth no healthsome air
Breathes in,

And there die strangled ere my Romeo comes ?
Or, if I live, is it not very like
The horrible conceit of death and night,
Together with the terror of the place,—
As in a vault, and ancient receptacle,
Where, for these many hundred years, the bones

Of all my buried ancestors are pack'd ;
Where bloody Tybalt, yet but green in earth, Lies fest'ring in his shroud ; where, as they
say,

At some hours in the night spirits resort ;—
Alack, alack ! is it not like that I,
So early waking,—what with loathsome smells ;
And shrieks like mandrakes' torn out of the
earth,

That living mortals, hearing them, run mad ;—
Oh ! if I wake, shall I not be distraught,
Environ'd with all these hideous fears ?
And madly play with my forefathers' joints ?

* Prayers.

† The fabulous accounts of the plant called a mandrake give it a degree of animal life, and when it is torn from the ground it groans, which is fatal to him that pulls it up.

‡ Distracted

And pluck the mangled Tybalt from his shroud ?
And, in this rage, with some great kinsman's bone,
As with a club, dash out my desperate brain ?
O look ! methinks, I see my cousin's ghost
Seeking out Romeo, that did spit his body
Upon a rapier's point :—Stay, Tybalt, stay !—
Romeo, I come ! this do I drink to thee.

[She throws herself on the Bed

SCENE IV.—CAPULET'S Hall.

Enter Lady CAPULET and NURSE.

La. Cap. Hold, take these keys, and fetch more spices, nurse.

Nurse. They call for dates and quinces in the pastry. *

Enter CAPULET.

Cap. Come, sir, sur, sur ! the second cock hath crow'd,

The curfew bell hath rung, 'tis three o'clock :—
Look to the bak'd meats, good Angelica :
Spate not for cost.

Nurse. Go, go, you cot-quean, go,
Get you to bed ; faith, you'll be sick to-morrow
For this night's watching.

Cap. No, not a whit ; What ! I have watch'd ere now
All night for lesser cause, and he'll be sick.

La. Cap. Ay, you have been a mouse hunt * in your time :

But I will watch you from such watching—now,
[Exeunt Lady CAPULET and NURSE.

Cap. A jealous-hood, a jealous-hood !—Now, fellow,
What's there ?

Enter SERVANTS with Spits, Legs, and Baskets.

1 Serv. Things for the cook, Sir ; but I know not what.

Cap. Make haste, make haste. [Exit 1 SERV.]
Sirrah, fetch drier logs ;

Call Peter, he will show thee where they are.

2 Serv. I have a head, Sir, that will bid out logs,

And never trouble Peter for the matter

[Exit.

Cap. 'Mass, and well said ; a murrer whetson ! ha,

Thou shalt be logger-head.—Good faith 'tis day :
The county will be hear with music straight.

[Music within.

For so he said he would. I hear him near :—
Nurse !—Wife ! what, ho !—what, Nurse, I say !

Enter NURSE.

Go, waken Juliet, go, and trim her up ;
I'll go and chat with Paris :—Hie, make haste,
Make haste ! the bridegroom he is come already :

Make haste, I say ! [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—JULIET'S Chamber ; JULIET on the Bed.

Enter NURSE.

Nurse. Mistress !—what, mistress !—Juliet !
—fast, I warrant her, she :—

Why, lamb !—why, lady !—fie, you slug-a-bed !—
Why, love, I say !—madam ! sweet-heart !—
why, bride !

What, not a word ?—you take your pennyworths now ;

Sleep for a week :—for the next night, I warrant,
The county Paris hath set up his rest,

That you shall rest but little.—God forgive me,
(Marry and amen !) how sound is she asleep !
I needs must wake her :—Madam, madam,
madam !

Ay, let the county, take you in your bed ;

* The room where pies were made.

† Messe was a term of endearment to a woman.

He'll fright you up, 'faith.—Will it not be ?
What, dress'd ! and in your clothes ! and down
again !

I must needs wake you : Lady ! lady ! lady !
Alas ! alas !—Help ! help ! my lady's dead !—
O well-a-day, that ever I was born !—
Some aqua-vitæ, ho !—my lord !—my lady !

Enter Lady CAPULET.

La. Cap. What noise is here ?

Nurse. O lamentable day !

La. Cap. What is the matter ?

Nurse. Look, look ! O heavy day !

La. Cap. O me, O me ! my child, my only
life,

Revive, look up, or I will die with thee !—
Help, help !—call help.

Enter CAPULET.

Cap. For shame, bring Juliet forth ; her lord is come.

Nurse. She's dead, deceas'd, she's dead ;
alack the day !

La. Cap. Alack the day ! she's dead, she's dead, she's dead.

Cap. Ha ! let me see her :—Out, alas ! she's
cold ;

Her blood is settled ; and her joints are stiff ;
Life and these lips have long been separated :
Death lies on her like an untimely frost
Upon the sweetest flower of all the field.
Accursed time ! unfortunate old man !

Nurse. O lamentable day !

La. Cap. O woeful time !

Cap. Death, that hath ta'en her hence to make me wail,
Ties up my tongue, and will not let me speak.

Enter Friar LAURENCE and PARIS, with MU-SICIANS.

Fri. Come, is the bride ready to go to church ?

Cap. Ready to go, but never to return :
O son, the night before thy wedding day
Hath death lain with thy bride :—See, there she lies,

Flower as she was, deflowered by him.
Death is my son-in-law, death is my heir ;
My daughter he hath wedded ! I will die,
And leave him all ; life leaving, all is death's.

Par. Have I thought long to see this morn-ing's face.

And doth it give me such a sight as this ?

La. Cap. Accurs'd, unhappy, wretched, hateful day !

Most miserable hour, that e'er time saw
In lasting labour of his pilgrimage !
But one, poor one, of his poor and loving child,
But one thing to rejoice and solace in,
And cruel death hath catch'd it from my sight.

Nurse. O woe ! O woeful, woeful, woeful
day !

Most lamentable day ! most woeful day,
That ever ever I did yet behold !
O day ! O day ! O day ! O hateful day !
Never was seen so black a day as this :
O woeful day, O woeful day !

Par. Begun'd, divorced, wronged, spited, slain !

Most detestable death, by thee begun'd,
By cruel thee quite overthrown !—
O love ! O life !—not life, but love in death !

Cap. Despair'd, distressed, hated, martyr'd,
kill'd !—

Uncomfortable time ! why cam'st thou now
To murder murder our solemnity !—
O child ! O child !—my soul, and not my child !—

Dead art thou, dead !—alack ! my child is dead ;
And, with my child, my joys are buried !

Fri. Peace, ho, for shame ! confusion's cure lives not

In these confusions. Heaven and yourself
Had part in this fair maid ; now heaven hath all,

And all the better is it for the maid :
Your part in her you could not keep from death ;
But heaven keeps his part in eternal life.
The most you sought was—her promotion ;
For 'twas your heaven, she should be advanc'd :
And weep ye now, seeing she is advanc'd,
Above the clouds, as high as heaven itself ?
Oh ! in this love, you love your child so ill,
That you run mad, seeing that she is well :
She's not well married, that lives married long ;
But she's best married, that dies married young.

Dry up your tears, and stick your rosemary
On this fair corse ; and as the custom is,
In all her best array bear her to church :
For though fond nature bids us all lament,
Yet nature's tears are reason's merriment.

Cap. All things, that we ordained festival,
Turn from their office to black funeral ;
Our instruments, to melancholy bells ;
Our wedding cheer, to a sad burial feast ;
Our solemn hymns to sullen dirges change ;
Our bridal flowers serve for a buried corse,
And all things change them to the contrary.

Fri. Sir, you go in,—and, madam, go with
him ;—

And go, Sir Paris ;—every one prepare
To follow this fair corse unto her grave :
The heavens do low'r upon you, for some ill ;
Move them no more, by crossing their high will.

[*Exeunt CAPULET, Lady CAPU-
LET, PARIS, and FRIAR.*]

1 Mus. 'Faith, we may put up our pipes, and
be gone.

Nurse. Honest good fellows, ah ! put up,
put up ;

For, well you know, this is a painful case.

1 Mus. Ay, by my troth, the case may be amended.

Enter PETER.

Pet. Musicians, O musicians, Heart's ease, heart's ease ; O an you will me live, play
—heart's ease.

1 Mus. Why heart's ease ?

Pet. O musicians, because my heart itself plays—My heart is full of woe : O play me some merry dump * to comfort me.

2 Mus. Not a dump we ; 'tis no time to play now.

Pet. You will not then ?

2 Mus. No.

Pet. I will then give it you soundly.

1 Mus. What will you give us ?

Pet. No money, on my faith, but the gleek :
I will give you the minstrel.

1 Mus. Then will I give you the serving-creature.

Pet. Then will I lay the serving-creature's dagger on your pate. I will carry no crochets :
I'll re you, I'll fa you : Do you note me ?

1 Mus. An you re us, and fa us, you note us.

2 Mus. Pray you, put up your dagger, and put out your wit.

Pet. Then have at you with my wit, I will dry-beat you with an iron wit, and put up my iron dagger :—Answer me like men !

*When gripping grief the heart doth wound,
And doleful dumps the mind oppress,
Then music, with her silver sound ;*

Why, silver sound ? why music with her silver sound ?

What say you, Simon Catling ?

1 Mus. Marry, Sir, because silver hath a sweet sound.

Pet. Pretty ! What say you, Hugh Rebeck ?

2 Mus. I say—silver sound, because musicians sound for silver.

* Dumps were heavy mournful tunes.

† To gleek is to scoff, and a gleekman signified a minstrel.
‡ And the jocund rebekes sound. —Milton.

Pet. Pretty too!—What say you, James Soundpost?

3 Mus. Faith, I know not what to say.
Pet. O I cry you mercy! you are the singer: I will say for you. It is music with her silver sound, because such fellows as you have seldom gold for sounding:—

*Then music, with her silver sound,
With speedy help doth lend redress.*

[Exit singing.]

1 Mus. What a pestilent knave is this same?
2 Mus. Hang him, Jack! Come, we'll in here; tarry for the mourners, and stay dinner.

[Exeunt.]

ACT V. *

SCENE I.—Mantua.—A Street.

Enter ROMEO.

Rom. If I may trust the flattering eye of sleep,
My dreams presage some joyful news at hand:
My bosom's lord sits lightly in his throne;
And all this day, an unaccustom'd spirit
Lits me above the ground with cheerful thoughts.
I dreamt my lady came and found me dead;
(Strange dream!) that gives a dead man leave to think
And breath'd such life with kisses in my lips,
That I reviv'd, and was an emperor.
Ah me! how sweet is love itself possess'd,
When but love's shadows are so rich in joy!

Later BALTHAZAR.

News from Verona!—How now, Balthazar?
Dost thou not bring me letters from the friar?
How doth my lady? Is my father well?
How fares my Juliet? That I ask again;
For nothing can be ill, if she be well.

Bal. Than she is well, and nothing can be ill.

Her body sleeps in Capel's monument,
And her immortal part with angels lives;
I saw her laid low in her kindred's vault,
And presently took post to tell it you:
O pardon me for bringing these ill news,
Since you did leave it for my office, Sir.

Rom. Is it even so? then I defy you, stars!—
Thou know'st my lodging: get me ink and paper,

And hire post-horses; I will hence to-night.

Bal. Pardon me, Sir, I will not leave you thus:

You look are pale and wild, and do import
Some misadventure.

Rom. Tush, thou art deceiv'd;
Leave me, and do the thing I bid thee do:

Hast thou no letters to me from the friar?

Bal. No, my good lord.

Rom. No matter: get thee gone,
And hire those horses; I'll be with thee straight.

[Exit BALTHAZAR.]

Well, Juliet, I will lie with thee to-night.
Let's see for means: O mischief, thou art swift

To enter in the thoughts of desperate men!
I do remember an apothecary,—
And hereabouts he dwells,—whom late I noted
In tatter'd weeds, with overwhelming brows,
Culling of simples; † meager were his looks,
Sharp misery had worn him to the bones;
And in his needy shop a tortoise hung,
An alligator stuf'd, and other skins
Of ill-shap'd fishes; and about his shelves

A beggarly account of empty boxes,
Green earthen pots, bladders, and musty seeds,
Remnants of packthread, and old cakes of roses
Were thinly scatter'd, to make up a show.
Noting this penury, to myself I said—
And if a man did need a poison now,
Whose sale is present death in Mantua,
Here lives a catiff wretch would sell it him.
O this same thought did but forerun my need;

And this same needy man must sell it me.
As I remember, this should be the house:
Being holiday, the beggar's shop is shut.—
What, ho! apothecary!

Enter APOTHECARY.

Ap. Who calls so loud?

Rom. Come hither, man.—I see that thou art poor;

Hold, there is forty ducats: let me have
A dram of poison; such soon-speeding gear *

As will disperse itself through all the veins,
That the life-weary taker may fall dead,
And that the trunk may be discharg'd of
breath

As violently, as hasty powder fir'd
Doth hurry from the fatal cannon's womb.

Ap. Such mortal drugs I have; but Mantua's law

Is death, to any he that utters them.

Rom. Art thou so bare, and full of wretchedness,

And fear'st to die? famine is in thy cheeks,
Need and oppression starveth in thy eyes,
Upon thy back hangs rag'd misery,
The world is not thy friend, nor the world's

law:
The world affords no law to make thee rich;

Then be not poor but break it, and take
this.

Ap. My poverty, but not my will, consents.

Rom. I pay thy poverty, and not thy will.

Ap. Put this in any liquid thing you will.
And drink it off; and, if you had the strength
Of twenty men, it would dispatch you straight.

Rom. There is thy gold: worse poison to men's souls,

Doing more murders in this loathsome world,
Than these poor compounds that thou may'st not sell.

I sell thee poison, thou hast sold me none.
Farewell; buy food and get thyself in flesh.—
Come, cordial, and not poison; go with me
To Juliet's grave, for there must I use thee.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Friar Laurence's Cell.

Enter Friar JOHN.

John. Holy Franciscan friar! brother, ho!

Enter Friar LAURENCE.

Lau. This same should be the voice of friar John.—

Welcome from Mantua: What says Romeo?
Or, if his mind be wr't, give me his letter.

John. Going to find a barefoot brother out,
One of our order to associate me,
Here in this city visiting the sick,
And tending him, the searchers of the town,
Suspecting that we both were in a house
Where the infectious pestilence did reign, Seal'd up the doors, and would not let us
forth;

So that my speed to Mantua there was stay'd.

Lau. Who bare my letter then to Romeo?

John. I could not send it,—here it is
again,—

* This act is now introduced by a solemn dirge, and a funeral service. † I. e. Love.
; Herbs.

• Snuff.

Nor get a messenger to bring it thee,
So fearful were they of infection.

Lauc. Unhappy fortune! by my brotherhood,
The letter was not mine, * but full of charge,
Of dear import; and the neglecting it
May do much danger: Friar John, go hence;
Get me an iron crow, and bring it straight
Unto my cell.

John. Brother, I'll go and bring't thee. [Exit.]

Lauc. Now must I to the monument alone;
Within this three hours will fail I diet wake;
She will beshrew me much, that Romeo
Hath had no notice of these accidents:
But I will write again to Mantua,
And keep her at my cell till Romeo come;
Poor living corse, clos'd in a dead man's tomb! [Exit.]

SCENE III.—A Church-Yard; in it, a Monument belonging to the CAPULETS.

Enter PARIS, and his PAGE bearing Flowers and a Torch.

Par. Give me thy torch, boy: Hence and stand aloof;—

Yet put it out, for I would not be seen.
Under yon yew-trees lay thee all along,
Holding thine ear close to the hollow ground;
So shall no foot upon the church-yard tread,
(Being loose, unfirm, with digging up of graves,) But thou shalt hear it: whistle then to me,
As signal that thou hear'st something approach.
Give me those flowers. Do as I bid thee, go.

Page. I am almost afraid to stand alone
Here in the church-yard; yet I will adventure. [Retires.]

Par. Sweet flower, with flowers I strew thy bridal bed:

Sweet tomb, that in thy circuit dost contain
The perfect model of eternity;
Fair Juliet, that with angels dost remain,
Accept this latest favour at my hands;
That living honour'd thee, and, being dead,
With funeral praises do adorn thy tomb! [The boy whistles.]

The boy gives warning, something doth approach.

What cursed foot wanders this way to-night,
To cross my obsequies, and true-love's rite?
What, with a torch!—muffle me, night, a while. [Retires.]

Enter ROMEO and BALTHAZAR with a Torch, Mattock, &c.

Rom. Give me that mattock, and the wrenching iron.

Hold, take this letter; early in the morning
See thou deliver it to my lord and father.
Give me the light: Upon thy life I charge thee,
Whate'er thou hear'st or seest, stand all aloof,
And do not interrupt me in my course.
Why I descend into this bed of death,
Is partly, to behold my lady's face:
But, chiefly, to take hence from her dead finger
A precious ring; a ring that I must use
In dear employment:† therefore hence, be.
But if thou, jealous, dost return to pry (gone):—
In what I further shall intend to do,
By heaven, I will tear thee joint by joint,
And strew this hungry church-yard with thy limbs:

The time and my intents are savage-wild;
More fierce, and more inexorable far,
Than empty tigers, or the roaring sea.

Bal. I will be gone, Sir, and not trouble you.

Rom. So shalt thou show me friendship.—
Take thou that:

Live and be prosperous, and farewell, good fellow.

Bal. For all this same, I'll hide me hereabout;

His looks I fear, and his intents I doubt. [Retires.]

Rom. Thou detestable maw, thou womb of death

Gorg'd with the dearest morsel of the earth,
Thus I enforce thy rotten jaws to open.

[Breaking open the Door of the Monument.]
And, in despite, I'll cram thee with more food!

Par. This is that banish'd haughty Montague,
That murder'd my love's cousin;—with which grief,

It is supposed the fair creature died,—
And here is come to do some villainous shame
To the dead bodies: I will apprehend him!— [Advances.]

Stop thy unhallow'd toil, vile Montague;
Can vengeance be pursu'd farther than death?
Condemn'd villain, I do apprehend thee:
Obey, and go with me; for thou must die.

Rom. I must, indeed; and therefore came I hither.—

Good gentle youth, tempt not a desperate man,
Fly hence and leave me,—think upon these gone;

Let them affright thee.—I beseech thee, youth,
Heap not another sin upon my head,
By urging me to fury:—O be gone!
By heaven, I love thee better than myself:
For I come hither arm'd against myself:
Stay not, be gone;—live, and hereafter say—
A madman's mercy bade thee run away.

Par. I do defy thy conjurations,
And do attach thee as a felon here.

Rom. Wilt thou provoke me? then have at thee, boy. [They fight.]

Page. O lord! they fight! I will go call the watch. [Exit PAGE.]

Par. O I am slain! [Falls.]—If thou be merciful,

Open the tomb, lay me with Juliet. [Dies.]

Rom. In faith, I will:—Let me peruse this face;—

Mercutio's kinsman, noble county Paris.—
What said my man, when my betross'd soul
Did not attend him as we rode? I think,
He told me Paris should have married Juliet:
Said he not so? or did I dream it so?
Or am I mad, hearing him talk of Juliet,
To think it was so?—O give me thy hand,
One writ with me in sour misfortune's book:
I'll bury thee in a triumphant grave.—
A grave? O no; a lantern, slaughter'd youth,
For here lies Juliet, and her beauty makes
This vault a feasting presence; full of light.
Death, lie thou there, by a dead man interr'd.

[Laying PARIS in the Monument.]
How oft when men are at the point of death
Have they been merry? which their keepers
call

A lightning before death: Oh! how may I
Call this a lightning?—O my love! my wife!
Death, that hath suck'd the honey of thy breath,
Hath had no power yet upon thy beauty:
Thou art not conquer'd; beauty's ensign yet
Is crimson in thy lips, and in thy cheeks,
And death's pale flag is not advanced there.—
Tybalt, liest thou there in thy bloody sheet?
Oh! what more favour can I do to thee,
Than with that hand that cut thy youth in
twain,

To sunder his that was thine enemy?
Forgive me, cousin!—Ah! dear Juliet,
Why art thou yet so fair? Shall I believe
That unsubstantial Death is amorous;
And that the lean abhorred monster keeps
Thee here in dark to be his paramour?
For fear of that, I will still stay with thee;
And never from this palace of dim night
Depart again; here, here will I remain
With worms that are thy chambermaids; O here

* I refuse to do as thou conjur'st me to do, i. e. depart.
† The allusion is to a louvre or turret full of windows by means of which ancient halls, &c. are illuminated.
‡ Presence chamber.

* I. e. On a trivial or idle subject.
† I. e. Action of importance.

Will I set up my everlasting rest;
And shake the yoke of inauspicious stars
From this world wearied flesh.—Eyes, look your Last!

Arms, take your last embrace! and lips, O you
The doors of breath, seal with a righteous kiss
A dateless bargain to engrossing death!—
Come, bitter conduct, come, unsavoury guide!
Thou desperate pilot, now at once run on
The dashing rocks thy sea-sick weary hark!
Here's to my love!—[Drinks.] O true apothecary!

Thy drugs are quick.—Thus with a kiss I die.

[Dies.]

Enter at the other end of the Church-Yard, Friar LAURENCE, with a Lantern, Crow, and Spade.

Fri. Saint Francis be my speed! how oft to-night
Have my old feet stumbled at graves?—Who's there?

Who is it that consorts, so late, the dead?

Bal. Here's one, a friend, and one that knows you well.

Fri. Bless be upon you! Tell me, good my friend,

What torch is yond', that vainly lends his light
To grubs and eyeless skulls? as I discern,
It burneth in the Capels' monument.

Bal. It doth so, holy Sir; and there's my master,

One that you love.

Fri. Who is it?

Bal. Romeo.

Fri. How long hath he been there?

Bal. Full half an hour.

Fri. Go with me to the vault.

Bal. I dare not, Sir:

My master knows not, but I am gone hence;
And fearfully did menace me with death,
If I did stay to look on his intents.

Fri. Stay then, I'll go alone:—Fear comes upon me:

O much I fear some ill unlucky thing.

Bal. As I did sleep under this yew-tree here,
I dreamt my master and another fought,
And that my master slew him.

Fri. Romeo? [Advances.]

Alack, alack, what blood is this, which stains
The stony entrance of this sepulchre?—
What mean these masterless and gory swords
To lie discolour'd by this place of peace?

[Enters the Monument.]

Romeo! oh! pale!—Who else? what, Paris too?

And steep'd in blood?—Ah! what an unkind hour

Is guilty of this lamentable chance!—

The lady stirs. [JULIET wakes and stirs.]

Jul. O comfortable friar! where is my lord?
I do remember well where I should be,
And there I am:—Where is my Romeo?

[Noise within.]

Fri. I hear some noise.—Lady, come from that neat of death, contagion, and unnatural sleep;

A greater power than we can contradict

Hath thwarted our intents; come, come away:

Thy husband in thy bosom there lies dead;

And Paris too:—come, I'll dispose of thee

Among a sisterhood of holy nuns:

Stay not to question, for the watch is coming;

Come, go, good Juliet:—[Noise again.] I dare

stay no longer. [Exit.]

Jul. Go, get thee hence, for I will not

away.—

What's here? a cup, clos'd in my true love's

haid?

Poison, I see, hath been his timeless end:—

O churl! drink all; and leave no friendly drop,

To help me after?—I will kiss thy lips;

Haply, some poison yet doth hang on them,

To make me die with a restorative.

[Kisses him.]

Thy lips are warm!

1 Watch. [Within.] Lead, boy:—Which way?

Jul. Yea, noise?—then I'll be brief.—O happy dagger!

[Snatching ROMEO's Dagger.]

This is thy sheath; [Stabs herself.] there rust, and let me die.

[Falls on ROMEO's Body, and dies.]

Enter WATCH, with the PAGE of PARIS.

Page. This is the place;—here, where the torch doth burn.

1 Watch. The ground is bloody; Search about the church-yard:

Go, some of you, who'er you find, attach.

[Exit some.]

Pitiful sight! here lies the county slain:—

Aud Juliet bleeding; warm, and newly dead,

Who here hath lain these two days buried.—

Go, tell the prince,—run to the Capulets,—

Raise up the Montagues,—some others search;—

[Reënter other WATCHMEN.]

We see the ground whereon these woes do lie;

But the true ground of all these piteous woes,

We cannot without circumstance descry.

Enter some of the WATCH, with BALTHAZAR.

2 Watch. Here's Romeo's man, we found him in the church-yard.

1 Watch. Hold him in safety, till the prince come hither.

Enter another WATCHMAN, with Friar LAURENCE.

3 Watch. Here is a friar, that trembles, sighs, and weeps.

We took this untaught and this spade from him,

As he was coming from this church-yard side.

1 Watch. A great suspicion; Stay the friar too.

Enter the PRINCE and Attendants.

Prince. What misadventure is so early up,

That calls our person from our morning's rest?

Enter CAPULET, Lady CAPULET, and others.

Cap. What should it be, that they so shriek abroad?

La. Cap. The people in the street cry—

Romeo,

Some—Juliet, and some—Paris; and all run,

With open outcry toward our monument.

Prince. What fear is this, which startles in our ears?

1 Watch. Sovereign, here lies the county

Paris slain;

And Romeo dead; and Juliet, dead before,

Warm and new kill'd.

Prince. Search, seek, and know how this foul murder comes.

1 Watch. Here is a friar, and slaughter'd

Romeo's man,

With instruments upon them, fit to open

These dead men's tombs.

Cap. O heavens! O wife! look how our daughter bleeds!

This dagger hath mista'en,—for lo! his house

Is empty on the back of Montague,—

And is mis-sheathed in my daughter's bosom.

La. Cap. O me! this sight of death is as a bell,

That warns my old age to a sepulchre.

Enter MONTAGUE and others.

Prince. Come, Montague; for thou art early up,

To see thy son and heir more early down.

Mon. Alas, my liege, my wife is dead to night.

Grief of my son's exile hath stopp'd her breath :
What further woe conspires against mine age ?

Prince. Look, and thou shalt see.

Mons. O thou untaught ! what manners is in this,

To press before thy father to a grave ?

Prince. Seal up the mouth of outrage for a while,

'Till we can clear these ambiguities,
And know their spring, their head, their true descent ;

And then will I be general of your woes,
And lead you even to death : Meantime forbear,

And let mischance be slave to patience.—

Bring forth the parties of suspicion.

Fri. I am the greatest, able to do least,
Yet most suspected, as the time and place
Doth make against me, of this direful murder ;

And here I stand, both to impeach and purge
Myself condemned and myself accus'd.

Prince. Then say at once what thou dost know in this.

Fri. I will be brief, for my short date of breath

Is not so long as is a tedious tale.

Romeo, there dead, was husband to that Juliet ;

And she, there dead, that Romeo's faithful wife :

I married them ; and their stolen-marriage-day

Was Tybalt's doomsday, whose untimely death
Banish'd the new-made bridegroom from this city ;

For whom, and not for Tybalt, Juliet pin'd.

You—to remove that siege * of grief from her,—
Betroth'd, and would have married her perforce,

To county Paris :—Then comes she to me ;
And, with wild looks, bid me devise some means

To rid her from this second marriage,
Or, in my cell there would she kill herself.

Then gave I her, so tutor'd by my art,
A sleeping potion ; which so took effect

As I intended, for it wrought on her
The form of death : meantime I writ to Romeo,

That he should hither come as this dire night,
To help to take her from her borrow'd grave,

Being the time the potion's force should cease.

But he which bore my letter, friar John,
Was stand by accident ; and yesternight

Return'd my letter back : Then all alone,
At the prefixed hour of her waking,

Came I to take her from her kindred's vault ;
Meaning to keep her closely at my cell,

Till I conveniently could send to Romeo :

But when I came, some minute ere the time
Of her awakening, she untimely lay

The noble Paris, and true Romeo, dead.

She wakes ; and I entreated her come forth,
And hear this work of heaven with patience :

Put then a noise did scare me from the tomb ;
And she too desperate, would not go with me,

But (as it seems,) did violence on herself.

* Sent.

All this I know ; and to the marriage
Her nurse is privy : And, if aught in this Miscarried by my fault, let my old life
Be sacrific'd some hour before his time,
Unto the rigour of severest law.

Prince. We still have known thee for a holy man.—

Where's Romeo's man ? what can he say in this ?

Bal. I brought my master news of Juliet's death ;

And then in post he came from Mantua,
To this same place, to this same monument.

This letter he early bid me give his father ;
And threaten'd me with death, going in the vault,

If I departed not, and left him there.

Prince. Give me the letter, I will look on it.—

Where is the county's page, that rais'd the watch ?—

Sirrah, what made your master in this place ?

Page. He came with flowers to strew his lady's grave ;

And bid me stand aloof, and so I did :

Anon, comes one with light to ope the tomb ;
And, by and by, my master drew on him,

And then I ran away to call the watch.

Prince. This letter doth make good the friar's words,

Their course of love, the tidings of her death ;
And here he writes—that he did buy a poison

Of a poor 'pothecary, and therewithal
Came to this vault to die, and lie with Juliet.—

Where be these enemies ? Capulet ! Montague !—

See what a scourge is laid upon your hate,
That heaven finds means to kill your joys

With love !
And I, for winking at your discords too,
Have lost a brace of kinsmen : * all are punish'd.

Cap. O brother Montague, give me thy hand :

This is my daughter's jointure, for no more
Can I demand.

Mons. But I can give thee more :

For I will raise her statue in pure gold ;
That, while Verona by that name is known,

There shall no figure at such rate be set,
As that of true and faithful Juliet.

Cap. As rich shall Romeo by his lady lie,
Poor sacrifices of our enmity !

Prince. A glooming peace this morning with it brings ;

The sun for sorrow will not show his head ;
Go hence, to have more talk of these sad things ;

Some shall be pardon'd, and some punished : †

For never was a story of more woe,
Than this of Juliet and her Romeo.

[Exeunt.]

* Mercutio and Paris.

† In the original story (to which this line refers) the prince tortures and hangs the apothecary ; banishes the old nurse ; pardons Romeo's servant ; and allows friar Laurence to retire to a hermitage in the vicinity of Verona.

AS a piece for dramatic exhibition, this tragedy has been essentially improved by the celebrated Mr. Garrick, not only in the style and language, by which the jingle and quibble of many of its passages are expunged, but also by the transposition of several scenes, and by the following essential deviation from the original plot : As amended by him, and represented at present, no mention is made of Rosaline, and the sudden and unnatural change of Romeo's affection from her to Juliet is thereby avoided. Juliet also revives from her death-like slumber before the poison has fully operated upon the frame of Romeo, and he dies in her arms, after attempting to carry her from the tomb. By this most judicious alteration, the pathos of the scene is heightened to its highest pitch ; for nothing can be more melting than the incidents and expressions which so highly-wrought a catastrophe affords. As the Italian story upon which the play is founded, such was actually the development of the plot ; but Shakspeare had certainly recourse to the English or French translation ; in which this addition to the tale was upon some account omitted.

CYMBELINE.

LITERARY AND HISTORICAL NOTICE.

MALONE supposes that Shakspeare wrote Cymbeline in the year 1605. The main incidents upon which the plot turns, occur in a novel of Boccaccio's; but our poet obtained them in a different shape, from an old story-book entitled Westward for Smelts. Cymbeline, who gives name to the play, but is a cipher of royalty, began to reign over Britain in the 18th year of Augustus Cæsar. He filled the throne during thirty-five years, leaving two sons, Guiderius and Arviragus. The play commences in the 16th year of the Christian era, which was the 24th year of Cymbeline's reign, and the 42nd of Augustus's. The subject of the piece is disjointed and much too diffuse: it exhibits some monstrous breaches of dramatic unity, and several very languid and make-shift scenes. But the part of Imogen is most delicately and delightfully drawn; her ideas are remarkably luxuriant, yet restrained; and the natural warmth of her affections is, in many instances, most beautifully expressed. Cloten is an incongruous animal, with some strong points about him; and a fine contrast to Posthumus, who is sketched with great judgment, feeling, and consistency. The Queen is an unfinished character, desirous of producing mischief, but possessing neither energy nor ability to accomplish her schemes; and though Iachimo's cunning is portrayed with uncommon skill in his first attempt upon Imogen's virtue, yet his subsequent penitence and candour (however conducive to the moral) are not consistent with the usual hardness of so thorough-paced a villain. Notwithstanding its fine passages and affecting incidents, this play was lost to the stage until Garrick undertook to revise it, by the abridgment of some scenes, and the transposition of others, it was reduced within the compass of a night's performance; and has since continued a periodical favourite with the public. Dr. Johnson decides the merits of this historical drama in the following summary manner: "To remark the folly of the fiction, the absurdity of the conduct, the confusion of the names and manners of different times, and the impossibility of the events in any system of life, were to waste criticism upon unresisting imbecility, upon faults too evident for detection, and too gross for aggravation." No one can deny the elegance or point of the Doctor's critical sentences, nor their murderous efficiency when meant to despatch an adversary at a single blow; but the greatest fault of our poet consists in his having christened some characters of the first century with names which belonged to the fifteenth; and in his having seasoned their antique Roman honesty with a smattering of modern Italian villany.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Britain.—The Garden behind CYMBELINE'S Palace.

Enter two GENTLEMEN.

1 Gent. You do not meet a man, but frowns: our bloods *
 No more obey the heavens, than our courtiers;
 Still seem, as does the king's.
 2 Gent. But what's the matter?

* Inclinations.

† Many pages of controversy have been wasted upon this passage, which is very obscure, and must ever remain so.

1 Gent. His daughter, and the heir of his kingdom, whom
 He purpos'd to his wife's sole son, (a widow
 That late he married,) hath refer'd herself
 Unto a poor but worthy gentleman: She's wedded;
 Her husband banish'd; she imprison'd: all
 Is outward sorrow; though, I think, the king
 Be touch'd at very heart.
 2 Gent. None but the king?
 1 Gent. He, that hath lost her, too: so is the queen.
 That most desir'd the match: But not a court-
 Although they wear their faces to the bent
 Of the king's looks, hath a heart that is not Glad at the thing they sorrow at.

2 Gent. And why so?

1 Gent. He that hath mis'd the princess, is a thing

Too bad for bad report : and he that hath her, (I mean, that married her, alack, good man ! And therefore banish'd) is a creature such As, to seek through the regions of the earth For one like, there would be something failing

In him that should compare. I do not think So fair an outward, and such stuff within, Endows a man but he.

2 Gent. You speak him far.*

1 Gent. I do extend him, Sir, within himself ; Crush him together, rather than unfold His measure duly.

2 Gent. What's his name, and birth ?

1 Gent. I cannot delve him to the root : His father

Was call'd Scellius, who did join his honour Against the Romans, with Cassibelan ; But had his titles by Tenantism,† whom He serv'd with glory and admir'd success ; So gain'd the sur-addition, Leouatus : And had, besides this gentleman in question, Two other sons, who, in the wars o'the time, Died with their swords in hand ; for which their father

(Then old and fond of issue,) took such sorrow, That he quit being ; and his gentle lad, Big of this gentleman, our theme, deceas'd As he was born. The king, he takes the babe To his protection ; calls him Posthumus ; Breeds him, and makes him of his bed-chamber : Puts him to all the learnings that his time Could make him the receiver of ; which he took,

As we do air, fast as 'twas minister'd ; and In his spring became a harvest : Liv'd in court, (Which rare it is to do,) most prais'd, most lov'd :‡

A sample to the youngest ; to the more mature, a glass that feated § them ; and to the graver, A child that guided dotards : to his mistress, For whom he now is banish'd,—her own price Proclaims how she esteem'd him and his virtue ; By her election may be truly read, What kind of man he is.

2 Gent. I honour him

Even out of your report. But, 'pray you, tell me, Is she sole child to the king ?

1 Gent. His only child.

He had two sons, (if this be worth your bearing, Mark it,) the eldest of them at three years old, I'the swathing clothes the other, from their nursery ¶ knowledge Were stolen : and, to this hour, no guess in Which way they went.

2 Gent. How long is this ago ?

1 Gent. Some twenty years.

2 Gent. That a king's children should be so convey'd !

So slackly guarded ! And the search so slow, That could not trace them !

1 Gent. Howsoever 'tis strange, Or that the negligence may well be laugh'd at, Yet is it true, Sir.

2 Gent. I do well believe you.

1 Gent. We must forbear : Here come the queen and princess. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter the QUEEN, POSTHUMUS, and IMOGEN.

Queen. No, be assur'd, you shall not find me, daughter, After the slander of most step-mothers, Evil-ey'd unto you : you are my prisoner, but Your jailer shall deliver you the keys [mus, That lock up your restraint. For you, Posthu-

* You are lavish in your encomiums

† The father of Cymbeline.

‡ To be at once loved and prais'd, is truly rare.

§ I censured their manners.

So soon as I can win the offended king, I will be known your advocate : marry, yet The fire of rage is in him ; and 'twere good You lean'd unto his sentence, with what patience

Your wisdom may inform you.

Post. Please your highness, I will from hence to-day.

Queen. You know the peril :—

I'll fetch a turn about the garden, plying The pangs of barr'd affections ; though the king

Hath charg'd you should not speak together.

[Exit QUEEN.]

Imo. O

Dissembling courtesy ! How fine this tyrant Can tickle where she wounds !—My dear husband,

I something fear my father's wrath ; but no— (Always reserv'd my holy duty,) what His rage can do on me : You must be gone ; And I shall here abide the hourly shot Of angry eyes ; nor comforted to live, But that there is this jewel in this world, That I may see again.

Post. My queen ! my mistress !

O lady, weep no more ; lest I give cause To be suspected of more tenderness Than doth become a man ! I will remain The loyal'st husband that did e'er plight troth. My residence in Rome at one Philario's ; Who to my father was a friend, to me Known but by letter : thither write, my queen, And with mine eyes I'll drink the words you send,

Though ink be made of gall.

Re-enter QUEEN.

Queen. Be brief, I pray you : If the king come, I shall incur I know not How much of his displeasure :—Yet I'll move him [Aside.]

To walk this way : I never do him wrong, But he does buy my injuries, to be friends ; Pays dear for my offences. [Exit.]

Post. Should we be taking leave

As long a term as yet we have to live, The loathness to depart would grow. Adieu !

Imo. Nay, stay a little :

Were you but riding forth to air yourself, Such parting were too petty. Look here, love ; This diamond was my mother's : take it, heart, But keep it till you woo another wife, When Imogen is dead.

Post. How ! how ! another ?—

You gentle gods give me but this I have, And rear up* my embracements from a nest With bonds of death !—Remain thou here

[Putting on the Ring.]

While sense t can keep it out ! And sweetest, fairest,

As I my poor self did exchange for you, To your so infinite loss ; so, in our trilles I still win of you : For my sake, wear this ; It is a manacle of love : I'll place it Upon this fairest prisoner.

[Putting a Bracelet on her Arm.]

Imo. O the gods !

When shall we see again ?

Enter CYMBELINE and LORDS.

Post. Alack, the king !

Cym. Thou basest thing, avoid ! hence, from my sight !

If, after this command, thou frangest the court With thy unworthiness, thou diest : Away ! Thou art poison to my blood.

Post. The gods protect you !

And bless the good remainders of the court ! I am gone. [Exit]

Imo. There cannot be a pinch in death More sharp than this is.

Cym. O disloyal thing,

* Close up.

† Sensation.

‡ Exit

That should'st repair my youth; thou heapest
A year's age on me!

Imo. I beseech you, Sir,
Harm not yourself with your vexation; I Am senseless of your wrath; a touch more rare.

Subdues all pangs, all fears.

Cym. Past grace! obedience

Imo. Past hope, and in despair: that way, past grace.

Cym. That might'st have had the sole son of my queen!

Imo. O bless'd, that I might not! I chose an eagle,

And did avoid a puttock.†

Cym. Thou took'st a beggar; would'st have made my throne

A seat for baseness.

Imo. No; I rather added

A lustre to it.

Cym. O thou vile one!

Imo. Sir,

It is your fault that I have lov'd Posthumus:

You bred him as my playfellow; and he is

A man, worth any woman; overbuys me

Almost the sunn he pays.

Cym. What!—art thou mad?

Imo. Almost, Sir: Heaven restore me!—

'Would I were

A neat-herd's; daughter! and my Leonatus

Our neighbour shepherd's son!

Re-enter QUEEN.

Cym. Thon foolish thing!—

They were again together: you have done

[To the QUEEN.]

Not after our command. Away with her,

And pen her up.

Queen. 'Beseech your patience:—Peace,

Dear lady daughter, peace;—Sweet sovereign,

Leave us to ourselves; and make yourself some comfort

Out of your best advice.

Cym. Nay, let her languish

A drop of blood a day; and, being aged,

One of this folly!

[Exit.]

Enter PISANIO.

Queen. Fie!—you must give way:

Here is your servant.—How now, Sir? What news?

Pis. My lord, your son drew on my master.

Queen. Ha!

No harm, I trust, is done?

Pis. There might have been,
But that my master rather play'd than fought,
And had no help of anger: they were parted
By gentlemen at hand.

Queen. I am very glad on't.

Imo. Your son's my father's friend; he takes his part.—

To draw upon an exile!—O brave Sir!—
I would they were in Afric both together;
Myself by with a needle, that I might prick
The goer back.—Why came you from your master?

Pis. On his command: He would not suffer
me

To bring him to the haven: left these notes
Of what commands I should be subject to,
Wher it pleas'd you to employ me.

Queen. This hath been
Your faithful servant: I dare say mine honour,
He will remain so.

Pis. I humbly thank your highness.

Queen. Pray, walk awhile.

Imo. About some half hour hence,
I pray you speak with me: you shall, at least,
Go see my lord aboard: for this time leave
me.

[Exeunt.]

* A more exquisite feeling.
† Cattle-keeper.

† A kiss.

SCENE III.—A Public Place.

Enter CLOTEN, and two LORDS.

1 Lord. Sir, I would advise you to shift a shirt; the violence of action hath made you reek as a sacrifice: Where air comes out, air comes in: there's none abroad so wholesome as that you vent.

Clo. If my shirt were bloody, then to shift it —Have I hurt him?

2 Lord. No, faith; not so much as his patience. [Aside.]

1 Lord. Hurt him? his body's a passable carcass, if he be not hurt: it is a thoroughfare for steel if it be not hurt.

2 Lord. His steel was in debt; it went o'the backside the town. [Aside.]

Clo. The villain would not stand me.

2 Lord. No; but he fled forward still, toward your face. [Aside.]

1 Lord. Stand you! You had land enough of your own: but he added to your having; gave you some ground.

2 Lord. As many inches as you have oceans: a Puppies! [Aside.]

Clo. I would, they had not come between us.

2 Lord. So would I, till you had measured how long a fool you were upon the ground.

[Aside.]
Clo. And that she should love this fellow, and refuse me!

2 Lord. If it be a sin to make a true election,
she is damned. [Aside.]

1 Lord. Sir, as I told you always, her beauty and her brain go not together: * She's a good sign, but I have seen small reflection of her wit.†

2 Lord. She shines not upon fools, lest the reflection should hurt her. [Aside.]

Clo. Come, I'll to my chamber: 'Would there had been some hurt done!

2 Lord. I wish not so; unless it had been the fall of an ass, which is no great hurt.

[Aside.]

Clo. You'll go with us?

1 Lord. I'll attend your lordship.

Clo. Nay, come, let's go together.

2 Lord. Well, my lord.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—A Room in CYMBELINE'S
Palace.

Enter IMOGEN and PISANIO.

Imo. I would thou grew'st unto the shores o'the haven.

And question'dst every sail: if he should write,
And I not have it, 'twere a paper lost
As offered mercy is. What was the last
That he spake to thee?

Pis. 'Twas, His queen, his queen!

Imo. Then way'd his handkerchief?

Pis. And kiss'd it, madam.

Imo. Senseless linen! happier therein than
And that was all? [Aside.]

Pis. No, madam; for so long
As he could make me with this eye or ear
Distinguish him from others, he did keep
The deck, with glove, or hat, or handkerchief,
Still waving, as the fits and stirs of his mind
Could best express how slow his soul sail'd on,
How swift his ship.

Imo. Thou should'st have made him

As little as a crow, or less, ere left

To after-eye him.

Pis. Madam, so I did.

Imo. I would have broke mine eye-strings;
crack'd them, but

To look upon him; till the diminution
Of space had pointed him sharp as my needle:
Nay, follow'd him, till he had melted from
The smallness of a gnat to air; and then

* Her beauty and her senses are not equal.

† Anciently almost every sign had some attempt at a witticism underneath it.

Have turn'd mine eye, and wept.—But, good Pisano,

When shall we hear from him?

Pis. Be assur'd, madam,
With his next vantage.*

Imo. I did not take my leave of him, but had
Most pretty things to say: ere I could tell him,
How I would think on him, at certain hours,
Such thoughts, and such; or I could make him
swear

The shes of Italy should not betray Mine interest, and his honour; or have charg'd
him,

At the sixth hour of morn, at noon, at mid-
To encounter me with orisons,† for then
I am in heaven for him: or ere I could Give him that parting kiss, which I had set Betwixt two charming words, comes in my
father,

And, like the tyrannous breathing of the north,
Shakes all our buds from growing.

Enter a Lady.

Lady. The queen, madam,
Desires your highness' company.

Imo. Those things I bid you do, get them
despatch'd.—

I will attend the queen.

Pis. Madam, I shall.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Rome.—An Apartment in PHILARIO'S House.

Enter PHILARIO, IACHIMO, a FRENCHMAN, a DUTCHMAN, and a SPANIARD.

Iach. Believe it, Sir, I have seen him in Brittain: he was then of a crescent note,‡ expected to prove so worthy, as since he hath been allowed the name of: but I could then have looked on him without the help of admiration;‡ though the catalogue of his endowments had been tabled by his side, and I to peruse him by items.

Phi. You speak of him when he was less furnished,§ than now he is, with that which makes him both without and within.

French. I have seen him in France: we had very many there, could behold the sun with as firm eyes as he.

Iach. This matter of marrying his king's daughter, (wherein he must be weighed, rather by her value than his own,) words him, I doubt not, a great deal from the matter.

French. And then his banishment:—

Iach. Ay, and the approbation of those that weep this lamentable divorce, under her encour, are wonderfully to extend¶ him: be it but to fortify her judgment, which else an easy batter might lay flat, for taking a beggar without more quality. But how comes it, he is to sojourn with you? How creeps acquaintance?

Phi. His father and I were soldiers together;
to whom I have been often bound for no less than my life:—

Enter POSTHUMUS.

Here comes the Briton: Let him be so entertain'd amongst you, as suits, with gentlemen of your knowing, to a stranger of quality.—I beseech you all, be better known to this gentleman; whom I commend to you as a noble friend of mine: How worthy he is, I will leave to appear hereafter, rather than story him in his own hearing.

French. Sir, we have known together in Orleans.

Post. Since when I have been debtor to you for courtesies, which I will be ever to pay, and yet pay still.

French. Sir, you o'er-rate my poor kindness:
I was glad I did alone* my countryman and you; it had been pity you should have been put together with so mortal a purpose as then each bore, upon importance of so slight and trivial a
nature.

Post. By your pardon, Sir, I was then a young traveller: rather shunn'd to go even with what I heard, than in my every action to be guided by others' experiences: but, upon my mended judgment, (if I offend not to say it is mended,) my quarrel was not altogether slight.

French. 'Faith, yes, to be put to the arbitrement of swords; and by such two, that would,
by all likelihood, have confounded† one the other, or have fallen both.

Iach. Can we, with manners, ask what was the difference‡?

French. Safely, I think: 'twas a contention in public, which may, without contradiction, suffer the report. It was much like an argument that fell out last night, where each of us fell in praise of our country mistresses: This gentleman at that time vouching, (and upon warrant of bloody affirmation,) his to be more fair, virtuous, wise, chaste, constant-qualified, and less attemptable, than any the rarest of our ladies in France.

Iach. That lady is not now living; or this gentleman's opinion by this worn out.

Post. She holds her virtue still, and I my mind.

Iach. You must not so far prefer her 'fore our's of Italy.

Post. Being so far provoked as I was in France, I would abate her nothing: though I profess myself her adorer, not her friend.

Iach. As fair and as good (a kind of hand in-hand comparison,) had been something too fair and too good for any lady in Britain. If she went before others I have seen, as that diamond of your's outlustres many I have beheld, I could not but believe she excelled many: but I have not seen the most precious diamond that is, nor you the lady.

Post. I praised her, as I rated her: so do I my stone.

Iach. What do you esteem it at?

Post. More than the world enjoys.

Iach. Either your unparagon'd mistress is dead, or she's outpriz'd by a title.

Post. You are mistaken: the one may be sold, or given; if there were wealth enough for the purchase, or merit for the gift: the other is not a thing for sale, and only the gift of the gods.

Iach. Which the gods have given you?

Post. Which by their graces, I will keep.

Iach. You may wear her in title your's: but,
you know, strange foul light upon neighbouring pounds. Your ring may be stolen too; so, of your brace of unsprizable estimations, the one is but frail, and the other casual; a cunning thief, or a that-way accomplished courtier, would hazard the winning both of first and last.

Post. Your Italy contains none so accom-plish'd a courtier, to convince; the honour of my mistress; if, in the holding or loss of that, you term her frail. I do nothing doubt you have store of thieves; notwithstanding I fear not my ring.

Phi. Let us leave here, gentlemen.

Post. Sir, with all heart. This worthy sig-nior, I thank him, makes no stranger of me; we are familiar at first.

Iach. With five times so much conversation, I should get ground of your fair mistress; make

* Opportunity.

acteristical.

her go back, even to the yielding; had I admittance, and opportunity to friend.

Post. No, no.

Jach. I dare, thereon, pawn the moiety of my estate to your ring; which, in my opinion, o'er-values it something; But I make my wager rather against your confidence, than her reputation: and, to bar your offence hereto too, I durst attempt it against any lady in the world.

Post. You are a great deal abused* in too bold a persuasion; and I doubt not you sustain what you're worthy of, by your attempt.

Jach. What's that?

Post. A repulse: Though your attempt, as you call it, deserve more—a punishment too.

Phi. Gentlemen, enough of this: It came in too suddenly; let it die as it was born, and, I pray you, be better acquainted.

Jach. 'Would I had put my estate and my neighbour's on the approbation† of what I have spoke.

Post. What lady would you choose to assail?

Jach. Your's; whom in constancy, you think, stands so safe. I will lay you ten thousand ducats to your ring, that, commend me to the court where your lady is, with no more advantage than the opportunity of a second conference, and I will bring from thence that honour of her's, which you imagine so reserved.

Post. I will wage against your gold, gold to it: my ring I hold dear as my finger; 'tis part of it.

Jach. You are a friend, and therein the wiser. If you buy ladies' flesh at a million a dram, you cannot preserve it from tainting: But, I see, you have some religion in you, that you fear.

Post. This is but a custom in your tongue; you bear a graver purpose, I hope.

Jach. I am the master of my speeches; and would undo you what's spoken, I swear.

Post. Will you?—I shall but lend my diamond till your return:—Let there be covenants drawn between us: My mistress exceeds in goodness the hugeness of your unworthy thinking: I dare you to this match: here's my ring.

Phi. I will have it no lay.

Jach. By the gods it is one:—If I bring you no sufficient testimony that I have enjoyed the dearest bodily part of your mistress, my ten thousand ducats are your's; so is your diamond too. If I come off, and leave her in such honour as you have trust in, she your jewel, this your jewel, and my gold are your's:—provided I have your commendation,‡ for my more free entertainment.

Post. I embrace these conditions; let us have articles betwixt us:—only, thus far you shall answer. If you make your voyage upon her, and give me directly to understand you have prevailed, I am no further your enemy, she is not worth our debate: if she remain unseduced, (you not making it appear otherwise,) for your ill opinion, and the assault you have made to her chastity, you shall answer me with your sword.

Jach. Your hand; a covenant: We will have these things set down by lawful counsel, and straight away for Britain, lest the bargain should catch cold, and starve: I will fetch my gold, and have two wagers recorded.

Post. Agreed.

[Exeunt POSTHUMUS and IACHIMO.]

French. Will this hold, think you?

Phi. Signior Iachimo will not from it. Pray, let us follow 'em.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—Britain.—A Room in CYMBELINE'S Palace.

Enter QUEEN, LADIES, and CORNELIUS.

Queen. Whiles yet the dew's on ground, gather those flowers;

* Driv'd. † Prof. ‡ A lover.
‡ Recommendation.

Make haste: Who has the note of them?

Lady. I, madam.

Queen. Despatch.—

[Exeunt LADIES.]

Now, master doctor; have you brought those drugs?

Cor. Pleaseth your highness, ay: here they are, madam:

[Presenting a small Box.]

But I beseech your grace, (without offence; My conscience bids me ask;) wherefore you have

Commanded of me these most poisonous compounds,

Which are the movers of a languishing death; But, though slow, deadly?

Queen. I do wonder, doctor,

Thou ask'st me such a question: Have I not been

Thy pupil long? Hast thou not learn'd me how To make perfumes? distill? preserve? yea, so,

That our great king himself doth woo me oft For my confections? Having thus far proceeded,

(Unless thou think'st me devilish,) is't not meet

That I did amplify my judgment in

Other conclusions? * I will try the forces

Of these thy compounds on such creatures as

We count not worth the hanging, (but none human,)

To try the vigour of them, and apply

Allayments to their act; and by them gather

Their several virtues and effects.

Cor. Your highness

Shall from this practice but make hard your

heart:

Besides, the seeing these effects will be

Both noisome and infectious.

Queen. O content thee.—

Enter PISANIO.

Here comes a flattering rascal; upon him

Will I first work: he's for his master,

[Aside.]

And enemy to my son.—How now, Pisanio?

Doctor. your service for this time is ended;

Take your own way.

Cor. I do suspect you, madam;

But you shall do no harm.

[Aside.]

Queen. Hark thee, a word.— [To PISANIO.]

Cor. [Aside.] I do not like her. She doth think she has

Strange lingering poisons: I do know her spirit,

And will not trust one of her malice with

A drug of such damn'd nature: Those, she has,

Will stupify and dull the sense awhile:

Which first, perchance, she'll prove on cats and dogs;

Then afterward up higher; but there is

No danger in what show of death it makes,

More than the locking up the spirits a time,

To be more fresh, reviving. She is fool'd

With a most false effect; and I the truth,

So to be false with her.

Queen. No further service, doctor,

Until I send for thee.

Cor. I humbly take my leave. [Exit.]

Queen. Weeps she still, say'st thou? Dost thou think, in time

She will not quench; † and let instructions enter

Where folly now possesses? Do thou work;

When thou shalt bring me word she loves my

son,

I'll tell thee, on the instant, thou art then

As great as is thy master: greater; for

His fortunes all lie speechless, and his name

Is at last gasp: Return he cannot, nor

Continue where he is: to shift his being, ‡

Is to exchange one misery with another;

And every day that comes, comes to decay

A day's work in him: What shalt thou expect,

To be depend on a thing that leans †

* Experiments. † Grew cool.
‡ To change his shade.

Who cannot be new built; nor has no friends,
[The QUEEN drops a box: PISANIO takes it up.]

So much as but to prop him?—Thou tak'st up Thou know'st not what; but take it for thy labour:

It is a thing I made, which hath the king
 Five times redeem'd from death: I do not
 know

What is more cordial:—Nay, I pry'thee, take it;
 It is an earnest of a further good
 That I mean to thee. Tell thy mistress how
 The case stands with her; do't, as from thyself.
 Think what a chance thou changest on; but think

Thou hast thy mistress still; to boot, my son,
 Who shall take notice of thee: I'll move the
 To any shape of thy preferment, such [king]
 As thou'lt desire; and then myself, I chiefly,
 That set thee on to this desert, am bound
 To load thy merit richly. Call my women:
 Think on my words. [Exit PISA.]—A sly and constant knave;

Not to be shak'd: the agent for his master;
 And the remembrances of her, to hold
 The hand fast to her lord.—I have given him
 that,

Which, if he take, shall quite unpeople her
 Of ligers* for her sweet; and which she, after,

Except she bend her humour, shall be assur'd

Re-enter PISANIO, and LADIES.

To taste of too.—So, so;—well done, well done:
 The violets, cowslips, and the primroses,
 Bear to my closet;—Fare thee well, Pisanio;
 Think on my words.

[Exeunt QUEEN and LADIES.]

Pis. And shall do;
 But when to my good lord I prove untrue,
 I'll choke myself: there's all I'll do for you.
[Exit.]

SCENE VII.—Another Room in the same.

Enter IMOGEN.

Imo. A father cruel, and a step-dame false;
 A foolish suitor to a wedded lady, [hand]
 That hath her husband banish'd—O that hus-
 My supreme crown of grief! and those repeated

Vexations of it! Had I been thief-stolen,
 As my two brothers, happy! but most miserable

Is the desire that's glorious: Blessed be those,
 How mean soc'er, that have their honest wills,
 Which seasons comfort.—Who may this be?
 Fie!

Enter PISANIO and IACHIMO.

Pis. Madam, a noble gentleman of Rome
 Comes from my lord with letters.

Jack. Change you, madam?
 The worthy Leonatus is in safety,
 And greets your highness dearly.

[Presents a Letter.]

Imo. Thanks, good Sir:

You are kindly welcome.

Jack. All of her, that is out of door, most rich! [Aside.]

If she be furnish'd with a mind so rare,
 She is alone the Arabian bird; and I
 Have lost the wager. Boldness be my friend!
 Arm me, audacity, from head to foot!
 Or, like the Parthian, I shall fly right;
 Rather, directly fly.

Imo. [Reads.]—He is one of the noblest natures, to whose kindness I am most infinitely tied.
 Reflect upon him accordingly, as you value your trust LEONATUS.

So far I read along:

But even the very middle of my heart

Is warm'd by the rest, and takes it thankfully.—
 You are as welcome, worthy Sir, as I
 Have words to bid you; and shall find it so
 In all that I can do.

Jack. Thanks, fairest lady.—

What! are men mad? Hath nature given them
 eyes

To see this vaulted arch, and the rich crop
 Of sea and land, which can distinguish 'twixt
 The fiery orbs above, and the twin'd stours
 Upon the number'd beach? and can we not Partition make with spectacles so precious 'Twixt fair and foul?

Imo. What makes your admiration?

Jack. It cannot be I'the eye; for apes and monkeys,

'Twixt two such shes, would chatter this way, and Contemn with mows* the other: Nor i'the
 judgment;

For idiots, in this case of favour, would
 Be wisely delinute: Nor i'the appetite;
 Sluttish, to such neat excellence oppos'd,
 Should make desire vomit emptiness,
 Not so allur'd to feed.

Imo. What is the matter, trow?

Jack. The cloyed will,
 (That satiate yet unsatisfied desire,
 That tub both fill'd and running,) ravening first
 The lamb, longer after for the garbage.

Imo. What, dear Sir,

Thus raps you? Are you well?

Jack. Thanks, madam; well:—'Beseech you,
 Sir, desire [To PISANIO.]

My man's abode where I did leave him: he Is strange and peevish.†

Pis. I was going, Sir,

To give him welcome. [Exit PISANIO.]

Imo. Continues well my lord: His health,
 'beseech you?

Jack. Well, madam.

Imo. Is he dispos'd to mirth? I hope he is.

Jack. Exceeding pleasant; none a stranger
 there

So merry and so gamester; he is call'd
 The Briton reveller.

Imo. When he was here,
 He did incline to sadness; and oft-times
 Not knowing why.

Jack. I never saw him sad.

There is a Frenchman his companion, one
 An eminent monsieur, that, it seems, much
 loves

A Gallian girl at home: be furnaces
 The thick sighs from him; whilst the jolly
 Briton

(Your lord, I mean,) laughs from's free lungs, cries, O!

Can my sides hold, to think, that man,—who knows

By history, report, or his own proof,
 What woman is, yea, what she cannot choose
 But must be,—will his free hours languish
 for

Assured bondage?

Imo. Will my lord say so?

Jack. Ay, madam? with his eyes in flood with laughter.

It is a recreation to be by,
 And hear him mock the Frenchman: But bea-veens know,

Some men are much to blame.

Imo. Not he, I hope.

Jack. Not he; But yet heaven's bounty towards him might

Be us'd more thankfully. In himself, 'tis
 much;

In you,—which I count his—beyond all talents,

Whilst I am bound to wonder, I am bound

To pity too.

Imo. What do you pity, Sir?

Jack. Two creatures, heartily.

Imo. Am I one, Sir?

* Ambassadors,

† Making mouths.

‡ Shy and foolish.

You look on me: What wreck discern you in me,

Deserves your pity?

Isach. Lamentable! What!

To hide me from the radiant sun, and solace
I the dungeon by a snuff?

Imo. I pray you, Sir,
Deliver with more openness your answers
To my demands. Why do you pity me?

Isach. That others do,
I was about to say, enjoy your—But
It is an office of the gods to venge it,
Not mine to speak out.

Imo. You do seem to know Something of me, or what concerns me: 'Pray
you,

(Since doubting things go ill, often hurts more
Than to be sure they do: for certainties
Either are past remedies; or, timely knowing,
The remedy then born,) discover to me
What both you spur and stop.*

Isach. Had I this check
To bathe my lips upon; this hand, whose touch, Whose every touch, would force the feeler's
soul

To the oath of loyalty; this object, which Takes prisoner the wild motion of mine eye,
Fixing it only here: should I (damn'd then,) Slaver with lips as common as the stairs
That mount the Capitol; join gripes with hands Made hard with hourly falsehood (falsehood, as
With labour;) then lie peeping in an eye,
Base and unlustrous as the smoky light
That's fed with stinking tallow; it were fit,
That all the plagues of hell should at one time
Encounter such revolt.

Imo. My lord, I fear,
Has forgot Britain.

Isach. And himself. Not I,
Inclin'd to this intelligence, pronounce
The beggary of his change; but 'tis your graces
That, from my mute conscience, to my tongue,
Charms this report out.

Imo. Let me hear no more.

Isach. O dearest soul! your cause doth strike
my heart

With pity, that doth make me sick. A lady
So fair, and fasten'd to an empery,† Would make the great'st king double! to be partner'd

With tomboys;‡ hir'd with that self-exhibition §
Which your own coffers yield! with diseas'd ventures,

That play with all infirmities for gold
Which rottenness can leud nature! such boil'd
stuff,

As well might poison poison! Be reveng'd;
Or she that bore you was no queen, and you
Recall from your great stock.

Imo. Reveng'd!

How should I be reveng'd? If this be true,
(As I have such a heart, that both mine ears Must not in haste abuse,) if it be true,
How should I be reveng'd?

Isach. Should he make me
Live like Diana's priest, betwixt cold sheets;
Whilst he is vaulting variable ramps,
In your despite, upon your purse? Revenge it.
I dedicate myself to your sweet pleasure;
More noble than that rannage to your bed;
And will continue fast to your affection,
Still close, as sure,

Imo. What ho, Pisanio!

Isach. Let me my service tender on your lips.

Imo. Away!—I do condemn mine ears, that have

So long attended thee.—If thou wert honourable,

Thou wouldest have told this tale for virtue, not
For such an end thou seek'st; as base as strange.

Thou wrong'st a gentleman, who is as far
From thy report, as thou from honour; and Solicit'st here a lady, that disdains
Thee and the devil alike.—What ho, Pisanio!—
The king my father shall be made acquainted
Of thy assault: if he shall think it fit,
A saucy stranger, in his court, to smart
As in a Romish stew, and to expound
His beastly mind to us; he hath a court
He little cares for, and a daughter whom
He not respects at all.—What ho, Pisanio!

Isach. O happy Leonatus! I may say:
The credit, that thy lady hath of thee,
Deserves thy trust; and thy most perfect good-
ness

Her assur'd credit!—Blessed live you long!

A lady to the worthiest Sir, that ever
Country call'd his! and you his mistress, only For the most worthiest fit! Give me your pardon.

I have spoke this, to know if your affiance
Were deeply rooted; and shall make your lord,
That which he is, new o'er: And he is one
The truest manner'd; such a holy witch,
That he enchants societies unto him:
Half all men's hearts are his.

Imo. You make amends.

Isach. He sits 'mongst men, like a descended god:

He hath a kind of honour sets him off,
More than a mortal seeming. Be not angry,
Most mighty princess, that I have adventur'd
To try your taking of a false report; which hath Honour'd with confirmation your great judgment

In the election of a Sir so rare,
Which you know, cannot err: The love I bear
him

Made me to fan* you thus; but the gods made
you,

Unlike all others, chaffness. Pray, your pardon.

Imo. All's well, Sir: Take my power 't' the court for your's.

Isach. My humble thanks. I had almost forgot
To entreat your grace but in a small request,
And yet of moment too, for it concerns
Your lord: myself, and other noble friends,
Are partners in the business.

Imo. Pray, what is't?

Isach. Some dozen Romans of us, and your
lord,
(The best feather of our wing) have mingled sums,

To buy a present for the emperor;
Which I, the factor for the rest have done
In France: 'Tis plate of rare device; and
jewels,

Of rich and exquisite form; their value's great;
And I am something curious, being strange,†
To have them in safe stowage: May it please you
To take them in protection?

Imo. Willingly;
And pawn mine honour for their safety: since
My lord hath interest in them, I will keep them
In my bed-chamber.

Isach. They are in a trunk,
Attended by my men: I will make bold
To send them to you, only for this night;
I must aboard to-morrow.

Imo. O no, no.

Isach. Yes, I beseech; or I shall short my
word,

By length'ning my return. From Gallia
I cross'd the seas on purpose, and on promise
To see your grace.

Imo. I thank you for your pains;

But not away to-morrow?

Isach. O I must, madam:

Therefore, I shall beseech you, if you please
To greet your lord with writing, don't to write:
I have outstaid my time; which is material
To the tender of our present.

Imo. I will write.

* What you seem anxious to utter, and yet withhold.

† Sovereign command.

‡ Allowance, pension.

§ Wanton.

* To fan, is to winnow.

† A stranger.

Send your trunk to me; it shall safe be kept,
And truly yielded you: You are very welcome,
[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Court before CYMBELINE'S Palace.

Enter CLOTEN and two LORDS.

Clo. Was there ever man had such luck! when I kissed the jack upon an up-cast,* to be hit away! I had a hundred pound on't: And then a whoreson jackanapes must take me up for swearing; as if I borrowed mine oaths of him, and might not spend them at my pleasure.

1 Lord. What got he by that? You have broke his pate with your bowl.

2 Lord. If his wit had been like him that broke it, it would have ran all out. [Aside.]

Clo. When a gentleman is disposed to swear, it is not for any standers-by to curtail his oaths: Ha?

2 Lord. No, my lord; nor [Aside.] crop the ears of them.

Clo. Whoreson dog! I give him satisfaction! 'Would he had been one of my rank!

2 Lord. To have smelt like a fool. [Aside.]

Clo. I am not more vexed at any thing in the earth,—A pox out! I had rather not be so noble as I am; they dare not fight with me, because of the queen my mother: every jack-slave hath his belly full of fighting, and I must go up and down like a cock that nobody can match.

2 Lord. You are a cock and capon too; and you crow, cock, with your comb on. [Aside.]

Clo. Sayest thou?

1 Lord. It is not fit your lordship should undertake every companion; that you give offence to.

Clo. No, I know that; but it is fit I should commit offence to my inferiors.

2 Lord. Ay, it is fit for your lordship only.

Clo. Why, so I say.

1 Lord. Did you hear of a stranger that's come to court to-night?

Clo. A stranger! and I know not on't!

2 Lord. He's a strange fellow himself, and knows it not. [Aside.]

1 Lord. There's an Italian come; and, 'tis thought, one of Leonatus's friends.

Clo. Leonatus! a banished rascal: and he's another, whatsoever he be. Who told you of this stranger?

1 Lord. One of your lordship's pages.

Clo. Is it fit I went to look upon him? Is there no derogation in't?

1 Lord. You cannot derogate; your lord.

Clo. Not easily, I think.

2 Lord. You are a fool granted; therefore your issues being foolish, do not derogate. [Aside.]

Clo. Come, I'll go see this Italian: What I have lost to-day at bowls, I'll win to night of him. Come, go.

2 Lord. I'll attend your lordship.
[Exeunt CLOTEN and first LORD.]

That such a crafty devil as is his mother
Should yield the world this ass! a woman, that Bars all down with her brain: and this her son

Cannot take two from twenty for his heart,
And leave eighteen. Alas, poor princess,
Thou divine Imogen, what thou endur'st!
Betwixt a father by thy step-dame govern'd;
A mother hourly coining plots; and a wooer
More hateful than the foul expulsion is

Of thy dear husband, than that horrid act
Of the divorce he'd make! The heavens hold firm

The walls of thy dear honour; keep unshak'd
That temple, thy fair mind; that thou may'st stand,

To enjoy thy banish'd lord, and this great land!
[Exit.]

SCENE II.—A Bed-chamber; in one part of it a Trunk.

IMOGEN reading in her Bed; a LADY attending,

Imo. Who's there? my woman Helen?

Lady. Please you, madam.

Imo. What hour is it?

Lady. Almost midnight, madam.

Imo. I have read three hours then: mine eyes are weak:—

Fold down the leaf where I have left: To bed:
Take not away the taper, leave it burning;
And if thou can'st awake by four o'clock,
I pray thee call me. Sleep hath seiz'd me wholly.
[Exit Lady.]

To your protection I commend me, gods!
From fairies, and the tempters of the night,
Guard me, beseech ye!

[Sleeps. IACHIMO, from the Trunk.]

Iach. The crickets sing, and man's o'er-labour'd sense

Repairs itself by rest: Our Tarquin thus

Did softly press the rushes,* ere he waken'd

The chastity he wounded.—Cytherea,

How bravely thou becom'st thy bed! fresh lily!

And whiter than the sheets! That I might touch!

But kiss; one kiss!—Rubies unparagon'd,

How dearly they do't!—'Tis her breathing that

Perfumes the chamber thus: The flame o'the taper

Bows toward her; and would under-peep her lids,

To see the enclosed lights, now canopied

Under these windows: White and azure, lac'd

With blue of heaven's own tinct.—But my design!

To note the chamber:—I will write all down:—

Such and such pictures:—There the window:—Such

The adornment of her bed;—The arras;—

figures, [clot.]

Why, such and such:—And the contents o'the

Ab, but some natural notes about her body,

Above ten thousand meaner moveables

Would testify, to enrich mine inventory:

O sleep, thou ape of death, lie dull upon her!

And be her sense but as a monument,

Thus in a chapel lying!—Come off, come off;—

[Taking off her bracelet.]

As slippery, as the Gordian knot was hard!

'Tis mine; and this will witness outwardly,

As strongly as the conscience does within,

To the madding of her lord. On her left breast

A mole cinque-spotted, like the crimson drops

in the bottom of a cowslip: Here's a voucher,

Stronger than ever law could make: this secret will force him: think I have pick'd the lock, and

The treasure of her honour. No more.—To what end!

Why should I write this down, that's rivetted,

Screw'd to my memory? She hath been reading late

The tale of Terens; here the leaf's turn'd

Where Philomel gave up:—I have enough:

To the trunk again, and about the spring of it.

Swift, swift, you dragons of the night!—that dawning

May bare the raven's eye: I lodge in fear;

* He is describing his fate at bowls, the jack is the small bowl at which the others are aimed. † Fellow.

‡ Degraded yourself.

* It was anciently the custom to strew chambers with rushes. † L. c. The white skin lined with blue veins.

‡ Tapestry.

Though this a heavenly angel, hell is here.

[Clock strikes.
One, two, three.—Time, time!]

[Goes into the Trunk. The Scene closes.]

SCENE III.—An Antechamber adjoining IMOGEN'S Apartment.

Enter CLOTEN and LORDS.

1 Lord. Your lordship is the most patient man in loss, the most coldest that ever turned up ace.

Clo. It would make any man cold to lose.

1 Lord. But not every man patient, after the noble temper of your lordship; you are most hot and furious when you win.

Clo. Winning would put any man into courage; if I could get this foolish Imogen, I should have gold enough: It's almost morning, isn't it?

1 Lord. Day, my lord.

Clo. I would this music would come: I am advised to give her music o' mornings; they say, it will penetrate.

Enter MUSICIANS.

Come on; tune: If you can penetrate her with your fingering, so: we'll try with tongue too: if none will do, let her remain: but I'll never give o'er. First a very excellent good-concocted thing; after a wonderful sweet air, with admirable rich words to it,—and then let her consider.

SONG.

Hark! hark! the lark at heaven's gate
And Phœbus' gins arise, [sings,
His steeds to water at those springs
On chaliced flowers that lies;
And winking Mary-buds begin
To ope their golden eyes;
With every thing that pretty bin;
My lady sweet, arise;
Arise, arise.

So, get you gone: If this penetrate, I will consider your music the better: if it do not, it is a vice in her ears, which horse-hairs, and cat-guts, nor the voice of unpaired cunuch to boot, can never amend. [Exeunt MUSICIANS.]

Enter CYMBELINE and QUEEN.

2 Lord. Here comes the king.

Clo. I am glad I was up so late; for that's the reason I was up so early: He cannot choose but take this service I have done, fatherly.—Good-morrow to your majesty, and to my gracious mother.

Cym. Attend you here the door of our stern Will she not forth? [daughter?]

Clo. I have assailed her with music, but she vouchsafes no notice.

Cym. The exile of her minion is too new; She hath not yet forgot him; some more time must wear the print of his remembrance out, And then she's yours.

Queen. You are most bound to the king; Who lets go by no vantages, that may Prefer you to his daughter: Frame yourself To orderly solicits; and be friended With aptness of the season; make denials Increase your services: so seem, as if You were inspired to do those duties which You tender to her: that you in all obey her, Save when command to your dissimulation tends, And therein you are senseless.

Clo. Senseless? Not so.

Enter a MESSENGER.

Mess. So like you, Sir, ambassadors from Rome;

The one is Caius Lucius.

* Imogen's maid has just told her mistress that it is twelve o'clock, so that three hours are dispatched in a twinkling!

† Will pay you more for it.

‡ With solicitations not only proper but well-timed.

Cym. A worthy fellow, Albeit he comes on angry purpose now; But that's no fault of his: We must receive him.

According to the honour of his sender; And towards himself his goodness forespent on us. We must extend our notice.—Our dear son, When you have given good morning to your mistress, Attend the queen and us; we shall have need To employ you towards this Roman.—Come, our queen.

[Exeunt Cym. QUEEN, LORDS, and Mess.]

Clo. If she be up, I'll speak with her; if not, Let her lie still, and dream.—By your leave ho!—

I know her women are about her; What If I do hue one of their hands? 'Tis gold Which buys admittance; oft it doth; yea, and makes

Diana's rangers false themselves, yield up Their deer to the stand of the stealer; and 'tis gold Which makes the true man kill'd, and saves the thief;

Nay, sometime, hangs both thief and true man: What

Can it not do, and undo? I will make One of her women lawyer, to me; for I yet not understand the case myself. By your leave. [Knocks.]

Enter a LADY.

Lady. Who's there, that knocks?

Clo. A gentleman.

Lady. No more?

Clo. Yes, and a gentlewoman's son.

Lady. That's more

Than some, whose are tailors as dear as you's, Can justly boast of: What's your lordship's pleasure?

Clo. Your lady's person: Is she ready?

Lady. Ay,

To keep her chamber.

Clo. There's gold for you: sell me your good report.

Lady. How! my good name? or to report of you

What I shall think is good?—The princess—

Enter IMOGEN.

Clo. Good-morrow, fairest sister: Your sweet hand.

Imo. Good-morrow, Sir: You lay out too much pains

For purchasing but trouble: the thanks I give, Is telling you that I am poor of thanks

And scarce can spare them.

Clo. Still, I swear I love you.

Imo. If you but said so, 'twere as deep with me:

If you swear still, your recompense is still That I regard it not.

Clo. This is no answer.

Imo. But that you shall not say I yield being silent,

I would not speak. I pray you, spare me: I'll faith,

I shall unfold equal discourtesy

To your best kindness; one of your great knowing

Should learn, being taught, forbearance.

Clo. To leave you in your madness, 'twere my sin:

I will not.

Imo. Fools are not mad folks.

Clo. Do you call me fool?

Imo. As I am mad, I do:

If you'll be patient, I'll no more be mad:

That cures us both. I am much sorry, Sir

You put me to forget a lady's manners, By being so verbal: * and learn now, for all,

* So verbose.

That I, which know my heart, do here pronounce,
By the very truth of it, I care not for you;
And am so near the lack of charity,
(To accuse myself) I hate you: which I had rather
You felt, than make't my boast.

Clo. You sin against Obedience, which you owe your father. For
The contract you pretend with that base wretch,
(One, bred of alms, and foster'd with cold dishes,
With scraps o'the court,) it is no contract, none:
And though it be allow'd in meaner parties, (Yet who, than he, more mean?) to knit their
souls

(On whom there is no more dependency
But brats and beggary) in self-figur'd knot; *
Yet you are curb'd from that enlargement by
The consequence o'the crown; and must not soil
The precious note of it with a base slave,
A hiding† for a livery, a squire's cloth,
A pantler, not so eminent.

Imo. Profane fellow!

Worth than the son of Jupiter, and no more
But what thou art, besides, thou wert too base
To be his groom: thou wert dignified enough,
Even to the point of envy, if 'twere made
Comparative for your virtues, to be styl'd
The under-hangman of his kingdom; and hated
For being prefer'd so well.

Clo. The south-fog rot him!

Imo. He never can meet more mischance, than come

To be but nam'd of thee. His meanest garment,
That ever hath but clipp'd his body, is dearer,
In my respect, than all the hairs above thee,
Were they all made such men.—How now,
Pisanio!

Enter PISANIO.

Clo. His garment? Now, the devil—

Imo. To Dorothy my woman hee thee presently:—

Clo. His garment?

Imo. I am sprighted; with a fool;
Frighted, and anger'd worse:—Go, bid by my woman

Search for a jewel, that too casually Hath left mine arm; it was thy master's:
'shrew me,

If I would lose it for a revenue
Of any king's in Europe. I do think,
I saw't this morn'g: confident I am,
Last night 'twas on my arm; I kiss'd it:
I hope it be not gone, to tell my lord
That I kiss ought but he.

Pis. 'Twill not be lost.

Imo. I hope so: go and search.

[Exit Pis.]

Clo. You have abus'd me:—

His meanest garment!

Imo. Ay; I said so, Sir.

If you will mak't an action, call witness to't.

Io. I will inform your father.

Imo. Your mother too:

She's my good lady; and will conceive, I hope,
But the worst of me. So I leave you, Sir,
To the worst of discontent. [Exit.]

Clo. I'll be reveng'd:—

His meanest garment!—Well. [Exit.]

SCENE. IV.—Rome—An Apartment in PHILARIO'S House.

Enter POSTHUMUS and PHILARIO.

Post. Fear it not, Sir; I would I were so
sure

To win the king, as I am bold her honour
Will remain her's.

Phi. What means do you make to him?

Post. Not any; but abide the change of
time;

Quake in the present winter's state, and wish
That warmer days would come: In these fear'd hopes,

I barely gratify your love; they failing,
I must die much your debtor.

Phi. Your very goodness, and your company,
O'erplays all I can do. By this, your king
Hath heard of great Augustus: Caius Lucius
Will do his commission thoroughly: and, I think,

He'll grant the tribute, send the arrears,
Or look upon our Romans, whose remembrance is yet fresh in their grief.

Post. I do believe,

(Statist * though I am none, nor like to be,)
That this will prove a war; and you shall hear
The legions now in Gallia, sooner landed
In our not-fearing Britain, than have tidings
Of any penny tribute paid. Our countrymen
Are men more ordered, than when Julius Cesar Smil'd at their lack of skill, but found their courage

Worthy his frowning at: Their discipline
(Now mingled with their courages) will make known

To their approvers † they are people, such
That mend upon the world.

Enter IACHIMO.

Phi. See! Iachimo!

Post. The swiftest harts have posted you by
land:

And winds of all the corners kiss'd your sails,
To make your vessel nimble.

Phi. Welcome, Sir.

Post. I hope the briefness of your answer made
The speediness of your return.

Iach. Your lady

Is one the fairest that I have look'd upon.

Post. And, therewithal, the best; or let her beauty

Look through a casement to allure false hearts,
And be false with them.

Iach. Here are letters for you.

Post. Their temour good, I trust.

Iach. 'Tis very like.

Phi. Was Caius Lucius in the Britain court,
When you were there;

Iach. He was expected then,
But not approach'd.

Post. All is well yet.—

Sparkles this stone as it was wont? or is't not Too dull for your good wearing?

Iach. If I have lost it,

I should have lost the worth of it in gold.

I'll make a journey twice as far to enjoy
A second night of such sweet shortness, which
Was mine in Britain; for the ring is won.

Post. The stone's too hard to come by.

Iach. Not a whit,

Your lady being so easy.

Post. Make not, Sir,

Your loss your sport: I hope you know that we Must not continue friends.

Iach. Good Sir, we must,

If you keep covenant: Had I not brought
The knowledge of your mistress home, I grant
We were to question further: but I now
Profess myself the winner of her honour,
Together with your ring; and not the wronger
Of her, or you, having proceeded but
By both your wills.

Post. If you can make't apparent
That you have tasted her in bed, my hand,
And ring, is yours: If not, the foul opinion
You had of her pure honour, gains, or loses,
Your sword or mine; or masterless leaves both
To who shall find them.

Iach. Sir, my circumstances,
Being so near the truth, as I will make them,
Must first induce you to believe: whose strength

* Statesman.

† To those who try them.

* In words of their own trying.
† A few fellows only fit to wear a livery.
‡ Humoured.

I will confirm with oath; which, I doubt not, You'll give me leave to spare, when you shall find

You need it not.

Post. Proceed.

Iach. First, her bed-chamber, (Where, I confess, I slept not; but, profess, Had that was well worth watching,) it was hang'd

With tapestry of silk and silver: the story Proud Cleopatra, when she met her Roman, And Cydnus swell'd above the banks, or for The press of boats, or pride: A piece of work So bravely done, so rich, that it did strive In workmanship and value; which, I wonder'd, Could be so rarely and exactly wrought, Since the true life on't was—

Post. This is true;

And this you might have heard of here, by me, Or by some other.

Iach. More particulars Must justify my knowledge.

Post. So they must, Or do your honour injury.

Iach. The chimney Is south the chamber; and the chimney-piece, Chaste Dian bathing: never saw I figures So likely to report themselves: the cyprier Was as another nature, dumb; outwent her, Motion and breath left out.

Post. This is a thing, Which you might from relation likewise reap; Being, as it is, much spoke of.

Iach. The rock of the chamber With golden cherubims is fretted: Her auditorys*

(I had forgot them,) were two winking Cupids Of silver, each on one foot standing, nicely Depending on their brands.†

Post. This is her honour!—

Let it be granted, you have seen all this, (and praise

Be given to your remembrance,) the description Of what is in her chamber, nothing saves The wager you have laid.

Iach. Then if you can, (Pulling out the Bracelet.

Be pale; I beg but leave to air this jewel: See!—

And now 'tis up again: It must be married To that your diamond; I'll keep them.

Post. Jove!—

Once more let me behold it: Is it that Which I left with her?

Iach. Sir, (I thank her,) that: She stripp'd it from her arm; I see her yet; Her pretty action did outsell her gift,

And yet enrich'd it too: She gave it me, and said, She priz'd it once.

Post. May be, she pluck'd it off, To send it me.

Iach. She writes so to you? doth she?

Post. O no, no, no; 'tis true. Here, take this too; [Gives the Ring.

It is a basilisk unto mine eye, Kills me to look on't!—Let there be no honour, Where there is beauty; truth, where semblance; love

Where there's another man: The vows of women

Of no more boudage be, to where they are made, Than they are to their virtues; which is nothing:—

O above measure false!

Phi. Have patience, Sir, And take your ring again; 'tis not yet won; It may be probable, she lost it; or, Who knows if one of her women, being corrupted, Hath stolen it from her.

Post. Very true;

And so, I hope, he came by't:—Back my ring;—

Render to me some corporal sign about her, More evident than this; for this was stolen.

Iach. By Jupiter, I had it from her arm.

Post. Hark you, he swears; by Jupiter he swears.

'Tis true;—nay, keep the ring—'tis true: I am sure,

She would not lose it: her attendants are All sworn and honourable:—They induc'd to steal it!

And by a stranger?—No, he hath enjoy'd her: The cognizance* of her incontinency Is this,—she hath bought the name of whore thus dearly.—

There, take thy hire: and all the fiends of hell Divide themselves between you!

Phi. Sir, be patient:

This is not strong enough to be believ'd Of one persuaded well of.—

Post. Never talk on't; She hath been colted by him.

Iach. If you seek For further satisfying, under her breast (Worthy the pressing,) lies a mole, right proud Of that most delicate lodging: By my life, I kiss'd it; and it gave me present hunger To feed again, though full. You do remember This stain upon her?

Post. Ay, and it doth confirm Another stain, as big as hell can hold, Were there no more but it.

Iach. Will you hear more?

Post. Spare your arithmetic: never count the Once, and a million! [turns;

Iach. I'll be sworn,—

Post. No swearing.

If you will swear you have not done't, you lie; And I will kill thee, if thou dost deny

Thou hast made me cuckold.

Iach. I will deny nothing.

Post. O that I had her here, to tear her limb-meal!

I will go there, and do't; I'll the court; before Her father:—I'll do something— [Exit.

Phi. Quite besides

The government of patience!—You have won: Let's follow him, and pervert the present wrath He hath against himself.

Iach. With all my heart. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The same.—Another Room in the same.

Enter POSTHUMUS.

Post. Is there no way for men to be, but women

Must be half-workers? We are bastards all;

And that most venerable man, which I

Did call my father, was I know not where

When I was stamp'd; some coin with his tools

Made me a counterfeit: Yet my mother seem'd The Dian of that time; so doth my wife The nonpareil of this.—O vengeance, vengeance!

Me of my lawful pleasure she restrain'd, And pray'd me, oft, forbearance: did it with

A pudency† so rose, the sweet view on't Might well have warm'd old Saturn; that I thought her [devils]—

As chaste as unsunn'd snow:—O all the This yellow Iachimo, in an hour,—was't not?—

Or less,—at first: Perchance he spoke not; but,

Like a full-acorn'd boar, a German one, Cried oh! and mounted: found no opposition

But what he look'd for should oppose, and she Should from encounter guard. Could I find out [hon] The woman's part in me! For there's no more That tends to vice in man, but I affirm

* Ornamented iron bars which support wood burned in chimneys. † Torches in the hands of Cupids.

* The token.

† Modesty.

It is the woman's part: Be it lying, note it,
The woman's; flattering, her's; deceiving, her's;
Ambitions, coverings, change of prides, disdain,
Nice loungings, slanders, mutability, (knows,
All faults that may be nam'd, say, that hell
Why her's in part, or all; but rather all:
For even to vice
They are not constant, but are changing still
One vice, but of a minute old, for one
Not half so old as that. I'll write against them,
Detest them, curse them:—Yet 'tis greater skill
In a true hate, to pray they have their will:
The very devils cannot plague them better.

[Exit.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Britain.—A Room of State in CYMBELINE'S Palace.

Enter CYMBELINE, QUEEN, CLOTEN, and LORDS, at one Door; and at another, CAIUS LUCIUS, and Attendants.

Cym. Now say, what would Augustus Cesar with us?

Luc. When Julius Cesar (whose remembrance yet Lives in men's eyes, and will to ears and tongues,
Be theme and hearing ever,) was in this Britain,
And conquer'd it, Cassibela, thine uncle,
(famous in Cesar's praises, no whit less Than in his feats deserving it,) for him,
And his succession, granted Rome a tribute,
Yearly three thousand pounds; which by thee
Is left untender'd. [lately]

Queen. And, to kill the marvel,
Shall be so ever.

Clo. There be many Cesars,
Ere such another Julius. Britain is
A world by itself; and we will nothing pay,
For wearing our own noses.

Queen. That opportunity [sume
Which then they had to take from us, to re-
We have again.—Remember, Sir, my liege,
The kings your ancestors: together with
The natural bravery of your isle; which stands
As Neptune's park, ribbed and paled in
With rocks unscalable, and roaring waters;
With sands, that will not bear your enemies'
boats, [conquest]

But suck them up to the top-mast. A kind of Cesar made here; but made not here his brag
Of came, and saw, and overcame: with shame
(The first that ever touch'd him,) he was carried [ping,
From off our coast, twice beaten; and his ship-
(Poor ignorant baubles!) on our terrible seas,
Like egg-shells mov'd upon their surges, crack'd
As easily 'gainst our rocks: for joy whereof,
The fam'd Cassibela, who was once at point
(O piglot* fortune!) to unaster Cesar's sword,
Made Lud's town with rejoicing fires bright,
And Britons strut with courage.

Clo. Come, there's no more tribute to be paid:
Our kingdom is stronger than it was at that time; and, as I said, there is no more such Cesars: other of them may have crooked noses;
but, to owe such straight arms, none.

Cym. Son, let your mother end.

Clo. We have yet many among us can gripe as hard as Cassibela: I do not say, I am one;
but I have a hand.—Why tribute? why should we pay tribute? If Cesar can hide the sun from us with a blanket, or put the moon in his pocket, we will pay him tribute for light; else,
Sir, no more tribute, pray you now.

Cym. You must know,

Till the injurious Romans did extort

This tribute from us, we were free: Cesar's ambition,

* Strumpet.

(Which swell'd so much, that it did almost stretch

The sides o'the world,) against all colour, here
Did put the yoke upon us; which, to shake off,
Becomes a warlike people, whom we reckon
Ourselves to be. We do say then to Cesar,
Our ancestor was that Mulinutius, which Ordain'd our laws; (whose use the sword of
Cesar

Hath too much mangled; whose repair and franchise,

Shall, by the power we hold, be our good deed,
Though Rome be therefore angry;) Mulinutius,
Who was the first of Britain, which did put
His brows within a golden crown, and call'd
Himself a king.

Luc. I am sorry, Cymbeline,
That I am to pronounce Augustus Cesar (Cesar, that hath more knugs his servants, than Thyself domestic officers,) thine enemy:
Receive it from me, then:—War and confusion.
In Cesar's name pronounce I 'gainst thee: look
For fury not to be resisted:—Thus debed,
I thank thee for myself.

Cym. Thon art welcome, Cains.

Thy Cesar knighted me; my youth I spent Much under him; * of him I gather'd honour;
Which be, to seek of me again, perforce,
Behoves me keep at utterance; † I am perfect, ‡
That the Pannonians and Dalmatians, for Their liberties, are now in arms: a precedent
Which, not to read, would show the Britons
cold:

So Cesar shall not find them.

Luc. Let proof speak.

Clo. His majesty bids you welcome. Make pastime with us a day or two longer: If you seek us afterwards in other terms, you shall find us in our salt-water girdle: if you beat us out of it, it is your's; if you fall in the adventure, our crowns shall fare the better for you;
and there's an end.

Luc. So, Sir.

Cym. I know your master's pleasure, and his
mine:

All the remain is, welcome. [Lucius,]

SCENE II.—Another Room in the same.

Enter PISANIO.

Pis. How I of adultery? Wherefore write you not

What monster's her accuser?—Leomatus!
O master! what a strange infection
Is fallen into thy ear? What false Italian § (As poisonous tongue'd as handed,) hath prevail'd

On thy too ready hearing?—Disloyal? No:
She's punish'd for her truth; and undergoes,
More goddess-like than wife-like, such assaults
As would take in † some virtue.—O my master!
Thy mind to her is now as low, as were Thy fortunes.—How! that I should murder
her?

Upon the love and truth and vows, which I Have made to thy command!—I, her?—her
blood?

If it be so to do good service, never Let me counted serviceable. How look I,
That I should seem to lack humanity,
So much as this fact comes to? Do't—The letter [Reading.]

That I have sent her, by her own command
Shall give thee opportunity:—O damn'd paper!
Black as the ink that's on thee! Senseless bauble.

Art thou a feodary for this act, and look'st
So, virgin-like without? Lo, here she comes.

* Kymbeline (says Halliwell) was brought up at Rome, and there made knight by Augustus Cesar.†

† At the extremity of defiance. ‡ Well-informed.
§ About Shakespeare's time, poisoning was a very common practice in Italy.

¶ To take in a town, is to conquer it.

 Confederates.

Enter IMOGEN.

I am ignorant in what I am commanded.

IMO. How now, Pisanio?

PIS. Madam, here is a letter from my lord.

IMO. What? thy lord? that is my lord? Leonatus?

O learn'd indeed were that astronomer,
That knew the stars, as I his characters;
He'd lay the future open.—You good gods,
Let what is here contain'd relish of love,
Of my lord's health, of his content,—yet not,
That we two are asunder, let that grieve him,— (Some griefs are med'cuable;) that is one of
them,

For it doth physic love;—of his content,
All but in that!—Good wax, thy leave:—

Bless'd be [Lovers,
You bees, that make these locks of counsel!
And men in dangerous bonds pray not alike;
Though forfeiters you cast in prison, yet
You clasp young Cupid's tables. Good news, gods! [Reads.

Justice, and your father's wrath, should he take me in his dominion, could not be so cruel to me, as you, O the dearest of creatures, would not even renew me with your eyes.
Take notice, that I am in Cambria, at Milford-Haven. What your own love will out of this advise you, follow. So, he wishes you all happiness, that remains loyal to his love, and your, increasing in love,

LEONATUS POSTHUMUS.

O for a horse with wings!—Hear'st thou,
Pisanio?

He is at Milford-Haven: Read, and tell me
How far 'tis thither. If one of mean affairs
May plod it in a week, why may not I
Glide thither in a day!—Then, true Pisanio, (Who long'st, like me, to see thy lord; who long'st,—

O let me 'bate,—but not like me:—yet long'st,—
But in a fainter kind:—O not like me;
For mine's beyond, beyond,) say and speak thick,*

[Love's counsellor should fill the bores of hear-
To the smothering of the sense,) how far it is
To this same blessed Milford: And, by the way,
Tell me how Wales was made so happy, as
To inherit such a haven: But, first of all,
How we may steal from hence; and, for the gap [going,

That we shall make in time, from our hence-
And our return, to excuse:—but first, bow get
hence:

Why should excuse be born or e'er begot?
We'll talk of that hereafter. Pr'ythee, speak,
How many score of miles may we well ride
'Twixt hour and hour?

PIS. One score, 'twixt sun and sun,
Madam's enough for you; and too much too.

IMO. Why, one that iode to his execution,
man,

Could never go so slow: I have heard of riding
wage's,

Where horses have been nimbler than the sands
That run i'the clock's behalf:—But this is foolery:—

Go, bid my woman fetch a sickness; say,
She'll home to her father; and provide me,
presently,

A riding suit; no costlier than would fit
A franklin's† housewife.

PIS. Madam, you're best consider.

IMO. I see before me, man, nor here, nor
here,

Nor what ensues; but have a fog in them,
That I cannot look through. Away, I prythee;
Do as I bid thee: There's no more to say;
Accessible is none but Milford way. [Exeunt.

* Crowd one word on another, as fast as possible.
† A freeholder.

SCENE III.—Wales.—A mountainous Country, with a Cave.

Enter BELARIUS, GUIDERIUS, and ARVIRAGUS.

Bel. A goodly day not to keep house, with such

Whose roof's as low as ours! Stoop, boys:
This gate

Instructs you how to adore the heavens; and bows you

To morning's holy office: The gates of monarchs
Are arch'd so high, that giants may jet* through
And keep their impious turbands on, without Good morrow to the sun.—Hail, thou fair heaven!

We house i'the rock, yet use thee not so hardly
As prouder livers do.

Gui. Hail, heaven!

Arv. Hail, heaven!

Bel. Now, for our mountain sport: Up to yon hill,

Your legs are young; I'll tread these flats.
Consider,

When you above perceive me like a crow,
That it is place which lessens, and sets off.
And you may then revolve what tales I have told you,

Of courts, of princes, of the tricks in war:

This service is not service, so being done,
But being so allow'd: To apprehend thus,
Draws us a profit from all things we see:

And often, to our comfort, shall we find
The sharded† beetle in a safer hold

Than is the full-wing'd eagle. O this life
Is nobler, than attending for a check;

Richer, than doing nothing for a babe;
Prouder, than rustling in unpaid-for silk:

Such gain the cap of hum, that makes them
hne,

Yet keeps his book uncross'd: no life to ours.†
Gui. Out of your proof you speak: we, poor
unfedg'd,

Have never wing'd from view o'the nest: nor
know not

What air's from home. Haply, this life is best,
If quiet life be best; sweeter to you,

That have a sharper known; well corresponding
With your stiff age; but, unto us, it is

A cell of ignorance; travelling a-bed;
A prison for a debtor, that not dares
To stride a limit.‡

Arv. What should we speak of,
When we are old as you? when we shall hear

The rain and wind beat dark December, how,
In this our pinching cave, shall we discourse

The freezing hours away? We have seen nothing:

We are beastly; subtle as the fox, for prey;
Like warlike as the wolf, for what we eat:

Our valour is, to chase what flies; our cage
We make a quire, as doth the prison bird,

And sing our bondage freely.

Bel. How you speak!
Did you but know the city's usuries,

And felt them knowingly; the art o'the court,
As hard to leave as keep; whose top to climb

Is certain falling, or so slippery, that
The fear's as bad as falling; the toil of the war

A pain that only seems to seek out danger
I'the name of fame and honour, which dies i'the

search,

And hath as oft a slanderous epitaph,
As record of fair act; nay, many times,

Doth ill deserve by doing well; what's worse,
Must court'sey at the censure:—O boys, this story

The world may read in me: My body's mark'd
With Roman swords; and my report was once

First with the best of note: Cymbeline lov'd
me;

And when a soldier was the theme, my name
Was not far off: Then was I as a tree,

* Walk proudly. † Scaly-winged.
‡ I e. Compared with ours. § To overpass his bounds.

Whose boughs did bend with fruit: but in one night,

A storm, or robbery, call it what you will, Snook down my mellow hangings, nay, my leaves,

And left me bare to weather.

Gwi. Uncertain favour!

Bel. My fault being nothing (as I have told you oft,)

But that two villains, whose false oaths prevail'd

Before my perfect honour, swore to Cymbeline, I was confederate with the Romans: so, Follow'd my banishment; and, this twenty years,

This rock, and these demesnes, have been my world:

Where I have liv'd at honest freedom; paid More pious debts to heaven, than in all The fore-end of my time.—But, up to the mountains;

This is not hunters' language:—He, that strikes The venison first, shall be the lord o'the feast. To him the other two shall minister; And we will fear no poison, which attends In place of greater state. I'll meet you in the valleys. [Exeunt Gwi. and Arv.]

How hard it is, to hide the sparks of nature! These boys know little, they are sons to the king;

Nor Cymbeline dreams that they are alive. They think they are mine: and, though train'd up thus mealy

[but] I'the cave wherein they bow, their thoughts do The roofs of palaces; and nature prompts them, In simple and low things to pringe it, much Beyond the trick of others. This Polydore,—

The heir of Cymbeline and Britain, whom The king his father call'd Guiderius,—Jove! When on my three-foot stool I sit, and tell The warlike feats I have done, his spirits fly out

Into my story: say,—Thy mine enemy fell; And thus I set my foot on his neck; even then

The princely blood flows in his cheek, he sweats, Straus his young nerves, and puts himself in posture

[wal, That acts my words. The younger brother, Cad-Once, Arviragus,] in as like a figure, Strikes life into my speech, and shows much more

His own conceiving. Hark! the game is rous'd!—O Cymbeline! heaven, and my conscience, knows,

Thou didst unjustly banish me: whereon, At three and two years old, I stole these babes; Thinking to bar thee of succession, as Thou rest'st me of my lands. Euriphile, Thou wast their nurse; they took thee for their mother,

And every day do honour to her grave: Myself, Belarius, that am Morgan call'd, They take for natural father. The game is up. [Exit.]

SCENE IV.—Near Milford-Haven.

Enter PISANIO and IMOGEN.

Imo. Thou told'st me, when we came from horse, the place

Was near at hand: Ne'er long'd my mother so To see me first, as I have now:—Pisanio! Man!

Where is Posthumus? What is in thy mind, That makes thee stare thus? Wherefore breaks that sigh

From the inward of thee? One, but painted thus, Would be interpreted a thing perplex'd Beyond self-explication: Put thyself

Into a 'behaviour' of less fear, ere wildness Vanquish my staid senses. What's the matter?

* For behaviour.

Why tender'st thou that paper to me, with A look under'd? 'Tis it be summer news, Smile to't before: if winterly, thou need'st But keep that countenance still.—My husband's hand!

That drug-damn'd Italy hath out-crafted him, And he's at some hard point.—Speak, man; thy tongue

May take off some extremity, which to read Would be even mortal to me.

Pis. Please you, read; And you shall find me, wretched man, a thing The most disdain'd of fortune.

Imo. [Reads.] Thy mistress, Pisanio, hath played the strumpet in my bed; the testimonies whereof lie bleeding in me. I speak not out of weak surmises; from proof as strong as my grief, and as certain as I expect my revenge. That part, thou Pisanio, must act for me, if thy faith be not tainted with the breach of hers. Let thine own hands take away her life: I shall give thee opportunities at Milford-Haven: she hath my letter for the purpose; Where, if thou fear to strike, and to make me certain it is done, thou art the pander to her dishonour, and equally to me distoyal.

Pis. What shall I need to draw my sword? the paper

Hath cut her throat already.—No, 'tis slander; Whose edge is sharper than the sword; whose tongue

[breath] Outvenoms all the worms of Nile; whose Rides on the posting winds, and doth belie All corners of the world: kings, queens, and states,

Maids, matrons, nay, the secrets of the grave This viperous slander enters.—What cheer, madam?

Imo. False to his bed! What is it, to be false? To lie in watch there, and to think on him! To weep 'twixt clock and clock? if sleep charge nature,

To break it with a fearful dream of him, And cry myself awake? that's false to his bed? Is it?

Pis. Alas, good lady!

Imo. I false? Thy conscience witness:—fachimo, Thou didst accuse him of incontinency; Thou then look'd'st like a villain; now, methinks,

Thy favour's good enough.—Some jay* of Italy, Whose mother was her painting,† hath betray'd him:

Poor I am stale, a garment out of fashion: And, for I am richer than to hang by the walls, I must be ripp'd:—to pieces with me!—Oh! Men's vows are women's traitors! All good seeming,

By thy revolt, O husband, shall be thought Put on for villany; not born, where't grows; But worn, a bait for ladies.

Pis. Good madam, hear me.

Imo. True honest men being heard, like false Enceas,

Were, in his time, thought false: and Simon's Did scandal many a holy tear; took pity From most true wretchedness: so thou, Posthumus,

Wilt lay the leaven on all proper men; Goodly, and gallant, shall be false and perjur'd, From thy great fall.—Come, fellow, be thou honest: [him,

Do thou thy master's bidding: when thou see'st A little witness my obedience: Look!

I draw the sword myself: take it; and hit The innocent mansion of my love, my heart: Fear not; 'tis empty of all things, but grief:

Thy master is not there; who was, indeed, The riches of it: Do his bidding; strike.

Thou may'st be valliant in a better cause; But now thou seem'st a coward.

* Palla, in Italian, signifies both a jay and a whore.
† Licenza.

Pis. Hence, vile instrument!
Thou shalt not damn my hand.

Imo. Why, I must die:
And if I do not by thy hand, thou art
No servant of thy master's: Against self
slaughter

There is a prohibition so divine,
That craves * my weak hand. Come, here's
my heart;
Something's afoot!—Soft, soft; we'll no defence;

Obedient as the scabbard.—What is here?
The scriptures † of the loyal Leonatus,
All turn'd to heresy! Away, away,
Corrupters of my faith! you shall no more
Be stomachers to my heart! Thus may poor fools

Believe false teachers: Though those that are betray'd

Do feel the treason sharply, yet the traitor
Stands in worse case of woe.
And thou, Posthumus, thou that didst set up
My disobedience 'gainst the king my father,
And make me put into contempt the suits
Of princely fellows, shalt hereafter find
It is no act of common passage, but
A strain of rareness: and I grieve myself,
To think, when thou shalt be disedg'd by her
That now thou trust'st on, how thy memory
Will then be pang'd by me.—Pr'ythee, despatch:

The lamb entreats the butcher: Where's thy
knife?

Thou art too slow to do thy master's bidding,
When I desire it too.

Pis. O gracious lady,
Since I receiv'd command to do this business,
I have not slept one wink.

Imo. Do't, and to bed then.

Pis. I'll wake mine eye-balls blind first.

Imo. Wherefore then
Didst undertake it? Why hast thou abus'd
So many miles with a pretence? this place?
Mine action, and thine own? our horses' labour?

The time inviting thee? the perturb'd court,
For my being absent? whereunto I never Purpose return? Why hast thou gone so far,
To be absent when thou hast ta'en thy stand,
The elected deer before thee?

Pis. But to win time
To lose so had employment in the which I have consider'd of a course: Good lady,
Hear me with patience.

Imo. Talk thy tongue weary; speak:
I have heard I am a strumpet; and mine ear,
Therein false struck, can take no greater
wound,

Nor tent to bottom that. But speak.

Pis. Then, madam,
I thought you would not back again.

Imo. Most like;
Bringing me here to kill me.

Pis. Not so, neither:
But if I were as wise as honest, then
My purpose would prove well. It cannot be,
But that my master is abus'd:
Some villain, ay, and singular in his art,
Hath done you both this cursed injury.

Imo. Some Roman courtizan.

Pis. No, on my life.

I'll give but notice you are dead, and send
him

Some bloody sign of it; for 'tis commanded
I should do so: You shall be miss'd at court,
And that will well confirm it.

Imo. Why, good fellow,
What shall I do the while? Where bide? How
live?

Or in my life what comfort, when I am
Dead to my husband?

Pis. If you'll back to the court,—

Imo. No court, no father; nor no more ado
With that harsh, noble, simple, nothing:
That Cloten, whose love-suit hath been to me
As fearful as a siege.

Pis. If not at court,
Then not in Britain must you bide.

Imo. Where then?
Hath Britain all the sun that shines? Day,
night,

Are they not but in Britain? I'll the world's volume

Our Britain seems as of it, but not in it;
In a great pool, a swan's nest; Pr'ythee, think There's livers out of Britain.

Pis. I am most glad
You think of other place. The ambassador,
Lucius the Roman, comes to Milford-Haven
To-morrow: Now, if you could wear a mind
Dark as your fortune is; and but disguise
That, which, to appear itself, must not yet be,
But by self-danger; you should tread a course
Pretty, and full of view: yea, haply, near
The residence of Posthumus; so nigh, at least,
That though his actions were not visible, yet
Report should render him hourly to your ear,
As truly as he moves.

Imo. O for such means!
Though peril to my modesty, not death out,
I would adventure.

Pis. Well then, here's the point:
You must forget to be a woman; change
Command into obedience; fear and meanness,
(The handmaids of all women, or, more truly,
Woman it's pretty self,) to a waggish courage;
Ready in gibes, quick-answer'd, saucy, and
As quarrelous as the vessel: nay, you must Forget that rarest treasure of your cheek,
Exposing it (but, oh! the harder heart!
Alack no remedy!) to the greedy touch
Of common-kissing Titan; * and forget
Your labour-some and dainty trims, wherein
You made great Juno angry.

Imo. Nay, be brief:
I see into thy end, and am almost
A man already.

Pis. First, make yourself but like one.
Fore-thinking this, I have already fit,
(Tis in my cloak-bag,) doublet, hat, hose, all That answer to them: Would you, in their serving,

And with what imitation you can borrow
From youth of such a season, more noble Lucius

Present yourself, desire his service, tell him Wherein you are happy, † (which you'll make him know,

If that his head have ear in music,) doubtless,
With joy he will embrace you: for he's honourable,

And, doubling that, most holy. Your means abroad

You have me ‡ rich; and I will never fail
Beginning, nor supplement.

Imo. Thou art all the comfort
The gods will diet me with. Pr'ythee, away:
There's more to be consider'd; but we'll even
All that good time will give us: This attempt I'm soldier to, § and will abide it with
A prince's courage. Away, I pr'ythee.

Pis. Well, madam, we must take a short fare-
well:

Lest, being miss'd, I be suspected of Your carriage from the court. My noble mis-treas,

Here is a box; I had it from the queen;
What's in't is precious; if you are sick at sea,
Or stomach-quill'd at land, a dram of this
Will drive away distemper.—To some shade,
And fit you to your manhood.—May the gods
Direct you to the best!

Imo. Amen: I thank thee.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—A Room in CYMBELINE'S Palace.

Enter CYMBELINE, QUEEN, CLOTEN, LUCIUS, and LORDS.

Cym. Thus far ; and so farewell.

Luc. Thanks, royal Sir.

My emperor hath wrote, I must from hence ;
And am right sorry, that I must report ye
My master's enemy.

Cym. Our subjects, Sir,
Will not endure his yoke ; and for ourself
To show less sovereignty than they, must needs

Appear unkinglike.

Luc. So, Sir, I desire of you
A conduct over land, to Milford-Haven.—
Madam, all joy befall your grace, and you !

Cym. My lords, you are appointed for that office ;

The due of honour in no point omit :—

So, farewell, noble Lucius.

Luc. Your hand, my lord.

Clo. Receive it friendly : but from this time
forth

I wear it as your enemy.

Luc. Sir, the event

Is yet to name the winner ; Fare you well.

Cym. Leave not the worthy Lucius, good my lords,

Till he have cross'd the Severn.—Happiness !

[Exeunt LUCIUS and LORDS.]

Queen. He goes hence frowning : but it honours us,

That we have given him cause.

Clo. 'Tis all the better ;

Your valiant Britons have their wishes in it.

Cym. Lucius hath wrote already to the emperor

How it goes here. It fits us therefore, ripely,
Our chariots and our horsemen be in readi-
ness :

The powers that he already hath in Gallia
Will soon be drawn to head, from whence he moves

His war for Britain.

Queen. 'Tis not sleepy business ;

But must be look'd to speedily and strongly.

Cym. Our expectation that it would be thus,
Hath made us forward. But, my gentle
queen,

Where is our daughter ? She hath not appear'd
Before the Roman, nor to us hath tender'd
The duty of the day : She looks as like
A thing more made of malice than of duty :
We have noted it.—Call her before us ; for
We have been too slight in sufferance.

[Exit an ATTENDANT.]

Queen. Royal Sir,
Since the exile of Posthumus, most retir'd Hath her life been ; the cure whereof, my
lord,

'Tis time must do. 'Beseech your majesty,
Forbear sharp speeches to her : she's a lady
So tender of rebukes, that words are strokes,
And strokes death to her.

Re-enter an ATTENDANT.

Cym. Where is she, Sir ? How
Can her contempt be answer'd ?

Atten. Please you, Sir,
Her chambers are all lock'd ; and there's no
answer

That will be given to the loud'st of noise we make.

Queen. My lord, when last I went to visit
her,

She pray'd me to excuse her keeping close ;

Whereto constrain'd by her infirmity,

She should that duty leave unpaid to you,

Which daily she was bound to proffer : this

She wish'd me to make known ; but our great
court

Made me to blame in memory.

Cym. Her doors lock'd ?

Not seen of late ! Grant, heavens, that which I fear

Prove false !

[Exit.]

Queen. Son, I say, follow the king.

Clo. That man of her's, Pisanio, her old
servant,

I have not seen these two days.

Queen. Go, look after.—

[Exit CLOTEN.]

Pisanio, thou that stand'st so for Posthumus !—
He hath a drug of mine. I pray his absence

Proceed by swallowing that ; for he believes

It is a thing most precious. But for her,
Where is she gone ? Haply, despair hath set'd her ;

Or, wing'd with fervour of her love, she's flown
To her desir'd Posthumus : Gone she is

To death, or to dishonour ; and my end
Can make good use of either : She being down,
I have the placing of the British crown.

Re-enter CLOTEN.

How now, my son ?

Clo. 'Tis certain she is fled :

Go in, and cheer the king ; he rages ; none
Dare come about him.

Queen. All the better : May

This night forestall him of the coming day !

[Exit QUEEN.]

Clo. I love, and hate her ; for she's fair and royal :

And that she hath all courtly parts more exquisite

Than lady, ladies, woman : * from every one
The best she hath, and she, of all compounded,

Outsells them all ; I love her therefore ; But,
Disdaining me, and throwing favours on

The low Posthumus, slanders so her judgment,
That what's else rare, is chok'd ; and in that

point,
I will conclude to hate her, nay, indeed,
To be reveng'd upon her. For, when fools

Enter PISANIO,

Shall—Who is here ? What ! are you packing,
Sirrah ?

Come hither : Ah ! you precious pander ! Villain,

Where is thy lady ? In a word ; or else

Thou art straightway with the flics.

Pis. O good my lord !

Clo. Where is thy lady ? or, by Jupiter,
I will not ask again. Close villain,

I'll have this secret from thy heart, or rip
Thy heart to find it. Is she with Posthumus ?

From whose so many weights of baseness can
A dram of worth be drawn. [not

Pis. Alas, my lord, [mist'd ?]
How can she be with him ? When was she
He is in Rome.

Clo. Where is she, Sir ? Come nearer ;

No further halting : satisfy me home,

What is become of her ?

Pis. O my all-worthy lord !

Clo. All-worthy villain !

Discover where thy mistress is, at once,

At the next word.—No more of worthy lord,—

Speak, or thy silence on the instant is

Thy condemnation and thy death.

Pis. Then, Sir,

This paper is the history of my knowledge

Touching her flight.

[Presenting a Letter.]

Clo. Let's see't :—I will pursue her

Even to Augustus's throne.

Pis. Or this, or perish. [by this,]
She's far enough ; and what he learns } Aside.

May prove his travel, not her danger.

Clo. Humph !

Pis. I'll write to my lord she's dead. O
Imogen

Safe may'st thou wander, safe return again !

[Aside.]

* Than any lady, than all ladies, than all woman-kind

Clo. Sirrah, is this letter true?

Pis. Sir, as I think.

Clo. It is Posthumus' hand; I know't.—Sirrah, if thou would'st not be a villain, but do me true service, undergo those employments, wherein I should have cause to use thee, with a serious industry,—that is, what villany so'er I bid thee do, to perform it, directly and truly,—I would think thee an honest man: thou should'st neither want my means for thy relief, nor my voice for thy preferment.

Pis. Well, my good lord.

Clo. Wilt thou serve me? For since patiently and constantly thou hast stuck to the bare fortune of that beggar Posthumus, thou canst not in the course of gratitude but be a diligent follower of mine. Wilt thou serve me?

Pis. Sir, I will.

Clo. Give me thy hand, here's my purse. Hast thou any of thy late master's garments in thy possession?

Pis. I have, my lord, at my lodging, the same suit he wore when he took leave of my lady and mistress.

Clo. The first service thou dost me, fetch that suit hither: let it be thy first service; go.

Pis. I shall, my lord. [Exit.]

Clo. Meet thee at Milford-Haven:—I forgot to ask him one thing; I'll remember't anon:—Even there thou villain, Posthumus, wilt I kill thee.—I would these garments were come. She said upon a time, (the bitterness of it I now belch from my heart,) that she held the very garment of Posthumus in more respect than my noble and natural person, together with the adornment of my qualities. With that suit upon my back, wilt I ravish her: First kill him, and in her eyes; there shall she see my valour, which will then be a torment to her contempt. He on the ground, my speech of insultment ended on his dead body,—and when my lust hath din'd, (which, as I say, to vex her, I will execute in the clothes that she so praised,) to the court I'll knock her back, foot her home again. She hath despised me rejoicingly, and I'll be merry in my revenge.

Re-enter PISANIO, with the Clothes.

Be those the garments?

Pis. Ay, my noble lord.

Clo. How long is't since she went to Milford-Haven?

Pis. She can scarce be there yet.

Clo. Bring this apparel to my chamber; that is the second thing that I have commanded thee, the third is, that thou shalt be a voluntary mute to my design. Be but duteous, and true preferment shall tender itself to thee.—My revenge is now at Milford; 'Would I had wings to follow it!—Come, and be true. [Exit.]

Pis. Thou biddest me to my loss: for, true to thee,

Were to prove false: which I will never be, To him that is most true. To Milford go, And find not her whom thou pursu'st. Flow, flow, [speed] You heavenly blessings, on her! This fool's Be cross'd with slowness; labour be his need! [Exit.]

SCENE VI.—Before the Cave of BELARIUS.

Enter IMOGEN, in Boy's Clothes.

Imo. I see a man's life is a tedious one: I have tir'd myself; and for two nights together Have made the ground my bed. I should be sick,

But that my resolution helps me.—Milford, When from the mountain-top Pisanio show'd thee, Thou wast within a ken: O Jove! I think Foundations fly the wretched: such, I mean, Where they should be reliev'd. Two beggars told me,

I could not miss my way: Will poor folks lie,

That have afflictions on them; knowing 'tis A punishment or trial? Yes; no wonder, When rich ones scarce tell true; To lapse in fulness Is sorer, than to lie for need; and falsehood Is worse in kings than beggars.—My dear lord! Thou art one o'the false ones: Now I think on thee,

My hunger's gone; but even before, I was At point to sink for food.—But what is this? Here is a path to it: 'Tis some savage hold: I were best not call; I dare not call: yet famine,

Ere clean it o'erthrow nature, makes it valiant. Plenty and peace breeds cowards; hardness ever

Of hardness is mother.—Ho! who's here? If any thing that's civil, speak; if savage, Take, or lend.—Ho!—No answer? then I'll enter.

Best draw my sword; and if mine enemy But fear the sword like me, he'll scarcely look Such a foe, good heavens! [You't.]

[She goes into the Cave.]

Enter BELARIUS, GUIDERIUS, and ARVIRAGUS.

Bcl. You, Polydore, have prov'd best woodman,* and

Are master of the feast: Cadwal and I Will play the cook and servant; 'tis our match: The sweat of industry would dry and die, But for the end it works to. Come; our stomachs Will make what's homely, savoury: Weariness Can snore upon the flint, when restive sloth Finds the down pillow hard.—Now, peace be Poor house, that keep'st thyself! [Here,]

Gul. I am thoroughly weary.

Art. I am weak with toil, yet strong in appetite.

Gul. There's cold meat i'the cave; we'll browse on that,

Whilst what we have kill'd be cook'd.

Bcl. Stay; come not in: [Looking in.]

But that it eats our victuals, I should think Here were a fairy.

Gul. What's the matter, Sir?

Bcl. By Jupiter, an angel or, if not, An earthly paragon!—Behold divineness No elder than a boy!

Enter IMOGEN.

Imo. Good masters, harm me not: Before I enter'd here, I call'd; and thought To have begg'd, or bought, what I have took: Good troth,

I have stolen nought; nor would not, though I had found [uneat:]

Gold strew'd o'the floor. Here's money for my I would have left it on the board, so soon

As I had made my meal; and parted With prayers for the provider.

Gul. Money, youth?

Art. All gold and silver rather turn to dirt! As 'tis no better reckon'd, but of those Who worship duty gods.

Imo. I see you are angry: Know, if you kill me for my fault, I should Have died, had I not made it.

Bcl. Whither bound?

Imo. To Milford-Haven, Sir.

Bcl. What is your name?

Imo. Fidele, Sir: I have a kinsman, who Is bound for Italy: he embark'd at Milford; To whom being going, almost spent with hunger, I am fallen in'this offence.

Bcl. Pr'ythee, fair youth, Think us no churls; nor measure our good minds [He'd:]

By this rude place we live in. Well encount' 'Tis almost night: you shall have better cheer Ere you depart; and thanks to stay and eat Boys, bid him welcome. [It.—]

* Best hunter. † Agreement. ‡ In, for into.

Gai. Were you a woman, youth, [honesty, I should woo hard, but be your groom.—In I bid for you, as I'd buy.

Arv. I'll make't my comfort,
He is a man; I'll love him as my brother:—
And such a welcome as I'd give to him,
After long absence, such as your's:—Most welcome!

Be sprightly, for you fall 'mongst friends.

Imo. 'Mongst friends!

If brothers!—'Would it had been so, that they Had been my father's sons! then had my prize
Been less; and so more equal ballasting
To thee, Posthumus. [Aside.

Bel. He wrings at some distress.

Gai. 'Would, I could free't!

Arv. Or I; whate'er it be,

What pain it cost, what danger! Gods!

Bel. Hark, boys. [H'spering.

Imo. Great men,

That had a court no bigger than this cave,
That did attend themselves, and had the virtue Which their own conscience seal'd them, (laying by

That nothing gift of differing* multitudes,)
Could not out-peer these twain. Pardon me,
gods!

I'd change my sex to be companion with them,
Since Leonatus's false.

Bel. It shall be so:

Boys, we'll go dress our hunt.—Fair youth,
come in; [supp'd,

Discourse is heavy, fasting; when we have
We'll mannerly demand thee of thy story,
So far as thou wilt speak it.

Gai. Pray, draw near.

Arv. The night to the owl, and morn to the lark, less welcome.

Imo. Thanks, Sir.

Arv. I pray, draw near. [Exit.

SCENE VII.—Rome.

Enter two SENATORS and TRIBUNES.

1 Sen. This is the tenour of the emperor's writ;

That since the common men are now in action
'Gainst the Pannonians and Dalmatians;
And that the legions now in Gallia are Full weak to undertake our wars against
The fallen-off Britons; that we do incite
The gentry to this business: He creates
Lucius pro-consul: and to you the tribunes,
For this immediate levy, he commands
His absolute commission. Long live Cesar!

Tri. Is Lucius general of the forces?

2 Sen. Ay.

Tri. Remaining now in Gallia?

1 Sen. With those legions

Which I have spoke of, whereunto your levy Must be suppliant: The words of your commission

Will tie you to the numbers, and the time
Of their despatch.

Tri. We will discharge our duty. [Exit

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Forest, near the Cave.

Enter CLOTEN.

Clo. I am near to the place where they should meet, if Pisanio have mapped it truly.
How fit his garments serve me! Why should his mistress, who was made by him that made the tailor, not be fit too? the rather (saying reverence of the word) for 'tis said, a woman's stomach comes by fits. Therein I must play the workman. I dare speak it to myself, (for it is not vain glory, for a man and his glass to conter; in his own chamber, I mean,) the lines of my body are as well drawn as his; no less young, more strong, not beneath him in fortunes, beyond him in the advantage of the time, above him in birth, alike conversant in general services, and more remarkable in single oppositions;* yet this imperseverant thing loves him in my despite. What mortality is! Posthumus, thy head, which is now growing upon thy shoulders, shall within this hour be off; thy mistress enforced; thy garments cut to pieces before thy face: and all this done, spurn her home to her father; who may, haply, be a little angry for my so rough usage; but my mother, having power of his testiness, shall turn all into my commendations. My horse is tied up safe:

Out, sword, and to a sore purpose! Fortune, put them into my hand! This is the very description of their meeting-place; and the fellow dares not deceive me. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Before the Cave.

Enter, from the Cave, RELARIUS, GUIDERIUS,
ARVACUS, and IMOGEN.

Bel. You are not well: [To IMOGEN.] remain
here in the cave;

We'll come to you after hunting.

Arv. Brother, stay here: [To IMOGEN
Are we not brothers?

Imo. So man and man should be;

But clay and clay differs in dignity,
Whose dust is both alike. I am very sick.

Gai. Go you to hunting, I'll abide with him.

Imo. So sick I am not,—yet I am not well.

But not so citizen a wanton, as
To seem to die, ere sick: So please you I ave me; Stuck to your journal† course: the breach of custom

Is breach of all. I am ill; but your being by me
Cannot amend me: Society is no comfort
To one not sociable: I'm not very sick, [here:
Since I can reason of it. Pray you, trust me,
I'll rob none but myself; and let me die,
stealing so poorly.

Gai. I love thee; I have spoke it:

How much the quantity, the weight as much,
As I do love my father.

Bel. What I how? how?

Arv. If it be sin to say so, Sir, I yoke me
In my good brother's fault: I know not why
I love this youth; and I have heard you say, Love's reason's without reason; the bird at
door,

And a demand who is't shall die, I'd say

My father, not this youth.

Bel. O noble strain!

O worthiness of nature! breed of greatness!

Cowards father cowards, and base things are base:

Nature hath meal and bran: contempt and
grace.

I am not their father; yet who this should be,
Doth miracle itself, lov'd before me.— [Aside.
'Tis the ninth hour of the morn.

Arv. Brother, farewell.

Imo. I wish ye sport.

Arv. You health.—So please you, Sir.

Imo. [Aside.] These are kind creatures.
Gods, what lies I have heard!

Our courtiers say, all's savage but at court:

Experience, oh! thou disprov'st report!

The imperious; seas breed monsters; for the dish,

Poor tributary rivers as sweet fish.

I am sick still; heart-sick:—Pisanio,

I'll now taste of thy drug.

Gai. I could not stir him:

He said he was gentle, ‡ but unfortunate;

Dishonestly afflicted, but yet honest.

Arv. Thus did he answer me: yet said here-
I might know more. [Enter

* Unto-day.

† I e. Because.

* In single combat.

† Imperial.

‡ Keep your daily course.

§ Well-born.

Bcl. To the field, to the field :—
We'll leave you for this time ; go in, and rest.

Arr. We'll not be long away.

Bcl. Pray, be not sick,
For you must be our housewife.

Imo. Well, or ill,

I am bound to you.

Bcl. And so shalt be ever. [Exit IMOGEN.
This youth, howe'er distress'd, appears he hath Good ancestors. [had

Arr. How angel-like he sings !

Gui. But his neat cookery : He cut our roots in characters ;

And sauc'd our broths, as Juno had been sick,
And he her dieter.

Arr. Nobly he yokes

A smiling with a sigh ; as if the sigh
Was that it was, for not being such a smile ;
The smile mocking the sigh, that it would fly
From so divine a temple, to commix
With winds that sailors rail at.

Gui. I do note,

That grief and patience, rooted in him both,
Mingle their spurs * together.

Arr. Grow, patience !

And let the sinking elder, grief, untwine
His perishing root, with the increasing vine !

Bcl. It is great morn'ing. Come ; away.—
Who's there ?

Enter CLOTEN.

Clo. I cannot find those runagates ; that villains knock'd me :—I am falut. [laid

Bcl. Those runagates !

Means he not us ? I partly know him ; 'tis Cloten, the son o'the queen. I fear some ambush.

I saw him not these many years, and yet
I know 'tis he :—We are held as outlaws :—
Hence.

Gui. He is but one : You and my brother
search

What companies are near : pray you, away ;
Let me alone with him.

[Exit BELARIUS and ARRACUS.

Clo. Soft ! What are you
That fly me thus ? some villain mountaineers ?
I have heard of such.—What slave art thou !

Gui. A thing
More slavish did I ne'er, than answering
A slave, without a knock.

Clo. Thou art a robber,
A law-breaker, a villain : Yield thee, thief.

Gui. To who ? to thee ? What art thou ? Have not I

An arm as big as thine ? a heart as big ?
Thy words, I grant, are bigger ; for I wear not My dagger in my mouth. Say, what thou art ;
Why I should yield to thee ?

Clo. Thou villain base,
Know'st me not by my clothes ?

Gui. No, nor thy tailor, rascal,
Who is thy grandfather : he made those clothes,
Which, as it seems make thee.

Clo. Thou precious varlet,
My tailor made them not.

Gui. Hence then, and thank [fool :
The man that gave them thee. Thou art some
I am loath to beat thee.

Clo. Thou injurious thief,
Hear but my name, and tremble.

Gui. What's thy name ?

Clo. Cloten, thou villain.

Gui. Cloten, thou double villain, be thy name ; [spider,

I cannot tremble at it ; were't toad, or adder,
'Twould move me sooner.

Clo. To thy further fear,
Nay, to thy mere confusion, thou shalt know
I'm son to the queen.

Gui. I'm sorry for't ; not seeming
So worthy as thy birth.

Clo. Art not afraid ?

Gui. Those that I reverence those I fear ;
the wise :

At fools I laugh, not fear them.

Clo. Die the death :

When I have slain thee with my proper hand,
I'll follow those that even now fled hence,
And on the gates of Lud's town set your heads :
Yield, rustic mountaineer. [Exeunt, fighting.

Enter BELARIUS and ARRACUS.

Bcl. No company's abroad.

Arr. None in the world : You did mistake him, sure.

Bcl. I cannot tell : Long is it since I saw him, [favour "
But time hath nothing blur'd those lines of
Which then he wore ; the snatches in his voice,
And burst of speaking, were as his : I am absolute,

'Twas very Cloten.

Arr. In this place we left them :

I wish my brother make good time with him,
You say he is so fell.

Bcl. Being scarce made up,

I mean, to man, he had not apprehension
Of roaring terrors ; for the effect of judgment
Is oft the cause of fear : But see, thy brother.

Re-enter GUIDERIUS, with CLOTEN'S Head.

Gui. This Cloten was a fool ; an empty purse,
There was no money in't : not Hercules
Could have knock'd out his brains, for he had
none :

Yet I not doing this, the fool had borne
My head, as I do his.

Bcl. What hast thou done ?

Gui. I am perfect, & what : cut off one Cloten's
head,

Son to the queen, after his own report ;
Who call'd me traitor, mountaineer ; and swore,
With his own single hand he'd take us in ;
Displace our heads, where (thank the gods !) they grow,

And set them on Lud's town.

Bcl. We are all nude.

Gui. Why, worthy father, what have we to lose,

But, that he swore, to take our lives ? The law Protects not us : Then, why should we be tender,

To let an arrogant piece of flesh threat us :
Play judge, and executioner, all himself ;
For $ we do fear the law ? What company
Discover you abroad ?

Bcl. No single soul.

Can we set eye on, but, in all safe reason,
He must have some attendants. Though his humour

Was nothing but mutation ; || ay, and that
From one bad thing to worse ; not frenzy, not Absolute madness could so far have rav'd
To bring him here alone : Although, perhaps,
It may be heard at court, that such as we
Cave here, hunt here, are outlaws, and in time
May make some stronger head : the which he hearing,

(As it is like him,) might break out, and swear
He'd fetch us in ; yet is't not probable
To come alone, either he so undertaking,
Or they so suffering : then on the ground we
If we do fear this body hath a tail [fear
More perilous than the head.

Arr. Let ordinance

Come as the gods foresay it : howso'er,
My brother hath done well.

Bcl. I had no mind

To hunt this day : the boy Fidele's sickness
Did make my way long forth. ¶

Gui. With his own sword, [fear
Which he did wave against my throat, I have
His head from him : I'll throw't into the creek

* Countenance. † I am well-informed what.
‡ Conquer, subdue. § Because.
|| Change, alteration. ¶ Did make my walk tedious.

Behind our rock, and let it to the sea,
And tell the fishes, he's the queen's son, Cloten:
That's all I reck. [Exit.]

Bel. I fear 'twill be reveng'd:
'Would, Polydore, thou had'st not don't!
though valour
Becomes thee well enough.

Arr. 'Would I had don't,
So the revenge alone pursued me!—Polydore,
I love thee brotherly; but envy much,
Thou hast robb'd me of this deed: I would revenges,
That possible strength might meet, would seek us through.

And put us to our answer.

Bel. Well, 'tis done:—
We'll hunt no more to-day, nor seek for danger
Where there's no profit. I prythee to our rock;
You and Fidele play the cooks: I'll stay
Till hasty Polydore return, and bring him
To dinner presently.

Arr. Poor sick Fidele!
I'll willingly to him: To gain + his colour,
I'd let a parish of such Cloten's blood,
And praise myself for charity. [Exit.]

Bel. O thou goddess,
Thou divine Nature, how thyself thou blazon'st
In these two princely boys! They are as gentle
As zephyrs, blowing below the violet,
Not wagging his sweet head: and yet as rough,
Their royal blood enchauf'd, as the rud'at wind,
That by the top doth take the mountain pine,
And make him stoop to the vale. 'Tis wonderful,

That an invisible instinct should frame them
To royalty unlearn'd; honour untaught;
Civility not seen from other; valour,
That wildly grows in them, but yields a crop
As if it had been sow'd! Yet still it's strange
What Cloten's being here to us portends;
Or what his death will bring us.

Re-enter GUIDERICS.

Gui. Where's my brother?
I have sent Cloten's clotpoll down the stream,
In embassy to his mother; his body's hostage
For his return. [Solemn Music.]

Bel. My ingenious instrument!
Hark, Polydore, it sounds! But what occasion
Hath Cadwal now to give it motion? Hark!

Gui. Is he at home?

Bel. He went hence even now.

Gui. What does he mean? since death of my dear'st mother

It did not speak before. All solemn things
Should answer solemn accidents. The matter?
Triumphs for nothing, and lamenting toys;
Is jollity for apes, and grief for boys.
Is Cadwal mad?

Re-enter ARVIRAGUS, bearing IMOGEN, as dead in his arms.

Bel. Look, here he comes,
And brings the dire occasion in his arms,
Of what we blame him for!

Arr. The bird is dead,
That we have made so much on. I had rather
Have skip'd from sixteen years of age to sixty,
To have turn'd my leaping time into a crutch,
Than have seen this.

Gui. O sweetest, fairest thy!
My brother wears thee not the one half so well,
As when thou grew'st thyself.

Bel. O melancholy!
Who ever yet could sound thy bottom? And
The ooze, to show what coast thy sluggish
care;
Might easiliest harbour in?—Thou blessed thing!
I know what man thou might'st have made!
but I,
Thou didst a most rare boy of melancholy!—
How found you him?

* Care.

† Regret, vexation.

‡ A slow-sailing unwieldy vessel.

Arr. Stark,* as you see:

Thus smiling, as some fly had tickled slumber,
Not as death's dart, being laugh'd at: his right cheek

Reposing on a cushion.

Gui. Where?

Arr. O'the floor:

His arms thus leagu'd: I thought he slept; and put

My clouted brogues† from off my feet, whose rudeness

Answer'd my steps too loud.

Gui. Why, he but sleeps:

If he be gone, he'll make his grave a bed;
With female fairies will his tomb be haunted,
And worms will not come to thee.

Arr. With fairest flowers,
Whilst summer lasts, and I live here, Fidele,
I'll sweeten thy sad grave: Thou shalt not lack
The flower that's like thy face, pale primrose;
nor

The azur'd hare-bell, like thy veins; no, nor
The leaf of eglantine, whom not to slander,
Out-sweeten'd not thy breath: the ruddock;
would,

With charitable bill (O bill, sore-shaming
Those rich-left heirs, that let their fathers lie
Without a monument!) bring thee all this;
Yes, and furr'd moss besides, when flowers are
none

To winter-ground § thy corse.

Gui. Prythee, have done;
And do not play in wench-like words with that
Which is so serious. Let us bury him,
And not protract with admiration what
Is now due debt.—To the grave.

Arr. Say, where shall's lay him?

Gui. By good Euriphile, our mother.

Arr. Be't so:

And let us, Polydore, though now our voices
Have got the mannish crack, sing him to the ground,

As once our mother; use like note and words,
Save that Euriphile must be Fidele.

Gui. Cadwal,
I cannot sing: I'll weep, and word it with thee:
For notes of sorrow, out of tune, are worse
Than priests and fauns that lie.

Arr. We'll speak it then.

Bel. Great griefs, I see, medicine the less: for Cloten

Is quite forgot. He was a queen's son, boys:
And, though he came our enemy, remember,
He was paid‡ for that: Though mean and mighty rotting

Together have our dust; yet reverence,
(That angel of the world,) doth make distinction Of place 'tween high and low. Our foe was princely;

And though you took his life, as being our foe,
Yet bury him as a prince.

Gui. Pray you, fetch him hither.

Therites' body is as good as Ajax,
When neither are alive.

Arr. If you'll go fetch him

We'll say our song the whilst.—Brother, begin.

Gui. Nay, Cadwal, we must lay his head to the east;

My father hath a reason for't.

Arr. 'Tis true.

Gui. Come on then, and remove him.

Arr. So,—begin.

SONG.

Gui. Fear no more the heat o'the sun
Nor the furious winter's rages;
Thou thy worldly task hast done,
Home art gone, and to'ten thy wages:
Golden lads and girls all must,
As chimney-sweepers, come to dust.

* Self. † Shoes plated with iron.
‡ The red-cross. § Probably a corrupt reading, for, wither round thy corse. † Punished.

Arv. Fear no more the frown o'the great,
Thou art past the tyrant's stroke;
Care no more to clothe, and eat;
To thee the reed is as the oak;
The scythe, learning, physic, must
All follow this, and come to dust.

Gwi. Fear no more the lightning-flash,
Arv. Nor the all-dreaded thunder-stone;
Gwi. Fear not slander, censure * rash;
Arv. Thou hast finish'd joy and moan:
Both. All lovers young, all lovers must Consign † to thee and come to dust.

Gwi. No exorciser harm thee!
Arv. Nor witchcraft charm thee.
Gwi. Ghost unlaid forbear thee!
Arv. Nothing ill come near thee!
Both. Quiet consummation have;
And renowned be thy grave!

Re-enter BELARIUS, with the Body of CLOTEN.

Gwi. We have done our obsequies; Come, lay him down.

Bel. Here's a few flowers, but about midnight more: [light,
The herbs, that have on them cold dew o'the
Are strewings fit't for graves.—Upon their faces:—

You were as flowers, now wither'd: even so
These herb'lets shall, which ☉ upon you strew.—

Come on, away: apart upon our knees.
The ground that gave them first, has them
again;

Their pleasures here are past, so is their pain.
[Exit BELARIUS, GUIDERIUS, and ARVIRAGUS.

Imo. [Awaking.] Yes, Sir, to Milford-Haven;
Which is the way!—

I thank you.—By you bush!—Pray, how far
thither?

'Ods pittikins!—can it be six miles yet?
I have gone all night:—Faith, I'll lie down and sleep.

But, soft! no bedfellow:—O gods and goddeases!

[Seeing the Body.

These flowers are like the pleasures of the
world;

This bloody man, the care on't.—I hope, I dream:

For, so, I thought I was a cave-keeper,
And cook to honest creatures: But 'tis not so;
'Twas but a bolt of nothing, shot at nothing,
Which the brain makes of fumes: Our very
eyes

Are sometimes like our judgments, blind. Good faith,

I tremble still with fear: But if there be
Yet left in heaven as small a drop of pity
As a wren's eye, fear'd gods, a part of it!
The dream's here still: even when I wake, it is Without me as within me; not imagin'd, felt.
A headless man!—The garments of Posthumus!

I know the shape of his leg: this is his hand;
His foot Mercurial; his Martial thigh;
The brawns of Hercules; but his Jovial face—
Murder in heaven?—How?—'Tis gone.—Pisanio,
All curses madd'd Hecuba gave the Greeks,
And mine to boot, be darted on thee! Thou,
Conspir'd with that irreligious † devil, Cloten,
Hast here cut off my lord.—To write and read,
Be henceforth treacherous!—Damn'd Pisanio—
Hath with his forged letters, damn'd Pisanio—
From this most bravest vessel of the world
Struck the male-top!—O Posthumus! alas,
Where is thy head? where's that? Ah me!
where's that?

Pisanio might have kill'd thee at the heart,

And left this head on.—How should this be?
Pisanio?

'Tis he and Cloten: malice and lucre in them
Have laid this woe here. O 'tis pregnant, pregnant!

The drug he gave me, which, he said, was precious

And oordial to me, have I not found it Murderous to the senses? That confirms it
home:

This is Pisanio's deed, and Cloten's: O!—
Give colour to my pale cheek with thy blood,
That we the horrid may seem to those
Which chance to find us: O my lord, my lord!

Enter LUCIUS, a CAPTAIN, and other OFFI-CERS, and a SOUTHSAYER.

Cap. To them the legions garrison'd in Gallia,
After your will, have cross'd the sea attending.
You here at Milford-Haven, with your ships:
They are here in readiness.

Luc. But what from Rome?
Cap. The senate hath stirr'd up the confiners,
And gentlemen of Italy; most willing spirits,
That promise noble service: and they come
Under the conduct of bold Iachimo,
Sienuna's brother.

Luc. When expect you them?
Cap. With the next benefit o'the wind.

Luc. This forwardness
Makes our hopes fair. Command our present numbers [Sir,

Be muster'd: bid the captains look to't.—Now,
What have you dream'd, of late, of this war's purpose?

Sooth. Last night the very gods show'd me a vision:

(I fast, and pray'd for their intelligence,) [Thus:—

I saw Jove's bird, the Roman eagle, wing'd
From the spongy south to this part of the west,
There vanish'd in the sunbeams: which portends,

(Unless my sins abuse my divination,) [Success to the Roman host.

Luc. Dream often so,
And never false.—Soft, ho! what trunk is here, Without his top? The ruin speaks, that some-
time

It was a worthy building.—How! a page!—
Or dead, or sleeping on him? But dead, rather:
For nature doth abhor to make his bed
With the defunct, or sleep upon the dead.—
Let's see the boy's face.

Cap. He is alive, my lord.

Luc. He'll then instruct us of this body.—
Young one,

Inform us of thy fortunes; for, it seems,
They crave to be demanded: Who is this,
Thou mak'st thy bloody pillow? Or who was he
That, otherwise than noble nature did, Hath alter'd that good picture? What's thy interest

In this sad wreck? How came it? Who is it?
What art thou?

Imo. I am nothing: or if not,
Nothing to be better. This was my mas-
A very valiant Briton, and a good, [Sir,

That here by mountaineers lies slain:—Alas!
There are no more such masters: I may wander
From east to occident, † cry out for service,

Try many, all good, serve truly, never Find such another master.

Luc. 'Luck, good youth!

Thou mov'st no less with thy complaining, than

Thy master in bleeding: Say his name, good friend.

Imo. Richard du Champ.—If I do him, [and do
No harm by it, though the gods hear, I dare [dare.

They'll pardon it.—Say you, Sir?

* Judgment. † Seal the same contract.
‡ This diminutive adjuration is derived from God's my pity. † An arrow. ‡ A face like Jove's. † Lawyers, licentious.

* Luc. 'Tis a ready, apposite conclusion.
† The west. ‡ Her fingers.

Luc. Thy name?

Imo. Fidele.

Luc. Thou dost approve thyself the very same:

Thy name well fits thy faith; thy faith, thy name.

Wilt take thy chance with me? I will not say, Thou shalt be so well master'd; but be sure, No less belov'd. The Roman emperor's letters, Sent by a consul to me, should not sooner Than thine own worth prefer thee: Go with me.

Imo. I'll follow, Sir. But first, an't please the gods,

I'll hide my master from the flies, as deep As these poor pickaxes * can dig; and when With wild wood-leaves and weeds I have strew'd his grave,

And on it said a century of prayers, Such as I can, twice o'er, I'll weep and sigh; And, leaving so his service, follow you, So please you entertain me.

Luc. Ay, good youth; And rather father thee, than master thee.— My friends, The boy hath taught us many duties: Let us Find out the prettiest daisied plot we can, And make him with our pikes and partizans A grave: Come, arm him.—Boy, he is pre- ferr'd

By thee to us; and he shall be interr'd, As soldiers can. Be cheerful; wipe thine eyes: Some falls are means the happier to arise. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—A Room in CYMBELINE'S Palace.

Enter CYMBELINE, LORDS, and PISANIO.

Cym. Again; and bring me word how 'tis with her.

A fever with the absence of her son; A madness, of which her life's in danger:—Heavens,

How deeply you at once do touch me! Imogen, The great part of my comfort, gone: my queen Upon a desperate bed; and in a time When fearful wars point at me, her son gone, So needful for this present: It strikes me, past

The hope of comfort.—But for thee, fellow, Who needs must know of her departure, and Dost seem so ignorant, we'll enforce it from thee

By a sharp torture.

Pis. Sir, my life is your's, I humbly set it at your will: But, for my mis- tress,

I nothing know where she remains, why gone, Nor when she purposes return. Beseech your highness,

Hold me your loyal servant.

1 Lord. Good my liege, The day that she was missing, he was here: I dare be bound he's true, and shall perform All parts of his subjection loyally.

For Cloten.— There wants no diligence in seeking him, And will no doubt, be found.

Cym. The time's troublesome: We'll slip you for a season; but our jealousy Does yet depend. [To PISANIO.]

1 Lord. So please your majesty, The Roman legions, all from Gallia drawn, Are landed on your coast with a supply Of Roman gentlemen, by the senate sent.

Cym. Now for the counsel of my son and queen:—

I am amaz'd with matter. †

1 Lord. Good my liege, Your preparation can affront ‡ no less Than what you hear of: come more, for more you're ready:

The want is, but to put those powers * in motion, That long to move. [Aloud,]

Cym. I thank you: Let's withdraw: And meet the time as it seeks us. We fear not What can from Italy annoy us; but We grieve at chances here.—Away: [Exeunt.]

Pis. I heard no letter from my master, since I wrote him, Imogen was slain: 'Tis strange: Nor hear I from my mistress, who did promise To yield me often tidings; Neither know I What is betid to Cloten; but remain Perplex'd in all. The heavens still must work: Wherein I am false, I am honest; not true, to be true.

These present wars shall find I love my country, Even to the note † o'the king, or I'll fall in them.

All other doubts, by time let them be clear'd: Fortune brings in some boats, that are not steer'd. [Exit.]

SCENE IV.—Before the Gate.

Enter BELARIUS, GUIDERICUS, and ANVIRAGUS.

Gui. The noise is round about us.

Bel. Let us from it.

Art. What pleasure, Sir, find we in life, to lock it

From action and adventure?

Gui. Nay, what hope Have we in hiding us? This way, the Romans Must or for Britons slay us, or receive us For barbarous and unnatural revells; ‡ During their use, and slay us after.

Bel. Sons, We'll higher to the mountains; there secure us. To the king's party there's no going; weakness Of Cloten's death (we being not known, not muster'd

Among the bands) may drive us to a render § Where we have liv'd; and so extort from us That which we have done, whose answer would be death

Drawn on with torture.

Gui. This is, Sir, a doubt, In such a time, nothing becoming you, Nor satisfying us.

Art. It is not likely, That when they hear the Roman horses neigh, Behold their quarter'd fires, have both their eyes And ears so cloy'd importantly as now, That they will waste their time upon our note, † To know from whence we are.

Bel. O I am known Of many in the army: many years, Though Cloten then but young, you see, not wore him

From my remembrance. And, besides, the king Hath not deserv'd my service, nor your loves; Who find in my exile the want of breeding, The certainty of this hard life; aye hopeless To have the courtesy your cradle promis'd, But to be still hot summer's tawlings, and The shrinking slaves of winter.

Gui. Than be so, Better to cause to be. Pray, Sir, to the army: I and my brother are not known; yourself, So out of thought, and thereto so o'ergrown, Cannot be question'd.

Art. By this sun that shines, I'll thither: What thing is it, that I never Did see man die? scarce ever look'd on blood, But that of coward hares, hot goats, and veni- son ‡

Never bestrid a horse, save one that had A rider like myself, who ne'er wore rowel Nor iron on his heel? I am asham'd To look upon the holy sun, to have The benefit of his blest'd beams remaining So long a poor unknown.

Gui. By heavens, I'll go:

* Her fingers. † Confounded by a variety of business. ‡ Encounter.

* Forces. † Notice. ‡ Revellers. § An account. † Noticing us.

If you will bless me, Sir, and give me leave,
I'll take the better care; but if you will not,
The hazard therefore due fall on me, by
The hands of Romans!

Arv. So say I; Amen.

Bcl. No reason I, since on your lives you set
So slight a valuation, should reserve
My crack'd one to more care. Have with you, boys:

If in your country wars you chance to die,
That is my bed too, lads, and there I'll lie:
Lead, lead.—The time seems long; their blood thinks scorn, [Aside.]
Till it fly out, and show them princes' born.

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A Field between the British and Roman Camps.

Enter POSTHUMUS, with a bloody Hand-kerchief.

Post. Yea, bloody cloth, I'll keep thee; for
I wish'd ^[ones]
Thou should'st be colour'd thus. You married if each of you would take this course, how many ^[selves]
Must murder wives much better than themselves for wrying* but a little!—O Pisanio!
Every good servant does not all commands:
No bond, but to do just ones.—Gods! if you should have ta'en vengeance on my faults, I never

Had liv'd to put on † this: so had you sav'd
The noble Imogen to repent; and struck Me wretch, more worth your vengeance. But,
alack,

You snatch some hence for little faults; that's
To have them fall no more: you some permit
To second ills with ills, each elder worse;
And make them dread it to the doer's thrill.
But Imogen is your own: Do your best wills,
And make me bless'd to obey!—I am brought
hither

Among the Italian gentry, and to fight Against my lady's kingdom: 'Tis enough
That, Britain, I have kill'd thy mistress; peace!
I'll give no wound to thee. Therefore, good heavens,

Hear patiently my purpose: I'll disrobe me
Of these Italian weeds, and suit myself
As does a Briton peasant: so I'll fight Against the part I come in; so I'll die
For thee, O Imogen, even for whom my life
Is, every breath, a death: and thus, unknown,
Pitied nor hated, to the face of peril
Myself I'll dedicate. Let me make men know
More valour in me, than my habits show.
Gods, put the strength of the Leonati in me!
To shame the guise of the world, I will begin
The fashion, less without, and more within.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter at one side, LUCIUS, IACHIMO, and the Roman Army; at the other side, the British Army; LEONATUS POSTHUMUS following it, like a poor Soldier. They march over, and go out. Alarums. Then enter again in skirmish, IACHIMO, and POSTHUMUS: he vanquisheth and disarmeth IACHIMO, and then leaves him.

Jach. This heaviness and guilt within my bosom

Takes off my manhood: I have belied a lady,
The princess of this country and the air on't Revengefully enfeebles me: Or could this earl, †
A very drudge of nature's, have subdu'd me,

* Deviating from the right way. † Jachite, instigate.
‡ Clown.

In my profession? Knighthoods and honours borne

As I wear mine, are titles but of scorn.

If that thy gentry, Britain, go before

This lout, as he exceeds our lords, the odds

Is, that we scarce are men, and you are gods.

[Exit.]

The Battle continues; the Britons fly; CYMBELINE is taken; then enter to his rescue, BELARIUS, GUIDERIUS, and AN-VIRAGUS.

Bcl. Stand, stand! We have the advantage of the ground;

The lane is guarded, nothing routs us, but
The villany of our fears.

Gui. Arv. Stand, stand, and fight!

*Enter POSTHUMUS, and seconds the Britons:
They rescue CYMBELINE, and exeunt. Then, enter LUCIUS, IACHIMO, and IMOGEN.*

Luc. Away, boy, from the troops, and save
thyself:

For friends kill friends, and the disorder's such
As war were hood-wink'd.

Jach. 'Tis their fresh supplies.

Luc. It is a day turn'd strangely: or betimes
Let's re-enforce or fly. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Another Part of the Field.

Enter POSTHUMUS and a British Lord.

Lord. Cam'st thou from where they made the stand?

Post. I did:

Though you, it seems, come from the fliers.

Lord. I did.

Post. No blame be to you, Sir: for all was lost

But that the heavens fought: The king him- self
Of his wings destitute, the army broken,
And but the backs of Britons seen, all flying
Through a strait lane; the enemy full-heated, Lolling the tongue with slaughtering, having
work

More plentiful than tools to do't, struck down
Some mortally, some slightly touch'd, some falling. ^[damm'd]

Merely through fear: that the strat pass was
With dead men, hurt behind, and cowards living
To die with lengthen'd shame.

Lord. Where was this lane?

Post. Close by the battle, ditch'd, and wall'd with turf;

Which gave advantage to an ancient soldier,—
An honest one, I warrant; who deserved
So long a breeding, as his white beard came to,
In doing this for his country;—athwart the lane,

He with two striplings, (lads more like to run
The country base, † than to commit such slaughter;

With faces fit for masks, or rather fairer
Than those for preservation cas'd, or shame,)
Made good the passage; cry'd to those that fled,
*Our Britain's hearts die flying, not our men:
To darkness fleet, souls that fly backwards!*

Stand;

Or we are Romans, and will give you that Like beasts, which you shun bestly; and may save,

But to look back in frown: stand, stand,—

These three,

Three thousand confident, in act as many,
(For three performers are the file, when all
The rest do nothing,) with this word, stand,
stand,

Accommodat'd by the place, more charming,
With their own nobleness, (which could have turn'd

A distaff to a lance,) gilded pale looks,
Part, shame, part, spirit renew'd; that some,
turn'd coward

* Blocked up.

† A country game called prison-bar, vulgarly prison-law.

But by example (O a sin in war, Damu'd in the first beginners!) 'gan to look
The way that they did, and to grim like lions
Upon the pikes o' the hunters. Then began
A stop i' the chasser, a retire; anon,
A rout, confusion thick: Forthwith they fly
Chickens, the way which they stoop'd eagles;
slaves, [cowards
The strides they victors made: and now our (Like fragments in hard voyages,) became
The life o' the need; having found the back-door open [wound!
Of the unguarded hearts, Heavens, how they
Some, slain before; some, dying; some, their
friends

O'erborne i' the former wave: ten, chas'd by one.
Are now each one the slaughter-man of twenty:
Those, that would die or ere resist, are grown
The mortal bugs * o' the field.

Lord. This was strange chance:
A narrow lane! an old man, and two boys!

Post. Nay, do not wonder at it: You are made

Rather to wonder at the things you hear,
Than to work any. Will you rhyme upon't,
And vent it for a mockery? Here is one:
Two boys, an old man, twice a boy, a lane,
Preserv'd the Britons, was the Romans' bane.

Lord. Nay, be not angry, Sir.

Post. 'Lack, to what end?
Who dares not stand his foe, I'll be his friend:
For if he'll do, as he is made to do,
I know, he'll quickly fly my friendship too.
You have put me into rhyme.

Lord. Farewell, you are angry. [Exit.

Post. Still going?—This is a lord! O noble misery!

To be the i' the field, and ask, what news, of me!
To-day, how many would have given their honours

To have sav'd their carcasses? took heel to do't,
And yet died too! I, in mine own woe charm'd,
Could not find death, where I did hear him
groan;

Nor feel him where he struck: Being an ugly monster. [beds,

'Tis strange, he hides him in fresh cups, soft Sweet words; or hath more ministers than we
That draw his knives i' the war.—Well, I will
find him:

For being now a favourite to the Roman,
No more a Briton, I have resum'd again
The part I came in: Fight I will no more,
But yield me to the veriest hind, that shall Once touch my shoulder. Great the slaughter is Here made by the Roman; great the answer be Britons must take; for me my ransom's death;
On either side I come to spend my breath,
Which neither here I'll keep, nor bear again,
But end it by some means for Imogen.

Enter two British CAPTAINS, and Soldiers.

1 Cap. Great Jupiter be prais'd! Lucius is taken; [angels.

'Tis thought, the old man and his sons were 2 Cap. There was a fourth man, in a silly
That gave the affront; with them. [habit,

1 Cap. So 'tis reported:
But none of them can be found.—Stand! who is
there?

Phst. A Roman;
Who had not now been drooping here, if se-
Had answer'd him. [counds

2 Cap. Lay hands on him; a dog!
A leg of Rome shall not return to tell What crows have peck'd them here: He brags his service

As if he were of note: bring him to the king.

Enter CYMBELINE, attended; BELARIUS, GUI-DELIUS, ARVIAQUO, PISANIO, and ROMAN
CAPTIVES. The CAPTAINS present POSTHU-

MUS to CYMBELINE, who delivers him over to a JAILER: after which, all go out.

SCENE IV.—A Prison.

Enter POSTHUMUS, and two JAILERS.

1 Jail. You shall not now be stolen, you have looks upon you;
So graze as you find pasture.

2 Jail. Ay, or a stomach. [Exit two JAILERS.
Post. Most welcome, bondage! for thou art a way,

I think to liberty: Yet am I better Than one that's sick o' the gout: since he had rather

Groan so in perpetuity, than be cur'd
By the sure physician, death; who is the key
To unbar these locks. My conscience! thou art fetter'd

More than my shanks and wrists: You good gods, give me

The penitent instrument, to pick that bolt,
Then, free for ever! Is't enough, I am sorry?
So children temporal fathers do appease;
Gods are more full of mercy. Must I repent?
I cannot do it better than in gyves, *

Desir'd, more than constrain'd: to satisfy,
If of my freedom 'tis the main part, take
No stricter render of me, than my all.

I know you are more clement than vile men
Who of their broken debtors take a third,
A sixth, a tenth, letting them thrive again
On their abatement; that's not my desire:
For Imogen's dear life, take mine; and though
'Tis not so dear, yet 'tis a life, you cou'd it:
'Tween man and man, they weigh not every stamp;

Though light, take pieces for the figure's sake:
You rather mine, bring yours: And so great powers,

If you will take this audit, take this life,
And cancel these cold bonds. O Imogen!
I'll speak to thee in silence. [He sleeps.

Solemn music.† Enter, as an Apparition,
SICILIUS LEONATUS, Father to POSTHUMUS, an old Man, attired like a Warrior, leading in his hand an ancient Matron, his Wife, and Mother to POSTHUMUS, with music before them. Then, after other music, follow the two young LEONATI, Brothers to POSTHUMUS, with Wounds, as they died in the Wars. They circle POSTHUMUS round, as he lies sleeping.

Sici. No more, thou thunder master show
Thy spite on mortal flies:
With Mars fall out, with Juno chide,
That thy adulteries
Rates and revenges.

Hath my poor boy done aught but well,
Whose face I never saw?
I died, whilst in the womb he stay'd
Attending Nature's law.

Whose father then (as men report,
Thou orphans' father art,)
Thou should'st have been, and shielded him
From this earth-vexing smart.

Moth. Lucina lent not me her aid,
But took me in my throes;
That from me was Posthumus ript,
Came crying 'mongst his foes,
A thing of pity!

Sici. Great nature, like his ancestry,
Moulded the stuff so fair,
That he deserv'd the praise o' the world
As great Sicilius' heir.

1 Bro. When once he was mature for man,
In Britain where was he

* Fetter.

† Shakespeare, who has conducted this fifth act with such matchless skill, could never have interrupted the fable by this contemptible nonsense: the unjustifiable interpolation of some monstrous blockhead.

That could stand up his parallel;

Or fruitful object be

In eye of Imogen, that best

Could deem his dignity?

Moth. With marriage wherefore ^{was he} ^[mock'd]
To be exil'd and thrown

From Leonati's seat, and cast

From her his dearest one,

Sweet Imogen?

Sici. Why did you suffer Iachimo,

Slight thing of Italy,

To taint his nobler heart and brain

With needless jealousy;

And to become the geck * and scorn

O' the other's villany?

2 Bro. For this, from stiller seats we came,

Our parents, and us twain,

That, striking in our country's cause,

Fell bravely, and were slain;

Our fealty, and Tenantius' right,

With honour to maintain.

1 Bro. Like hardiment Posthumus hath

To Cymbeline perform'd?

Then Jupiter, thou king of gods,

Why hast thou thus adjourn'd

The graces for his merits due;

Being all to dolours turn'd?

Sici. Thy crystal window ope; look out;

No longer exercise,

Upon a valliant race, thy harsh

And potent injuries:

Moth. Since, Jupiter, our son is good,

Take off his miseries.

Sici. Peep through thy marble mansion; help!

Or we poor ghosts will cry

To the shining synod of the rest,

Against thy deity.

2 Bro. Help, Jupiter; or we appeal,

And from thy justice fly.

JUPITER descends in Thunder and Lightning, sitting upon an eagle; he throws a Thunder-bolt. The Ghosts fall on their knees.

Jup. No more, you petty spirits of region low,

Offend our hearing; hush!—How dare you

Accuse the thunderer, whose bolt you know,

Sky-planted, batters all rebelling coasts?

For shadows of Elysium, hence; and rest

Upon your never-withering banks of flowers:

Be not with mortal accidents oppress;

No care of yours! 'tis I, you know, 'tis ours.

Whom best I love, I cross; to make my gift,

The more delay'd, delighted. Be content;

Your loss shall soil our godhead will uplift:

His comforts thrive, his trials well are spent.

Our jovial star reign'd at his birth, and in

Our temple was he married.—Rise, and fade!

He shall be lord of lady Imogen,

And happier much by his affliction made.

This tablet lay upon his breast; wherein

Our pleasure his full fortune doth confine;

And so, away: no further with your din

Express impatience, lest you stir up mine.—

Mount, eagle, to my palace crystalline.

[Ascends.]

Sici. He came in thunder; his celestial

breath

Was sulphurous to smell: the holy eagle

Stoop'd as to foot us: his ascension is

More sweet than our bless'd fields: his royal

bird

Prunes the immortal wing, and cloyes his beak,

As when his god is pleas'd.

All. Thanks, Jupiter!

Sici. The marble pavement closes, he is enter'd

His radiant roof:—Away! and, to be blest,

Let us with care perform his great behest.

[Ghosts vanish.]

Post. [Waking.] Sleep, thou hast been a grandelire, and begot

A father to me: and thou hast created

A mother and two brothers: But (O scorn!)

Gone! they went hence so soon as they were born. ^[pend]

And so I am awake.—Poor wretches that de-

On greatness' favour, dream as I have done;

Wake, and find nothing.—But, alas, I swerve:

Many dream not to find, neither deserve,

And yet are steep'd in favours; so am I,

That have this golden chance, and know not why.

What furies haunt this ground? A book? O,

rare one!

Be not, as is our fangled world, a garment

Nobler than that it covers: let thy effects

So follow, to be most unlike our courtiers,

As good as promise.

[Reads.] When as a lion's whelp shall, to himself unknown, without seeking find,

and be embraced by a piece of tender air;

and when from a stately cedar shall be lopped branches, which, being dead many years, shall after revive, be jointed to the old stock, and freshly grow; then shall

Posthumus end his miseries, Britain be fortunate, and flourish in peace and plenty.

'Tis still a dream; or else such stuff as madmen

Tongue, and brain not: either both, or nothing:

Or senseless speaking, or a speaking such

As sense cannot untie. Be what it is,

The action of my life is like it, which

I'll keep, if but for sympathy.

Re-enter JAILERS.

Jail. Come, Sir, are you ready for death?

Post. Over-roasted rather: ready long ago.

Jail. Hanging is the word Sir, if you be ready for that, you are well cooked.

Post. So, if I prove a good repast to the spectators, the dish pays the shot.

Jail. A heavy reckoning for you, Sir: But the comfort is, you shall be called to no more payments, fear no more tavern bills: which are often the sadness of parting, as the procuring of mirth: you come in faint for want of meat, depart reeling with too much drink; sorry that you have paid too much, and sorry that you are paid too much; purse and brain both empty:

the brain the heavier for being too light, the purse too light, being drawn of heaviness: Oh!

of this contradiction you shall now be quit.—Oh!

of this charity of a penny cord! it sums up thousands in a trice: you have no true debtor and creditor but it; of what's past is, and to come,

the discharge:—Your neck, Sir, is pen, book,

and counters; so the acquaintance follows.

Post. I am merrier to die, than thou art to live.

Jail. Indeed, Sir, he that sleeps feels not the tooth-ache: But a man that were to sleep your sleep, and a hangman to help him to bed, I think he would change places with his officer:

for look you, Sir, you know not which way you shall go.

Post. Yes indeed do I, fellow.

Jail. Your death has eyes in's head then; I have not seen him so pictured: you must either be directed by some that take upon them to know; or take upon yourself that, which I am sure you do not know: or jump * the after-inquiry on your own peril: and how you shall speed in your own journey's end, I think you'll never return to tell one.

Post. I tell thee, fellow, there are none want eyes to direct them the way I am going, but such as wink, and will not use them.

Jail. What an infinite mock is this, that a man should have the best use of eyes, to see the way of blindness! I am sure, hanging's the way of winking.

Enter a MESSENGER.

Mess. Knock off his manacles; bring your prisoner to the king.

Post. Thou bringest good news—I am called to be made free.

Jail. I'll be hang'd then.

Post. Thou shalt be then freer than a jailer; no bolts for the dead.

[Exeunt POSTHUMUS and MESSENGER.
Jail. Unless a man would marry a gallowes, and beget young gibbets, I never saw one so prone. * Yet, on my conscience, there are verier knaves desire to live, for all he be a Roman: and there be some of them too, that die against their wills; so should I, if I were one. I would we were all of one mind, and one mind good; Oh! there were desolation of jailers, and gallowes! I speak against my present profit; but my wish hath a pretermittent in't.

SCENE V.—CYMBELINE'S TENT.

Enter CYMBELINE, BELARIUS, GUIDERIUS, ARVIRAGUS, PISANIO, Lords, Officers, and Attendants.

Cym. Stand by my side, you whom the gods have made Preservers of my throne. Woe is my heart, That the poor soldier, that so richly fought, Whose rags sham'd gilded arms, whose naked breast Stepp'd before target of proof, cannot be found: He shall be happy that can find him, if Our grace can make him so.

Ecl. I never saw Such noble fury in so poor a thing; Such precious deeds in one that promis'd nought But beggary and poor looks.

Cym. No tidings of him?
Pis. He hath been search'd among the dead and living, But no trace of him.

Cym. To my grief, I am The heir of his reward; which I will add To you the liver, heart and brain of Britain, [To BELARIUS, GUIDERIUS, and ARVIRAGUS. By whom, I grant, she lives; 'Tis now the time To ask of whence you are:—report it.

Bel. Sir, In Cambria are we born, and gentlemen: Further to boast, were neither true nor modest, Unless I add, we are honest.

Cym. Bow your knees: Arise my knights o'the battle: I create you Companions to our person, and will fit you With dignities becoming your estates.

Enter CORNELIUS and LADIES.
There's business in these faces:—Why so sadly Greet you our victory? You look like Romans, And not o'the court of Britain

Cor. Hail, great king! To sour your happiness, I must report The queen is dead.

Cym. Whom worse than a physician Would this report become? But I consider, By medicine life may be prolong'd, yet death Will seize the doctor too.—How ended she?

Cor. With horror, madly dying, like her life; Which, being cruel to the world, concluded Most cruel to herself. What she confess'd, I will report, so please you: These her women Can trip me if I err: who, with wet cheeks, Were present when she finish'd.

Cym. Prythee, say.
Cor. First she confess'd she never lov'd you; only Affected greatness got by you, not you: Married your royalty, was wife to your place; Abhor'd your person.

Cym. She alone new this.

And, but she spoke it dying, I would not Believe her lips in opening it. Proceed.
Cor. Your daughter, whom she bore in hand 'Tis love

With such integrity, she did confess Was as a scorpion to her sight; whose life, But that her sight prevented it, she had Ta'en off by poison.

Cym. O most delicate fiend! Who is't can delude a woman?—Is there more?

Cor. More, Sir, and worse. She did confess, she had

For you a mortal mineral; which, being took, Should by the minute feed on life, and, imbruing By inches waste you: In which time she purpos'd

By watching, weeping, tendance, kissing, to O'ercome you with her show; yes, and in time, (When she had fitted you with her craft,) to work

Her son into the adoption of the crown. But failing of her end by his strange absence, Grew shameless desperate: open'd, in despite Of heaven and men, her purposes; repented The evils she hatch'd were not effected; so, Despairing, died.

Cym. Heard you all this, her women?

Lady. We did so, please your highness.

Cym. Mine eyes

Were not in fault, for she was beautiful; Mine ears, that heard her flattery; nor my heart,

That thought her like her seeming; it had been vicious,

To have mistrusted her: yet, O my daughter! That it was folly in me, thou may'st say, And prove it in thy feeling. Heaven mend all!

Enter LUCIUS, IACHIMO, the SOUTHSAYER, and other Roman Prisoners, guarded; POSTHUMUS behind, and LUCIUS.

Thou com'st not, Caius, now for tribute; that The Britons have raz'd out, though with the loss

Of many a bold one; whose kinsmen have made suit, slaughter

That their good souls may be appeas'd with: Of you their captives, which ourself have So, think of your estate.

Luc. Consider, Sir, the chance of war: the day

Was your's by accident; had it gone with us, We should not, when the blood was cool, have threaten'd gods

Our prisoners with the sword. But since the Will have it thus, that nothing but our lives May be call'd ransom, let it come: suffereth, A Roman with a Roman's heart can suffer: Augustus lives to think on't: And so much

For my peculiar care. This one thing only I will entreat: My boy, a Briton born,

Let him be ransom'd; never master had A page so kind, so dutious, diligent,

So tender over his occasions, true, So feat, * so nurse-like: let his virtue join With my request, which, I'll make bold, your highness Cannot deny; he hath done no Briton harm. Though he have serv'd a Roman: save him, Sir, And spare no blood beside.

Cym. I have surely seen him:

His favour † is familiar to me.— Boy, thou hast look'd thyself into my grace, And art mine own.—I know not why, nor wherefore,

To say, live, boy: ne'er thank thy master: live: And ask of Cymbeline what boon thou wilt, Fitting my bounty, and thy state, I'll give it;

Yea, though thou do demand a prisoner, The noblest ta'en.

Imo. I humbly thank your highness.

Luc. I do not bid thee beg my life, good lad; And yet, I know, thou wilt.

* Forward.

† Target, shield.

* Dextrous.

† Countenance.

Imo. No, no : alack,
There's other work in hand : I see a thing
Bitter to me as death : your life, good master,
Must shun for itself.

Luc. The boy disdains me,
He leaves me, scorns me : Briefly die their joys,
That place them on the truth of girls and boys.—

Why stands he so perplex'd ?

Cym. What would'st thou, boy ?

I love thee more and more ; think more and more

What's best to ask. Know'st him thou look'st on ? I speak,

Wilt have him live ? Is he thy kin ? thy friend ?

Imo. He is a Roman ; no more kin to me,
Than I to your highness ; who, being born your Am something nearer. [vassal,

Cym. Wherefore ev'nt him so ?

Imo. I'll tell you, Sir, in private, if you please
To give me hearing.

Cym. Ay, with all my heart,

And lend my best attention. What's thy name ?

Imo. Fidele, Sir.

Cym. Thou art my good youth, my page ;
I'll be thy master : Walk with me ; speak freely.

[CYMBELINE and IMOGEN converse apart.

Bel. Is not this boy reviv'd from death ?

Art. One said another

Not more resembles : That sweet rosy lad,

Who died, and was Fidele :—What think you ?

Gut. The same dead thing alive.

Bel. Peace, peace ! see further ; he eyes us not, to fear ;

Creatures may be alike : were't he, I am sure
He would have spoke to us.

Gut. But we saw him dead.

Bel. Be silent ; let's see further.

Art. It is my mistress : [Aside.

Since she is living, let the time run on,

To good, or bad.

[CYMBELINE and IMOGEN come forward.

Cym. Come, stand thou by our side :

Make thy demand aloud.—Sir, [To IACH.] step

you forth ;

Give answer to this boy, and do it freely ;

Or, by our greatness, and the grace of it,

Which is our honour, bitter torture shall

Winnow the truth from falsehood.—On, speak

to him

Imo. My boon is, that this gentleman may render

Of whom he had this ring.

Post. What's that to him ? [Aside.

Cym. That diamond upon your finger, say,

How came it yours ?

Jach. Thou'lt torture me to leave unspoken
that

Which, to be spoke, would torture thee.

Cym. How ! me ?

Jach. I am glad to be constrain'd to utter that which

Torments me to conceal. By villany

I got this ring ; 'twas Leonatus' jewel :

Whom thou didst banish ; and (which more may grieve thee,

As it doth me,) a nobler Sir ne'er liv'd

'Twixt sky and ground. Wilt thou hear more,
my lord ?

Cym. All that belongs to this.

Jach. That paragon, thy daughter,—

For whom my heart drops blood, and my false
spirits

Quail * to remember.—Give me leave ; I faint.

Cym. My daughter ! what of her ? Renew thy strength :

I had rather thou should'st live while nature
will,

Than die ere I hear more : strive man, and
speak.

Jach. Upon a time, (unhappy was the clock
That struck the hour !) it was in Rome, (accurs'd

The mansion where ! ('twas at a feast, (O 'would
Our viands had been poison'd ! or at least,
Those which I heav'd to head !) the good Post-
hómus,

(What should I say ? he was too good to be
Where ill men were ; and was the best of all Amongst the rar'st of good ones,) sitting sadly,
Hearing us praise our loves of Italy

For beauty that made barren the swell'd boast
Of him that best could speak : for feature, lam-
ing

The shrine of Venus, or straight-pight Min-
Postures beyond brief nature ; for condition,
A shop of all the qualities that man

Loves woman for ; besides, that hook of w'- ing,

Fairness which strikes the eye :—

Cym. I stand on fire :

Come to the matter.

Jach. All too soon I shall,

Unless thou would'st grieve quickly.—This Post-
hómus,

Most like a noble lord in love, and one

That had a royal lover,) took his hint ;

And, not dispraising whom he prais'd, (thereir

He was as calm as virtue) he began

His mistress' picture ; which by his tongue being made,

And then a mind put in't, either our brags

Were crack'd of kitchen trulls, or his description

Provd us unspeaking sots.

Cym. Nay, say to the purpose.

Jach. Your daughter's chastity—there it begins.

He spake of her as Dian had hot dreams,

And she alone were cold : Whereat, I, wietch'

Made scruple of his praise ; and wagar'd with
him

Pieces of gold, 'gainst this which then he wore

Upon his honour'd finger, to attain

In suit the place of his bed, and win this ring

By her's and mine adultery : he, true knight,

No lesser of her honour confident

Than I did truly find her, stakes this ring ;

And would so, had it been a carbuncle

Of Phœbus' wheel ; and might so safely, had it

Been all the worth of his ear. Away to Britain

Post I in this design : Well may you, Sir,

Remember me at court, where I was taught

Of your chaste daughter the wide difference

'Twixt amorous and villainous. Being thus quench'd

Of hope, not longing, mine Italian brain

'Gan in your duller Britain operate

Most vilely ; for my vantage, excellent ;

And, to be brief, my practice so prevail'd,

That I return'd with simular * proof enough

To make the noble Leonatus mad,

By wounding his belief in her renown

With tokens thus and thus : averring notes

Of chamber-hangings, pictures, this her bracelet,

(O cunning, how I got it !) nay, some marks

Of secret on her person, that he could not

But think her bond of chastity quite crack'd,

I having ta'en the forfeit. Whereupon,—

Methinks, I see him now.—

Post. Ay, so thou dost. [Coming forward,

Italian fiend—Ah ! me, most credulous fool,

Egregious murderer, thief, any thing

That's due to all the villains past, in being,

To come !—O give me cord, or knife, or poison

Some upright justice ! Thou king, send out

For torturers ingenious : it is I

That all the abhorred things o'the earth amend
By being worse than they. I am Posthómus,

That kill'd thy daughter :—villain like, I lie ;

That caus'd a lesser villain than myself,

A sacrilegious, thief, to do't :—the temple

Of virtue was she ; yea, and she herself. †

Spit, and throw stones, cast mire upon me, set

* Sink into dejection.

* Apparent.

† Not only the temple of virtue, but virtue herself.

The dogs o'the street to bay me : every villain
Be call'd Posthumus Leonatus ; and
Be villany less than 'twas ! O Imogen,
My queen, my life, my wife ! O Imogen,
Imogen, Imogen !

Imo. Peace, my lord ; hear, hear—

Post. Shall's have a play of this ? Thou scornful page,
There lie thy part. [Striking her : she falls.]

Pis. O gentlemen, help, help Mine, and your mistress :—O my lord Posthumus !

You ne'er kill'd Imogen till now ;—Help,
help !—
Mine honour'd lady !

Cym. Does the world go round ?

Post. How come these staggers on me ?

Pis. Wake, my mistress !

Cym. If this be so, the gods do mean to strike me

To death with mortal joy

Pis. How fares my mistress ?

Imo. O get thee from my sight ;
Thou gav'st me poison : dangerous fellow, hence !
Breathe not where princes are.

Cym. The tune of Imogen !

Pis. Lady.

The gods throw stones of sulphur on me, if
That box I gave you was not thought by me
A precious thing : I had it from the queen.

Cym. New matter still ?

Imo. It poison'd me.

Cor. O gods !—

I left out one thing which the queen confess'd,
Which must approve thee honest : If Pisano
Have, said she, given his mistress that confec-
tion

Which I gave him for a cordial, she is serv'd
As I would serve a rat.

Cym. What's this, Cornelius ?

Cor. The queen, Sir, very oft importun'd me
The temper * poisons for her ; still pretending
The satisfaction of her knowledge, only
In killing creatures vile, as cats and dogs
Of no esteem : I, dreading that her purpose
Was of more danger, did compound for her
A certain stuff, which, being ta'en, would cease

The present power of life ; but, in short time,
All offices of nature should again
Do their due functions.—Have you ta'en of it ?

Imo. Most like I did, for I was dead.

Bel. My boys,
There was our error.

Gui. This is sure, Fidele.

Imo. Why did you throw your wedded lady from you ?

Think, that you are upon a rock and now
Throw me again. [Embracing him.]

Post. Hang there like fruit, my soul,
Till the tree die !

Cym. How now, my flesh, my child ?
What, mak'st thou me a dullard in this act ?

Wilt thou not speak to me ?

Imo. Your blessing, Sir. [Kneeling.]
Bel. Though you did love this youth, I blame ye not ;

You had a motive for't.

[To GUIDERIUS and ARVIRAGUS.]

Cym. My tears that fall,
Prove holy water on thee ! Imogen,
Thy mother's dead.

Imo. I am sorry for't, my lord.

Cym. Oh ! she was naught ; and 'long of her it was,

That we meet here so strangely : But her son
Is gone, we know not how, nor where.

Pis. My lord,

Now fear is from me, I'll speak truth. Lord
Cloten,

Upon my lady's missing, came to me
With his sword drawn ; foam'd at the mouth,
and swore,

* Mix, compound.

If I discover'd not which way she was gone,
It was my instant death : By accident,
I had a feigned letter of my master's
Then in my pocket ; which directed him
To seek her on the mountains near to Milford ;
Where, in a frenzy, in my master's garments,
Which he inform'd from me, away he posts
With unchaste purpose, and with oath to vi-late

My lady's honour : what became of him,
I further know not.

Gui. Let me end the story :

I slew him there.

Cym. Marry, the gods forfend ! *

I would not thy good deeds should from my lips

Pluck a hard sentence : pry'thee, valiant youth,
Deny't again.

Gui. I have spoke it, and I did it.

Cym. He was a prince.

Gui. A most unchival one : The wrongs he did
me

Were nothing prince-like ; for he did provoke
me

With language that would make me spurn the
sea,

If it could roar so to me : I cut off's head ;
And am right glad, he is not standing here
To tell this tale of mine.

Cym. I am sorry for thee :

By thine own tongue thou art condemn'd, and
must

Endure our law : Thou art dead.

Imo. That headless man

I thought had been my lord.

Cym. Bind the offender,

And take him from our presence.

Bel. Stay, Sir king :

This man is better than the man he slew,
As well descended as thyself ; and hath
More of thee merited, than a band of Clotens
Had ever scar for. Let his arms alone ;

[To the Guards.]

They were not born for bondage.

Cym. Why, old soldier,
Wilt thou undo the worth thou art unpaid for
By tasting of our wrath ? How of descent
As good as we ?

Arv. In that he spake too far.

Cym. And thou shalt die for't.

Bel. We will die all three,

But I will prove that two of us are as good
As I have given out him.—My sons, I must,
For mine own part, unfold a dangerous speech,
Though, haply, well for you.

Arv. Your danger is Ours.

Gui. And our good his.

Bel. Have at it then.—[who]
By leave ;—Thou had'st, great king, a subject,
Was call'd Belarius.

Cym. What of him ? he is
A banish'd traitor.

Bel. He it is, that hath
Assum'd this age : indeed, a banish'd man ;
I know not how, a traitor.

Cym. Take him hence ;

The whole world shall not save him.

Bel. Not too hot :

First pay me for the nursing of thy sons ;
And let it be confiscate all, so soon
As I have receiv'd it.

Cym. Nursing of my sons ?

Bel. I am too blunt and saucy : Here's my
knee ;

Ere I arise I will prefer my sons ;

Then, spare not the old father. Mighty Sir,
These two young gentlemen, that call me father,

And think they are my sons, are none of mine ;
They are the issue of your loins, my liege,
And blood of your begetting.

Cym. How ! my issue ?

* Forbid.

Bel. So sure as you your father's. I, old Morgan,
Am that Belarius whom you sometime banish'd :
Your pleasure was my mere offence, my punishment
Itself, and all my treason ; that I suffer'd,
Was all the harm I did. These gentle princes
(For such, and so they are,) these twenty years
Have I train'd up : those arts they have, as I Could put into them ; my breeding was, Sir, as
Your highness knows. Their nurse, Euphrile,
Whom for the theft I wedded, stole these children
Upon my banishment ; I mov'd her to't ;
Having receiv'd the punishment before,
For that which I did then : Beaten for loyalty
Excited me to treason : Their dear loss,
The more of you 'twas felt, the more it shap'd
Unto my end of stealing them. But, gracious Sir,
Here are your sons again ; and I must lose
Two of the sweetest companions in the world :—
The benediction of these covering heavens Fall on their heads like dew ! for they are worthy
To inlay heaven with stars.
Cym. Thou weep'st, and speak'st.
The service, that you three have done, is more
Unlike than this thou tell'st : I lost my children :
If these be they, I know not how to wish
A pair of worthier sons.
Bel. Be pleas'd a while.—
This gentleman, whom I call Polydore,
Most worthy prince, as your's, is true, Guiderius ;
This gentleman, my Cadwal, Arviragus,
Your younger princely son ; he, Sir, was hap'p'd
In a most curious mantle wrought by the hand
Of his queen mother, which, for more probation,
I can with ease produce.
Cym. Guiderius had
Upon his neck a mole, a sanguine star ;
It was a mark of wonder.
Bel. This is he ;
Who hath upon him still that natural stamp ;
It was wise nature's end in the donation,
To be his evidence now.
Cym. O what am I
A mother to the birth of three ! Ne'er mother Rejoic'd deliverance more : Bless'd may you
be,
That after this strange starting from your orbs,
You may return in them now !—O Imogen,
Thou hast lost by this a kingdom.
Imo. No, my lord ;
I have got two worlds' by't.—O my gentle
brothers,
Have we thus met ! O never say hereafter,
But I am truest speaker : you call'd me brother,
When I was but your sister ; I you brothers,
When you were so indeed.
Cym. Did you e'er meet ?
Arv. Ay, my good lord.
Gui. And at first meeting lov'd ;
Continued so, until we thought he died.
Cor. By the queen's dram she swallow'd.
Cym. O rare instinct !
When shall I hear all through ? This fierce abridgment
Hath to it circumstantial branches, which Distinction should be rich in.—Where ? how hiv'd you ?
And when came you to serve our Roman captive ?
How parted with your brothers ? how first met
them ?

* Vehement, rapid.

† I.e. Which ought to be rendered distinct in an ample narrative.

Why fled you from the court ? and whither ?
These.
And your three motives to the battle, with
I know not how much more, should be demanded ;
And all the other by-dependencies.
From chance to chance ; but nor the time, nor place,
Will serve our long intergatories. See,
Posthumus anchors upon Imogen ;
And she like harmless lightning, throws her eye
On him, her brothers, me, her master ; hitting
Each object with a joy ; the counterchange
Is e'everally in all. Let's quit this ground,
And smoke the temple with our sacrifices.—
Thou art my brother ; So we'll hold thee ever.
[To BELARIUS.
Imo. You are my father too : and did relieve me,
To see this gracious season.
Cym. All overjoy'd,
Save these in bonds : let them be joyful too,
For they shall taste our comfort.
Imo. My good master,
[Kneeling.
Luc. Happy be you !
Cym. The forlorn soldier, that so nobly fought,
He would have well becom'd this place, and grac'd
The thankings of a king.
Post. I am, Sir,
The soldier that did company these three
In poor beseeching ; 'twas a hintment for
The purpose I then follow'd, —That I was he,
Speak, Iachimo : I had you down, and might Have made you finish.
I will yet do you service.
Iach. I am down again :
But now my heavy conscience sinks my knee,
As then your force did. Take that life, 'beseech you,
Which I so often owe : but, your ring first ;
And here the bracelet of the truest princess,
That ever swore her faith.
Post. Kneel not to me :
The power that I have on you, is to spare you,
The malice towards you, to forgive you : Live,
And deal with others better.
Cym. Nobly doom'd !
We'll learn our treeness of a son-in-law,
Pardon's the word to all.
Arr. You help us, Sir,
As you did mean indeed to be our brother ;
Joy'd are we, that you are.
Post. Your servant, princes.—Good my lord of Rome,
Call forth your soothsayer : As I slept, methought,
Great Jupiter, upon his eagle back,
Appear'd to me, with other spritely shows *
Of mine own kindred : when I wak'd, I found
This label on my bosom ; whose containing
Is so from sense in hardness, that I can Make no collection of it ; let him show
His skill in the construction.
Luc. Philarmonus,— Sooth. Here, my good lord.
Lwc. Read : and declare the meaning.
Sooth. [Reads.] When as a lion's whelp shall, to himself unknown, without seeking find, and be embraced by a piece of tender air ; and when from a stately cedar shall be lopped branches, which, being dead many years, shall after revive, be jointed to the old stock, and freshly grow ; then shall Posthumus end his miseries, Britain be fortunate, and flourish in peace and plenty.
Thou, Leonatus, art the lion's whelp ;
The fit and apt construction of thy name,
Being Leo-natus, doth import so much :
The piece of tender air, thy virtuous daughter,
[To CYMBELINE.
Which we call mollis aer ; and mollis aer

* Ghostly appearances.

We term it mulier : which mulier, I divine,
Is this most constant wife : who, even now,
Answering the letter of the oracle,
Unknown to you, unsought, were clipp'd about
With this most tender air.

Cym. This hath some seeming.

Sooth. The lofty cedar, royal Cymbeline, Personates thee : and thy lopp'd branches
point

Thy two sons forth : who, by Belarius stolen,
For many years thought dead, are now reviv'd,
To the majestic cedar join'd ; whose issue
Promises Britain peace and plenty.

Cym. Well,

By peace we will begin :—And, Caius Lucius,
Although the victor, we submit to Cesar,
And to the Roman empire ; promising
To pay our wonted tribute, from the which
We were dissuaded by our wicked queen ; Whom heavens, in justice, (both on her and her's)
Have laid most heavy hand.

Sooth. The fingers of the powers above do
tune

The harmony of this peace. The vision
Which I made known to Lucius, ere the stroke
Of this yet scarce-cold battle, at this instant
Is full accomplish'd : For the Roman eagle,
From south to west on wing soaring aloft,
Lessen'd herself, and in the beams o'the sun
So vanish'd ; which foreshow'd our princely
eagle,

The imperial Cesar, should again unite
His favour with the radiant Cymbeline,
Which shines here in the west.

Cym. Laud we the gods ;

And let our crook'd snokes climb * to their nostrils

From our bless'd altars ! Publish we this peace
To all our subjects. Set we forward : Let
A Roman and a British ensign wave

* Rise.

Friendly together : so through Lud's town
march :

And in the temple of great Jupiter
Our peace we'll ratify ; seal it with feasts.—
Set on there :— Never was a war did cease, Ere bloody hands were wash'd, with such a peace. [Exeunt]

A SONG,

Sung by Guiderius and Arviragus over Fidele, supposed to be dead.

BY WILLIAM COLLINS.

To fair Fidele's grassy tomb,
Soft maids and village hands shall bring
Each opening sweet, of earliest bloom,
And ripe all the breathing spring.

No wailing ghost shall dare appear
To vex with shrieks this quiet grove ;
But shepherd lads assemble here,
And melting virgins own their love.

No nither'd witch shall here be seen,
No goblins lead their nightly crew :
The female joys shall haunt the green,
And dress thy grave with pearly dew.

The red-breast oft at evening hours
Shall kindly lend his little aid,
With hoary moss, and gather'd flowers,
To deck the ground where thou art laid.

When howling winds and beating rain,
In tempests shake the sylvan cell :
Or midst the chase on every plain,
The tender thought on thee shall dwell

Each lonely scene shall thee restore,
For thee the tear be duly shed
Below'd, till life could charm no more ;
And mourn'd, till pity's self be dead.

KING LEAR.

LITERARY AND HISTORICAL NOTICE.

THE subject of this interesting tragedy, which was probably written in 1605, is derived from an old historical ballad, founded on a story in Holinshed's Chronicles, and originally told by Geoffrey of Monmouth. "Lear (says the Welsh historian) was the eldest son of Bladud, nobly governed his country for sixty years, and died about 800 years before Christ." Camden tells a similar story of Iseu, king of the West Saxons, and his three daughters. The episode of Gloucester and his sons is taken from Sidney's Arcadia. Tate, the laureat, greatly altered, and in a degree polished this play, inserting new scenes or passages, and transposing or omitting others. In particular, he avoided its original heart-rending catastrophe, by which the virtue of Cordelia was suffered to perish in a just cause, contrary to the natural ideas of justice, to the hope of the reader, and to the facts of the ancient narrative. He also introduced Edgar to the audience as the sutor of Cordelia, cancelling the excellent scene in which, after being rejected as dowerless, by Burgundy, her misfortunes and her goodness recommend her to the love of the king of France. Yet the restoration of the king, and the final happiness of Cordelia, have been censured (in the Spectator especially) as at variance with true tragic feeling and poetical beauty; although it may fairly be presumed, since mankind naturally love justice, that an attention to its dictates will never make a play worse, and that an audience will generally rise more satisfied where persecuted virtue is rewarded and triumphant. Lear's struggles against his accumulated injuries, and his own strong feelings of sorrow and indignation, are exquisitely drawn. The daughters severally working him up to madness, and his finally falling a martyr to that malady, is a more deep and skilful combination of dramatic portraiture than can be found in any other writer. "There is no play (says Dr. Johnson,) which keeps the attention so constantly fixed; which so much agitates our passions and interests our curiosity." The celebrated Dr. Warton, who minutely criticised this play in the Adventurer, objected to the instances of cruelty, as too savage and too shocking. But Johnson observes, that the barbarity of the daughters is an historical fact, to which Shakespeare has added little, although he cannot so readily apologize for the extrusion of Gloucester's eyes, which is too horrid an act for dramatic exhibition, and such is must always compel the mind to relieve its distresses by incredulity. Colman, as well as Tate, re-modelled this celebrated Drama, but it is acted, with trifling variations, on the original plan of the latter.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—A Room of State in King LEAR'S Palace.

Enter KENT, GLOSTER, and EDMUND.

Kent. I thought the king had more affected the duke of Albany than Cornwall.

Glo. It did always seem so to us: but now, in the division of the kingdom, it appears not which of the dukes he values most; for equalities are so weigh'd, that enmities in neither can make choice of either's moiety.†

Kent. Is not this your son, my lord?

Glo. His breeding, Sir, hath been at my charge: I have so often blush'd to acknowledge him, that now I am brazed to it.

Kent. I cannot conceive you.

Glo. Sir, this young fellow's mother could: whereupon she grew round-wombed; and had, indeed, Sir, a son for her cradle, ere she had a husband for her bed. Do you smell a fault?

Kent. I cannot wish the fault undone, the issue of it being so proper.*

Glo. But I have, Sir, a son, by order of law, some year elder than this, who yet is no dearer

* Exactest scrutiny

† Part or division

* Handsome

my account : though this knave came somewhat saucily into the world before he was sent for, yet his mother was fair ; there was good sport at his making, and the whoreson must be acknowledged.—Do you know this noble gentleman, Edmund ?

Edm. No, my lord.

Glo. My lord of Kent : remember him hereafter as my honourable friend.

Edm. My services to your lordship.

Kent. I must love you, and sue to know you better.

Edm. Sir, I shall study deservings.

Glo. He hath been out nine years, and away he shall again :—The king is coming.

[Trumpets sound within.]

Enter LEAR, CORNWALL, ALBANY, GONERIL, REGAN, CORDELIA, and Attendants.

Lear. Attend the lords of France and Burgundy. [Gundy,

Glo. I shall, my liege.

[Exit GLOSTER and EDMUND.]

Lear. Meantime we shall express our darker purpose.

Give me the map there.—Know, that we have divided,

In three, our kingdom : and 'tis our fast intent to shake all cares and business from our age ; conferring them on younger strengths, while we Unburden'd crawl toward death.—Our son of Cornwall,

And you, our no less loving son of Albany, We have this hour a constant will to publish Our daughter's several dowers, that future strife

May be prevented now. The princes, France and Burgundy,

Great rivals in our youngest daughter's love, Long in our court have made their amorous sojourn,

And here are to be answer'd.—Tell me, my (Since now we will divest us, both of rule, Interest of territory, cares of state,) Which of you, shall we say, doth love us most ? That we our largest bounty may extend Where merit doth most challenge it.—Goneril, Our eldest-born, speak first.

Gon. Sir, I [matter

Do love you more than words can wield the Dearer than eyes-sight, space and liberty ; Beyond what can be valued, rich or rare ; No less than life, with grace, health, beauty, honour :

As much as child e'er lov'd, or father found : A love that makes breath poor, and speech unable ;

Beyond all manner of so much I love you.

Cor. What shall Cordelia do ? Love, and be silent. [Aside.

Lear. Of all these bounds, even from this line to this,

With shadowy forests and with champains rich'd,

With plenteous rivers and wide-skirted meads, We make thee lady : To thine and Albany's issue

Be this perpetual.—What says our second Our dearest Regan, wife to Cornwall ? Speak.

Reg. I am made of that self metal as my sister,

And prize me at her worth. In my true heart, I find she names my very deed of love ; Only she comes too short,—that I profess Myself an enemy to all other joys, [senses ; Which the most precious square* of sense possess And find I am alone felicitate† In your dear highest love. [Aside.

Cor. Then poor Cordelia ! And yet not so ; since, I am sure, my love's More richer than my tongue.

Lear. To thee and thine hereditary ever Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom ;

No less in space, validity,* and pleasure, Than that confirm'd on Goneril.—Now, our joy, Although the last, not least ; to whose young love

The vines of France, and milk of Burgundy, Strive to be interest'd : † what can you say, to draw

A third more opulent than your sisters ? Speak.

Cor. Nothing, my lord.

Lear. Nothing ?

Cor. Nothing.

Lear. Nothing can come of nothing : speak again.

Cor. Unhappy that I am, I cannot heave My heart into my mouth : I love your majesty According to my bond ; nor more, nor less.

Lear. How, how, Cordelia ? mend your speech a little, Lest it may mar your fortunes.

Cor. Good my lord,

You have begot me, bred me, lov'd me : I Return those duties back as are right fit, Obey you, love you, and most honour you. Why have my sisters husbands, if they say, They love you all ? Happily, when I shall wed, That lord, whose hand must take my plight, shall carry

Half my love with him, half my care, and duty : Sure, I shall never marry like my sisters, To love my father all ?

Lear. But goes this with thy heart ?

Cor. Ay, good my lord.

Lear. So young, and so untender ?

Cor. So young, my lord, and true.

Lear. Let it be so.—Thy truth then be thy dower :

For, by the sacred radiance of the sun ; The mysteries of Hecate, and the night ; By all the operations of the orbs, From whom we do exist, and cease to be, Here I disclaim all my paternal care, Propinquity ‡ and property of blood, And as a stranger to my heart and me Hold thee, from this, § for ever. The barbarous Scythian,

Or he that makes his generation § messes To gorge his appetite, shall to my bosom Be as well neighbour'd, pitied, and reliev'd, As thou my sometime daughter.

Kent. Good my liege,—

Lear. Peace, Kent !

Come not between the dragon and his wrath : I lov'd her most, and thought to set my rest On her kind nursery.—Hence, and avoid my sight !— [To CORDELIA.

So be my grave my peace, as here I give Her father's heart from her !—Call France ;— Who stirs ?

Call Burgundy.—Cornwall and Albany, With my two daughter's dowers digest this third :

Let pride, which she calls plainness, marry her. I do invest you jointly with my power, Pre-eminence, and all the large effects That troop with majesty.—Ourselves, by monthly course,

With reservation of a hundred knights, By you to be sustain'd, shall our abode [retain Make with you by due turns. Only we still Scene 1.

KING LEAR.

291

Kent. Let it fall rather, though the fork invade
The region of my heart: be Kent unmannerly,
When Lear is mad. What wouldst thou do, old man?
[speak.]
Think'st thou that duty shall have dread to When power to flattery bows? To plainness honour's bound,
[down:]
When majesty stoops to folly. Reverse thy
And, in thy best consideration, check
This hideous rashness: answer my life, my judgment,
Thy youngest daughter does not love thee least;
Nor are those empty-hearted, whose low sound
Reverbs * no hollowness.
Lear. Kent, on thy life, no more.
Kent. My life I never held but as a pawn
To wage against thine enemies; nor fear to lose it,
Thy safety being the motive.
Lear. Out of my sight!
Kent. See better, Lear; and let me still re-
The true blank † of thine eye. [main,] Lear. Now, by Apollo,—
Kent. Now, by Apollo, king,
Thou swear'st at thy gods in vain.
Lear. O vassal miscalent!
[Laying his Hand upon his Sword.]
Alb. Corn. Dear Sir, forbear.
Kent. Do:
Kill thy physician, and the fee bestow
Upon the foul disease. Revoke thy gift;
Or, whilst I can vent clamour from my throat,
I'll tell thee, thou dost evil.
Lear. Hear me, recreant!
On thee allegiance hear me!—
Since thou hast sought to make us break our vow, [pride,]
(Which we durst never yet,) and, with strain'd
To come betwixt our sentence and our power;
(Which nor our nature nor our place can bear,)
Our potency make good, take thy reward.
Five days we do allot thee, for provision
To shield thee from diseases of the world;
And, on the sixth, to turn thy hated back Upon our kingdom: if, on the tenth day following,
Thy banish'd trunk be found in our dominions,
The moment is thy death: Away! By Jupiter,
This shall not be revok'd.
Kent. Fare thee well, king: since thus thou wilt appear,
Freedom lives hence, and banishment is here.—
The gods to their dear shelter take thee, maid,
[To CORDILIA.]
That justly think'st, and has most rightly said!—
And your large speeches may your deeds approve,
[To RIGAN and GONERIL.]
That good effects may spring from words of
love.—
Thus Kent, O princes, bids you all adieu;
He'll shape his old course ‡ in a country new.
[Exit.]

Re-enter GLOSTER; with FRANCE, BURGUNDY, and Attendants.

Glo. Here's France and Burgundy, my noble
lord.
Lear. My lord of Burgundy,
We first address towards you, who with this king [least,]
Hath rival'd for our daughter; What, in the
Will you require in present dower with her,
Or cease your quest of love? §
Bur. Most royal majesty,
I crave no more than hath your highness offer'd,
Nor will you tender less.
Lear. Right noble Burgundy,
When she was dear to us, we did hold her so;
But now her price is fall'n: Sir, there she stands;

If aught within that little seeming † substance,
Or all of it, with our displeasure pleas'd,
And nothing more, may hitly like your grace,
She's there, and she is yours.
Bur. I know no answer.
Lear. Sir,
Will you, with those infirmities she owes, †
Unfriended, new adopted to our hate, Dower'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,
Take her, or leave her?
Bur. Pardon me, royal Sir;
Election makes not up; on such conditions.
Lear. Then leave her, Sir; for, by the power that made me,
I tell you all her wealth.—For you, great king,
[To FRANCE.]
I would not from your love make such a stray,
To match you where I hate; therefore beseech
you
To avert § your liking a more worthier way,
Than on a wretch whom nature is ashamed
Almost to acknowledge hers.
France. This is most strange!
That she, that even but now was your best object,
The argument of your praise, balm of your age,
Most best, most dearest, should in this trice of
time
Commit a thing so monstrous, to dismantle
So many folds of favour! Sure, her offence
Must be of such unnatural degree,
That monsters it, or your fore-vouch'd † affection
Fall into taint: ¶ which to believe of her,
Must be a faith, that reason without miracle
Could never plant in me.
Cor. I yet beseech your majesty,
(If for  I want that glib and oily art,
To speak and purpose not: since what I will
I'll do't before I speak, that you make known
It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness,
No unchaste action, or dishonour'd step,
That hath depriv'd me of your grace and favour:
But even for want of that, for which I am richer—
A still-soliciting eye, and such a tongue
That I am glad I have not, though not to have it,
Hath lost me in your liking.
Lear. Better thou
Hadst not been born, than not to have pleas'd me better.
France. Is it but this? a tardiness in nature,
Which often leaves the history unspoke,
That it intends to do!—My lord of Burgundy,
What say you to the lady? Love is not love,
When it is mingled with respects, that stand
Aloof from the entire point. † Will you have
She is herself a dowry. [her †]
Bur. Royal Lear,
Give but that portion which yourself propos'd,
And here I take Cordelia by the hand,
Duchess of Burgundy.
Lear. Nothing: I have sworn: I am firm.

That you must lose a husband. [father,]
Cor. Peace be with Burgundy!
Since that respects of fortune are his love,
I shall not be his wife.
France. Fairest Cordelia, thou art most rich, being poor:
Most choice, forsaken; and most lov'd, despis'd:
Thee and thy virtues here I seize upon:
Be it lawful, I take up what's cast away.
Gods, gods! 'tis strange, that from their cold'st neglect
My love should kindle to inflam'd respect.—
Thy dowerless daughter, king, thrown to my chance,
Is queen of us, of ours, and our fair France:
Not all the dukes of wat'rish Burgundy
Shall buy this unpriz'd precious maid of me.—

Come, noble Burgundy.

[Flourish. Enter LEAR, BURGUNDY, CORNWALL, ALBANY, GLOSTER, and Attendants.
France. Bid farewell to your sisters.

Cor. The jewels of our father with wash'd
eyes

Cordelia leaves you: I know you what you are;
And, like a sister, am most loath to call Your faults as they are nam'd. Use well our
father:

To your professed bosoms I commit him:

But yet, alas! stood I within his grace,

I would prefer him to a better place.

So farewell to you both.

Gon. Prescribe not us our duties.

Reg. Let your study

Be to content your lord; who hath receiv'd you
At fortune's alms. You have obedience scanted,
And well are worth the want that you have wanted.

Cor. Time shall unfold what plaited‡ canning hides;

Who cover faults, at last shame them derides.
Well may you prosper!

France. Come, my fair Cordelia.

[Exit FRANCE and CORDELIA.
Gon. Sister, it is not a little I have to say, of what most nearly appertains to us both. I think our father will hence to-night.

Reg. That's most certain, and with you; next month with us.

Gon. You see how full of changes his age is;
the observation we have made of it hath not been little: he always loved our sister most;
and with what poor judgment he hath now cast her off, appears too grossly.

Reg. 'Tis the infirmity of his age: yet he hath ever but slenderly known himself.

Gon. The best and soundest of his time hath been but rash; then must we look to receive from his age, not alone the imperfections of long-engrafted condition,§ but, therewithal, the unruly waywardness that infirm and choleric years bring with them.

Reg. Such unconstant starts are we like to have from him, as this of Kent's banishment.

Gon. There is further compliment of leave-taking between France and him. Pray you, let us shut together: If our father carry authority with such dispositions as he bears, this last surrender of his will but offend us.

Reg. We shall further think of it.

Gon. We must do something, and i' the heat.¶

SCENE II.—A Hall in the Earl of GLOSTER'S Castle.

Enter EDMUND, with a Letter.

Edm. Thou, nature, art my goddess; to thy
law

My services are bound: Wherefore should I
Stand in the plague† of custom; and permit
The curiosity of nations to deprive me,
For that I am some twelve or fourteen moon-shines

Lag of a brother? Why hastard‡ wherefore base?
When my dimensions are as well compact,
My mind as generous, and my shape as true,
As honest madman's issue? Why brand they us
With base‡ with baseness? bastardy? base,
base?

Who, in the lusty stealth of nature, take
More composition and fierce quality,

Than doth, within a dull, stale, tired bed,
Go to the creating a whole tribe of fops,
Got 'tween asleep and wake?—Well then,
Legitimate Edgar, I must have your land:
Our father's love is to the bastard Edmund,
As to the legitimate: Fine word,—legitimate!
Well, my legitimate, if this letter speed,
And my invention thrive, Edmund the base
Shall top the legitimate. I grow; I prosper:—
Now, gods, stand up for bastards!

Enter GLOSTER.

Glo. Kent banish'd thus! And France is cholier parted!

And the king gone to-night! subscrib'd* his Confin'd to exhibition!† All this done [power]
Upon the gad!‡—Edmund! How now, what news?

Edm. So please your lordship, none.

[Putting up the Letter.
Glo. Why so earnestly seek you to put up that letter?

Edm. I know no news, my lord.

Glo. What paper were you reading?

Edm. Nothing, my lord.

Glo. No? What needed then that terrible despatch of it into your pocket? the quality of nothing hath not such need to hide itself.
Let's see: Come, if it be nothing, I shall not need spectacles.

Edm. I beseech you, Sir, pardon me: it is a letter from my brother, that I have not all o'er-read, for so much as I have perused, I find it not fit for your over-looking.

Glo. Give me the letter, Sir.

Edm. I shall offend, either to detain or give
it. The contents, as in part I understand them, are to blame.

Glo. Let's see, let's see.

Edm. I hope, for my brother's justification, he wrote this but as an essay‡ or taste of my virtue.

Glo. [Reads.] *This policy and reverence of age makes the world bitter to the best of our times, keeps our fortunes from us till our oldness cannot relish them. I begin to understand an idle and fond bondage in the oppression of aged tyranny; who snags, not as it hath power, but as it is suffered. Come to me, that of this I may speak more. If our father would sleep till I waked him, you should enjoy half his revenue for ever, and live the beloved of your brother, Edgar.—
Humph—Conspiracy!—Sleep till I waked him
—you should enjoy half his revenue.—My son Edgar! Had he a hand to write this? a heart and brain to breed it in?—When came this to you?
Who brought it?*

Edm. It was not brought me, my lord, there's the cunning of it; I found it thrown in at the casement of my closet.

Glo. You know the character to be your brother's?

Edm. If the matter were good, my lord, I durst swear it were his; but, in respect of that,
I would fain think it were not.

Glo. It is his.

Edm. It is his hand, my lord; but, I hope his heart is not in the contents.

Glo. Hath he never heretofore sounded you in this business?

Edm. Never, my lord: But I have often heard him maintain‡ it to be fit, that, sons at perfect age, and fathers declining, the father should be as ward to the son, and the son manage his revenue.

Glo. O villain, villain!—His very opinion in the letter!—Abhorred villain! Unnatural, detestable, brutish villain! worse than brutish!—Go sirrah, seek him; I'll apprehend him:—Abominable villain!—Where is he?

Edm. I do not well know, my lord. If it

I dare pawn down my life for him, that he hath writ this to feel my affection to your honour; and to no other pretence of danger.

Glo. Think you so?

Edm. If your honour judge it meet, I will place you where you shall hear us confer of this, and by an arricular assurance have your satisfaction; and that without any further delay than this very evening.

Glo. He cannot be such a monster.

Edm. Nor is not, sure.

Glo. To his father, that so tenderly and entirely loves him.—Heaven and earth!—Edmund, seek him out: wind me into him, I pray you: frame the business after your own wisdom: I would unstate myself, to be in a due resolution. §

Edm. I will seek him, Sir, presently: convey the business as I shall find means, and acquaint you withal.

Glo. These late eclipses in the sun and moon portend no good to us: Though the wisdom of nature can reason it thus and thus, yet nature finds itself scourged by the sequent effects: love cools, friendship falls off, brothers divide: in cities, mutinies; in countries, discord; in palaces, treason; and the bond cracked between son and father. This villain of mine comes under the prediction; there's son against father: the king falls from bias of nature; there's father against child. We have seen the best of our time: Machinations, hollownests, treachery, and all ruinous disorders, follow us disquently to our graves!—Find out this villain, Edmund, it shall lose thee nothing: do it carefully.—And the noble and true-hearted Kent banished! his offence, honesty!—Strange! strange! [Exit.]

Edm. This is the excellent foppery of the world! that, when we are sick in fortune, (often the surfeit of our own behaviour,) we make guilty of our disasters, the sun, the moon, and the stars; as if we were villains by necessity; fools, by heavenly compulsion; knaves, thieves, and traitors, by spherical predominance; drunkards, liars, and adulterers, by an enforced obedience of planetary influence; and all that we are evil in, by a divine thrusting on: An admirable evasion of whoremaster man, to lay his goatish disposition to the charge of a star! My father compounded with my mother under the dragon's tail; and my nativity was under wrysa major;† so that it follows, I am rough and lecherous.—Tut, I should have been that I am, had the maidenliest star in the firmament twinkled on my bastardizing. Edgar—and pat he comes, like the catastrophe of the old comedy: My cue is villainous melancholy, with a sigh like Tom o'Bedlam.—O these eclipses do portend these divisions! Fa, sol, la, mi.‡

Edg. How now, brother Edmund? What serious contemplation are you in?

Edm. I am thinking, brother, of a prediction I read this other day, what should follow these eclipses.

Edg. Do you busy yourself with that?

Edm. I promise you, the effects he writes of succeed unhappily; as of unnaturalness between the child and the parent; death, dearth, dissolu-

tions of ancient amities; divisions in state; menaces and maledictions against king and nobles; needless dilidencies, banishment of friends, dissipation of cohorts, nuptial breaches, and I know not what.

Edg. How long have you been a sectary astronomical?

Edm. Come, come, when saw you my father last?

Edg. Why, the night gone by.

Edm. Spake you with him?

Edg. Ay, two hours together.

Edm. Parted you in good terms? Found you no displeasure in him, by word or countenance?

Edg. None at all.

Edm. Berthink yourself, wherein you may have offended him; and at my entreaty, forbear his presence, till some little time hath qualified the heat of his displeasure; which at this instant so rageth in him, that with the mischief of your person it would scarcely allay.

Edg. Some villain hath done me wrong.

Edm. That's my fear. I pray you, have a continent; forbearance, till the speed of his rage goes slower; and, as I say, retire with me to my lodging, from whence I will fitly bring you to hear my lord speak: Pray you, go; there's my key:—If you do stir abroad, go armed.

Edg. Armed, brother?

Edm. Brother, I advise you to the best: go armed; I am no honest man, if there be any good meaning towards you: I have told you what I have seen and heard, but faintly; nothing like the image and horror of it: Pray you, away.

Edg. Shall I hear from you anon?

Edm. I do serve you in this business.—

[Exit EDGAR.]

A credulous father, and a brother noble, Whose nature is so far from doing harm, That he suspects none: on whose foolish honesty

My practices ride easy!—I see the business.—

Let me, if not by birth, have lauds by wit: All with me's meet, that I can fashion fit.

SCENE III.—A Room in the Duke of ALBANY'S Palace.

Enter GONERIL and STEWARD.

Gon. Did my father strike my gentleman for chiding of his fool?

Stew. Ay, madam.

Gon. By day and night! he wrongs me; every hour

He flashes into one gross crime or other, That sets us all at odds: I'll not endure it:

His knights grow riotous, and himself upbraids us

On every trifle:—When he returns from hunt-

I will not speak with him; say, I am sick:—

If you come slack of former services,

You shall do well; the fault of it I'll answer.

Stew. He's coming, madam; I hear him.

Gon. Put on what weary negligence you please,

You and your fellows; I'd have it come to

If he dislike it, let him to my sister,

Whose mind and mine, I know, in that are one,

Not to be over-ruled. Idle old man,

That still would manage those authorities,

That he hath given away!—Now, by my life,

Old fools are babes again; and must be used

With checks, as flatteries,—when they are seen

Remember what I have said. [about.]

Stew. Very well, madam.

Gon. And let his knights have colder looks among you:

What grows of ill, no matter; advise your fellows so:

Enter KENT, disguised.

Kent. If but as well I other accents borrow,
That can my speech diffuse,* my good intent
May carry through itself to that full issue
For which I raz'd† my likeness.—Now, banish'd
Kent,
If thou canst serve where thou dost stand
condemn'd,
(So may it come!) thy master, whom thou lov'st,
Shall find thee full of labours.

Horns within. Enter LEAR, KNIGHTS, and Attendants.

Lear. Let me not stay a jot for dinner: go, get it ready. [Exit an Attendant.] How now,
what art thou?

Kent. A man, Sir.

Lear. What dost thou profess? What wouldst thou with us?

Kent. I do profess to be no less than I seem;
to serve him truly, that will put me in trust;
to love him that is honest; to converse; with him that is wise, and says little; to fear judgment; to fight, when I cannot choose; and to eat no fish.

Lear. What art thou?

Kent. A very honest-hearted fellow, and as poor as the king.

Lear. If thou be as poor for a subject, as he is for a king, thou art poor enough. What would'st thou?

Kent. Service.

Lear. Who wouldst thou serve?

Kent. You.

Lear. Dost thou know me, fellow?

Kent. No, Sir; but you have that in your countenance, which I would fain call master.

Lear. What's that?

Kent. Authority.

Lear. What services canst thou do?

Kent. I can keep honest counsel, ride, run, mar a curious tale in telling it, and deliver a plain message bluntly: that which ordinary men are fit for, I am qualify'd in; and the best of me is diligence.

Lear. How old art thou?

Kent. Not so young, Sir, to love a woman for singing; nor so old, to dote on 'her for any thing: I have years on my back forty-eight.

Lear. Follow me: thou shalt serve me; if I like thee no worse after dinner, I will not part from thee yet.—Dinner, ho, dinner!—Where's my knave? my fool? Go you, and call my fool
hither:

Enter STEWARD.

You, you, Sirrah, where's my daughter?

Stew. So please you,—

Lear. What says the fellow there? [Exit.
Clotpoll back.—Where's my fool, ho!—I think the world's asleep.—How now! where's that mongrel?]

Knight. He says, my lord, your daughter is not well.

Lear. Why came not the slave back to me, when I call'd him?

Knight. Sir, he answer'd me in the roundest manner, he would not.

Lear. He would not!

Knight. My lord, I know not what the matter is; but, to my judgment, your highness is not acquainted with that ceremonious affection as you were wont: there's a great abatement of kindness appears, as well in the general dependants, as in the duke himself also, and your daughter.

Lear. Ha! say'st thou so?

Knight. I beseech you, pardon me, my lord,
if I be mistaken; for my duty cannot be silent,
when I think your highness is wrong'd.

Lear. Thou but remember'st me of mine own conception; I have perceived a most faint neglect of late; which I have rather blamed as mine own jealous curiosity,* than as a very pretence† and purpose of unkindness: I will look further into't.—But where's my fool? I have not seen him these two days.

Knight. Since my young lady's going into France, Sir, the fool hath much pined away.

Lear. No more of that; I have noted it well.
—Go you, and tell my daughter I would speak with her.—Go you, call hither my fool.—

Re-enter STEWARD.

O you Sir, you Sir, you Sir, you hither: Who am
I, Sir?

Stew. My lady's father.

Lear. My lady's father? my lord's knave: you whoreson dog! you slave! you cur!

Stew. I am none of this, my lord; I beseech you, pardon me.

Lear. Do you bandy looks with me, you rascal?
[Striking him.]

Stew. I'll not be struck, my lord.

Kent. Nor tripp'd neither; you base football player. [Tripping up his Heels.]

Lear. I thank thee, fellow; thou servest me, and I'll love thee.

Kent. Come, Sir, arise, away; I'll teach you differences; away, away: if you will measure your lubber's length again, tarry; but away: go to; Have you wisdom? so.

[Pushes the STEWARD out.]

Lear. Now, my friendly knave, I thank thee;
there's earnest of thy service.

[Giving KENT Money.]

Enter FOOL.

Fool. Let me hire him too;—Here's my cock-comb. [Giving KENT his Cap.]

Lear. How now, my pretty knave? how dost thou?

Fool. Sirrah, you were best take my cock-comb.

Kent. Why, fool?

Fool. Why? For taking one's part that is out of favour? Nay, 'am thou canst not smile as the wind sits, thou't catch cold shortly! There, take my cockcomb: Why, this fellow has ban-ish'd two of his daughters, and did the third a blessing against his will; if thou follow him, thou must needs wear my cockcomb.—How now, nuncle! 'Would I had two cockcombs, and two daughters!

Lear. Why, my boy?

Fool. If I gave them all my living, I'd keep my cockcombs myself: There's mine; beg another of thy daughters.

Lear. Take heed, Sirrah; the whip.

Fool. Truth's a dog that must to kennel; he must be whipp'd out, when Lady, the brach, § may stand by the fire and stink.

Lear. A pestilent gall to me!

Lear. Do.

Fool. Mark it, nuncle:—

Lear. Why, no, boy; nothing can be made out of nothing.

Fool. Pr'ythee, tell him, so much the rent of his land comes to; he will not believe a fool.

[To KENT.]

Lear. A bitter fool!

Fool. Dost thou know the difference, my boy, between a bitter fool and a sweet fool?

Lear. No, lad; teach me.

Fool. That lord, that counsel'd thee

To give away thy land,

Come place him here by me,

Or do thou for him stand:

The sweet and bitter fool

Will presently appear;

The one in motley here,

The other found out there.

Lear. Dost thou call me fool, boy?

Fool. All thy other titles thou hast given away; that thou wast born with.

Kent. This is not altogether fool, my lord.

Fool. No, 'faith, lords and great men will not let me; if I had a monopoly out, they would have part on't; and ladies too, they will not let me have all fool to myself; they'll be snatching.—Give me an egg, nuncle, and I'll give thee two crowns.

Lear. What two crowns shall they be?

Fool. Why, after I have cut the egg 't' the middle, and eat up the meat, the two crowns of the egg. When thou clovest thy crown 't' the middle, and gavest away both parts, thou borest thine ass on thy back over the dirt: Thou hadst little wit in thy bald crown, when thou gavest thy golden one away. If I speak like myself in this, let him be whipp'd that first finds it so.

[Singing.]

*Fools had ne'er less grace * in a year;*

For use men are grown foppish;

And know not how their wits to wear,

Their manners are so apish.

Lear. When were you wont to be so full of songs, Sirrah?

Fool. I have used it, nuncle, ever since thou madest thy daughters thy mother: for when thou gavest them the rod, and put'st down thine own breeches,

Then they for sudden joy did weep, [Singing.]

And I for sorrow sung,

That such a king should play bo-peep.

And go the fools among.

Pr'ythee, nuncle, keep a schoolmaster that can teach thy fool to lie; I would fain learn to lie.

Lear. If you lie, Sirrah, we'll have you whipp'd.

Fool. I marvel, what kin thou and thy daughters are: they'll have me whipp'd for speaking true, thou'lt have me whipp'd for lying; and, sometimes, I am whipp'd for holding my peace. I had rather be any kind of thing, than a fool: and yet I would not be thee, nuncle; thou hast pared thy wit o' both sides, and left nothing in the middle: Here comes one o' the parings.

Enter GONERIL.

Lear. How now, daughter! what makes that frontlet; or, Methinks, you are too much of late 't' the frown.

Either his notion weakens, or his discernings are lethargied.—Sleeping or waking?—Ha! sure, 'tis not so.—Who is it that can tell me who I am?—Lear's shadow? it may be made.

Is it your will? [To ALB.] Speak, Sir.—Prepare my horses.

Stude! thou marble-hearted fiend,
More hideous, when thou show'st thee in a
child,

Than the sea-monster!

ALB. Pray, Sir, be patient.

Lear. Detested kite! thou liest:

[To GONERIL.

My train are men of choice and rarest parts,
That all particulars of duty know:
And in the most exact regard support
The worships of their name.—O most small fault,

How ugly didst thou in Cordelia show!

Which, like an engine,* wrench'd my frame of nature

[love,

From the fix'd place; drew from my heart all
And added to the gall. O Lear, Lear, Lear!

Beat at this gate that let thy folly in,

[Striking his Head.

And thy dear judgment out!—Go, go, my
people.

ALB. My lord, I am guiltless, as I am igno-
Of what hath mov'd you:

[rant

Lear. It may be so, my lord.—Hear, nature,
hear;

Dear goddess, hear! Suspend thy purpose, if Thou didst intend to make this creature fruitful!
Into her womb convey sterility!

Dry up in her the organs of increase;

And from her derogate† body never spring

A babe to honour her! If she must teem,

Create her child of spleen; that it may live,

And be a thwart disnatur'd torment to her!

Let it stamp wrinkles in her brow of youth!

With cadent‡ tears fret channels in her cheeks;

Turn all her mother's pains and benefits

To laughter and contempt; that she may feel

How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is

To have a thankless child!—Away, away!

[Exit.

ALB. Now, gods that we adore, whereof comes
this?

Gon. Never afflict yourself to know the cause;
But let his disposition have that scope
That dotage gives it.

Re-enter LEAR.

Lear. What, fifty of my followers, at a clap!
Within a fortnight!

ALB. What's the matter, Sir?

Lear. I'll tell thee;—Life and death! I am asham'd

That thou hast power to shake my manhood
thus:

[To GONERIL.

That these hot tears, which break from me
perforce,

Should make thee worth them.—Blasts and fogs
upon thee!

The untented§ woundings of a father's curse

Pierce every sense about thee!—Old fond eyes,

Bewep this cause again, I'll pluck you out;

And cast you, with the waters that you lose,

To temper clay.—Ha! it is come to this!

Let it be so!—Yet have I left a daughter,

Who, I am sure, is kind and comfortable;¶

When she shall hear this of thee, with her nails

She'll flay thy wolfish visage. Thou shalt find,

That I'll resume the shape which thou dost
think

I have cast off for ever; thou shalt, I warrant
thee.

[Exeunt LEAR, KENT, and Attendants.

Gon. Do you mark that, my lord?

ALB. I cannot be so partial, Goneril,

To the great love I bear you,—

Gon. Pray you, content.—What, Oswald, ho!

You, Sir, more knave than fool, after your master.

[To the Fool.

Fool. Nuncie Lear, nuncie Lear, tarry, and take the fool with thee.

A fox, when one has caught her,

And such a daughter,

Should sure to the slaughter,

If my cap would buy a halter;

So the fool follows after.

[Exit

Gon. This man hath had good counsel:—A hundred knights!

'Tis politic and safe to let him keep

At point, a hundred knights! Yes, that on every dream,

Each buzz, each fancy, each complaint, dislike,

He may enguard his dotage with their powers,

And hold our lives in mercy.—Oswald, I say!—

ALB. Well, you may fear too far.

Gon. Safer than trust:

Let me still take away the harness I fear.

Not fear still to be taken. I know his heart:

What he hath utter'd, I have writ my sister;

If she sustain'd him and his hundred knights,

When I have show'd the unfitness—How now, Oswald?

Enter STEWARD.

What, have you wit that letter to my sister?

Stew. Ay, madam.

Gon. Take you some company, and away to horse:

Inform her full of my particular fear;

And thereto add such reasons of your own,

As may compact it more. Get you gone;

And hasten your return. [Exit STEW.] No, no,
my lord,

This milky gentleness, and course of your's,

Though I condemn it not, yet, under pardon,

You are much more attack'd‡ for want of wit

Than prais'd‡ for harmful mildness. [dum,

ALB. How far your eyes may pierce, I can not tell;

Striving to better, oft we mar what's well.

Gon. Nay, then—

ALB. Well, well; the event. [Exeunt

SCENE V.—Court before the same.

Enter LEAR, KENT, and FOOL.

Lear. Go you before to Gloucester with these letters: acquaint my daughter no farther with any thing you know, than comes from her demand out of the letter: If your diligence be not speedy,
I shall be there before you.

Kent. I will not sleep, my lord, till I have delivered your letter. [Exit.

Fool. If a man's brains were in his heels, wer't not in danger of kibes?

Lear. Ay, boy.

Fool. Then I pry'thee, be merry; thy wit shall not go slipshod.

Lear. Ha, ha, ha!

Fool. Shalt see, thy other daughter will use thee kindly: for though she's as like this as a crab is like an apple, yet I can tell what I can tell.

Lear. Why, what canst thou tell, my boy?

Fool. She will taste as like this, as a crab does to a crab. Thou canst tell, why one's nose stands i'th' middle of his face?

Lear. No.

Fool. Why, to keep his eyes on either side his nose; that what a man cannot smell out, he may spy into.

Lear. I did her wrong:—

Fool. Canst tell how an oyster makes his shell?

Lear. No.

Fool. Nor I neither; but I can tell why a snail has a house.

Lear. Why?

Fool. Why, to put his head in; not to give it away to his daughters, and leave his horns without a case.

Lear. I will forget my nature.—So kind a father!—Be my horses ready?

Fool. Thy asses are gone about 'em. The reason why the seven stars are no more than seven, is a pretty ransou.

Lear. Because they are not eight?

Fool. Yes, indeed: Thou wouldst make a good fool.

Lear. To take it again perforce!—Monster ingratitude!

Fool. If thou wert my fool, muncle, I'd have thee beaten for being old before thy time.

Lear. How's that?

Fool. Thou shouldst not have been old, before thou hadst been wise.

Lear. O let me not be mad, not mad, sweet heaven!

Keep me in temper; I would not be mad!—

Enter GENTLEMAN.

How now! Are the horses ready?

Gent. Ready, my lord.

Lear. Come, buy.

Fool. She that is maid now, and laughs at my departure,

Shall not be a maid long, unless things be cut shorter. [Exit.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Court within the Castle of the Earl of GLOSTER.

Enter EDMUND and CURAN, meeting.

Edm. Save thee, Curan.

Cur. And you, Sir. I have been with your father; and given him notice, that the duke of Cornwall, and Regan his duchess, will be here with him to-night.

Edm. How comes that?

Cur. Nay, I know not: You have heard of the news abroad: I mean, the whispered ones, for they are yet but ear-kissing arguments.

Edm. Not I: 'Pray you, what are they?

Cur. Have you heard of no likely wars toward, 'twixt the dukes of Cornwall and Albany?

Edm. Not a word.

Cur. You may then, in time. Fare you well, Sir. [Exit.]

Edm. The duke be here to-night? The better! Best!

This caves itself perforce into my business: I My father hath set guard to take my brother; And I have one thing, of a queasy* question, Which I must act:—Briefness, and fortune, work!—

Brother, a word; descend:—Brother, I say;

Enter EDGAR.

My father watches:—O Sir, fly this place; Intelligence is given where you are hid; You have now the good advantage of the night:—

Have you not spoken 'gainst the duke of Cornwall?

He's coming hither; now, 't' the night, 't' the haste,

And Regan with him; Have you nothing said Upon his party 'gainst the duke of Albany? Advise† yourself.

Edg. I am sure on't, not a word.

Edm. I hear my father coming,—Pardon me.—

In cunning, I must draw my sword upon you:—Draw: Seem to defend yourself: Now quit you well.

Yield:—come before my father;—Light, ho, here!—

Fly, brother;—Torches! torches!—So, farewell.— [Exit EDGAR.]

Some blood drawn on me would begot opinion [Wounds his Arm.]

Deilect.

† Consider, recollect yourself.

Of my more fierce endeavour: I have seen drunkards

Do more than this in sport.—Father! father! Stop, stop! No help! a

Enter GLOSTER, and Servants with Torchets.

Glo. Now, Edmund, where's the villain?

Edm. Here stood he in the dark, his sharp sword out,

Mumbling of wicked charms, conjuring the moon

To stand his auspicious mistress:—

Glo. But where is he?

Edm. Look, Sir, I bleed.

Glo. Where is the villain, Edmund?

Edm. Fled this way, Sir. When by no means he could—

Glo. Pursue him, ho!—Go after.—[Exit Servant.] By no means,—what?

Edm. Persuade me to the murder of your lordship;

But that I told him, the revenging gods 'Gainst parricides did all their thunders bend;

Spoke, with how manifold and strong a bond The child was bound to the father;—Sir, in fine,

Seeing how loathly opposite I stood To his unnatural purpose, in fell motion,

With his prepared sword, he charges home My unprovided body, lanc'd mine arm: some

But when he saw my best alarm'd spirits, Bold in the quarrel's right, rous'd to the encounter,

Or whether gasted* by the noise I made, Full suddenly he fled.

Glo. Let him fly far:

Not in this land shall he remain uncaught; And found—Despatch.—The noble duke my master,

My worthy aitch† and patron, comes to-night: By his authority I will proclaim it,

That he, which fluds him, shall deserve our thanks, Bringing the murd'rous coward to the stake;

He, that conceals him, death.

Edm. When I dissuaded him from his intent, And found him pight‡ to do it, with curst§ speech

I threaten'd to discover him: He replied, Thou unpossessing bastard! dost thou think, If I would stand against thee, would the reposal

Of any trust, i virtue, or worth, in thee Make thy words faith'd? No: what I should deny,

(As this I would; ay, though thou didst produce

My very character ¶) I'd turn it all To thy suggestion, plot, and damned practice:

And thou must make a dullard of the world, If they not thought the profits of my death

Were very pregnant and potential spurs To make thee seek it.

Glo. Strong and fasten'd villain! Would he deny his letter?—I never got him.

[Trumpets within.]

Hark, the duke's trumpets! I know not why he comes:—

All ports I'll bar: the villain shall not scape; The duke must grant me that: besides, his picture

I will send far and near, that all the kingdom May have due note of him; and of my land,

Loyal and natural boy, I'll work the means To make thee capable. ¶

Enter CORNWALL, REGAN, and Attendants.

Corn. How now, my noble friend! since I came hither,

* Frighted.

† Pouched, fix'd.

¶ I.e. Capable of succeeding to my land.

‡ Severed, harsh.

(Which I can call but now,) I have heard strange news,

Reg If it be true, all vengeance comes too short,

Which can pursue the offender. How dost, my lord?

Glo. O madam, my old heart is crack'd, is crack'd!

Reg. What, did my father's godson seek your life?

He whom my father nam'd? your Edgar?

Glo. O lady, lady, shame would have it hid!

Reg. Was he not companion with the riotous knights

That tend upon my father?

Glo. I know not, madam:

It is too bad, too bad.—

Edm. Yes, madam, he was.

Reg. No marvel then, though he were ill affected;

'Tis they have put him on the old man's death,

To have the waste and spoil of his revenues.

I have this present evening from my sister

Been well inform'd of them; and with such cau-

tions,

That, if they come to sojourn at my house,

I'll not be there.

Corn. Nor I, assure thee, Regan.—

Edmund, I hear that you have shown your father

A child-like office.

Edm. 'Twas my duty, Sir.

Glo. He did bewray* his practice; † and re-ceiv'd

This hurt you see, striving to apprehend him.

Corn. Is he pursued?

Glo. Ay, my good lord, he is.

Corn. If he be taken, he shall never more

Be fear'd of doing harm: make your own purpose,

How in my strength you please.—For you, Edmund,

Whose virtue and obedience doth this instant

So much commend itself, you shall be our's;

Natures of such deep trust we shall much need;

So we first seize on.

Edm. I shall serve you, Sir,

Truly, however else.

Glo. For him I thank your grace.

Corn. You know not why we came to visit

you,—

Reg. Thus out of season; threading dark-ey'd

night.

Occasions noble Gloucester, of some poize, ‡

Wherein we must have use of your advice:—

Our father he hath writ, so hath our sister,

Of differences, which I best thought it fit

To answer from our home; the several messengers

From hence attend despatch. Our good old

friend,

Lay comforts to your bosom; and bestow

Your needful counsel to our business,

Which craves the instant use.

Glo. I serve you, madam:

Your graces are right welcome. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Before GLOSTER's Castle.

Enter KENT and STEWARD, severally.

Stew. Good dawning to thee, friend: Art of the house?

Kent. Ay.

Stew. Where may we set our horses?

Kent. I'll mire.

Stew. Prythee, if thou love me, tell me.

Kent. I love thee not.

Stew. Why, then I care not for thee.

Kent. If I had thee in Lipbury pinfold, I would make thee care for me.

Stew. Why dost thou use me thus? I know thee not.

* Betray.
† Wicked purpose. ‡ Weight.

Kent. Fellow, I know thee.
Stew. What dost thou know me for?
Kent. A knave, a rascal, an eater of broken meats; a base, proud, shallow, beggarly, three-suited, hundred-pound, filthy worsted-stocking knave; a lily-liver'd, action-taking knave; a whoreson, glass-gazing, superserviceable, flutical rogue; one-trunk-inheriting slave; one that wouldst be a bawd, in way of good-service, and ait nothing but the composition of a knave, beggar, coward, pandar, and the son and heir of a mongrel bitch: one whom I will beat into clamorous whining, if thou deny'st the least syllable of thy addition.*
Stew. Why, what a monstrous fellow art thou, thus to rail on one, that is neither known of thee
nor knows thee!
Kent. What a brazen-fac'd varlet art thou, to deny thou know'st me! Is it two days ago, since I tripp'd up thy heels, and beat thee, before the king? Draw, you rogue; for, though it be night, the moon shines: I'll make a sop i'the moonshine of you: Draw, you whorson cullionly barber-monger, draw.
[Drawing his Sword.
Stew. Away; I have nothing to do with thee.
Kent. Draw, you rascal: you come with letters against the king: and take vanity & the puppet's part, against the royalty of her father: Draw, you rogue, or I'll so carbonado your shanks:—draw, you rascal; come your ways.
Stew. Help, ho! murder! help!
Kent. Strike, you slave; stand; rogue, stand;
you neat slave, strike.
[Beating him.
Stew. Help, ho! murder! murder!
Enter EDMUND, CORNWALL, REGAN, GLOSTER, and Servants.
Edm. How now! What's the matter? Part.
Kent. With you, Goodman boy, if you please;
come, I'll flesh you; come on, young master.
Glo. Weapons! arms! What's the matter
here?
Corn. Keep peace, upon your lives;
He dies, that strikes again: What is the matter?
Reg. The messengers from our sister and the king.
Corn. What is your difference? I speak.
Stew. I am scarce in breath, my lord.
Kent. No marvel, you have so bestir'd your valour. You cowardly rascal, nature disclaims in thee; a tailor made thee.
Corn. Thou art a strange fellow: a tailor make a man?
Kent. Ay, a tailor, Sir; a stone-cutter or a painter could not have made him so ill, though they had been but two hours at the trade.
Corn. Speak yet, how grew your quarrel?
Stew. This and that ruffian, Sir, whose life I have spar'd.
At suit of his grey beard.—
Kent. Thou whoreson zed! thou unnecessary letter!—My lord, if you will give me leave, I will tread this unbolted villain into mortar, and daub the wall of a jakes‡ with him.—Spare my grey beard, you wagtail?
Corn. Peace, Sirrah!
You beastly knave, know you no reverence?
Kent. Yes, Sir; but anger has a privilege.
Corn. Why art thou angry?
Kent. That such a slave as this should wear a
sword,
Who wears no honesty. Such smiling rogues as these,
Like rats, oft bite the holy cords atwain
Which are too intrinsec‡ I'll unloose: smooth every passion
That in the natures of their lords rebels:

Corn. What, art thou mad, old fellow?

Glo. How fell you out?

† Say that.

Kent. No contraries hold more antipathy,
Than I and such a knave.

Corn. Why dost thou call him knave? What's his offence?

Kent. His countenance likes me not. §

Corn. No more, perchance, does mine, or his, or her's.

Kent. Sir, 'tis my occupation to be plain;
I have seen better faces in my time,
Than stands on any shoulder that I see
Before me at this instant.

Corn. This is some fellow, [affect
Who, having been praised for bluntness, doth
A saucy roughness; and constrains the garb,
Quite from his nature: He cannot flatter, he!—
An honest mind and plain,—he must speak
truth:

And they will take it, so; if not, he's plain.
These kind of knaves I know, which in this plainness

Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends,
Than twenty silly § ducking observants,
That stretch their duties nicely.

Kent. Sir, in good sooth, in sincere verity,
Under the allowance of your grand aspect,
Whose influence, like the wreath of radiant fire
On flickering Phœbus' front,—

Corn. What mean'st by this?

Kent. To go out of my dialect, which you dis-commend so much. I know, Sir, I am no flatterer: he that beguiled you in a plain accent, was a plain knave; which, for my part, I will not be, though I should win your displeasure to entreat me to it.

Corn. What was the offence you gave him?

Sten. Never any:

It pleas'd the king his master, very late,
To strike at me, upon his misconstruction;
When he, conjunctly and flattering his displea-
sure,

Tripp'd me behind; being down, insulted, rail'd,
And put upon him such a deal of man,
That worthy'd him, got praises of the king
For him attempting who was self-subdu'd;
And, in the fleshment of this dread exploit,
Drew on me here.

Kent. None of these rogues, and cowards,
But Ajax is their fool. ¶

Corn. Fetch forth the stocks, ho! [part,
You stubborn ancient knave, you reverend brag-
We'll teach you—

Kent. Sir, I am too old to learn:
Call not your stocks for me: I serve the king;
On whose employment I was sent to you:
You shall do small respect, show too bold malice
Against the grace and person of my master,
Stocking his messenger.

Corn. Fetch forth the stocks:
As I've life and honour, there shall he sit till noon.

Reg. Till noon! till night, my lord; and all night too.

Kent. Why, madam, if I were your father's
You should not use me so. [dog,

Reg. Sir, being his knave, I will.

stocks.

Glo. Let me beseech your grace not to do so;
His fault is much, and the good king his master
Will check him for't: your purpos'd low correction

Is such, as basest and contemn'd'st wretches,
For pilferings and most common trespasses,
Are punish'd with: the king must take it ill,
That he's so slightly valued in his messenger,
Should have him thus restrain'd.

Corn. I'll answer that.

Reg. My sister may receive it much more worse,

To have her gentleman abus'd, assaulted,
For following her affairs.—Put in his legs.—

[KENT is put in the Stocks.

Come, my good lord; away.

[Exeunt REGAN and CORNWALL.

Glo. I am sorry for thee, friend; 'tis the duke's pleasure,

Whose disposition, all the world well knows,
Will not be rubb'd nor stopp'd: I'll entreat for
thee.

Kent. Pray, do not, Sir: I have watch'd, and travell'd hard;

Some time I shall sleep out, the rest I'll whistle.
A good man's fortune may grow out at heels:
Give you good morrow!

Glo. The duke's to blame in this; 'twill be ill taken. [Exit.

Kent. Good king, that must approve the common saw!

Thou out of heaven's benediction com'st
To the warm sun!

Approach, thou beacon to this under globe,
That by thy comfortable beams I may Peruse this letter!—Nothing almost seems mira-
cles,

But misery!—I know 'tis from Cordelia;
Who hath most fortunately been inform'd
Of my obscured course; and shall find time
From this enormous state,—seeking to give Losses their remedies:—All weary and o'er-
watch'd,

Take vantage, heavy eyes, not to behold
This shameful lodging.

Fortune, good night: smile once more; y turn thy wheel! † [He sleeps

SCENE III.—A part of the Heath.

Enter EDGAR.

Edg. I heard myself proclaim'd;
And, by the happy hollow of a tree,
Escap'd the hunt. No port is free; no place,
That guard, and most unusual vigilance,
Does not attend my taking. While I may escape,

I will preserve myself; and am bethought
To take the basest and most poorest shape,
That every penury, in contempt of man,
Brought near to beast: my face I'll grime with filth;

Blanket my loins; elf ‡ all my hair in knots;
And with presented nakedness outface
The winds and persecutions of the sky.

The country gives me proof and precedent
Of Bedlam beggars, who, with roaring voices,
Strike in their numb'd and mortgag'd bare arms
Pins, wooden pricks, nails, sprigs of rosemary:

And with this horrible object, from low farms,
Poor pelting villages, sheep cotes and mills,
Sometime with lunatic bans § sometime with
prayers,

Enforce their charity,—Poor Tom! poor
Tom!

That's something yet:—Edgar I nothing am.

[Exit.

SCENE IV. Before GLOSTER'S Castle.

Enter LEAR, FOOL, and GENTLEMAN.

Lear. 'Tis strange that they should so depart from home,
And not send back my messenger.

Gent. As I heard,
The night before there was no purpose in them of this remove.

Kent. Hail to thee, noble master!

Lear. How!

Mak'st thou this shame thy pastime?

Kent. No, my lord.

Fool. Ha, ha; look! he wears cruel* garters! Horses are tied by the heads; dogs and bears by the neck; monkeys by the loins, and men by the legs: when a man is over-lusty at legs, then he wears wooden nether-stocks.†

Lear. What's he, that hath so much thy place mistook

To set thee here?

Kent. It is both he and she,
Your son and daughter.

Lear. No.

Kent. Yes.

Lear. No, I say.

Kent. I say, yea.

Lear. No, no; they would not.

Kent. Yes, they have.

Lear. By Jupiter, I swear, no.

Kent. By Juno, I swear, ay.

Lear. They durst not do't:
They could not, would not do't; 'tis worse than murder,

To do upon respect such violent outrage:
Resolve me, with all modest haste, which way
Thou might'st deserve, or they impose, this Coming from us. [usage,

Kent. My lord, when at their home
I did commend your highness' letters to them,
Ere I was risen from the place that show'd
My duty kneeling, came there a reeking post,
Stew'd in his haste, half breathless, panting
forth

From General his mistress, salutations;
Deliver'd letters, spite of intermission,
Which presently they read: on whose contents,
They summon'd up their men; straight took
horse;

Commanded me to follow, and attend [looks:
The leisure of their answer; gave me cold
And meeting here the other messenger,
Whose welcome, I perceiv'd, had poison'd mine,
(Being the very fellow that of late Display'd so saucily against your highness,)
Having more man than wit about me, drew;
He rais'd the house with loud and coward
cries:

Your son and daughter found this trespass
worth

The shame which here it suffers.

Fool. Winter's not gone yet, if the wild geese fly that way.

Fathers, that wear rags,

Do make their children blind;

But fathers, that bear bags,

Shall see their children kind.

Fortune, that arrant whore,

Ne'er turns the key to the poor.—

But, for all this, thou shalt have as many dolours‡ for thy daughters, as thou canst tell in a year.

Lear. O how this mother¶ swells up toward
my heart!

Hysterica passio! down, thou climbing sorrow,
Thy element's below!—Where is this daughter?

Kent. With the earl, Sir, here within.

Lear. Follow me not;

Stay here.

[Exit.

Gent. Made you no more offence than what you speak of?

Kent. None.

How chance the king comes with so small a train?

Fool. An thou hadst been set i'the stocks for that question, thou hadst well deserv'd it.

Kent. Why, fool?

Fool. We'll set thee to school to an ant, to teach thee there's no labouring in the water.
All that follow their noses are led by their eyes, but blind men; and there's not a nose among twenty, but can smell him that's stinking. Let go thy hold when a great wheel runs down a hill, lest it break thy neck with following it;
but the great one that goes up the hill, let him draw thee after. When a wise man gives thee better counsel, give me mine again: I would have none but knaves follow it, since a fool gives it.

That, Sir, which serves and seeks for gain,

And follows but for form,

Will pack, when it begins to rain,

And leave thee in the storm.

But I will tarry, the fool will stay,

And let the wise man fly:

The knave turns fool, that runs away;

The fool no knave, perdy.

Kent. Where learned you this, fool?

Fool. Not i'the stocks, fool.

Re-enter LEAR, with GLOSTER.

Lear. Deny to speak with me? They are sick? they are weary?

They have travell'd hard to-night? More fetches;

The images of revolt and flying off!

Fetch me a better answer.

Glo. My dear lord,

You know the fiery quality of the duke;

How unremovable and fix'd he is

In his own course.

Lear. Vengeance! plague! death! confusion!

Fiery? what quality? Why Gloster, Gloster, I'd speak with the duke of Cornwall, and his
wife.

Glo. Well, my good lord, I have inform'd them so.

Lear. Inform'd them! Dost thou understand me, man?

Glo. Ay, my good lord.

Lear. The king would speak with Cornwall;
the dear father

Would with his daughter speak, commands her
service:

Are they inform'd of this?—My breath and
blood!

Fiery! the fiery duke!—Tell the hot duke, that—
No, but not yet:—may be, he is not well;

Infirmity doth still neglect all office,
Whereto our health is bound; we are not ourselves,

When nature, being oppress'd, commands the
To suffer with the body: I'll forbear;

And am fallen out with my more headier will
To take the indispos'd and sickly fit

For the sound man.—Death on my state!

Should he sit here? This act persuades me,
That this remotion* of the duke and her

Go, tell the duke and his wife, I'd speak with
them,

Now, presently: bid them come forth and hear me,

Or at their chamber door I'll beat the drum,
Till it cry—Sleep to death.

Glo. I'd have all well betwixt you. [Exit.

Enter CORNWALL, REGAN, GLOSTER, and Servants.

Lear. Good morrow to you both.

Corn. Hail to your grace!

[KENT is set at Liberty.]

Reg. I am glad to see your highness.

Lear. Regan, I think you are; I know what reason

I have to think so: If thou shouldst not be glad, I would divorce me from thy mother's tomb, Sepulchring an adulteress.—Oh! are you free?

[To KENT.]

Some other time for that.—Beloved Regan, Thy sister's naught: O Regan, she hath tied Sharp-tooth'd unkindness, like a vulture here;

[Points to his Heart.]

I can scarce speak to thee; thou'lt not believe, Of how deprav'd a quality—O Regan!

Reg. I pray you, Sir, take patience; I have hope,

You less know how to value her desert, Than she to scant * her duty.

Lear. Say, how is that?

Reg. I cannot think my sister, in the least, Would fail her obligation: If, Sir, perchance, She have restrain'd the riots of your followers, 'Tis on such ground, and to such wholesome end,

As clears her from all blame.

Lear. My curses on her!

Reg. O Sir, you are old;

Nature in you stands on the very verge Of her confine: you should be rul'd, and led By some discretion, that discerns your state Better than you yourself: Therefore, I pray you,

That to our sister you do make return;

Say, you have wrong'd her, Sir.

Lear. Ask her forgiveness!

Do you but mark how this becomes the house +
Dear daughter, I confess that I am old,
Age is unnecessary: on my knees I beg,

[Kneeling.]

That you'll vouchsafe me ratment, bed, and food.

Reg. Good Sir, no more; these are unsightly tricks:

Return you to my sister.

Lear. Never, Regan:

She hath abated me of half my train: Look'd black upon me; struck me with her tongue,

Most serpent-like, upon the very heart:—

All the stor'd vengeance of heaven fall On her ingrateful top! Strike her young bones, You taking airs, with lameness!

Corn. Fie, fie, fie!

Lear. You climb lightnings, dart your blinding flames

Into her scornful eyes! Infect her beauty, You fen-suck'd fogs, drawn by the powerful sun, To full and blast her pride!

Reg. O the bless'd gods!

So will you wish on me, when the rash mood's on.

Lear. No, Regan, thou shalt never have my curse: *

Thy tender-hefted nature shall not give Thee o'er to harshness: her eyes are fierce, but thine

Do comfort, and not burn: 'Tis not in thee To grudge my pleasures, to cut off my train, To bandy hasty words, to scant my sizes,† And, in conclusion, to oppose the bolt Against my coming in: thou better know'st The offices of nature, bond of childhood, Effects of courtesy, dues of gratitude;

* Be wanting in. † The order of families.
‡ Contract my allowances.

Thy half o'the kingdom hast thou not forgot, Wherein I thee endow'd.

Reg. Good Sir, to the purpose.

[Trumpets within.]

Lear. Who put my man i'the stocks?

Corn. What trumpet's that?

Enter STEWARD.

Reg. I know't, my sister's: this approves her letter,

That she would soon be here.—Is your lady [Come!] Lear. This is a slave whose easy-borrow'd pride

Dwells in the fickle grace of her: he follows:—

Out, varlet, from my sight!

Corn. What means your grace?

Lear. Who stock'd my servant? Regan, I have good hope

Thou didst not know of't.—Who comes here? O heavens,

Enter GONERIL.

If you do love old men, if your sweet sway Allow * obedience, if yourselves are old, Make it your cause: send down, and take my part!—

Art not asham'd to look upon this beard?—

[To GONERIL.]

O Regan, wilt thou take her by the hand?

Gon. Why not by the hand, Sir? How have I offended?

All's not offence that indiscretion finds, And dotage trains so.

Lear. O sister, you are too tough!

Will you yet hold?—How came my man i'the stocks?

Corn. I set him there, Sir: but his own disorders

Deserv'd much less advancement.

Lear. You! did you?

Reg. I pray you, father, being weak, seem so If, till the expiration of your month, You will return and sojourn with my sister, Dismissing half your train, come then to me; I am now from home, and out of that provision

Which shall be needful for your entertainment.

Lear. Return to her, and fifty men dismiss'd!

No, rather I abjure all roofs, and choose

To wage † against the enmity o'the air;

To be a comrade with the wolf and owl,—

Necessity's sharp pinch!—Return with her?

Why the hot-blooded France, that dowerless took

Our youngest born, I could as well be brought To knee his throne, and, squire-like, pension beg

To keep base life afloat:—Return with her?

Persuade me rather to be slave and sumpster; To this detested groom.

[Looking on the STEWARD.]

Gon. At your choice, Sir.

Lear. I prithee, daughter, do not make me mad;

I will not trouble thee, my child; farewell:

We'll no more meet, no more see one another:—

But yet thou art my flesh, my blood, my daughter;

Or, rather, a disease that's in my flesh, Which I must needs call mine: thou art a boil,

A plague-sore, an embossed carbuncle, In my corrupted blood. But I'll not chide thee;

Let shame come when it will, I do not call it:

I do not bid the thunder-bearer shoot, Nor tell tales of thee to high-judging Jove: ‡

Mend, when thou canst; be better, at thy leisure:

I can be patient; I can stay with Regan,

I, and my hundred knights.

Reg. Not altogether so, Sir;

* Approve. † War. ‡ A horse that carries necessaries on a journey & Swelling.

I look'd not for you yet, nor am provided
For your fit welcome: Give ear, Sir, to my sister;

For those that using reason with your passion
Must be content to think you old, and so—
But she knows what she does.

Lear. Is this well spoken now?

Reg. I dare avouch it, Sir: What, fifty followers?

Is it not well? What should you need of more?
Yea, or so many? I sith * that both charge and danger

Speak 'gainst so great a number? How, in one house,

Should many people, under two commands,
Hold amity? 'Tis hard; almost impossible.

Gon. Why might not you, my lord, receive attendance
For those that she calls servants, or from mine?

Reg. Why not, my lord? If then they chanc'd to slack you,
We could control them: If you will come to me,

(For now I spy a danger,) I entreat you
To bring but five and twenty; to no more
Will I give place or notice.

Lear. I gave you all—

Reg. And in good time you gave it.

Lear. Made you my guardians, my depositaries:

But kept a reservation to be follow'd
With such a number: What, must I come to you

With five and twenty, Regan? said you so?
Reg. And speak it again, my lord; no more with me.

Lear. Those wicked creatures yet do look

When others are more wicked; not being the Stands in some rank of praise:—I'll go with thee; ^[To GONERIL.]

Thy fifty yet doth double five and twenty,
And thou art twice her love.

Gon. Hear me, my lord:
What need you five and twenty, ten, or five,
To follow in a house, where twice so many
Have a command to tend you?

Reg. What need you?

Lear. Oh! reason not the need: our basest beggars

Are in the poorest thing superfluous:
Allow not nature more than nature needs,
Man's life is cheap as beast's: thou art a lady;
If only to go warm were gorgeous,
Why, nature needs not what thou gorgeous wears't,

Which scarcely keeps thee warm.—But, for true need,—

You heavens, give me that patience, patience
I need!

You see me here, you gods, a poor old man,
As full of grief as age; wretched in both!
If it be you that stir these daughters' hearts
Against their father, fool me not so much
To bear it tamely; touch me with noble anger!
O! let not women's weapons, water-drops,
Stain my man's cheeks!—No, you unnatural bags,

I will have such revenges on you both,
That all the world shall—I will do such things,—
What they are, yet I know not; but they shall be

The terrors of the earth. You think I'll weep;
No, I'll not weep:—

I have full cause of weeping; but this heart Shall break into a hundred thousand flaws, or ere I'll weep:—O fool, I shall go mad!

^[Exit LEAR, GLOSTER, KENT, and FOOL.]

Corn. Let us withdraw, 'twill be a storm.

^[Storm heard at a distance.]

Reg. This house
Is little; the old man and his people cannot
Be well bestow'd.

* Since.

† Finish.

Gon. 'Tis his own blame; he hath put Himself from rest, and must needs taste his folly.

Reg. For his particular, I'll receive him
But not one follower. ^{[gladly,}

Gon. So am I purpos'd.
Where is my lord of Gloster?

^{Re-enter GLOSTER.}

Corn. Follow'd the old man forth:—he is return'd.

Glo. The king is in high rage.

Corn. Whither is he going?

Glo. He calls to horse; but will I know not whither.

Corn. 'Tis best to give him way; he leads himself.

Gon. My lord, entreat him by no means to stay.

Glo. Alack, the night comes on, and the bleak winds

Do sorely ruffle; for many miles about
There's scarce a bush.

Reg. O Sir, to wilful men,
The injuries that they themselves procure,
Must be their schoolmasters: Shut up your doors;

He is attended with a desperate train;
And what they may incense * him to, being apt
To have his ear abus'd, wisdom bids fear.

Corn. Shut up your doors, my lord; 'tis a wild night;

My Regan counsels well: come out o'the storm.
^[Exit.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Heath.—A Storm is heard, with Thunder and Lightning.

Enter KENT, and a GENTLEMAN, meeting,

Kent. Who's here, beside foul weather?

Gent. One minded like the weather, most unquietly.

Kent. I know you; Where's the king?

Gent. Contending with the fretful element:
Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea,
Or swell the curled waters 'bove the main,
That things might change, or cease: tears his white hair;

Which the impetuous blasts, with eyeless rage,
Catch in their fury, and make nothing of:
Strives in his little world of man to outscorn
The to-and-fro-conflicting wind and rain.

This night, wherein the cub-drawn bear † would
The lion and the belly-pinched wolf ^{[couch,}
Keep their fur dry, unbuzzed he runs,
And bids what will take all.

Kent. But who is with him?

Gent. None but the fool; who labours to outjest

His heart-struck injuries.

Kent. Sir, I do know you;
And dare, upon the warrant of my art, ‡
Commend a dear thing to you. There is division,

Although as yet the face of it he cover'd
With mutual cunning, 'twixt Albany and Cornwall; ^{[sings}

'Thron'd and set high) servants, who seem no
less;

Which are to France the spies and speculations
Intelligent of our state; what hath been seen,
Either in snuffs and packings § of the dukes;
Or the hard rein which both of them have borne,
Against the old kind king: or something deeper,.

Wise in our negligence, have secret feet
In some of our best ports, and are at point
To show their open banners.—Now to you:
If on my credit you dare build so far
To make your speed to Dover, you shall find
Some that will thank you, making just report
Of how unnatural and bemoaning sorrow
The king hath cause to plain.
I am a gentleman of blood and breeding;
And, from some knowledge and assurance, offer
This office to you.]

Gent. I will talk further with you.

Kent. No, do not.

For confirmation that I am much more
Than my out wall, open this purse, and take
What it contains: if you shall see Cordelia,
(As fear not but you shall,) show her this ring;
And she will tell you who your fellow† is
That yet you do not know. Fie on this storm!
I will go seek the king.

Gent. Give me your hand: Have you no more to say?

Kent. Few words, but to effect, more than all
yet:

That, when we have found the king, (in which your pain is,) he that first lights on him,
Holla the other. [Exeunt severally.]

SCENE II.—Another Part of the Heath.—
Storm continues.

Enter LEAR and FOOL.

Lear. Blow, wind, and crack your cheeks!
rage! blow!

You cataracts, and hurricanoes, spout
Till you have drench'd our steeples, drown'd the cocks!

You sulphurous and thought-executing† fires,
Vault couriers‡ to oak-cleaving thunderbolts, Singe my white head! And thou, all-shaking thunder,

Strike flat the thick rotundity o'the world!
Crack nature's moulds, all germinous spill at once,
That make ingrateful man!

Fool. O nuncle, court holy-water|| in a dry house is better than this rain-water out o'door.
Good nuncle, in, and ask thy daughter's blessing here's a night pities neither wise men nor fools.

Lear. Rumble my bellyfull! Spit, fire, spout,
rain!

Nor rain, wind, thunder, fire, are my daughter! tax not you, you elements, with unkindness;
I never gave you kingdom, call'd you children;
You owe me no subscription;¶ why then, let fall

Your horrible pleasure; here I stand, your
A poor, infirm, weak, and despis'd old man:—
But yet I call you servile ministers,
That have with two pernicious daughters join'd
Your high engender'd battles, 'gainst a head
So old and white as this. O! O! 'tis foul!

Fool. He that has a house to put his head in,

And turn his sleep to wake.*

—for there was never yet fair woman, but she made mouths in a glass.

Enter KENT.

Lear. No, I will be the pattern of all patience;
I will say nothing.

Kent. Who's there?

Fool. Marry, here's grace, and a cod-piece;
that's a wise man, and a fool.

Kent. Alas, Sir, are you here? things that love night, [shakes]
Love not such nights as these; the wrathful
Gallow* the very wanderers of the dark,
And make them keep their caves: Since I was man, [der,
Such sheets of fire, such bursts of horrid thunder,
Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Remember to have heard; man's nature cannot carry

The affliction, nor the fear.

Lear. Let the great gods,
That keep this dreadful pother† o'er our heads,
Find out their enemies now. Tremble, thou
wretch,

That hast within thee undivulged crimes,
Unwhipp'd of justice: Hide thee, thou bloody
hand;

Thou perjur'd, and thou simular; man of virtue
That art incestuous: Castiff, to pieces shake,
That under covert and convenient seeming‡ Hast practis'd on man's life!—Close pent-up guilt,

Rive your concealing continents, and cry
These dreadful summoners grace.—I am a
man,

More sinn'd against than sinning.

Kent. Alack, bare-headed!
Gracious my lord, hard by here is a hovel;
Some friendship will it lend you 'gainst the tempest;

Repose you there: while I to this hard house,
(More hard than is the stone whereof 'tis rais'd;
Which even but now, demanding§ after you,
Demed me to come in,) return, and force
Their scantied courtesies.

Lear. My wits begin to turn.—

Come on, my boy: How dost, my boy? Art
cold?

I am cold myself.—Where is this straw, my fellow?

The art of our necessities is strange, ●
That can make vile things precious. Come, your hovel. [heart]

Poor fool and knave, I have one part in my
That's sorry yet for thee.

Fool. He that has a little tiny wit,—

With heigh, ho, the wind and the rain,—

Must make content with his fortunes fit;

For the rain it raineth every day.

Lear. True, my good boy.—Come, bring us to this hovel. [Exeunt LEAR and KENT.]

Fool. This is a brave night to cool a courte-zan.—I'll speak a prophecy ere I go;

When priests are more in word than matter;
When brewers mar their malt with water;
When nobles are their tailor's tutors;
No heretics burn'd, but wenches' suitors:
When every case in law is right;
No squire in debt, nor no poor knight;
When slanders do not live in tongues;
Nor cutpurses come not to throngs;
When usurers tell their gold i'the field;
And bawds and whores do churches build:—
Then shall the realm of Albion
Come to great confusion.

Then comes the time, who lives to see't,
That going shall be us'd with feet.

This prophecy Merlin shall make; for I live before his time. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—A Room in GLOSTER'S Castle.

Enter GLOSTER and EDMUND.

Glo. Alack, Edmund. I like not this unnatural dealing: When I desired their leave that I might pity him, they took from me the use of mine own house; charged me, on pain of their perpetual displeasure, neither to speak of him, entreat for him, nor any way sustain him.

Edm. Most savage, and unnatural!

Glo. Go to; say you nothing: There is division between the duke; and a worse matter than that: I have received a letter this night;—'tis dangerous to be spoken;—I have locked the letter in my closet: these injuries the king now bears will be revenged at home; there is part of a power already footed: * we must incline to the king. I will seek him, and privily relieve him; go you, and maintain talk with the duke, that my charity be not of him perceived: If he ask for me, I am ill, and gone to bed. If I die for it, as no less is threatened me, the king my old master must be relieved. There is some strange thing toward, Edmund; pray you, be careful.

Edm. This courtesy, forbid thee, shall the duke

Instantly know; and of that letter too:—This seems a fair deserving, and must draw me That which my father loses; no less than all: The younger rises, when the old doth fall.

Exit.

SCENE IV.—A Part of the Heath, with a Hotel.

Enter LEAR, KENT, and FOOL.

Kent. Here is the place, my lord; good, my lord, enter:

The tyranny of the open night's too rough For nature to endure. (Storm still.)

Lear. Let me alone.

Kent. Good my lord, enter here.

Lear. Will break my heart?

Kent. I'd rather break mine own: Good my lord, enter.

Lear. Thou think'st 'tis much, that this contentious storm

Invades us to the skin; so 'tis to thee; But where the greater malady is fix'd, The lesser is scarce felt. Thou'dst shun a bear: But if thy flight lay toward the raging sea, Thou'dst meet the bear i' the mouth. When the mind's free,

The body's delicate: the tempest in my mind Doth from my senses take all feeling else, Save what beats there.—Filial ingratitude! Is it not as this month should tear this hand, For lifting food to't?—But I will punish home:—No, I will weep no more.—In such a night To shut me out!—Pour on; I will endure:—In such a night as this! O Regan, Goneril!—Your old kind father, whose frank heart gave all,—

Oh! that way madness lies: let me shun that; No more of that.—

Kent. Good my lord, enter here.

Lear. Pr'ythee, go in thyself; seek thine own ease:

This tempest will not give me leave to ponder On things would hurt me more.—But I'll go in: In, boy; go first.—(To the FOOL.) You houseless poverty,—

Nay, get thee in. I'll pray, and then I'll sleep.—(FOOL goes in.)

Poor naked wretches, wheresoe'er you are, That bite the pelt of this pitiless storm, How shall your houseless heads, and unfed sides,

Your loop'd and window'd raggedness, defend you

* A force already landed.

From seasons such as these? Oh! I have ta'en Too little care of this! Take physic, pomp! Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel; That thou may'st shake the superflux to them, And show the heavens more just.

Edg. (Within.) Fathom and half, fathom and half! Poor Tom!

(The FOOL runs out from the Hotel.)

Fool. Come not in here, nuncle, here's a spirit.

Help me, help me!

Kent. Give me thy hand.—Who's there?

Fool. A spirit, a spirit; he says his name's poor Tom.

Kent. What art thou that dost grumble there i' the straw?

Come forth.

Enter EDGAR, disguised as a Madman.

Edg. Away! the foul fiend follows me!—Through the sharp hawthorn blows the cold wind.—

Humph! go to thy cold bed, and warm thee.

Lear. Hast thou given all to thy two daughters? And art thou come to this?

Edg. Who gives any thing to poor Tom? whom the foul fiend hath led through fire and through flame, through ford and whirlpool, over bog and quagmire; that hath laid knives under his pillow, and halters in his pew; set ratsbane by his porridge; made him proud of heart, to ride on a bay trotting-horse over four-inch bridges, to course his own shadow for a trator:—Bless thy five wits! Tom's a-cold. O, do de, do de, do de.—Bless thee from whirlwinds, star-blasting, and taking! * Do poor Tom some charity, whom the foul fiend vexes: There could I have him now,—and there,—and there,—and there again, and there.

(Storm continues.)

Lear. What, have his daughters brought him in to this pass?

Couldst thou save nothing? Didst thou give them all?

Fool. Nay, he reserved a blanket, else we had been all ashamed.

Lear. Now, all the plagues that in the pendulous air

Hang fated o'er men's faults, light on thy daughters!

Kent. He hath no daughters, Sir.

Lear. Death, traitor! nothing could have subdu'd nature

To such a lowliness, but his unkind daughters.—Is it the fashion, that discarded fathers Should have thus little mercy on their flesh? Judicious punishment! 'twas this flesh begot Those pelican daughters.

Edg. Pillicock sat on pillicock's-bill;—

Halloo, halloo, loo, loo!

Fool. This cold night will turn us all to fools and madmen.

Edg. Take heed o'the foul field: Obey thy parents; keep thy word justly; swear not; commit not with man's sworn spouse; set not thy sweet heart on proud array: Tom's a-cold.

Lear. What hast thou been?

Edg. A serving-man, proud in heart and mind; that culled my hair; wore gloves in my cap; served the lust of my mistress' heart, and did the act of darkness with her; swore as many oaths as I spake words, and broke them in the sweet face of heaven; one, that slept in the contriving of lust, and waked to do it: Wine loved I deeply; dice dearly; and in woman, out-paramoured the Turk: False of heart, light of ear, bloody of hand; Hog in sloth, fox in stealth, wolf in greediness, dog in madness, lion in prey. Let not the creaking of shoes, nor the rustling of silks, betray thy poor heart to women: Keep thy foot out of brothels, thy hand out of plackets, thy pen from lenders' books, and defy the foul fiend.—Still through the hawthorn blows the cold wind: Says suum, mun, ha no nonny, dolphiu my boy, my boy, sessa; let him trot by.

[Storm still continues.]

Lear. Why, thou wert better in thy grave, than to answer with thy uncovered body this extremity of the skies.—Is man no more than this? Consider him well: Thou owest the worm no silk, the beast no hide, the sheep no wool, the cat no perfume:—Ha! here's three of us are sophisticated!—Thou art the thing itself: unaccommodated man is no more but such a poor, bare, forked animal as thou art.—Off, off, you lendings:—Come; unbutton here.*

[Tearing off his clothes.]

fool. Pr'ythee, nuncle, be contented; this is a naughty night to swim in.—Now a little fire in a wild field were like an old lecher's heart; a small spark, all the rest of his body cold.—Look, here comes a walking fire.

Lug. This is the foul fiend Filibbertigibbet: he begins at curfew, and walks till the first cock; he gives the web and the pin,† squints the eye, and makes the hare-lip; mildews the white wheat, and hurts the poor creature of earth.

Kent How fares your grace?

Enter GLOSTER, with a Torch.

Lear. What's he?

Kent. Who's there? What is't you seek?

Glo. What are you there? Your names?

Edg. Poor Tom; that eats the swimming frog, the toad, the tadpole, the wall-newt, and the water; & that in the fury of his heart, when the foul fiend rages, eats cow-dung for sallies; swallows the old rat, and the ditch-dog; drinks the green mantle of the standing pool; who is whipped from tithing to tithing, & stocked, punished, and imprisoned; who hath had three suits to his back, six shirts to his body, horse to ride, and weapon to wear,—

*But mice, and rats, and such small deer,
Have been Tom's food for seven long year.*

Beware my follower:—Peace, Smolkin; ‡ peace, thou fiend!

Glo. What, hath your grace no better company?

Edg. The prince of darkness is a gentleman; Mado he's call'd, and Mahu. §

Glo. Our flesh and blood, my lord, is grown so vile,

That it doth hate what gets it.

Edg. Poor Tom's a-cold.

Glo. Go in with me; my duty cannot suffer To obey in all your daughter's hard commands: Though their injunction be to bar my doors, And let this tyrannous night take hold upon you;

Yet have I ventur'd to come seek you out, And bring you where both fire and food is ready.

‡ Name of a spirit. § The chief devil.

Lear. I'll talk a word with this same learned Theban:—

What is your study?

Edg. How to prevent the fiend, and to kill vermin.

Lear. Let me ask you one word in private.

Kent. Importune him once more to go, my lord,

His wits begin to unsettle.

Glo. Canst thou blame him?

His daughters seek his death:—Ah! that good Kent!

He said it would be thus:—Poor banish'd man!

Thou say'st the king grows mad; I'll tell thee, fiend,

I am almost mad myself: I had a son, Now outlaw'd from my blood; he sought my life,

But lately, very late; I lov'd him, friend,—

No father his son dearer: true to tell thee, [Storm continues,

The grief hath craz'd my wits. What a night's this!

I do beseech your grace,—

Lear. Oh! cry you mercy, Noble philosopher, your company.

Edg. Tom's a-cold.

Glo. In, fellow, there, to the hovel, keep thee warm.

Lear. Come, let's in all.

Kent. This way, my lord.

Lear. With him;

I will keep still with my philosopher.

Kent. Good, my lord, sooth him; let him take the fellow.

Glo. Take him you on.

Kent. Sirrah, come on; go along with us.

Lear. Come, good Athenian.

Glo. No words, no words:

Hush.

*Edg. Child * Rowland to the dark tower came*

*His word was still,—Fie, foh, and fum,
I smell the blood of a British man.*

[Exit.]

SCENE V.—A Room in GLOSTER's Castle.

Enter CORNWALL and EDMUND.

Corn. I will have my revenge, ere I depart his house.

Edm. How, my lord, I may be censured, that nature thus gives way to loyalty: something fears me to think of.

Corn. I now perceive it was not altogether your brother's evil disposition made him seek his death: but a provoking merit, set a-work by a reproveable badness in himself.

Edm. How malicious is my fortune, that I must repent to be just! This is the letter he spoke of, which approves him an intelligent party to the advantages of France. O heavens! that this treason were not, or not I the detector!

Corn. Go with me to the duchess.

Edm. If the matter of this paper be certain, you have mighty business in hand.

Corn. True, or false, it hath made thee earl of Gloster. Seek out where thy father is, that he may be ready for our apprehension.

Edm. [Aside.] If I find him comforting the king, it will stuff his suspicion more fully.—I will persevere in my course of loyalty, though the conflict be sore between that and my blood.

Corn. I will lay trust upon thee; and thou shalt find a dearer father in my love.

[Exit.]

SCENE VI.—A Chamber in a Farm-House, adjoining the Castle.Enter GLOSTER, LEAR, KENT, FOOL, and EDGAR.Glo. Here is better than the open air: take thankfully: I will piece out the comfort with yet addition I can: I will not be long from you.Kent. All the power of his wits has given ay to his impatience:—The gods reward your kindness!Edg. Frateretto calls me; and tells me, Nero is an angler in the lake of darkness. Pray, innocent,* and beware the foul fiend.Fool. Pr'ythee, nuncle, tell me, whether a madman be a gentleman, or a yeoman?Lear. A king, a king!Fool. No; he's a yeoman, that has a gentleman to his son: for he's a mad yeoman, that sees his son a gentleman before him.Lear. To have a thousand with red burning spits

Edg. The foul fiend bites my back.Fool. He's mad, that trusts in the tameness of a wolf, a horse's health, a boy's love, or a whore's oath.Lear. It shall be done, I will arraign them
straight:—

Come, sit thou here, most learned justicer:—

[To EDGAR.]Thou, sapient Sir, sit here. [To the FOOL.]

Now, you she-foes!—

Edg. Look, where he stands and glares!—

Wantest thou eyes at trial, madam?—

Edg. Come o'er the bourn, † Bessy, to me:Fool. Her boat hath a leak,

And she must not speak

Why she dares not come over to thee.

Edg. The foul fiend haunts poor Tom in the voice of a nightingale. Hopdance cries in Tom's belly for two white herrings. Croak not, black angel; I have no food for thee.Kent. How do you, Sir? Stand you not so amaz'd:

Will you lie down and rest upon the cushions?

Lear. I'll see their trial first:—Bring in the evidence.—

Thou robbed man of justice, take thy place;

[To EDGAR.]

And thou, his yoke-fellow of equity,

Sit you too. [To KENT.]Edg. Let us deal justly.Sleepest, or wakest thou, jolly shepherd?Thy sheep be in the corn;And for one blast of thy minikin mouth,Thy sheep shall take no harm.Poor! the cat is grey.Lear. Arraign her first; 'tis Goneril. I here take my oath before this honourable assembly,

Goneril?Lear. She cannot deny it.Fool. Cry you mercy, I took you for a joint-stool.Lear. And here's another, whose warp'd looks proclaimWhat store her heart is made of.—Stop her there!
Arms, arms, sword, fire!—Corruption in the place!

False justicer, why hast thou let her 'scape?

Jdg. Bless thy five wits!Kent. O pity!—Sir, where is the patience now,
That you so oft have boasted to retain?Edg. My tears begin to take his part so much.
They'll mar my counterfeiting. [Aside.]Lear. The little dogs and all, [mc.]

Avauut, you curs!

Be thy mouth or black or white,

Tooth that poisons if it bite;

Mastiff, grey-hound, mongrel grun,

Hound, or spaniel, brach, or lyn; *

Or bobtail tike, or trundle-tail;

Tom will make them weep and wail:

For, with throwing thus my head,

Dogs leap the hatch, and all are fled. †

Do de, de de. Sessa. Come, march to wakes and fairs, and market towns:—Poor Tom, thy horn is dry.Lear. Then let them anatomize Regan; see what breeds about her heart: Is there any cause in nature, that makes these hard hearts?—You,
Sir, I entertain you for one of my hundred:
only, I do not like the fashion of your garments:
you will say, they are Persian attire; but let them be changed. [To EDGAR.]Kent. Now, good my lord, lie here, and rest awhile.Lear. Make no noise, make no noise; draw the curtains: So, so, so: We'll go to supper this morning; so, so, so.Fool. And I'll go to bed at noon.

Re-enter GLOSTER.

Glo. Come hither, friend: Where is the king my master?Kent. Here, Sir: but trouble him not, his wits are gone.Glo. Good friend, I pr'ythee take him in thy arms;

I have o'er-heard a plot of death upon him:

There is a litter ready; lay him in't,

And drive towards Dover, friend, where thou shalt meet [ter.]

If thou shouldst dally half an hour, his life,

With thine, and all that offer to defend him,

Stand in assured loss: Take up, take up;

And follow me, that will to some provision

Give thee quick conduct.

Kent. Oppress'd nature sleeps:—

This rest might yet have balm'd thy broken senses,

Which, if convenience will not allow,

Stand in hard cure.—Come, help to bear thy

master;

Thou must not stay behind. [To the FOOL.]Glo. Come, come, away.[Exit KENT, GLOSTER and the FOOL.]Edg. When we our betters see bearing our

woes,

We scarcely think our miseries our foes,

Who alone suffers, suffers most 't the mind;

Leaving free things, and happy shows, behind:

But then the mind much sufferance doth o'erskip,

When grief hath mates, and bearing fellowship.

How light and portable my pain seems now,

When that which makes me bend, makes the king bow!

He childed, as I father'd!—Tom, away:

Mark the high noises; † and thyself bewray;

When false opinion, whose wrong thought denies

thee,

In thy just proof, repeals, and reconciles thee.

What will hap more to-night, safe scape thee

the king!

SCENE VII.—A Room in GLOSTER'S Castle.

and Servants.Corn.* Post speedily to my lord your husband;

show him this letter!—the army of France is landed:—Seek out the villain Gloucester.

[Exeunt some of the Servants.]

Reg. Hang him instantly.

Gon. Pluck out his eyes.

Corn. Leave him to my displeasure.—Edmund, keep you our sister company; the revenges we are bound to take upon your traitorous father, are not fit for your beholding. Advise the duke (where you are going) to a most festinate preparation; we are bound to the like. Our posts shall be swift, and intelligent betwixt us. Farewell, dear sister;—farewell, my lord of Gloucester.*

[Enter STEWARD.]

How now? Where's the king?

Stew. My lord of Gloucester hath convey'd him hence:

Some five or six and thirty of his knights, Hot questriss; after him, met him at the gate; Who, with some other of the lord's dependants, Are gone with him towards Dover: where they boast

To have well-armed friends.

Corn. Get houses for your mistress.

Gon. Farewell, sweet lord, and sister.

[Exit GONERIL and EDMUND.]

Corn. Edmund, farewell.—Go, seek the traitor Gloucester,

Pinion him like a thief, bring him before us:

[Exeunt other Servants.]

Though well we may not pass upon his life Without the form of justice; yet our power Shall do a courtesy; to our wrath, which men May blame, but not control. Who's there? The traitor?

[Re-enter SERVANTS, with GLOSTER.]

Reg. Ingrateful fox! 'tis he.

Corn. Bind fast his corky arms.

Glo. What mean your graces?—Good my friends, consider

You are my guests: do me no foul play, friends.

Corn. Bind him, I say.

[Servants bind him.]

Reg. Hard, hard:—O filthy traitor!

Glo. Unmerciful lady as you are, I am none.

Corn. To this chair bind him:—Villain, thou shalt find—

[REGAN plucks his Beard.]

Glo. By the kind gods, 'tis most ignobly done, To pluck me by the beard.

Reg. So white, and such a traitor!

Glo. Naughty lady,

These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,

Will quicken, || and accuse thee: I am your host; With robbers' hands, my hospitable favours ¶ You should not tuffle thus. What will you do?

Corn. Come, Sir, what letters had you late from France?

Reg. Be simple-answer'd, for we know the truth.

Corn. And what confederacy have you with the traitors

Late footed in the kingdom?

Reg. To whose hands have you sent the lunatic king?

Speak.

Glo. I have a letter guessingly set down, Which came from one that's of a neutral heart, And not from one oppos'd.

Corn. Cunning.

Reg. And false.

Corn. Where hast thou sent the king?

Glo. To Dover.

Reg. Wherefore

To Dover? Wast thou not charg'd at thy peril—

Corn. Wherefore to Dover? Let him first answer that.

Glo. I am tied to the stake, and I must stand the course.

Reg. Wherefore to Dover?

Glo. Because I would not see thy cruel nail Pluck out his poor old eyes; nor thy fierce fist In his anointed flesh stick boarish fangs.

The sea, with such a storm as his bare head In hell-black night endur'd, would have buoy'd up, [heart, And quench'd the stelled fires: yet, poor old He help the heavens to rain.

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time Thou shouldst have said, Good porter, turn the key;

All cruels else subscrib'd:—But I shall see The winged vengeance overtake such children.

Corn. See it shalt thou never:—Fellows, hold the chair:

Upon these eyes of thine I'll set my foot.

[GLOSTER is held down in the Chair while CORNWALL plucks out one of his Eyes, and sets his Foot on it.]

Glo. He, that will think to live till he be old Give me some help:—O cruel! O ye gods!

Reg. One side will mock another; the other too.

Corn. If you see vengeance,—

Serv. Hold your hand, my lord:

I have serv'd you ever since I was a child; But better service have I never done you, Than now to bid you hold.

Reg. How now, you dog?

Serv. If you did wear a beard upon your chin,

I'd shake it on this quarrel: What do you mean?

Corn. My villain!

[Draus, and runs at him.]

Serv. Nay, then come on, and take the chance of auger.

[Draus. They fight. CORNWALL is wounded.]

Reg. Give me thy sword.—[To another Serv.]

A peasant stand up thus!

[Snatches a Sword, comes behind, and stabs him.]

Serv. Oh! I am slain!—My lord, you have one eye left

To see some mischief on him:—O! [Dies.

Corn. Lest it see more, prevent it:—Out, vile jelly!

Where is thy lustre now!

[Tears out GLOSTER's other Eye, and throws it on the ground.]

Glo. All dark and comfortless.—Where's my son Edmund?

Edmund, enkindle all the sparks of nature, To quit this horrid act.

Reg. Out, treacherous villain!

Thou call'st on him that hates thee: it was he That made the overture of thy treasons to us; Who is too good to pity thee.

Glo. O my follies!

Then Edgar was abus'd.—

Kind gods, forgive me that, and prosper him!

Reg. Go, thrust him out at gates, and let him smell

His way to Dover.—How is't, my lord? How look you?

Corn. I have receiv'd a hurt:—Follow me, lady.—

Turn out that eyeless villain:—throw this slave Upon the dunghill—Regan, I bleed apace: Untimely comes this hurt: Give me your arm.

[Exit CORNWALL, led by REGAN:—Servants unbind GLOSTER, and lead him out.]

1 Serv. I'll never care what wickedness I do, If this man comes to good.

2 Serv. If she live long, And, in the end, meet the whole course of death, Women will all turn monsters.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Heath.

Enter EDGAR.

Edg. Yet better thus, and known to be con-temn'd [worst],
Than still contemn'd and flatter'd.† To be
The lowest and most dejected thing of fortune,
Stands still in esperance,† lives not in fear:
The lamentable change is from the best;
The worst returns to laughter. Welcome then,
Thou unsubstantial air, that I embrace!
The wretch, that thou hast blown unto the worst, [here?]
Owes nothing to thy blasts. But who comes

Enter GLOSTER, led by an OLD MAN.

My father, poorly led?—World, world, O world!
But that thy strange mutations† make us hate
thee,
Life would not yield to age.

Old Man. O my good lord, I have been your tenant, and your father's tenant, these fourscore years.

Glo. Away, get thee away; good friend, be-thy comforts can do me no good at all, [gone]:
Thee they may hurt.

Old Man. Alack, Sir, you cannot see your way.

Glo. I have no way, and therefore want no
eyes;
I stumbled when I saw: Full oft 'tis seen,
Our mean, secures us,† and our mere defects
Prove our commodities.—Ah! dear son Edgar,
The food of thy abused father's wrath!
Might I but live to see thee in my touch,
I'd say, I had eyes again!

Old Man. How now? Who's there?
Edg. [Aside.] O gods! Who is't can say, I am at the worst!†

I am worse than e'er I was.

Old Man. 'Tis poor mad Tom.

Edg. [Aside.] And worse I may be yet: The worst is not,

So long as we can say, This is the worst.

Old Man. Fellow, where goest?

Glo. Is it a beggar-man?

Old Man. Madman and beggar too.

Glo. He has some reason, else he could not beg.

I'th last night's storm I such a fellow saw;
Which made me think a man a worm: My son
Came then into my mind; and yet my mind
Was then scarce friends with him: I have heard more since:

As flies to wanton boys, are we to the gods;
They kill us for their sport.

Edg. How should this be?

Bad is the trade must play the fool to sorrow,
Ang'ring itself and others. [Aside.]—Bless thee, master!

Glo. Is that the naked fellow?

Old Man. Ay, my lord.

Glo. Then, pr'ythee, get thee gone: If, for my sake,

Thou wilt o'ertake us, hence a mile or twain,
I'th way to Dover, do it for ancient love;
And bring some covering for this naked soul,

* Madman.

† I.e. It is better to be thus contemned and know it, than to be flattered by those who secretly contemn us.
‡ In hope

‡ Changes?

Whom I'll entreat to lead me.

Old Man. Alack, Sir, he's mad.

Glo. 'Tis the time's plague, when madmen lead the blind.

Do as I bid thee, or rather do thy pleasure;
Above the rest he gone.

Old Man. I'll bring him the best 'parel that I have,

Come on't what will. [Exit.]

Glo. Sirrah, naked fellow.

Edg. Poor Tom's a-cold—I cannot daub* it further. [Aside.]

Glo. Come hither, fellow.

Edg. [Aside.] And yet I must.—Bless thy sweet eyes, they bleed.

Glo. Know'st thou the way to Dover?

Edg. Both stile and gate, horse-way and footpath. Poor Tom hath been scared out of his good wits: Bless the good man from the foul fiend!

[Five fiends have been in poor Tom at once;
of lust, as Obidicut; Hobbidance, prince of dumbness; Mahu, of stealing; Modo of murder;
and Flibbertigibbet, of mopping and mowing; who since possesses chamber-maids and waiting-women. So, bless thee, master!]

Glo. Here, take this purse, thou whom the heaven's plagues

Have humbled to all strokes: that I am wretched, Makes thee the happier:—Heavens, deal so
still!

Let the superfluous, and lust-dieted man,
That slaves your ordinance,† that will not see Because he doth not feel, feel your power quickly;

So distribution should undo excess, [Dover?]
And each man have enough.—Dost thou know

Edg. Ay, master.

Glo. There is a cliff, whose high and bending head

Looks fearfully in the confined deep:†

Bring me but to the very brink of it,

And I'll repair the misery thou dost bear,

With something rich above me: from that place
I shall no leading need.

Edg. Give me thy arm;

Poor Tom shall lead thee. [Exit]

SCENE II.—Before the Duke of ALBANY'S Palace.Enter GONERIL and EDMUND; STEWARD meeting them.

Gon. Welcome, my lord: I marvel, our mild husband [master]

Not met us on the way:—Now, where's your Stew. Madam, within; but never man so
chang'd,

I told him of the army that was landed;

He smil'd at it: I told him, you were coming;

His answer was, The worse: of Gloucester's treachery,

And of the loyal service of his son,

When he inform'd him, then he call'd me sot;

And told me, I had turn'd the wrong side
out:—

What most he should dislike, seems pleasant
What like, offensive. [To him;

Gon. Then shall you go no further,

[To EDMUND.

It is the cowish terror of his spirit,
That dares not undertake: he'll not feel
wrong,

Which tie him to an answer: Our wishes, on the way [ther;

May prove effects.† Back, Edmund, to my bro-
Hasten his musters, and conduct his powers:

I must change arms at home, and give the distaff

Into my husband's hands. This trusty servant Shall pass between us: ere long you are like to
hear,

† I.e. To make it subject to us instead of acting in obedience to it. ‡ I.e. Our wishes on the road may be completed.

If you dare venture in your own behalf,
A mistress' command. Wear this; spare speech;
[Giving a Favour.]
Decline your head: this kiss, if it durst speak,
Would stretch thy spirits up into the air;
Conjunctive, and fare thee well.

Edm. Your's in the ranks of death.

Gon. My most dear Gloucester!

O, the difference of man, and man! To thee,
A woman's services are due; my fool
Usurps my bed.

Steu. Madam, here comes my lord.

[Exit STEWARD.]

Enter ALBANY.

Gon. I have been worth the whistle.*

Alb. O Gloucester!

You are not worth the dust which the rude wind

Blows in your face.—I fear your disposition:
That nature, which contemns its origin,
Cannot be border'd certain in itself;
She that herself will sliver and disbranch
From her material sap, perforce must wither,
And come to deadly use.

Gon. No more; the text is foolish.

Alb. Wisdom and goodness to the vile seem vile:

Filths savour but themselves. What have you
done?

Tigers, not daughters, what have you per-
form'd?

A father, and a gracious aged man,
Whose reverence the head lugg'd bear would lick,

Must barbarous, most degenerate! have you maddened.

Could my good brother suffer you to do it?

A man, a prince, by him so benefited?

If that the heavens do not their visible spirits,

Send quickly down to tame these vile offences,

'Twill come,

Humanity must perforce prey on itself,

Like monsters of the deep.

Gon. Milk-liver'd man!

That bear'st a cheek for blows, a head for
wrongs;

Who hast not in thy brows an eye discerning Thine honour from thy suffering; that not know'st,

Fools do those villains pity, who are punish'd
Ere they have done their mischief. Where's thy drum?

France spreads his banners in our noiseless
land;

With plumed helm thy slayer begins threats;

Whilst thou, a moral fool, sit'st still, and cry'st,
Alack! why does he so?

Alb. See thyself, a devil!

Proper deformity seems not in the fiend

So horrid, as in woman.

Gon. O vain fool!

Alb. Thou changed and self-cover'd thing,
for shame,

Be-monster not thy feature. Were it my fitness
To let these hands obey my blood,†

They are apt enough to dislocate and tear

Thy flesh and bones:—Howe'er thou art a fiend,
A woman's shape doth shield thee.

Gon. Marry, your manhood now!

Enter a MESSENGER.

Alb. What news?

Mess. O my good lord, the Duke of Corn-wall's dead;

Slain by his servant, going to put out

The other eye of Gloucester.

Alb. Gloucester's eyes!

Mess. A servant that he bred, thrill'd with remorse,

* Worth calling for.

† Inclination

† Tear off.

Oppos'd against the act, bending his sword
To his great master, who, thereat enrag'd, Flew on him, and amongst them fell'd him
dead;

But not without that harmful stroke, which since

Hath pluck'd him after.

Alb. This shows you are above,

You justicers, that these our nether crime—

So speedily can venge!—But, O poor Gloucester!

Lo! he his other eye?

Mess. Both, my good lord.—

This letter, madam, craves a speedy answer;

'Tis from your sister.

Gon. [Aside.] One way I like this well;

But being widow, and my Gloucester with her,

May all the building in my fancy pluck

Upon my hateful life: Another way,

The news is not so tart.—I'll read and answer.

[Exit.]

Alb. Where was his son, when they did take his eyes?

Mess. Come with my lady hither.

Alb. He is not here.

Mess. No, my good lord; I met him back
again.

Alb. Knows he the wickedness?

Mess. Ay, my good lord; 'twas he inform'd against him;

And quit the house on purpose, that their punishment

Might have the freer course.

Alb. Gloucester, I live

To thank thee for the love thou show'st the
king,

And to revenge thine eyes.—Come hither,
friend;

Tell me what more thou knowest. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—The French Camp near Dover
Enter KENT and a GENTLEMAN.

Kent. Why the king of France is so suddenly gone back know you the reason?

Gent. Something he left imperfect in the state,
Which since his coming forth is thought of,
which

Imports to the kingdom so much fear and danger,

That his personal return was most requir'd,
And necessary.

Kent. Who hath he left behind him general?

Gent. The Marschal of France, Monsieur le Fer.

Kent. Did your letters pierce the queen to any demonstration of grief?

Gent. Ay, Sir; she took them, read them in my presence;

And now and then an ample tear trill'd down

Her delicate cheek: it seem'd, she was a queen

O'er her passion; who, most rebel-like

Sought to be king o'er her.

Kent. Oh! then it mov'd her.

Gent. Not to a rage: patience and sorrow strove

Who should express her goodliest. You have Sunshine and rain at once: her smiles and
tears

Were like a better day: Those happy smiles,

That play'd on her ripe lip, seem'd not to know

What guests were in her eyes; which parted
thence,

As pearls from diamonds dropp'd.—In brief,
sorrow

Would be a rarity most belov'd, if all

Could so become it.

Gent. Made she no verbal question?

Kent. 'Faith, once, or twice, she heav'd the name of father

Pantingly forth, as if it press'd her heart;

Cried, Sisters! sisters!—Shame of ladies!

sisters!

Kent! father! sisters! What? 't' the storm?

't' the night?

• Discourse, conversation.

It pity not be believed! *—There she shook her holy water from her heavenly eyes, and clamour moisten'd; then away she started to deal with grief alone.

Kent. It is the stars,
 the spheres, globe us, govern our conditions; † in one self mate and mate could not beget different issues. You spoke not with her alone?

Gent. No.
Kent. Was this before the king return'd?

Gent. No, since.
Kent. Well, Sir: The poor distress'd Lear is in the town:
 'No sometime, in his better tune, remembers that we are come about, and by no means will yield to see his daughter.

Gent. Why, good Sir?

Kent. A sovereign shame so elbows him: his own unkindness,

That stripp'd her from his benediction, turn'd
 her

To foreign casualties, gave her dear rights
 To his dog-hearted daughters,—these things sting

His mind so venomously, that burning shame
 Detains him from Cordelia.

Gent. Alack, poor gentleman!

Kent. Of Albany's and Cornwall's powers;
 you heard not?

Gent. 'Tis so; they are afoot.

Kent. Well, Sir, I'll bring you to our master
 Lear,

And leave you to attend him: some dear cause
 Will in concealment wrap me up awhile;
 When I am known aright, you shall not grieve
 Lending me this acquaintance. I pray you, go Along with me. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—The same.—A Tent.

Enter CORDELIA, PHYSICIAN, and SOLDIERS.

Cor. Alack, 'tis he; why, he was met even
 now

As mad as the vex'd sea: singing aloud;
 Crown'd, with rank fumiter, and furrow weeds,
 With barlocks, hemlock, nettles, cuckoo-
 flowers,

Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow
 In our sustaining corn.—A century send forth;
 Search every acre in the high grown field,
 And bring him to our eye.

[Exit an OFFICER.]

What can man's wisdom do,
 In the restoring him bereaved sense?
 He, that helps him, take all my outward worth.

Phys. There is means, madam:
 Our foster-nurse of nature is repose,
 The which he lacks; that to provoke in him,
 Are many simples operative, whose power
 Will close the eye of anguish.

Cor. All bless'd secrets,
 All you unpublish'd virtues of the earth,
 Sprung with my tears! be aidant, and remediate,
 In the good man's distress!—Seek, seek for
 him;

Lest his ungovern'd rage dissolve the life
 That wants the means to lead it. **

Enter a MESSENGER.

Mess. Madam, news;
 The British powers are marching hitherward.
Cor. 'Tis known before; our preparation
 stands

In expectation of them.—O dear father,
 It is thy business that I go about;
 Therefore great France
 My mourning, and important †† tears, hath pited.

* I. e. Let not pity be supposed to exist.
 † Dispositions. ‡ Forces.
 § Important business. ¶ Fumitory.
  I. e. The reason which should guide it.
 †† Importunate.

No blown * ambition doth our arms lucite,
 But love, dear love, and our ag'd father's right;
 Soon may I hear and see him. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—A Room in GLOSTER's Castle.

* Enter REGAN and STEWARD.

Reg. But are my brother's powers set forth?
Stew. Ay, madam.

Reg. Himself
 In person there?

Stew. Madam, with much ado:
 Your sister is the better soldier.

Reg. Lord Edmund spake not with your lord
 at home?

Stew. No, madam.

Reg. What might import my sister's letter to
 him?

Stew. I know not, lady.

Reg. 'Faith, he is posted hence on serious
 matter.

It was great ignorance, Gloster's eyes being
 out,

To let him live; where he arrives, he moves
 All hearts against us: Edmund, I think, is
 gone,

In pity of his misery, to despatch
 His nighted life; † moreover, to descry
 The strength o'the enemy.

Stew. I must needs after him, madam, with my letter.

Reg. Our troops set forth to-morrow; stay
 with us;

The ways are dangerous.

Stew. I may not, madam;

My lady charg'd my duty in this business.

Reg. Why should she write to Edmund?
 Might not you

Transport her purposes by word? Belike,
 Something—I know not what:—I'll love thee
 much,

Let me unseal the letter.

Stew. Madam, I had rather—

Reg. I know your lady does not love her bus-
 band;

I am sure of that: and, at her late being here,
 She gave strange orphans; and most speaking looks

To noble Edmund: I know you are of her fos-
 son.

Stew. I, madam?

Reg. I speak in understanding; you are, I
 know it:

Therefore, I do advise you take this note: ‡

My lord is dead; Edmund and I have talk'd;
 And more convenient is he for my hand,

Than for your lady's:—You may gather more.
 If you do flay him, pray you, give him this;

And when your mistress hears thus much from
 you,

I pray, desire her call her wisdom to her.

So, fare you well.

If you do chance to hear of that blind traitor,

Pretermitt fall on him that cuts him off.

Stew. 'Would I could meet him, madam! I would show

What party I do follow.

Reg. Fare thee well.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—The Country near Dover.

Enter GLOSTER, and EDGAR, dressed like a Peasant.

Glo. When shall we come to the top of that same hill?

Edg. You do climb up it now: look, how we labour.

Glo. Methinks, the ground is even.

Edg. Horrible steep:

Hark, do you hear the sea?

Glo. No, truly.

* Inflated, swelling.

† I. e. His life made dark as night.

‡ A cast, or significant glance of the eye.

§ Observe what I am saying. † Infer more.

Edg. Why, then your other senses grow imperfect
By your eyes' anguish.

Glo. So may it be, indeed:
Methinks thy voice is alter'd; and thou
speak'st

In better phrase, and matter, than thou didst.

Edg. You are much deceiv'd; in nothing am
I chang'd,

But in my garments.

Glo. Methinks, you are better spoken.

Edg. Come on, Sir; here's the place:—stand still.—How fearful

And dizzy 'tis, to cast one's eyes so low!

The crows, and choughs,* that wing the midway air,

Show scarce so gross as beetles: Half way
down

Hangs one that gathers samphire;† dreadful trade!

Methinks he seems no bigger than his head:

The fishermen that walk upon the beach,

Appear like mice; and you† tall anchoring
bark,

Diminish'd to her cock;‡ her cock, a buoy

Almost too small for sight: The murmuring surge,

That on the unnumber'd idle pebbles chafes,

Cannot be heard so high:—I'll look no more;

Lest my brain turn, and the deficient sight

Topple down headlong.

Glo. Set me where you stand.

Edg. Give me your hand: You are now within a foot

Of the extreme verge: for all beneath the moon

Would I not leap upright.

Glo. Let go my hand.

Here, friend, is another purse; in it a jewel

Well worth a poor man's taking; Fairies, and

gods,

Prosper it with thee! Go thou further off;

Bid me farewell, and let me hear thee going.

Edg. Now fare you well, good Sir.

[Seems to go.]

Glo. All my heart.

Edg. Why I do trouble thus with his despair,

Is done to cure it.

Glo. O you mighty gods!

This world I do renounce; and, in your sights,

Shake patiently my great affliction off:

It I could bear it longer, and not fall

To quarrel with your great opposess' wills,

Fly stuff, and loathed part of nature, should

Burn itself out. If Edgar live, O bless him!

Now, fellow, fare thee well.

[He leaps and falls along.]

Edg. Gone, Sir? farewell.—

And yet I know not how conceit may rob

The treasury of life, when life itself

Yields to the thief: Had he been where he thought,

By this, had thought been past.—Alive, or

dead?

Ho, you Sir! friend!—Hear you, Sir?—speak!

'Tis might he pass indeed:—Yet he revives:

What are you, Sir?

Glo. Away, and let me die.

Edg. Hadst thou been sought but gossamer, feathers, air,

So many fathoms down precipitating,

Thou hadst shiver'd like an egg: but thou dost

breathe;

Hast heavy substance: bleed'st not; speak'st;

art sound.

Ten masts at each make not the altitude,

Which thou hast perpendicularly fell;

Thy life's a miracle: Speak yet again.

Glo. But have I fallen, or no?

Edg. From the dread summit of this chalky

bourne: †

Look up a-height;—the shrill-gorg'd* lark is far

Cannot be seen or heard: do but look up. †

Glo. Alack, I have no eyes.—

Is wretchedness depriv'd that benefit,

To end itself by death? 'Twas yet some comfort,

When misery could beguile the tyrant's rage,

And frustrate his proud will.

Edg. Give me your arm:

Up:—So;—How is't? Feel you your legs? You

stand.

Glo. Too well, too well.

Edg. This is above all strangeness.

Upon the crown o'the cliff, what thing was that

Which parted from you?

Glo. A poor unfortunate beggar.

Edg. As I stood here below, methought, his

eyes

Were two full moons; he had a thousand noses,

Horns whelk'd† and wav'd like the curldged

sea;

It was some fiend: Therefore, thou happy father,

Think that the clearest‡ gods, who make them

honours

Of men's impossibilities, have preserv'd thee.

Glo. I do remember now: henceforth I'll

bear

Affliction, till it do cry out itself,

Enough, enough, and, die. That thing you speak of,

I took it for a man; often 'twould say,

The fiend, the fiend: he led me to that place.

Edg. Bear free and patient thoughts.—But who comes here?

Enter Lear, fantastically dressed up with

Flowers.

The safer sense will ne'er accommodate

His master thus.

Lear. No, they cannot touch me for coining;

I am the king himself.

Edg. O thou side-piercing sight!

Lear. Nature's above art in that respect.—

There's your press-money. That fellow haun-dles his bow like a crow-keeper: draw me a clothier's yard.§—Look, look, a mouse! Peace, peace,—this piece of toasted cheese will do't.

—There's my gauntlet; I'll prove it on a giant.

—Bring up the brown bulls.¶—O, well found, bid I—The clout, the clout: ¶ bawgh!—Give the word.

Edg. Sweet marjoram.

Lear. Pass.

Glo. I know that voice.

Lear. Ha! Goneril!—with a white beard!—

They flatter'd me like a dog; and told me I had white hairs in my beard, ere the black ones were there. To say aye and no to every that I said aye and no to, was no good divinity. When the rain came to wet me once, and the wind to make me chatter; when the thunder would not peace

at my bidding; there I found them, there I smelt them out. Go to, they are not men o'their words: they told me I was every thing; 'tis a lie: I am not ague-proof.

Glo. The trick †† of that voice I do well remember:

Is't not the king?

Lear. Ay, every inch a king:

When I do stare, see, how the subject quakes.

I pardon that man's life: what was thy cause?—

Adultery.—

Thou shalt not die: Die for adultery! No:

The wren goes to't, and the small gilded fly

Does lecher in my sight.

Let copulation thrive, for Gloucester's bastard son

Was kinder to his father, than my daughters

Got 'twixen the lawful sheets.

* Daws. † A vegetable gathered for pickling.

‡ Her cock-bust. § Tumble.

¶ The mist he die in reality.

¶ I.e. This chalky boundary of England.

* Shrill-throated. ‡ The parent.

† Twisted, convolved. † Battle-axe.

§ An arrow of a cloth yard long.

¶ The white mark for archers to aim at.

 The watchword.

†† Likeness, manner

It, luxury, pell-mell, for I lack soldiers.—
 Hold you! smothering dame, whose face between her forks presageth snow;
 that minces virtue, and does shake the head of hear of pleasure's name;
 he fitchew, nor the soiled horse, goes to't with a more riotous appetite.
 Down from the waist they are centaurs,
 though women all above:
 'tis to the girdle do the gods inherit,
 'twixt that and the heavens all the fiends;
 there's hell, there's darkness,
 there is the sulphurous pit, burning, scalding,
 teuch, consumption;—Fire, fire, fie! pah! pah!
 Give me an ounce of civet, good apothecary, to sweeten my imagination: there's money for
 thee.

Glo. O, let me kiss that hand!

Lear. Let me wipe it first; it smells of morality.

Glo. O ruin'd piece of nature! This great world shall so wear out to nought.—Dost thou know

Lear. I remember thine eyes well enough.
 Dost thou squiny? at me? No, do thy worst, blind Cupid; I'll not love.—Read thou this challenge; mark but the penning of it.

Glo. Were all the letters suns, I could not see
 one.

Edg. I would not take this from report;—it is,
 and my heart breaks at it.

Lear. Read.

Glo. What, with the case of eyes?

Lear. O, ho, are you there with me? No eyes in your head, nor no money in your purse?
 Your eyes are in a heavy case, your purse in a light: Yet you see how this world goes.

Glo. I see it feelingly.

Lear. What, art mad? A man may see how his world goes, with no eyes. Look with thine ears: see how yon' justice rails upon yon simple knave. Hark, in thine ear: Change places; and, sandy-dandy, which is the justice, which is the knave?—Thou hast seen a farmer's dog bark at a beggar?

Glo. Ay, sir.

Lear. And the creature run from the cur?
 There thou might'st behold the great image of authority: a dog's obeyed in office.

Thou rascal beadle, hold thy bloody hand!
 Why dost thou lash that whore? Strip thine own
 back;

Thou hotly lust'st to use her in that kind for which thou whipp'st her. The usurer hangs the cozener.

Through tatter'd clothes small vices do appear;
 Robes, and furr'd gowns, hide all. Plate sin with gold,

And the strong lance of justice burlesque breaks:
 Arm it in rags, a pigmy's straw doth pierce it.
 None does offend; none, I say, none; I'll able 'em:

Take that of me, my friend, who have the power
 To seal the accuser's lips. Get thee glass eyes;
 And, like a scurvy politician, seem
 To see the things thou dost not.—Now, now,

now, now:
 Pull off my boots:—harder, harder; so.

Edg. O, matter and impertinency mix'd!
 Reason in madness!

Lear. If thou wilt weep my fortunes take my
 eyes.

I know thee well enough; thy name is Gloucester:
 Thou must be patient; we came crying hither.
 Thou know'st, the first time that we smell the

air,

We wail, and cry:—I will preach to thee; mark
Glo. Alack, alack the day!

Lear. When we are born, we cry, that we are come

To this great stage of fools;—This a good block is

* Only. † Possessive. ‡ Took acquit.
 § Head anciently signified the head part of a hut.

It were a delicate stratagem to shoe
 A troop of horse with felt: I'll put it in proof;
 And when I have stolen upon these sons-in-law,
 Then, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill.

Enter a GENTLEMAN, with Attendants.

Gent. O here he is, lay hand upon him,—Sir,
 Your most dear daughter—

Lear. No rescue? What, a prisoner? I am even

The natural fool of fortune.—Use me well;
 You shall have ransom. Let me have a surgeon,
 I am cut to the brains.

Gent. You shall have any thing.

Lear. No seconds? all myself?

Why, this would make a man, a man of salt,
 To use his eyes for garden water-pots,
 Ay, and for laying autumn's dust.

Gent. Good Sir,—

Lear. I will die bravely, like a bridegroom:
 What?

I will be jovial; come, come; I am a king,
 My masters, know you that?

Gent. You are a royal one, and we obey you.

Lear. Then there's life in it. Nay, an you get it, you shall get it by running. Sa, sa, sa, sa.

[Exit, running; Attendants follow.]

Gent. A sight most pitiful in the meanest
 wretch;

Past speaking of in a king!—Thou hast one
 daughter,

Who redeems nature from the general curse
 Which twain have brought her to.

Edg. Hail, gentle Sir.

Gent. Sir, speed you: What's your will?

Edg. Do you hear aught, Sir, of a battle toward?

Gent. Most sure, and vulgar: every one hears
 that,

Which can distinguish sound.

Edg. But, by your favour,
 How near's the other army?

Gent. Near, and on speedy foot; the main descry

Stands on the hourly thought.

Edg. I thank you, Sir: that's all.

Gent. Though that the queen on special cause is here,

Her army is mov'd on.

Edg. I thank you, Sir. [Exit Gent.]

Glo. You ever-gentle gods, take my breath from me;

Let not my worse spirit tempt me again
 To die before you please!

Edg. Well pray you, father.

Glo. Now, good Sir, what are you?

Edg. A most poor man, made tame by fortune's blows;

Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
 Am pregnant to good pity. Give me your hand
 I'll lead you to some bidding.

Glo. Heartily thanks:
 The bounty and the benison of heaven
 To boot, and boot!

Enter STEWARD.

Stew. A proclaim'd prize! Most happy!
 That eyeless head of thine was first fram'd flesh

To raise my fortunes.—Thou old unhappy traitor,

Briefly thyself remember:—The sword is out
 That must destroy thee.

Glo. Now let thy friendly hand
 Put strength enough to it. [Edgar opposes.]

Stew. Wherefore, hold peasant,
 Dar'st thou support a publish'd traitor? Hence;
 Lest that the infection of his fortune take
 Like hold on thee. Let go his arm.

* I.e. A rain of tears

† The main body is expected to be described every body.
 ‡ Evil genius. § Blessing.

¶ Reward, recompence.

‡ Quickly recollect the offences of thy life.

Edg. Ch'll not let go, Zlr, without vurther 'caution.

Stew. Let go, slave, or thou diest.

Edg. Good gentleman, go your gait,* and let poor folk pass. And ch'ud ha' been swagge'd out of my life, 'twould not ha' been so long as 'tis by a vortnight. Nay, come, not near the old man; keep out, che vor'ye, or ise try whether your costard † or my bat ‡ be the harder: Ch'll be plain with you.

Stew. Out, dunghill!

Edg. Ch'll pick your teeth, Zlr: Come; no matter vor your foine. §

[They fight; and EDGAR knocks him down.]

Stew. Slave, thou hast slain me:—Villain, take my purse;
If ever thou wilt thrive, bury my body;
And give the letters, which thou find'st about me,

To Edmund earl of Gloster; seek him out
Upon the British party:—O untimely death!

[Dies.]

Edg. I know thee well: A serviceable villain;
As duteous to the vices of thy mistress,
As badness would desire.

Glo. What, is he dead?
Edg. Sit you down, father; rest you.—
Let's see his pockets: these letters; that he speaks of, †

May be my friends.—He's dead; I am only
He had no other death's-man.—Let us see:—
Leave, gentle wax; and, manners, blame us not:
To know our enemies' minds, we'd rip their hearts;

Their papers, is more lawful. ‡
[Reads. Let our reciprocal vows be remembered. You have many opportunities to cut him off: if your will want not, time and place will be fruitfully offered. There is nothing done, if he return the conqueror: Then am I the prisoner, and his bed my jail; from the loathed warmth whereof deliver me, and supply the place for your labour.]

Your wife, (so I would say,) and your affectionate servant,
GONFRIL.
O undistinguish'd space of woman's will!—
A plot upon her virtuous husband's life;
And the exchange, my brother!—Here, in the sands,
Thee I'll rake up, † the post unsanctified
Of murderous lechers: and, in the mature time,
With this nugaracious paper strike the sight
Of the death-practis'd duke: For him 'tis well,
That of thy death and business I can tell.

[Exit EDGAR, dragging out the Body.]

Glo. The king is mad: How stuff is in my vile sense,
That I stand up, and have lugenious feeling
Of my huge sorrows! Better I were distract:
So should my thoughts be sever'd from my griefs;
And woes, by wrong imaginations, lose
The knowledge of themselves.

Re-enter EDGAR.

Edg. Give me your hand:
Far off, methinks I hear the beaten drum.
Come, father, I'll bestow you with a friend.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.—A Tent in the French Camp.—
LEAR on a Bed, asleep: PHYSICIAN, GENTLEMAN, and others, attending.

Enter CORDELIA and KENT.

Cor. O thou good Kent, how shall I live and work,
* Go your way. † Head. ‡ Club.
Thrusts. § To rip their papers is more lawful.

To match thy goodness? My life will be too short,
And every measure fall me.

Kent. To be acknowledg'd, madam, is o'er-paid.
All my reports go with the modest truth;
Nor more, nor clipp'd, but so.

Cor. Be better-suited: *
These weeds are memories † of those worsen hours;

I prythee, put them off.

Kent. Pardon me, dear madam;
Yet to be known, shortens my made intent: ‡
My boon I make it, that you know me not,
Till time and I think meet.

Cor. Then be it so, my good lord.—How does the king? † To the PHYSICIAN.

Phys. Madam, sleeps still.

Cor. O you kind gods,
Cure this great breach in his abused nature!
The untun'd and jarring senses, O wind up
Of this child-changed father!

Phys. So please your majesty,
That we may wake the king? he hath slept long.

Cor. Be govern'd by your knowledge, and proceed
I'the sway of your own will. Is he array'd?

Gent. Ay, madam: in the heaviness of his sleep,
We put fresh garments on him.

Phys. Be by, good madam, when we do awake him;
I doubt not of his temperance.

Cor. Very well.

Phys. Please you, draw near.—Louder the music there.

Cor. O my dear father! Restoration, hang
Thy medicine on my lips; and let this kiss
Repair those violent harms, that my two sisters
Have in thy reverence made!

Kent. Kind and dear princess!

Cor. Had you not been their father, these white flakes
Had challeng'd pity of them. Was this a face
To be expos'd against the warring winds?
To stand against the deep dread-bolted thunder?
In the most terrible and nimble stroke
Of quick, cross lightning? to watch, (poor perdu!)
With this thin helm? † Mine enemy's dog,
Though he had bit me, should have stood that night
Against my fire: And wast thou fain, poor father,
To hovel thee with swine, and rogues forlorn,
In short and musty straw? Alack, alack!
'Tis wonder, that thy life and wits at once
Had not concluded all.—He wakes; speak to him.

Phys. Madam, do you: 'tis fittest.

Cor. How does my royal lord? How fares your majesty?

Lear. You do me wrong, to take me out o'the grave:—
Thou art a soul in bliss; but I am bound
Upon a wheel of fire, that mine own tears
Do scald like molten lead.

Cor. Sir, do you know me?

Lear. You are a spirit, I know; When did you die?

Cor. Still, still, far wide!

Phys. He's scarce awake; let him alone awhile.

Lear. Where have I been?—Where am I?—
Fair day-light?—
I am mightily abus'd.—I should even die with pity,
To see another thus.—I know not what to say.—
I will not swear, these are my hands:—let's see;

* Dressed. † Memorials. ‡ Intent formed.

§ The allusion is to the forlorn-hope in an army, called in French enfans perdus.

I feel this pin prick. 'Would I were assur'd
Of my condition.

Cor. O look upon me, Sir,
And hold your hands in benediction o'er me:—
No, Sir, you must not kneel.

Lear. Pray, do not mock me:
I am a very foolish fond old man,
Fourscore and upward; and, to deal plainly,
Fear I am not in my perfect mind.
It thinks I should know you, and know this
man:

Yet I am doubtful: for I am mainly ignorant
What place this is; and all the skill I have Remembers not these garments; nor I know
not

Where I did lodge last night: Do not laugh at
me;

For as I am a man, I think this lady
To be my child Cordelia.

Cor. And so I am, I am.

Lear. Be your tears wet? Yes, 'faith. I pray, weep not:

If you have poison for me, I will drink it.
I know, you do not love me; for your sisters
Have, as I do remember, done me wrong,
You have some cause, they have not.

Cor. No cause, no cause.

Lear. Am I in France?

Kent. In your own kingdom, Sir.

Lear. Do not abuse me.

Phys. Be comforted, good madam: the great rage,

You see is cur'd in him: and yet it is danger
To make him even * o'er the time he has lost.
Desire him to go in; trouble him no more,
Till further settling.

Cor. Will't please your highness walk?

Lear. You must bear with me:

Pray now, forget and forgive: I am old and foolish.

[*Exit LEAR, CORDELIA, PHYSICIAN,
and Attendants.*]

Kent. Holds it true, Sir,

That the duke of Cornwall was so slain?

Kent. Most certain, Sir.

Kent. Who is conductor of his people?

Kent. As 'tis said,
The bastard son of Gloucester.

Kent. They say, Edgar,
His banish'd son, is with the earl of Kent
in Germany.

Kent. Report is chancelable.

'Tis time to look about; the powers † o'the kingdom

Approach apace.

Kent. The arbitrement ‡ is like to be a bloody.
Fare you well, Sir. [Exit.]

Kent. My point and period will be thoroughly wrought,

Or well, or ill, as this day's battle's fought.
[Exit.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Camp of the British Forces, near Dover.

Enter, with Drums, and Colours, EDMUND, REGAN, Officers, Soldiers, and others.

Edm. Know of the duke, if his last purpose hold;

Or, whether since he is advis'd by aught
To change the course: He's full of alteration,
And self-reproving: bring his constant pleasure. §
[To an Officer, who goes out.]

Reg. Our sister's man is certainly miscarried.

Edm. 'Tis to be doubted, madam.

Reg. Now, sweet lord,

You know the goodness I intend upon you:

* To reconcile it to his apprehension.

† Forces.

‡ Decision.

§ His settled resolution

Tell me,—but truly,—but then speak the truth,
Do you not love my sister?

Edm. In honour'd love.

Reg. But have you never found my brother's way

To the forefended * place?

Edm. That thought abuses † you.

Reg. I am doubtful that you have been conjunct

And bosom'd with her, as far as we call hers.

Edm. No, by mine honour, madam.

Reg. I never shall endure her: Dear my lord,
Be not familiar with her.

Edm. Fear me not:—

She, and the duke her husband,—

Enter ALBANY, GONERIL, and Soldiers.

Gon. I had rather lose the battle than that sister

Should loosen him and me. [Aside.]

Alb. Our very loving sister, well be met.—

Sir, this I hear,—The king is come to his daughter,

With others, whom the rigour of our state
Forc'd to cry out. Where I could not be honest,

I never yet was valiant: for this business,
It touches us as France invades our land,

Not bolds; the king; with others, whom, I
fear,

Most just and heavy causes make oppose. §

Edm. Sir, you speak nobly.

Reg. Why is this reason'd?

Gon. Combine together 'gainst the enemy:
For these domestic and particular broils

Ait not to question here.

Alb. Let us then determine

With the ancient of war on our proceeding.

Edm. I shall attend you presently at your tent.

Reg. Sister, you'll go with us?

Gon. No.

Reg. 'Tis most convenient; pray you, go
with us.

Gon. O, ho, I know the riddle: [Aside.] I will go.

As they are going out, enter EDGAR disguised.

Edg. If e'er your grace had speech with man
so poor,

Hear me one word.

Alb. I'll overtake you.—Speak.

[Exit EDMUND, REGAN, GONERIL, Officers, Soldiers, and Attendants.]

Edg. Before you fight the battle, ope this letter.

If you have victory, let the trumpet sound
For him that brought it: wretched though I seem,

I can produce a champion, that will prove
What is avouched there: If you miscarry,

Your business of the world hath so an end,
And machination ceases. ¶ Fortune love you!

Alb. Stay till I have read the letter.

Edg. I was forbid it.

When time shall serve, let but the herald cry,
And I'll appear again. [Exit.]

Alb. Why, fare thee well; I will o'erlook thy paper.

Re-enter EDMUND.

Edm. The enemy's in view; draw up your powers

Here is the guess of their true strength and
forces

By diligent discovery;—but your haste is now urg'd on you.

Alb. We will greet the time. ¶ Exit.

Edm. To both these sisters have I sworn my
love;

* Forbidden

† Imposes on you.

‡ I. e. Emboldens him.

§ Opposition.

¶ I. e. All designs against your life will have an end.

¶ Be ready to meet the occasion.

Each jealous of the other, as the stung
Are of the adder. Which of them shall I take?
Both? one? or neither? Neither can be enjoy'd,
If both remain alive: To take the widow,
Exasperates, makes mad her sister Goneril;
And hardly shall I carry out my side,*
Her husband being alive. Now then, we'll use His countenance for the battle; which being
done,
Let her, who would be rid of him, devise
His speedy taking off. As for the mercy
Which he intends to Lear, and to Cordelia,—
The battle done, and they within our power,
Shall never see his pardon: for my state
Stands on me to defend, not to debate. [Exit.

SCENE II.—A Field between the Two Camps.

Alarum within.—Enter, with Drum and Colours, LEAR, CORDELIA, and their Forces; and Exit.

Enter EDGAR and GLOSTER.

Edg. Here, father, take the shadow of this tree
For your good host; pray that the right may thrive:

If ever I return to you again,
I'll bring you comfort.

Glo. Grace go with you, Sir! [Exit EDGAR.

Alarums; afterwards a Retreat.—Re-enter EDGAR.

Edg. Away, old man, give me thy hand,
away;
King Lear hath lost, he and his daughter ta'en:
Give me thy hand, come on.

Glo. No further, Sir; a man may rot even here.

Edg. What, in ill thoughts again? Men must endure

Their going hence, even as their coming hither:
Ripeness is all: † Come on.

Glo. And that's true too. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The British Camp near Dover.

Enter, in Conquest, with Drum and Colours, EDWARD, LEAR and CORDELIA, as Prisoners; Officers, Soldiers, &c.

Lum. Some officers take them away: good guard;

Until their greater pleasures first be known
That are to censure: ‡ them.

Cor. We are not the first,
Who, with best meaning, have incur'd the worst.

For thee, oppressed king, am I cast down;
Myself could else out-trown false fortune's frown.—

Shall we not see these daughters, and these sisters?

Lear. No, no, no! Come, let's away to prison:

We two alone will sing like birds i' the cage:

When thou dost ask my blessing, I'll kneel
down,

And ask of thee forgiveness: So we'll live,
And pray, and sing, and tell old tales, and
laugh

At gilded butterflies, and hear poor rogues
Talk of court news: and we'll talk with them
too,—

Who loses and who wins; who's in, who's
out;—

And take upon us the mystery of things, †
As if we were God's spies: And we'll wear out,
In a wall'd prison, packs and sects of great
ones,

That ebb and flow by the moon.

Edm. Take them away.

Lear. Upon such sacrifices, my Cordelia,
The gods themselves throw incense. Have caught thee?

He that parts us shall bring a brand from
heaven,

And fire us hence, like foxes. Wipe thine eyes;
The gowgers* shall devour them, flesh, and fell, ‡

Ere they shall make us weep: we'll see them starve first.

Come.

[Exit LEAR, and CORDELIA guarded.

Edm. Come hither, captain; hark.

Take thou this note; [Giving a Paper.] go,
follow them to prison:

One step I have advanc'd thee; if thou dost
As this instructs thee, thou dost make thy way
To noble fortunes: Know thou this,—thou men
Are as the time is: to be tender-minded

Does not become a sword:—Thy great employment

Will not bear question; † either say, thou'lt
do't,

Or thrive by other means.

Off. I'll do't, my lord.

Edm. About it, and write happy, when thou hast done.

Mark,—I say, instantly; and carry it so,

As I have set it down.

Off. I cannot draw a cart, nor eat dried oats;
If it be man's work, I will do it.

[Exit OFFICER.

Flourish. Enter ALBANY, GONERIL, REGAN,
OFFICERS, and Attendants.

Alb. Sir, you have shown to-day your valiant strain,

And fortune led you well: You have the captives

Who were the opposites of this day's strife:
We do require them of you; so to use them,

As we shall find their merits and our safety
May equally determine.

Edm. Sir, I thought it fit

To send the old and miserable king
To some retention, and appointed guard;

Whose age has charms in it, whose title more,
To pluck the common bosom on his side,

And turn our impress'd lances in our eyes Which do command them. With him I sent the
queen;

My reason all the same; and they are ready
To-morrow, or at further space to appear

Where you shall hold your session. At this
time,

We sweat, and bleed: the friend hath lost his
friend;

And the best quarrels, in the heat, are curs'd
By those that feel their sharpness:—

The question of Cordelia, and her father,
Requires a sitter place. §

Alb. Sir, by your patience,
I hold you but a subject of this war,

Not as a brother.

Reg. That's as we list to grace him.
Methinks our pleasure might have been demanded,

Ere you had spoke so far. He led our powers;
Bore the commission of my place and person;

The which immediacy † may well stand up,
And call itself your brother.

Gon. Not so hot:

In his own grace he doth exalt himself,
More than in your advancement.

Reg. In my rights,

By me invested, he compeers the best.

Gon. That were the most, if he should husband you.

Reg. Jesters do oft prove prophets.

* The French disease. † Skin.

‡ Admit of debate.

§ To be discussed of in greater privacy.

† Authority to act on his own judgment.

* I. e. Make my party good.

† I. e. To be ready prepared, is all.

‡ Pass judgment on them.

Gon. Holloa, holloa!
That eye that told you so, look'd but a-squint.*
Reg. Lady, I am not well; else I should answer
From a full-flowing stomach.—General,
Take thou my soldiers, prisoners, patrimony;
Dispose of them, of me; the walls are thine:
Witness the world, that I create thee here
My lord and master.

Gon. Mean you to enjoy him?

Alb. The let-alone† lies not in your good will.

Edm. Nor in thine, lord.

Alb. Half-blooded fellow, yes.

Reg. Let the drum strike, and prove my title thine. [To EDMUND.]

Alb. Stay yet; hear reason:—Edmund, I arrest thee

On capital treason; and, in thy arrest,
This gilded serpent; [Pointing to GON.]—for your claim, fair sister,

I bar it in the interest of my wife;

'Tis she is sub-contracted to this lord,

And I, her husband, contradict your bans.

If you will marry, make your love to me,

My lady is bespoken.

Gon. An interlude!

Alb. Thou art arm'd, Gloster:—Let the trumpet sound:

If none appear to prove upon thy person,
Thy heinous, manifest, and many treasons,
There is my pledge; [Throwing down a Glove.]

I'll prove it on thy heart,

Ere I taste bread, thou art in nothing less
Than I have here proclaim'd thee.

Reg. Sick, O, sick!

Gon. If not, I'll ne'er trust poison. [Aside.]

Edm. There's my exchange: [Throwing down a Glove.] what in the world he is

That names me traitor, villain-like he lies:
Call by thy trumpet: he that dares approach,

On him, on you, (who not?) I will maintain

My truth and honour firmly.

Alb. A herald, ho!

Edm. A herald, ho, a herald!

Alb. Trust to thy single virtue!‡ for thy soldiers,

All levied in my name, have in my name

Took their discharge.

Reg. This sickness grows upon me.

Enter a HERALD.

Alb. She is not well; convey her to my tent.

[Exit REGAN, led.]

Come hither, herald,—Let the trumpet sound,—
And read out this.

Off. Sound, trumpet. [A Trumpet sounds.]

HERALD reads.

If any man of quality or degree, within the lists of the army, will maintain upon ED-MUND, supposed earl of GLOSTER, that he is a manifold traitor, let him appear at the third sound of the trumpet: He is bold in his defence.

Edm. Sound.

Her. Again.

Her. Again.

[1 Trumpet.]

[2 Trumpet.]

[3 Trumpet.]

[Trumpet answers within.]

Enter EDGAR, armed, preceded by a Trumpet.

Alb. Ask him his purposes, why he appears
Upon this call of the trumpet.

Her. What are you?

Your name, your quality? and why you answer
This present summons?

Edg. Know, my name is lost;

By treason's tooth bare-gnawn, and canker-bit:

Yet am I noble, as the adversary

I come to cope withal.

Alb. Which is that adversary?

* Alluding to the proverb, "Love being jealous makes a good eye look a-squint."

† The hindrance.

‡ I. e. Valour

Edg. What's he, that speaks for Edmund earl of Gloster?

Edm. Himself:—What say'st thou to him?

Edg. Draw thy sword:

That, if my speech offend a noble heart,
Thy arm may do thee justice: here is mine.
Behold it is the privilege of mine honours,
My oath and my profession: I protest,— Maugre* thy strength, youth, place, and eminence,

Despite thy victor sword, and fire-new fortune,
Thy valour, and thy heart,—thou art a traitor:
False to thy gods, thy brother, and thy father;
Conspirant against this high illustrious prince;
And, from the extremest upward of thy head,
To the descent and dust beneath thy feet,
A most toad-spotted traitor. Say thou, No,
This sword, this arm, and my best spirits, are beut

To prove upon thy heart, whereto I speak
Thou liest.

Edm. In wisdom I should ask thy name: †
But, since thy outside looks so fair and war-
like,

And that thy tongue some say‡ of breeding

What safe and nicely I might well delay

By rule of knighthood, I disdain and spurn:

Back do I toss these treasons to thy head;

With the hell-bated lie o'erwhelm thy heart;

Which, (for they yet glance by, and scarcely bruise,)‡

This sword of mine shall give them instant

Where they shall rest for ever.—Trumpets,

speak

[Alarums.—They fight.—EDMUND falls.]

Alb. O save him, save him!

Gon. This is mere practice, † Gloster:

By the law of arms, thou wast not bound to

answer

An unknown opposite: thou art not vanquish'd,

But cozen'd and beguil'd.

Alb. Shunt your mouth, dame,

Or with this paper shall I stop it:—Hold, Sir:—

Thou worse than any name, read thine own

evil:—

No tearing, lady; I perceive, you know it.

Gon. Say, if I do; the laws are mine, not

Who shall arraign me for't? [thine:]

Alb. Most monstrous!

Know'st thou this paper?

Gon. Ask me not what I know.

[Exit GONNORIL.]

Alb. Go after her: she's desperate; govern

her. [To an OFFICER, who goes out.]

Edm. What have you charg'd me with, that have I done? [out:]

And more, much more: the time will bring it

'Tis past, and so am I: But what art thou,

That hast this fortune on me? If thou art noble,

I do forgive thee.

Edg. Let's exchange charity.

I am no less in blood than thou art, Edmund;

If more, the more thou hast wrong'd me.

My name is Edgar, and thy father's son.

The gods are just, and of our pleasant vices

Make instruments to scourge us:

The dark and vicious place where thee he got,

Cost him his eyes.

Edm. Thou hast spoken right, 'tis true;

The wheel is come full circle: I am here.

Alb. Methought, thy very gait did prophesy

A royal nobleness:—I must embrace thee;

Let sorrow split my heart, if ever I

Did hate thee, or thy father!

Edg. Worthy prince,

I know it well.

Alb. Where have you hid yourself? [ther:]

How have you known the miseries of your father? By nursing them, my lord.—List! a brief tale;—

* Notwithstanding.

† Because if his adversary was not of equal rank, Edmund might have declined the combat.

‡ Sample.

§ Stratagem.

¶ Hear.

* assay or proof.

And, when 'tis told, O that my heart would burst!—

The bloody proclamation to escape,
That follow'd me so near, (O our lives' sweetness!)

That with the pain of death we'd hourly die,
Rather than die at once! taught me to shift
Into a madman's rage; to assume a semblance

That very dogs disdain'd: and in this habit
Met I my father with his bleeding rings,
Their precious stones new lost; became his guide,

Led him, begg'd for him, sav'd him from Never (O fault!) reveal'd myself unto him,
Until some half hour past, when I was arm'd,
Not sure, though hoping, of this good success,
I ask'd his blessing, and from first to last
Told him my pilgrimage: But his flaw'd

heart,
(Alack, too weak the conflict to support!)
'Twixt two extremes of passion, joy and grief,
Burst smilingly.

Edm. This speech of your's hath mov'd me,
And shall, perchance, do good: but speak
you on;

You look as you had something more to say.

Alb. If there be more, more woeful, hold it in;

For I am almost ready to dissolve,
Hearing of this.

Edg. This would have seem'd a period
To such as love not sorrow; but another,
To amplify too much, would make much more,
And top extremity.

Whilst I was big in clamour, came there a
Who having seen me in my worst estate,
Shunn'd my abhorr'd society: but then, finding
Who 'twas that so endur'd, with his strong

arms
He fasten'd on my neck, and bellow'd out
As he'd burst heaven; threw him on my father;

Told the most piteous tale of Lear and him,
That ever ear receiv'd: which in recounting
His grief grew piteous, and the strings of life
Began to crack: twice then the trumpet

sounded,
And there I left him tranc'd.

Alb. But who was this?

Edg. Kent, Sir, the banish'd Kent: who in disguise

Follow'd his enemy king, and did him service
Improper for a slave.

Enter a GENTLEMAN hastily, with a bloody Knife.

Gent. Help! help! O help!

Edg. What kind of help?

Alb. Speak, man.

Edg. What means that bloody knife?

Gent. 'Tis hot, it smokes;

It came even from the heart of—

Alb. Who, man? speak.

Gent. Your lady, Sir, your lady: and her

By her is poison'd; she confesses it. [sister

Edm. I was contracted to them both; all

Now marry in an instant. [three

Alb. Produce their bodies, be they alive or

dead!

This judgment of the heavens, that makes us

tremble,

Touches us not with pity. [Exit GENTLEMAN.

Enter KENT.

Edg. Here comes Kent, Sir.

Alb. O it is he.

The time will not allow the compliment,

Which very manners urges.

Kent. I am come

To bid my king and master aye good night;

Is he not here?

Alb. Great thing of us forgot!

• For star.

Speak, Edmund, where's the king? and where's Cordelia?

See'st thou this object, Kent?

[The Bodies of GONERIL and REGAN are brought in.

Kent. Alack, why thus?

Edm. Yet Edmund was belov'd:

The one the other poison'd for my sake,

And after slew herself.

Alb. Even so.—Cover their faces.

Edm. I pant for life:—Some good I mean to do,

Despite of mine own nature. Quickly send,—

Be brief in it,—to the castle; for my wit

Is on the life of Lear, and on Cordelia;—

Nay, send in time.

Alb. Run, run, O run—

Edg. To whom, my lord?—Who has the office?

send

Thy token of reprieve.

Edm. Well thought on; take my sword,

Give it the captain.

Alb. Haste thee, for thy life. [Exit EDMUND.

Edm. He hath commission from thy wife and me

To hang Cordelia in the prison, and

To lay the blame upon her own despair,

That she fordid herself.

Alb. The gods defend her! Bear him hence awhile. [EDMUND is borne off.

Enter LEAR, with CORDELIA dead in his Arms; EDGAR, OFFICER, and others.

Lear. Howl, howl, howl, howl!—O you are men of stones;

Had I your tongues and eyes, I'd use them so

That heaven's vault should crack:—O she is gone for ever!

I know when one is dead, and when one lives;

She's dead as earth:—Lend me a looking-glass;

If that her breath will mist or stain the stone,

Why, then she lives.

Kent. Is this the promis'd end?

Edg. Or image of that horror?

Alb. Fall, and cease!

Lear. This feather stirs: she lives! If it be so,

It is a chance that does redeem all sorrows

That ever I have felt.

Kent. O my good master!

Lear. Pr'ythee, away.

Edg. 'Tis noble Kent, your friend.

Lear. A plague upon you, murderers, traitors

all!

I might have sav'd her; now she's gone for Cordelia, Cordelia, stay a little. Ha!

What is't thou say'st?—Her voice was ever soft,

Gentle, and low; an excellent thing in wo-

man:—

I kill'd the slave that was a hanging!

Off. 'Tis true, my lords, he did.

Lear. Did I not, fellow?

I have seen the day, with my good biting fail-

I would have made them skip: I am old now,

And these same crosses spoil me.—Who are

you?

Mine eyes are none o'the best:—I'll tell you

Kent. If fortune brag of two she lov'd and

One of them we behold.

Lear. This is a dull sight: Are you not

Kent?

Kent. The same.

Your servant Kent: Where is your servant

Lear. He's a good fellow, I can tell you

that;

He'll strike, and quickly too:—He's dead and

Kent. No, my good lord; I am the very

man;—

Lear. I'll see that straight.

Kent. That, from your first of difference and

Have follow'd your sad steps.

Lear. You are welcome hither.

† Destroyed herself.

† The end of the world, or the horrible circumstances preceding it?

‡ I. e. Die; Albany speaks to Lear.

Kent. Nor no man else; all's cheerless, dark, and deadly.—

selves,

And desperately are dead.

Lear. Ay, so I think.

Alb. He knows not what he says; and vain
That we present us to him. [it is

Edg. Very bootless.*

Enter an OFFICER.

Off. Edmund is dead, my lord.

Alb. That's but a trifle here.—

You lords, and noble friends, know our intent.
What comfort to this great decay† may come,
Shall be applied: For us, we will resign,

During the life of this old majesty,
To him our absolute power. You, to your rights; [To EDGAR and KENT.

Have more than merited.—All friends shall taste

The wages of their virtue, and all foes

sion of endearment. referring to Cordelia.

Pray you, undo this button: Thank you, Sir.—

Do you see this? Look on her,—look,—her lips,—

Look there, look there!—

[He dies

Edg. He faints!—My lord, my lord,—

Kent. Break, heart; I pr'ythee, break!

Edg. Look up, my lord.

Kent. Vex not his ghost: O let him pass: *
he hates him,

That would upon the rack of this tough world

Stretch him out longer.

Edg. O he is gone, indeed.

Kent. The wonder is, he hath endur'd so long.

He but usurp'd his life.

Alb. Bear them from hence.—Our present
business

Is general woe. Friends of my soul, you twain

[To KENT and EDGAR.

Rule in this realm, and the go'd state sustain.

Kent. I have a journey, Sir, shortly to go;

My master calls, and I must not say, no.

Alb. The weight of this sad time we must obey;

Speak what we feel, not what we ought to say.

The oldest hath borne most: we, that are young,

Shall never see so much, nor live so long.

[Exeunt, with a dead March.

* Die.

MACBETH.

LITERARY AND HISTORICAL NOTICE.

IN this matchless tragedy Shakspeare has closely adhered to historical fact, excepting that Banquo, out of compliment to his descendant James I. is excluded from all participation in the murder of Duncan. In the reign of Charles II. the songs of the witches were set to music by the celebrated Matthew Lock, and the play regarded as a semi-opera. The ghosts and witches, though admirably portrayed, have been censured as an insult to common sense; and cautious have been held out to the young and uninformed against imbibing the absurd principles of fatalism which are seemingly countenanced in many parts of this piece. But in the time of Shakspeare, the doctrine of witchcraft was at once established by law and by fashion, and it became not only unpolite, but criminal, to doubt it.—King James himself in his dialogues of Demonologie, re-printed in London soon after his succession, has speculated deeply on the illusions of spirits, the compact of witches, &c.; and our dramatist only turned to his advantage a system universally admitted. In representation, some uninteresting scenes are omitted; many of the witches' dialogues adapted to beautiful music, and a song or two, probably written by Sir W. Davenant, added to the parts. Betterton, amidst many bad alterations, hit upon the plan of making the witches deliver all the prophecies, by which a deal of the trap-work is avoided, and Garrick substituted some excellent passages to be uttered by Macbeth, whilst expiring, in lieu of the disgusting exposure of his head by Macduff. The nearest criticism upon the play, and the most concise record of its historical facts, are contained in the following extract from a standard publication: "Macbeth flourished in Scotland about the middle of the tenth century. At this period Duncan was king, a mild and humane prince, but not at all possessed of the genius requisite for governing a country so turbulent, and so infected by the intrigues and animosities of the great Macbeth, a powerful nobleman, and nearly allied to the crown. Not contented with curbing the king's authority, carried still further his mad ambition; he murdered Duncan at Inverness, and then seized upon the throne. Fearing lest his ill-gotten power should be stripped from him, he chased Malcolm Kenmore, the son and heir, into England, and put to death Mac Gill and Banquo, the two most powerful men in his dominions. Macduff next becoming the object of his suspicion, he escaped into England, but the inhuman usurper wreaked his vengeance on his wife and children, whom he caused to be cruelly butchered. Siward, whose daughter was married to Duncan, embraced, by Edward's orders, the protection of his distressed family. He marched an army into Scotland, and having defeated and killed Macbeth in battle, he restored Malcolm to the throne of his ancestors. The tragedy founded upon the history of Macbeth, though contrary to the rules of the drama, contains an infinity of beauties with respect to language, character, passion, and incident; and is thought to be one of the very best pieces of the very best masters in this kind of writing that the world ever produced. The danger of ambition is well described, and the passions are directed to their true ends; so that it is not only admirable as a poem, but one of the most moral pieces existing."

ACT I.

SCENE I.—An open Place.

Thunder and Lightning. Enter three WITCHES.

1 Witch. When shall we three meet again

In thunder, lightning, or in rain?

2 Witch. When the hurlyburly's done,
When the battle's lost and won,

3 Witch.

• Tamul.

3 Witch. That will be ere set of sun.

1 Witch. Where the place?

2 Witch. Upon the heath:

3 Witch. There to meet Macbeth.

1 Witch. I come, Graymalkin!

All. Paddock calls:—Aun.—

Fair is foul, and foul is fair:

Hover through the fog and filthy air.

[WITCHES vanish.]

SCENE II.—A Jamp near Fores.

Alarum within. Enter King DUNCAN, MALCOLM, DONALBAIN, LENOX, with ATTENDANTS, meeting a bleeding SOLDIER.

Dun. What bloody man is that? He can report,
As seemeth by his plight, of the revolt
The newest state.

Mal. This is the sergeant,
Who, like a good and hardy soldier, fought
'Gainst my captivity:—Hail, brave friend!
Say to the king the knowledge of the broil,
As thou didst leave it.

Sold. Doubtfully it stood;
As two spent swimmers, that do cling together,
And choke their art. The merciless Macdon-wald

(Worthy to be a rebel; for to that
The multiplying villanies of nature
Do swarm upon him,) from the western isles,
Of knives and gallowglasses is supplied;
And fortune, on his damned quarrel† smiling,
Show'd like a rebel's whore: But all's too weak:
For brave Macbeth, (well he deserves that
name),

Disdaining fortune, with his brandish'd steel,
Which smok'd with bloody execution,
Like valour's minion Carry'd
Carv'd out his passage, till he fac'd the slave;
And ne'er shook hands, nor bade farewell to
him,
Till he unseam'd him from the gave to the chaps,
And fix'd his head upon our battlements.

Dun. O valiant cousin! worthy gentleman!

Sold. As whence the sun 'gins his reflection,
Shipwrecking storms and direful thunders break;
So from that spring, whence comfort seem'd to
come,

Discomfort; swells. Mark, King of Scotland,
mark:

No sooner justice had, with valour arm'd, Compell'd these skipping kerns to trust their heels;

But the Norweyan lord, surveying vantage,
With furbish'd arms and new supplies of men,
Began a fresh assault.

Dun. Dismay'd not this

Our captains, Macbeth and Banquo?

Sold. Yes;

As sparrows, eagles; or the hare, the lion.

If I say sooth, I must report they were
As cannons || overcharg'd with double cracks;
So they

Doubly redoubled strokes upon the foe:
Except they meant to bathe in reeking wounds,
Or memorize another Golgotha,†
I cannot tell:—

But I am faint, my gashes cry for help.

Dun. So well thy words become thee, as thy wounds;

They smack of honour both:—Go, get him sur-geous. [Exit SOLDIER, attended.]

Enter ROSSE.

Who comes here?

Mal. The worthythane of Rosse.

Len. What a haste looks through his eyes!
So should he look;

That seems to speak things strange.

Rosse. God save the king!

Dun. Whence cam'st thou, worthythane?

Rosse. From Fife, great king,
Where the Norweyan banners flout the sky,
And fan our people cold.

Norway himself, with terrible numbers,
Assisted by that most disloyal traitor

Thethane of Cawdor,† gan a dismal conflict:
Till that Bellona's bridegroom,†† lapp'd in proof,‡‡

* They were light and heavy armed troops.

† Cause. ‡ The opposite to comfort. § Truth.
|| Cannons were not invented until some centuries
after this period.

¶ Take another Golgotha as memorable as the first.

 Mock.

‡‡ Defended by armour of proof.

Confronted him with self-comparisons,
Point against point, rebellious arm 'gainst arm,
Curbing his lavish spirit: And, to conclude,
The victory fell on us;—

Dun. Great happiness!

Rosse. That now

Sweno, the Norweyan king, craves composition;
Nor would we deign him burial of his men,
Till he disburs'd, at Saint Colmes' inch,*
Ten thousand dollars to our general use.

Dun. No more thatthane of Cawdor shall deceive

Our bosom interest:—Go, pronounce his death,
And with his former title greet Macbeth.

Rosse. I'll see it done.

Dun. What he hath lost, noble Macbeth hath won. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—A Heath.—Thunder.

Enter the three WITCHES.

1 Witch. Where hast thou been, sister?

2 Witch. Killing swine.

3 Witch. Sister, where thou?

1 Witch. A Sailor's wife had chesnuts in her lap,
And mounch'd, and mounch'd, and mounch'd:—
Give me, quoth I:
Aroint thee,† witch! the ramp-fed ronyou;
cries.

Her husband's to Aleppo gone, master o'the
But in a sieve I'll thither sail, [Tiger:]
And, like a rat without a tail,
I'll do, I'll do, I'll do.

2 Witch. I'll give thee a wind.

1 Witch. Thou art loud.

3 Witch. And I another.

1 Witch. I myself have all the other;
And the very ports they blow,

All the quarters that they know
I'the shipman's card:§

I will drain him dry as hay:

Sleep shall, neither night nor day,
Hang upon his pent-house lid;

He shall live a man forbid:¶

Weary sev'n-nights, nine times nine,

Shall he dwindle, peak, and pine:

Though his bark cannot be lost,

Yet it shall be tempest-toss'd.

Look what I have.

2 Witch. Show me, show me.

1 Witch. Here I have a pilot's thumb,
Wreck'd, as homeward he did come.

[Drum within.]

3 Witch. A drum, a drum;

Macbeth doth come.

All. The weird sisters,† hand in hand,

Posters of the sea and land,

Thus do go about, about;

Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine,

And thrice again, to make up nine:

Peace!—the charm's wound up.

Enter MACBETH and BANQUO.

Macb. So foul and fair a day I have not seen

Ban. How far is't call'd to Fores?—What are these,

So wither'd and so wild in their attire:

That look not like the inhabitants of the earth,

And yet are on't? Live you? or are you ought

That man may question? You seem to understand me.

By each at once her choppy finger laying
Upon her skinny lips:—You should be women,
And yet your beards forbid me to interpret

That you are so.

Macb. Speak, if you can;—What are you?

1 Witch. All hail, Macbeth! hail to thee,
thane of Glamis!

* A small island in the Firth of Edinburgh.

† Awaunt, begone.

‡ A scabby woman.

§ Sailor's chart.

¶ Accursed.

†† Prophetic sisters; the fates of the northern nations, the three hand-maidens of Odin.

Scene III.

MACBETH.

2 Witch. All hail, Macbeth! hail to thee,
thane of Cawdor!

3 Witch. All hail, Macbeth! that shalt be king hereafter.

Ban. Good Sir, why do you start, and seem to fear

Things that do sound so fair?—I'the name of truth,

Are ye fantastical * or that indeed

Which outwardly ye show? My noble partner
You greet with present grace, and great prediction

Of noble having, † and of royal hope, [not :
That he seems rapt; withal; to me you speak
If you can look into the seeds of time,

And say which grain will grow, and which will
not;

Speak then to me, who neither beg nor fear
Your favours nor your hate.

1 Witch. Hail!

2 Witch. Hail!

3 Witch. Hail!

1 Witch. Lesser than Macbeth, and greater.

2 Witch. Not so happy, yet much happier.

3 Witch. Thou shalt get kings, though thou be none :

So, all hail, Macbeth and Banquo!

1 Witch. Banquo and Macbeth, all hail!

Macb. Stay, you imperfect speakers, tell me
more :

By Sinel's death § I know I am thane of Glamis;
But how of Cawdor? the thane of Cawdor lives,
A prosperous gentleman; and, to be king,
Stands not within the prospect of belief,
No more than to be Cawdor. Say, from whence
You owe this strange intelligence? or why
Upon this blasted heath you stop our way
With such prophetic greeting?—Speak, I charge
you.

Ban. The earth hath bubbles, as the water has, [witches tanish.
[ish'd?]

And these are of them:—Whither are they va[tical,

Macb. Into the air; and what seem'd corporal melted

As breath into the wind.—'Would they had staid!

Ban. Were such things here, as we do speak
about;

Or have we eaten of the insane root, ¶
That takes the reason prisoner?

Macb. Your children shall be kings.

Ban. You shall be king.

Macb. And thane of Cawdor too; went it not so? [here?]

Ban. To the self-same tune and words. Who's

Enter ROSS and ANGUS.

Ross. The king hath happily receiv'd, Macbeth,

The news of thy success; and when he reads
Thy personal venture in the rebels' fight,
His wonders and his praises do contend,
Which should be thine, or his: Silence'd with
that,

In viewing o'er the rest o'the self-same day,
He finds thee in the stout Norwegian ranks,
Nothing afraid of what thyself didst make,
Strange images of death. As thick as tale, ¶
Came post with post; and every one did bear
Thy praises in his kingdom's great defence,
And pour'd them down before him.

Ang. We are sent,
To give thee, from our royal master, thanks;
To herald thee into his sight, not pay thee.

Ross. And for an earnest of a greater honour,
He bade me, from him, call thee thane of Cawdor :

In which addition, * hail, most worthy thane!
For it is thine.

Ban. What, can the devil speak true?

Macb. The thane of Cawdor lives: Why do you dress me
In borrow'd robes?

Ang. Who was the thane, lives yet;
But under heavy judgment bears that life
Which he deserves to lose. Whether he was Comb'd with Norway; or did line the rebel
With hidden help and vantage; or that with both

He labour'd in his country's wreck, I know not;
But treasons capital, confess'd and prov'd,
Have overthrow'n him.

Macb. Glamis and thane of Cawdor:

The greatest is behind.—Thanks for your pains.—

Do you not hope your children shall be kings,
When those that gave the thane of Cawdor to Promis'd no less to them? [me,

Ban. That trusted home,

Might yet enkindle † you unto the crown,
Besides the thane of Cawdor. But 'tis strange:
And oftentimes, to win us to our harm,
The instruments of darkness tell us truths;
Win us with honest trifles, to betray us
In deepest consequence.—

Cousins, a word, I pray you.

Macb. Two truths are told,
As happy prologues to the swelling act
Of the imperial theme.—I thank you, gentle-
This supernatural soliciting; [men.—
Cannot be ill; cannot be good:—If ill,
Why hath it given me earnest of success,
Commencing in a truth? I am thane of Caw-dor: §

If good, why do I yield to that suggestion ||
Whose horrid image doth unfix my hair,
And make my seated ¶ heart knock at my ribs,
Against the use of nature? Present fears
Are less than horrible imaginings: [tical,
My thought, whose murder yet is but fantas-
Shakes so my single state of man, that function
Is smother'd in surmise;  and nothing is,
But what is not.

Ban. Look, how our partner's rapt.

Macb. If chance will have me king, why, chance may crown me,
Without my stir.

Ban. New honours come upon him

Like our strange garments; cleave not to ther-mond,
But with the aid of use.

Macb. Come what come may;

Time and the hour †† runs through the roughest
day.

Ban. Worthy Macbeth, we stay upon your leisure.

Macb. Give me your favour: ††—my dull brain was wrought [pains
With things forgotten. Kind gentlemen, your
Are register'd where every day I turn
The leaf to read them.—Let us toward the king; [time,
Think upon what hath chanc'd; and, at more
The interim having weigh'd it, let us speak
Our free hearts each to other.

Ban. Very gladly.

Macb. Till then, enough.—Come, friends.
[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Fores.—A Room in the Palace.

Flourish. Enter DUNCAN, MALCOLM, DONAL-
BAIN, LENOX, and ATTENDANTS.

Dun. Is execution done on Cawdor? Are
not

Those in commission yet return'd?

* Supernatural, spiritual. † Faint.
‡ Rapturously affected.
§ Sinel was Macbeth's father.
¶ The root which makes insane.
 As fast as they could be counted.

* Title. † Stimulate. ‡ Enrichment.
§ Glamis is still standing, and is the magnificent residence of Earl Strathmore. ¶ Temptation.
¶ Firmly fixed.  The powers of action are oppressed by conjecture. †† Time and opportunity. †† Fortune.

Mal. My liege,
They are not yet come back. But I have spoke
With one that saw him die; who did report,
That very frankly he confess'd his treasons;
Imploir'd your highness' pardon; and set forth
A deep repentance: nothing in his life
Became him, like the leaving it; he died
As one that had been studied in his death,
To throw away the dearest thing he ow'd,*
As 'twere a careless trifle.

Dun. There's no art,
To find the mind's construction in the face: †
He was a gentleman on whom I built
An absolute trust.—O worst of consins!

Enter MACBETH, BANQUO, ROSS, and ANGUS.

The sin of my ingratitude even now
Was heavy on me: Thou art so far before,
That swiftest wing of recompense is slow
To overtake thee. 'Would thou hadst less de-
serv'd;

That the proportion both of thanks and payment
Might have been mine! only I have left to say,
More is thy due than more than all can pay.

Macb. The service and the loyalty I owe,
In doing it, pays itself. Your highness' part
Is to receive our duties; and our duties
Are to your throne and state, children, and
servants,

Which do but what they should, by doing every thing

Safe toward your love and honour.

Dun. Welcome hither:

I have begun to plant thee, and will labour
To make thee full of growing. ‡—Noble Banquo,
That hast no less deserv'd, nor must be known
No less to have done so, let me infold thee,
And hold thee to my heart.

Ban. There if I grow,

The harvest is your own.

Dun. My plenteous joys,
Wanton in fullness, seek to hide themselves
In drops of sorrow.—Sons, kinsmen, thanes,
And you whose places are the nearest, know,
We will establish our estate upon [after,
Our eldest Malcolm; whom we name here—
The prince of Cumberland: which honour must
Not, unaccompanied, invest him only,
But signs of nobleness, like stars, shall shine
On all deserv'ers.—From hence to Inverness, §
And bid us further to you.

Macb. The rest is labour, which is not us'd for you:

I'll be myself the harbinger, and make joyful
The hearing of my wife with your approach;
So, humbly take my leave.

Dun. My worthy Cawdor!

Macb. The prince of Cumberland!—That is a step,

On which I must fall down, or else o'er-leap.

For in my way it lies. Stars, hide your faces;
Let not light see my black and deep desires.
The eye wink at the hand! yet let that be
Which the eye fears, when it is done, to see.

Dun. True, worthy Banquo; he is full so
valiant; ||

And in his commendations, I am fed;
It is a banquet to me. Let us after him,
Whose care is gone before to bid us welcome:
It is a peerless kinsman. [Flourish. Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Inverness.—A Room in MACBETH'S Castle.

Enter Lady MACBETH, reading a letter.

Lady M. They met me in the day of success; and I have learned by the perfectest report,* they have more in them than mortal knowledge. When I burned in desire to question them further, they made themselves —air, into which they vanished. Whiles I stood rapt in the wonder of it, came missives † from the king, who all-hailed me, Thane of Cawdor; by which title, before, these weird sisters saluted me, and referred me to the coming on of time, with Hall king that shalt be! This have I thought good to deliver thee, my dearest partner of greatness; that thou mightest not lose the dues of rejoicing, by being ignorant of what greatness is promised thee. Lay it to thy heart, and farewell.

Glamis thou art, and Cawdor; and shalt be What 'thou art promis'd:—Yet do I fear thy
nature;

It is too full o' the milk of human kindness,
To catch the nearest way: Thou would'st be great;

Art not without ambition; but without

The illness should attend it. What thou would'st highly, [false,

That would'st thou boldly; would'st not play
And yet would'st wrongly win: thou'd'st have great Glamis, [have it;

That which cries, 'Thou shalt must do, if thou
And that which rather thou dost fear to do,
Than wishest should be undone. Hie thee
hither,

That I may pour my spirits in thine ear;
And chastise with the valour of my tongue
All that impedes thee from the golden round, ‡
Which fate and metaphysical § and doth seem To have thee crown'd withal.—What is your tadings!

Enter an ATTENDANT.

Attend. The King comes here to-night.

Lady M. Thou'rt mad to say it:

Is not thy master with him? who, wer't so,
Would have inform'd for preparation.

Attend. So please you, it is true; our thane is coming:

One of my fellows had the speed of him;
Who, almost dead for breath, had scarcely
more

That would make up his message.

Lady M. Give him tending,
He brings great news. The raven himself is hoarse, [Exit ATTENDANT.

That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan
Under my battlements. Come, come, you spirits

That tend on mortal || thought, unsex me here;
And fill me, from the crown to the toe, top full
Of direst cruelty! I make thick my blood,
Stop up the access and passage to remorse, ¶

That no compunctious visitings of nature
Shake my fell purpose, nor keep peace between
The effect and it! Come to my woman's breasts,
And take my milk for gall, you murdering ministers,

Wherever in your sightless substances
You wait on nature's mischief! Come, thick
night,

And pall * the dunest smoke of hell!
That my keen knife † see not the wound it makes; ‡

Nor heaven peep through the blanket of the dark, Cawdor!

To cry, Hail, Hold!—Great Glamis! worthy

Enter MACBETH.

Greater than both, by the all-hail hereafter!
Thy letters have transported me beyond
This ignorant present, ‡ and I feel now
The future in the instant.

* The best intelligence.

† Messengers. ‡ Diadem.

§ Supernatural. ¶ Murderous. ¶ City.

|| Wrap up in a mantle. ‡ Knife anciently meant a sword or dagger. ‡ I e. Beyond the present time, which is according to the process of nature ignorant of the future.

* Owned, possessed.

† We cannot construe the disposition of the mind by the lineaments of the face. ‡ Exuberant.

§ The walls of Macbeth's Castle at Inverness, are yet standing. ¶ Full as valiant as described.

Macb. My dearest love,
Duncan comes here to-night.

Lady M. And when goes hence †

Macb. To-morrow,—as he purposes.

Lady M. Oh! never

Shall sun that morrow see!

Your face, my thame, is as a book, where men
May read strange matters:—To beguile the
time,

Look like the time; bear welcome in your eye,
Your hand, your tongue: look like the innocent
flower,

But be the serpent under it. He that's coming

Must be provided for: and you shall put

This night's great business into my despatch;

Which shall to all our nights and days to come

Give solely sovereign sway and masterdom.

Macb. We will speak further.

Lady M. Only look up clear;

To alter favour* ever is to fear:

Leave all the rest to me.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—The same.—Before the Castle.

Hautboys.—Servants of MACBETH attending.

Enter DUNCAN, MALCOLM, DONALBAIN, BANGUO, LENOX, MACDUFF, ROSS, ANGUS, and Attendants.

Dun. This castle hath a pleasant seat; the air
Nimble and sweetly recommends itself
Unto our gentle senses.

Ban. This guest of summer,
The temple-haunting martlet, does approve,
By his lov'd mansionry, that the heaven's
breath

Smells wooingly here: no jutty, frieze, buttress,
Nor coigne of vantage,† but this bird hath
made

His pendent bed, and procreant cradle: Where they

Most breed and haunt, I have observ'd, the air
Is delicate.

Enter Lady MACBETH.

Dun. See, see! our honour'd hostess:

The love that follows us, sometime is our trouble,
Which still we thank as love. Herein I teach
you,

How you shall bid God yield‡ us for your
pains,

And thank us for your trouble.

Lady M. All our service

In every point twice done, and then done double,

Were poor and single business, to contend

Against those honours deep and broad, where-
with

Your majesty loads our house: For those of old,
And the late dignities heap'd up to them,
We rest your hermits. §

Dun. Where's the thane of Cawdor?

We cours'd him at the heels, and had a purpose
To be his purveyor: but he rides well;
And his great love, sharp as his spur, hath holp
him

To his home before us: Fair and noble hostess,
We are your guest to-night.

Lady M. Your servants ever

'Have their's, themselves, and what is their's, in
compt. ||

To make their audit at your highness' pleasure,
Still to return your own.

Dun. Give me your hand:

Conduct me to mine host; we love him highly,
And shall continue our graces towards him.

By your leave, hostess.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.—The same.—A Room in the Castle.

Hautboys and torches. Enter, and pass over the stage, a Sewer, and divers Servants with dishes and service. Then enter MACBETH.*

Macb. If it were done, when 'tis done, then
'twere well

It were done quickly: If the assassination
Could trammel up the consequence, and catch,
With his surcease, success; that but this blow
Might be the be-all and the end-all here,
But here, upon, this bank and shoal of time,
We'd jump the life to come.—But, in these cases,

We still have judgment here; that we but teach
Bloody instructions, which, being taught, return

To plague the inventor: This even-handed justice Commends the ingredients of our poison'd

chalice

To our own lips. He's here in double trust:

First, as I am his kinsman and his subject,
Strong both against the deed; then, as his host,
Who should against his murderer shut the door,
Not bear the knife myself. Besides, this Du-

can

Hath borne his faculties so meek, hath been
So clear in his great office, that his virtues

Will plead like angels, trumpet-tongued, against
The deep damnation of his taking-off:

And pity, like a naked new-born babe,
Striding the blast, or heaven's cherubim, hors'd
Upon the sightless couriers † of the air,

Shall blow the horrid deed in every eye,
That tears shall drown the wind.—I have no

spur

To prick the sides of my intent, but only
Vaulting ambition, which o'er-leaps itself,
And falls on the other.—How now, what news ‡

Enter Lady MACBETH.

Lady M. He has almost supp'd; Why have you left the chamber?

Macb. Hain he ask'd for me?

Lady M. Know you not, he has?

Macb. We will proceed no further in this business:

He hath honour'd me of late; and I have bought
Golden opinions from all sorts of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest gloss,
Not cast aside so soon.

Lady M. Was the hope drunk,
Wherein you dress'd yourself? hath it slept
since?

And wakes it now, to look so green and pale
At what it did so freely? From this time,
Such I account thy love. Art thou afeard
To be the same in thine own act and valour,
As thou art in desire? Would'st thou have

that

Which thou esteem'st the ornament of life,
And live a coward in thine own esteem;

Letting I dare not wait upon I would,
Like the poor cat i'th' adage?

Macb. Pr'ythee, peace:

I dare do all that may become a man;
Who dares do more, is none.

Lady M. What beast was it then,
That made you break this enterprise to me?

When you durst do it, then you were a man;
And, to be more than what you were, you would [place,

Be so much more the man. Nor time, nor Did then adhere, ‡ and yet you would make

both:

They have made themselves, and that their fitness now

Does unmake you. I have given suck; and

* Look, countenance.

† Convenient corner. ‡ Reward.

‡ E. e. We as hermits shall ever pray for you.

|| Subject to account.

* An officer so called from his placing the dishes on the table.

† Winds; sightless is invisible.

‡ In the same sense as coheres.

How tender 'tis to love the babe that milks me :
I would, while it was smiling in my face,
Have pluck'd my nipple from his boneless
gums,
And dash'd the brains out, had I so sworn, as
you
Have done to this.

Macb. If we should fail,—

Lady M. We fail!

But screw your courage to the sticking-place,
And we'll not fail. When Duncan is asleep, (Where'to the rather shall his day's hard journey

Soundly invite him,) his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and wassel * so convince, †
That memory, the warder ‡ of the brain,
Shall be a fume, and the receipt of reason
A limbeck only : When in swinish sleep
Their drenched natures lie, as in a death,
What cannot you and I perform upon
The unguarded Duncan? what not put upon
His spongy officers; who shall bear the guilt
Of our great quest? §

Macb. Bring forth men-children only !
For thy undaunted mettle should compose
Nothing but males. Will it not be receiv'd,
When we have mark'd with blood those sleepy two

Of his own chamber, and us'd their very daggers,

That they have don't?

Lady M. Who dares receive it other,
As we shall make our griefs and clamour roar
Upon his death?

Macb. I am settled, and bend up
Each corporal agent to this terrible feat.
Away, and mock the time with fairest show :
False face must hide what the false heart doth know. [Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The same.—Court within the Castle.

Enter BANQUO and FLEANCE, and a Servant, with a torch before them.

Ban. How goes the night, boy?

Fle. The moon is down; I have not heard the clock.

Ban. And she goes down at twelve.

Fle. I take't, 'tis later, Sir.

Ban. Hold, take my sword :—There's husbandry ¶ in heaven,
Their caudles are all out.—Take thee that too.
A heavy summons lies like lead upon me,
And yet I would not sleep : Merciful powers!
Restrain in me the cursed thoughts, that nature
Gives way to in repose !—Give me my sword ;—

Enter MACBETH, and a Servant with a Torch.

Who's there?

Macb. A friend.

Ban. What, Sir, not yet at rest? The king's a-bed :

He hath been in unusual pleasure, and sent forth great largess ¶ to your offices ;
This diamond he greets your wife withal,
By the name of most kind hostess ; and shut up in measureless content.

Macb. Being unprepar'd,
Our will became the servant to defect ;
Which else should free have wrought. ✕

Ban. All's well.

I dream'd last night of the three weird sisters :
To you they have show'd some truth.

Macb. I think not of them :

Yet, when we can entreat an hour to serve,

Would spend it in some words upon that business,

If you would grant the time.

Ban. At your kind'st leisure.

Macb. If you shall cleave to my consent,— when 'tis,

It shall make honour for you.

Ban. So I lose none,

In seeking to augment it, but still keep
My bosom franchis'd and allegiance clear,
I shall be counsel'd.

Macb. Good repose, the while!

Ban. Thanks, Sir; The like to you!

Macb. Go, bid thy mistress, when my drink is ready; [Exit BANQUO.]

She strike upon the bell. Get thee to bed.

[Exit Servant.]

Is this a dagger, which I see before me,
The handle toward my hand? Come, let me clutch thee :—

I have thee not, and yet I see thee still.

Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible
To feeling as to sight? or art thou but
A dagger of the mind; a false creation,
Proceeding from the heat-oppressed brain?

I see thee yet, in form as palpable

As this which now I draw.

Thou marshal'st me the way that I was going ;

And such an instrument I was to use.

Mine eyes are made the fools o'the other senses,

Or else worth all the rest : I see thee still;

And on thy blade and dudgeon, gouts of blood,

Which was not so before.—There's no such
thing;

It is the bloody business, which informs

Thus to mine eyes.—Now o'er the one half

world

Nature seems dead, and wicked dreams abuse

The curtain'd sleep; now witchcraft celebrates

Pale Hecate's offerings; and wither'd murder,

Alarm'd by his sentinel, the wolf,

Whose howl's his watch, thus with his stealthy pace

With Tarquin's ravishing strides, towards his

design

Moves like a ghost.—Thou sure and firm-set

earth,

Hear not my steps, which way they walk, for

fear

Thy very stones prate of my where-about,

And take the present horror from the time,

Which now suits with it.—Whiles I threat, he

lives ;

Words to the heat of deeds too cold breath

gives. [A bell rings.]

I go, and it is done! the bell invites me.

Hear it not, Duncan; for it is a knell

That summons thee to heaven or to hell. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter Lady MACBETH.

Lady M. That which hath made them drunk, hath made me bold :

What hath quench'd them, them hath given me fire :
—Hark!—Peace!

It was the owl that shriek'd, the fatal bellman,
Which gives the stern'st good night. He is about it :

The doors are open; and the surfeited grooms
Do mock their charge with snueries : I have drugg'd their possets,

That death and nature do contend about them,
Whether they live, or die.

Macb. [Within.] Who's there?—what, ho!

Lady M. Alack! I am afraid they have awak'd,

And 'tis not done;—the attempt, and not the
deed,

Confounds us :—Hark!—I laid their daggers
ready,

† Overpower. * Intemperance. † Sentinel.
‡ Murder. § Emissary. ¶ Thrill.

He could not miss them.—Had he not resembled
My father as he slept, I had done't.—My husband!

Enter MACBETH.

Macb. I have done the deed :—Didst thou not hear a noise?

Lady M. I heard the owl scream, and the crickets cry.

Did not you speak?

Macb. When?

Lady M. Now.

Macb. As I descended?

Lady M. Ay.

Macb. Hark!

Who lies i'the second chamber?

Lady M. Donalbain.

Macb. This is a sorry sight.

Lady M. A foolish thought, to say a sorry sight.

Macb. There's one did laugh in his sleep, and one cried, murder!

That they did wake each other; I stood and heard them:

But they did say their prayers, and address'd them
Again to sleep.

Lady M. There are two lodg'd together.

Macb. One cried, God bless us! and Amen, the other;

As * they had seen me, with these hangman's hands,

Listening their fear—I could not say, Amen,
When they did say, God bless us.

Lady M. Consider it not so deeply.

Macb. But wherefore could not I pronounce
Amen?

I had most need of blessing, and Amen
Stuck in my throat.

Lady M. These deeds must not be thought
After these ways; so, it will make us mad.

Macb. Methought, I heard a voice cry, Sleep
no more.

Macbeth does murder sleep, the innocent
sleep;

Sleep, that knits up the ravel'd sleeve† of
care,

The death of each day's life, sore labour's
bath,

Balm of hurt minds, great nature's second
course,

Chief nourisher in life's feast :—

Lady M. What do you mean?

Macb. Still it cried, Sleep no more! to all
the house:

Glamis hath murder'd sleep; and therefore
Cawdor

Shall sleep no more. Macbeth shall sleep no
more!

Lady M. Who was it that thus cried? Why, worthy thane,

You do unbend your noble strength, to think
So brainlessly of things :—Go, get some water,

And wash this filthy witness from your hand.—
Why did you bring these daggers from the

place?
They must lie there: Go, carry them; and sneak

The sleepy grooms with blood.

Macb. I'll go no more:

I am afraid to think what I have done;
Look on't again, I dare not.

Lady M. Inform of purpose!

Give me the daggers: The sleeping and the
dead

Are but as pictures: 'tis the eye of childhood,
That fears a painted devil. If he do bleed,

I'll gild the faces of the grooms withal,
For it must seem their guilt.

[Exit. Knocking within.]

Macb. Whence is that knocking?

* As if.

† Sleeve is unwrought silk.

How is't with me, when every noise appals me?
What hands are here? Ha! they pluck out mine eyes!

Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood Clean from my hand? No; this my hand will rather

The multitudinous seas incarnadine,
Making the green—one red.

Re-enter Lady MACBETH.

Lady M. My hands are of your colour; but I shame

To wear a heart so white. [Knock.] I hear a
At the south entry :—retire we to our chamber:

A little water clears us of this deed:
How easy is it then? Your constancy

Hath left you unattended.—[Knocking] Hark!
more knocking:

Get on your nightgown, lest occasion call us,
And show us to be watchers :—Be not lost

So poorly in your thoughts.

Macb. To know my deed,—'twere best not know myself.

Wake Duncan with this knocking! Ay, 'would thou could'st!

SCENE III.—The same.

Enter a PORTER.—[Knocking within.]

Port. Here's a knocking, indeed! If a man were porter of hell-gate, he should have old * turning the key. [Knocking.] Knock, knock, knock: Who's there, i'the name of Belzebub?

Here's a farmer, that hanged himself on the expectation of plenty: Come in time; have napkins † enough about you; here you'll sweat for't.

[Knocking.] Knock, knock: Who's there, i'the devil's name? 'Faith, here's an equivocator, that could swear in both the scales against either scale; who committed treason enough for God's sake, yet could not equivocate to heaven:

O come in, equivocator. [Knocking.] Knock, knock, knock: Who's there? 'Faith here's an English tailor come hither for stealing out of a French hose: Come in, tailor; here you may roast your goose. [Knocking.] Knock, knock:

Never at quiet! What are you?—But this place is too cold for hell. I'll devil-porter it no further: I had thought to have let in some of all professions, that go the primrose way to the everlasting bonfire. [Knocking.] Anon, anon; I pray you, remember the porter.

[Opens the gate.]

Enter MACDUFF and LENOX.

Macd. Was it so late, friend, ere you went
That you do lie so late? [To bed,

Port. 'Faith, Sir, we were carousing till the second cock: † and drink, Sir, is a great provoker of three things.

Macd. What three things does drink especially provoke?

Port. Marry, Sir, nose-painting, sleep, and urine. Lechery, Sir, it provokes and unprovokes: it provokes the desire, but it takes away the performance: Therefore, much drunk may be said to be an equivocator with lechery: it makes him, and it mars him; it sets him on,
and it takes him off; it persuades him, and dis-heartens him; makes him stand to, and not stand to: in conclusion, equivocates him in a sleep, and, giving him the lie, leaves him.

Macd. I believe, drink gave thee the lie last
night.

Port. That it did, Sir, i'the very throat o'me:
But I requited him for his lie; and, I think,
being too strong for him, though he took up any legs sometime, yet I made a shift to cast
him.

Macd. Is thy master stirring?—
Our knocking has awak'd him; here he comes.

* Frequent.

† Cockcrowings.

‡ Handkerchiefs.

Enter MACBETH.*

Len. Good morrow, noble Sir!

Macb. Good-morrow, both!

Macd. Is the king stirring, worthy thane?

Macb. Not yet.

Macd. He did command me to call timely on him;

I have almost slipp'd the hour.

Macb. I'll bring you to him.

Macd. I know, this is a joyful trouble to you:

But yet 'tis one.
Macb. The labour we delight in, physics pain.

This is the door.

Macd. I'll make so bold to call,

For 'tis my limited service.*

[Exit MACDUFF.]

Len. Goes the king

From hence to-day?

Macb. He does:—He did appoint it so.

Len. The night has been unruly: Where we lay,

Our chimneys were blown down: and, as they saw,

Lamentings heard i'the air; strange screams of death;

And prophesying, with accents terrible,

Of dire combustion and confus'd events,

New hatch'd to the woeful time. The obscure

bird

Clamour'd the livelong night: some say, the

earth

Was feverous, and did shake.

Macb. 'Twas a rough night.

Len. My young remembrance cannot parallel

A fellow to it.

Re-enter MACDUFF.

Macd. O horror! horror! horror! Tongue,

nor heart,

Cannot conceive, nor name thee!†

Macb. Len. What's the matter?

Macd. Confusion now hath made his masterpiece!

Most sacrilegious murder hath broke ope

The Lord's anointed temple, and stole thence

The life o'the building.

Macb. What is't you say? the life?

Len. Mean you his majesty?

Macd. Approach the chamber, and destroy your sight

With a new Gorgon:—Do not bid me speak;

Sec, and then speak yourselves.—Awake!

awake!

[Exit MACBETH and LENOX.]

Ring the alarm-bell:—Murder! and treason!

Banquo, and Donalbain! Malcolm! awake!

Shake off this downy sleep, death's counterfeits,

And look on death itself!—up, up, and see

The great doom's image!—Malcolm! Ban-quo!

As from your graves rise up, and walk like

sprights,

To countenance this horror!

[Bell rings.]

Enter Lady MACBETH.

Lady M. What's the business,

That such a hideous trumpet calls to parley

The sleepers of the house? speak, speak,—

Macd. O gentle lady,

'Tis not for you to hear what I can speak:

The repetition in a woman's ear,

Would murder as it fell.—O Banquo! Banquo!

Enter BANQUO.

Our royal master's murder'd!

Lady M. Woe, alas!

What, in your house?

Ban. Too cruel any where.—

I hear Duff, I pry'thee, contradict thyself,
And say, it is not so.

Re-enter MACBETH and LENOX.

Macb. Had I but died an hour before this chance,

I had liv'd a blessed time; for, from this instant,

There's nothing serious in mortality:

All is but toys: renown, and grace, is dead;

The wine of life is drawn, and the meer lees is left this vault to brag of.

Enter MALCOLM and DONALBAIN.

Don. What is amiss?

Macb. You are, and do not know it:
The spring, the head, the fountain of your
blood

is stopp'd; the very source of it is stopp'd.

Macd. Your royal father's murder'd.

Mal. Oh! by whom?

Len. Those of his chamber, as it seem'd, had done't: [blood,

Their hands and faces were all badg'd with

So were their daggers, which, unwip'd, we found

Upon their pillows:

They star'd, and were distracted; no man's life

Was to be trusted with them.

Macb. O yet I do repent me of my fury,

That I did kill them.

Macd. Wherefore did you so?

Macb. Who can be wise, amaz'd, temperate and furious,

Loyal and neutral, in a moment? No man:

The expedition of my violent love

Out-ran the pauser reason.—Here lay Duncan,

His silver skin lac'd with his golden blood,

And his gash'd stabs look'd like a breach in

nature,

For ruin's wasteful entrance: there, the murderers,

Steep'd in the colours of their trade, their daggers [reftain,

Unmannerly breech'd with gore: * Who could

That had a heart to love, and in that heart

Courage, to make his love known†

Lady M. Help me hence, ho!

Macd. Look to the lady.

Mal. Why do we hold our tongues,

That most may claim this argument for ours?

Don. What should be spoken here,

Where our fate, hid within an augre-hole,

May rush and seize us? Let's away; our tears

Are not yet brew'd.

Mal. Nor our strong sorrow on

The foot of motion.

Ban. Look to the lady:—

[Lady MACBETH is carried out.

And when we have our naked frailties hid,

That suffer in exposure, let us meet,

And question this most bloody piece of work,

To know it further. Fears and scruples shake

us:

In the great hand† of God I stand; and, thence

Against the undivulg'd pretence† I fight

Of treasonous malice.

Macb. And so do I.

All. So all.

Macb. Let's briefly put on manly readiness,

And meet i'the hall together.

All. Well contented.

[Exit all but MAL. and DON.]

Mal. What will you do? Let's not consort

with them:

To show an unfelt sorrow, is an office

Which the false man does easy: I'll to England.

Don. To Ireland, I; our separated fortune

Shall keep us both the safer: where we are,

* Appointed service.

† The use of two negatives, not to make an affirmative, but to deny more strongly, is common in our language.

* Covered with blood to their hilt.

† Power.

‡ Intention.

There's daggers in men's smiles; the near in blood,
The nearer bloody.

Mal. This murderous shaft that's shot,
Hath not yet lighted; and our safest way
Is, to avoid the aim. Therefore, to horse;
And let us not be dainty of leave-taking,
But shift away: There's warrant in that theft
Which steals itself, when there's no mercy left.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Without the Castle.

Enter ROSS and an Old Man.

Old Man. Threescore and ten I can remember well:
Within the volume of which time, I have seen
Hours dreadful and things strange; but this sore night

Hath trifled former knowings.

Rosse. Ah! good father, [act,
Thou see'st, the heavens, as troubled with man's Threaten his bloody stage: by the clock, 'tis day,
And yet dark night strangles the travelling lamp:

Is it night's predominance, or the day's shame,
That darkness does the face of earth entomb,
When living light should kiss it?

Old Man. 'Tis unnatural,
Even like the deed that's done. On Tuesday last,

A falcon, tow'ring in her pride of place,
Was by a mousing owl hawk'd at, and kill'd.

Rosse. And Duncan's horses, (a thing most strange and certain,)

Beauteous and swift, the minions of their race,
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung Contending 'gainst obedience, as they would make

War with mankind.

Old Man. 'Tis said, they eat each other.

Rosse. They did so; to the amazement of mine eyes,
That look'd upon't. Here comes the good Macduff:—

Enter MACDUFF.

How goes the world Sir, now?

Macd. Why, see you not?
Rosse. Is't known who did this more than bloody deed?

Macd. Those that Macbeth hath slain.

Rosse. Alas, the day!

What good could they pretend?

Macd. They were suborn'd:
Malcolm, and Donalbain, the king's two sons,
Are stol'n away and fled; which puts upon them

Suspicion of the deed.

Rosse. 'Gainst nature still:

Thirteenth ambition, that will ravine up
Thine own life's means!—Then 'tis most like,
The sovereignty will fall upon Macbeth.

Macd. He is already unaid'd; and gone to Scone,
To be invested.

Rosse. Where is Duncan's body?

Macd. Carried to Colme-kil;†
The sacred storehouse of his predecessors,
And guardian of their bones.

Rosse. Will you to Scone?

Macd. No, cousin, I'll to Fife.

Rosse. Well, I will thither.

Macd. Well, may you use things well done
there—adieu!

Lest our old robes sit easier than our new!

Rosse. Father, farewell.

Old Man. God's benison go with you: and with those

That would make good of bad, and friends of foes! [Exeunt.]

* Intend to themselves.

† Colme-kil is the famous lena, one of the west.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Fores.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter BANQUO.

Ban. Thou hast it now—King, Cawdor, Glamis, all,
As the weird women promis'd; and, I fear,
Thou play'st most foully for't: yet it was said,
It should not stand in thy posterity;
But that myself should be the root and father
Of many kings. If there come truth from them,

(As upon thee, Macbeth, their speeches shine,) Why, by the verities on thee made good,
May they not be my oracles as well,
And set me up in hope? But hush; no more.

Senet sounded. Enter MACBETH, as King; Lady MACBETH, as Queen; LENOX, ROSS, Lords, Ladies, and Attendants.

Macb. Here's our chief guest.

Lady M. If he had been forgotten,
It had been as a gap in our great feast,
And all things unbecoming.

Macb. To night we hold a solemn supper, Sir,
And I'll request your presence.

Ban. Let your highness
Command upon me; to the which, my duties
Are with a most indissoluble tie
For ever knit.

Macb. Ride you this afternoon?

Ban. Ay, my good lord.

Macb. We should have else desir'd your good advice [ious,
(Which still hath been both grave and prosperous in this day's council; but we'll take to-morrow.
Is't far you ride?)

Ban. As far, my lord, as will fill up the time
'Twixt this and supper: go not my horse the
better,

I must become a borrower of the night.

For a dark hour or twain.

Macb. Fail not our feast.

Ban. My lord, I will not.

Macb. We hear our bloody cousins are bestow'd

In England and in Ireland; not confessing
Their cruel parricide, filling their hearers
With strange invention: But of that to-morrow;
When, therewithal, we shall have cause of state,
Craving us jointly. Hie you to horse: Adieu,
Fill you return at night. Goes Fleance with you?

Ban. Ay, my good lord: our time does call upon us.

Macb. I wish your horses swift and sure of foot;

And so I do commend you to their backs.

Farewell.— [Exit BANQUO.]

Let every man be master of his time

'Till seven at night; to make society

The sweeter welcome, we will keep ourself

Till supper-time alone: while then, God be with you.

[Exeunt Lady MACBETH, Lords, Ladies, &c.]

Sirrah, a word: Attend those men our pleasure?

Atten. They are, my lord, without the palace gate.

Macb. Bring them before us.—[Exit ATTEN.]

To be thus, is nothing;

But to be safely thus:—Our fears in Banquo

Stick deep; and in his royalty of nature

Reigns that, which would be fear'd: 'Tis much he dares;

And, to that dauntless temper of his mind,

He hath a wisdom that doth guide his valour

To act in safety. There is none but he

Whose being I do fear; and under him,

My genius is rebuk'd; as, it is said,

* Commit.

† Nobleness.

Mark Antony's was by Cesar. He chid the sisters,
When first they put the name of king upon me,
And bade them speak to him; then prophet-like,

They hail'd him father to a line of kings:
Upon my head they plac'd a fruitless crown,
And put a barren sceptre in my gripe,
Thence to be wrench'd with an unlineal hand,
No son of mine succeeding. If it be so,
For Banquo's issue have I flid* my mind;
For them the gracious Duncan have I murder'd;

Put rancours in the vessel of my peace
Only for them; and mine eternal jewel
Given to the common enemy of man,
To make them kings, the seed of Banquo kings!

Rather than so, come, fate, into the list,
And champion me to the utterance! —Who's there!—

Re-enter ATTENDANT, with two MURDERERS.
Now to the door, and stay there till we call.

[Exit ATTENDANT.]
Was it not yesterday we spoke together?

1 Mur. It was so, please your highness.
Macb. Well then, now

Have you consider'd of my speeches? Know,
That it was he, in the times past, which held you

So under fortune; which, you thought, had been
Our innocent self: this I made good to you
In our last conference; pass'd in probation;
with you,

How you were born in hand; § how cross'd; the instruments;
Who wrought with them; and all things else,
that might,

To half a soul, and a notion craz'd,
Say, Thus did Banquo.

1 Mur. You made it known to us.
Macb. I did so; and went further, which is
now

Our point of second meeting. Do you find
Your patience so predominant in your nature,
That you can let this go? Are you so gosspell'd, ||

To pray for that good man and for his issue,
Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,
And beggar'd yours for ever?

1 Mur. We are men, my liege.
Macb. Ay, in the catalogue ye go for men;
As hounds, and greyhounds, mongrels, spaniels,
curs,

Shoughs, ♀ water-rugs, and demi-wolves, are cleped **

All by the name of dogs: the valued file
Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle,
The house-keeper, the hunter, every one
According to the gift which bounteous nature
Hath in him clos'd; whereby he does receive Particular addition, † from the bill
That writes them all alike: and so of men.
Now, if you have a station in the file,
And not in the worst rank of manhood, say it;
And I will put that business in your bosom,
Whose execution takes your enemy off;
Grapples you to the heart and love of us,
Who wear our health but sickly in his life,
Which in his death were perfect.

2 Mur. I am one, my liege,
Whom the file blows and buffets of the world
Have so incens'd, that I am reckless ‡ what
I do, to spite the world.

1 Mur. And I another,
So weary with disasters, tugg'd §§ with fortune,
That I would set my life on any chance,
To mend it or be rid on't.

* For defiled.

† Challenge me to extremities.

‡ Proved.

§ Deluded.

|| Are you so obedient to the precepts of the Gospel.

♀ Wolf-dogs.

 Called.

† Title.

‡ Careless.

§ Worried.

Macb. Both of you
Know, Banquo was your enemy.

2 Mur. True, my lord.

Macb. So is he mine: and in such bloody-distance, *

That every minute of his being thrusts
Against my near'st of life: And though I could With bare-fac'd power sweep him from my sight,

And bid my will avouch it; yet I must not,
For † certain friends that are both his and
mine,

Whose loves I may not drop, but will his fall
Whom I myself struck down: and thence it is,
That I to your assistance do make love;
Masking the business from the common eye,
For sundry weighty reasons.

2 Mur. We shall, my lord,
Perform what you command us.

1 Mur. Though our lives—

Macb. Your spirits shine through you. Within this hour, at most,

I will advise you where to plant yourselves.
Acquaint you with the perfect spy o'the time,
The moment on't; for't must be done to-night,
And something from the palace; always thought,
That I require a clearness; And with him,
(To leave no rubs, nor botches, in the work,) [Macb.]
Fleance his son, that keeps him company,
Whose absence is no less material to me
Than is his father's, must embrace the fate
Of that dark hour. Resolve yourselves apart;
I'll come to you anon.

2 Mur. We are resolv'd my lord.

Macb. I'll call upon you straight: abide within.

It is concluded:—Banquo, thy soul's flight,
It is find heaven, must find it out to-night.
[Exit.]

SCENE II.—The same.—Another Room.

Enter Lady MACBETH, and a SERVANT.

Lady M. Is Banquo gone from court?

Serv. Ay, madam, but returns again to-night.

Lady M. Say to the king, I would attend his leisure

For a few words.

Serv. Madam, I will. [Exit.]

Lady M. Nought's had, all's spent,
Where our desire is got without content:
'Tis safer to be that which we destroy,
Than, by destruction, dwell in doubtful joy.

Enter MACBETH.

How now, my lord? why do you keep alone,
Of sorriest I fancies your companion making?
Using those thoughts, which should indeed have died

With them they think on? Things without remedy,

Should be without regard: what's done, is done.

Macb. We have scotch'd the snake, not kill'd it; [Macb.]

She'll close, and be herself; whilst our poor
Remains in danger of her former tooth.

But let

The frame of things disjoint, both the worlds suffer,

Ere we will eat our meal in fear, and sleep
In the affliction of these terrible dreams,

That shake us nightly: Better be with the
dead,

Whom we, to gain our place, have sent to
peace,

Than on the torture of the mind to lie
In restless ecstasy. § Duncan is in his grave:

After life's fitful fever he sleeps well;
Treason has done his worst: nor steel, nor poison,

Malice domestic, foreign levy, nothing,
Can touch him further!

* Moral enmity.

† Most melancholy

‡ Because of.

§ Gony.

Lady M. Come on;
Gentle my Lord, sleek o'er your rugged looks;
Be bright and jovial 'mong your guests to-night.

Macb. So shall I, love; and so, I pray, be you.

Let your remembrance apply to Banquo;
Present him eminence,* both with eye and Unsatiate the while, that we [tongue:]
Must lave our honours in these battering streams;

And make our faces vizards to our hearts,
Disguising what they are.

Lady M. You must leave this.

Macb. O full of scorpions is my mind, dear
wife!

Thou know'st that Banquo and his Fleance, lives.

Lady M. But in them nature's copy's not eternie.

Macb. There's comfort yet; they are assai-lable;

Then be thou jocund: Ere the bat hath flown
His cloister'd flight; ere, to black Hecat.'s summons, [hums,

The shard-borne beetle,† with his drowsy
Hath rung night's yawning peal, there shall be
A deed of dreadful note. [done

Lady M. What's to be done?

Macb. Be innocent of the knowledge, dearest chuck;‡ [night

Till thou applaud the deed. Come, seeling§
Sharf up the tender eye of pitiful day;
And, with thy bloody and invisible hand,
Cancel and tear to pieces that great bond
Which keeps me pale!—Light thickens; and the crow

Makes wing to the rooky wood:
Good things of day begin to droop and drowse;
Whiles night's black agents to their prey do rouse [still;

Thou mar'st† at my words; but hold thee
Things, bad begun, make strong themselves by
ill:

So pry'three go with me. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same.—A Park or Lawn, with a Gate leading to the Palace.

Enter three MURDERERS.

1 Mur. But who did did thee join with us?

3 Mur. Macbeth.

2 Mur. He needs not our mistrust; since he delivers

Our offices, and what we have to do,
To the direction just.

1 Mur. Then stand with us.

The west yet glimmers with some streaks of
day:

Now spurs the lated traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn; and near approaches
The subject of our watch.

3 Mur. Hark! I hear horses.

Ban. [Within.] Give us a light there, ho!

2 Mur. Then it is he; the rest

That are within the note of expectation,‡
Already are i' the court.

1 Mur. His horses go about.

3 Mur. Almost a mile: but he does usually,
So all men do, from hence to the palace gate
Make it their walk.

Enter BANQUO and FLEANCE, a Servant with a torch preceding them.

2 Mur. A light, a light!

3 Mur. 'Tis he.

1 Mur. Stand to't.

Bay. It will be rain to-night.

1 Mur. Let it come down.

[Assaults BANQUO.

* Do him the highest honours.

† The beetle borne in the air by its shards or scaly wings. ‡ A term of endearment. § Blinding.

1 L. They who are set down in the list of guests, and expected to supper.

Ban. O treachery! Fly, good Fleance, fly, fly,
Thou may'st revenge. O slave! [Fly:

[Dies. FLEANCE* and Servant escape.

3 Mur. Who did strike out the light?

1 Mur. Was't not the way?

3 Mur. There's but one down; the son is fled

2 Mur. We have lost best half of our affair.

1 Mur. Well, let's away, and say how much is done. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Room of State in the Palace.

*A Banquet prepared. Enter MACBETH, Lady
MACBETH, ROSSE, LENOX, LORDS, and AT-TENDANTS.*

Macb. You know your own degrees, sit down:
at first

And last, the hearty welcome.

Lords. Thanks to your majesty.

Macb. Ourselves will mingle with society,
And play the humble host.

Our hostess keeps her state; † but in best time,
We will require her welcome.

Lady M. Pronounce it for me, Sir, to all our
friends;

For my heart speaks, they are welcome.

Enter first MURDERER, to the door

Macb. See, they encounter thee with their hearts' thanks:—

Both sides are even: Here I'll sit i'the midst:
Be large in mirth; and anon, we'll drink a measure
The table round.—There's blood upon thy face.

Mur. 'Tis Banquo's then.

Macb. 'Tis better thee without, than he within.
Is he despatch'd?

Mur. My lord, his throat is cut; that I did for him.

Macb. Thou art the best o'the cut-throats:
Yet he's good

That did the like for Fleance: if thou dust it,
Thou art the nonpareil.

Mur. Most royal Sir,

Fleance is 'scap'd.

Macb. Then comes my fit again: I had else been perfect;

Whole as the marble, founded as the rock;
As broad and general as the casing air: [in

But now, I am cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound
To saucy doubts and fears. But Banquo's safe!

Mur. Ay, my good lord: safe in a ditch he bides,

With twenty trenched gashes on his head;
The least a death to nature.

Macb. Thanks for that:— [fled

There the grown serpent lies; the worm, that's Hath nature that in time will venom breed,
No teeth for the present.—Get thee gone; tomorrow

We'll hear, ourselves again. [Exit MURDERER.

Lady M. My royal lord,

You do not give the cheer: the feast is sold,
That is not often vouch'd, while 'tis a making,

'Tis given with welcome: To feed, were best
at home;

From thence, the sauce to meat is ceremony;
Meeting were bare without it.

Macb. Sweet remembrancer!—

Now good digestion wait on appetite,
And health on both!

Len. May it please your highness sit?

[The Ghost of BANQUO rises, and sits in MACBETH'S place.

Macb. Here had we now our country's honour roof'd,

Were the grac'd person of our Banquo present;
Who may I rather challenge for unkindness,

Than ply for my chance!

Rosse. His absence, Sir, [highness

Lays blame upon his promise. Please it your
To grace us with your royal company?

Macb. The table's full.

* James I. was descended in a direct line from this son of Banquo, by a daughter of the prince of Wales.

† Continues in her chair of state.

Len. Here's a place reserv'd, Sir.

Macb. Where?

Len. Here my lord. What is't that moves your highness?

Macb. Which of you have done this?

Lords. What, my good lord?

Macb. Thou can'st not say I did it: never Thy gory locks at me. [shake]

Rosse. Gentlemen, rise; his highness is not well.

Lady M. Sit, worthy friends:—my lord is often thus, [seat;

And hath been from his youth: 'pray you, keep The fit is momentary; upon a thought.

He will again be well: If much you note him, You shall offend him and extend his passion; † Feed, and regard him not.—Are you a man?

Macb. Ay, and a bold one that dare look on Which might appal the devil. [that]

Lady M. O proper stuff!

This is the very painting of your fear: This is the air-drawn dagger, which, you said, Led you to Duncan. O these flaws; and starts (Impostors to true fear,) would well become A woman's story at a winter's fire, Authoriz'd by her grandam. Shame itself! Why do you make such faces? When all's done, You look but on a stool.

Macb. Pr'ythee, see there! behold! look! lo! how say you?— [too.—

Why, what care I? If thou canst nod, speak If charnel-houses and our graves must send Those that we bury, back, our monuments Shall be the maws of kites. [Ghost disappears.

Lady M. What! quite unmann'd in folly?

Macb. If I stand here, I saw him.

Lady M. Fie, for shame!

Macb. Blood hath been shed ere now 't' the olden time,

Ere human statute purg'd the gentle weal; Ay, and since too, murders have been perform'd

Too terrible for the ear: the times have been, That, when the brains were out, the man would die,

And there an end; but now, they rise again, With twenty mortal murders on their crowns, And push us from our stools: This is more Than such a murder is. [strange Lady M. My worthy lord, Your noble friends do lack you.

Macb. I do forget:—

Do not muse § at me, my most worthy friends; I have a strange infirmity, which is nothing To those that know me. Come, love and health to all;

Then I'll sit down:—Give me some wine, fill full:—

I drink to the general joy of the whole table,

Ghost rises.

And to our dear friend Banquo, whom we miss;

Would he were here! to all and him, we thirst, And all to all. ‡

Lords. Our duties, and the pledge.

Macb. Avaunt! and quit my sight! Let the earth hide thee!

Thy bones are marrowless, thy blood is cold; Thou hast no speculation in those eyes Which thou dost glare with!

Lady M. Think of this, good peers, But as a thing of custom; 'tis no other; Only it spoils the pleasure of the time.

Macb. What man dare, I dare:

Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear, The arm'd rhinoceros, or the Hyrcan Tiger, Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves Shall never tremble: Or, be alive again, And dare me to the desert with thy sword;

If trembling I inhibit * thee, protest me The baby of a girl. Hence, horrible shadow!

[Ghost disappears. Unreal mockery, hence!—Why, so;—being gone,

I am a man again. Pray you, sit still.

Lady M. You have displac'd the mirth, broke the good meeting,

With most admir'd disorder.

Macb. Can such things be, And overcome † us like a summer's cloud, Without our special wonder? You make me strange

Even to the disposition that I owe; ‡ When now I think you can behold such sights, And keep the natural ruby of your cheeks, When mine are blanched with fear.

Rosse. What sights, my lord?

Lady M. I pray you, speak not; he grows worse and worse;

Question enrages him: at once, good night:— Stand not upon the order of your going, But go at once.

Len. Good night, and better health Attend his majesty!

Lady M. A kind good night to all!

[Exit Lords and Attendants. Macb. It will have blood; they say, blood will have blood:

Stones have been known to move, and trees to speak:

Augurs, and understood relations, have By magot-pies, § and choughs, and rooks, brought forth

The secret' of man of blood.—What is the night? Macb. Almost at odds with morning, which is which.

Macb. How say'st thou, that Macduff denies this person, At our great bidding?

Lady M. Did you send to him, Sir?

Macb. I hear it by the way; but I will send: There's not a one † of them, but in his house I keep a servant fee'd. I will to-morrow, (Beltimes I will,) unto the weird sisters: More shall they speak; for now I am bent to know, [good,

By the worst means the worst: for mine own end All causes shall give way; I am in blood Stepp'd in so far, that, should I wade no more, Returning were as tedious as go o'er: Strange things I have in head, that will to hand;

Which must be acted, ere they may be scann'd. ‡ Lady M. You lack the season of all natures, sleep.

Macb. Come, we'll to sleep: my strange and self-abuse Is the ignorant fear that wants hard use:— We are yet but young in deed. [Exit.

SCENE V.—The Heath.

Thunder. Enter HECATE, meeting the three WITCHES.

1 Witch. Why, how now, Hecate? you look angrily.

Hec. Have I not reason, beldams as you are, Saucy, and overbold? How did you dare To trade and traffic with Macbeth, In riddles and affairs of death; And I, the mistress of your charms, The close contriver of all harms, Was never call'd to bear my part, Or show the glory of our art? And, which is worse, all you have done Hath been but for a wayward son. Spiteful and wrathful; who, as others do, Loves for his own ends, not for you. But make amends now: Get you gone, And at the pit of Acheron,

* As quick as thought.

† Prolong his suffering.

‡ Sudden gust.

§ Woodcock.

‡ I. e. All good wishes to all.

* Forbidden.

† Possess.

‡ An individual.

† Pass over.

‡ Magpies.

§ Examined nicely.

Meet me i'the morning : thither he
Will come to know his destiny.
Your vessels and your spells provide
Your charms and every thing beside :
I am for the air ; this night I'll spend
Unto a dismal-fatal end.
Great business must be wrought ere noon :
Upon the corner of the moon
There hangs a vaporous drop profound :
I'll catch it ere it come to ground :
And that, distill'd by magic sights,
Shall raise such artificial sprights,
As, by the strength of their illusion
Shall draw him on to his confusion :
He shall spurn fate, scorn death, and bear
His hopes 'bove wisdom, grace, and fear :
And you all know, security
Is mortal's chiefest enemy.

Song. (Within.) Come away, come away, &c.
Hark, I am call'd ; my little spirit, see,
Sits in a foggy cloud, and stays for me.

[Exit.]
1 Witch. Come, let's make haste ; she'll soon be back again.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—Fores.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter LENOX and another LORD.

Len. My former speeches have but hit your thoughts,
Which can interpret further : only, I say,
Things have been strangely borne : The gracious
Duncan
Was piti'd of Macbeth :—marry, he was dead :—
And the right-valiant Banquo walk'd too late ;
Whom, you may say, if it please you, Fleance
kill'd,
For Fleance fled. Men must not walk too late.
Who cannot want the thought, how monstrous
It was for Malcolm, and for Donalbain,
To kill their gracious father ? damned fact !
How it did grieve Macbeth ! did he not straight,
In pious rage, the two delinquents tear,
That were the slaves of drink, and thralls of
sleep ?
Was not that nobly done ? Ay, and wisely too ;
For 'twould have anger'd any heart alive,
To hear the men deny it. So that, I say,
He has borne all things well : and I do think,
That, had he Duncan's sons under his key,
(As, an't please heaven, he shall not,) they should find
What 'twere to kill a father ; so should Fleance.
But, peace !—for from broad words, and cause
he fail'd
His presence at the tyrant's feast, I hear,
Macduff lives in disgrace : Sir, can you tell
Where he bestows himself ?

Lord. The son of Duncan,
From whom this tyrant holds the due of birth
Lives in the English court ; and is receiv'd
Of the most pious Edward with such grace,
That the malevolence of fortune nothing
Takes from his high respect : Thither Macduff
Is gone to pray the holy king, on his aid
To wake Northumberland and warlike Siward :
That, by the help of these, (with Him above
To ratify the work,) we may again
Grieve to our tables meat, sleep to our nights ;
Free from our feasts and banquets bloody
knives ;

Do faithful homage, and receive free honours,†
All which we pine for now : And this report
Hath so exasperate ‡ the king, that he Prepares for some attempt of war.

Len. Sent he to Macduff ?

Lord. He did : and with an absolute, Sir,
not I,
The cloudy messenger turns me his back,

And hums, as who should say, You'll rue the time

That clogs me with this answer.

Len. And that well might Advise him to a caution, to hold what distance
His wisdom can provide. Some holy angel
Fly to the court of England, and unfold
His message ere he come ; that a swift blessing
May soon return to this our suffering country
Under a hand accurs'd !

Lord. My prayers with him ! [Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A dark Cave.—In the middle, a
Cauldron boiling.

Thunder. Enter the three WITCHES.

1 Witch. Thrice the hinded cat hath mew'd.
2 Witch. Thrice ; and once the hedge-pig whin'd.

3 Witch. Harper cries :—'Tis time, 'tis time.
1 Witch. Round about the cauldron go ;

In the poison'd entrails throw.—
Toad, that under coldstart stone,
Days and nights hast thirty-one
Swelter'd * venom sleeping got,
Boil thou first i'the charmed pot !

All. Double, double toil and trouble ;
Fire, burn ; and, cauldron, bubble.

2 Witch. Fillet of a fenny snake,
In the cauldron boil and bake :
Eye of newt, and toe of frog,
Wool of bat, and tongue of dog,
Adder's fork, and blind-worm's sting,
Lizard's leg, and owl's wing,
For a charm of powerful trouble,
Like a hell-broth boil and bubble.

All. Double, double toil and trouble ;
Fire, burn ; and, cauldron, bubble.

3 Witch. Scale of dragon, tooth of wolf ;
Witches' mummy ; maw and gulf,†
Of the rav'n'd ‡ salt-sea shark ;
Root of hemlock, digg'd i'the dark ;
Liver of blaspheming Jew ;
Gall of goat and slips of yew,
Silver'd in the moon's eclipse ;
Nose of Turk, and Tartar's lips ;
Finger of birth-strangled babe,
Ditch-deliver'd by a drab,
Make the griel thick and slab ;
Add thereto a tiger's chandron,§
For the ingredients of our cauldron.

All. Double, double toil and trouble ;
Fire, burn ; and, cauldron, bubble.

2 Witch. Cool it with a baboon's blood,
Then the charm is firm and good.

Enter HECATE, and the other three WITCHES.

Hee. Oh ! well done ! I commend your
pains ;

And every one shall share i'the gains.

And now about the cauldron sing
Like elves and fairies in a ring,
Enchanting all that you put in.

SONG.

*Black spirits and white,
Red spirits and grey ;
Mingle, mingle, mingle,
You that mangle may.*

2 Witch. By the pricking of my thumbs,
Something wicked this way comes :—
Open, locks, whoever knocks.

* This word is employed to signify that the animal was hot and sweating with venom, although sleeping under a cold stone.

† The throat.

‡ Entrails. § Ravenous.

* L. c. A drop that has deep or hidden qualities.

† Honours freely bestowed.

‡ For exasperated.

Enter MACBETH.

Macb. How now, you secret, black, and midnight hags?
What is't you do?

All. A deed without a name.

Macb. I conjure you, by that which you profess,

(Howe'er you come to know it,) answer me:
Though you utter the winds, and let them fight Against the churches; though the yesty waves
Confound and swallow navigation up;
Though bladed corn be lodg'd,† and trees blown
down;

Though castles topple on their warders' heads;

Though palaces and pyramids do slope
Their heads to their foundations; though the treasure

Of nature's germins‡ tumble all together,
Even till destruction sicken, answer me
To what I ask you.

1 Witch. Speak.

2 Witch. Demand.

3 Witch. We'll answer.

1 Witch. Say, if thou'd'st rather hear it from our mouths,

Or from our masters'!

Macb. Call them, let me see them.

1 Witch. Pour in sow's blood, that hath eaten

Her nine farrow; grease, that's sweaten
From the murderer's gibbet, throw
Into the flame.

All. Come, high, or low;

Thyself, and office, deftly‖ show.

Thunder. An APPARITION of an Armed
Head rises.

Macb. Tell me, thou unknown power,—

1 Witch. He knows thy thought;—

Hear his speech, but say thou nought.

App. Macbeth! Macbeth! Macbeth! beware
Macduff;

Beware the thane of Fife.—Dismiss me:—Enough.
[Descends.]

Macb. What'e'er thou art, for thy good caution, thanks;

Thou hast harp'd‡ my fear aright:—But one word more:

1 Witch. He will not be commanded: Here's another,

More potent than the first.

Thunder.—An APPARITION of a Bloody Child rises.

App. Macbeth! Macbeth! Macbeth!—

Macb. Had I three ears, I'd hear thee.

App. Be bloody, bold,
And resolute: laugh to scorn the power of man,
For none of woman born shall harm Macbeth.
[Descends.]

Macb. Then live, Macduff; What need I fear
of thee?

But yet I'll make assurance double sure
And take a bond of fate: thou shalt not live;
That I may tell pale-hearted fear, it lies,
And sleep in spite of thunder.—What is this,

Thunder.—An APPARITION of a Child Crowned, with a Tree in his Hand, rises.

That rises like the issue of a king;
And wears upon his baby brow the round
And top of sovereignty!‡

All. Listen, but speak not.

App. Be lion-mettled, proud; and take no care

* Frothy.

† Laid flat by wind or rain.

‡ Tumble.

§ Seeds which have begun to sprout. ¶ Adroitly.
¶ Touched on a passion as a harper touches a string.

 The round is that part of a crown which encircles
the head; the top is the ornament which rises above the crown.

Who chafes, who frets, or where conspirers are:
Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be, until
Great Birnam wood to high Dunsinane hill
Shall come against him. [Descends.]

Macb. That will never be;

Who can impress the forest; * bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root? sweet bodement †
good!

Rebellious head, rise never, till the wood
Of Birnam rise, and our high plac'd Macbeth
Shall live the lease of nature, pay his breath
To time and mortal custom.—Yet my heart Throbs to know one thing; Tell me, (if your
art

Can tell so much,) shall Banquo's issue ever
Reign in this kingdom?

All. Seek to know no more.

Macb. I will be satisfied: deny me this,
And an eternal curse fall on you! Let me
know:—

Why sinks that cauldron? and what noise † is this? [Hautboys.]

1 Witch. Show! 2 Witch. Show! 3 Witch.
Show!

All. Show his eyes, and grieve his heart;
Come like shadows, so depart.

Eight Kings appear, and pass over the Stage in order; the last with a Glass in his hand; BANQUO following.

Macb. Thou art too like the spirit of Banquo;
down!

Thy crown does bear mine eye-balls:—And thy hair,

Thou other gold-bound brow, is like the first:—
A third is like the former:—Filthy hags!

Why do you show me this?—A fourth?—Start,
eyes!

What! will the line stretch out to the crack of
doom?;

Another yet?—A seventh?—I'll see no more:—
And yet the eighth appears, who bears a glass,

Which shows me many more; and some I see,
That two-fold balls and treble scepters carry:

Horrible sight!—Ay, now, I see 'tis true;
For the blood-bolter'd‡ Banquo smiles upon

me,
And points at them for his.—What, is this so?

1 Witch. Ay, Sir, all this is so:—But why Stands Macbeth thus amazedly?—

Come, sisters, cheer we up his spirits, ‖
And show the best of our delights;

I'll charm the air to give a sound,
While you perform the antique round:

That this great king may kindly say,
Our duties did his welcome pay,
[Music. The WITCHES dance, and vanish.]

Macb. Where are they? Gone?—Let this perpetual hour

Stand aye accus'd in the calendar!—
Come in, without there!

Enter LENOX.

Len. What's your grace's will?

Macb. Saw you the weird sisters?

Len. No, my lord.

Macb. Came they not by you?

Len. No, indeed, my lord.

Macb. Infected be the air whereon they ride;
And damn'd all those that trust them!—I did
hear

The galloping of horse: Who was't came by?

Len. 'Tis two or three, my lord, that bring you word,

Macduff is fled to England.

Macb. Fled to England?

Len. Ay, my good lord.

Macb. Time, thou anticipat'st † my dread exploits:

* Who can command the forest to serve him like a soldier impressed.

† Music.

‡ The dissolution of nature.

§ Besmeared with blood. ¶ I. e. Spirit.

¶ Preventest, by taking away the opportunity.

The nighty purpose never is o'ertook,
Unless the deed go with it: From this moment,
The very firstlings of my heart shall be
The drillings of my hand. And even now
To crown my thoughts with acts, be it thought and done:

The castle of Macduff I will surprise;
Seize upon Fife; give to the edge o' the sword
His wife, his babes, and all unfortunate souls
That trace his line. No boasting like a fool;
This deed I'll do, before this purpose cool:
But no more sights!—Where are these gentle-
men?

Come, bring me where they are.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—*Fife.—A Room in MACDUFF'S
Castle.*

Enter Lady Macduff, her SON, and ROSSE.

L. Macd. What had he done, to make him fly the land?

Rosse. You must have patience, madam.

L. Macd. He had none:

His flight was madness: When our actions do
not,

Our fears do make us traitors.†

Rosse. You know not,
Whether it was his wisdom, or his fear.

L. Macd. Wisdom! to leave his wife, to leave his babes,

His mansion, and his titles, in a place
From whence himself does fly? He loves us
not;

He wants the natural touch:‡ for the poor wren
The most diminutive of birds, will fight, §
Her young ones in her nest, against the owl.

All is the fear, and nothing is the love;

As little is the wisdom, where the flight
So runs against all reason.

Rosse. My dearest coz,
I pray you, school yourself: But, for your husband,

He is noble, wise, judicious, and best knows
The fits o' the season. I dare not speak much further:

But cruel are the times, when we are traitors,
And do not know ourselves; when we hold rimour

From what we fear, yet know not what we fear: ¶

But float upon a wild and violent sea,
Each way, and move.—I take my leave of you:
Shall not be long but I'll be here again:
Things at the worst will cease, or else climb upward

To what they were before.—My pretty cousin,
Blessing upon you!

L. Macd. Father'd he is, and yet he's father-
less.

Rosse. I am so much a fool, should I stay
longer,

It would be my disgrace, and your discomfort:
I take my leave at once. [Exit Rosse.]

L. Macd. Sirrah, ¶ your father's dead;
And what will you do now? How will you live?

Son. As birds do, mother.

L. Macd. What, with worms and flies?

Son. With what I get, I mean; and so do
they.

L. Macd. Poor bird! thou'd'st never fear the net, nor lime,
The pit-fall nor the gun.

Son. Why should I, mother? Poor birds they are not set for.

My father is not dead, for all your saying.

L. Macd. Yes, he is dead; how wilt thou do for a father?

• Follow.

† I. e. Our flight is considered as evidence of our treason.

‡ Natural affection.

§ Fight

for. ¶ Sirrah was not, in our author's time, a term of reproach.

Son. Nay, how will you do for a husband?

L. Macd. Why, I can buy me twenty at any market.

Son. Then you'll buy 'em to sell again.

L. Macd. Thon speak'st with all thy wit;
and yet I'faith,

With wit enough for thee.

Son. Was my father a traitor, mother?

L. Macd. Ay, that he was.

Son. What is a traitor?

L. Macd. Why, one that swears and lies.

Son. And be all traitors, that do so?

L. Macd. Every one that does so, is a traitor and must be hanged.

Son. And must they all be hanged, that swear and lie?

L. Macd. Every one.

Son. Who must hang them?

L. Macd. Why, the honest men.

Son. Then the liars and swearers are fools:
for there are liars and swearers enough to beat the honest men, and hang up them.

L. Macd. Now, God help thee, poor monkey!
But how wilt thou do for a father?

Son. If he were dead, you'd weep for him:
if you would not, it were a good sign that I should quickly have a new father.

L. Macd. Poor prattler! how thou talk'st.

Enter a MESSENGER.

Mess. Bless you, fair dame! I am not to you
known,

Though in your state of honour I am perfect.†
I doubt some danger does approach you nearly:
If you would take a homely man's advice,
Be not found here; hence, with your little ones.

To fright you thus, methinks, I am too savage;
To do worse to you, were fell cruelty,
Which is too high your person. Heaven preserve you!

I dare abide no longer. [Exit MESSENGER.]

L. Macd. Whither should I fly?

I have done no harm. But I remember now
I am in this earthy world; where, to do harm,
Is often laudable; to do good, sometime,
Accounted dangerous folly: Why then, alas!
Do I put up that womanly defence,
To say I have done no harm?—What are these faces?

Enter MURDERERS.

Mar. Where is your husband?

L. Macd. I hope in no place so unsanctified,
Where such as thou may'st find him.

Mar. He's a traitor.

Son. Thon ly'st, thou shag-eared villain.

Mar. What, you egg? [Stabbing him.]

Young fly of treachery!

Son. He has killed me, mother;

Run away, I pray you. [Dies.]

[Exit Lady Macduff, crying murder, and pursued by the MURDERERS.]

SCENE III.—England.—A Room in the King's Palace.

Enter MALCOLM and MACDUFF.

Mal. Let us seek out some desolate shade, and there

Weep our sad bosoms empty.

Macd. Let us rather Hold fast the mortal sword; and, like good
men,

Bestride our down-fall'n birthdom:‡ Each new New widows howl; new orphans cry; new sortows

Strike heaven on the face, that it resounds
As if it felt with Scotland, and yell'd out
Like syllable of dolor.

Mal. What I believe, I'll wail;

• I am perfectly acquainted with your rank.

† Birthright.

What know, believe; that, what I can redress,
As I shall find the time to friend, * I will.
What you have spoke, it may be so; perchance,
This tyrant, whose sole name blisters our
tongues,
Was once thought honest: you have lov'd him
well;

He hath not touch'd you yet. I am young;
but something
You may deserve of him through me; and wisdom

To offer up a weak, poor, innocent lamb,
To appease an angry god.

Macd. I am not treacherous.

Mal. But Macbeth is.

A good and virtuous nature may recoil,
In an imperial charge.† But crave your pardon;

That which you are, my thoughts cannot trans-
pose:

Angels are bright still, though the brightest fell;
Though all things foul would wear the brows of
grace,

Yet grace must still look so.

Macd. I have lost my hopes.

Mal. Perchance, even there, where I did find my doubts.

Why in that rawness left you wife and child, (Those precious motives, those strong knots of love,)

Without leave taking?—I pray you,
Let not my jealousies be your dishonours,
But mine own safeties:—You may be rightly
just,

Whatever I shall think.

Macd. Bleed, bleed, poor country!
Great tyranny, lay thou thy basis sure,
For goodness dares not check thee! wear thou thy wrongs,

Thy title is affect'd!‡—Fare thee well, lord:
I would not be the villain that thou think'st
For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,

And the rich east to boot.

Mal. Be not offended:

I speak not as in an absolute fear of you.
I think, our country sinks beneath the yoke;
It weeps, it bleeds; and each new day a gash
Is added to her wounds: I think, withal,
There would be hands uplifted in my right;
And here, from gracious England, have I offer
Of goodly thousands: But, for all this,
When I shall tread upon the tyrant's head,
Or wear it on my sword, yet my poor country
Shall have more voices than it had before;
More suffer, and more sundry ways than ever,
By him that shall succeed.

Macb. What should he be?

Mal. It is myself I mean: in whom I know
All the particulars of vice so grafted,
That, when they shall be open'd, black Macbeth
Will seem as pure as snow; and the poor state
Esteem him as a lamb, being compar'd
With my confuseless harms.

Macd. Not in the legions
Of horrid hell, can come a devil more damn'd
In evils to top Macbeth.

Mal. I grant him bloody,
Luxurious,‡ avaricious, false, deceitful,
Sudden,‡ malicious, smacking of every sin
That has a name: But there's no bottom, none,
In my voluptuousness: your wives, your daughters,

Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up
The cistern of my lust; and my desire
All continent impediments would o'er-bear,
That did oppose my will: Better Macbeth,
Than such a one to reign.

Macd. Boundless intemperance

* Befriend.

† I. e. A good mind may recede from goodness in the execution of a royal commission.

‡ Legally settled by those who had the final adjudication.

§ Lascivious.

¶ Passionate.

In nature is a tyranny; it hath been
The untimely emptying of the happy throne,
And fall of many kings. But fear not yet
To take upon you what is yours: you may Convey your pleasures in a spacious plenty,
And yet seem cold, the time you may so hoodwink.

We have willing dames enough; there cannot be
That vulture in you to devour so many,
As will to greatness dedicate themselves,
Finding it so lucid'd.

Mal. With this, there grows,
In my most ill-compos'd affection, such
A stanceless avarice, that, were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands:
Desire his jewels, and this other's house:
And my more-having would be as a sauce
To make me hunger more; that I should forge
Quarrels unjust against the good, and loyal,
Destroying them for wealth.

Macd. This avarice
Sticks deeper; grows with more pernicious root
Than summer-seeding lust: and it hath been
The sword of our slain kings: Yet do not fear;
Scotland hath foysons* to fill up your will,
Of your mere own: All these are portable,†
With other graces weigh'd.

Mal. But I have none: The king-becoming graces,

As justice, verity, temperance, stableness,
Bounty, perseverance, mercy, lowliness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them; but abound
In the division of each several crime,
Acting it many ways. Nay, had I power, I should

Pour the sweet milk of concord into hell,
Uproar the universal peace, confound
All unity on earth.

Macd. O Scotland! Scotland!

Mal. If such a one be fit to govern, speak:
I am as I have spoken.

Macd. Fit to govern!

No, not to live.—O nation miserable,
With an untitled tyrant bloody-scepter'd,
When shalt thou see thy wholesome days again?
Since that the truest issue of thy throne
By his own interdiction stands accus'd,
And does blaspheme his breed?—Thy royal
father.

Was a most sainted king; the queen, that bore
thee

Offner upon his knees than on her feet,
Died every day she lived. Fare thee well!
These evils thou repeat'st upon thyself,
Have banish'd me from Scotland.—O my
breast,

Thy hope ends here!

Mal. Macduff, this noble passion,
Child of integrity, hath from my soul
Wip'd the black scruples, reconcil'd my thoughts
To thy good truth and honour. Devilish Macbeth

By many of these trains hath sought to win me
Into his power; and modest wisdom plucks me
From over-credulous haste:‡ But God above
Deal between thee and me! for even now
I put myself to thy direction, and Unspoke mine own detraction: here abjure
The taints and blames I laid upon myself,
For strangers to my nature. I am yet
Unknown to woman; never was forsworn;
Scarcely have covet'd what was mine own;
At no time broke my faith; would not betray
The devil to his fellow; and delight
No less in truth than life: my first false speaking

Was this upon myself: What I am truly,
Is thine and my poor country's, to command
Whither, indeed, before thy here-approach,
Old Siward, with ten thousand warlike men,
All ready at a point, was setting forth:

* Plenty.

† May be endured.

‡ Over-hasty credulity.

Now we'll together: And the chances of good-new,
Be like our warranted quarrel? Why are you silent?

Macd. Such welcome and unwelcome things at once,
'Tis hard to reconcile.

Enter a Doctor.

Mal. Well; more anon.—Comes the king forth, I pray you?

Doct. Ay, Sir: there are a crew of wretched
souls,

That stay his cure: their malady convinces *
The great assay of art: but, at his touch,
Such sanctity hath heaven given his hand,
They presently amend.

Mal. I thank you, doctor. [Exit Doctor.]

Macd. What is the disease he means?

Mal. 'Tis call'd the evil:

A most miraculous work in this good king;
Which often, since my here-remain in England,
I have seen him do. How he solicits heaven,
Himself best knows: but strangely-visited
people,

All swollen and ulcerous, pitiful to the eye,
The mere despair of surgery, he cures;
Hanging a golden stamp † about their necks,
Put on with holy prayers: and 'tis spoken,
To the succeeding royalty he leaves
The healing benediction. With this strange virtue,

He hath a heavenly gift of prophecy;
And sundry blessings hang about his throne,
That speak him full of grace.

Enter Ross.

Macd. See, who comes here?

Mal. My countryman; but yet I know him
not.

Macd. My ever-gentle cousin, welcome hither.

Mal. I know him now: Good God, betimes remove

The means that make us strangers!

Ros. Sir, Amen.

Macd. Stands Scotland where it did?

Ros. Alas, poor country;

Almost afraid to know itself! It cannot Be call'd our mother, but our grave: where nothing,

But who knows nothing, is once seen to smile;
Where sighs and groans, and shrieks that rend
the air,

Are made, not mark'd; where violent sorrow
seems

A modern ecstasy: ‡ the dead man's knell
Is there: scarce ask'd, for who; and good men's Famine before the flowers in their caps, [lives,
Dying, or ere they sicken.

Macd. O relation,
Too nice, and yet too true!

Mal. What is the newest grief?

Ros. That of an hour's age doth hiss the speaker;

Each minute teems a new one.

Macd. How does my wife?

Ros. Why, well.

Macd. And all my children?

Ros. Well too.

Macd. The tyrant has not batter'd at their peace?

Ros. No; they were well at peace, when I did leave them.

Macd. Be not a niggard of your speech; How goes it?

Ros. When I came hither to transport the tidings,

Which I have heavily borne, there ran a rumour
Of many worthy fellows that were out;
Which was to my belief witness'd the rather,

For that I saw the tyrant's power a-foot:
Now is the time of help; your eye in Scotland
Would create soldiers, make our women fight,
To doff † their dire distresses.

Mal. Be it their comfort,
We are coming thither; gracious England hath
Lent us good Siward and ten thousand men;
An older and a better soldier none
That Christendom gives out.

Ros. 'Would I could answer
This comfort with the like! But I have words,
That would be howl'd out in the desert air,
Where hearing should not latch ‡ them.

Macd. What concern they?
The general cause? or is it a fee-grief, §
Due to some single breast?

Ros. No mind, that's honest,
But in it shares some woe; though the main part
Pertains to you alone.

Macd. If it be mine,
Keep it not from me, quickly let me have it.

Ros. Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,
Which shall possess them with the heaviest
That ever yet they heard.

Macd. Humph! I guess at it.

Ros. Your castle is surpriz'd: your wife,
and babes,

Savagely slaughter'd: to relate the manner,
Were, on the quarry § of these murder'd deer,
To add the death of you!

Mal. Merciful heaven!—
What, man! ne'er pull your hat upon your brows;
Give sorrow words: the grief, that does not
speak,
Whispers the o'er-fraught heart, and bids it break.

Macd. My children too?

Ros. Wife, children, servants, all
That could be found.

Macd. And I must be from thence!

My wife kill'd too?

Ros. I have said.

Mal. Be comforted;
Let's make us med'cines of our great revenge,
To cure this deadly grief,

Macd. He has no children.—All my pretty
ones!

Did you say, all?—O hell-kite!—All?
What, all my pretty chickens, and their dam,
At one fell swoop!

Mal. Dispute it like a man.

Macd. I shall do so;

But I must also feel it as a man:
I cannot but remember such things were,
That were not precious to me.—Did heaven
look on,

And would not take their part? Sinful Macduff,
They were all struck for thee! naught that I am,
Not for their own demerits, but for mine,
Fell slaughter on their souls: Heaven rest them
now!

Mal. Be this the whetstone of your sword:
let grief

Convert to anger; blunt not the heart, enrage

Macd. O I could play the woman with mine
eyes,

And braggart with my tongue!—But, gentle
heaven,

Cut short all intermission; † front to front,
Bring thou this fiend of Scotland and myself;
Within my sword's length set him; if he 'scape,
Heaven forgive him too!

Mal. This tune goes manly.
Come, go we to the king; our power is ready;
Our lack is nothing but our leave: Macbeth
Is ripe for shaking, and the powers above Put on their instruments. Receive what cheer you may;

The night is long, that never finds the day.
[Exeunt.]

* Overpowers, subdues.

† A compliment to the Stuarts, who touched for the evil.

‡ Common distress of mind.

§ Put off.

† Catch. ‡ A grief that has a single owner.

§ The game after it is killed.

|| All pause

To the last syllable of recorded time ;
And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death. Out, out, brief candle !
Life's but a walking shadow ; a poor player,
That struts and frets his hour upon the stage,
And then is heard no more ; it is a tale
Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury, Signifying nothing.—

Enter a MESSENGER.

Thou com'st to use thy tongue ; thy story quickly.

Mess. Gracious my lord,
I shall report that which I say I saw,
But know not how to do it.

Macb. Well, say, Sir.

Mess. As I did stand my watch upon the hill,

I look'd toward Birnam, and anon, methought,
The wood began to move.

Macb. Liar and slave ! [Striking him.

Mess. Let me endure your wrath, it's but no sin ;

Within this three mile may you see it coming ;
I say, a moving grove.

Macb. If thou speak'st false,
Upon the next tree shalt thou hang alive,
Till famine cling * thee : if thy speech be sooth,
I care not if thou dost for me as much.—
I pull in resolution, and begin

To doubt the equivocation of the fiend,
That lies like truth : Fear not, till Birnam
wood

Do come to Dunsinane ;—and now a wood Comes toward Dunsinane.—Arm, arm, and
out !—

If this, which he avouches, does appear,
There is nor flying hence, nor tarrying here,
I 'gin to be a-weary of the sun,

And wish the estate o' the world were now undone.— [Wrack !

Ring the alarm bell !—Blow, wind ! come,
At least we'll die with harness † on our back.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—The same.—A Plain before the Castle.

Enter, with Drums and Colours, MALCOLM, old SIWARD, MACDUFF, &c. and their Army, with Boughs.

Mal. Now near enough ; your heavy screens throw down,
And show like those you are :—You, worthy
uncle,

Shall, with my cousin, your right-noble son,
Lead our first battle : worthy Macduff, and we,
Shall, take upon us what else remains to do,
According to our order.

Sir. Fare you well.—
Do we but find the tyrant's power to-night,
Let us be beaten, if we cannot fight.

Macd. Make all our trumpets speak ; give them all breath,
Those clamorous harbingers of blood and death.
[Exeunt. Alarums continued.]

SCENE VII.—The same.—Another Part of the Plain.

Enter MACBETH.

Macb. They have tied me to a stake : I cannot fly ;
But, bear-like, I must fight the course.—What's
lie,
That was not born of woman ? Such a one
Am I to fear, or none.

Enter young SIWARD.

Yo. Sir. What is thy name ?

Macb. Thou'lt be afraid to hear it.

Yo. Sir. No ; though thou call'st thyself a hotter name
Than any is in hell.

Macb. My name's Macbeth.

Yo. Sir. The devil himself could not pronounce a title
More hateful to mine ear.

Macb. No, nor more fearful.

Yo. Sir. Thou liest, abhorred tyrant ; with my sword
I'll prove the lie thou speak'st.

[They fight, and young SIWARD is slain.]

Macb. Thou wast born of woman.—
But swords I smile at, weapons laugh to scorn,
Brandish'd by man that's of a woman born.
[Exit.]

Alarums. Enter MACDUFF.

Macd. That way the noise is :—Tyrant, show thy face :

If thou be'st slain, and with no stroke of mine
My wife and children's ghost will haunt me
still.

I cannot strike at wretched keenes, whose arms
Are hir'd to bear their staves ; either thou, Macbeth,

Or else my sword, with an unbatter'd edge,
I sheathe again undeeded. There thou should'st
be :

By this great clatter, one of greatest note
Seems bruted : * Let me find him, fortune !
And more I beg not. [Exit. Alarums]

Enter MALCOLM and SIWARD.

Sir. This way, my lord ;—The castle's gently render'd :

The tyrant's people on both sides do fight ;
The noble thane do bravely in the war,
The day almost itself professes yours,
And little is to do.

Mal. We have met with foes
That strike beside us.

Sir. Enter, Sir, the castle.

[Exeunt. Alarums]

Re-enter MACBETH.

Macb. Why should I play the Roman fool, and die [Gasps]
On mine own sword ? Whiles I see lives, the
Do better upon them.

Re-enter MACDUFF.

Macd. Turn, hell-hound, turn.

Macb. Of all men else I have avoided thee ;
But get thee back, my soul is too much charg'd
With blood of thine already.

Macd. I have no words,
My voice is in my sword ; thou bloodier villain
Than terms can give thee out !

[They fight.]

Macb. Thou lovest labour :
As easy may'st thou the witchcraft air †
With thy keen sword impress, as make me bleed :

Let fall thy blade on vulnerable crests ;
I bear a charmed life, which must not yield
To one of woman born.

Macd. Despair thy charm ;
And let the angel, whom thou still hast serv'd,
Tell thee, Macduff was from his mother's womb
Untimely ripp'd.

Macb. Accurs'd be that tongue that tells me
so,

For it hath cow'd my better part of man !
And be these juggling fiends no more believ'd,
That palter I with us in a double sense ;
That keep the word of promise to our ear,
And break it to our hope.—I'll not fight with
thee.

Macd. Then yield thee, coward,
And live to be the show and gaze o' the time.
We'll have thee, as our rerer monsters are,
Painted upon a pole ; and underwrit,
Here may you see the tyrant.

Macb. I'll not yield,

* Shrivel

† Armour

* Reported with clamour.

† The air which cannot be cut

‡ Shuffled

To kiss the ground before young Malcolm's feet,
And to be baited with the rabble's curse.
Though Birnam wood be come to Dunsinane,
And thou oppos'd, being of no woman born,
Yet I will try the last: Before my body
I throw my warlike shield: lay on, Macduff;
And damn'd be he that first cries, Hold, enough.
[Exeunt, fighting.]

Retreat. Flourish. Re-enter, with Drum and Colours, MALCOLM, old SIWARD, ROSSE, LENOX, ANGUS, CATHNESS, MENTETH, and Soldiers

Mal. I would the friends we miss were safe arriv'd.

Saw. Some must go off: and yet, by these I see,

So great a day as this is cheaply bought.

Mal. Macduff is missing, and your noble son.

Rosse. Your son, my lord, has paid a soldier's debt:

He only liv'd but till he was a man;

The which no sooner had his prowess confirm'd

In the unshrinking station where he fought,

But like a man he died.

Saw. Then he is dead?

Rosse. Ay, and brought off the field: your cause of sorrow

Must not be measur'd by his worth, for then
It hath no end.

Saw. Had he his hunts before?

Rosse. Ay, on the front.

Saw. Why then, God's soldier be he!

Had I as many sons as I have hairs,

I would not wish them to a fairer death:

And so his knell is knoll'd.

Mal. He's worth more sorrow
And that I'll spend for him.

Siw. He's worth no more;
They say, he parted well, and paid his score:
So, God be with him!—Here comes newer comfort.

Re-enter MACDUFF, with MACBETH's Head on a Pole.

Macd. Hail, king! for so thou art: Behold, where stands

The usurper's cursed head: the time is free;

I see thee compass'd with thy kingdom's pearl,*

That speak my salutation in their minds;

Whose voices I desire aloud with mine,—

Hail, king of Scotland!

All. King of Scotland, hail! [Flourish.]

Mal. We shall not spend a large expense of
time,

Before we reckon with your several loves,

And make us even with you. My thames and kinsmen,

Henceforth be earls, the first that ever Scotland

In such an honour nam'd. What's more to do,

Which would be planted newly with the time,—

As calling home our exil'd friends abroad;

That fled the snares of watchful tyranny;

Producing forth the cruel ministers

Of this dead butcher, and his fiend-like queen;

Who, as 'tis thought, by self and violent
hands

Took off her life;—This, and what needful else

That calls upon us, by the grace of Grace,

We will perform in measure, time, and place:

So thanks to all at once, and to each one,

Whom we invite to see us crown'd at Scone.

[Flourish. Exeunt.]

KING JOHN.

LITERARY AND HISTORICAL NOTICE.

THIS play was probably written in the year 1596. The action comprehends some of the principal events which occurred from the 34th year of King John's life to the time of his demise; or, during his short reign of seventeen years. Shakspeare has in some respects closely adhered to the old historians and chroniclers; but the Duke of Austria was not necessary to the death of Richard Cœur-de-lion; neither was John himself poisoned by a monk. However the gross licentiousness of the latter—his utter disregard of even the appearances of religion—and his habitual ridicule of the church, might favour such a supposition, it is certain that he died partly of grief, and partly of chagrin, at Newark. These incongruities, with the outline of Faulconbridge's character, our poet very likely derived from some previous dramatic production. With respect to the unfortunate Arthur, when he first fell into the power of his uncle, he was confined in the castle of Falaise, and the peridious monarch endeavoured in vain to procure his assassination. He was afterwards conducted to the castle of Rouen, where John resided, and never afterwards heard of. The manner of his death is uncertain; but it is generally believed that the barbarous tyrant stabbed him with his own hand. Dr. Johnson says of this tragedy: "Though not written with the utmost power of Shakspeare, it is varied with a very pleasing interchange of incidents and characters: the lady's grief is very affecting; and the character of the Bastard contains that mixture of greatness and levity, which this author delighted to exhibit." The latter is, indeed, as odd a personage as any author ever drew; and his language is as peculiar as his ideas; but the scene in which John so darkly proposed to Hubert the murder of his innocent nephew, is beyond the commendation of criticism. Art could add little to its perfection; no change in dramatic taste can injure it, and time itself can subtract nothing from its beauties.—Colly Cibber altered this drama, though not for the best.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Northampton.—A Room of State in the Palace.

Enter KING JOHN, QUEEN ELINOR, PEMBROKE, ESSEX, SALISBURY, and others, with CHATILLON.

K. John. Now, say, Chatillon, what would France with us?

Chat. Thus, after greeting, speaks the king of France,

In my behaviour, to the majesty, The borrow'd majesty of England here.

Elin. A strange beginning;—borrow'd majesty!

* In the manner I now do.

K. John. Silence, good mother; hear the embassy.

Chat. Philip of France, in right and true behalf of thy deceased brother Geoffrey's son, [half Arthur Plantagenet, lays most lawful claim

To this fair island, and the territories;
To Ireland, Poitiers, Anjou, Touraine, Maine;
Desiring thee to lay aside the sword,
Which sways usurpingly these several titles;
And put the same into young Arthur's hand,
Thy nephew, and right royal sovereign.

K. John. What follows, if we disallow of this?

Chat. The proud control of fierce and bloody war,

To enforce these rights so forcibly withheld.

K. John. Here have we war for war, and blood for blood,
Controlment for controlment: so answer France.

Chet. Then take my king's defiance from my mouth,
The furthest limit of my embassy.

K. John. Bear mine to him and so depart in peace:

Be thou as lightning in the eyes of France;
For ere thou canst report I will be there,
The thunder of my cannon shall be heard:
So, hence! Be thou the trumpet of our wrath,
And sullen presage of your own decay.—
An honourable conduct let him have:—
Pembroke, look to't: Farewell, Chatillon.

[Exit CHATILLON and PEMBROKE.]

Eli. What now, my son? have I not ever said,

How that ambitious Constance would not cease,
Till she had kindled France, and all the world,
Upon the right and party of her son?
This might have been prevented, and made whole,

With very easy arguments of love;
Which now the manage* of two kingdoms must
With fearful bloody issue arbitrate.

K. John. Our strong possession, and our right for us.

Eli. Your strong possession, much more than your right:

Or else it must go wrong with you and me:
So much my conscience whispers in your ear;
Which none but heaven, and you and I, shall hear.

Enter the Sheriff of Northamptonshire, who whispers Essex.

Essex. My liege, here is the strangest controversy,

Come from the country to be judg'd by you,
That ere I heard: Shall I produce the men?

K. John. Let them approach.—[Exit Sheriff.]

Our abbies, and our priories, shall pay.

Re-enter Sheriff, with ROBERT FAULCONBRIDGE, and PHILIP, his bastard Brother.

This expedition's charge.—What men are you?

Bast. Your faithful subject I, a gentleman,
Born in Northamptonshire; and eldest son,
As I suppose, to Robert Faulconbridge;
A soldier, by the honour-giving hand
Of Cœur-de-lion knighted in the field.

K. John. What art thou?

Rob. The son and heir to that same Faulconbridge.

K. John. Is that the elder, and art thou the heir?

You came not of one mother then, it seems.

Bast. Most certain of one mother, mighty king,

That is well known; and, as I think, one father:

But, for the certain knowledge of that truth,
I put you o'er to heaven and to my mother:
Of that I doubt, as all men's children may.

Eli. Out on thee, rude man! thou dost shame thy mother,

And wound her honour with this diffidence.

Bast. I, madam? no, I have no reason for it;
That is my brother's plea, and none of mine;
The which if he can prove, 'a pops me out
At least from fair five hundred pound a year:
Heaven guard my mother's honour and my land!

K. John. A good blunt fellow:—Why, being younger born,

Doth he lay claim to thine inheritance?

Bast. I know not why, except to get the land!

But once he slander'd me with bastardy
But wher't I be as true-begot, or no,
That still I lay upon my mother's head;
But, that I am as well-begot, my liege,

(Fair fall the bones that took the pains for me!)
Compare our faces, and be judge yourself.
If old Sir Robert did beget us both,
And were our father, and his son like him;—
O old Sir Robert, father, on my knee
I give heaven thanks, I was not like to thee.

K. John. Why, what a mad-cap hath heaven lent us here!

Eli. He hath a trick* of Cœur-de-lion's face,
The accent of his tongue affecteth him:
Do you not read some tokens of my son
In the large composition of this man?

K. John. Mine eye hath well examined his parts,
And finds them perfect Richard.—[Speak,
What doth move you to claim your brother's land?

Bast. Because he hath a half-face, like my father;

With that half-face would he have all my land:
A half-faced groat five hundred pounds a year!

Rob. My gracious liege, when that my father liv'd,

Your brother did employ my father much:—

Bast. Well, Sir, by this you cannot get my land;

Your tale must be, how he employ'd my mother,

Rob. And once despatch'd him in an embassy
To Germany, there, with the emperor,

To treat of high affairs touching that time:
The advantage of his absence took the king,

And in the mean time sojourn'd at my father's;
Where how he did prevail, I shame to speak:

But truth is truth; large lengths of seas and Between my father and my mother lay, [silence]

(As I have heard my father speak himself.)
When this same lusty gentleman was got.

Upon his death-bed he by will bequeath'd
His lands to me; and took it, on his death,

That this, my mother's son, was none of his,
And if he were, he came into the world

Full fourteen weeks before the course of time.
Then, good my liege, let me have what is mine,

My father's land, as was my father's will.

K. John. Sirrah, your brother is legitimate;
Your father's wife did after wedlock bear him:

And, if she did play false, the fault was her's;
Which fault lies on the hazards of all husbands

That marry wives. Tell me, how if my brother
Who, as you say, took pains to get this son,

Had of your father claim'd this son for his?
In sooth, good friend, your father might have kept

This calf, bred from his cow, from all the world;

In sooth he might; then, if he were my brother's,

My brother might not claim him: nor your Being none of his, refuse him: This concludes,—

My mother's son did get your father's heir;
Your father's heir must have your father's

land.

Rob. Shall then my father's will be of no force,

To dispossess that child which is not his?

Bast. Of no more force to dispossess me, Sir,

Than was his will to get me, as I think.

Eli. Whether hadst thou rather be a Faulconbridge,

And like thy brother, to enjoy thy land;
Or the reputed son of Cœur-de-lion,

Lord of thy presence,† and no land beside?

Bast. Madam, an if my brother had my shape,

And I had his, Sir Robert his, like him;
And if my legs were two such riding-roads,

My arms such eel-skins stuff'd; my face so thin,

* Conduct, administration.

† Whether.

* Trace.

† Dignity of appearance.

That in my ear I durst not stick a rose,
Lest men should say, Look, where three-farthings goes!

And, to his shape, were heir to all this land,
'Would I might never stir from off this place,
I'd give it every foot to have this face;
I would not be Sir Noh* in any case.

Eliz. I like thee well; wilt thou forsake thy fortune,

Bequeath thy land to him, and follow me?
I am a soldier and now bound to France.

Bast. Brother, take you my land, I'll take my chance:

Your face hath got five hundred pounds a year;
Yet sell your face for fivepence, and 'tis dear.—
Madam, I'll follow you unto the death.

Eliz. Nay, I would have you go before me
thither.

Bast. Our country manners give our betters
K. John. What is thy name?

Bast. Philip, my liege; so is my name begun;
Philip, good old Sir Robert's wife's eldest son.

K. John. From henceforth bear his name whose torn thou bear'st:

Kneel thou down Philip, but arise more great:
Arise Sir Richard and Plantagenet!

Bast. Brother, by the mother's side, give me your hand;

My father gave me honour, your's gave land:
Now blessed be the hour, by night or day,
When I was got, Sir Robert was away.

Eliz. The very spirit of Plantagenet!
I am thy grandame, Richard; call me so.

Bast. Madam, by chance, but not by truth:
What though?

Something about, a little from the right,
In at the window, or else o'er the hatch:

Who dares not stir by day, must walk by night;
And have is have, however men do catch:

Near or far off, well won is still well shot;
And I am I, however I was begot,

K. John. Go, Faulconbridge; now hast thou thy desire,

A landless knight makes thee a landed squire.—
Come, madam, and come, Richard; we must speed

For France, for France; for it is more than
need.

Bast. Brother, adieu; good fortune come to
thee!

For thou wast got 'till the way of honesty.

[Exeunt all but the BASTARD.]

A foot of honour better than I was;

But many a foot of land the worse.

Well, now can I make any Joan a lady:—

Good den! Sir Richard,—God-a-mercy, fellow!—

And if his name be George, I'll call him Peter:
For new-made honour doth forget men's names;

'Tis too respective, and too sociable,
For your conversion: Now, your traveller,—

He and his tooth-pick at my worship's mess;

And when my knightly stomach is suffic'd,

Why then I sick my teeth, and catechise

My picked man of countries:—My dear Sir,

(Thus leaning on mine elbows, I begin,)

I shall beseech you—That is question now;

And then comes answer like an ABC-book:

O Sir, says answer, at your best command;

At your employment; at your service, Sir:—

No, Sir, says question, I, sweet Sir, at your's:

And so, ere answer knows what question would,

(Saying in dialogue of compliment;

And talking of the Alps and Appennines,

The Pyrenean, and the river Po.)

It draws toward supper in conclusion so.

But this is worshipful society,

And tins the mounting spirit, like myself:

For he is but a bastard to the time,

That doth not smack of observation;

(And so am I, whether I smack, or no;)

And not alone in habit and device,

Exterior form, outward accoutrement;
But from the inward motion to deliver
Sweet, sweet, sweet poison for the age's tooth:
Which, though I will not practise to deceive,
Yet, to avoid deceit, I mean to learn;
For it shall strew the footsteps of my rising.—
But who comes in such haste, in riding robes?
What woman-post is this? hath she no husband,
That will take pains to blow a horn before her?

Enter Lady FAULCONBRIDGE and JAMES GURNEY.

O me! it is my mother:—How now, good lady!
What brings you here to court so hastily?

Lady F. Where is that slave, thy brother?
where is he?

That holds in chase mine honour up and down?
Bast. My brother Robert? old Sir Robert's
son?

Colbrand the giant, that same mighty man?
Is it Sir Robert's son, that you seek so?

Lady F. Sir Robert's son! Aye, thou mineverend boy, Robert?

Sir Robert's son? Why scorn'st thou at Sir
He is Sir Robert's son; and so art thou.

Bast. James Gurney, wilt thou give us leave
a while?

Gur. Good leave, good Philip.

Bast. Philip?—sparrow!—James,
There's toy's abroad; anon I'll tell thee more.

[Exit GURNEY.]

Madam, I was not old Sir Robert's son,
Sir Robert might have eat his part in me

Upon Good-friday, and ne'er broke his fast:
Sir Robert could do well: Marry, (to confess!)

Could he get me! Sir Robert could not do it,
We know his handy-work;—Therefore, good mother,

To whom am I beholden for these limbs?

Sir Robert never help to make this leg.

Lady F. Hast thou conspired with thy brother
too,

That for thine own gain should'st defend mine
What means this scorn, thou most untoward knave?

Bast. Knight, knight, good mother,—Basi-liscolike:—

What! I am dubb'd; I have it on my shoulder.
But, mother, I am not Sir Robert's son;

I have disclaim'd Sir Robert and my land;
Legitimation, name, and all is gone:

Then, good my mother, let me know my father,
Some proper man, I hope: Who was it, mother?

Lady F. Hast thou denied thyself to Faul-conbridge?

Bast. As faithfully as I deny the devil.

Lady F. King Richard Cœur-de-lion was thy
father;

By long and vehement suit I was seduc'd
To make room for him in my husband's bed:—

Heaven lay not my transgression to my charge!
Thou art the issue of my dear offence,

Which was so strongly urg'd, past my defence.

Bast. Now, by this light, were I to get again,
Madam, I would not wish a better father,

Some sins do bear their privilege on earth,
And so doth yours; your fault was not your
folly:

Need must you lay your heart at his dispose;—
Subjected tribute to commanding love,—

Against whose fury and unmatch'd force
The aweless lion, could not wage the fight,

Nor keep his princely heart from Richard's
hand.

He that perforce robs lions of their hearts,
May easily win a woman's. Ay, my mother,

With all my heart I thank thee for my father:
Who lives and dares but say thou didst not

well,
When I was got, I'll send his soul to hell.

in an old drama called Soliman and Perseda.

Come, lady, I will show thee to my kin;
And they shall say, when Richard me begot,
If thou hadst said him nay, it had been sin:
Who says it was, he lies, I say, 'twas not.
[Exeunt.]

ACT II

SCENE I.—France.—Before the Walls of Angiers.

Enter, on one side, the ARCHDUKE of Austria, and Forces; on the other, PHILIP, King of France, and Forces; LEWIS, CONSTANCY, ARTHUR, and Attendants.

Leu. Before Angiers well met, brave Austria—

Arthur, that great fore-runner of thy blood,
Richard, that rob'd the lion of his heart,
And fought the holy wars in Palestine,
By this brave duke came early to his grave: *
And, for amends to his posterity,
At our importune hither is he come,
To spread his colours, boy, in thy behalf;
And to rebuke the usurpation
Of thy unnatural uncle, English John:
Embrace him, love him, give him welcome
hither.

Arch. God shall forgive you Cœur-de-lion's death,

The rather, that you give his offspring life,
Shadowing their right under your wings of war:

I give you welcome with a powerless hand,
But with a heart full of unstained love:
Welcome before the gates of Angiers, duke.

Leu. A noble boy! Who would not do thee right?

Aust. Upon thy cheek lay I this zealous kiss,
As seal to this indenture of my love;
That to my home I will no more return,
Till Angiers, and the right thou hast in France,
Together with that pale, that white-fac'd shore,

Whose foot spurs back the ocean's roaring tides,

And coops from other lands her islanders,
Even till that England, hedg'd in with the main,

That water-walled bulwark, still secure
And confident from foreign purposes,

Even till that utmost corner of the west
Salute thee for her king: till then, fair boy,
Will I not think of home, but follow arms.

Const. O take his mother's thanks, a widow's
thanks,

Till your strong hand shall help to give him
strength,

To make a more requital to your love.

Aust. The peace of heaven is theirs, that lift their swords

In such a just and charitable war.

K. Phi. Well then, to work; our cannon shall be bent

Against the brows of this resisting town.—

Call for our chiefest men of discipline,

To cull the plots of best advantages.

We'll lay before this town our royal bones,
Wade to the market-place in Frenchmen's
blood,

But we will make it subject to this boy.

Const. Stay for an answer to your embassy Lest unadvis'd you stain your swords with
blood:

My lord Chatillon may from England bring That right in peace, which here we urge in
war;

And then we shall repent each drop of blood,
That hot rash haste so indirectly shed.

Enter CHATILLON.

K. Phi. A wonder, lady!—lo, upon thy wish
Our messenger Chatillon is arriv'd.—
What England says, say briefly, gentle lord,
We coldly pause for thee; Chatillon, speak.

Chat. Then turn your forces from this paltry siege,

And stir them up against a mightier task.

England, impatient of your just demands,
Hath put himself in arms; the adverse winds
Whose leisure I have staid, have given him
time

To land his legions all as soon as I:

His marches are expedient * to this town,

His forces strong, his soldiers confident.

With him along is come the mother-queen,

An Até, stirring him to blood and strife;

With her her niece, the lady Blanch of Spain;

With them a bastard of the king deceas'd;

And all the unsettled humours of the land,—

Rash, inconsiderate, fiery volunteers,

With ladies' faces, and fierce dragons' spleens,—

Have sold their fortunes at their native homes,

Bearing their birthrights proudly on their backs

To make a hazard of new fortunes here,

In brief, a brave choice of dauntless spirits,

Than now the English bottoms have wait o'er,

Died never float upon the swelling tide,

To do offence and scath in Christendom.

The interruption of their churlish drums

Cuts off more circumstance: they are at hand,

To parly or to fight; therefore, prepare.

K. Phi. How much unlook'd for is this expedition!

Aust. By how much unexpected, by so much

We must awake endeavour for defence;

For courage moutheth with occasion:

Let them be welcome then, we are prepar'd.

Enter KING JOHN, ELINOR, BLANCH, the BASTARD, PLMERKE, and Forces.

K. John. Peace be to France: if France in peace permit

Our just and lineal entrance to our own!

If not, bleed France, and peace ascend to heaven!

Whiles we, God's wrathful agent, do correct

Then proud contempt that beat his peace to heaven.

K. Phi. Peace be to England; if that war return

From France to England, there to live in peace!

England we love; and, for that England's sake,

With burden of our armour here we sweat:

This toil of ours should be a work of thine;

But thou from loving England art so far,

That thou has under-wrought† his lawful king

Cut off the sequence of posterity,

Outfaced infant state, and done a rape

Upon the maiden virtue of the crown.

Look here upon thy brother Geoffrey's face;

These eyes, these brows, were moulded out of his:

This little abstract doth contain that large,

Which died in Geoffrey; and the hand of time

Shall draw this brief into as huge a volume.

That Geoffrey was thy elder brother born,

And thus his son; England was Geoffrey's right,

And this is Geoffrey's: In the name of God,

How comes it then, that thou art call'd a king,

When living blood doth in these temples beat,

Which owe the crown that thou o'ermasterest?

K. John. From whom hast thou this great commission, France,

To draw my answer from thy articles?

K. Phi. From that supernal judge, that stirs good thoughts

In any breast of strong authority,

To look into the plots and stains of right.

That judge hath made me guardian to this boy:

Under whose warrant, I impeach thy wrong;

And, by whose help, I mean to chastise it.

* The Duke of Austria died some time before Richard Cœur-de-lion.

* Immediate.

† Undermined.

K. John. Alack, thou dost usurp authority.

K. Phil. Excuse; it is to beat usurping down.

Eli. Who is it, thou dost call usurper, France?
Const. Let me make answer;—thy usurping son.

Eli. Out, insolent! thy bastard shall be king;

That thou may'st be a queen, and check the world!

Const. My bed was ever to thy son as true,
As thine was to thy husband: and this boy
Likely in feature to his father Geoffrey,
Than thou and John in manners; being as like,
As rain to water, or devil to his dam.
My boy a bastard! By my soul, I think
His father never was so true begot;
It cannot be, an if thou wert his mother.

Eli. There's a good mother, boy, that blots thy father.

Const. There's a good grandam, boy, that would blot thee.

Aust. Peace!

Bast. Hear the crier.

Aust. What the devil art thou?

Bast. One that will play the devil, Sir, with you,

An 'a may catch your hide and you alone.

You are the hare of whom the proverb goes,
Whose valour plucks dead lions by the beard;
I'll smoke your skin-coat,* an I catch you right;

Sirrah, look to't; I'faith, I will, I'faith.

Blanch. O well did he become that lion's robe,

That did disrobe the lion of that robe!

Bast. It lies as slightly on the back of him,
As great Alcides' shoes upon an ass:—

But, ass, I'll take that burden from your back;
Or lay on that, shall make your shoulders crack.

Aust. That cracker is this same, that deafs our ears

With this abundance of superfluous breath?

K. Phil. Lewis, determine what we shall do straight.

Lew. Women and fools, break off your conference.—

King John, this is the very sum of all,—
England, and Ireland, Anjou, Touraine, Maine,
In right of Arthur do I claim of thee:
Wilt thou resign them, and lay down thy arms?

K. John. My life as soon:—I do defy thee, France.

Arthur of Bretagne, yield thee to my hand;
And, out of my dear love, I'll give thee more
Than e'er the coward hand of France can win:
Submit thee, boy.

Eli. Come to thy grandam, child;

Const. Do, child, go to it! grandam, child;
Give grandam kingdom, and it! grandam will Give it a plum, a cherry, and a fig:
There's a good grandam.

Arth. Good my mother, peace!

I would that I were low laid in my grave;
I am not worth this coil that's made for me.

Eli. His mother shames him so, poor boy, he weeps.

Const. Now shame upon you, whe'r † she does, or no!

His grandam's wrongs, and not his mother's shames,

Draw those heaven-moving pearls from his poor eyes,

Which heaven shall take in nature of a fee;
Ay, with these crystal beads heaven shall be brib'd

To do him justice, and revenge on you.

Eli. Thou monstrous slanderer of heaven and earth!

Const. Thou monstrous injurer of heaven and earth!

* Austria wears a lion's skin.

† Whether.

Call not me slanderer; thou, and thine usurp
The dominations, royalties, and rights,
Of this oppressed boy: This is thy eldest son's

son,
Infortunate in nothing but in thee;
Thy sins are visited in this poor child;

The canon of the law is laid on him,
Being but the second generation

Removed from thy sin-conceiving womb.

K. John. Bredam, have done.

Const. I have but this to say,—
That he's not only plagued for her sin,
But God hath made her sin and her the plague
On this removed issue, plagu'd for her,
And with her plague, her sin; his injury
Her injury,—the headle to her sin;
All punish'd in the person of this child,
And all for her; A plague upon her!

Eli. Thou unadvised scold, I can produce
A will, that bars the title of thy son.

Const. Ay, who doubts that? a will! a wicked will;

A woman's will; a caulk'd grandam's will!

K. Phil. Peace, lady; pause, or be more temperate:

It ill becomes this presence, to cry aim *

To these ill-tuned repetitions.—

Some trumpet summon hither to the walls

These men of Angiers; let us hear them speak,

Whose title they admit, Arthur's or John's.

Trumpets sound. Enter CITIZENS upon the walls.

I Cit. Who is it, that hath warned us to the walls?

K. Phil. 'Tis France, for England.

K. John. England, for itself:

You men of Angiers, and my loving subjects,— K. Phil. You loving men of Angiers, Arthur's

subjects,
Our trumpet call'd you to this gentle parle. †

K. John. For our advantage;—I therefore, hear us first.—

These flags of France, that are advanced here
Before the eye and prospect of your town,
Have hither march'd to your endamagement:
The cannons have their bowels full of wrath;
And ready mounted are they, to spit forth
Their iron indignation 'gainst your walls:
All preparation for a bloody siege,
And merciless proceeding by these French,
Confront your city's eyes, your winking gates;
And, but for our approach, those sleeping stones,

That as a waist do girdle you about, .

By the compulsion of their ordnance,
By this time from their fixed beds of lime
Had been disabited, and wide havoc made
For bloody power to rush upon your peace.

But, on the sight of us, your lawful king,—
Who painfully, with much expedient march,
Have brought a countercheck before your gates,

To save unscratch'd your city's threaten'd checks,—

Behold, the French, amaz'd, vouchsafe a parle:
And now, instead of bullets wrapp'd in fire,

To make a shaking fever in your walls,
They shoot but calm words, folded up in
smoke,

To make a faithless error in your ears:
Which trust accordingly, kind citizens,

And let us in, your king; whose labour'd spirits,
Forewearied ‡ in this action of swift speed,
Crave harbourage within your city walls.

K. Phil. When I have said, make answer to us both.

Lo, in this right hand, whose protection
Is most divinely vow'd upon the right

Of him it holds, stands young Plantagenet
Son to the elder brother of this man,

And king o'er him, and all that he enjoys:

* To encourage ‡ Worn out.

† Conference.

For this down-trodden equity, we tread
In warlike march these greens before your town;

Being no further enemy to you,
Than the constraint of hospitable zeal,
In the relief of this oppressed child,
Religiously provokes. Be pleased then
To pay that duty, which you truly owe,
To him that owes* it; namely this young
prince:

And then our arms, like to a muzzled bear,
Save in aspect, have all offence seal'd up;
Our cannons' malice vainly shall be spent
Against the invulnerable clouds of heaven;
And, with a blessed and unweary'd retire,
With unback'd swords, and helmets all un-
brul'd,

We will bear home that lusty blood again,
Which here we came to spout against your town,
And leave your children, wives, and you, in
peace.

But if you fondly pass our proffer'd offer,
'Tis not the roundure† of your old fad'd walls
Can hide you from our messengers of war;
Though all these English, and their discipline,
Were harbour'd in their rude circumference.
Then, tell us, shall your city call us lord,
In that behalf which we have challeng'd it?
Or shall we give the signal to our rage,
And stalk in blood to our possession?

I Cit. In brief, we are the king of England's
subjects;

For him, and in his right, we hold this town.

K. John. Acknowledge then the king, and let me in.

I Cit. That can we not: but he that proves
the king,

To him will we prove loyal; till that time,
Have we ramm'd up our gates against the
world.

K. John. Doth not the crown of England prove the king?

And, if not that, I bring you witnesses,
Twice fifteen thousand hearts of England's breed.—

Bast. Bastards, and else.

K. John. To verify our title with their lives.

K. Phi. As many, and as well born bloods as those,—

Bast. Some bastards too.

K. Phi. Stand in his face, to contradict his claim.

I Cit. Till you compound whose right is worthiest,
We, for the worthiest, hold the right from
both.

K. John. Then God forgive the sin of all those souls,
That to their everlasting residence,
Before the dew of evening fall, shall fleet,
In dreadful trial of our kingdom's king!

K. Phi. Amen, Amen!—Mount, chevaliers! to arms!

Bast. St. George,—that swing'd the dragon, and e'er since,
Sits on his horseback at mine hostess' door,
Teach us some fence!—Sirrah, were I at home,
At your den, sirrah, [To AUSTRIA.] with your lionsess,

I'd set an ox-head to your lion's hide,
And make a monster of you.

Aust. Peace; no more.

Bast. O tremble; for you hear the lion roar.

K. John. Up higher to the plain; where we'll set forth,

In best appointment, all our regiments.
Bast. Speed then, to take advantage of the field.

K. Phi. It shall be so:—[To Lewis.] and at the other hill

Command the rest to stand.—God and our right!
[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same.

Alarums and Excursions; then a Retreat.
Enter a French Herald, with trumpets,
to the gates.

F. Her. You men of Angiers, open wide your gates,

And let young Arthur, duke of Bretagne, in:
Who, by the hand of France, this day hath made Much work for tears in many an English mother,

Whose sons lie scatter'd on the bleeding ground:
Many a widow's husband grovelling lies,
Coldly embracing the discolour'd earth;
And victory, with little loss, doth play
Upon the dancing banners of the French;
Who are at hand, triumphantly display'd,
To enter conquerors, and to proclaim
Arthur of Bretagne, England's king, and your's.

Enter an English Herald, with trumpets.

E. Her. Rejoice, you men of Angiers, ring your bells!

King John, your king and England's doth approach,

Commander of this hot malicious day!
Their armours, that march'd hence so silver-
bright,

Hither return all gilt with Frenchmen's blood,
There stuck no plume in any English crest,
That is removed by a staff of France;
Our colours do return in those same hands
That did display them when we first march'd
forth;

And, like a jolly troop of huntsmen, come
Our lusty English, all with purple hands,
Died in the dying slaughter of their foes:
Open your gates, and give the victors way.

Cit. Heralds, from off our towers we might behold,

From first to last, the onset and retire
Of both your armies: whose equality
By our best eyes cannot be censured: *
Blood hath bought blood, and blows have an-swer'd blows;
Strength match'd with strength, and power confronted power:

Both are alike: and both alike we like.
One must prove greatest; while they weigh so
even,

We hold our town for neither; yet for both.

Enter, at one side, King John, with his powers, ELINOR, BLANCH, and the BASTARD; at the other, King Philip, Lewis, Austria, and Forces.

K. John. France hast thou yet more blood to cast away?

Say, shall the current of our right run on?
Whose passage, vex'd with thy impediment,
Shall leave his native channel, and o'er-swell
With course disturb'd even thy confining shores;
Unless thou let his silver water keep
A peaceful progress in the ocean.

K. Phi. England, thou hast not sav'd one drop of blood,

In this hot trial, more than we of France;
Rather, lost more: And by this hand I swear,
That sways the earth this climate overlooks.—
Before we will lay down our just-borne arms
We'll put thee down, 'gainst whom these arms
we bear,

Or add a royal number to the dead;
Gracing the scroll, that tells of this war's loss,
With slaughter coupled to the name of kings.

Bast. Ha, majesty! how high thy glory towers,

When the rich blood of kings is set on fire!
O now doth death hue his dead chaps with
steel;

The swords of soldiers are his teeth, his fangs;
And now he feasts, moulting the flesh of men,
In undetermin'd differences of kings.—

* Ours

† Circle.

* Judged.

Why stand these royal fronts amazed thus?
 Cry, havoc, kings! back to the stained field,
 You equal potent, fiery-kindled spirits!
 Then let confusion of one part confirm
 The other's peace; till then, blows, blood, and
 death!

K. John. Whose party do the townsmen yet admit?

K. Phi. Speak, citizens, for England; who's your king?

1 Cit. The king of England, when we know
 the king.

K. Phi. Know him in us, that here hold up his right.

K. John. In us, that are our own great deputy,
 And bear possession of our person here;
 Lord of our presence, Angiers, and of you.

1 Cit. A greater power than we, denies all
 this;

And, till it be undoubted, we do lock
 Our former scruple in our strong-barr'd gates:
 King'd of our fears; until our fears, resolv'd,
 Be by some certain king purg'd and depos'd.

Bast. By heaven, these scroyles of Angiers flout you, kings;

And stand securely on their battlements,
 As in a theatre, whence they gape and point
 At your industrious scenes and acts of death.
 Your royal presences be rul'd by me;
 Do like the inmates of Jerusalem,
 Be friends a while, and both conjointly bend
 Your sharpest deeds of malice on this town:

By east and west let France and England
 mount
 Their battering cannon, charged to the months;
 Till their soul-fearing clamours have braw'd
 down

The flinty ribs of this contemptuous city:
 I'd play incessantly upon these jades,
 Even till unfenced desolation
 Leave them as naked as the vulgar air.
 That done, discover your mated strengths,
 And part your mingled colours once again;
 Turn face to face, and bloody point to point:
 Then, in a moment, fortune shall snail forth
 Out of one side her happy minion;
 To whom in favour she shall give the day,
 And kiss him with a glorious victory.
 How like you this well counsel, mighty states?
 Smacks it not something of the policy?

K. John. Now, by the sky that hangs above
 our heads,
 I like it well;—France, shall we knit our
 powers,

And lay this Angiers even with the ground;
 Then, after, fight who shall be king of it?

Bast. Ah! if thou hast the mettle of a king,— Being wrong'd, as we are, by this peevish
 town,—

Turn thou the mouth of thy artillery,
 As we will our's, against these saucy walls:
 And when that we have dash'd them to the
 ground,

Why, then defy each other; and, pell-mell,
 Make work upon ourselves, for heaven, or hell.

K. Phi. Let it be so:—Say, where will you assault?

K. John. We from the west will send destruction
 Into this city's bosom.

Aust. I from the north.

K. Phi. Our thunder from the south,
 Shall rain their drift of bullets on this town.

Bast. O prudent discipline! From north to south:

Austria and France shoot in each other's mouth:

I'll stir them to it:—Come, away, away!

1 Cit. Hear us, great kings: vouchsafe a while to stay,

And I shall show you peace, and fair-faced league.

Win you this city without stroke or wound;
 Rescue those breathing lives to die in beds,

That here come sacrifices for the field:
 Perséver not, but hear me, mighty kings.

K. John. Speak on, with favour; we are bent to hear.

1 Cit. That daughter there of Spain, the lady
 Blanch,

Is near to England: Look upon the years
 Of Lewis the Dauphin, and that lovely maid:
 If lusty love should go in quest of beauty,
 Where should he find it fairer than in Blanch?
 If zealous love should go in search of virtue,
 Where should he find it purer than in Blanch?
 If love ambitious sought a match of birth,
 Whose veins bound richer blood than lady
 Blanch?

Such as she is, in beauty, virtue, birth,
 Is the young Dauphin every way complete:
 If not complete, O say, he is not she;
 And she again wants nothing, to name want;
 If want it be not, that she is not he:
 He is the half part of a blessed man,
 Left to be finished by such a she;
 And she a fair divided excellence,

Whose fulness of perfection lies in him.
 Oh! two such silver currents, when they join,
 Do glorify the banks that bound them in:
 And two such shores to two such streams made
 one,

Two such controlling bounds shall you be,
 kings,

To these two princes, if you marry them.
 This union shall do more than battens can,
 To our fast-closed gates; for, at this match,
 With swifter spleen than powder can entice,
 The mouth of passage shall we fling wide open,
 And give you entrance; but, without this
 match,

The sea enraged is not half so deaf,
 Lions more confident, mountains and rocks
 More free from motion; no, not death himself
 In mortal fury half so peremptory,
 As we to keep this city.

Bast. Here's a stay,
 That shakes the rotten carcass of old death
 Out of his rags! Here's a large mouth, indeed,
 That spits forth death, and mountain, rocks,
 and seas:

Talks as familiarly of roaring lions,
 As maids of thirteen do of puppy-dogs!
 What canst thou begot this lusty blood?
 He speaks plain cannon, me, and smoke, and bounce:

He gives the bastinado with his tongue;
 Our ears are engul'd; not a word of his,
 But buffets better than a list of France:
 Zounds! I was never so bethump'd with words,
 Since I first call'd my brother's father, dad.

Eli. Son, list to this conjunction, make this match;

Give with our niece a dowry large enough:
 For by this knot thou shalt so surely tie
 Thy now unsur'd assurance to the crown
 That your green boy shall have no sun to ripe
 The bloom that promiseth a mighty fruit.

I see a yielding in the looks of France:
 Mark, how they whisper: urge them while their souls

Are capable of this ambition;
 Lest zeal, now melted, by the windy breath
 Of soft petitions, pity, and remorse,
 Cool and congeal again to what it was.

1 Cit. Why answer not the doleful majesties,
 This friendly treaty of our threaten'd town?

K. Phi. Speak England first, that hath been forward first

To speak unto this city: What say you?

K. John. If that the Dauphin there, thy princely son,

Can in this book of beauty read, I love,
 Her dowry shall weigh equal with a queen:
 For Anjou, and fair Touraine, Maine, Poictiers,

And all that we upon this side the sea
 Except this city now by us besieg'd)
 Find liable to our crown and dignity,

Shall gild her bridal bed; and make her rich
In titles, honours, and promotions,
As she in beauty, education, blood,
Holds hand with any princess of the world.

K. Phi. What say'st thou, boy? look in the lady's face.

Lew. I do, my lord, and in her eye I find
A wonder, or a wondrous miracle,
The shadow of myself form'd in her eye;
Which, being but the shadow of your son,
Becomes a sun, and makes your son a shadow:
I do protest, I never lov'd myself,
Till now indeed I beheld myself,
Drawn in the flattering table of her eye.

[Whispers with BLANCH.]

Bast. Drawn in the flattering table of her eye!—

Hang'd in the frowning wrinkle of her brow!—

And quarter'd in her heart!—he doth espy
Himself love's traitor: This is pity now,
That hang'd, and drawn, and quarter'd, there should be,

In such a love, so vile a lout as he.

Blanch. My uncle's will, in this respect, is mine:

If he see ought in you, that makes him like,
That any thing he sees, which moves his liking,
I can with ease translate it to my will;
Or, if you will, (to speak more properly,)
I will enforce it easily to my love.
Further I will not flatter you, my lord,
That all I see in you is worthy love,
Than this,—that nothing do I see in you,
(I though childish thoughts themselves should be your judge,)

That I can find should merit any hate.

K. John. What say these young ones? What say you, my niece?

Blanch. That she is bound in honour still to do

What you in wisdom shall vouchsafe to say.

K. John. Speak then, prince Dauphin, can you love this lady?

Lew. Nay, ask me if I can refrain from love;
For I do love her most unfeignedly.

K. John. Then do I give Volquessen, Touraine, Maine,
Poitiers, and Anjou, these five provinces,
With her to thee, and this addition more,
Fifty thirty thousand marks of English coin.—
Philip of France, if thou be pleas'd withal,
Command thy son and daughter to join hands.

K. Phi. It likes us well;—Young princes, close your hands.

Aust. And your lips too; for, I am well assur'd,

That I did so, when I was first assur'd.*

A. Phi. Now, citizens of Angiers, ope your gates,

Let in that amity which you have made:
For at saint Mary's chapel, presently,
The rites of marriage shall be solemniz'd.—
Is not the lady Constance in this troop?—
I know, she is not; for this match, made up,
Her presence would have interrupted much:—
Where is she and her son? tell me, who knows.

Lew. She is sad and passionate at your highness' tent.

K. Phi. And, by my faith, this league, that we have made,

Will give her sadness very little cure.—
Brother of England, how may we content
This widow lady? In her right we came;
Which we, God knows, have turn'd another way.

To our own vantage.
K. John. We will heal up all;
For we'll create young Arthur duke of Bretagne,

And earl of Richmond; and this rich fair town
We make him lord of.—Call the lady Con-

* Affianced.

Some speedy messenger bid her repair

To our solemnity:—I trust we shall,
If not fill up the measure of her will,
Yet in some measure satisfy her so,
That we shall stop her exclamation.
Go we, as well as haste will suffer us,
To this unlook'd for unprepared pomp.

[Exeunt all but the BASTARD.—The CITIZENS retire from the walls.]

Bast. Mad world! mad kings! mad composition!

John, to stop Arthur's title in the whole,
Hath willingly departed with a part:
And France, (whose armour conscience buckled on;

Whom zeal and charity brought to the field,
As God's own soldier,) round'd* in the ear
With that same purpose-changer, that sly devil;
That broker, that still breaks the pate of faith,
That daily break-vow; he that wins of all,
Of kings, of beggars, old men, young men,

maids:—

Who having no external thing to lose
But the word maid,—cheats the poor maid of
that,

That smooth-faced gentleman, tickling commodity,†

Commodity, the bias of the world;
The world, who of itself is peais'd‡ well,
Made to run even, upon even ground;
Till this advantage, this vile drawing bias,
This sway of motion, this commodity,
Makes it take head from all indifferency,
From all direction, purpose, course, intent:
And this same bias, this commodity,

This hawk, this broker, this all-changing word,
Clapp'd on the outward eye of hickle France,
Hath drawn him from his own determination,
From a resolv'd and honourable war,
To a most base and vile-concluded peace.—

And why rail I on this commodity?

But for because he hath not woo'd me yet:
Not that I have the power to clutch my hand;
When his fair angel is‡ would sanctify his palm:
But for my hand, as unattempted yet,
Like a poor beggar, raileth on the rich.
Well, while I am a beggar, I will rail;
And say,—there is no sin but to be rich;
And being rich, my virtue then shall be,
To say,—there is no vice, but beggary:
Since kings break faith upon commodity,
Gain be my lord! for I will worship thee!

[Exit.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The same.—The French King's Tent.

Enter CONSTANCE, ARTHUR, and SALISBURY.

Const. Gone to be married! gone to swear a

peace!
False blood to false blood join'd! Gone to be

friends!
Shall Lewis have Blanch? and Blanch those provinces?

It is not so; thou hast mispoke, misheard;
Be well advis'd, tell o'er thy tale again:

It cannot be; thou dost but say, 'tis so:
I trust, I may not trust thee; for thy word is but the vain breath of a common man:

Believe me, I do not believe thee, man;

I have a king's oath to the contrary.
Thou shalt be punish'd for thus frightening me,

For I am sick, and capable of fears;
Oppress'd with wrongs, and therefore full of fears;

A widow, husbandless, subject to fears;

* Conspired.

† Interest.

‡ Poised, balanced.

§ Coin.

‡ Susceptible.

A woman naturally born to fears ;
And though thou now confess, thou didst but jest,

With my vex'd spirits I cannot take a truce,
But they will quake and tremble all this day.
What dost thou mean by shaking of thy head ?
Why dost thou look so sadly on my son ?
What means that haud upon that breast of
thine ?

Why holds thine eye that lamentable rheum,
Like a proud river peering o'er his bounds ?
Be these sad signs confirmers of thy words ?
Then speak again ; not all thy former tale,
But this one word, whether thy tale be true.

Sal. As true, as I believe you think them
false,

That give you cause to prove my saying true.

Const. O if you teach me to believe this
sorrow,

Teach thou this sorrow how to make me die ;
And let belief and life encounter so,
As doth the fury of two desperate men,
Which, in the very meeting, fall, and die.—
Lewis marry Blanch ! O boy, then where art
thou ?

France friend with England ! what becomes of
me !—

Fellow, be gone ; I cannot brook thy sight :
This news hath made thee a most ugly man.

Sal. What other harm have I, good lady,
done,

But spoke the harm that is by others done ?

Const. Which harm within itself so heinous is,
As it makes harmful all that speak of it.

Arth. I do beseech you, madam, be content.

Const. If thou, that bid'st me be content,
wert grim,

Ugly, and slaud'rous to thy mother's womb,
Full of unpleasing blots, and sightless stains,
Lame, foolish, crooked, swart, prodigious,
Patch'd with foul moles, and eye-offending
marks,

I would not care, I then would be content ;
For then I should not love thee ; no, nor thou
Become thy great birth, nor deserve a crown.
But thou art fair ; and at thy birth, dear boy,
Nature and fortune join'd to make thee great :
Of nature's gifts thou may'st with lilies boast,
And with the half b'own rose : but fortune, oh !
She is corrupted, chang'd, and won from thee ;
She adulterates hourly with thine uncle John ;
And with her golden hand hath pluck'd on
France

To tread down fair respect of sovereignty,
And made his majesty the bawd of their's.
France is a bawd to fortune and king John ;
That strumpet fortune, that usurping John :—
Tell me, thou fellow, is not France for-worn ?
Envenom him with words ; or get thee gone,
And leave those woes alone, which I alone,
Am bound to under-bear.

Sal. Pardon me, madam,

I may not go without you to the king's.

Const. Thou may'st, thou shalt, I will not go with thee :

I will instruct my sorrows to be proud ;
For grief is proud, and makes his owner stout.
To me, and to the state of my great grief,
Let kings assemble ; for my grief's so great,
That no supporter but the huge firm earth
Can hold it up : here I and sorrow sit ;
Here is my throne. bid kings come how to it.

[She throws herself on the ground.]

Enter King JOHN, King PHILIP, LEWIS, BLANCH, ELINOR, BASTARD, AUSTRIA, and Attendants.

K. Phi. 'Tis true, fair daughter ; and this blessed day,

Ever in France shall be kept festival :
To solemnize this day, the glorious sun
Stays in his course, and plays the alchemist ;
Turning, with splendour of his precious eye,
The meagre cloddy earth to glittering gold :

The yearly course, that brings this day about,
Shall never see it but a holiday.

Const. A wicked day, and not a holiday !—

[Rising.]

What hath this day deserv'd, what hath it done,

That it in golden letters should be set,

Among the high tides, in the kalendar ?

Nay, rather, turn this day out of the week ;

This day of shame, oppression, perjury :

Or, if it must stand still, let wives with child

Pray that their burdens may not fall this day,

Lest that their hopes prodigiously be cross'd :

But, * on this day, let seamen fear no wreck ;

No bargains break, that are not this day made :

This day, all things begun come to ill end ;

Yea, faith itself to hollow falsehood change !

K. Phi. By heaven, lady, you shall have no
cause

To curse the fair proceedings of this day :

Have I not pawn'd to you my majesty ?

Const. You have beguil'd me with a counterfeit,

Resembling majesty ; which, being touch'd, and

Proves valueless : You are forsworn, forsworn ;

You came in arms to spill mine enemies' blood,

But now in arms you strengthen it with your's .

The grappling vigour and rough frown of war

Is cold in amity and painted peace,

And our oppression hath made up this league :

Arm, arm, you heavens, against these perjur'd
kings !

A widow cries ; be husband to me, heavens !

Let not the hours of this ungodly day

Wear out the day in peace ; but, ere sunset,

Set armed discord 'twixt these perjur'd kings !

Hear me, O hear me !

Aust. Lady Constance, peace.

Const. War ! war ! no peace ! peace is to me a war.

O Lymoges ! O Austria ! thou dost shame

That bloody spoil : Thou slave, thou wretch,

thou coward ;

Thou little valiant, great in villany !

Thou ever strong upon the stronger side !

Thou fortune's champion, that dost never fight

But when her humorous ladyship is by

To teach thee safety ! thou art perjur'd too,

And sooth'st up greatness. What a fool art
thou !

A ramping fool ; to brag, and stamp, and swear,

Upon my party ! Thou cold-blooded slave,

Hast thou not spoke like thunder on my side ?

Being sworn my soldier ! bidding me depend

Upon thy stars, thy fortune, and thy strength ?

And dost thou now fall over to my foes ?

Thou wear a lion's hide ! doff it for shame,

And hang a calf's-skin on those recreant limbs.

Aust. O that a man should speak those words
to me !

East. And hang a calf's-skin on those recreant limbs.

Aust. Thou dar'st not say so, villain, for thy life.

East. And hang a calf's-skin on those recreant limbs.

K. John. We like not this ; thou dost forget thyself.

Enter PANDULPH.

K. Phi. Here comes the holy legate of the pope.

Pand. Hail, you anointed deputies of heaven !

To thee, king John, my holy errand is.

I Pandulph, of fair Milan cardinal,

And from pope Innocent the legate here,

Do, in his name, religiously demand,

Why thou against the church, our holy mother,

So wilfully dost spurn : and, force perforce,

Keep Stephen Langton, chosen archbishop

Of Canterbury, from that holy see ?

This, in our 'foresaid holy father's name,

Pope Innocent, I do demand of thee.

* But here means except.

K. John. What earthly name to interrogatories,

Can task the free breath of a sacred king?
Thou canst not, cardinal, devise a name
So slight, unworthy, and ridiculous,
To charge me to an answer, as the pope.
Tell him this tale; and from the mouth of England,

Add thus much more,—That no Italian priest
Shall tithe or toll in our dominions;
But as we under heaven are supreme head,
So, under him, that great supremacy,
Where we do reign, we will alone uphold,
Without the assistance of a mortal hand:
So tell the pope; all reverence set apart,
To him and his usurp'd authority.

K. Phi. Brother of England, you blasphemous
in this.

K. John. Though you, and all the kings of Christendom,
Are led so grossly by this meddling priest,
Dreading the curse that money may buy out;
And, by the merit of vile gold, dross, dust,
Purchase corrupted pardon of a man,
Who, in that sale, sells pardon from himself:
Though you, and all the rest, so grossly led,
This juggling witchcraft with revenue cherish;
Yet I, alone, alone do me oppose Against the pope, and count his friends my foes.

Pand. Then, by the lawful power that I
have,
Thou shalt stand curs'd and excommunicate:
And blessed shall he be, that doth revolt
From his allegiance to an heretic;
And meritorious shall that hand be call'd,
Canonized, and worshipp'd as a saint,
That takes away by any secret course
Thy hateful life.

Const. O lawful let it be,
That I have room with Rome to curse a while!
Good father cardinal, cry thou Amen
To my keen curses; for, without my wrong,
There is no tongue hath power to curse him right.

Pand. There's law and warrant, lady, for my curse.

Const. And for mine too; when law can do no right,
Let it be lawful that law bar no wrong:
Law cannot give my child his kingdom here;
For he, that holds his kingdom, holds the
law:

Therefore, since law itself is perfect wrong,
How can the law forbid my tongue to curse?

Pand. Philip of France, on peril of a curse,
Let go the hand of that arch-heretic;
And raise the power of France upon his head
Unless he do submit himself to Rome.

Lil. Look'st thou pale, France? do not let go thy hand.

Const. Look to that, devil! lest that France repent,

And, by disjoining hands, hell lose a soul.

Aust. King Philip, listen to the cardinal.

Bast. And hang a calf's-skin on his recreant limbs.

Aust. Well, ruffian, I must pocket up these wrongs,

Because—
Bast. Your breeches best may carry them.

K. John. Philip, what say'st thou to the cardinal?

Const. What should he say, but as the cardinal?

Lew. Bethink you, father; for the difference is, purchase of a heavy curse from Rome,
Or the light loss of England for a friend:

Forego the easier.

Blanch. That's the curse of Rome.

Const. O Lewis, stand fast; the devil tempts thee here.

In likeness of a new untrimm'd * bride.

Blanch. The lady Constance speaks not from her faith,
But from her need.

Const. O if thou grant my need,
Which only lives but by the death of faith,
That need must needs infer this principle,—
That faith would live again by death of need;
O then tread down my need, and faith mounts
up;

Keep my need up, and faith is trodden down.

K. John. The king is mov'd, and answers not to this.

Const. O be remov'd from him, and answer
well.

Aust. Do so, king Philip; hang no more in doubt.

Bast. Hang nothing but a calf's-skin, most sweet lout.

K. Phi. I am perplex'd, and know not what
to say.

Pand. What can'st thou say, but will perplex thee more.

If thou stand excommunicate and curs'd?

K. Phi. Good reverend father, make my person your's,

And tell me, how you would bestow yourself.
This royal hand and mine are newly knit;
And the conjunction of our inward souls
Married in league, coupled and link'd together
With all religious strength of sacred vows;
The latest breath that gave the sound of words,
Was deep-sworn faith, peace, amity, true love,
Between our kingdoms, and our royal selves;
And even before this truce, but new before,—
No longer than we well could wash our hands,
To clasp this royal bargain up of peace,— Heaven knows, they were besmeard and over-stain'd

With slaughter's pencil; where revenge did paint
The fearful difference of incensed kings;
And shall these hands, so lately purg'd of blood,
So newly join'd in love, so strong in both,
I yoke this seizure, and this kind regret? *
Play fast and loose with faith? so jest with
heaven,

Make such unconstant children of ourselves.
As now again to snatch our palm from palm;
Unswear faith sworn; and on the marriage bed
Of smiling peace to march a bloody host,
And make a riot on the gentle brow
Of true sincerity? O holy Sir,
My reverend father, let it not be so:
Out of your grace, devise, ordain, impose
Some gentle order; and then we shall be bless'd

To do your pleasure, and continue friends.

Pand. All form is formless, order orderless,
Save what is opposite to England's love.
Therefore to arms! be champion of our church!
Or let the church, our mother, breathe her
curse,

A mother's curse, on her revolting son.
France, thou may'st hold a serpent by the
tongue.

A cased lion by the mortal paw,
A fasting tiger sated by the tooth,
Thou keep in peace that hand which thou dost
hold.

K. Phi. I may disjoin my hand, but not my faith.

Pand. So mak'st thou faith an enemy to
And, like a civil war, set'st oath to oath, [faith];
Thy tongue against thy tongue. O let thy vow
First made to heaven, first be to heaven per-
form'd;

That is, to be the champion of our church!
What since thou swor'st, is sworn against thy-
self,

And may not be performed by thyself:
For that, which thou hast sworn to do amiss,
Is not amiss when it is truly done;
And being not done, where doing tends to ill,
The truth is then most done not doing it:

The better act of purposes mistook
Is, to mistake again; though iudirect,
Yet induction thereby grows direct,
And falsehood falsehood cures; as fire cools
fire,

Within the scorched veins of one new burn'd.
It is religion, that doth make vows kept;
But thou hast sworn against religion;
By what thou swear'st, against the thing thou
swear'st;

And mak'st an oath the surety for thy truth
Against an oath: The truth thou art unsure
To swear, swear only not to be forsworn;
Else, what a mockery should it be to swear?
But thou dost swear only to be forsworn;
And most forsworn, to keep what thou dost
swear.

Therefore, thy latter vows, against thy first,
Is in thyself rebellion to thyself:
And better conquest never can'st thou make,
Than arm thy constant and thy nobler parts
Against those giddy loose suggestions:
Upon which better part our prayers come in,
If thou vouchsafe them: but, if not, then know,
The peril of our curses light on thee;
So heavy, as thou shalt not shake them off,
But, in despair, die under their black weight.

Aust. Rebellion, flat rebellion!

Bast. Will't not be?

Will not a calf's-skin stop that mouth of thine?

Lew. Father, to arms!

Blanch. Upon thy wedding day?

Against the blood that thou hast married?
What, shall our feast be kept with slaughter'd
men?

Shall braying trumpets, and loud churlish drums,—

Clamours of hell,—be measures * to our pomp?
O husband, hear me!—ah, alack, how new
Is husband in my mouth!—even for that name,
Which till this time my tongue did ne'er pronounce,

Upon my knee I beg, go not to arms

Against mine uncle.

Const. O upon my knee,
Made hard with kneeling, I do pray to thee,
Thou virtuous Dauphin, alter not the doom
Fore-thought by heaven.

Blanch. Now shall I see thy love; What motive may

Be stronger with thee than the name of wife?

Const. That which upholdeth him that thee upholds,
His honour: O thine honour, Lewis, thine
honour!

Lew. I muse your majesty doth seem so
cold,

When such profound respects do pull you on.

Pand. I will d'nnounce a curse upon his head.

K. Phi. Thou shalt not need:—England, I'll fall from thee.

Const. O fair return of banish'd majesty!

Eli. O foul revolt of French inconstancy!

K. John. France, thou shalt rue this hour within this hour.

East. Old time the clock-setter, that bald sexton time.

Is it as he will? well then, France shall rue.

Blanch. The sun's o'ercast with blood: Fair day, adieu!

Which is the side that I must go withal?
I am with both: each army hath a hand;
And, in their rage, I having hold of both,
They whirl asunder, and dismember me.

Husband, I cannot pray that thou may'st win;
Uncle, I needs must pray that thou may'st
lose;

Father, I may not wish the fortune thine;

Grandam, I will not wish thy wishes thrive;

Whoever wins, on that side shall I lose;

Assured loss, before the match be play'd.

Lew. Lady, with me; with me thy fortune lies.

Blanch. There where my fortune lives, there my life dies.

K. John. Cousin, go draw our puissance together.—[Exit BASTARD.]

France, I am burn'd up with inflaming wrath;
A rage, whose heat hath this condition,
That nothing can allay, nothing but blood,
The blood, and dearest-valued blood, of France.

K. Phi. Thy rage shall burn thee up, and thou shalt turn

To ashes, ere our blood shall quench that fire:
Look to thyself, thou art in jeopardy.

K. John. No more than he that threatens.—To arms lets lie!—[Exit.]

SCENE II.—The same.—Plains near Angiers.

Alarums, Excursions.—Enter the BASTARD, with AUSTRIA's head.

Bast. Now, by my life, this day grows wondrous hot;

Some airy devil hovers in the sky,
And pours down mischief. Austria's head lie
there,

While Philip breathes.

Enter KING JOHN, ARTHUR, and HUBERT.

K. John. Hubert, keep this boy:—Philip,
make up:

My mother is assailed in our tent,

And ta'en, I fear.

Bast. My lord, I rescu'd her;

Her highness is in safety, fear you not:

But on, my liege: for very little pains

Will bring this labour to a happy end.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same.

Alarums; Excursions; Retreat. Enter KING
JOHN, ELINOR, ARTHUR, the BASTARD, HUBERT, and LORDS.

K. John. So shall it be; your grace shall stay behind, [To ELINOR.]

So strongly guarded.—Cousin, look not sad: [To ARTHUR.]

Thy grandam loves thee; and thy uncle will
As dear be to thee as thy father was.

Arth. O this will make my mother die with grief.

K. John. Cousin, [To the BASTARD] away for England; haste before:

And, ere our coming, see thou shake the bags
Of hoarding abbots; angels * imprison'd

Set thou at liberty: the fat ribs of peace
Must by the hungry now be fed upon:

Use our commission in his utmost force.

Bast. Bell, book, and candle shall not drive me back,

When gold and silver beck me to come on.

I leave your highness:—Grandam, I will pray
(If ever I remember to be holy),

For your fair safety, so I kiss your hand.

Eli. Farewell, my gentle cousin.

K. John. Coz, farewell. [Exit BASTARD.]

Eli. Come hither, little kinsman, hark, a word. [She takes ARTHUR aside.]

K. John. Come hither, Hubert. O my gentle
Hubert,

We owe thee much; within this wall of flesh
There is a soul, counts thee her creditor,

And with advantage means to pay thy love:

And, my good friend, thy voluntary oath
Lives in this bosom, dearly cherished.

Give me thy hand. I had a thing to say,—
But I will fit it with some better time.

By heaven, Hubert, I am almost asham'd
To say what good respect I have of thee.

Hub. I am much bounden to your majesty.

K. John. Good friend, thou hast no cause to say so yet:

* Music for dancing.

* Gold coin.

But thou shalt have ; and creep time ne'er so slow,

Yet it shall come, for me to do thee good.

I had a thing to say,—But let it go :

The sun is in the heaven, and the proud day,

Attended with the pleasures of the world,

Is all too wanton, and too full of gawds,*

To give me audience :—If the midnight bell

Hid, with his iron tongue and brazen mouth,

Sound one unto the drowsy race of night ;

If this same were a church-yard where we stand,

And thou possessed with a thousand wrongs ;

Or if that surly spirit, melancholy,

Had bak'd thy blood, and made it heavy, thick ;

(Which, else, runs tickling up and down the veins,

Making that idiot, laughter, keep men's eyes,

And stain their cheeks to idle merriment,

A passion hateful to my purposes ;)

Or if that thou could'st see me without eyes,

Hear me without thine ears, and make reply

Without a tongue, using conceit alone,

Without eyes, ears, and harmful sound of words ;

Then, in despite of brooded watchful day,

I would into thy bosom pour my thoughts :

But ah, I will not :—Yet I love thee well ;

And, by my troth, I think thou lov'st me well.

Hub. So well, that what you bid me undertake,

Though that my death were adjunct to my act,

By heaven, I'd do't.

K. John. Do not I know, thou would'st ?

Good Hubert, Hubert, Hubert, throw thine eye

On you young boy : I'll tell thee what, my friend—

He is a very serpent in my way ;

And, whoso'er this foot of mine doth tread,

He lies before me :—What thou understand me ?

Thou art his keeper.

Hub. And I will keep him so,

That he shall not offend your majesty.

K. John. Death.

Hub. My lord ?

K. John. A grave.

Hub. He shall not live.

K. John. Enough.

I could be merry now : Hubert, I love thee ;

Well, I'll not say what I intend for thee :

Remember.—Madaun, fare you well :

I'll send those powers o'er to your majesty.

Hub. My blessing go with thee !

K. John. For England, cousin :

Hubert shall be your man, attend on you

With all true duty.—On toward Calais, ho !

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—The same.—The French King's Tent.

Enter King PHILIP, LEWIS, PANDELPH, and Attendants.

K. Phi. So, by a roaring tempest on the flood,

A whole armada of convicted sail

Is scatter'd and disjoin'd from fellowship.

Pand. Courage and comfort ! all shall yet go well.

K. Phi. What can go well, when we have run so ill ?

Are we not beaten ? Is not Angiers lost ?

Arthur ta'en prisoner ? divers dear friends slain ?

And bloody England into England gone,

O'erbearing interruption, spite of France ?

Lew. What he hath won, that hath he fortified :

So hot a speed with such advice dispos'd,

Such temperate order in so fierce a cause,

Doth want example : Who hath read, or heard,

Of any kindred action like to this ?

* Showy ornaments.

† Conception.

K. Phi. Well could I bear that England had this praise,

So we could find some pattern of our shame.

Enter CONSTANCE.

Look, who comes here ! a grave unto a soul ;

Holding the eternal spirit against her will,

In the vile prison of afflicted breath :—

Pr'ythee, lady, go away with me.

Const. Lo, now I now see the issue of your peace !

K. Phi. Patience, good lady ! comfort, gentle Constance !

Const. No, I defy all counsel, all redress,

But that which ends all counsel, true redress,

Death, death :—O amiable lovely death !

Thou odoriferous stench ! sound rottenness !

Arise forth from the couch of lasting night,

Thou hate and terror to prosperity,

And I will kiss thy detestable bones ;

And put my eye-balls in thy vaulty brows ;

And ring these fingers with thy household worms ;

And stop this gap of breath with falsome dust,

And be a carrion monster like thyself :

Come, grin on me ; and I will thank thou smil'st,

And buss thee as thy wife ! Misery's love,

O come to me !

K. Phi. O fair affliction, peace.

Const. No, no, I will not, having breath to cry :—

O that my tongue were in the thunder's mouth !

Then with a passion would I shake the world ;

And rouse from sleep, that fell anatomy,

Which cannot hear a lady's feeble voice,

Which scorns a modern* invocation.

Pand. Lady, you utter madness, and not sorrow.

Const. Thou art not holy to belie me so ;

I am not mad : this hair I tear, is mine ;

My name is Constance ; I was Geoffrey's wife ;

Young Arthur is my son, and he is lost :

I am not mad ;—I would to heaven I were :

For then, 'tis like I should forget myself :

Oh ! if I could, what grief should I forget !—

Preach some philosophy to make me mad,

And thou shalt be canoniz'd, cardinal ;

For, being not mad, but sensible of grief,

My reasonable part produces reason

How I may be deliver'd of these woes,

And teaches me to kill or hang myself :

If I were mad, I should forget my son ;

Or madly think, a babe of clouts were he :

I am not mad ; too well, too well I feel

The different plague of each calamity.

K. Phi. Bind up those tresses : O what love

I note

In the fair multitude of those her hairs !

Where but by chance a silver drop hath fallen,

Even to that drop ten thousand wry friends

Do clew themselves in sociable grief ;

Like true, inseparable, faithful loves,

Sticking together in calamity.

Const. To England, if ray will.

K. Phi. Bind up your hairs.

Const. Yes, that I will ; and wherefore will I do it ?

I tore them from their bonds ; and cied aloud,

O that these hands could redeem my son,

As they have given these hairs their liberty !

But now I envy at their liberty,

And will again commit them to their bonds,

Because my poor child is a prisoner.—

And, father cardinal, I have heard you say,

That we shall see and know our friends in heaven :

If that be true, I shall see my boy again ;

For, since the birth of Cain, the first male child,

To him that did but yesterday expire,

There was not such a gracious creature born.

But now will canker sorrow eat my bud,

And chase the native beauty from his cheek,

* Common

And he will look as hollow as a ghost ;
As dim and meagre as an ague's fit ;
And so he'll die ; and, rising so again,
When I shall meet him in the court of heaven
I shall not know him : therefore never, never Must I behold my pretty Arthur more.

Pand. You hold too heliuous a respect of grief.

Const. He talks to me that never had a son.

K. Phi. You are as fond of grief, as of your child.

Const. Grief fills the room of my absent child,

Lies in his bed, walks up and down with me ;
Puts on his pretty looks, repeats his words,
Remembers me of all his gracious parts,
Stuffs out his vacant garments with his form :
Then, have I reason to be fond of grief.
Fare you well ; had you such a loss as I,
I could give better comfort than you do.—
I will not keep this form upon my head,

[Tearing off her Head-dress.]

When there is such disorder in my wit.
O lord, my boy, my Arthur, my fair son !
My life, my joy, my food, my all the world !
My widow-comfort, and my sorrows' cure !

[Exit.]

K. Phi. I fear some outrage, and I'll follow her.

[Exit.]

Lew. There's nothing in the world can make me joy :

Life is as tedious as a twice-told tale,
Vexing the dull ear of a drowsy man ;
And bitter shame hath spoil'd the sweet world's taste,
That it yields naught, but shame and bitterness.

Pand. Before the curing of a strong disease,
Even in the instant of repair and health,
The fit is strongest ; evils, that take leave,
On their departure most of all show evil :
What have you lost by losing of this day ?

Lew. All days of glory, joy, and happiness.

Pand. If you have won it, certainly, you had.
No, no : when fortune means to men most good,
She looks upon them with a threatening eye.
'Tis strange, to think how much King John hath lost

In this which he account's so clearly won :
Are not you griev'd, that Arthur is his prisoner ?

Lew. As heartily, as he is glad he hath him.

Pand. Your mind is all as youthful as your blood.

Now hear me speak, with a prophetic spirit :
For even the breath of what I mean to speak
Shall blow each dust, each straw, each little rub,
Out of the path which shall directly lead
Thy foot to England's throne ; and, therefore, mark.

John hath seiz'd Arthur ; and it cannot be,
That, whiles warm life plays in that infant's veins,

The misplac'd John should entertain an hour,
One minute, nay, one quiet breath of rest :
A sceptre, snatch'd with an unruly hand,
Must be as boisterously maintain'd as gain'd :
And he, that stands upon a slippery place,
Makes nice of no vile hold to stay him up :
'That John may stand, then Arthur needs must fall ;

So be it, for it cannot be but so.

Lew. But what shall I gain by young Arthur's fall ?

Pand. You, in the right of lady Blanch your wife,

May then make all the claim that Arthur did.

Lew. And lose it, life and all, as Arthur did.
Pand. How green are you, and fresh in this old world !

John lays you plots ; the times conspire with you :

For he, that steeps his safety in true blood,
Shall find but bloody safety, and untrue.

This act, so evilly born, shall cool the hearts
Of all his people, and freeze up their zeal ;
That none so small advantage shall step forth,
To check his reign, but they will cherish it :

No natural exhalation in the sky,
No scape of nature, no distemper'd day,
No common wind, no custom'd event,
But they will pluck away his natural cause,
And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs,
Abortives, présages, and tongues of heaven,
Plainly denouncing vengeance upon John.

Lew. May be, he will not touch young Arthur's life,

But hold himself safe in his prisonment.

Pand. O Sir, when he shall hear of your approach,

If that young Arthur be not gone already,
Even at that news he dies : and then the hearts
Of all his people shall revolt from him,
And kiss the lips of unacquainted change ;
And pick strong matter of revolt and wrath,
Out of the bloody fingers' ends of John.

Methinks, I see this haily all on foot ;
And oh ! what better matter breeds for you,
Than I have nam'd !—The bastard Faulconbridge

Is now in England, ransacking the church,
Offending charity : If but a dozen French
Were there in arms, they would be as a call
To train ten thousand English to their side ;
Or, as a little snow, tumbled about,
Anon becomes a mountain. O noble Dauphin,
Go with me to the king : 'Tis wonderful,
What may be wrought out of their discontent :
Now that their souls are topfull of offence,
For England go ; I will whet on the king.

Lew. Strong reasons make strong actions :

Let us go ;

If you say, ay, the king will not say, no.

[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Northampton.—A Room in the Castle.

Enter HUBERT and two ATTENDANTS.

Hub. Heat me these irons hot : and look thou stand

Within the arras : * when I strike my foot
Upon the bosom of the ground, rush forth :
And bind the boy, which you shall find with me,
Fast to the chair : be heedful : hence, and watch.

I Attend. I hope your warrant will bear out the deed.

Hub. Uncleanly scruples ! Fear not you : look to't.—

[Exeunt ATTENDANTS.]

Young lad, come forth ; I have to say with you.

Enter ARTHUR.

Auth. Good morrow, Hubert.

Hub. Good morrow, little prince.

Arth. As little prince (having so great a title

To be more prince,) as may be.—You are sad.

Hub. Indeed, I have been merrier.

Arth. Mercy on me !

Methinks no body should be sad but I :
Yet, I remember, when I was in France,
Young gentlemen would be as sad as night,
Only for wantonness. By my christendom,
So I were out of prison, and kept sheep,
I should be as merry as the day is long ;
And so I would be here, but that I doubt
My uncle practises more harm to me :
He is afraid of me, and I of him :
Is it my fault that I was Geoffrey's son ?

No, indeed, is't not; And I would to heaven,
I were your son, so you would love me, Hubert.

Hub. If I talk to him, with his innocent prate
He will awake my mercy, which lies dead:
Therefore I will be sudden, and despatch.

[Aside.]
Arth. Are you sick, Hubert? you look pale to-day:

In sooth, I would you were a little sick;
That I might sit all night, and watch with you:
I warrant I love you more than you do me.

Hub. His words do take possession of my bosom.—

Read here, young Arthur. [Showing a paper.]
How now, foolish rhenn! [Aside.]
Turning disputous, torture out of door!

I must be brief; lest resolution drop
Out at mine eyes, in tender womanish tears.—
Can you not read it? is it not fair writ?

Arth. Too fairly, Hubert, for so foul effect:
Must you with hot irons burn out both mine eyes?

Hub. Young boy, I must.

Arth. And will you?

Hub. And I will.

Arth. Have you the heart? When your head did but ache,

I knit my handkerchief about your brows,
(The best I had, a princess wrought it me,)
And I did never ask it you again;
And with my hand at midnight held your head;
And, like the watchful minutes to the hour,
Still and anon cheer'd up the heavy time;
Saying, What lack you? and, Where lies your grief?

Or, What good love may I perform for you?
Many a poor man's son would have lain still,
And ne'er have spoke a loving word to you;
But you at your sick service had a prince.
Now you may think my love was crafty love
And call it cunning: Do, an it you will:
If heaven be pleas'd that you must use me ill,
Why, then you must.—Will you put out mine eyes?

These eyes, that never did, nor never shall,
So much as frown on you!

Hub. I have sworn to do it;
And with hot irons must I burn them out.

Arth. Ah! none, but in this iron age, would do it!

The iron of itself, though heat red-hot,
Approaching near these eyes, would drink my tears,

And quench his fiery indignation,
Even in the matter of mine innocence;
Nay, after that, consume away in rust,
But for containing fire to harm mine eye.

Are you more stubborn-hard than hammer'd iron?

An if an angel should have come to me,
And told me Hubert should put out mine eyes,
I would not have believ'd no tongue, but Hubert's.

Hub. Come forth. [Stamps.]

Re-enter ATTENDANTS, with Cord, Irons, &c.
Do as I bid you do.

Arth. O save me, Hubert, save me! my eyes are out,

Even with the fierce looks of these bloody men.
Hub. Give me the iron, I say, and bind him
here.

Arth. Alas, what need you be so boist'rous-
rough?

I will not struggle, I will stand stone still.
For heaven's sake, Hubert, let me not be bound!

Nay, hear me, Hubert! drive these men away,
And I will sit as quiet as a lamb;
I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word,
Nor look upon the iron angrily:
Thrust but these men away, and I'll forgive
you,

Whatever torment you do put me to.

Hub. Go, stand within; let me alone with him.

1 Attend. I am best pleas'd to be from such a deed. [Exeunt ATTENDANTS.]

Arth. Alas! I then have chid away my friend;
He hath a stern look, but a gentle heart:—
Let him come back, that his compassion may Give life to yours.

Hub. Come, boy, prepare yourself.

Arth. Is there no remedy?

Hub. None, but to lose your eyes.

Arth. O heaven!—that there were but a mote
in your's,

A grain, a dust, a quail, a wand'ring hair,
Any annoyance in that precious sense!
Then, feeling what small things are boist'rous
there,

Your vile intent must needs seem horrible.

Hub. Is this your promise? go to, hold your tongue.

Arth. Hubert, the utterance of a brace of tongues

Must needs want pleading for a pair of eyes:
Let me not hold my tongue; let me not, Hubert!

Or, Hubert, if you will, cut out my tongue,
So I may keep mine eyes; O spare mine eyes;
Though to no use, but still to look on you!
Lo, by my troth, the instrument is cold,
And would not harm me.

Hub. I can heat it, boy.

Arth. No, in good sooth; the fire is dead with grief.

(Being create for comfort) to be us'd
In undeserv'd extremes: * See else yourself;
There is no malice in this burning coal;
The breath of heaven hath blown his spirit out,
And strew'd repentant ashes on his head.

Hub. But with my breath I can revive it, boy.

Arth. And if you do, you will but make it blush,

And glow with shame of your proceedings, Hubert:

Nay, it, perchance will sparkle in your eyes;
And, like a dog that is compell'd to fight,
Snatch at his master that doth tarre† him on.
All things, that you should use to do me wrong,
Deny their office: only you do lack.

That mercy, which fierce fire, and iron, extends,
Creatures of note, for mercy-lacking uses.

Hub. Well, see to live; I will not touch thine
eyes

For all the treasure that thine uncle owes:
Yet am I sworn, and I did purpose, boy,
With this same very iron to burn them out.

Arth. O now you look like Hubert! all this while

You were disguised.

Hub. Peace: no more. Adieu;
Your uncle must not know but you are dead:
I'll fill these dogged spies with false reports.
And, pretty child, sleep doubtless and secure,
That Hubert, for the wealth of all the world,
Will not offend thee.

Arth. O heaven!—I thank you, Hubert.

Hub. Silence; no more: Go closely in with
me;

Much danger do I undergo for thee. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same.—A Room of State in the Palace.

Enter King John, crowned; PEMBROKE, SALIS-BURY, and other Lords. The King takes his State.

K. John. Here once again we sit, once again
crown'd,

And look'd upon, I hope, with cheerful eyes.

Pcm. This once again, but that your highness
pleas'd,

Was once superfluous: you were crown'd before.

* In cruelty I have not deserved.

† Set him on.
2 A

And that high royalty was ne'er pluck'd off;
The faiths of men ne'er stained with revolt;
Fresh expectation troubled not the land,
With any long'd-for change, or better state.

Sal. Therefore, to be possess'd with double pomp,

To guard * a title that was rich before,
To gild refined gold, to paint the lily,
To throw a perfume on the violet,
To smooth the ice, or add another hue
Unto the rainbow, or with taper-light
To seek the beauteous eye of heaven to garnish,
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess.

Pem. But that your royal pleasure must be done,

This act is as an ancient tale new told;
And, in the last repeating, troublesome,
Being urged at a time unseasonable.

Sal. In this, the antique and well-noted face
Of plain old form is much disfigured:
And, like a shifted wind unto a sail,
It makes the course of thoughts to fetch
about:

Startles and frights consideration;
Makes sound opinion sick, and truth suspected,

For putting on so new a fashion'd robe.

Pem. When workmen strive to do better than
well,

They do confound their skill in covetousness:
And, oftentimes, excusing of a fault,
Doth make the fault the worse by the excuse;
As patches, set upon a little breach,
Discredit more in hiding of the fault
Than did the fault before it was so patch'd.

Sal. To this effect, before you were new-
crown'd,
We breath'd our counsel: but it pleas'd your highness

To overbear it; and we are all well pleas'd;
Since all and every part of what we would,
Doth make a stand at what your highness will.

K. John. Some reasons of this double corruption

I have possess'd you with, and think them strong;

And more, more strong, (when lesser is my fear,)

I shall induce you with: Mean time, but ask
What you would have reform'd, that is not
well,

And well shall you perceive, how willingly
I will both hear and grant your requests.

Pem. Then I (as one that am the tongue of
these,

To sound † the purposes of all their hearts,)
Both for myself and them, (but, chief of all,
Your safety, for the which myself and them
Bend their best studies,) heartily request
The enfranchisement of Arthur; whose restraint

Doth move the murmuring lips of discontent
To break into this dangerous argument,—

If, what in rest you have, in right you hold, Why then your fears, (which, as they say, attend

The steps of wrong,) should move you to mew
up

Your tender kinsman, and to choke his days
With barbarous ignorance, and deny his youth
The rich advantage of good exercise?
That the time's enemies may not have this
To grace occasions, let it be our suit,
That you have bid us ask his liberty;
Which for our goods we do no further ask,
Than whereupon our weal, on you depending,
Counts it your weal, he have his liberty.

K. John. Let it be so; I do commit his youth

Enter HUBERT.

To your direction.—Hubert, what news with
you?

* Lacc.

† Publish.

Pem. This is the man should do the bloody
deed;

He show'd his warrant to a friend of mine:
The image of a wicked heinous fault
Lives in his eye; that close aspect of his
Does show the mood of a much-troubled breast;
And I do fearfully believe 'tis done,
What we so fear'd he had a charge to do.

Sal. The colour of the king doth come and go,

Between his purpose and his conscience,
Like heralds 'twixt two dreadful battles set:
His passion is so ripe, it needs must break.

Pem. And, when it breaks, I fear will issue
thence

The foul corruption of a sweet child's death.

K. John. We cannot hold mortality's strong
hand:—

Good lords, although my will to give is living,
The suit which you demand is gone and
dead:

He tells us, Arthur is deceas'd to night.

Sal. Indeed we fear'd his sickness was past cure.

Pem. Indeed we heard how near his death he was,

Before the child himself felt he was sick:

This must be answer'd, either here or hence.

K. John. Why do you bend such solemn brows on me?

Think you I hear the shears of destiny?

Have I commandment on the pulse of life?

Sal. It is apparent foul-play; and 'tis
shame,

That greatness should so grossly offer it:

So thrive it in your game! and so farewell.

Pem. Stay yet, lord Salisbury; I'll go with
thee,

And find the inheritance of this poor child,
His little kingdom of a forced grave.

That blood, which ow'd the breath of all this
isle,

Three foot of it doth hold; Bad world the while!

This must not be thus borne: this will break
out

To all our sorrows, and ere long, I doubt.

K. John. They burn in indignation; I repent;

There is no sure foundation set on blood;

No certain life achiev'd by others' death.—

Enter a MESSENGER.

A fearful eye thou hast; Where is that blood,
That I have seen inhabit in those cheeks?

So foul a sky clears not without a storm:

Pour down thy weather:—How goes all in France?

Mess. From France to England.—Never such a power

For any foreign preparation,
Was levied in the body of a land!

The copy of your speed is learn'd by them;

For, when you should be told they do prepare,

The tidings come, that they are all arriv'd.

K. John. Oh! where hath our intelligence been drunk?

Where hath it slept? Where is my mother's care?

That such an army could be drawn in France,
And she not hear of it?

Mess. My liege, her ear

Is stopp'd with dust; the first of April, died
Your noble mother: And, as I hear, my lord,

The lady Constance in a frenzy died
Three days before: but this from rumour's
tongue

I idly heard; if true or false, I know not.

K. John. Withhold thy speed, dreadful occasion!

Oh! make a league with me, till I have
pleas'd

My discontented peers!—What! mother, dead?

How wildly then walks my estate in France!—

Under whose conduct came these powers of France,
That thou for truth gl'ist out, are landed here?
Mess. Under the Dauphin.

Enter the BASTARD, and PETER of Pomfret.

K. John. Thou hast made me giddy (world
With these ill tidings.—Now, what says the
To your proceedings? I do not seek to stuff
My head with more ill news, for it is full.

Bast. But if you be afraid to hear the worst,
Then let the worst, unheard, fall on your head.

K. John. Bear with me, cousin; for I was Under the tide: but now I breathe again [amaz'd]
Aloft the flood; and can give audience
To any tongue, speak it of what it will. [men.]

Bast. How I have sped among the clergy—
The sums I have collected shall express.
But as I travelled hither through the land,
I find the people strangely fantasied;
Possess'd with rumours, full of idle dreams;
Not knowing what they fear, but full of fear:
And here's a prophet, that I brought with me
From forth the streets of Pomfret, whom I found

With many hundreds treading on his heels;
To whom he sung, in rude harsh-sounding rhymes,

That, ere the next Ascension-day at noon,
Your highness should deliver up your crown.

K. John. Thou idle dreamer, wherefore didst thou so?

Peter. Foreknowing that the truth will fall out so.

K. John. Hubert, away with him; imprison
him:

And on that day at noon, whereon he says
I shall yield up my crown, let him be hang'd:
Deliver him to safety and return,
For I must use thee.—O my gentle cousin,

[Exit HUBERT, with PETER.]
Hear'st thou the news abroad, who are arriv'd?

Bast. The French, my lord; men's mouths are full of it:

Besides, I met lord Bigot and lord Salisbury,
(With eyes as red as new-enkindled fire),
And others more, going to seek the grave
Of Arthur, who they say, is kill'd to night
On your suggestion.

K. John. Gentle kinsmen, go,
And thrust yourself into their companies:
I have a way to win their loves again;
Bring them before me.

Bast. I will seek them out.

K. John. Nay, but make haste; the better foot before.—

O let me have no subject enemies,
When adverse foreigners affright my towns
With dreadful pomp of stout invasion!—
Be Mercury, set feathers to thy heels;
And fly, like thought, from them to me again.

Bast. The spirit of the time shall teach me speed. [Exit.]

K. John. Spoke like a spritful noble gentleman.—

Go after him; for he, perhaps, shall need
Some messenger betwixt me and the peers;
And be thou he.

Mess. With all my heart, my liege. [Exit.]

K. John. My mother dead!

Re-enter HUBERT.

Hub. My lord, they say five moons were
seen to-night:

Four fixed; and the fifth did whirl about
The other four, in wond'rous motion.

K. John. Five moons?

Hub. Old men, and beldams, in the streets
Do prophecy upon it dangerously: [mouths:]
Young Arthur's death is common in their
And when they talk of him, they shake their
And whisper one another in the ear; [heads:]
And he, that speaks, doth gripe the hearer's wrist;

Whilst he that hears, makes fearful action,
With wrinkled brows, with nods, with rolling
eyes.

I saw a smith stand with his hammer, thus,
The whilst his iron did on the anvil cool,
With open mouth swallowing a tailor's news;
Who, with his shears and measure in his hand,
Standing on slippers, (which his nimble haste
Had falsely thrust upon contrary feet.)

Told of a many thousand warlike French,
That were embattel'd and rank'd in Kent:
Another lean unwash'd artificer

Cuts off his tale, and talks of Arthur's death.

K. John. Why seek'st thou to possess me with these fears?

Why urgest thou so oft young Arthur's death?
Thy hand hath murder'd him: I had mightily cause [him].

To wish him dead, but thou hadst none to kill

Hub. Had none, my lord! why, did you not provoke me?

K. John. It is the curse of kings, to be attended [rant]

by slaves, that take their humours for a war-
To break within the bloody house of life,

And, on the winking of authority,
To understand a law; to know the meaning

Of dangerous majesty when, perchance, it frowns

More upon humour than advis'd respect.*

Hub. Here is your hand and seal for what I did.

K. John. O when the last account 'twixt heaven and earth

Is to be made, then shall this hand and seal
Witness against us to damnation!

How oft the sight of means to do ill deeds,
Makes deeds ill done! Hadest not thou been by,

A fellow by the hand of nature mark'd,
Quoted, + and sign'd, to do a deed of shame,

This murder had not come into my mind:
But, taking note of thy abhorr'd aspect,

Finding thee fit for bloody villainy,
Apt, liable, to be employ'd in danger,

I faintly broke with thee of Arthur's death;
And thou, to be endear'd to a king,

Made it no conscience to destroy a prince.

Hub. My lord,—
K. John. Hadst thou but shook thy head, or made a pause,

When I spake darkly what I purposed;
Or turn'd an eye of doubt upon my face,

As bid me tell my tale in express words;
Deep shame had struck me dumb, made me

break off, [in me:]
And those thy fears might have wrought fears

But thou didst understand me by my signs,
And didst in signs again parley with sin;

Yea, without stop, didst let thy heart consent,
And, consequently, thy rude hand to act

The deed which both our tongues held vile to
name,—

Out of my sight, and never see me more!
My nobles leave me; and my state is brav'd,

Even at my gates, with ranks of foreign powers:
Nay, in the body of this fleshly land,

This kingdom, thus confus'd of blood and breath,
Hostility and civil tumult reigns [death.]

Between my conscience and my cousins

Hub. Arm you against your other enemies,
I'll make a peace between your soul and you.

Young Arthur is alive: This hand of mine
Is yet a maiden and an innocent hand,

Not painted with the crimson spots of blood.
Within this bosom nev-; enter'd yet

The dreadful motion of a murder's thought,
And you have slander'd nature in my form;

Which howsoever rude exteriorly,
Is yet the cover of a fairer mind

Than be butcher of an innocent child. §

* Deliberate consideration.

† Observed.

‡ His own body. § This is an assertion which his previous determination to murder the child, will scarcely uphold.

K. John. Doth Arthur live? O haste thee to the peers,
Throw this report on their incensed rage,
And make them tame to their obedience! I
Forgive the comment that my passion made
Upon thy feature; for my rage was blind,
And foul imaginary eyes of blood
Presented thee more hideous than thou art.
O answer not; but to my closet bring
The angry lords, with all expedient haste;
I conjure thee but slowly; run more fast.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same.—Before the Castle.

Enter ARTHUR, on the Walls.

Art. The wall is high; and yet will I leap down:—
Good ground, be pitiful, and hurt me not!—
There's few, or none, do know me; if they did,
This ship-boy's semblance hath disguis'd me
I am afraid; and yet I'll venture it. [quite.]
If I get down, and do not break my limbs,
I'll find a thousand shifts to get away:
As good to die and go, as die and stay.

[Leaps down.]
O me! my uncle's spirit is in these stones—
Heaven take my soul, and England keep my bones! [Dies.]

Enter PEMBROKE, SALISBURY, and BIGOT.

Sal. Lords, I will meet him at Saint Edmund's-Bury;
It is our safety and we must embrace
This gentle offer of the perilous time. [dinal?]

Pem. Who brought that letter from the court?
Sal. The count Melun, a noble lord of France;

Whose private with me, * of the Dauphin's love,
Is much more general than these lines import,
Big. To-morrow morning let us meet him then.

Sal. Or, rather then set forward: for 'twill be
Two long days' journey, lords, or e'er we meet.

Enter the BASTARD.

Bast. Once more to-day well met, distemper'd lords! [straight.]
The king, by me, requests your presence

Sal. The king hath dispossest himself of us;
We will not lose his thus bestow'd cloak
With our pure honours, nor attend the foot
That leaves the print of blood where-e'er it walks:

Return and tell him so; we know the worst.
Bast. Whate'er you think, good words, I think, were best. [now.]

Sal. Our griefs, and not our manners, reason
Bast. But there is little reason in your grief;
Therefore, 'twere reason you had manners now.

Pem. Sir, Sir, impatience hath his privilege.
Bast. 'Tis true; to hurt his master, no man else.

Sal. This is the prison: What is he lies here? [Seeing ARTHUR.]

Pam. O death, made proud with pure and princely beauty!

The earth had not a hole to hide this deed.
Sal. Murder, as hating what himself hath
Doth lay it open, to urge on revenge. [done.]

Big. Or, when he doom'd this beauty to a grave,
Found it too precious-princely for a grave.

Sal. Sir Richard, what think you? Have you beheld,
Or have you read, or heard? or could you think?

Or do you almost think, although you see,
That you do see? could thought without this object,

Form such another? This is the very top,
The height, the crest, or crest unto the crest,

* Private account.

* Out of humour.

Of murder's arms: this is the bloodiest shame,
The wildest savagery, the vilest stroke,
That ever wall-eyed wrath, or staring rage,
Presented to the tears of soft remorse.*

Pem. All murders past do stand excus'd in
And this, so sole, and so unmatched, [thus:]
Shall give a holiness, a purity,
To the yet-unboughten sin of time;
And prove a deadly bloodshed but a jest,
Exemplary by this heinous spectacle.

Bast. It is a damned and a bloody work;
The graceless action of a heavy hand,
If that it be the work of any hand.

Sal. If that it be the work of any hand?—
We had a kind of light what would ensue:
It is the shameful work of Hubert's hand;
The practice and the purpose of the king.—
From whose obedience I forbid my soul,
Kneeling before this ruin of sweet life,
And breathing to his breathless excellence
The incense of a vow, a holy vow;
Never to taste the pleasures of the world,
Never to be infected with delight,
Nor conversant with ease and idleness,
Till I have set a glory to this hand,†
By giving it the worship of revenge.

Pem. Big. Our souls religiously confirm thy words.

Enter HUBERT.

Hub. Lords, I am hot with haste in seeking you;

Arthur doth live; the king hath sent for you.
Sal. Oh! he is bold, and blushes not at death:—

Avaunt thou hateful villain, get thee gone!
Hub. I am no villain.

Sal. Must I rob the law?
[Drawing his sword.]

Bast. Your sword is bright, Sir: put it up again.

Sal. Not till I sheath it in a murderer's skin.

Hub. Stand back, lord Salisbury, stand back, I say; [you're:]

By heaven, I think my sword's as sharp as I would not have you, lord, forget yourself,
Nor tempt the danger of my true defence;
Lest I, by marking of your rage, forget
Your worth, your greatness, and nobility.

Big. Out, dunghill! dar'st thou brave a nobleman?

Hub. Not for my life: but yet I dare defend
My innocent life against an emperor.

Sal. Thou art a murderer.

Hub. Do not prove me so; ‡ [false,
Yet, I am none: Whose tongue so'er speaks
Not truly speaks; who speaks not truly, lies.]

Pem. Cut him to pieces.

Bast. Keep the peace, I say.

Sal. Stand by, or I shall gall you, Faulconbridge.

Bast. Thou wert better gall the devil, Salisbury:

If thou but frown on me, or stir thy foot,
Or teach thy hasty spleen to do me shame,
I'll strike thee dead. Put up thy sword be time;

Or I'll so maul you and your boasting-iron,
That you shall think the devil is come from hell.

Big. What wilt thou do, renowned Faulconbridge?

Second a villain, and a murderer?

Hub. Lord Bigot, I am none.

Big. Who kill'd this prince?

Hub. 'Tis not an hour since I left him well:
I honour'd him, I lov'd him; and will weep
My date of life out, for his sweet life's loss.

Sal. Trust not those cunning waters of his eyes,
For villany is not without such rheum;
And he long traded in it, makes it seem

* Pity. † Hand should be head; a glory is the circle of rays which surrounds the heads of saints in pictures. ‡ By compelling me to kill you.

Like rivers of remorse, and Innocency.
Away with me, all you whose souls abhor
The nucleary savours of a slaughter-house,
For I am stilled with this smell of sin.

Big. Away, toward Bury, to the Dauphin there!

Pem. There, tell the king, he may inquire us out.

Bast. Here's a good world!—Knew you of this fair work?

Beyond the infinite and boundless reach
Of mercy, if thou didst this deed of death,
Art thou damn'd, Hubert.

Hub. Do but hear me, Sir.

Bast. Ha! I'll tell thee what;
Thou art damn'd as black—nay, nothing is so black;

Thou art more deep damn'd than prince Lucifer:

There is not yet so ugly a fiend of hell
As thou shalt be, if thou didst kill this child.

Hub. Upon my soul,—

Bast. If thou didst but consent
To this most cruel act, do but despair,
And, if thou want'st a cord, the smallest thread
That ever spider twisted from her womb
Will serve to strangle thee; a rush will be
A beam to hang thee on; or would'st thou
Drown thyself,

Put but a little water in a spoon,
And it shall be as all the ocean,
Enough to stifle such a villain up.—
I do suspect thee very grievously.

Hub. If I in act, consent, or sin of thought,
Be guilty of the stealing that sweet breath
Which was embowdred in thisauteous clay.
Let hell want pains enough to torture me!
I left him well.

Bast. Go, bear him in thine arms.—
I am amaz'd, methinks; and lose my way
Among the thorns and dangers of this world.—
How easy dost thou take all England up!
From teeth this morsel of dead royalty,
The life, the right, and truth of all this realm
Is fled to heaven; and England now is left
To tug and scramble, and to part by the teeth
The unwear'd interest of proud-swelling state.
Now, for the bare-pick'd bone of majesty,
Doth dogged war bristle his angry crest,
And snarlth in the gentle eyes of peace:
Now powers from home, and discontents at home,

Meet in one line; and vast confusion waits
(As doth a raven on a sick-fallen beast,)
The imminent decay of wrested pomp.
Now happy he, whose cloak and cincture can Hold out this tempest. Bear away that child,
